Symphonies 28, K.200; 31 (Paris), K.297; 40, K.550 (Naxos 8.550164)

Symphonies 29, K.201; 30, K.202; 38 (Prague), K.504 (Naxos 8.550119)

Symphonies 34, K.338; 35 (Haffner), K.385; 39, K.543 (Naxos 8.550186)

Symphonies 40, K.550; 41 (Jupiter), K.551 (Naxos 8.550299)

🔑 (BB)  Capella Istropolitana, Wordsworth

The Capella Istropolitana consists of leading members of the Slovak Philharmonic Orchestra of Bratislava; though their string-tone is thinnish, it is very much in scale with the clarity of a period performance but tonally far sweeter. The recording is outstandingly good, with a far keener sense of presence than in most rival versions and with less reverberation to obscure detail in tuttis. Wordsworth observes exposition repeats in first movements, but in the finales only in such symphonies as 38 and 41, where the movement particularly needs extra scale. In slow movements, as is usual, he omits repeats. He often adopts speeds that are marginally slower than we expect nowadays in chamber-scale performances; but, with exceptionally clean articulation and infectiously sprung rhythms, the results never drag, even if 29 is made to sound more sober than usual. In every way these are worthy rivals to the best full-priced versions, and they can be recommended with few if any reservations. Anyone wanting to sample might try the coupling of 34, 35 and 39 – with the hard-stick timpani sound at the start of 39 very dramatic. The Linz too is outstanding. For some, the option of having the last two symphonies coupled together will be useful.

Symphonies 25, K.183; 28, K.200; 29, K.201

🔑  Telarc CD 80165. Prague CO, Mackerras

If you want performances on modern instruments, these are as fine as any, fresh and light, with transparent textures set against a warm acoustic and with rhythms consistently resilient. Mackerras's speeds are always carefully judged to allow elegant pointing but without mannerism, and the only snag is that second-half repeats are omitted in slow movements, and also in the finale of 29.

Symphonies 38 (Prague); 39; Serenata notturna

() Testament mono SBT 1094. Philh. O, Klemperer

Symphonies 29; 41 (Jupiter); Serenade 13 (Eine kleine Nachtmusik)

() Testament mono/stereo SBT 1093. Philh. O, Klemperer

Klemperer's 1954 Mozart symphony recordings of 29 and 41 on Testament, unavailable for many decades, marked the turning-point in his accident-prone career. They were the very first recordings which he made with the Philharmonia Orchestra. Only the first movement of 29 bears out the later image of Klemperer as slow and rugged. After that, all is exhilaration, with superlative playing from the Philharmonia, with rhythms beautifully sprung and phrases elegantly turned. The Jupiter in particular is electrifying, one of the very finest versions on disc, both powerful and polished, while Eine kleine Nachtmusik (in stereo) for once is made to sound like late Mozart, both strong and elegant. Outstanding transfers.

The mono version of the Prague Symphony is strong and rugged, but finely sprung and phrased, with the Don Giovanni relationship firmly established. This mono version of 39 too is fresher than the stereo remake, while the Serenata notturna brings a typical Klemperer contrast, with the orchestra providing four-square support for the soloists, who by contrast are allowed their measure of charm and elegance.

Symphonies 25 in G min., K.183; 31 (Paris); 41 (Jupiter)

(BB) (*) Warner Apex 0927 49045-2. Amsterdam Bar. O, Koopman

The highlight here is the early G minor Symphony, where original instruments, with their extra cutting edge, are ideal for expressing the Sturm und Drang neurosis of the first movement with its thrilling octave upward thrusts, and this degree of tension is maintained throughout the work. In comparison, the Paris Symphony lacks the balancing elegance that modern instruments can bring, but the Jupiter receives another powerfully energetic reading, with all important repeats included. When the finale reaches its vibrant apotheosis, the enthusiastic applause confirms that this has the vigour and spontaneity of live music-making. Good (rather than outstanding) recording, but this is excellent value.

Symphonies 28–36; 38–41 (Jupiter)

Ⓑ (*) Decca 475 9120 (5). Dresden State O, C. Davis

Colin Davis's performances reflect little or no influence from period performance. With the full-bodied, resonant Dresden recording and with vital and imaginative playing from the Dresden Orchestra, the set will undoubtedly be enjoyed by Mozartians who are committed to big-band Mozart. The survey got off to a good start with a sparkling and delightful account of 28, coupled with an alert, sensitive and perceptive Jupiter, played with vitality and finesse. Alongside it came a pairing of another two of Mozart's greatest symphonies, one of the finest accounts of No. 39 in E flat then currently on the market, and an impressive version of 29 in A. Though Davis favours big-scale Mozart – the dramatic opening of the Haffner is very weighty – he opts for fastish allegros in this work; and the Prague, Linz and 40 in G minor are elegant and refined, but still on a big, traditional scale. However, the earlier symphonies in the cycle are smoother and gentler in their manners than we expect from this conductor, and some may well prefer the same conductor's earlier, L'Oiseau-Lyre recordings, reissued on Australian Decca Eloquence, even if that survey is less complete (see below).

Symphonies: 28; 33; 35 (Haffner); Serenade (Eine kleine Nachtmusik); Overture: Le nozze di Figaro

🔑 Ⓜ  Sony 82876 78765-2. Cleveland O, Szell

Szell and his Clevelanders are shown at their finest here. All three symphonies sparkle, with light, airy playing from the strings in outer movements in 28, and 33 which is consistently exhilarating, while the Haffner is equally polished and strong. Yet there is a tranquil feeling to Andantes which shows Szell as a Mozartian of undoubted sensibility, and this is just as striking in the nicely paced Eine kleine Nachtmusik with its engagingly light-hearted finale, while the fizzing account of the Figaro Overture readily demonstrates the orchestral brilliance. The 1960s sound is fresh, a little thin on top but full-bodied and clean.

Symphonies 28; 33; 36 (Linz); 38 (Prague); Divertimenti 10; 11 (Nannerl Septet)

🔑  Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 442 8149 (2). ECO, C. Davis

It is astonishing that these much-admired Mozart recordings from Colin Davis have had to wait so long to emerge on CD. In 28 in C Davis is infectiously inspired and, despite the use of a comparatively small-scaled band, he captures the strength of the Prague Symphony, with its obvious links with Don Giovanni. His treatment of the slow movements steers an admirable course between severity and affectionate treatment. 33 was the work's first stereo recording, and the crisp strings and clean-sounding woodwind of his orchestra respond immediately to Davis's direction, and the performance has wit as well as breadth. The Linz is very appealing in its direct but unforced way, and the decorous shaping of its slow movement's contours is superbly done. These transfers bring out all the detail of the original recordings without any loss of the warm ambience which was one of the recording's best features. A thoroughly recommended set on modern instruments, and the two attractive Divertimenti are equally sparkling, containing many felicities in the playing.

Symphony 29 in A, K.201

((*)) Testament mono SBT 2242 (2). Royal Danish O, Klemperer – BEETHOVEN: Symphony 3; Leonore 3; BRAHMS: Symphony 4 ((*))

(*) Testament SBT2 1217 (2). BPO, Klemperer – BACH: Suite 3 in D; BEETHOVEN: Symphony 6 (Pastoral) **(*)

In Klemperer's live recording of 29 with the Royal Danish Orchestra, made in 1954, the opening Allegro moderato is characteristically slow and square, heavy despite the thin orchestral sound. But the last three movements are quite different, with the Andante refined and beautifully moulded at a flowing tempo, the Minuet light and tripping and the finale exhilarating in its energy. However, as in the other two items from the same concert on the first of the discs in this set, the coughing of the audience is distracting.

In May 1964 Otto Klemperer, aged 79, returned to Berlin to conduct the Berlin Philharmonic in three works that were favourites with him, determined above all to get Karajan's orchestra to produce a distinctive Klemperer sound. Though the Mozart brings characteristically broad speeds, it erupts into an exuberant account of the finale. First-rate transfers of radio sound.

Symphonies 29–31 (Paris); 33–34; 38 (Prague); 39

(BB)  EMI (ADD) Gemini 3 50917-2 (2). ECO, Barenboim

Symphonies 32; 35 (Haffner); 36 (Linz); 40 in G min.; 41 (Jupiter); Divertimento 7 in D, K.205; 2 Marches in D, K.335

(BB)  EMI (ADD) Gemini 3 50922-2 (2). ECO, Barenboim

Barenboim's recordings were made at Abbey Road over a five-year span, between 1966 and 1971. With fine rhythmic pointing and consistently imaginative phrasing, these performances certainly still have a place in the catalogue. 29 and 34 are particularly successful, and the Paris (31) is also given an outstanding performance, the contrasts of mood in the first movement underlined and the finale taken at a hectic tempo that would have sounded breathless with players any less brilliant than those of the ECO. The D major Serenade also responds well to Barenboim's affectionate treatment, while the two Marches are attractively jaunty and colourful.

Symphonies 29; 31 (Paris); 34

🔑 (BB) () Dutton Lab. mono CDEA 5008. LPO, Beecham

These incomparable performances date from between 1937 and 1940. Beecham's are elegant and cultivated accounts which in many ways are unique, though 29 brings one of his most controversial readings, where the pace of the opening movement is eccentrically slow, even if he is very persuasive in his pointing. In the finales, by contrast, Beecham prefers really fast speeds, exhilarating in all three here. The superb new transfers are fuller and have much finer presence, transparency and, above all, body than the earlier, EMI versions that appeared some years ago.

Symphonies 29; 32; 33; 35 (Haffner); 36 (Linz); 38 (Prague); 39; 40; 41(Jupiter)

Ⓝ Ⓑ  DG (ADD) 477 7925(3). BPO, Karajan

It is difficult to conceive of better big-band Mozart than these beautifully played and vitally alert readings, recorded between 1966 and 1968. There are details about which some may have reservations. 29 certainly sparkles, but textures may be a trifle too smooth for some tastes The same comments apply to 33, although the orchestral playing is, of course, superlative, resilient as well as strong. There is a broadening of tempo at bar 71 in the first movement of the Linz, and the Minuet and Trio may seem too slow, while the opening of the G minor may not be dark enough for some listeners. In general, however, these are finely proportioned readings, so naturally paced and shaped. As recordings they are well balanced, alive and yet smooth.

Symphonies 29; 35 (Haffner); 38; 39; 40; 41 (Jupiter)

(M) (*) EMI (ADD) 3 45810 2 (2). Philh. O or New Philh. O, Klemperer

Klemperer's monumentally characterful recordings of the key Mozart symphonies still hold their place in the catalogue and probably deserve their position among EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century', even if there are some reservations.

Symphony 31 in D (Paris), K.297

(BB)  Regis RRC 1084. E. Sinfonia, Groves – HAYDN: Symphonies 92 (Oxford); 104 (London). ***

Sir Charles Groves's account of the Paris Symphony is mellow and relaxed, with a beautifully played slow movement and finely observed detail. The playing is alert, but the unhurried pacing brings out the music's breadth. The Abbey Road recording is excellent: warm yet clear.

Symphonies 31 (Paris); 33; 34

(*) Telarc CD 80190. Prague CO, Mackerras

Mackerras and the Prague Chamber Orchestra give characteristically stylish and refined performances, clean of attack and generally marked by brisk speeds. As in their accounts of the later symphonies, all repeats are observed – even those in the da capos of Minuets. However, the reverberant Prague acoustic, more than in others of the Telarc series, clouds tuttis: the Presto finale of the Paris brings phenomenal articulation of quavers at the start, which then in tuttis disappear in a mush.

Symphonies (i) 31 in D (Paris); (ii) 40 in G min., K.550

(*) Arthaus DVD 100 073. (i) Salzburg Mozarteum O, Tate; (ii) Stuttgart RSO, Gelmetti (V/D: Jànos Darvas)

These two live performances were recorded two years apart, the Paris Symphony, in the beautiful Mozarteum, at the Salzburg Festival in 1989, the G minor in the Rokokotheatre, Schloss Schwetzinger, where the backdrop is plain but the acoustics far superior. Indeed, the performance of the 40th Symphony is quite glorious; so beautiful is the playing on modern instruments and so warmly appealing and musically detailed is Gianluigi Gelmetti's interpretation that one realizes afresh as one listens that this is one of Mozart's supreme masterpieces. Gelmetti's control of light and shade is absolute, and as the music continues his style becomes more dramatic, and it is obvious that as he turns over the pages of the score he is totally within the music, and his little smiles of pleasure at the response of his fine orchestra communicate to us.

Needless to say, Jeffrey Tate also gives a very fine account of the symphony Mozart wrote for a comparatively large orchestra (55 strong) to impress the jaded Parisians in 1778, with its strong tutti opening and tenderly playful secondary theme, which Tate and his orchestra contrast so effectively. Tate's conducting technique is infinitely more athletic than that of his colleague, and it suits the brilliance of Mozart's writing. But the three-movement Paris Symphony needs sharper definition, and it should have been first in the programme.

Symphonies 32, K.318; 35 (Haffner), K.385; 39, K.543

 Telarc CD 80203. Prague CO, Mackerras

On Telarc, Mackerras is fresh rather than elegant, yet with rhythms so crisply sprung that there is no sense of rush. His whirling one-in-a-bar treatment of Minuets may disconcert traditionalists, but brings exhilarating results. The third movements of both the Haffner and 39 become Scherzos, not just faster but fiercer than regular Minuets, and generally his account of 39 is as commanding as his outstanding versions of the last two symphonies.

Symphony 33 in B flat, K.319 (DVD version)

(*) DG DVD 073 4017. Bav. State O, Kleiber (Producer: Harald Gerick) (with BEETHOVEN: Overture Coriolan ) – BRAHMS: Symphony 4 **(*)

Kleiber's reading is a direct, classical one, firm in contour, and the Bavarian orchestra play very stylishly and responsively, though it is the genial finale that remains most vividly in the memory. The camera moves around the orchestra discerningly but often stays to watch the conductor, who seems very relaxed (but at times obviously conscious that he is being observed).

Symphonies 33 in B flat, K.319; 35 in D (Haffner), K.385

(M)  Häns. CD 94.003. ASMF, I. Brown

These are spirited, sparkling performances, full of life and warmth. They were recorded in the Henry Wood Hall in 1997, and Andrew Keener has succeeded in getting a very good, natural and well-balanced sound. This CD delights, though it is short measure at 40 minutes even at mid-price. There are no liner notes.

Symphonies 33 in B flat, K.319; 39 in E flat, K.543; Adagio & Fugue, K.546; Serenade 13 in G (Eine kleine Nachtmusik); Divertimento for Strings in D, K.334; Adagio; Overture 'Le nozze di Figaro'

(M) () EMI mono 4 76876-2. VPO, Karajan

The B flat Symphony (33) was committed to disc in 1946 and the great E flat (39) in 1949, and they were rightly hailed in their day for their lightness of touch and perfection of style. They still sound wonderfully fresh, and the recorded sound is still impressively balanced. A very desirable reissue.

Symphony 35 in D (Haffner), K.385

((*)) Naxos mono 8.110841. NYPO & NYSO, Toscanini – HAYDN: Symphony 101 **(*)

Toscanini conducted the amalgamated New York Philharmonic and Symphony Orchestras from 1928 to 1936 (the NBC Symphony was created specially for him in 1937). There is a wonderful sparkle about these 1929 records, Mark Obert-Thorn includes an alternative take of the finale. Remarkably good sound, considering their age.

Symphonies 35–36; 38–41 – see also Flute Concertos 1–2 (above)

Symphonies 38 (Prague); 39; 40; 41 (Jupiter)

Ⓜ (*) DG (ADD) 447 416-2 (2). BPO, Boehm
Ⓑ (*) EMI 5 00836-2 (3). ASMF, Marriner

Karl Boehm's way with Mozart in the early 1960s was broader and heavier in texture than we are used to nowadays, and the exposition repeats are the exception rather than the rule; but these Berlin Philharmonic performances are warm and magnetic, with refined and strongly rhythmic playing, and there is an attractive honesty and strength about them. The Linz, for instance, is an example of Boehm at his finest, with an agreeable, fresh vitality; but overall there is a comfortable quality of inevitability here, perpetuating a long Mozart tradition. The recordings sound full, vivid and well balanced in the new transfers.

Marriner's third (1986/7) set of the Mozart symphonies is the most beautifully recorded of all. The playing too is graceful and elegant. With bracing rhythms and brisker pacing than in his earlier, Philips set, these readings are positive yet unidiosyncratic. Phrasing is supple and the Mozartian spirit is always alive here. There is not quite the incandescent freshness of his earliest Decca/Argo series, and there is a degree of disappointment in the Haffner and Jupiter Symphonies, which are slightly undercharacterized. For the most part, however, this is music-making that will give a great deal of pleasure.

Symphony 35 (Haffner)

 BBC BBCL 4076-2. Hallé O, Barbirolli – BEETHOVEN: Symphony 7 ; WAGNER: Siegfried Idyll ()
() BBC mono BBCL 4016-2 (2). BBC SO, Toscanini – BEETHOVEN: Missa solemnis; Symphony 7 ((*)); CHERUBINI: Anacréon Overture ***

Barbirolli's view of the Haffner Symphony is just as characterful as the Beethoven Seventh with which it is coupled on this BBC Legends issue. Recorded at the Royal Albert Hall during the Prom season, the sound is rather thick and dull, due in part to the string section being larger than we might expect today. Even so, Barbirolli's characteristic pointing of phrase and rhythm remains very compelling, leading to an effervescent account of the finale. The Wagner item also adds to this striking portrait of the conductor.

Mozart's Haffner Symphony was always a favourite with Toscanini, and this live performance, recorded in London, is warmer and more sympathetic than either his early version with the New York Philharmonic or his later performance with the NBC Symphony. Though the recording is rather rougher than on the rest of the two-disc set, it makes a valuable bonus to the Beethoven items.

Symphonies 35 (Haffner), K.385; 38 (Prague), K.504; 39, K.543; 40, K.550; 41 (Jupiter), K.551

Ⓑ  Ph. Duo 470 540-2 (2). Dresden State O, C. Davis

Though Colin Davis favours big-scaled Mozart, he opts for fastish allegros, and the refinement of the playing helps to make up for the bass-heavy thickness of the Dresden sound as recorded by the engineers. The dramatic opening of the Haffner is made very weighty indeed. In the slow movements of both the Haffner and Prague, Davis is more obviously affectionate, yet without sentimentality. The Jupiter is all one would expect: alert, sensitive, perceptive and played with vitality and finesse by the Dresden Orchestra. The E flat Symphony is one of the finest on the market. If the G minor may seem a little weighty to some, its relaxed manner and the superbly refined and elegant playing ensure the power of the work is fully conveyed.

Symphonies 35 (Haffner); 40; 41 (Jupiter)

🔑 (BB)  Sony (ADD) SBK 46333. Cleveland O, Szell

Szell and his Clevelanders are shown at their finest here. The sparkling account of the Haffner is exhilarating, and the performances of the last two symphonies are equally polished and strong. Yet there is a tranquil feeling to both Andantes that shows Szell as a Mozartian of striking sensibility and finesse. He is at his finest in the Jupiter, which has great vigour in the outer movements and a proper weight to balance the rhythmic incisiveness; in spite of the lack of repeats, the work's scale is not diminished. Here the sound is remarkable, considering the early date (late 1950s), and the remastering throughout is impressively full-bodied and clean.

Symphony 36 in C (Linz), K.425

(*) Ph. DVD 070 161-9. VPO, Kleiber (Director: Horant Hohlfeld) (with BEETHOVEN: Overture Coriolan ) – BRAHMS: Symphony 2 **(*)

The Vienna Philharmonic always have something special to contribute to Mozart, and the Linz is a direct account, not as individual as one might expect, but well recorded. The performance of Coriolan is especially fine.

Symphonies 36 (Linz); 38 (Prague); 39; 40; 41 (Jupiter)

🔑 Ⓑ  Ph. (ADD) Duo 438 332-2 (2). ASMF, Marriner

In terms of finesse and elegance of phrasing, the orchestral playing on the Philips Duo is of very high quality and Marriner's readings are satisfyingly paced, full of vitality and warmth. There is not a whiff of original-instrument style here, but those who enjoy the sound of Mozart in a modern orchestra of a reasonable size should be well satisfied.

Symphonies 36 (Linz); 41 (Jupiter)

🔑  Arthaus DVD 100 081. ECO, Tate (V/D: Jànos Darvas)

This the finest of the three Arthaus DVDs of Mozart symphonies. Once again the two symphonies are placed in the wrong order, but in this instance Tate's affectionate reading of the Linz, full of Beechamesque Mozartian detail in the woodwind (which the camera delights to pick up), is engaging in a quite different way from the powerful Jupiter. Tate plays repeats in the outer movements, and there is little sense of a smaller scale. But it is the Jupiter that stands out. It is on the largest scale (35 minutes, with all essential repeats included) and, as it happens, the sound here is more immediate and vivid to suit the music. Like Gelmetti's DVD account of the G minor Symphony (see above), it is among the finest performances on DVD, commandingly rhythmic in the first movement and with a tremendous head of steam built up in the finale.

Symphonies (i) 38 (Prague); (ii) 39 in E flat, K.543 (DVD versions)

(*) Arthaus DVD 100 083. Deutsche Kammerphilharmonie, (i) Albrecht; (ii) Zinman

Gerd Albrecht directs an enjoyably polished but essentially direct and straightforward account of the Prague, recorded in the Christian Zaiss Saal, Wiesbaden, where the acoustic provides a well-integrated but not very transparent sound-picture. One's pleasure comes from the superb response of the Deutsche Kammerphilharmonie. But then we have a chance to observe David Zinman at the helm, a wholly different visual and musical experience. He offers all possible repeats, and his characterization of every movement of this masterpiece is always stimulating. The recording, made in the Munich Sophiensaal, is excellent, vivid, with far more range than its companion.

Symphonies 38 (Prague); 39 in E flat, K.543 (CD versions)

(BB)  ASV CD COE 806. COE, Schneider

Schneider's might be counted old-fashioned readings by not observing exposition repeats, with the recording set in a warm, helpful acoustic, bringing out the sweetness of the COE violins. But the constant rhythmic resilience of his direction and the superb response of the COE, the solo wind-playing a delight, lightens everything; and this is a most rewarding coupling.

Symphonies 38 (Prague); 39; 40; 41 (Jupiter)

🔑 * Linn CD 308 (2). SCO, Mackerras

🔑 (BB)  Virgin 2x1 5 62428-2 (2). Sinfonia Varsovia, Y. Menuhin

 Warner 2564 63067-2 (2) + bonus sampler. COE, Harnoncourt

Sir Charles Mackerras conducts the SCO in outstanding performances of Mozart's last six symphonies with the lesson of period performance sharpening the impact of traditional instruments. The strings play with little vibrato, the brass rasps boldly and the timpani are always dramatically prominent. The result is joyful in its freedom, making this one of the top recommendations for this much-recorded repertoire.

Menuhin reveals himself as very much a classicist, with speeds on the fast side, notably in the Andante of the Prague, giving the movement a free, song-like lyricism. He treats the third movement of No. 39 as a brisk Ländler, almost hurdy-gurdy-like, refusing – after consultation with the autograph – to allow a rallentando at the end. Otherwise the only other oddity is his omission of the exposition repeat in the first movement, when as a rule he is generous with repeats, observing them in both the first movement and finale of the Jupiter. With such vivid sound, this is a strong recommendation for those collectors wanting all four symphonies.

Harnoncourt has re-recorded the last four symphonies of Mozart yet again, still in proper scale, but this time with the modern-instrument Chamber Orchestra of Europe, who play superbly for him. Nevertheless, Harnoncourt's period-performance influences remain, including brisk tempi, with often fierce accents, and explosive timpani with hard sticks. The performances are consistently vibrant, but with elegant playing in slow movements. The Prague has a feeling of bravura throughout, and 39 too has plenty of spirit, especially in the sparkling finale, even if Harnoncourt misses its geniality. But the first movement of the G minor is very successful, and the set is crowned by a thrilling account of the Jupiter with all repeats included (as elsewhere), to lead to a remarkably powerful final apotheosis, carrying all before it. There is a free bonus disc, offering samples (complete movements) from 15 of his other recordings, covering the music of eight different composers.

Symphony 40 in G min., K.550

() BBC mono BBCL 4120-2. Hallé O, Barbirolli – SCHUBERT: Symphonies 5 & 8 (Unfinished) ()

Recorded in 1962 in the BBC studios, Barbirolli conducts a strong, finely shaped performance of the G minor Symphony. The middle two movements are rather broader than one would expect today, and there is no repeat of the first-movement exposition, but this is a fine example of the Hallé Orchestra's playing as Barbirolli developed it. The mono sound is limited but undistracting.

Symphonies 40; 41 (Jupiter)

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * DG 445 548-2. VPO, Bernstein

 DG 477 5798. Musiciens du Louvre, Minkowski (with Idomeneo Ballet Music, K.367)

 Telarc CD 80139. Prague CO, Mackerras

Bernstein's electrifying account of 40 is keenly dramatic, individual and stylish, with the finale delightfully airy and fresh. If anything, the Jupiter is even finer: it is exhilarating in its tensions and observes the repeats in both halves of the finale, making it almost as long as the massive first movement. Bernstein's electricity sustains that length, and one welcomes it for establishing the supreme power of the argument, the true crown in the whole of Mozart's symphonic output. This mid-price reissue on DG's Masters label now takes its place again at the top of the list of recommendations for this coupling.

Minkowski's period-instrument coupling of the last two Mozart symphonies is truly individual and very much forward-looking. The account of the G minor is very persuasive, helped by his warm acoustic, and the string playing of the Musiciens du Louvre in the slow movement is lyrically beautiful; but it is in the Jupiter Symphony that Minkowski triumphs, the first movement pressed forward vigorously with hard-edged timpani strokes, the slow movement very expressive, yet with uneasy undercurrents. The powerful finale is taken briskly, but with plenty of weight. All necessary repeats are used, to build to a massive and thrilling apotheosis, with the recording outstandingly vivid. The Idomeneo Ballet Music is rather like a sinfonia and makes an attractive bonus.

On Telarc, with generally fast speeds, so brisk that he is able to observe every single repeat, Mackerras takes a fresh, direct view which, with superb playing from the Prague Chamber Orchestra, is also characterful. On the question of repeats, the doubling in length of the slow movement of 40 makes it almost twice as long as the first movement, a dangerous proportion – though it is pure gain having both halves repeated in the magnificent finale of the Jupiter.

THEATRE AND BALLET MUSIC

Theatre Music: Ballet music: Idomeneo; Les Petits riens; Incidental music: Thamos, King of Egypt; Music for Pantalon and Columbine; Sketches for a Ballet Intermezzo

(B)  Ph. (ADD) 464 940-2 (5). Various artists including ASMF, Marriner & Netherlands CO, Zinman

Zinman and his Netherlanders give a neatly turned account of the ballet from Idomeneo, musical and spirited. Marriner takes over with modern, digital sound for Les Petits riens and the two novelties, and the ASMF playing has characteristic elegance and finesse. The music for Pantalon and Columbine (more mime than ballet) survives in the form of a first violin part, and Franz Beyer has skilfully orchestrated it for wind and strings, using the first movement of the Symphony, K.84, as the overture and the last movement of Symphony, K.120, as the finale. Beautifully played as it is here, full of grace and colour, this is a real find and the digital recording is first rate. Thamos, King of Egypt is marvellous music which it is good to have on record, particularly in such persuasive hands as these. The choral singing is impressive and the orchestral playing is excellent.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Adagio & Fugue in C min., K.546 – see also Clarinet Quintet

(BB) () Dutton Lab. mono CDBP 9713. Griller Qt – BLOCH: String Quartet 2; Night; DVOŘÁK: String Quartet 12 (American) ***

Played by a string quartet, Mozart's masterly Adagio and Fugue are if anything even tauter and stronger than when played by full strings. The Griller Quartet, at the peak of their form in 1948, give a fresh, purposeful reading, very well recorded, a welcome supplement to the equally fine readings of popular Dvořák and neglected Bloch.

Adagio & Rondo for Flute, Oboe, Viola, Cello & Piano, K.617; (i) Clarinet Trio (Kegelstatt); (ii) Flute Quartets 1–4; (iii) Horn Quintet; (iv) Oboe Quartet

🔑 (BB)  Virgin 2x1 5 61448-2 (2). Nash Ens., with (i) Collins; (ii) P. Davies; (iii) Lloyd; (iv) Hulse

In the Adagio and Rondo, originally written for glass harmonica, the wind instruments blend together most felicitously. Michael Collins proves a winningly personable soloist in the Clarinet Trio. Gareth Hulse plays exquisitely in the Oboe Quartet and the Nash Ensemble blend in most sensitively, and give excellent support to Frank Lloyd's warmly lyrical account of the Horn Quintet. The second disc contains the four Flute Quartets, with Philippa Davies both a nimble and a highly musical flautist. She is very well balanced with her Nash colleagues and these are pleasingly warm, intimate performances.

(i) Clarinet Quartet in B flat (trans. of Violin Sonata, K.327d); (ii) Oboe Quartet in F, K.370; String Quartet 21 in D, K.575

(BB) (*) HM Classical Express HCX 3957 107. (i) Hoeprich; (ii) Schachman; Artaria Qt

The transcription of the Violin Sonata, K.327d, into a Clarinet Quartet is a surprising success, and the work sounds for all the world as if it was written for the present combination, particularly in the jocular finale. The more so as the clarinettist, Erich Hoeprich, is a most personable and musical player. Marc Schachman's creamy yet nicely pointed oboe-playing is also just right for the Oboe Quartet, a most spirited, expressive performance that is among the best on record. Without soloists the Artaria Quartet give an accomplished account of the First Prussian Quartet, enjoyable if not distinctive. But the recording is first class, and the other two works make this disc well worth investigating at bargain price.

Clarinet Quintet in A, K.581

🔑 (BB) * Warner Apex 0927 44350-2. Leister, Berlin Soloists – BRAHMS: Clarinet Quintet ***

(B)  HM HMN 911 691. Carbonare, Hery, Binder, Bone, Pouzenc – BRAHMS: Clarinet Quintet ***

((*)) Testament mono SBT 1282. Boskovsky, V. Octet (members) – BRAHMS: Clarinet Quintet ***

Simplicity is the keynote of Karl Leister's 1988 performance, but in the lovely slow movement he finds a gentle reflective serenity that creates a mood of Elysian rapture, with his string group supporting him most sensitively. The Minuet makes a strong rhythmic contrast so that the final variations can again charm the ear with their combination of lyricism and high spirits. The coda is then presented as a light-hearted culmination. Very good recording and a modest price make this coupling, with an equally fine account of the Brahms, very recommendable indeed.

Alessandro Carbonare, principal clarinet of the Orchestre National de France, produces exceptionally beautiful, liquid tone-colours over the widest dynamic range. Clear and fresh as the outer movements are, the high point is the Larghetto, magically gentle and with the main melody tastefully elaborated on its reprise. The four string-players, also members of the Orchestre National, are not quite so distinctive yet provide most sympathetic support.

Alfred Boskovsky's account, with members of the Vienna Octet, of the Clarinet Quintet is fresh but relaxed, glowing with Viennese warmth and with the intimacy of home music-making. The vivid 1954 mono sound has been well transferred by Testament, but it is a bit close.

Clarinet Quintet; Clarinet Quintet Fragment in B flat, K.516c; (i) Quintet Fragment in F for Clarinet in C, Basset Horn & String Trio, K.580b (both completed by Druce)

🔑  Amon Ra/Saydisc (ADD) CD-SAR 17. Hacker, Salomon Qt, (i) with Schatzberger

This is a superb recording by Alan Hacker with the Salomon Quartet, using original instruments. Hacker's gentle sound on his period instrument is displayed at its most ravishing in the Larghetto. Tempi are wonderfully apt and the rhythms of the finale are infectious, the music's sense of joy fully projected. The recording balance is near perfect. Hacker includes a fragment from an earlier projected Quintet and a similar sketch for a work featuring C clarinet and basset horn with string trio. Both are skilfully completed by Duncan Druce.

(i) Clarinet Quintet; (ii) Clarinet Trio (Kegelstatt)

 Praga Compatible Surround Sound SACD PRD/DSD 250 200. Moraguès; with (i) Pražák Qt; (ii) Braley, V. Mendelssohn

The fine Czech clarinettist Pascal Moraguès subtly varies his timbre in this pair of performances, comparatively limpid in the Quintet – seductively so in the slow movement – and slightly more robust in the Trio to match the style of the excellent pianist, Frank Braley. Moreover, the Quintet has a subtlety of dynamic and a nicely judged variety of tempi that, together with a feeling of natural spontaneity, create what is a virtually ideal performance. The finale is especially enticing, with an infectious burst of bubbling bravura just before the coda. Moreover, the SACD transfer gives the players a natural presence within a most attractive acoustic, especially to those collectors with full surround-sound facilities, but sounding pretty impressive as a normal CD.

(i) Clarinet Quintet, K.581; (ii) Horn Quintet, K.407

(*) MDG 304 1184-2. (i) Rodenhäuser; (ii) Vlatkovic; Ens. Villa Musica

The richness of Ulf Rodenhäuser's timbre in the Clarinet Quintet combines with beautifully blended string-playing to provide a result to captivate any listener, with sheer beauty of timbre and limpid phrasing. Tempi are consistently relaxed, and although in that respect there is perhaps not enough variety, the result never quite becomes bland. The performance of the Horn Quintet has similar finesse, but Radovan Vlatkovic's horn-playing is robust enough to create a contrast between the two performances.

(i) Clarinet Quintet; (ii) Horn Quintet; (iii) Oboe Quartet, K.370

 Nim. NI 5487. (i) Leister; (ii) Seifert; (iii) Koch; Brandis Qt

Karl Leister provides an essentially light-hearted account of the Clarinet Quintet, with the slow movement tranquil and beautifully poised. Gerd Seifert is just as lively and sensitive in the work for horn, even if his tone is a little plump. Lothar Koch is equally personable in the Oboe Quartet, although perhaps just a trifle studied in sustaining the Adagio (so beautifully opened by the Brandis Quartet). The recording, comparatively forward, is vividly present.

(i) Clarinet Quintet in A, K.581; (ii) Piano Quartets 1 in G min., K.478; 2 in E flat, K.493

(BB) () Naxos 8.111238. (i) Benny Goodman; (ii) Szell; Budapest Qt

These legendary records come from the days of shellac. Benny Goodman's set comes from 1938 (these were the days when popular musicians were musically educated) and the Szell set of the Piano Quartets was recorded in Hollywood in 1946. He was an elegant pianist although these performances did not enjoy wide currency in Britain or Europe. Curzon and the Amadeus came along on Decca a few years later and dominated the catalogue for some time afterwards. Readers can at last relish these classical and stylish performances in what is the best sound they have yet enjoyed.

(i) Clarinet Quintet; String Quartet 20 in D (Hoffmeister), K.499

Ⓜ (*) Whitehall Associates MQCD 6001. (i) Brymer; Medici Qt

Jack Brymer has a benign influence in a fine, mellifluous performance of the Clarinet Quintet. He plays the Adagio as a sustained half-tone and conjures from the strings comparably soft playing. The finale is delightful; there is an attractive improvisational feeling in the lyrical variation before the main theme makes its joyful return. The recording is truthful, but the close balance is more noticeable in the coupled Hoffmeister Quartet, which is a lively, well-integrated performance.

(i) Clarinet Quintet; (ii) Violin Sonatas in F, K.376; E flat, K.481

🔑 Ⓜ  HM Cal. 5628. (i) Zahradnik, Talich Qt; (ii) Messiereur, Bogunia

The Clarinet Quintet is exquisitely done. Bohuslav Zahradnik's contribution has much delicacy of feeling and colour; he is highly seductive in the slow movement, and even in the finale the effect is gentle in the most appealing way without any loss of vitality. The recording balance is exemplary. The two Violin Sonatas are also beautifully played in a simple, direct style that is wholly persuasive. The recording is clearly detailed and well balanced, if slightly more shallow.

Clarinet Trio (Kegelstatt); Piano & Wind Quintet, K.452

(*) CPO 777 010-2. Consortium Classicum – BEETHOVEN: Piano & Wind Quintet **(*)

On CPO the usual coupling of the Piano and Wind Quintets of Mozart and Beethoven, while perhaps not a first choice for these works, is enhanced by a fine account of the Clarinet Trio, with an excellent clarinettist in Dieter Klöcker. But the star of the proceedings overall is the fine pianist, Werner Genuit, who ensures that all three performances are enjoyable, with both the Larghetto and finale of the Quintet played most appealingly. Good, well-balanced recording.

(i) Divertimento in E flat for String Trio, K.563; (ii) Duos for Violin & Viola 1–2, K.423/4; (i) 6 Preludes & Fugues for String Trio, K.404a; (iii) Sonata (String Trio) in B flat, K.266

🔑 Ⓑ * Ph. Duo (ADD) 454 023-2 (2). (i) Grumiaux, Janzer, Szabo; (ii) Grumiaux, Pelliccia; (iii) ASMF Chamber Ens.

Grumiaux's 1967 recorded performance of the Divertimento in E flat remains unsurpassed; he is here joined by two players with a similarly refined and classical style. In the Duos, which are ravishingly played, the balance is excellent, and Arrigo Pelliccia proves a natural partner in these inspired and rewarding works. The Sonata for String Trio is well played by the ASMF Chamber Ensemble and it has a modern, digital recording.

Divertimento in E flat for String Trio, K.563; Duo for Violin and Viola in B flat, K.424

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67246. Leopold String Trio

Here is a completely natural performance of Mozart's E flat Divertimento and the first for some years that can come close to approaching the celebrated Grumiaux Trio version, which has served us so well for the past three decades. Marianne Thorsen and Scott Dickinson give a first-rate account of the B flat Duo, K.424. Very lifelike recording, totally at the service of Mozart and the musicians.

Flute Quartets 1 in D, K.285; 2 in G, K.285a; 3 in C, K.285b; 4 in A, K.298

🔑 * EMI 5 56829-2. Pahud, Poppen, Schlicht, Queras

🔑 * Avie AV 2108. Lisa & Pavlo Beznosiuk, Dunn & Tunnicliffe – BEETHOVEN: Serenade, Op. 25 ***

(i) Flute Quartets 1–4; (ii) Andante for Flute & Orchestra in C, K.315

Ⓑ  DHM (ADD) 05472 77442-2. B. Kuijken; (i) Coll. Aur. (members); (ii) La Petite Bande

Emmanuel Pahud gives inspired performances of the four Mozart Flute Quartets. These are all early works, generally lightweight, but with one movement of deep emotional feeling, the B minor Adagio of the First Quartet, K.285. In that songful piece Pahud finds new mystery through his subtly shaded phrasing. Otherwise this is a fun disc, full of youthful high spirits, charming and witty. Even more than his earlier disc of Mozart concertos for EMI, this signals the arrival of a new master flautist.

Playing period instruments with pleasing refinement, Lisa Beznosiuk's group find much charm and delicacy of feeling in these four enticing works; they couple them with Beethoven's equally delightful early Serenade for flute, violin and viola. Other versions may be more robust, but none are more cultivated.

Barthold Kuijken plays a beguilingly soft instrument from Dresden, made by August Grenser in 1789, and the effect has great charm. The playing of the three string instruments is also very smooth and accomplished, and the ensemble is beautifully recorded in a warm acoustic. The pitch is lower by a semitone, but few listeners will mind this. The Andante for Flute and Orchestra makes an engaging encore.

Flute Quartets 1–4 (arr. for Recorder)

Ⓝ  MVD OUR 6.220570. Petri, Widman, Ulijona, Sudraba

Michala Petri is a true star among recorder players, but even she cannot convince the listener that these Quartets can be effectively presented using a recorder. Although the group make a pleasingly homogeneous sound, the recorder is not able to achieve the subtlety of dynamic and range of colour possible on a transverse flute.

Horn Quintet in E flat, K.407

(BB)  Warner Apex 8573 89080-2. Vlatkovic, Berlin Soloists – BEETHOVEN: Septet ***

Radovan Vlatkovic is a most musical soloist, and his companions provide a warmly affectionate backing, most naturally recorded. The Andante is beautifully phrased by soloist and string group alike and the finale is appropriately perky. Excellent value.

Horn Quintet, K.407; Oboe Quartet, K.370; Piano and Wind Quintet, K.452; Quintet Movement, K.580b

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 67277. Gaudier Ens.

The Gaudier Ensemble here offers an ideal Mozart coupling of four wind-based chamber works. The oboist, Douglas Boyd, brings out the depth in the D minor slow movement of the Oboe Quartet as well as the fun of the outer movements, while Jonathan Williams is brilliant in the Horn Quintet, with the more ambitious Piano and Wind Quintet, in which Susan Tomes is the outstanding pianist, providing the anchor point. The rarity is the Quintet Movement for the unusual grouping of clarinet, basset horn and string trio, a magnificent piece, left unfinished at Mozart's death and here completed by Duncan Druce.

(i) Horn Quintet; String Quartet 19 in C (Dissonance), K.465; (ii) String Quintet 4 in G min., K.516

(BB) () Dutton mono CDBP 9717. (i) Brain; (ii) Gilbert (viola); Griller Qt

This further outstanding disc of Mozart chamber music from the Griller Quartet offered in the Dutton bargain series, superbly transferred, demonstrates again the strength and refinement of this leading quartet of the post-war period, largely neglected by record companies during the age of the LP. The G minor Quintet is outstanding, with excellent sound, while it is also good to have the Horn Quintet in another vintage performance with Dennis Brain as soloist.

Piano Quartets 1 in G min., K.478; 2 in E flat, K.493

🔑  ASV Gold GLD 4015. Nash Ens.

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67373. Lewis, Leopold String Trio

(BB)  EMI Encore 5 75873-2. Zacharias, F. & T. Zimmermann, Wick

Ⓜ  Sony 517 484-2 [SK 93071]. Ax, Stern, Laredo, Ma

Ⓜ  DG 477 6732. Bilson (fortepiano), Wilcock, Schlapp, Mason

Mozart's Piano Quartets, sharply contrasted with one another, are among the finest of all his chamber works. The Nash Ensemble bring out weight of feeling and insight, and the hero of the performance is the pianist, Ian Brown, who is a constant delight, bringing out the sparkling clarity of his part. He is partnered by an exceptionally strong trio of string-players – the violinist Marianne Thorsen, the outstanding viola-player Lawrence Power, and the long-established cellist, Ian Watkins.

The newest Hyperion coupling is equally recommendable, the performances a shade more intimate in style and texture, and refined in a most attractive way, with much that is felicitous from all concerned. Paul Lewis plays most nimbly and takes his colleagues with him. Most enjoyable in all respects, not least the natural recording with clear inner detail.

The performances on the EMI Encore disc are pleasing and warmly spontaneous, and the recording is first class to make this a strong budget CD.

The grouping of star names by Sony offers performances of keen imagination and insight. Speeds are beautifully chosen and in both works the performances consistently convey a sense of happy spontaneity. It is striking that Emanuel Ax, in the many passages in which the piano is set against the strings, establishes the sort of primacy required, pointing rhythms and moulding phrases persuasively. The recording, made in the Manhattan Center, New York, in 1994, is a degree drier than in many previous versions, suggesting a small rather than a reverberant hall.

The balance between the three stringed instruments and the keyboard is immediately altered when heard on period instruments. The playing of Malcolm Bilson and his colleagues is excellent and has both sparkle and grace. The recording too is outstandingly natural and lifelike, so if you are an aficionado of period performance this will be an obvious first choice.

Piano Quartet 1 in G min., K.478

 Ph. 446 001-2. Brendel, Zehetmair, Zimmermann, Duven – SCHUBERT: Trout Quintet ***

Brendel's performance of the G minor Piano Quartet has vigour and sensitivity and, not surprisingly, an admirable sense of style. It is very well recorded too and, although most collectors will prefer a disc containing both Piano Quartets, this is a sizeable bonus for an outstanding account of Schubert's Trout Quintet.

Piano Trios 1 in B flat, K.254; 2 in G, K.496; 3 in B flat, K.502; 4 in E, K.542; 5 in C, K.548; 6 in G, K.564

(BB) * Warner Apex 2564 62189-2 (2). Trio Fontenay

 Chan. 8536/7 (2). Borodin Trio

Ⓝ (BB) (*) Naxos 8.570518 (1–3); 8.570519 (4–6, plus Trio in D, K.442, completed Stadler). Kungsbacka Piano Trio

Piano Trios 1–6; 3 Movements, K.442

 MDG 303 0373-2 (2). Trio Parnassus

The Trio Fontenay have already given us excellent accounts of the Brahms and Dvořák Piano Trios and they are equally happy in the music of Mozart. As before, the splendid pianist Wolf Harden dominates the music-making by strength of personality, although the others are well in the picture, and the contribution of the cellist, Niklas Schmidt, is notable. The playing of this group is consistently fresh and spontaneous and has the advantage of modern digital recording and a very reasonable cost.

The Parnassus have another outstanding pianist in Chia Chou and the advantage of particularly natural and beautifully balanced recording. Moreover, MDG includes as a delightful bonus the three movements for the same instrumentation completed by Abbé Stadler and published in 1797. They are well worth having, with the finale acting as a sparkling encore, and their inclusion gives this set a strong claim on the collector, even though it is more expensive than the Trio Fontenay.

The Borodin Trio are slightly weightier in their approach and their tempi are generally more measured, very strikingly so in the Allegretto of the G major. All the same, there is, as usual with this group, much sensitive playing and every evidence of distinguished musicianship. The Chandos balance, recorded at The Maltings, Snape, produces a pleasingly integrated sound.

The performances on Naxos are also fresh and pleasing. They are dominated by the excellent pianist, Simon Crawford-Phillips, but the violin timbre of Malin Broman sounds comparatively small, because of the balance, although this is more noticeable on the first CD than on the second. Otherwise the recording is very good. The Naxos set also includes the extra work completed by Stadler.

Piano Trios 1 in B flat; 2 in G, K.496; 5 in C, K.548

 Hyp. CDA 67609. Florestan Trio

With Susan Tomes leading, this first instalment from the Florestan Trio promises to provide a top recommendation when its companion arrives. The performances are as fresh as you would expect and the recording balance is excellent.

(i) Piano Trios 2 in G, K.496; 3 in B flat, K.502; 4 in E, K.542; 5 in C, K.458; 6 in G, K.564; (ii) Clarinet Trio (Kegelstatt)

Ⓝ 🔑 * EMI 3 44643-2 (2). Barenboim; (i) Znaider, Zlotnikov; (ii) Glander, Schwarz

Mozart composed piano trios as early as his set of six (K.10–15) but it is the present works, covering a period of two years when Mozart was also occupied with Figaro and Don Giovanni, which are representative of his mastery. Barenboim's partners, the Danish violinist Nikolaj Znaider and Kyril Zlotnikov, are a natural and most musical team and their playing radiates an infectious pleasure in music-making. The recordings are well balanced and have excellent clarity.

Piano Trios 3 in B flat, K.502; 4 in E, K.542; 6 in G, K.564 (DVD version)

(*) DG DVD 073 4216. 5.0 Surround Sound. Previn, Mutter, Müller-Schott

As a distinctive Mozartian Ann-Sophie Mutter seems less at home in the Piano Trios than in the violin sonatas and concertos, and these well-recorded performances are less beguiling than they might be, partly because tempi in outer movements feel rather brisk, with Previn pressing on strongly. The other snag is the kaleidoscopic changes of camera angle which many will find unsettling. As in the rest of this series, the DVD includes a documentary of the making of the recordings.

Piano Trios 4 in E, K.542; 5 in C, K.548; 6 in G, K.564; Trio Movement in D, K.542

(*) Lyrichord LEMS 8054. Queen's Chamber Trio

(*) Signum SIGCD 081. Ambache Chamber Ens.

Mozart composed his last three symphonies and his final three piano trios in the same year. Lyrichord offer them played as the composer might have heard them, using a (very well-recorded) harpsichord instead of a fortepiano, which ensures great transparency of texture, although the balance favours the violin – not surprisingly, as Robert Zubrycki has such a firm, full timbre. The performances by the young members of the American Queen's Chamber Trio are fresh and pleasing and well integrated, although at times rhythmically rather precise.

Diana Ambache is a most musical pianist and an affectionately stylish Mozartian. She totally dominates these performances both in temperament and in sound, for neither the violinist, Gabrielle Lester, nor (especially) the cellist, Judith Herbert, are as strong in personality or timbre. Apart from this imbalance the recording is faithful, and one cannot but respond to the spontaneity of the playing.

Piano & Wind Quintet in E flat, K.452

 CBC MCVD 1137. Kuerti, Campbell, Mason, Sommerville, McKay – MOZART; WITT: Quintets ***

The performance by this excellent group of leading Canadian instrumentalists is hardly less captivating. They share this wonderful music as a perfectly matched team. This is playing of great freshness and striking spontaneity, given a perfectly balanced recording of vividness and presence. Moreover, the CBC issue scores by including also the quintet of Friedrich Witt, closely modelled on the present work.

Piano & Wind Quintet in E flat, K.452; Adagio in C min., & Rondo in C (arr. for piano & wind), K.617

 BIS CD 1132. Hough, Berlin Philharmonic Wind Quintet

The Quintet for Piano and Wind finds Stephen Hough and the Berlin Philharmonic Wind Quintet in splendid form. They have lightness and wit to commend them, as well as an impeccable feeling for style. This recording is as good as any in the catalogue and survives the most exalted comparisons. The coupling is made the more attractive by the inclusion of Michael Hasel's felicitous transcription of the Adagio and Rondo for glass harmonica, flute, oboe, and cello which sounds equally delectable. First-class recording too.

String quartets

String Quartets 2 in D; 3 in G; 4 in C; 5 in F; 6 in B flat; 7 in E flat; K.155/160 (Cal. CAL 5246)

String Quartets 3, K.156; 14, K.387; 15, K.421 (Cal. Approche (ADD) CAL 5241)

String Quartets 8–12, K.168–72 (Cal. Approche (ADD) CAL 5247)

Ⓜ  Talich Qt

String Quartets 16, K.428; 17 (Hunt), K.458

Ⓜ  Cal. Approche (ADD) CAL 5242. Talich Qt – HAYDN: String Quartet 74 ***

The prize-winning recordings by the Talich Quartet are here reissued in their previous couplings. Their playing is immaculate in ensemble and they have a special kind of shared intimacy which yet is immediately communicative. They are the soul of finesse and make music with expressive simplicity, while bringing vitality to Allegros and conveying a consistent feeling of spontaneous vitality throughout. They are naturally balanced. The analogue recordings have not been further remastered and remain beautiful, very warm and smooth on top, slightly middle- and bass-orientated. There are few records of Mozart's Quartets to match these.

String Quartets 4 in C, K.157; 6 in B flat, K.159; 11 in E flat, K.171; 14 in G, K.387; 15 in D min., K.421; 16 in E flat, K.428; 20 in D (Hoffmeister), K.499; 21 in D, K.575; 22 in B flat, K.589

Ⓝ Ⓜ (*) Nimbus NI 2508/10. American Qt

The recordings by the American Quartet use Stradivari instruments as far as possible, and certainly the tonal matching is remarkably smooth. The present three discs are Volume 1 of a forthcoming complete set. The quartets are immaculately played and naturally recorded. Perhaps at times one would have liked a little more idiosyncrasy in the music-making, but it is polished and thoroughly musical, and easy to live with.

String Quartet 14 in G, K.387

Ⓑ  EMI 3 66557-2. Formosa Qt – DEBUSSY: String Quartet; SCHUBERT: Quartettsatz; WOLF: Italian Serenade ***

The young Formosa Quartet from Taiwan give searchingly intense readings of all four works on their EMI Début disc. For young players to give such a stylish performance as this of K.387 is a remarkable achievement, not just pure and refined but beautifully shaded, with crisp attack, culminating in a dazzling account of the fugal finale.

String Quartets 14, K.387; 15, K.421; 16, K.428; 17 (Hunt), K.458; 18, K.464; 19 (Dissonance), K.465 (Haydn Quartets); 20 (Hoffmeister), K.499; 21, K.575; 22, K.589; 23, K.590 (Prussian Quartets 1–3)

🔑 Ⓜ  Teldec 4509 95495-2 (4). Alban Berg Qt

🔑 (BB)  CRD (ADD) CRD 5005 (5). Chilingirian Qt

The Teldec recordings were made by the Alban Berg in the latter half of the 1970s; the performances have not since been surpassed, and now they make one of the most distinguished sets of Mozart's late quartets currently available. The playing is thoroughly stylish and deeply musical; it is entirely free from surface gloss and there are none of the expressive exaggerations of dynamics and phrasing that marred this group's later records for EMI. The Haydn Quartets are consistently successful; the Hunt (1979) is still possibly the finest on the market and the Dissonance too is first class, with a wonderfully expressive account of the slow movement.

The splendid Chilingirian recordings on modern instruments have long been praised by us and rank among the freshest and most spontaneous performances in the catalogue. They are still second to none among versions using modern instruments, and at budget price this well-documented box is very highly recommendable.

String Quartets 14–19 (Haydn Quartets)

🔑 Ⓜ * Auvidis (14 & 15: E 8843; 16 & 17: E 8844; 18 & 19: E 8845). Mosaïques Qt

 Hyp. CDS 44001/3 (3). Salomon Qt

(i) String Quartets 14–19 (Haydn Quartets); also 3, K.156; (ii) Violin Sonata 18 in G, K.301

🔑 Ⓜ  HM Cal. 3241/3 (3). (i) Talich Qt; (ii) Messiereur, Bogunia (with HAYDN: String Quartet 74 in G min., Op. 74/3 **(*))

As with their previous award-winning performances of Haydn, Mosaïques Quartet offer playing of great distinction which provides new insights in every one of the six quartets. Phrasing is wonderfully musical, textures are elegantly blended, there is great transparency yet a full sonority, and this music-making unfolds freshly and naturally. Slow movements have great concentration, yet Allegros are alert and vital and finales are a joy. The recording is first class. The three CDs are packaged in a slip-case and now they are also available separately, most attractively packaged.

The playing of the Salomon Quartet is highly accomplished and has a real sense of style; they do not eschew vibrato, though their use of it is not liberal, and there is admirable clarity of texture and vitality of articulation. There is no want of subtlety and imagination in the slow movements. The recordings are admirably truthful and lifelike, and those who seek 'authenticity' in Mozart's chamber music will not be disappointed.

The performances by the Talich Quartet are immaculate in ensemble and they have a special kind of shared intimacy which is yet immediately communicative. The analogue recordings are beautiful, very smooth on top, the balance slightly middle- and bass-orientated. The set has now been issued complete on three mid-priced discs with a pair of bonuses. The Violin Sonata comes after the Dissonance Quartet; the Haydn quartet, Op. 74/3, after the Hunt, K.458, at a disconcertingly higher level. This too is a fine performance – but be prepared!

String Quartets 14–19 (Haydn Quartets); 20 (Hoffmeister); 21–3 (Prussian)

🔑 Ⓜ * Warner Elatus (ADD) 2-CD 2564 60678-2 (2) (14–17 & 20); 2564 60809-2 (2) (18–19; 21–3). Alban Berg Qt

These splendid recorded performances derive from the set made by the Alban Berg Quartet in the latter half of the 1970s, available on four CDs and highly praised by us above. This pair of separate reissues is most welcome.

String Quartets 14–15

🔑 ❀ (BB) (*) Dutton mono CDBP 9702. Griller Qt – HAYDN: String Quartet 39 ❀ ****

🔑 * MDG 307 1035-2. Leipzig Qt

Ⓜ (*) Telarc CD 80297. Cleveland Qt

Even more than the Adagio and Fugue (above) the playing of 14, K.387, and 15, K.421, by the Grillers reveals their supreme musicianship in Mozart, their warmth and above all the spontaneous feeling of their playing. Moreover, the miraculous Dutton transfers of these superb Decca ffrr recordings are so natural and beautiful that the sound is preferable to many modern digital recordings. Just sample their fizzing account of the Molto allegro finale of K.387 or the simple beauty of the Andante of K.421 to discover quartet playing of a very rare calibre indeed.

Those preferring first-class digital recordings played on modern instruments with greater tonal warmth than that afforded by the Smithson group will find the Leipzig Quartet second to none. As in their recordings of the last three quartets (see below), these performances also combine warmth and finesse with a natural spontaneity, and their music-making has much in common with the Grillers. They play repeats omitted on the earlier recordings. A lovely disc.

These are engagingly warm performances by the Clevelanders, richly recorded in a warm acoustic. The playing throughout is polished, beautifully blended and affectionate, but the effect is that, at times, textures are just a trifle suave. Yet both performances are rewarding, with finales a special joy. The Molto allegro of K.387 brings an infectiously spirited contrapuntal interplay, with the swinging secondary theme a joy, while in K.421 the Allegretto siciliano finale with its variations is elegantly graceful.

String Quartets 14 in G, K.387; 15 in D min., K.421; 16 in E flat, K.428; 17 in B flat (Hunt), K.458; 18 in A, K.464; 19 in C, K.465 (Dissonance) (DVD versions)

Ⓝ  EuroArt Unitel DVD 2072328 (2). Hagen Qt

These are beautifully alive and sensitively phrased performances that give much pleasure. They were recorded in 1998 in the elegant environment (and excellent acoustic) of the Grosser Saal of the Salzburg Mozarteum and visually are presented impeccably. A most satisfying issue, which can be recommended with enthusiasm.

String Quartets: 14 in G, K.387: 19 in C (Dissonance), K.465 (Haydn Quartets); 21 in D (Prussian I), K.575; (i) Serenade 13 (Eine kleine Nachtmusik) K.525 (DVD Recordings)

🔑 ❀ * EuroArts DVD 2054578. Gewandhaus Qt; (i) with S. Adelmann (double bass) (Director: Hans Hadulla)

The Gewandhaus Quartet is a superb group; their impeccable intonation, perfection of blending and vitality of attack remind us of the Alban Berg group at their best for, while they play with a deep seriousness of purpose, intensity of feeling is combined with spontaneity, as if they were playing to a live audience. This is helped by a beautifully balanced recording of the utmost fidelity. They are also in sparkling form in Eine kleine Nachtmusik, which is strikingly fresh; the delicacy of the Romance and vivacity of the finale are delightful. The quartet is seen against the beautiful backcloth of the Barockschloss in Rammenau, Saxony, where the acoustic is not too dry and not too resonant, so that one can always hear all four players individually and watch as Mozart's inspired part-writing passes between them.

String Quartet 14; (i) String Quintet 4 in G min., K.516

🔑 * ASV CDDCA 923. Lindsay Qt, (i) with Ireland

This is what chamber-music playing is about. The Lindsays radiate a delight in their music and judge the character of each piece of music exactly; and one has only to sample the finale of K.387, played with enormous vitality and sparkle, to sense immediately that the music-making is a world apart. The slow movement of the G minor String Quintet is very touching in its gentle intensity. These are among the finest modern recordings of either work. The disc must be recommended with enthusiasm.

String Quartets 15; 16; 18

() Testament mono/stereo SBT 1117. Smetana Qt

These are performances of a singular distinction, supremely classical in every way. The slow movement of K.428 has rarely sounded more affecting. This quartet appears in stereo for the first time. The A major, K.464, has not been issued before, and gives equal satisfaction. A very special record.

String Quartets 15, K.421; 17 (Hunt), K.428; 19 (Dissonance)

🔑 * Praga SACD PRD/DSD 250 242. Pražák Qt

The sophistication of detail of the outstanding Pražák Quartet is matched by the warmth and penetration of their playing, to say nothing of its fresh spontaneity. There is vigour, grace and expressive depth here in equal measure, and the darker atmosphere at the opening of the so-called Dissonance Quartet is most subtly evoked. The recording is in the demonstration bracket, with the resonance adding to the hall effect, remarkably live when the full SACD facility is used.

String Quartets 16, K.428; 18, K.464

🔑 * MDG 307 1160-2. Leipzig Qt

The Leipzig performances of the Mozart Quartets continue to be second to none, and they are beautifully recorded.

String Quartet 17 (Hunt); (i) String Quintet 3 in G min., K.516

() EMI Classic Archive mono DVD DVB 5996839. Amadeus Qt, (i) with Aronowitz – BEETHOVEN: String Quartets 4 & 6; 16: Lento assai (only). (Bonus: BRAHMS: Clarinet Quintet: 3rd movt: Andantino; BARTÓK: Quartet 4: Allegretto Pizzicato; SCHUBERT: Quartet 14 (Death and the Maiden): 4th movt) ()

The performance of the G minor String Quintet shows the Amadeus in good form in 1971 and is quite respectably recorded. Alas, the Hunt Quartet suffers from unacceptable harmonic distortion. There are also severe reservations about the two recordings of the Beethoven Op. 18 Quartets; the bonuses are the highlight of this DVD and are discussed under the Beethoven couplings.

String Quartets 17 (Hunt); 19 (Dissonance)

🔑 ✿ Ⓑ * Warner Apex (ADD) 0927 40828-2. Alban Berg Qt

🔑 * MDG 307 1107-2. Leipzig Qt

The Alban Berg Quartet recorded the Hunt in 1979 and it still ranks among the very finest accounts on disc. It has much greater polish and freshness even than the Italian Quartet, and well withstands all the competition that has come since. The Dissonance is of similar vintage. It, too, is first class, with a wonderfully expressive account of the slow movement with a sense of total dedication about these wholly excellent performances, which are recommended with enthusiasm.

The Leipzig Quartet continue their excellent performances of Mozart's 'Haydn' quartets by pairing the two most famous works. As with their equally fine coupling of 14 and 15, these are most musicianly performances, strikingly fresh and free from the slightest trace of affectation, and full of vital musical feeling. This series ranks alongside the finest modern-instrument performances, for the recording, although fairly close, is naturally balanced.

String Quartets 17 (Hunt); 19 (Dissonance); Adagio & Fugue in C min., K.456

Ⓜ  Somm SOMMCD 040. Coull Qt

The Coull Quartet, who have already given us a fine set of the Mendelssohn Quartets, are now embarking on a Mozart survey, and their splendid coupling of the Hunt (spick and span and full of sparkle) and the Dissonance, with its arrestingly atmospheric opening, bodes well for the series. Both slow movements combine depth with a warm, expressive feeling. They are generous with repeats so that the vivacious finale of the Dissonance plays for just over 11 minutes. The Adagio and Fugue, too, is full of concentration, yet not exaggerated in intensity. First-rate recording, crisply focused and transparent.

String Quartets 19 in C (Dissonance), K.465; 20 in D (Hoffmeister), K.499

 EMI 3 44455-2. Belcea Qt

The Belcea Quartet have now established themselves as one of the finest groups now before the public, and these two performances offer confirmation of their warm and penetrating response to a pair of Mozart's finest works. The playing is full of vitality, and its spontaneity is striking. The recording is faithful, although the upper range is a trifle over-bright in fortissimos.

String Quartet 19 (Dissonance); (i) String Quintet 6 in E flat, K.614

🔑 * ASV CDDCA 1069. Lindsay Qt, (i) with Williams

The Lindsays continue their combined series of Mozart's String Quartets and Quintets with one of the finest discs in the series so far. The striking harmonic atmosphere at the opening of K.465 immediately registers why it was nicknamed 'Dissonance', yet the following Allegro is sunny and the Andante has both serenity and depth of feeling to make a foil for the delightful Minuet and light-hearted finale. The Quintet is hardly less successful, with its witty finale brought off in a true Haydnesque spirit. The recording is real and immediate.

String Quartets 20 (Hoffmeister); 21–3 (Prussian Quartets 1–3)

Ⓜ  CRD (ADD) CRD 3427/8. Chilingirian Qt

The Chilingirian Quartet give very natural, unforced, well-played and sweet-toned accounts of the last four Quartets. They are very well recorded too, with cleanly focused lines and a warm, pleasing ambience; indeed, in this respect these two discs are second to none.

String Quartets 20 (Hoffmeister), K.499; 21 (Prussian 1); K.575; (ii) Violin Sonata 17, K.296

Ⓜ  Cal. Approche CAL 5244. Talich Qt

String Quartets 22 in B flat (Prussian 2), K.589; 23 in F (Prussian 3), K.590; Adagio & Fugue in C min., K.546

Ⓜ  Cal. Approche CAL 5245. Talich Qt

The Talich couplings of the Hoffmeister and Prussian Quartets are digital and the recording is brighter and more present than in the earlier Quartets. The playing has comparable sensibility and plenty of vitality.

String Quartets 20 (Hoffmeister), K.499; 22, K.589

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55094. Salomon Qt

The Salomon Quartet have impeccable ensemble and a real sense of style; they use vibrato judiciously and with taste. There is no lack of finesse or vitality, and if you want period-instrument performances of these two works, the present inexpensive CD could be a good choice. The recording is real and shows the transparency of texture these instrumentalists achieve, while blending beautifully together.

String Quartets 21–3 (Prussian Quartets 1–3)

🔑 Ⓑ * MDG Double MDG 307 0936-2 (2). Leipzig Qt

String Quartets 21–2 (Prussian 1–2)

 Nim. NI 5351. Franz Schubert Qt

(BB)  Warner Apex 0927 49575-2. Lotus Qt

String Quartets 21; 23 (Prussian)

🔑 * Astrée E 8659. Mosaïques Qt

The Leipzig performances of Mozart's last three quartets are second to none and have all the spontaneity of live music-making. They fill up the rest of the space on the second CD by ingeniously creating a 'sampler' composite quartet. This combines the opening Allegro of Schubert's D.353 with the glorious Lento assai of Beethoven's Op. 135, followed by the Scherzo from Brahms's Op. 51/2 and the finale from Beethoven's Op. 59/3. In principle one would resist such an idea, but all four movements are played superbly, and the amalgam works astonishingly well.

The Franz Schubert Quartet play with refreshing lack of affectation and with great sweetness of tone. There is perhaps more sweetness than depth in the slow movements; but at the same time it must be said that there is nothing narcissistic about the playing, and the listener is held from start to finish. They are very well recorded too.

On Apex most enjoyable performances by the Lotus Quartet, polished, well paced, fresh, bright, clearly and naturally recorded. If you want to sample the Lotus Quartet's feeling for a Mozartian line, sample the opening of 22. Excellent value at Apex price.

Even those collectors who do not normally respond to period-instrument performances should be swayed by the warmth and finesse of the playing of the Mosaïques Quartet and by their lightness of touch in the finale of K.590. The closing Allegretto of K.575 is revealing in quite a different way, and both slow movements have a searching intensity; yet there is an underlying lyrical feeling which often brings the sun out from behind the clouds. The recording is extremely lifelike.

The New York-based Shanghai Quartet, who use modern instruments, have won glowing opinions from the American press and elsewhere, and no wonder. They create a beautifully blended sound, warm and refined. Slow movements have a natural expressive flow, and there is all the delicacy of articulation needed for the dancing finales. They are recorded most naturally in a pleasingly spacious ambience. (Delos DE 3192)

String quintets

Complete Quintets: String Quintets 1 in B flat, K.174; 2 in C min., K.406; 3 in C, K.515; 4 in G min., K.516; 5 in D, K.593; 6 in E flat, K.614

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * HM Cal. (ADD) CAL 5231/33 (available separately). Talich Qt, Rehák, (i) Clarinet Quintet with Zahradnik

 MDG 304 1031-2 (1 & 6); 304 1032-2 (2 & 3); 304 1106-2 (4 & 5). Ens. Villa Musica

String Quintets 1 (with original version of Trio of the Minuet & Finale); 2–6

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553103 (1–2); 8.553104 (3–4); 8.553105 (5–6). Eder Qt, with Fehérvári

(i) String Quintets 1–6; Divertimento for String Trio in E flat, K. 563

🔑 Ⓑ * Ph. Trio (ADD) 470 950-2 (3). Grumiaux Trio, (i) with Gérecz, Lesueur

The six Mozart String Quintets played by the Talich Quartet and Karel Rehák are available in a mid-priced box, together with a radiant account of the Clarinet Quintet (with Bohyslav Zahradnik the sensitive soloist), on three Calliope discs which cost approximately the same as the pair of Duos above. The Calliope set will in the long run prove a far better investment.

On the bargain-priced Trio, Grumiaux's distinguished (1973) set of the String Quintets is coupled with his unsurpassed (1967) version of the rather less well-known but equally inspired Divertimento for String Trio – an ideal linking. The remastering of these fine analogue recordings is outstandingly natural – a tribute to the Philips engineers, for the bloom on the original LPs remains on CD, yet detail is enhanced.

The augmented Eder Quartet also offer a complete set of the String Quintets, and the first disc displays their unexaggerated Mozartian style, a fine blend of tone and musicianship. While not a match for the Talich, these performances are eminently recommendable to those with limited budgets. The last two quintets come off very well indeed. The recording is close but very realistic.

Another fine modern-instrument set of the Mozart Quintets comes from the Ensemble Villa Musica, led by Rainer Kussmaul, each disc available separately. The first, with the B flat and E flat Quintets, is particularly fine; the third includes a very impressive account of the G minor. The recording is real and present, although the balance lets Kussmaul's principal violin rather dominate the proceedings. The older recordings by the Grumiaux ensemble and the Talich are not surpassed.

String Quintets 1 (with original version of Minuet & Finale); 4 in G min. K.515

* CRD 3521. Chilingirian Qt, with Inoue

Since they made their outstanding recordings of the String Quartets the Chilingirian personnel have changed. But Leon Chilingirian remains the leader, and Philip De Groote is still the cellist. The newcomers blend and respond as impressively as their predecessors. So these are among the very finest performances available on modern instruments, and the recording is exemplary in balance and natural in timbre.

Violin sonatas

Violin Sonatas 17–28; 32–4; Sonatina in F, K.547 (DVD & CD versions)

🔑  DG DVD 073 4213 (2) (V/D: Christian Kurt Weiss); CD 477 580-2 (4). Mutter, Orkis

Recorded live in Munich in 2006, Mutter's collection of the 16 mature violin sonatas of Mozart completes her triptch of recordings made for the 250th Mozartian Anniversary. She follows a neat line between modern-instrument practice and the demands of period performance, leaning towards the former with tautly controlled vibrato in slow music. Whether observed in recital on DVD or simply listened to on CD, these performances are characteristically fresh and spontaneous, for Mutter is a natural Mozartian and Lambert Orkis matches his violinist-partner well, with lively accompaniments. As with the companion DVD of the Violin Concertos, the camera angles are restless, with swiftly changing close-ups, moving from violin to piano and back and then showing the artists together. This may be found disconcerting. But the sound is very well balanced and truthful in both formats, and the audience is amazingly quiet. The DVD set includes as a bonus a documentary on the making of the recordings.

Violin Sonatas 18–20 in C, K 301–3; 6 Variations on 'Hélas, j'ai perdu mon amant', K.360; 12 Variations on 'La Bergère Célimène', K.359

Ⓝ  Chan. 0755 Duo Amadè

Violin Sonatas 18–22, K.301–5; 32–4, K.454, 481 & 526

Ⓝ (BB)  Virgin 2CD 5 93218-2 (2). Schröder, Orkis (fortepiano)

Of these two discs, the Chandos is the more enjoyable. Catherine Mackintosh and Geoffrey Govier (fortepiano) form a most winning partnership and make an engaging case for playing these works on period instruments. The variations, too, are most enjoyable, and the recording is vivid and natural.

Jaap Schröder and Lambert Orkis also form a complementary partnership. However, Schröder's timbre has a certain amount of edge to it and Orkis's fortepiano timbre is rather hard and somewhat lacking in sonority. This set is for authenticists only.

Violin Sonatas 18–23, K.301–306 (DVD version)

🔑 ✿ * EuroArts DVD 2055188 (optional 5.1 Surround Sound). Gil & Orli Shaham (Director: Michael Beyer)

Gil Shaham and his equally talented younger sister Orli make a perfect partnership in these six Sonatas and provide one of the finest DVDs of instrumental music in the catalogue. Recorded without an audience in the Palais Daun-Kinsky, Vienna, in 2006, they play very beautifully indeed, with the subtlest control of phasing and the widest range of dynamic, often reducing their tone to a whisper. Each individually is a supreme Mozartian and yet they play together as one, in perfect symbiosis. The recording is totally natural and (for once) the camera, while following their playing as one would wish, does not dart about restlessly, so that one can just sit back and enjoy their totally compelling music-making.

Violin Sonatas 17–28; 32–4; Sonatina in F, K.547

🔑 Ⓑ  DG 463 749-2 (4). Perlman, Barenboim

🔑 Ⓑ  Decca (ADD) 448 526-2 (4). Goldberg, Lupu

Violin Sonatas 17–25; 12 Variations in G on 'La Bergère Célimène', K.359

Ⓑ  Ph. Duo (ADD) 462 1852 (2). Szeryng, Haebler

Violin Sonatas 17–20 (Naxos 8.553111)

Violin Sonatas 21–3; 25 (Naxos 8.553110)

Violin Sonatas 26–8 (Naxos 8.553112)

Violin Sonatas 32–3

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553590. Nishizaki, Jandó

Violin Sonatas 29–30; in B flat, K.570 (arr. for Violin & Piano); Variations in G min. on 'Au bord d'une fontaine' (Hélas j'ai perdu mon amant)

(BB)  Naxos 8.557665 Nishizaki, Loeb

Perlman and Barenboim form a distinguished team, with alert, vital playing and a sense of spontaneous music-making which pervades their four CDs. There is much attention to detail (though never fussy-sounding) which makes these come over as strikingly fresh accounts. Those who invest in this set will not be disappointed, and the recordings are vividly realistic.

Radu Lupu plays with uncommon freshness and insight, while Szymon Goldberg brings a wisdom, born of long experience, to these sonatas which is almost unfailingly revealing. Lupu gives instinctive musical support to his partner and both artists bring humanity and imagination to their performances. In short, very distinguished playing from both artists, expertly balanced.

Ingrid Haebler brings an admirable vitality and robustness to her part. Szeryng's contribution is altogether masterly, and all these performances find both partners in complete rapport. The analogue recordings from the mid-1970s provide striking realism and truthfulness, and they have been transferred immaculately to CD. The Variations included in the set are managed with charm. The intimate atmosphere of these performances is particularly appealing.

The partnership of Takako Nishizaki and Jenö Jandó is very successful. In the earlier of the more mature sonatas, which date from 1778, the violin often takes a subsidiary role, and here the balance and Jandó's strong personality emphasize the effect. This is slightly less striking in K.379–80 (on the third disc) which are later (1781) and in which the part-writing is more equal. On the fourth CD of the series we move on to K.454 and K.481, which date from 1785 and 1786, respectively. The two instruments now form a much more equal partnership. Nishizaki's tone is small and at times a little thin and uncovered (rather like a period instrument) but seems perfectly scaled for Mozart; her playing is highly musical, and these artists strike a Mozartian symbiosis that is appealing in its fresh simplicity of approach.

Nishizaki's new partnership with Benjamin Loeb seems propitious: even the recording seems more flattering to her tone, and Loeb plays appealingly. A most enjoyable disc, especially the Variations. But then her whole series is rewarding.

MUSIC FOR CLAVICHORD

(i; iv) Andante & Variations, K.501 (for 4 hands); (i) Allegro, K.312; Minuetto, K.135; (ii) Adagio for Glass Harmonica, K.356; Andantino (after Gluck), K.236; March funèbre, K.453a; Pieces, K.33b & K.623; Rondo, K.494; (iii) Fantasia in D min., K.397 (with coda); Sonata in D, K.381; Theme & 2 Variations, K.460

 DHM/BMG 82876 83288-2. Hogwood, playing (i) Hass clavichord; (ii) Mozart's clavichord; (iii) Schiedmayer clavichord; (iv) with Adlam

Curiously named 'The Secret Mozart', this had been better given the adjective 'Intimate', for this was the instrument Mozart played at home (the actual clavichord is included here and was almost certainly used in four-handed duets with his sister Nannerl in the Variations which are listed first, but which come second in the programme). The principal interest here is the different sound of the three instruments whose intimate timbre was suitable only for a small room. So these recordings must be played back very gently, and then you will enjoy some of the composer's lesser known music, admirably played by Hogwood, with Derek Adlam in the Variations.

Piano duets

Adagio, K.546, & Fugue, K.426 (arr. Franz Beyer); Allegro & Andante in G, K.357 (completed Julius André); Larghetto & Allegro in E flat, K.Deenst; Sonata in D (for 2 pianos), K.448; Sonata in C, K.190

🔑  Sony 82876 78363-2. Tal & Groethuysen

Andante & Variations in G, K.501; Fantasia in F min., K.608; Fugue, K.401; Sonatas: in B flat, K.358; F, K.497

🔑  Sony SK 93868. Tal & Groethuysen

Allegro & Andante, K.357; Pieces for Mechanical Organ in F min., K.594; Sonatas: in D, K.381; in C, K.521; Fragments in G, K.357 (completed Robert Levin)

🔑  Sony 82876 74654-2. Tal & Groethuysen

Yaara Tal and Andreas Groethuysen enjoy an enviable reputation, and it must be said that Mozart duo playing doesn't come much better than this. Apart from the vibrant intelligence and sensitivity of the playing, the sound is bright and well detailed. They are arguably the finest piano-duet/two-piano partnership now before the public. Like their Schubert CDs some years back, these performances are impeccably musical, fresh and sensitive. In every way superb.

Adagio & Rondo in C min./maj., K.617; Sonatas (for 2 pianos) in D, K.448; in B flat (realized Goldstone); in G (with 2nd piano part by Grieg), K.283; Overture: Die Zauberflöte (arr. Busoni)

 Divine Art dda 25046. Goldstone & Clemmow

Goldstone and Clemmow open their collection with the Magic Flute Overture, surprisingly successful in Busoni's transcription. But Anthony Goldstone's own arrangements are very attractive too – the Rondo, K.617, is delightful, while Grieg's second piano part for K.283 is a fascinating novelty. The performances are excellent, as is the recording.

(i) Andante with 5 Variations, K.501; Fugue in C min., K.426; Sonatas for Piano Duet: in C, K.19d; G, K.357; B flat, K.358; D, K.381; Sonata in D for 2 Pianos, K.448; F, K.497; C, K.521 (both for piano duet)

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex 2564 62037-2 (2). Güher & Süher Pekinel

This excellent duo are in their element in Mozart. Their playing is full of life and spirit, yet their vigour never rides roughshod over Mozart. The Andante of K.381 is beautifully poised, while the molto allegro of its D major companion (for two pianos) is memorably bold, rhythmic and infectious. The other works are hardly less compelling and the Andante and Variations make an engaging counterpart. Excellent, modern, digital recording makes this a first recommendation for this repertoire.

Andante with 5 Variations, K.501; Sonata in D, K.448

 Chan. 9162. Lortie, Mercier – SCHUBERT: Fantasia in F min. ***

Andante & Variations in G, K.501 (for piano, 4 hands); Sonata in D, K.448; Fantasia for Mechanical Organ in F min., K.608 (arr. Busoni for 2 pianos)

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * Sony 517490-2. Perahia & Lupu – SCHUBERT: Fantasia in D min. ****

The partnership of two such individual artists as Murray Perahia and Radu Lupu produces magical results, particularly when it was set up in the context of the Aldeburgh Festival, playing at The Maltings concert hall. The D Major Sonata, like the Schubert Fantasia, was recorded live. For this reissue two more works have been added, recorded at Abbey Road in 1990. The performance of the Andante and Variations is full of felicity and charm, but the transcribed Fantasia is another matter. All thoughts of the original instrumentation disappear in this remarkably arresting performance with its powerfully motivated outer movements and delicate but never flimsy Adagio. Very good recording makes this a reissue not to be missed.

The Louis Lortie–Hélène Mercier partnership also gives one of the most sensitive accounts of the D major Sonata, K.448, currently available on disc, and their account of the Andante and Variations is equally fine. The Schubert coupling is also recommendable. Very good recording.

Sonatas: in F, K.497; in C, K.521; Pieces for mechanical organ: Adagio & Allegro in F min., K.594; Adagio & Allegro in F min., K.608

✿  Ottavio OTR C129242. Cooper, Queffélec

Above all, these performances convey a sense of joy in the music. The Sonatas – both highly inspired – are framed by the two works for mechanical clock, which here sound both thoughtful and unusually commanding: the opening Adagio of K.594 is wonderfully serene. The first movement of the C major Sonata sets off with great spirit, yet detail is always imaginatively observed. The slow movement of K.497 is a lovely, flowing melody, persuasively presented, while the finale has a most engaging lilt. Altogether this is playing of great distinction. Everything is marvellously fresh. Very strongly recommended.

Solo piano music

Piano Sonatas 1–18 (complete)

Ⓑ  EMI (ADD) 7 67294-2 (5). Barenboim

Piano Sonatas 1–18; Adagio, K.540; Allegro, K.312; Fantasias, K.396; K.397 & K.475; Gigue, K.574; Minuets, K.1 & K.355; Rondos, K.485 & K.511; Variations, K.264/5; 455; 573; K.Anh. 137

Ⓑ () DG (mono) 477 5856 (6). Seemann

Piano Sonatas 1–18; Fantasia in C min., K.475; Variations, K.24–5; 54; 179–80; 264–5; 353–4; 398; 455; 500; 573; 613

Ⓑ (*) EMI 5 73915-2 (8). Barenboim

Piano Sonatas 1–18; Fantasia in C min., K.475

✿ Ⓑ Ph. 468 356-2 (5). Uchida

Ⓑ  Decca (ADD) 443 717-2 (5). Schiff

Piano Sonatas 1–17; Fantasias: in D min., K.397; in C min., K.475; Rondo in D, K.488

Ⓑ  Sony 82876 88808-2 (4). Kraus

Piano Sonatas 1–18; Fantasias: in D min., K.397; C min., K.475

 DG (IMS) 431 760-2 (6). Pires

Piano Sonatas 1–18; Fantasias, K.457 & K.396; Variations, K.353; Variations, K.398 & K.460; Allegro, K.312; Minuet, K.355; Rondo, K.511; Adagio, K.540; Gigue, K.574

Ⓜ () Music & Arts mono (ADD) CD-1001 (5). Kraus

Piano Sonatas 1–18; Fantasia in C min., K.475; Adagio in B min., K.540; Eine kleine Gigue, K.574; Fantasy Fragment in D min., K.397; Klavierstücke in F, K.33b; Kleiner Trauermarsch, K.453a; Modulation Prelude in F/E min., K.6 Deest; Overture, K.399; Prelude in C, K.284a; Prelude & Fugue in C, K.394; Rondos, K.485 & K.511; Variations, K.24; K.25; K.180; K.264; K.265; K.352; K.353; K.354; K.398; K.455; K.457; K.460; K.573; K.613

🔑 (BB)  BIS CD 1633/36 (10). Brautigam (fortepiano)

Ronald Brautigam's set is bursting with life and intelligence. He uses a 1992 copy (made in his native Amsterdam) of a fortepiano by Anton Gabriel Walter from about 1795. It is a very good instrument and he is a very good player. Dip in anywhere in this set and you will be rewarded with playing of great imagination and sensitivity – not to mention sureness and agility of mind and fingers, and he is completely inside the Mozartian sensibility of the period. This series has given great pleasure, and it is beautifully recorded too. The ten discs are offered for the price of four and now come in a box with two booklets offering separate documentation for the Sonatas and for the Variations plus miscellaneous pieces.

Maria João Pires is a stylist and a fine Mozartian. She is always refined yet never wanting in classical feeling, and she has a vital imagination. She strikes an ideal balance between poise and expressive sensibility, conveying a sense of spontaneity in everything she does. Moreover, the DG recording is full, and the slight dryness to the timbre suits the interpretations, which are expressively fluid and calm, without a trace of self-consciousness. While Uchida's much-praised versions are full of personal intimacy, Pires's more direct style with its tranquil eloquence is no less satisfying.

Uchida's set of the Mozart Sonatas, with the C minor Fantasia thrown in for good measure, brings playing of consistently fine sense and sound musicianship. Every phrase is beautifully placed, every detail registers, and the early Sonatas are as revealing as the later ones. The piano recording is completely realistic, slightly distanced in a believable ambience.

Barenboim, while keeping his playing well within scale in its crisp articulation, refuses to adopt the Dresden china approach to Mozart's Sonatas. Even the little C major, K.545, designed for a young player, has its element of toughness, minimizing its 'eighteenth-century drawing-room' associations. Though – with the exception of the two minor-key Sonatas – these are relatively unambitious works, Barenboim's voyage of discovery brings out their consistent freshness, with the orchestral implications of some of the Allegros strongly established. The recording, with a pleasant ambience round the piano sound, confirms the apt scale.

EMI now also offer an alternative choice of a complete coverage of all the important solo piano music. The Variations were recorded – more forwardly – in Munich in 1991. As before, Barenboim's positive, direct approach brings all this music fully to life. But compared with the Sonatas the music is much more variable in interest, and this is a set to dip into with a degree of discretion, for Mozart occasionally seems almost on auto-pilot, writing for comparatively unsophisticated tastes.

Schiff, without exceeding the essential Mozartian sensibility, takes a somewhat more romantic and forward-looking view of the music. His fingerwork is precise yet mellow, and his sense of colour consistently excites admiration. He is slightly prone to self-indulgence in the handling of some phrases, but such is the inherent freshness and spontaneity of his playing that one accepts the idiosyncrasies as a natural product of live performance. The piano is set just a little further back than in the Philips/Uchida recordings, and the acoustic is marginally more open, which suits his slightly more expansive manner.

Lili Kraus, born in Budapest in 1905, recorded her earlier cycle of the Mozart Sonatas, as well as shorter pieces, in New York for the Haydn Society in 1954. Compared with her later recording, issued by Sony, the closeness of the sound allows one to appreciate more the diamond clarity of Kraus's playing with its high dynamic contrasts, even if pianissimos are not as hushed as they might be. These earlier performances are not only more dramatic but more spontaneous-sounding too, with firmer technical control. The mono sound is well transferred to make it firm and vivid. In both recordings Kraus omits the composite Sonata in F, K.533/494, which Mozart created by adding to two late movements an earlier Rondo in less complex style.

Sony have now reissued Lili Kraus's later recordings, made in 1967/8. They have the distinct advantage of a recording with a wider dynamic range and more bloom on the piano sound, which is very naturally balanced. Indeed, this set is very enjoyable indeed, so consistently engaging is Kraus's Mozartian touch, and her phrasing is equally refreshing.

Carl Seemann's simplicity of approach and his refusal to let his interpretations be coloured by self-seeking or wilful eccentricity may mean that to some ears his playing seems too plain, even aloof. Yet his natural musicality, the way he can turn a phrase dispassionately but thoughtfully and with subtle feeling, has its own appeal in this repertoire. His playing is intuitively balanced and, in its unostentatiously quiet way, very rewarding, for it has a natural, unforced spontaneity.

Piano Sonatas 2 in F, K.280; 13 in B flat. K.333; 14 in C min., K.457; Fantasia in C min., K.475

Ⓑⓑ (*) Naxos 8.550 449. Jandó

Jenö Jandó's Mozartian collection shows him as a natural Mozartian, if perhaps not an inspired one. He opens with impressive accounts of both the Fantasia and the C minor Sonata, which are related, finding their drama, and playing the central Andantino of the Fantasia very appealingly. Indeed, each of the Sonatas is firmly characterized, with thoughtful accounts of slow movements (the Andante cantabile of K.333 and the Adagio of K.280 are most sensitive without being sentimentalized) and in each case the finales are pleasingly light-hearted. The recording, made in the Budapest Unitarian Church, is faithful and this collection is satisfyingly unostentatious and direct.

Piano Sonatas: 3 in B flat, K.281; 10 in C, K.330; 11 in A, K.331; 12 Variations on 'Ah, vous dirai-je, Maman', K.265

🔑 Ⓑⓑ  Regis RRC 1255. Tirimo

Piano Sonatas: 12 in F, K.332; 13 in B flat, K.333; 16 in C, K.545; in D, K.576

🔑 Ⓑⓑ  Regis RRC 1254. Tirimo

Martino Tirimo's Regis CDs are taken from a complete cycle of Mozart's piano music which he undertook for the Mozart Anniversary in 2006. If the rest are as good as these, the set will be a top recommendation. This is playing of distinction, essaying as wide a dynamic and expressive range as is appropriate for this repertoire, and full of joyful spontaneity. The very realistic recordings, which bring out his perceptive keyboard colouring, were made in the Mendelssohn Saal at the Leipzig Gewandhaus, which seems to have an ideal ambience for the piano. Highly recommended.

Piano Sonatas 3; 10; 13; Adagio, K.540; Rondo, K.485

🔑 Ⓜ  DG 445 517-2. Horowitz

Playing of such strong personality from so great an artist is self-recommending. With Horowitz there were astonishingly few reminders of the passage of time and the artistry and magnetism remain undiminished. The recordings were made in the pianist's last vintage period, between 1985 and 1989, in either a New York studio, the pianist's home, or an Italian studio in Milan (K.333). Remarkable playing, not always completely free from affectation; but for variety of articulation just sample the Allegretto grazioso finale of K.333 and, for simply expressed depth of feeling, the Adagio, K.540.

Piano Sonatas 4 in E flat, K.282; 14 in C min., K.457; Fantasia in C min., K.475; Suite in C, K.388 with Gigue, K.574; 10 Variations in G on the Aria 'Unser dummer Pöbel meint' from Gluck's 'Die Pilgrime von Mekka'

🔑 Ⓑ  HMX 2961815. Staier (fortepiano)

We know that Andreas Staier is an outstanding artist, but on this CD he has surpassed himself. The instrument is a copy of a fortepiano by the Viennese maker Anton Walter, very similar to an instrument he built for Mozart. It is perfect for the opening piece in the programme, a baroque-styled Suite that Mozart wrote in 1782 but left unfinished. Staier has completed the Sarabande and supplied as the missing closing movement Mozart's 'kleine Gigue', K.574, which makes a witty ending. Apart from the Overture, very much in the style of Handel, there is an exquisite Allemande, which is played here very beautifully and with every bit as much colour as could be given by a modern piano.

Staier's performance of the E flat Sonata is no less appealing, and the engaging Variations were used by Tchaikovsky in his Mozartiana Suite and show again the fortepiano's rich lower sonority to fine effect. But the highlight of the recital is the masterly C minor Fantasy, which is superbly played and leaves an unforgettable impression.

Piano Sonatas 7–10, K.309–11 & K.331

🔑 ✿ (BB) * Regis (ADD) RRC 1207. Walter Klien

Walter Klien's set of the Mozart sonatas, dates from 1964. The discs were originally issued in Vox Boxes (three LPs at a time). But they eventually found their way individually onto the celebrated Turnabout label. Now they are reintroduced to the British catalogue on Regis. Klien's playing is fresh, strongly characterized and with constant sensitivity; he is determined to show that there are no favourites, just a succession of masterpieces. Even so in this sampler the exquisite Andante cantabile of the A minor (K.310) and the spirited opening Allegro of the D major (K.311) are particularly memorable. On CD the recording is clean and clear, a little dry perhaps, but these performances are special.

Piano Sonatas 8; 11; 13; 14; Adagio, K.540; Fantasia, K.475; Rondo, K.511; 9 Variations in D on a Minuet by Dupont, K.573

Ⓑ (*) Ph. Duo (ADD/DDD) 454 244-2 (2). Brendel

The recordings of the A major Sonata, K.331, and the B flat, K.333, come from 1971 and 1975 respectively and they show Brendel at his very finest, while the B minor Adagio is also memorable. K.331, with its engaging opening theme and variations and justly famous Alla turca finale, is a joy. The analogue recording, too, is most realistic. However, the A minor, K.310, and the C minor, recorded digitally in the following decade, are more controversial. Brendel seems unwilling to seduce us by beauty of sound, and the result is self-conscious playing, immaculately recorded. Fortunately, he is back on form in the Fantasia in C minor, the Rondo and the Variations.

Piano Sonatas 8; 11; 15

🔑 ✿ * Sony SK 48233. Perahia

Such is Murray Perahia's artistry that one is never consciously aware of it. Nothing is beautified, nor does he shrink from conveying that hint of pain that fleetingly disturbs the symmetry of the slow movements. The Sony engineers provide excellent sound.

Piano Sonatas: 10 in C, K.330; 11 in A, K.331; 12 in F, K.332; Adagio in B min., K.540; Fantasias: in C min., K.475; D min., K.385; Rondos: in D, K.485; A min., K.511; 9 Variations on a Minuet by Dupont in D, K.573

🔑 * EMI 2-CD 3 36080-2 (2). Lars Vogt

Not surprisingly, this is playing of distinction, and Vogt is fortunately given an outstandingly realistic recording with a wide dynamic range. The remarkably thoughtful and introspective B minor Adagio which ends the recital and the two Fantasias perhaps show him at his most imaginative and poetic, but the exquisite opening Andante grazioso of the A major Sonata is no less memorable, with the closing Alla Turca Rondo bursting in on the listener to make a thrilling, bravura finale. The two Rondos and the engaging Variations show the composer in lighter mood; but even here Vogt brings personal insights to the music, while the other two sonatas show him balancing Mozart's three-part structures with complete spontaneity and capturing every facet of the music's inner feeling.

Piano Sonatas 10; 11; 16; Rondo, K.511

 Ph. 462 903-2. Brendel

Although for the most part recorded 'live', Brendel's performances here have an appealingly thoughtful intimacy, as if he were hardly conscious of the audience. Yet one still has the sense of being in Brendel's presence. Interestingly, the studio recording of the C major Sonata, K.330, seems very slightly less spontaneous in feeling than the rest of the programme. But altogether this is playing of distinction. Audience noises are minimal (although applause is included), and the recording, although fairly closely observed, is very natural.

Piano Sonata 15 in F, K.533/494

 Calico Classics CCCR 101. Crossland – BEETHOVEN: Sonatas 17 & 31 **(*)

Jill Crossland is a natural Mozartian and gives a delightful performance of this F major Sonata, compiled from a Rondo, K.494, and a separate Allegro and Andante, K.533, making it seem a composite whole. She is very well recorded.

Piano Sonatas 15 in F, K.533/494; 16 in C, K.545; 17 in B flat, K.570; 18 in D, K.576

(*) Avie AV 0025. Haefliger

Andreas Haefliger is an artist of calibre who gives splendidly vital accounts of these sonatas. He does not bring the same variety of keyboard colour and dynamic nuance or poetic feeling as do the likes of Perahia or Pletnev, but he has sobriety and an undoubted sense of style and unfailing musicianship. However, these four works are not otherwise available together on a single CD, and it remains a satisfying collection and benefits from excellent recorded sound.

Piano Sonatas 15 in F, K.533/494; 17 in B flat, K.570; 18 in D, K.576; Gigue, K.574; Minuet in D, K.355/594a

Ⓜ  Atma ACD2 2249. Sémerjian (fortepiano)

Very stylish Mozart playing by Ludwig Sémerjian, using a fortepiano by Nanette Streicher, made in 1802–5 and now in the German National Museum in Nuremburg; in any event he is a splendid player and is well recorded too. If you want Mozart on an instrument of the period, this is an eminently satisfactory choice.

Piano Sonata 17

() Testament mono SBT 1089. Gilels – CHOPIN: Sonata 2; SHOSTAKOVICH: Preludes & Fugues 1, 5 & 24 ()

The B flat Sonata was recorded in Paris at the Théâtre des Champs-Elysées in March 1954. The sound is a little dry and close, but the playing has a simplicity and poetry that completely transcend sonic limitations.

Complete Variations, plus: Adagio in B min., K.540; Allegro of a Sonata in G min., K.312; Allegro & Rondo (Allegretto) in F, Anhang K.135; Andante for a Waltz in a Chamber Organ, K.616; Capriccio in C, K.395; Eine kleine Gigue, K.574; Fantasies: in C min., K.396; in D min., K.397; Fantasy & Fugue in C, K.394; Fugue in G min., K.401; Kleiner Trauermarsch, K.453a; Minuet in D, K.355; 6 Pieces from London Sketchbook; Rondos: in D, K.455; in A min., K.511; Sonata movement in B flat, K.400; Sonata movement & Minuet in B flat, Anhang K.130

✿ Ⓑ * (Regis) Musical Concepts MC 131 (3). Klien

Some of Mozart's earliest piano pieces, like the Variations on a Dutch Song by Graaf, written when he was in Amsterdam and barely ten years old, are of relatively slight musical interest, but the remarkable C minor Fantasy and the G minor Fugue (the product of his intense interest in Bach) are works of substance. Walter Klien's playing is totally spontaneous and can only be described as being in exemplary taste: there is nothing self-conscious about it, his phrasing is unfailingly musical and every detail is beautifully placed without there being the slightest suggestion of precocity. The recorded sound was always good; in its remastered form it is very good indeed, wholly natural, and this is a set not to be missed.

ORGAN MUSIC

Andante in F, K.616; Adagio & Allegro in F min., K.594; Fantasia in F min. (Adagio & Allegro), K.608 (all for musical clock); Allegro in G (Veronese), K.72a; Gigue in G, K.574; (i) Epistle Sonatas: in F, K.244; in C, K.328

(BB)  Warner (ADD) 2564 69256-5. Tachezi (organ of Basilika Maria Treu, Vienna); (i) with Alice and Nikolaus Harnoncourt and Pfeiffer

Mozart is never really thought of as a composer for the organ. Until now, the only 'organ works' we have had on record have been the three pieces he wrote for Count Deym's mechanical organ attached to a clock. Mozart had no opinion of the mechanism for which his music was commissioned and is known to have wished the pieces were intended for a large instrument. To these Herbert Tachezi adds a brief Allegro and an attractive Gigue, plus two of the Epistle Sonatas, in which he is joined by the Harnoncourt Trio. The performances overall are acceptable and well registered, but there is nothing distinctive about this record, although the sound is excellent.

VOCAL MUSIC

51 Concert Arias

Ⓑ  Decca (ADD/DDD) 455 241-2 (5). Te Kanawa, Gruberová, Berganza, Laki, Hobarth, Winbergh; VCO, Fischer; or LSO, Pritchard; Fischer-Dieskau, V. Haydn O, Reinhard Peters; Corena, ROHCGO, Quadri

This very comprehensive coverage is based on a five-LP Decca set of the complete concert arias for female voice, published in 1981, to which those for male voice have subsequently been added. Berganza's collection includes the most demanding soprano aria of all, Ch'io me scordi di te?, recorded (with Pritchard and the LSO) a decade earlier than the rest. Te Kanawa opens the programme memorably. Gruberová's contribution is hardly less brilliant and charming, her singing full of sparkle and character, and superbly articulated. The others, Elfrieda Hobarth and Krisztina Laki, are less individual personalities but do not disappoint vocally. Laki shows impressive coloratura in her opening aria, the little-known Fra cento affanni, K.88, and she is equally impressive in the lyrical flow of Non curo l'affetto, which again demands comparable bravura. Hobarth's style is more operatic and she becomes a veritable Queen of the Night in tackling the fearsome upper tessitura of Ma che vi fece, o stelle, K.368, and Mia speranza adorata!, K.416, both of which are accomplished with confident bravado.

The digital recordings by Gösta Winbergh, an exceptionally stylish Mozart tenor, were added later; he rises splendidly to the challenges of such splendid arias as Per pietà non ricercate, K.420, and Aura che intorno spiri, K.431. Fischer-Dieskau's contribution was a separate undertaking, recorded in 1969, and it includes a beautiful aria from 1787, Mentre ti lascio, which reveals Mozart's inspiration at its keenest. The other items too bring their delights. Fernando Corena's Alcandro, lo confesso ... Non so d'onde viene, K.512, and Per questa bella mano, K.612, are less than ideally stylish and in the latter not always absolutely secure in intonation. Yet he is at his very finest in the buffo aria, Rivolcete a lui lo sguardo, K.584, originally written for Così fan tutte and later cut because of its length. It is a superb piece and it suits Corena's voice well, so that the full power is brought out magnificently. The CD transfers throughout are of high quality, and full translations are included, but the accompanying essay by Kenneth Chalmers documents the music only sketchily, because of limited space.

Concert arias: Ah! lo previdi ... Ah, t'involа, K.272; Alma grande e nobil core, K.578; A questo seno ... Or che il cielo, K.374; Bella mia fiamma ... Resta, o cara, K.528; Betracht dies Herz und frage mich, K.42; Misera, dove son! ... Ah! non son io che parlo, K.369; Vado, ma dove? o Dei!, K.583

Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 449 723-2. Janowitz, VSO, Boettcher

Gundula Janowitz's voice combines a glorious tonal beauty with a surprising degree of flexibility so that Mozart's cruelly difficult divisions – usually written deliberately to tax the original ladies involved – present no apparent difficulty, but there is no mistaking the singer's ability to shade and refine the tone at will. An excellent collection of delightful concert arias that are too often neglected nowadays, thanks to the vagaries of modern concert-planning.

(i; iii) Lieder: Abendempfindung; Als Luise die Briefe; Die Alte; An Chloe; Dans un bois solitaire; Im Frühlingsanfang; Das Kinderspiel; Die kleine Spinnerin; Das Lied der Trennung; Oiseaux, si tous les ans; Ridente la calma; Sehnsucht nach dem Frühling; Das Trumbild; Das Veilchen; Der Zauberer; Die Zuhfriedenheit; (ii; iii) Piano and Wind Quintet in E Flat, K.452

🔑 Ⓜ * EMI mono 3 53226-2. Schwarzkopf, Gieseking, (iii) Philh. Wind. Ens.

Schwarzkopf's classic recital of the Mozart songs with Gieseking was recorded in 1955 and includes the famous Das Veilchen. With such inspired performances, one hardly worries about the mono sound. The coupling includes Gieseking's famous recording of the Piano and Wind Quintet which sounds remarkably fresh. Thankfully, full texts and translations are included in this mid-price release.

Concert aria: Ch'io mi scordi di te?, K.505

() Testament mono SBT 1178. Schwarzkopf, Anda, Philh. O, Ackermann – BACH: Cantatas 199; 202 ***

This account of Ch'io mi scordi di te?, recorded in 1955 with Géza Anda playing the difficult piano obbligato, is uniquely fresh and urgent, with Schwarzkopf's vehement side given free rein. A splendid and valuable supplement to the Bach recordings, which have also remained unissued for far too long.

Concert aria: Ombra felice, K.255; Opera arias: Ascanio in Alba: Ah di si nobil alma; Mitridate: Venga pur, Gia dagli occhi

🔑  Virgin 5 45365-2. Daniels, OAE, Bicket – GLUCK; HANDEL: Arias ***

Under the title 'Sento amor', David Daniels offers one of the finest of counter-tenor recitals. In the arias from early Mozart operas, the brilliance of his singing is what stands out above all, giving beauty and energy to the florid writing, as well as a deeper expressiveness to the lyrical passages than one might expect. At once pure and warm, completely avoiding the usual counter-tenor hoot, placing his voice flawlessly, Daniels is exceptional even in an age which has produced many outstanding rivals.

Sacred Vocal Music

Ave Maria, K.555; Ave verum corpus, K.618; Litaniae Lauretanae, K.109; Masses: 10 (spatzenmesse), K.220; 16 (Coronation); Regina Coeli, K.276

 Lyrichord LEMS 8059. Amor Artis Ch., Musica Antiqua Sankt Petersburg

Johannes Somary and his excellent Amor Artis choral group has joined up with the excellent Musica Antiqua Sankt Petersburg period-instrument group in New York for a highly enjoyable selection of Mozart's choral music. The opening motet, Regina coeli, is warmly sung, but throughout this programme the singing combines (unexaggerated) fervour with lyrical warmth. Tempi are usually well judged (perhaps the famous Ave verum corpus, which is sung accompanied, is a trifle leisurely, but not to ill effect). The singing throughout combines joy in the music with an easy-going spontaneity and, with good balance and recording, this is a most recommendable programme, particularly as it includes the comparatively rare Litaniae Lauretanae.

Ave verum corpus, K.618; Exsultate, jubilate, K.165; Kyrie in D min., K.341; Vesperae solennes de confessore in C, K.339

🔑 * Ph. 412 873-2. Te Kanawa, Bainbridge, R. Davies, Howell, L. Symphony Ch., LSO, C. Davis

This disc could hardly present a more delightful collection of Mozart choral music, ranging from the early soprano cantata, Exsultate, jubilate, with its famous setting of Alleluia, to the equally popular Ave verum. Kiri Te Kanawa is the brilliant soloist in the cantata, and her radiant account of the lovely Laudate Dominum is one of the high spots of the Solemn Vespers, here given a fine, responsive performance. The 1971 recording has been remastered effectively, although the choral sound is not ideally focused.

(i–ii) Ave verum corpus, K.618; (iii–iv) Exsultate, jubilate, K.165; Masses Nos. (i–iii; v) 10 in C (Missa brevis): Spatzenmesse, K.220; (ii–iii; vi) 16 in C (Coronation), K.317

Ⓜ  DG (IMS) (ADD) 419 060-2. (i) Regensburg Cathedral Ch.; (ii) Bav. RSO, Kubelik; (iii) Mathis; (iv) Dresden State O, Klee; (v) Troyanos, Laubenthal, Engen; (vi) Procter, Grobe, Shirley-Quirk, Bav. R. Ch.

Kubelik draws a fine, vivid performance of the Coronation Mass from his Bavarian forces and is no less impressive in the earlier Missa brevis, with excellent soloists in both works. Then Edith Mathis gives a first-class account of the Exsultate, jubilate as an encore. The concert ends with Bernard Klee directing a serenely gentle account of the Ave verum corpus (recorded in 1979).

Davide penitente (Oratorio); Regina coeli, K.108

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.570231. Lund, Wahlin, Odinius, Immortal Bach Ens., Leipzig CO, Schuldt-Jensen

Mozart's remarkably effective oratorio, using quite a big orchestra, was commissioned by the Vienna Society of Artists in 1785. He drew on previous music but also added a pair of splendid new arias and, although the choruses are lively, it is the soprano arias (and especially a duet and terzetto featuring the two sopranos) that brings some radiant singing from the two fine soloists here, Trine Wilsberg Lund and Kristina Wahlin, while the tenor, Lothar Odinius, is also excellent. The brief Regina coeli, written 14 years earlier, also features the soprano voice memorably and makes an enjoyable bonus. With fine choral singing and excellent playing from the Leipzig Chamber Orchestra under Morten Schuldt-Jensen, this is refreshingly enjoyable, the more so for being little known. The recording is first class and there are full texts and translations.

Davide penitente, K.469; Exsultate, jubilate, K.165; Così fan tutte: Temerari! . . . Come scoglio; Ei perte . . . Per pietà, ben mio; Un uomini, in soldati; Le nozze di Figaro: E Susanna non vien! . . . Dove sono; Giuse alfin il momento . . . Al desio; Don Giovanni: Batti, batti, o bel Masetto; In quali eccessi . . . Mi tradi quall'alma ingrati

🔑 Ⓜ  Decca 475 7526. Bartoli, V. CO, G. Fischer

'Mozart Portraits' is a truly remarkable Mozartian collection, showing that Cecilia Bartoli not only has an astonishing range – vocal and dramatic – and dazzling coloratura (as in Exsultate, jubilate and elsewhere), but she is also an artist who can create real operatic human characters and express their feelings vividly and touchingly. Fiordiligi's Come scoglio is tempestuous, her Per pietà ravishingly tender. For Despina the voice is much lighter (although one could have done without the 'laugh'), and her Un uomini, in soldati charmingly displays that she has no illusions about mankind, for all her vivacious femininity; while Zerlina's Batti, batti is simply enchanting Mozartian lyricism. The Countess's Dove sono is heart-rending, but then Bartoli becomes Susanna in her supreme moments of happy expectation. The selection ends as it began, in an expression of true female ferocity from Donna Elvira, but she is still in love, and her tenderness then brings most beautiful singing on the disc. With splendid accompaniments from György Fischer and the Vienna Chamber Orchestra (the bravura horns in the Così fan tutte aria are really something), this excellently recorded disc returns to the catalogue as one of Decca's Originals (with full texts and translations included).

(i) Exsultate, jubilate, K.165; (ii) Litaniae Lauretanae in D, K.195; Mass 16 (Coronation), K.317; (iii) Requiem Mass (No. 19) in D min., K.626

Ⓑ (*) Double Decca (ADD) 443 009-2 (2). (i) Spoorenberg; (ii; iii) Cotrubas, Watts, Tear, Shirley-Quirk; (ii) Oxford Schola Cantorum; (iii) ASMF Ch; (i-iii), ASMF, Marriner

Marriner's 1971 (Argo) recordings of the Litaniae Lauretanae and the Coronation Mass are welcome, back in the catalogue on this Double Decca set. The solo work is particularly good (notably Ileana Cotrubas in the two lovely Agnus Dei versions) and the Academy Choir is on its best form. Erna Spoorenberg's impressive Exsultate, jubilate was recorded earlier (1966). However, Marriner generates less electricity than usual in the coupled (1977) Requiem Mass. It is interesting to have a version which uses the Beyer Edition and a text which aims at removing the faults of Süssmayr's completion. Solo singing is good, and some of the choruses (the Dies irae, for instance) are vibrant, but at other times they are less alert and the tension slackens. The sound is excellent, well balanced and vivid.

Exsultate, jubilate, K.165 (Salzburg version); Motets: Ergo interest, K.143; Regina coeli (2 settings), K.108, K.127

 Australian Decca Eloquence 476 7460. Kirkby, Westminster Cathedral Boys' Ch., AAM Ch. & O, Hogwood

The boyish, bell-like tones of Emma Kirkby (in 1983) are perfectly suited to the most famous of Mozart's early cantatas, Exsultate, jubilate, culminating in a dazzling account of Alleluia. With accompaniment on period instruments, this is aptly coupled with far rarer but equally fascinating examples of Mozart's early genius, superbly recorded. A refreshing and enjoyable collection.

Kyrie, K.341/K368a

(*) Profil Medien PH 6039. Stuart, Schone (organ), Dresden PO Children's Ch., State Opera Ch. & Children's Ch., Symphony Ch., Singakademie; Dresden State O, C. Davis – BERLIOZ: Te Deum *

As a supplement to the Berlioz in the same concert (recorded live at the Kreuzkirche, Dresden, in October 1998), Davis conducted music by his other favourite composer, Mozart, the Kyrie in D minor, K.341. What will be disconcerting to many listeners today is that he treats it almost as though it is by Berlioz, with all idea of an apt 18th-century scale abandoned in a massive celebration.

Masses: 2 (Missa brevis), K.65; 3 (Dominicus), K.66; 4 (Waisenhaus), K.139; 7 (Missa in honorem Ssmae Trinitatis); 10 (Spatzenmesse), K.220; 11 (Credo), K.257; 12 (Spaur), K.258; 13 (Organ Solo), K.259; 16 (Coronation Mass), K.317; 17 (Missa solemnis), K.337; 18 (Great), K.427; 19 (Requiem), K.626; Ave verum corpus, K.618

(BB) (*) Virgin 2x1 5 61769-2 (5). Frimmer, Kwella, Monoyios, Montague, Schlick, Graf, Groenewold, Chance, Pfaff, Prégardien, Schäfer, Mertens, Selig, Cologne Chamber Ch., Coll. Cartusianum, Neumann

As can be seen from our comments about the Virgin Double of Masses 16–18 below, Peter Neumann's performances are fresh, stylish, warmly enjoyable and very well sung. Most importantly, these artists give a very fine, dramatic account of the Requiem (not included below), and the recording here is excellent, clear and vivid. The soloists are all very good throughout, and the other Masses, early and late, have plenty of character. The backward balance of the chorus is not enough of a problem to make this other than a worthwhile collection of some of Mozart's finest non-operatic vocal music.

Mass 3 in C (Dominicus), K.66; Vesperae de Domenica, K.321

🔑 Ⓜ  Teldec 2292 46469-2. Margiono, Bonney, von Magnus, Heilmann, Cachemaille, Arnold Schoenberg Ch., V. Hofburgkapelle Ch. Scholars, VCM, Harnoncourt

Harnoncourt is at his finest in this splendidly lively Mass, which the thirteen-year-old Mozart wrote for a personal friend ten years his senior when he took holy orders, and the direct Harnoncourt style, with its strong accents and positive characterization, brings it vividly to life. The more ambitious Vesperae de Domenica, written a decade later, forms a neat and joyful Missa brevis, here refreshingly alive and brimful of variety of invention. Again the singing of chorus and soloists alike is highly stimulating, and Harnoncourt's affection brings a committed and vivacious approach which is entirely successful. The recording is first rate.

Masses (i–ii) 4 (Waisenhaus); (iii) 7 (Missa in honorem Ssmae Trinitatis); (i–ii) 11 (Credo); (ii; iv) 16 (Coronation); 17 (Missa solemnis)

Ⓑ (*) Double Decca (ADD) 455 032-2 (2). (i) Mentzer, Manca di Nissa, Mackie, Roberts; (ii) King's College, Cambridge, Ch., ECO, Cleobury; (iii) V. State Op. Ch., VPO, Münchinger; (iv) with Marshall, Murray, Covey-Crump, Wilson-Johnson

Mozart's early C minor Mass is notable both for its rich choral writing and for the fine Benedictus, a dialogue between soprano and chorus, with the trumpets entering resplendently for the Amen. It is presented here most effectively by Stephen Cleobury and his team. The Missa Trinitas, written in Salzburg five years later, is even more ambitious, using a big orchestra with copious brass (four trumpets and three trombones) as well as oboe, strings and organ. Münchinger offers a strong, direct account, but the disappointment of this 1974 recording, made in the Sofiensaal, is how little is made of the trumpets, which, even in the Credo, are backwardly balanced. The other recordings are digital and were made a decade later. Cleobury is perhaps at his finest in the Credo Mass and, with the help of his excellent soloists, gives a vividly exuberant performance of a work that shows its composer at his most sunnily high-spirited throughout. The Missa solemnis in C major, K.337, was the very last of the 15 settings that Mozart wrote for Salzburg, another work that is just as inspired as the better-known Coronation Mass. Though Cleobury's direction here could be rhythmically more lively, both performances are of high quality, with excellent soloists and fresh choral singing.

Masses (i) 10 (Spatzenmesse), K.220; (ii) 18 (Great), K.427; (iii) 19 (Requiem), K.626

Ⓑ (*) DG Double (ADD/DDD) 459 409-2 (2). (i) Mathis, Troyanos, Laubenthal, Engen, Regensburg Cathedral Ch., Bav. RSO, Kubelik; (ii) Battle, Cuberli, Seiffert, Moll, V. State Op. Konzertvereinigung, VPO, Levine; (iii) Tomowa-Sintow, Baltsa, Krenn, van Dam, V. Singverein, VPO, Karajan

Kubelik's direct but lively account of the Spatzenmesse does not disappoint: his soloists, led by Edith Mathis, make a good team and the recording from the early 1970s is fresh and clear. (This is also available coupled with the Ave verum corpus and Coronation Mass – see above.) Karajan's 1975 analogue recording of the Requiem is outstandingly fine, deeply committed, with incisive playing and clean-focused singing from the chorus, not too large and set a little behind. The fine quartet of soloists too is beautifully blended. Levine's recording of the C minor Mass is digital and dates from 1987. There are reservations about the tremulous soprano line in the chorus, which otherwise sings powerfully. The soloists are individually impressive (Kathleen Battle shines in the Laudamus te), but the ensemble of the Quoniam is less than ideally polished, and the performance overall is a little rough round the edges. Yet the music's emotional power is never in doubt, for Levine's reading has a compelling, spontaneous vigour. The recording, too, is very live and vivid.

Mass 16 in C (Coronation), K.317

Ⓜ (*) DG (IMS) 445 543-2 (2). Battle, Schmidt, Winbergh, Furlanetto, V. Singverein, VPO, Karajan – BEETHOVEN: Missa solemnis **(*)

Ⓑ (*) DG Double (ADD) 453 016-2 (2). Tomowa-Sintow, Baltsa, Krenn, van Dam, V. Singverein, BPO, Karajan – BEETHOVEN: Missa solemnis ***

Karajan's 1985 recording of Mozart's Coronation Mass is certainly vibrant, with fine choral singing and good soloists. Kathleen Battle sings beautifully in the Agnus Dei, and the recording is bright, if not ideally expansive.

Karajan's earlier (1976) recording is a dramatic reading, lacking something in rhythmic resilience perhaps; but, with excellent solo singing as well as an incisive contribution from the chorus, there is no lack of strength and the score's lyrical elements are sensitively managed. The current remastering has further improved the sound.

Masses (i) 16 (Coronation); 17 (Missa solemnis); (ii) 18 (Great); Kyrie in D min., K.341

(BB) (*) Virgin 2x1 3 91803-2 (2). Cologne Chamber Ch., Coll. Cartusianum, Neumann; with (i) Kwella, Groenewold, Prégardien, Selig; (ii) Schlick, Frimmer, Prégardien, Mertens

Neumann directs an enjoyable account of the Coronation Mass, as well as the much rarer Missa solemnis, which is on a similar scale and is also very well sung. The C minor Mass has much to commend it: fine soloists – with Barbara Schlick always fresh and captivating in the Laudamus te – spacious choral singing (if, again, somewhat backwardly balanced) and excellent playing from an authentic-sized orchestra on original instruments. The only caveat is that the chorus again lacks the bite to make the performance really gripping. A good super-bargain set (if without texts or translations), which has much to recommend it.

Masses (i) 16 in C (Coronation); (ii) 19 in D min. (Requiem); Ave verum corpus

Ⓜ  DG 477 7164 (without Ave verum corpus). Tomowa-Sintow, Baltsa, Krenn, van Dam, V. Singverein, BPO, Karajan

🔑 Ⓜ  Ph. 464 720-2. (i) M. Price, Schmidt, Araiza, Adam; (ii) Mathis, Rappé, Blochwitz, Quasthoff; Leipzig R. Ch., Dresden Staatskapelle, Schreier

Karajan's earlier (1975) Coronation Mass is a dramatic reading, lacking something in rhythmic resilience perhaps but, with excellent solo singing as well as an incisive contribution from the chorus, there is no lack of strength and the score's lyrical elements are sensitively managed. The current remastering has further improved the sound. The Requiem, recorded at the same time, is even finer, deeply committed with incisive playing and clean-focused singing from the chorus, not too large and set a little behind. The fine quartet of soloists is again beautifully blended and nothing is smoothed over and, with excellent sound, such a passage as the Dies irae has exceptional freshness and intensity.

Schreier's 1982 version of the Requiem is here supplemented by the Coronation Mass and Ave verum corpus, recorded a decade later with the same choir and orchestra. By latter-day standards the opening Introitus of the Requiem is rather heavy, but that is the exception in this intensely dramatic and purposeful reading, with Dame Margaret Price singing ravishingly. The quartet of soloists is impressive too in the Coronation Mass, and in both the Leipzig Radio Choir sings with superb attack, if occasionally resorting to an aspirated style. Full, well-refurbished sound.

Mass 16 in C (Coronation), K.317; Vesperae solennes de Confessore, K.339

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Teldec/Warner 2564 69259-7. Rodgers, von Magnus, Protschka, Polgár, Arnold Schoenberg Ch., V. Hofburkapelle Choral Scholars, VCM, Harnoncourt

Harnoncourt is not entirely logical in using period instruments but also women rather than boy trebles in the choir. As usual, accents are strong, dynamic contrasts are exaggerated, and phrasing is somewhat eccentrically moulded, although Joan Rodgers is a fine soprano soloist in both works, her line eloquent and without exaggerations. The recording has plenty of atmosphere, but could be more clearly defined.

Coronation Mass: Agnus Dei; Exsultate jubilate; Regina coeli, K.108; Regina coeli, K.127; Sancta Maria, Mater Dei; Solemn Vespers: Laudate Dominum from K.321 & K.339; Sub tuum praesidium

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67560. Sampson, King's Consort and Ch., King

Carolyn Sampson with her bright, pure soprano provides the focus of Robert King's well-compiled collection of Mozart choral works, most of them early. Sampson's singing of the showpiece, Exsultate jubilate, rivals Dame Kiri Te Kanawa's and Cecilia Bartoli's classic recordings in its freshness and brilliance, and her radiance in the two settings of Laudate Dominum is a delight too. King's Mozartian style, incisive and direct, gives vigour to even the less inspired of the early works.

Mass 18 in C min. (Great), K.427

🔑 * DG 439 012-2. Hendricks, Perry, Schreier, Luxon, V. Singverein, BPO, Karajan

🔑 * Ph. 420 210-2. McNair, Montague, Rolfe Johnson, Hauptmann, Monteverdi Ch., E. Bar. Sol., Gardiner

In his (1982) digital recording of the C minor Mass Karajan gives Handelian splendour to this greatest of Mozart's choral works and, though the scale is large, the beauty and intensity are hard to resist. Solo singing is first rate, particularly that of Barbara Hendricks, the dreamy beauty of her voice ravishingly caught. Woodwind is rather backward, yet the sound is both rich and vivid – though, as the opening shows, the internal balance is not always completely consistent.

John Eliot Gardiner, using period instruments, gives an outstandingly fresh performance of high dramatic contrasts, marked by excellent solo singing: both the sopranos pure and bright-toned and Anthony Rolfe Johnson in outstandingly sweet voice. With the recording giving an ample scale without inflation, this too can be warmly recommended.

Mass 18 in C min., K.427; Mass 19 (Requiem), K.626 (DVD version)

🔑 * Ph. DVD 074 3121. Bonney, von Otter, Rolfe Johnson, Miles, Monteverdi Ch., E. Bar. Sol., Gardiner (V/D: Jonathan Fulford)

As one would expect of Gardiner, playing and singing are both brilliant and incisive, with shattering impact in the Dies irae, yet there is also a tenderness not always apparent in period performances. Gardiner uses the traditional completion of the Mass published in 1901 by Alois Schmitt, yet with corrections he himself has made in the Credo, with the string parts in the Et incarnatus rewritten in a truer Mozartian style. Jonathan Fulford's video direction nicely exploits the colourful qualities of the Palau de la Musica Catelana in Barcelona, where the performance was given in 1991.

Requiem Mass (19) in D min., K.626 (DVD versions)

🔑 * DG DVD 073 4135. McLaughlin, Ewing, Hadley, Hauptman, Bav. R. Ch. & O, Bernstein (V/D: Humphrey Burton)

(*) TDK DVD DVWW-COMREQ. Yakar, Wenkel, Equiluz, Holl, V. State Op. Konzertvereinigung, VCM, Harnoncourt (with BACH: Cantata 161: Komm du süsse Todsstunde)

Bernstein's is an unashamedly modern-instrument version with a large choir, and the result is warmly expansive, with a broad, expressive style in the slower sections and plenty of choral weight and vitality in the fast ones. But with four excellent soloists the interpretation flows seamlessly and holds the listener in its grip. At the close Bernstein allows the last chord to diminish in a long morendo and in the following silence can be heard the tolling bells of the old collegiate church outside. Humphrey Burton ensures that we are made fully part of this remarkable occasion. (At the close there is a bonus of a brief spoken introduction to the work by Bernstein himself.)

Harnoncourt uses much smaller forces, but he also has the advantage of first-class soloists, with the soprano Rachel Yakar and contralto Ortrun Wenkel especially fine. With the camera focused on him, Harnoncourt creates a very sombre atmosphere at the opening, but his modest-sized choir respond tellingly, and his period-instrument orchestra brings clean textures, although the violins are sweet rather than abrasive. Unlike his previous audio version, the choral and orchestral focus is clean so that the impact of this relatively modest account is the more telling. He offers a Bach cantata as a bonus, also well presented.

Mass 19 (Requiem) in D min., K.626 (CD versions)

🔑 Ⓑ * LSO SACD LSO 0627. Arnet, Stéphany, Kennedy, Jeffrey, L. Symphony Ch., LSO, C. Davis

🔑 Ⓑ * Virgin 5 62478-2. Kenny, Hodgson, Davies, Howell, L. Symphony Ch., N. Sinf. & Ch., Hickox

Ⓝ Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 2 12718-2. Armstrong, J. Baker, Gedda, Fischer-Dieskau, John Alldis Ch., ECO, Barenboim – BRUCKNER: Te Deum **(*)

(BB)  RCA Navigator (ADD) 74321 29238-2. Equiluz, Eder, V. Boys' Ch., V. State Op. Ch. & O, Gillesberger – HAYDN: Te Deum ***

Ⓑ (*) CfP (ADD) 3 75934-2. Mathis, Bumbry, Shirley, Rintzler, New Philh. Ch. & O, Frühbeck de Burgos (with Masonic Funeral Music; cond. Klemperer)

Mass 19 in D min. (Requiem) (ed. Maunder)

🔑 Ⓜ (*) O-L 411 712-2. Kirkby, Watkinson, Rolfe Johnson, Thomas, Westminster Cathedral Boys' Ch., AAM Ch. and O, Hogwood

Mass 19 (Requiem); (i) Grabmusik, K.42: Beatracht dies Herz; Vesperae solennes de confessore, K.339: Laudate Dominum

🔑 * DG 463 181-2. (i) Harnisch; Mattila, Mingardo, Schade, Terfel, Swedish R. Ch.; BPO, Abbado

Mass 19 (Requiem); (i) Exsultate jubilate

(*) Lyrichord LEMS 8056. (i) A. Brown; Kidwell, Garner, Bara, Ama Deus Ens. Ch. & O, Radu

Mass 19 (Requiem); Kyrie, K.341

🔑 * HM HMC 901620. Rubens, Markert, Bostridge, Müller-Brachmann, La Chapelle Royale Coll. Voc., O des Champs Elysées, Herreweghe

🔑  Ph. 420 197-2. Bonney, von Otter, Blochwitz, White, Monteverdi Ch., E. Bar. Sol., Gardiner

(i) Mass 19 (Requiem); Maurerische Trauermusik, K.477

Ⓑ  Auvidis ES 9965. Soloists, La Capella Reial de Catalunya; Le Concert des Nations, Savall

Recorded live at the Barbican in the autumn of 2007, Sir Colin Davis's new recording tends to sweep the board, and as it is offered on SACD at bargain price, the absence of a coupling is not a drawback. In any case the performance is superb. It has all the power and spontaneity of live music-making and employs characteristic influences from period performance which Davis integrates fully, with the hard-nosed timpani quite electrifying in the glorious Sanctus and again in the closing Domine Jesu. The soloists are all excellent individually, and they sing movingly together as a team in the Recordare and Domine Jesu. The London Symphony Chorus sing with passion and are recorded with plenty of bite, and the LSO back them up by playing very impressively. The SACD surround sound is very realistic indeed, and the overall effect is most vivid, making a full impact without seeming too dry.

Recorded live in July 1999 in Salzburg Cathedral, Abbado's performance of the traditional score with the Berlin Philharmonic was given to commemorate the tenth anniversary of the death of Herbert von Karajan. The dedicated atmosphere of such an occasion is powerfully caught, with the DG engineers clarifying the sound to a remarkable degree, with fine detail as well as ample weight. With the brilliant Swedish Radio Choir singing with exceptionally clear focus, such choruses as the Dies irae are thrillingly intense, and the starry yet youthful line-up of soloists – none of whom Karajan would ever have heard – makes an outstanding team. In the two extra items, among Mozart's loveliest soprano solos, Rachel Harnisch sings with warmth and refinement. This can be recommended to those wanting a traditional, modern-instrument account of Mozart's choral masterpiece.

Barenboim's exuberance may raise a few eyebrows. Mozart's Dies irae, for instance, has such zest that one senses the chorus galloping towards the Day of Judgement with enthusiasm. Yet the underlying drama and musicality of the performance as a whole disarm criticism. The intensity of Barenboim's feeling comes over from the opening bar, and the Kyrie eleison is stirring indeed. The lyricism of the score is beautifully calculated and the operatic-styled quartet which closes the Tuba mirum is particularly lovely. So too is the closing section of the Confutatis maledictis, which creates a gentle mood for the opening of the Lacrimosa. Here Barenboim's emotional contrasts dramatize the words superbly. The Sanctus is gloriously forthright. With a good solo team and excellent choral singing, this is a splendidly alive performance, and the recording is excellent.

Herreweghe is arresting from the very dramatic opening bars, and in the work's central Sequenz (Dies irae; Tuba mirum; Rex Tremendae; Recordare; Confutatis and the moving Lacrimosa) he achieves a remarkable emotional thrust. The orchestra gives weighty support, and one is hardly aware that this is a period-instrument performance, with the horns and trumpets capping climaxes forcefully. The soloists make an excellent team, singing with individuality (especially Ian Bostridge) but also blending together. The sound is spacious, but there is no feeling that the choral impact is blunted.

At super-bargain price, Richard Hickox's excellent EMI version of the Requiem Mass on the HMV label matches almost any in the catalogue. With generally brisk speeds and light, resilient rhythms, it combines gravity with authentically clean, transparent textures in which the dark colourings of the orchestration, as with the basset horn, come out vividly. All four soloists are outstandingly fine, and the choral singing is fresh and incisive, with crisp attack. The voices, solo and choral, are placed rather backwardly; otherwise the recording is excellent, full and clean to match the performance.

John Eliot Gardiner with characteristic panache also gives one of the most powerful performances on record, for while the lighter sound of the period orchestra makes for greater transparency, the weight and bite are formidable. The soloists are an outstanding quartet, well matched but characterfully contrasted too, and the choral singing is as bright and luminous as one expects of Gardiner's Monteverdi Choir. The superb Kyrie in D minor makes a very welcome and generous fill-up, to seal a firm recommendation.

The performance by La Capella Reial de Catalunya and Le Concert des Nations directed by Jordi Savall is both gutsy and expressive; at times tempi have great urgency – witness the thrilling Dies irae and the strong accents of the opening of the Confutatis, then contrasted by the angelic soprano line, with Montserrat Figueras a blissfully serene soloist. The trombones make a remarkable contribution throughout, and especially in the Benedictus and Agnus Dei. The recording is absolutely first class and, certainly, no other version of the Requiem makes more impact on the listener. It is aptly introduced by the plangent timbres of the Maurerische Trauermusik.

Valentin Radu's performance on Lyrichord is enjoyably direct, with the Alma Deus choral group lyrically strong and characterful. The excellent team of soloists is led by Andrea Brown, who opens the disc with a memorable performance of the Exsultate jubilate. Tempi are very comparable to those chosen by Colin Davis, although Radu's account is less fiercely dramatic than the LSO version; but it is enjoyably full-blooded and committed, and very well recorded.

Hogwood's version uses the edition of Richard Maunder, which aims to eliminate Süssmayr's contribution to the version of Mozart's unfinished masterpiece that has held sway for two centuries. So the Lacrimosa is completely different, after the opening eight bars, and concludes with an elaborate Amen, for which Mozart's own sketches were recently discovered. This textual clean-out goes with authentic performances of Hogwood's customary abrasiveness, very fresh and lively to underline the impact of novelty.

The surprise version is Gillesberger's. Using treble and alto soloists from the Vienna Boys' Choir, who sing with confidence and no little eloquence, this performance also has the advantage of a dedicated contribution from Kurt Equiluz. Gillesberger's pacing is well judged and the effect is as fresh as it is strong and direct. The 1982 recording is excellent, vivid yet full, and the result is powerful but not too heavy.

The glory of Rafael Frühbeck de Burgos's performance is the singing of the New Philharmonia Chorus. This is unashamedly big-scale Mozart; Frühbeck does not have a very subtle Mozart style; as an interpretation its stands well in the middle of the road, not too romantic, not too self-consciously classical, and, quite apart from the choral singing, the soloists are all first rate and are recorded with body and a fine balance. Klemperer's weightily imposing Masonic Funeral Music is used as an opening sinfonia.

OPERA

Apollo et Hyacinthus (complete); Die Schuldigkeit des Ersten Gebets (complete)

 DG DVD 073 4253 (2). Berchtold, Karg, Kiener, Schlosser, Schuster, Sonn, Tretjakova, Watanabe, Mozarteum University SO, Walling (Stage by John Dew)

The amazement of the first-night audience at Mozart's achievement will surely be reflected by anyone watching and listening to this very attractive pair of video recordings. In Apollo and Hyacinthus Mozart provided a series of recitatives and arias which are remarkably inventive and surprisingly mature-sounding. The action of the opera is here very stylized, but the finale involves the arrival of Apollo, who provides an ending to the story by turning Hyacinth into a flower, and this is charmingly portrayed by moving a stage hyacinth bush over her dead body. Die Schuldigkeit is involved, not just with the first commandment but with all ten, and the allegorical characters, Justice, Mercy, Worldliness, Christianity and Christ himself, vie with each other with their conflicting doctrines to assert control over the human character, Christian. This sounds academic, but there is action too, including the seductive offer of earthly pleasures by the devilish Worldliness, who is most persuasive and vividly costumed. Visually much is added to the music by these colourful performances, well sung and played, and most imaginatively produced. There is excellent documentation.

Ascanio in Alba (complete; CD version)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.660040/1 (2). Windsor, Chance, Feldman, Milner, Mannion, Paris Sorbonne University Ch., Budapest Concerto Armonico, Grimbert

The Naxos version easily outshines previous recordings with a lightly sprung, stylishly conducted performance featuring an outstanding cast. The counter-tenor, Michael Chance, sings flawlessly in the castrato role of Ascanio, son of Venus, even-toned and brilliantly flexible. The others are fresh-toned too. Lorna Windsor, bright and clear as Venus, is nicely contrasted with the girlish-sounding Silvia of Jill Feldman, who sings with fine assurance in one of the two extended arias. The other, even more extended and demanding, is given to Fauno, with Rosa Mannion arguably the most accomplished soloist of all. The excellent tenor taking the role of Aceste is Howard Milner. Well recorded with transparent textures, if with chorus backwardly balanced, this makes an outstanding bargain in every way, rare Mozart that for most will be a delightful discovery.

La clemenza di Tito (complete; DVD version)

*() Arthaus DVD 100 407. Langridge, Putnam, Montague, Mahe, Szmytka, Rose, Glyndebourne Festival Ch., LPO, A. Davis (Producer: Nicholas Hytner)

Recorded at Glyndebourne during the 1991 festival, this Arthaus DVD version of Mozart's last opera is superbly sung by an outstanding cast, with conducting by Andrew Davis that brings out the charm as well as the power of this opera seria. Among the soloists there is no weak link. The singing is consistently firm, clear and stylish, with Philip Langridge masterly in the title-role, Ashley Putnam superb as Vitellia and Diana Montague most moving as Sesto. In place of the usual recitatives (not by Mozart) new ones have been provided by Stephen Oliver, though some of them seem very long, notably the five-minute stretch immediately after the overture and before the first duet between Sesto and Vitellia. However, as so often with modern opera productions, Nicholas Hytner's staging, with stylized geometric sets by David Fielding, will not be to all tastes, and the flat backdrops, often decorated with torn wallpaper effects, have their bizarre side. The Roman costumes are relatively conventional, even if the long swirling skirts for male characters sung by women are very questionable. Excellent sound, but this can be recommended only with considerable visual reservations.

La clemenza di Tito (complete; CD version)

🔑 * HM HMC 901923.24 (2). Padmore, Pendatchanska, Fink, Chappuis, Freiburg Bar. O, Jacobs

🔑 * DG 477 5792 (2). Trost, Kozena, Martinpelto, Rice, SCO, Mackerras

* DG 431 806-2 (2). Rolfe Johnson, von Otter, McNair, Varady, Robbin, Hauptmann, Monteverdi Ch., E. Bar. Sol., Gardiner

 Teldec 4509 90857-2 (2). Langridge, Popp, Ziesak, Murray, Ziegler, Polgár, Zürich Op. Ch. & O, Harnoncourt

René Jacobs's version with the period instruments of the Freiburg Baroque Orchestra offers a performance of extraordinary clarity and immediacy, at once sharp in attack, yet intimate too. Here the drama is vividly conveyed, with words crystal clear. Period performance also highlights the impact of timpani and brass, again adding to the drama, never more powerfully conveyed than here, with ensembles tautly controlled. The cast of principals is excellent, with Mark Padmore at once mellifluous and commanding as the Emperor, always imaginative and animated; and the little-known Bulgarian, Alexandrina Pendatchanska, proves an outstanding choice as Vitellia, characterful and imaginative, matched by the golden-toned Bernarda Fink as Sesto and Marie-Claude Chappuis radiant as Annio.

Sir Charles Mackerras and the Scottish Chamber Orchestra add impressively to their Mozart opera series with a warmly alert version of La clemenza di Tito that provides an ideal alternative to the Jacobs set. Modern instruments, used with concern for period-performance style, make for a weightier as well as a warmer performance, a degree more relaxed than Jacobs. Rainer Trost is an excellent, heroic Tito, even if he is not as imaginative as Mark Padmore, while the rest of the cast of principals is comparably starry, with Magdalena Kozena tough-sounding as Sesto, and Hillevi Martinpelto as Vitellia.

Again, with his vitality and bite, Gardiner turns the piece into a genuinely involving drama. Anthony Rolfe Johnson is outstanding in the title-role, matching the vivid characterization of both Anne Sofie von Otter as Sesto and Julia Varady as Vitellia. Sylvia McNair is an enchanting, pure-toned Servilia and Catherine Robbin a well-matched Annio, though the microphone catches an unevenness in the voice, as it does with Cornelius Hauptmann in the incidental role of Publio. More seriously, DG's vivid, immediate recording picks up a distracting amount of banging and bumping on stage in the Süssmayr recitatives.

Nikolaus Harnoncourt uses modern, not period, instruments. Even so, he has not forgotten his early devotion to period performance, making this a very viable account for anyone wanting a halfway approach. Though recorded in association with Zürich Opera, this is a studio, not a live recording like Gardiner's. It gains from not having stage noises in recitatives. Ann Murray is at her finest as Sesto, if not quite as firm or dominant as von Otter for Gardiner. Philip Langridge is a splendid Tito, and it is good to have Lucia Popp so affecting in her very last recording. Ruth Ziesak and Delores Ziegler complete a strong team which will not disappoint anyone, even if it cannot quite compare with Gardiner's, singer for singer.

Così fan tutte (complete; DVD versions)

🔑 * Opus Arte DVD OA 0970 D (2). Persson, Vondung, Lehtipu, Pisaroni, Rivenq, Garmendia, Glyndebourne Ch., OAE, Fischer (Director: Nicholas Hytner, V/D: James Whitbourn)

🔑 * TDK DVD DVWW-OPCFTSF (2). Marshall, Murray, Morris, Araiza, Battle, Bruscantini, V. State Op. Konzertvereinigung, VPO, Muti (V/D: Claus Viller)

Ⓝ * Medici Arts DVD 207 2368 (2). Frittoli, Kirchschlager, Skovhus, Schade, Corbelli, Bacelli, V. State Op. Ch. & O, Muti (Diector: Roberto de Simone; V/D: Brian Large)

🔑  DG DVD 073 026-9 (2). Roocroft, Mannion, Gilfry, Trost, James, Nicolai, Monteverdi Ch., E. Bar. Sol., Gardiner (Dir: Gardiner/Medcalf, TV Director: Mumford)

 Arthaus DVD 101081. Doese, Lindenstrand, Perriers, Allen, Glyndebourne Ch., LPO, Pritchard (V/D: Dave Heather)

(*) Opus Arte DVD OA LS 3006. Dessi, Ziegler, Corbelli, Kundlak, Scarabelli, Desderi, La Scala Ch. and O, Muti (Dir: Michael Hampe, V/D: Ilio Catani)

(*) Decca DVD 074 3165 (2). Martínez, Koch, Degout, Mathey, Donath, Allen, V. State Op. Konzertvereinigung, VPO, Honeck (V/D: Thomas Grimm)

The stage director Nicholas Hytner on Opus Arte succeeded on every front, bringing out the fine qualities of the whole cast, both vocally and dramatically, brilliantly supported by Ivan Fischer and the period Orchestra of the Age of Enlightenment. Starriest of all is Miah Persson as Fiordiligi, singing gloriously with pure, even tone, both in the fireworks of Come scoglio and in the tender phrasing in Per pietà. Her ornamentation and trills are models of style. Though Anke Vondung as Dorabella cannot match her in vocal beauty, it is a strong and characterful performance. Topi Lehtipu as Ferrando sings with heady beauty, well contrasted with the Guglielmo of Luca Pisaroni. The teamwork as ever at Glyndebourne is superb, with Nicolas Rivenq as Don Alfonso and Synhoa Garmendia as Despina both excellent, too. Hytner's sensitivity is wonderfully illustrated at the final curtain. Where so many modern productions leave the four lovers angry with each other – something which defies the music – Hytner has the girls initially still angry at the beginning of the finale until, as a final touch, on the last chord the two men tenderly put their hands on the girls' shoulders in the gentlest of indications of reconciliation.

Muti's fizzing (1983) Salzburg Festival recording is fully traditional and visually a delight, with elegant sets and costumes, and even a troop of soldiers and a sailing boat to take Guglielmo and Ferrando away convincingly, and leave the ladies and Don Alfonso gently to sing the famous Soave sia il vento. There is no weak link in the cast and the action is very effectively dominated by Sesto Bruscantini's relatively genial Don Alfonso. The singing is strong and eloquent, the effect dramatic rather than intimate. Fiordiligi's Come scoglio (Margaret Marshall) is very telling indeed, while Ann Murray is a charming Dorabella. It is good to watch a completely fresh performance that carries out Mozart's intentions visually as well as musically. The recording itself is very lively and open, the voices resonant.

It is a pleasure to welcome the Medici Arts 1996 version from the Vienna State Opera. Roberto de Simone is one of those rare stage directors who do not seek to impose their own personality over that of the composer. This is a most stylish production, with attractive costumes, and sets that are a viewing pleasure, especially the sea vista at Naples. When Guglielmo and Ferrando leave, they do so on a convincing backstage boat simulation, while the famous Trio which follows reveals Mozart's exquisite part-writing clearly, instead of smoothing it into vocal homogeneity. Throughout, the singing (and acting) cast is in every way excellent, with Barbara Frittoli as convincing a Fiordiligi as Angelika Kirchschlager is an engaging Dorabella, and both feistily resist the temptation to stray, until their would-be seducers spectacularly feign arsenic poisoning. Monica Bacelli is a knowingly vivacious and ever resourceful Despina (especially when disguised as the doctor) and she sings both her arias with real charm. Alessandro Corbelli, too, is a conniving Don Alfonso, yet not overplaying his role. Muti's conducting is splendidly alive and fresh. What more could you want?

The DVD version of John Eliot Gardiner's recording of Così fan tutte was recorded live simultaneously with the audio recording issued on CD. The staged production at the Théâtre du Châtelet in Paris was the work of Gardiner himself in collaboration with Stephen Medcalf, involving pretty sets and handsome costumes by Carlo Tomassi. The traditional approach to staging nicely matches the freshness and imagination of the period performance, with uniforms from the Napoleonic period and Ferrando and Guglielmo in disguise dressed identifiably as Albanians, even if as usual one wonders how Fiordiligi and Dorabella fail to recognize their lovers. Visually, the whole production consistently heightens the impact of the opera, with video direction by Peter Mumford. Though the performance spreads on to two discs, the only extras are promotional, including a survey of Gardiner's recordings of Mozart operas.

Recorded at the Glyndebourne Festival in 1975, Adrian Slack's production, with sets and costumes by Emanuele Luzzati is intimate, apt enough for the old theatre at Glyndebourne. The singing is first rate and the acting good, and Slack's production brings out the fun of the piece. The conductor, Sir John Pritchard, is at his most animated and magnetic, though in some of the ensembles he rushes his singers and players. Helene Doese as Fiordiligi and Sylvia Lindenstrand, a tall, imperious Dorabella, are both ideally steady and clear, and Doese's Come scoglio is brilliantly articulated, even though her Act II aria, Per pietà, could be more moving. The youthful Thomas Allen is a superb Guglielmo, and the American tenor, Anson Austin, is a handsome, open-toned Ferrando, with Frantz Petri a splendid Alfonso and Daniele Perriers a light, agile Despina.

Recorded at La Scala in April 1989, Muti's later DVD is very well paced and generally well cast and offers an attractive traditional production by Michael Hampe, with costumes and designs involving baroque arches by Mauro Pagano. Daniela Dessi sings with freshness and clarity as Fiordiligi, and Delores Ziegler is a handsome, finely projected Dorabella. The men, rather mature for young lovers, sing well, with Josef Kundlak a finely controlled Ferrando and Alessandro Corbelli a strong Guglielmo. Best of all is the veteran Claudio Desderi as Don Alfonso, in splendid voice. On only a single disc, the sound is thinner than most, a little veiled on the orchestra.

In the Decca set, Sir Thomas Allen is a wonderfully wily Don Alfonso and Anna María Martínez (as Fiordiligi) and Sophie Koch (as Dorabella) sing with great charm. Their male lovers also have very pleasing voices and they sing and act with ardour. Needless to say, Helen Donath is an engaging Despina. The dress style is comparatively modern. The sets, however, are plain and economical, using folding screens as 'furniture', and there is also a huge, rock-like egg mid-stage whose symbolic purpose is elusive. One important interference with Lorenzo da Ponte's plot is that the two women are allowed to overhear their lovers hatch their plan of deception. But apparently this does not prevent them falling in love with their men in their new roles. In spite of the frugal sets, the performance is carried by the fine singing and acting and by Honeck's lively direction of the music. Most enjoyable, and well documented.

Così fan tutte (complete; CD versions)

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * EMI (ADD) 5 67382-2 (3). Schwarzkopf, Ludwig, Steffek, Kraus, Taddei, Berry, Philh. Ch. & O, Boehm

Ⓝ Ⓑ  EMI 2 08830-2 (3). Vaness, Ziegler, Aler, Duesing, Watson, Desderi, Glyndebourne Ch., LPO, Haitink

 DG 437 829-2 (3). Roocroft, Mannion, Gilfry, Trost, James, Feller, E. Bar. Sol., Gardiner

 Decca 444 174-2 (3). Fleming, von Otter, Lopardo, Bär, Scarabelli, Pertusi, COE, Solti

✿ Ⓜ () EMI mono 5 67064-2 (3) [567138]. Schwarzkopf, Otto, Merriman, Simoneau, Panerai, Bruscantini, Philh. Ch. & O, Karajan

(BB) () Regis mono RRC 3020 (3). Schwarzkopf, Otto Merriman, Simoneau, Panerai, Bruscantini, Philh. Ch. & O, Karajan (with Arias from: Don Giovanni, Le nozze di Figaro, Idomeneo, Die Zauberflöte, sung by Schwarzkopf)

Ⓑ (*) Double Decca (ADD) 455 476-2 (2). della Casa, Ludwig, Loose, Dermota, Kunz, Schoeffler, V. State Op. Ch., VPO, Boehm

Ⓜ (*) Erato (ADD) 4509 98494-2 (3). Te Kanawa, Stratas, von Stade, Rendall, Huttenlocher, Bastin, Rhine Op. Ch., Strasbourg PO, Lombard

Boehm's classic set has been splendidly remastered as one of EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century' and remains a clear first choice, despite the attractions of the Gardiner version. Its glorious solo singing is headed by the incomparable Fiordiligi of Schwarzkopf and the equally moving Dorabella of Christa Ludwig; it remains a superb memento of Walter Legge's recording genius and remains unsurpassed by any other recordings made before or since. The documentation is generous and includes a full libretto and sessions photographs.

With speeds often more measured than usual, Haitink's EMI version still conveys the sparkle of a live performance at Glyndebourne. The excellent teamwork, consistently conveying humour, makes up for a cast-list rather less starry than on some rival versions. This is above all a sunny performance, sailing happily over any serious shoals beneath Da Ponte's comedy. Claudio Desderi as Alfonso helps to establish that Glyndebourne atmosphere, with recitatives superbly timed and coloured. If Carol Vaness and Delores Ziegler are rather too alike in timbre to be distinguished easily, the relationship becomes all the more sisterly when, quite apart from the similarity, they respond so beautifully to each other. John Aler makes a headily unrestrained Ferrando, beautifully free in the upper register, and Lillian Watson and Dale Duesing make up a strong team. The recording gives a fine bloom and impressive dynamic range to voices and orchestra alike.

On CD as well as DVD, the full flavour of Così, its effervescence as well as its deeper qualities, come over the more intensely with Gardiner. Though Amanda Roocroft and Rosa Mannion do not sound quite as sweet and even as they can, few tenors on disc can rival the German Rainer Trost in the heady beauty of his voice, above all in Ferrando's aria, Una aura amorosa. The poise and technical assurance of all the singers, not least Rodney Gilfry as Guglielmo, put this among the finest versions of Così.

Solti takes a fast and light approach which yet has none of his old fierceness. Much is owed to the superb playing of the Chamber Orchestra of Europe. Renée Fleming as Fiordiligi, sings with a firm, full voice that is yet brilliant and flexible, ranging down to a satisfyingly strong chest register. Frank Lopardo, too, as Ferrando most sensitively uses his distinctive tenor over an unusually wide dynamic range. Anne Sofie von Otter predictably makes a characterful Dorabella, well contrasted with Fleming, and Olaf Bär a keenly intelligent Guglielmo, while two Italian singers, less well known but well chosen, Adelina Scarabelli and Michele Pertusi, complete the team in the manipulative roles of Despina and Alfonso. Altogether Solti's finest Mozart recording, outshining even his Figaro.

Commanding as Schwarzkopf is as Fiordiligi in the 1962 Boehm set, the extra ease and freshness of her singing in the earlier (1954) version under Karajan makes it even more compelling. Nan Merriman is a distinctive and characterful Dorabella, and the role of Ferrando has never been sung more mellifluously on record than by Leopold Simoneau. The young Rolando Panerai is an ideal Guglielmo, and Lisa Otto a pert Despina; while Sesto Bruscantini in his prime brings to the role of Don Alfonso the wisdom and artistry which made him so compelling at Glyndebourne. Karajan has never sparkled more naturally in Mozart than here, for the high polish has nothing self-conscious about it. There is also a set of bargain highlights (72') on Classics for Pleasure with a simple cued synopsis (CfP 393369-2).

The Regis super-budget transfer is also very well managed, with the recording settling down nicely after the Overture, to give plenty of bloom on the voices. It includes a cued synopsis and tends to trump the EMI sets by including seven extra arias which Schwarzkopf recorded with Pritchard in 1953, exquisitely sung, three each from Don Giovanni and Le nozze di Figaro, including Voi che sapete, and one from Idomeneo, plus two live recordings from 1952 – Ach, ich fühls from Zauberflöte and In quali eccessi from Don Giovanni – which are all equally well transferred.

Boehm's 1955 Decca stereo set is not as polished a performance as his later one for EMI, and the cutting of brief passages from the ends of arias may worry those who know the opera very well. But it remains a captivatingly spontaneous account of the frothiest of Mozart's comedies. Lisa della Casa is strong and sweet-toned, Christa Ludwig is admirably fresh-voiced, and the rest are sparklingly good, especially Emmy Loose's deliciously knowing portrayal of Despina. Paul Schoeffler in the role of Don Alfonso is most appealing.

On Erato, Kiri Te Kanawa's voice sounds radiant, rich and creamy of tone; she is commanding in Come scoglio, and tenderly affecting in Per pietà. Lombard is a sympathetic accompanist, if not always the most perceptive of Mozartians; some of his tempi are on the slow side, but his sextet of young singers make up a team that rivals almost any other, giving firm, appealing performances. With warm recording of high quality, this is most enjoyable and could be a choice for any who follow the singers in question.

Così fan tutte (excerpts)

() Testament mono SBT 1040. Jurinac, Thebom, Lewis, Kunz, Borriello, Glyndebourne Festival O, Busch; Noni, Philh. O, Susskind

This is a superb Testament transfer of excerpts from Così fan tutte in the 1950 Glyndebourne production. Sena Jurinac as Fiordiligi, clear and vibrant, provides the central glory, with both her two big arias included, as well as six of her ensemble numbers, and three substantial rehearsal 'takes'. Blanche Thebom too, as Dorabella, sings with clarity and freshness, and the others make a splendid team. Alda Noni, the Despina, was not recorded at the Glyndebourne sessions but later, at Abbey Road, with Susskind and the Philharmonia. The recording brings out a flutter in her voice, less steady than the others. As in pre-war days, a piano is used instead of harpsichord for recitatives.

Così fan tutte (complete; in English)

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Chan. 3152 (3). Watson, Montague, Maltman, Spence, Garrett, T. Allen, Geoffrey Mitchell Ch., OAE, Mackerras

Mackerras's sparkling account of this delightful opera comes over surprisingly well in English, for the change of language does not impair the vocal lines, and in a comedy of this kind it is good not to have to look continually to the translated libretto for the swiftly changing text. It may seem a bit strange to marry a period-instrument performance with a colloquial language, but it works admirably, for the orchestra under Sir Charles Mackerras plays superbly. Perhaps Janice Watson (Fiordiligi) and Diana Montague (Dorabella) are not always as sweet-toned as their finest counterparts who sing in the language Mozart expected, but Leslie Garrett makes an excellent Despina and Sir Thomas Allen is naturally at home as Don Alfonso. Vocally, Toby Spence, as an attractively ardent Ferrando, is the star of the show, and Christopher Maltman partners him well as Guglielmo. The recording is excellent.

Don Giovanni (complete; DVD versions)

🔑  Arthaus DVD 101 087. Luxon, Dean, Branisteani, Yakar, Gale, Goeke, Rawnsley, Thau, Glyndebourne Ch. & O, Haitink (Producer: Peter Hall, V/D: Dave Heather)

(*) TDK DVD DVW-OPDG. Alvarez, Pieczonka, Antonacci, Schade, d'Arcangelo, Kirchschlager, Regazzo, V. State Op. Ch. & O, Muti (V/D: Brian Large)

When in 1977 Peter Hall added Don Giovanni to his list of Mozart/Da Ponte productions the action was updated to the Regency period and John Bury's sets gave a picture of a dark and rainy Seville. Deliberately gloomy, it would be oppressive but for the imagination of Hall in his detailed direction, with the superb Leporello of Stafford Dean unusually positive, and the whole performance heightened by the Mozartian strength of Bernard Haitink's conducting. The weakness in the cast is the Donna Anna of Horiana Branisteani, tending to be squally in the upper register, though she gathers strength as the opera proceeds, and the big aria, Non mi dir, is well controlled. Benjamin Luxon as Don Giovanni was at his peak, darkly characterful and with a wide tonal range down to a seductive half-tone. Rachel Yakar, bright and fresh as Donna Elvira, and Elizabeth Gale, sweetly charming, make up the team of women principals, with Leo Goeke unstrained as Ottavio and John Rawnsley exceptionally characterful as Masetto. Camerawork on the video is imaginative too in concentrating on individual characters at key moments.

On TDK, Muti's approach is traditional, except that his Allegros are often very fast, racing the singers off their feet, though Carlos Alvarez, splendid in the title-role, looking the perfect roué, masterfully defies the conductor's challenge in the hectic but finely articulated performance of the Champagne Aria. Adrienne Pieczonka's full, warm soprano makes her an impressive Donna Anna opposite the honey-toned Ottavio of Michael Schade, while Angelika Kirchschlager as Zerlina and Lorenzo Regazzo are both superb as the peasant pair, with Ildebrando d'Arcangelo as a loud but well-focused Leporello. In this company, Anna Caterina Antonacci makes a disappointing Donna Elvira, often squally. Roberto de Simone's production is remarkable for the frequency of the scene and costume changes, which become distracting when Zaira Vincentiis is so lavish in her many costume designs. A mixed success, however well the orchestra plays.

Don Giovanni (complete; CD versions)

🔑 Ⓜ * EMI 5 67869-2 (3) [567873]. Waechter, Schwarzkopf, Sutherland, Alva, Frick, Sciutti, Taddei, Philh. Ch. & O, Giulini

* DG 445 870-2 (3). Gilfry, Organasova, Margiono, James, d'Arcangelo, Prégardien, Clarkson, Silvestrelli, Monteverdi Ch., E. Bar. Sol., Gardiner

❁ Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 466 389-2 (3). della Casa, Danco, Siepi, Corena, Dermota, V. State Op. Ch., VPO, Krips

 HM HMC 901 964/6; SACD 801 964/6 (3). Weisser, Regazzo, Pendatchanska, Pasichnyk, Tarver, Im, Borchev, Guerzoni, RIAS Ch., Freiburg Bar. O, Jacobs

 DG (IMS) 419 179-2 (3). Ramey, Tomowa-Sintow, Baltsa, Battle, Winbergh, Furlanetto, Malta, Burchuladze, German Op. Ch., Berlin, BPO, Karajan

Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 7 63841-2 (3). Ghiaurov, Watson, Ludwig, Freni, Gedda, Berry, Montarsolo, Crass, New Philh. Ch. & O, Klemperer

On CD the classic Giulini EMI set, lovingly remastered, sets the standard by which all other recordings have come to be judged. Elisabeth Schwarzkopf, as Elvira, emerges as a dominant figure to give a distinctive but totally apt slant to this endlessly invigorating drama. The young Sutherland may be relatively reticent as Anna but, with such technical ease and consistent beauty of tone, she makes a superb foil. Taddei is a delightful Leporello, and each member of the cast – including the young Cappuccilli as Masetto – combines fine singing with keen dramatic sense.

John Eliot Gardiner's performance culminates in one of the most thrilling accounts ever recorded of the final scene, when Giovanni is dragged down to hell. Sometimes lightness goes too far, as when Charlotte Margiono as Donna

Elvira sings Ah fuggi il traditor in a half-tone; but increasingly Gardiner encourages his soloists, particularly Anna and Elvira, to sing expansively. Luba Organasova is even more assured and characterful as Anna, and the agility of both is exemplary. Rodney Gilfry excels himself, on one side tough and purposeful, on the other a smooth seducer, with the clean-toned voice finely shaded. Ildebrando d'Arcangelo is suitably darker-toned as Leporello, lithe and young-sounding, hardly a buffo. Julian Clarkson makes a crotchety Masetto, and Eirian James a warmer, tougher Zerlina than usual, aptly so for her extra scene. The Commendatore of Andrea Silvestrelli, though recessed on the recording, is magnificently dark and firm, not least in the final confrontation. A recording that sets new standards for period performance and vies with the finest of traditional versions.

Krips's version, recorded in 1955 for the Mozart bicentenary, has remained at or near the top of the list of recommendations ever since. Freshly remastered, it sounds better than ever. Its intense, dramatic account of the Don's disappearance into hell has rarely been equalled, and never surpassed on CD, though there are many equally memorable sequences: the finale to Act I is also electrifying. As a bass Don, Siepi is marvellously convincing, but there is hardly a weak link in the rest of the cast. The early stereo recording is pretty age-defying, full and warm, with a lovely Viennese glow which is preferable to many modern recordings.

René Jacobs conducts a bitingly sharp account of Don Giovanni. The Overture sets the pattern, with fortissimos reinforced strongly by timpani in period style. The violin sound may predictably be thin and the cast list does not sound distinguished, yet they make a superb team with no weak link, and Jacobs's speeds are sensible rather than exaggerated. The soloists all have fresh, clear, firm voices and though the Anna and Elvira are rather alike, the results are always satisfying, with Elvira rather weightier than Anna. Johannes Weisser sings the Don clearly if with occasionally fluttery tone and Lorenzo Regazzo is a characterful Leporello. The sound is clear and well defined and the SACD adds to the atmosphere.

Even if ensemble is less than perfect at times in the Karajan set and the final scene of Giovanni's descent to hell goes off the boil a little, the end result has fitting intensity and power. Though Karajan was plainly thinking of a big auditorium in his pacing of recitatives, having Jeffrey Tate as continuo player helps to keep them moving and to bring out word-meaning. The starry line-up of soloists is a distinctive one. Samuel Ramey is a noble rather than a menacing Giovanni, consistently clear and firm.

Most of the slow tempi that Klemperer regularly adopts, far from flagging, add a welcome breadth to the music, for they must be set against the unusually brisk and dramatic interpretation of the recitatives between numbers. Added to that, Ghiaurov as the Don and Berry as Leporello make a marvellously characterful pair. In this version the male members of the cast are dominant and, with Klemperer's help, they make the dramatic experience a strongly masculine one. Nor is the ironic humour forgotten with Berry and Ghiaurov about, and the Klemperer spaciousness allows them extra time for pointing. Among the women, Ludwig is a strong and convincing Elvira, Freni a sweet-toned but rather unsmiling Zerlina; only Claire Watson seriously disappoints, with obvious nervousness marring the big climax of Non mi dir.

Don Giovanni (complete; in English)

Ⓜ (*) Chan. 3057 (3). Magee, Cullagh, Shore, Tierney, Plazas, Banks, Robinson, Bayley, Geoffrey Mitchell Ch., Philh. O, Parry

Vividly recorded, David Parry's well-paced reading breaks new ground in offering the masterpiece in English, and very successful it is, even though the casting is not as starry as in many versions. Parry, on the grounds of its greater cohesion, firmly opts for the original, Prague version of the score, which may disappoint some when Elvira's Mi tradi and Ottavio's Dalla sua pace are omitted. Garry Magee as the Don makes a believably virile lover, vigorous and youthful, articulating the Champagne aria cleanly at a crisp, well-chosen tempo. Andrew Shore also characterizes well as Leporello, bringing out the comedy but not guying it. Clive Bayley as the Commendatore, Barry Banks as Ottavio, more heroic than usual, and Dean Robinson complete a strong team of men. Among the women the most satisfying performance comes from Mary Plazas as Zerlina, less soubrettish than usual but charming. Majella Cullagh is a warm-toned Donna Anna, only occasionally gusty, and Vivian Tierney a clear, reliable Elvira, whose voice is not flattered by the microphone.

Die Entführung aus dem Serail (complete; DVD versions)

🔑 * DG DVD 073020-9. Holtzmann, Araiza, Gruberová, Grist, Orth, Talvela, Bav. R. Ch. & O, Boehm (V/D: Karlheinz Hundorf)

🔑 * Arthaus DVD 101 091. Davies, Masterson, Watson, White, Hoback, Glyndebourne Ch., LPO, Kuhn (Director: Peter Wood, V/D: Dave Heather)

 TDK DVD DV-OPEADS. Mei, Ciofi, Trost, Montazeri, Rydl, Markus John, Maggio Musicale Fiorentino Ch. & O, Mehta (V/D: George Blume)

Karl Boehm conducted this beautifully paced account of Entführung at the Bavarian State Opera in April 1980, just over a year before he died. Edita Gruberová as Konstanze is at her freshest: clear and agile, tender in Traurigkeit, brilliant in Martern aller Arten. Though Reri Grist as Blonde has an edge on the voice, hers is a charming and characterful assumption, most of all when confronting the powerful Osmin of Martti Talvela, a giant of a figure with a voice to match. Francisco Araiza too is at his peak, with Norbert Orth exceptionally strong as Pedrillo. August Everding's stylized production, with smoothly sliding scenery by Max Bignens, sets each scene deftly and atmospherically in the Pasha's palace. The 1980 sound is exceptionally bright and clear for its age.

The Arthaus version offers a live recording of Peter Wood's atmospheric Glyndebourne production of 1980, with a vintage cast conducted by Gustav Kuhn. The different scenes are beautifully devised by William Dudley, with fretted oriental screens used to speed changes of scene. Ryland

Davies is a clear-toned Belmonte, with Valerie Masterson sweet, true and agile, singing at her peak, tender in Traurigkeit and brilliant in Martern aller Arten. Lillian Watson is charming as Blonde, pertly defying the will of the magnificent Osmin of Willard White, in glorious voice. There are no tricks in the staging, which is a model of traditional production at Glyndebourne, with the forces wonderfully polished, recorded in the middle of a long run of performances.

One does not associate Zubin Mehta with Mozart opera, but here he is at his finest, obviously deeply involved, directing with warmth and vitality, with the orchestra on top form and providing a constantly lively backing for the singers. Eva Mei does not quite look like a Konstanze, but she sings with heartfelt passion as well as eloquence, so that the famous Martern aller Arten is a real dramatic highlight. Patrizia Ciofi is a sparkling, often fiercely vehement Blonde, and if Rainer Trost does not project as a very heroic Belmonte, he sings attractively enough. But the star of the action (as so often) is Osmin. Kurt Rydl makes the characterization deeper, more ambivalent than usual, but he sings with such brio and presence that one is captivated every time he appears. Thank goodness that, for once, the director produces no silly tricks, and the sets are visually most appealing. A real winner and most enjoyable listening and watching.

Die Entführung aus dem Serail (complete; CD versions)

🔑 Ⓜ * DG (ADD) 429 868-2 (2). Augér, Grist, Schreier, Neukirch, Moll, Leipzig R. Ch., Dresden State O, Boehm

🔑 Ⓜ  DG 477 5593-2 (2). Organasova, Sieden, Olsen, Peper, Hauptman, Minetti, Monteverdi Ch., E Bar. Sol., Gardiner

Ⓜ  Oehms OCD 249 (2). Haberman, Ellen, Bezcala, Kalchmair, Ringelhahn, Linz Landestheater Ch., Linz Bruckner O, Sieghart

Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 7 63263-2 (2). Rothenberger, Popp, Gedda, Unger, Frick, V. State Op. Ch., VPO, Krips

Boehm's is a delectable account, superbly cast and warmly recorded. Arleen Augér proves the most accomplished singer on record in the role of Konstanze, girlish and fresh, yet rich, tender and dramatic by turns, with brilliant, almost flawless coloratura. The others are also outstandingly good, notably Kurt Moll, whose powerful, finely focused bass makes him a superb Osmin, one who relishes the comedy too. The warm recording is beautifully transferred, to make this easily the most sympathetic version of the opera on CD, with the added attraction of being at mid-price.

Gardiner's Entführung immediately establishes the extra zest of the performance. So Konstanze's great heroic aria, Martern aller Arten, has tremendous swagger; thanks also to glorious singing from Luba Organasova, at once rich, pure and agile, the close is triumphant. As Belmonte, Stanfor Olsen for Gardiner is firm and agile, and though Cornelius Hauptman, Gardiner's Osmin, lacks a really dark bass, he too is firm and characterful. Altogether this now makes a fine mid-priced recommendation.

With an excellent cast of young singers the Oehms (originally Arte Nova) set offers an outstanding version of Entführung to rival almost any in the catalogue. Ingrid Haberman is a formidable Konstanze, fresh and clear, bright in coloratura yet creamy of tone in lower registers, undaunted by the demands of Martern aller Arten. The American Donna Ellen is a lively Blonde with clear, unstrained top register. The Polish tenor Piotr Bezcala is a stylish, honey-toned Belmonte, with power as well as lyric beauty. Best of all is the Osmin of Franz Kalchmair, whose firm, dark bass copes masterfully with every demand of the role, cleanly focused from top to bottom. Good sound, though the spoken dialogue (well edited) is not consistent. Now at mid-price, the set comes with full libretto, including English translation.

Recorded in 1966, the Krips EMI version brings an amiable and highly enjoyable performance with a formidable line-up of soloists. The team of Popp, Gedda, Unger and Frick could hardly have been bettered at the time, each of them singing beautifully and with vivid characterization. Anneliese Rothenberger, potentially the weak link as Konstanze, not only sounds amply powerful as recorded, but she sings with a purity and sweetness rarely caught on her discs. This is arguably her finest recording ever. The stereo sound is warm and well balanced, with spoken dialogue well presented.

The Abduction from the Seraglio (Die Entführung aus dem Serail; complete; in English)

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * Chan. 3081 (2). Dobbs, Eddy, Gedda, Fryatt, Mangin, Kelsey, Amb. S., Bath Festival O, Y. Menuhin

Menuhin's set of The Abduction from the Seraglio in English makes the performance sparkle from first to last, favouring brisk, well-lifted Allegros, so that the fun of the piece comes over vividly. The acting of the principal singers is exceptionally fine too, with Noel Mangin superb as Osmin, commandingly comic yet believable too, not least when in duo with John Fryatt, an outstanding Pedrillo. Nicolai Gedda, brought in as an international star, fully lives up to expectation, giving one of his finest Mozart performances, poised and stylish, his English accent flawless. The American soprano, Mattiwilda Dobbs, similarly brought in as a star, uses her bright, agile coloratura brilliantly. Jennifer Eddy makes an enchanting Blonde, perfect as a defiant English girl. What completes this as wonderful entertainment is the quality of the 1967 recording, as full and vivid as if it was recorded yesterday, the sound-stage cleanly and atmospherically focused.

Idomeneo (complete; DVD versions)

🔑  Arthaus DVD 101 079. Lewis, Goeke, Betley, Barstow, Oliver, Fryatt, Wicks, Glyndebourne Ch., LPO, Pritchard (Director: John Cox, V/D: Dave Heather)

(*) Warner DVD 5050467 3922-2-9. Kenny, Hadley, Vaness, Hemsley, Langridge, Roden, Kennedy, Glyndebourne Ch., LPO, Haitink (Dir: Trevor Nunn, V/D: Christopher Swann)

Ⓝ (*) Medici Arts DVD 2072448 (2). Mark Ainsley, Banse, Breslik, Dasch, Trost, Bav. State Op. Ch. & O, Nagano

Ⓝ (*) Decca DVD 074 3258 (2). Pears, Harper, Pashley, Woodland, Tear, E. Op. Ch., ECO, Britten. Introduced by John Warrack (Producer: Colin Graham; V/D: Brian Large)

Like Pritchard as conductor, Richard Lewis in the title-role was a veteran still in superb voice. John Cox's production of 1974 is brilliantly devised to bring out the limited dimensions of the stage in the old Glyndebourne opera house, with concentric circles framing the whole stage, giving a long perspective to highly atmospheric scenes at the end of the tunnel. It works beautifully, not least when the sea monster appears at the end of Act II. It is a beautifully crafted reading, with Leo Goeke's tenor as Idamante well contrasted with the fine Idomeneo of Ryland Davies. Josephine Barstow at her peak is a formidable Elettra and Bozena Betley a sweet Ilia. The incidental roles are very well taken by vintage Glyndebourne performers, Alexander Oliver, John Fryatt and Dennis Wicks.

Dating from 1983, the Warner DVD of Idomeneo from Glyndebourne offers a fine production by Trevor Nunn, with handsome, stylized sets and classical Greek costumes designed by John Napier. Bernard Haitink is a powerful Mozartian, directing an excellent cast. Even in 1983 Glyndebourne used the version with Idamante as a tenor rather than a mezzo, as Mozart originally conceived it. Even so, the young Jerry Hadley in that role offers a lightly stylish contrast with the darkly intense Idomeneo of Philip Langridge. First-rate contributions too from Yvonne Kenny as Ilia and Carol Vaness as Elettra.

The Nagano and Britten DVDs of Mozart's great opera seria have something in common. The live Bavarian State Opera version returns to the theatre where the opera was first performed by Mozart in 1781; the Britten performance used the English translation made for the first English staging in London in 1937, and which was to receive its British première at the Snape, Maltings, Concert Hall during the 1969 Aldeburgh Festival. Near to the sea as he was, Britten must have wondered whether the sea god, Neptune, disapproved, as three days before the first performance the hall was razed to the ground by fire, and the opera had to be restaged, without sets and with borrowed costumes, at a local church. The planned BBC TV broadcast, from which this recording came, had to move to the BBC Opera Centre. The original quaint costume designs were retained, but new sets were created by David Myerscough-Jones, and very simple and effective they were, with large blue cloths used to suggest the sea, and a genuine working 'monster' for Act II. The cast, dominated by Peter Pears's superb Idomeneo, also brought fine singing from Heather Harper in a convincing assumption of Ilia; Idamante (originally a mezzo part) was engagingly sung by Anne Pashley, and Rae Woodland and Robert Tear were excellent as Elektra and Arbace respectively. The score was pruned and then conducted by Britten with a composer's understanding and much passion.

It must first be said that the Bavarian production is marvellously sung. John Mark Ainsley is an authoritative Idomeneo, but it is Julianne Banse one especially remembers for her lovely singing as Ilia, although her lover/husband-to-be, Idamante, (here a tenor) and incongruously dressed, also has a golden voice. Annette Dasch is a properly fiery Elektra, especially in her final scene when all her hopes of getting Idamante are dashed, and she is finally abducted by the Furies. Kent Nagano conducts the Bavarian Chorus and Orchestra with plenty of spirit (the storm chorus is especially riveting). But not all the production is as effective as that. The opera opens with an unnecessary slaughter scene, and (apart from the lead females) the costumes, to say the least, are curiously unconvincing. Moreover, lots of stage business for the large cast seems superfluous and visually boring. Without the surtitles one couldn't manage at all. A pity, when musically the performance is splendid.

Idomeneo (complete; CD versions)

🔑 * EMI 5 57260-2 (3). Bostridge, Hunt Lieberson, Milne, Frittoli, Rolfe Johnson, SCO, Mackerras

 DG 431 674-2 (3). Rolfe Johnson, Von Otter, McNair, Martinpelto, Robson, Hauptmann, Monteverdi Choir, E. Bar. Sol., Gardiner

 DG 447 737-2 (3). Bartoli, Domingo, Vaness, Grant-Murphy, Hampson, Lopardo, Terfel, Met. Op. Ch. & O, Levine

Ian Bostridge with his ever-illuminating feeling for words brings the character vividly to life, with never a hint of strain. It is a magnetic performance, helped by the stylish and perceptive conducting of Sir Charles Mackerras, who gives a very full text. The result is a performance, strong, dramatic and expressive, which brings out the originality of instrumentation, a point that Mackerras highlights. The others in the cast are first rate, with Lorraine Hunt Lieberson a bright, strong Idamante and Lisa Milne a charming, sweet-voiced Ilia and Barbara Frittoli a powerful Elettra. It is good too to have Anthony Rolfe Johnson, who takes the title-role in the Gardiner version, singing very stylishly as Arbace, here given both his arias, often cut.

With its exhilarating vigour and fine singing, Gardiner's aim has been to include all the material Mozart wrote for the original (1781) production, and he recommends the use of the CD programming device for listeners to select the version they prefer. Gardiner's Mozartian style is well sprung and subtly moulded rather than severe. The principals sing beautifully, notably Anne Sofie von Otter as Idamante and Sylvia McNair as Ilia, while Anthony Rolfe Johnson as Idomeneo is well suited here, with words finely projected. The electrifying singing of the Monteverdi Choir adds to the dramatic bite.

From the very opening of the overture it is clear what tense dramatic control James Levine has over this masterpiece of an opera seria, his finest Mozart opera performance on disc. The cast is not just starry but stylish, with Plácido Domingo a commanding Idomeneo, giving a noble, finely controlled performance, which makes it a pity that the shorter version of his big aria, Fuor del mar, is preferred. Carol Vaness is a powerful, dramatic Elettra, well focused, and Cecilia Bartoli characterizes well as Idamante, wonderfully pure-toned in the Trio, while Heidi Grant-Murphy is a charmingly girlish Ilia with a light, bright soprano. Completing this team, you have Thomas Hampson as a superb Arbace and Bryn Terfel commanding in the brief solo given to the Oracle. The Met. chorus, like the orchestra, is incisively dramatic.

Idomeneo (sung in English)

Ⓜ  Chan. 3103 (2). Ford, Montague, Evans, Patterson, Davies, Gedda, Bayley, Opera N. Ch. & O, Parry

On Chandos, the performance of Idomeneo in English works surprisingly well, with the role of Idamante taken by a high voice, but with substantial cuts to allow the whole opera to be fitted on two very well-filled discs. Both of Arbace's arias disappear (a pity, when Ryland Davies is strongly cast as the High Priest) as well as one of Idamante's and one of Idomeneo's in Act III. In the title-role, Bruce Ford's distinctive tenor is powerfully expressive, even if his rapidly flickering vibrato does tend to obtrude in the more lyrical passages. The cast of women is outstanding, with Rebecca Evans as Ilia and Diana Montague as Idamante as mellifluous a duo as one could imagine, deeply expressive, too. Susan Patterson is well contrasted as Elettra, with her rather harder soprano suiting the aggressive side of the character. Having the veteran Nicolai Gedda in the cameo role of the Voice of Neptune is also a welcome plus-point. The vivid Chandos recording brings excellent balances between voices and orchestra, with words admirably clear. Mozart's score has never sounded fresher.

Lucio Silla (complete)

Ⓝ  Dacapo 8.226069/71 (3). Odinus, Nold, Hammarström, Bonde-Hansen, Elmark, Danish R. Sinf., Adám Fischer

Harnoncourt has a temptingly starry cast, but the opera is cut (see below). Fischer has a list of unfamiliar names, but they are young and clear-voiced and sing well. So until the Hager recording returns, this must be a clear first choice for an opera in which Mozart wrote a whole string of telling arias, well shared, dramatically and lyrically, between the main characters, Simone Nold (as the fiery heroine, Giunia) and her husband-to-be, Cecilio (Kristina Hammarström – originally a castrato part). The second couple, Cinna (Henriette Bonde-Hansen) and Celia (Susanne Elmark), are hardly less impressive. Adám Fischer directs the proceedings with plenty of vitality and the Danish Radio Sinfonietta are clearly kept on their toes. Like Idomeneo, Lucio Silla demonstrates what memorable music Mozart was writing for the operatic stage this early in his career.

Lucio Silla (slightly abridged)

 Teldec 2292 44928-2 (2). Schreier, Gruberová, Bartoli, Kenny, Upshaw, Schoenberg Ch., VCM, Harnoncourt

What Harnoncourt has done is to record a text which fits on to two generously filled CDs, not just trimming down the recitatives but omitting no fewer than four arias, all of them valuable. Yet his sparkling direction of an outstanding, characterful team of soloists brings an exhilarating demonstration of the boy Mozart's genius, with such marvels as the extended finale to Act I left intact. Schreier is masterly in the title-role, still fresh in tone, while Dawn Upshaw is warm and sweet as Celia, and Cecilia Bartoli is full and rich as Cecilio. The singing of Edita Gruberová as Giunia and Yvonne Kenny as Cinna is not quite so immaculate but is still confident and stylish. The Concentus Musicus of Vienna has rarely given so bright and lightly sprung a performance on record. Excellent digital sound.

Mitridate re di Ponto (DVD version)

* EuroArts DVD 2053609. Blake, Kenny, Putnam, Boozer, Rozario, Papis, Dubosc, Lyon Op. O, Guschlbauer (V/D: Bernard Maigrot)

Strongly cast, the 1986 Lyon Opera production of Mitridate makes a powerful case for Mozart's early opera, written when he was 14. Though modern instruments are used, Theodor Guschlbauer paces the music well. Not only does the tenor, Rockwell Blake, in the title-role cope splendidly with the enormous vocal range demanded, Yvonne Kenny, firm and agile, is magnetic in the role of Aspasia. Ashley Putnam is bright and clear as Sifare, and Brenda Boozer's rich mezzo is ideal for the role of Farnace. Patricia Rozario as Ismene and Catherine Dubosc as Arbate are first rate too, making one wish that Mozart had given them more to sing. The sets are simple and stylish, and the costumes are traditional in Arab style.

Mitridate, re di Ponto (complete; CD version)

* Decca 460 772-2 (3). Bartoli, Dessay, Sabbatini, Asawa, Piau, Les Talens Lyriques, Rousset

Christophe Rousset conducts his period forces with panache, pointing rhythms infectiously. The cast is characterful, with Cecilia Bartoli outstanding as the hero, Sifare, in love with Aspasia. In that prima donna role, Natalie Dessay is both rich of tone and brilliantly agile in coloratura. The counter-tenor, Brian Asawa, is firm and characterful as the predatory Farnace, and though in the title-role Giuseppe Sabbatini is overstrenuous at times, his is a heroic performance, clean in attack. The softer-grained Sandrine Piau as Ismene is well contrasted with the others. Vivid, well-balanced sound. An excellent set, unlikely to be easily supplanted.

Le nozze di Figaro (complete; DVD versions)

Ⓝ 🔑 * Opus Arte DVD OA 0999D. Schrott, Persson, Röschmann, Finley, Shaham, ROHCG Ch. & O, Pappano (Director: David McVicar; V/D Director: Ferenc van Damme)

🔑 Ⓑ * Warner NVC DVD 0630-14013-2. Finley, Hagley, Fleming, Schmidt, LPO, Haitink (Producer: Stephen Medcalf, V/D: Derek Bailey)

🔑 * Arthaus DVD 101 089. Skram, Cotrubas, Te Kanawa, Luxon, Stade, Rintzler, Condo, Glyndebourne Ch., LPO, Pritchard (V/D: Dave Heather)

 DG DVD 073 018-9. Terfel, Hagley, Gilfry, Martinpelto, Monteverdi Ch., E. Bar. Sol., Gardiner

An outstanding, new-style DVD Figaro from David McVicar to lead the top choices. It is set in the 1830s, which simply means that the costumes are brought forward a few decades but are still a pleasure to look at. The Count's palace is on a realistically impressive scale, with a huge staff, and its elegance contrasts with the scruffy room to be allotted to Figaro and Susanna after they are married, where the opera opens. Erwin Schrott is a lively, resourceful and above all very good-looking Figaro, but the delightful Susanna (Miah Persson), charmingly dressed, is his match and they both sing splendidly. Gerald Finley does too, even if he portrays a truly unattractive and permanently disgruntled, jealous Count, and one wonders what Rosina originally saw in him. But his anger gives a spice to the action, especially in Mozart's marvellous extended finale to Act II which, with wonderful music, keeps the viewer continually wondering what is coming next. The dignified Countess (Dorothea Röschmann) sings her pair of key arias beautifully and affectingly. While she conveys her deep unhappiness at her husband's unfaithful behaviour, she is appealingly spirited and stands her own ground, obviously enjoying Cherubino's attempts to win her favours. Rinat Shaham is very personable, and her singing of 'his' two arias in that role, is another of the highlights of the production. Altogether this is very recommendable indeed. The sets are appealing and the action moves forward with a swing, with the performance conducted with his usual flair by Antonio Pappano.

The Warner version must be one of the great bargains of DVD. At the time of writing it retails at £19.99, and you would not find it easy to get a CD version of any distinction at this price. And this is a performance of distinction, wonderfully conducted by Bernard Haitink and with four first-class principals. Gerald Finley's Figaro is expertly characterized and beautifully sung, and the same goes for both Renée Fleming's Countess and Alison Hagley's Susanna. The three hours nine minutes are contained on one double-sided DVD, which accommodates two Acts per side. The quality of the colour and the sharpness of focus are in the demonstration bracket and so, too, is the vivid, well-balanced sound. Musically a satisfying set and one of the handful of DVDs that should be in every serious collection.

Recorded in 1973, Sir Peter Hall's production of Figaro at Glyndebourne is a model of its kind. Here is a traditional production that, far from being unimaginative, brings endless new perceptions and illuminations of the complicated plot devised by Lorenzo da Ponte from the original Beaumarchais play. John Bury's designs are solidly realistic yet comparably imaginative in the way that each scene is set diagonally on stage, giving interesting perspectives. The musical performance is led by three stars in their early prime: Ileana Cotrubas as a sparkling Susanna, Frederica von Stade as a wonderfully boyish Cherubino and, above all, Kiri Te Kanawa as the Countess, commanding yet tenderly affecting in her vulnerability. They are matched by the lively Figaro of Knut Skram, Benjamin Luxon at his finest as the Count, Marius Rintzler as a dark, firm Bartolo and John Fryatt a brilliant, witty Basilio.

John Eliot Gardiner's DG DVD was recorded for video live, at the Théâtre du Châtelet in Paris, with economical but evocative sets. Simple screens illustrating each scene are dropped in front of a panoramic backcloth with trees and the Almaviva Palace in black silhouette against blue. Props as well as scenery are minimal but succeed in pointing the humour without distracting. The performance follows the splendid pattern of the CD version, with Terfel superb in the title-role, already at his peak in 1993, leading a young and consistently attractive cast, and this makes for an outstanding, consistently exhilarating presentation of the Mozart/Da Ponte masterpiece.

Le nozze di Figaro (complete; CD versions)

🔑 * HM HMC90 1818/20. Gens, Ciofi, Kirchschlager, McLaughlin, Keenlyside, Regazzo, Ghent Coll. Voc., Concerto Köln, Jacobs

🔑  Decca 410 150-2 (3). Te Kanawa, Popp, von Stade, Ramey, Allen, Moll, Tear, LPO & Ch., Solti

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 3 58602-2 (2). Schwarzkopf, Moffo, Cossotto, Taddei, Waechter, Vinco, Philh. Ch. & O, Giulini

Ⓜ * Decca (ADD) 466 369-2 (3). Gueden, Danco, della Casa, Dickie, Poell, Corena, Siepi, V. State Op. Ch., VPO, Kleiber

 DG 439 871-2 (3). Terfel, Hagley, Martinpelto, Gilfry, Stephen, McCulloch, Feller, Egerton, Backes, Monterverdi Ch., E. Bar. Sol., Gardiner

 Teldec 4509 90861-2 (3). Scharinger, Bonney, Margiono, Hampson, Lang, Moll, Langridge, Netherlands Op. Ch., Concg. O, Harnoncourt

Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 449 728-2 (3). Janowitz, Mathis, Troyanos, Fischer-Dieskau, Prey, Lagger, German Op. Ch. & O, Boehm

René Jacobs conducts one of the most refreshing versions of Figaro to be issued in many years, with its excellent cast a worthy winner of the Gramophone 'Record of the Year Award' in 2004. It all adds up to a winning result. Véronique Gens is one of the most distinguished of Countesses, and Patrizia Ciofi is a sparkling Susanna, while Simon Keenlyside is a superb Count, well contrasted with the strongly acted Figaro of Lorenzo Regazzo. Angelika Kirchschlager sings flawlessly as Cherubino, while having Marie McLaughlin as Marcellina represents luxury casting.

Solti opts for a fair proportion of extreme speeds, slow as well as fast, but they rarely if ever intrude on the quintessential happiness of the entertainment. Samuel Ramey, a firm-toned baritone, makes a virile Figaro, superbly matched to the most enchanting of Susannas on record, Lucia Popp, who gives a sparkling and radiant performance. Thomas Allen's Count is magnificent too, tough in tone and characterization but always beautiful on the ear. Kurt Moll as Dr Bartolo sings an unforgettable La vendetta with triplets very fast and agile 'on the breath'. Frederica von Stade is a most attractive Cherubino, even if Voi che sapete is too slow; but crowning all is the Countess of Kiri Te Kanawa, challenged by Solti's spacious tempi in the two big arias, but producing ravishing tone, flawless phrasing and elegant ornamentation throughout. With superb, vivid recording this now makes a clear choice for a much-recorded opera. However, in view of the strong competition, Decca should find a way of reducing its price.

Giulini's set remains a classic, with a cast assembled by Walter Legge that has rarely been matched, let alone surpassed. Taddei with his dark bass-baritone makes a provocative Figaro; opposite him, Anna Moffo is at her freshest and sweetest as Susanna. Schwarzkopf as ever is the noblest of Countesses, and it is good to hear the young Fiorenza

Cossotto as a full-toned Cherubino. Eberhard Waechter is a strong and stylish Count. On only two mid-priced discs it makes a superb bargain.

Erich Kleiber's famous set was one of Decca's Mozart bicentenary recordings of the mid-1950s. It remains a memorably strong performance with much fine singing. Few sets since have matched its constant stylishness. Hilde Gueden's Susanna might be criticized but her golden tones are certainly characterful and her voice blends with Lisa della Casa's enchantingly. Suzanne Danco and della Casa are both at their finest. A dark-toned Figaro in Cesare Siepi brings added contrast and, if the pace of the recitatives is rather slow, this is not inconsistent within the context of Kleiber's overall approach. The closing scene of Act II is marvellously done.

Gardiner's CD version was recorded live. In one instance the effect of the moment goes too far, when Cherubino (Pamela Helen Stephen) sings Voi che sapete for the Countess in a funny, nervous voice. That is very much the exception, for Gardiner's approach is lively and often brisk, with period manners made more genial and elegant. One of the most consistent and characterful of modern casts is led superbly by Bryn Terfel as Figaro, already a master in this role, with the enchanting, bright-eyed Alison Hagley as Susanna. Rodney Gilfry and Hillevi Martinpelto are fresh and firm as the Count and Countess, aptly younger-sounding than usual. Carlos Feller is a characterful buffo Bartolo, and Francis Egerton a wickedly funny Basilio.

Harnoncourt on Teldec makes the Royal Concertgebouw Orchestra produce fresh, light and transparent sounds, close to period style. The excellent cast has Thomas Hampson as a dominant Count, Charlotte Margiono as a tenderly sweet Countess, with Barbara Bonney a charmingly provocative Susanna and Anton Scharinger a winning Figaro, both tough and comic. Recitative at flexible speeds conveys the dramatic confrontations and complications vividly. A version that gets the best of both interpretative worlds, new and old. A generous budget Apex CD of highlights (76') is also available (2564 61514-2).

Boehm's version of Figaro is also among the most consistently assured performances available. The women all sing most beautifully, with Gundula Janowitz's Countess, Edith Mathis's Susanna and Tatiana Troyanos's Cherubino all ravishing the ear in contrasted ways. Hermann Prey is an intelligent if not very jolly-sounding Figaro, and Dietrich Fischer-Dieskau gives his dark, sharply defined reading of the Count's role. All told, a great success, with fine playing and recording, here impressively remastered.

Le nozze di Figaro (complete; CD version). Symphonies 38 (Prague); 39

Ⓝ 🔑 Ⓜ  EMI (stereo/mono) 2 12681-2 (3). Bruscantini,
Sciutti, Wallace, Sinclair, Stevens, Calabrese, Cuénod,
Jurinac, Glyndebourne Festival O, Gui

Gui's effervescent 1955 Glyndebourne set is at last reissued complete for the first time on CD, one of EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century' series, with two Mozart symphonies used to fill up the CDs (they are placed at the end of Acts I & II). It remains a classic set with a cast which has seldom been bettered. Just as Sesto Bruscantini is the archetypal Glyndebourne Figaro, Sena Jurinac is the perfect Countess, with Graziella Sciutti a delectable Susanna and Risë Stevens a well-contrasted Cherubino, vivacious in their scenes together. Franco Calabrese as the Count is firm and virile, if occasionally stressed on top, and the three character roles have never been cast more vividly, with Ian Wallace as Bartolo, Monica Sinclair as Marcellina and the incomparable Hugues Cuénod as Basilio. Cuénod's brilliant performance of Basilio's aria in Act IV has now been restored for the present reissue. It is a great pity that a libretto wasn't included, though an excellent essay by Richard Osborne is. The sound for the opera is mightily impressive for 1955 stereo, warm and superbly balanced, and pretty good too for the earlier symphonies (given stylish performances), albeit in 1953 mono.

The Marriage of Figaro (in English)

Ⓜ (*) Chan. 3113 (3). Kenny, Evans, Montague, Purves,
Dazeley, Geoffrey Mitchell Ch., Philh. O, Parry

Arguably, Figaro gains more from being heard in English than any other opera, with the fun of the piece heightened; Parry's timing of the comedy here is impeccable, helped by light, clean textures and imaginative continuo-playing in recitatives, using fortepiano. Most of the principals have had long experience of singing their roles on stage: Rebecca Evans as a golden-voiced Susanna for Welsh National Opera, Yvonne Kenny as a feisty, defiant Countess for Washington Opera (having graduated from the role of Susanna elsewhere), Diana Montague as a glowing Cherubino at Covent Garden, Christopher Purves as a powerful Figaro with Scottish Opera, and John Graham-Hall as a characterful Basilio at Glyndebourne. William Dazeley is the upstanding Count, and Jonathan Veira a rather young-sounding Bartolo.

Il re pastore (CD version)

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Warner Maestro 2564 69259-9 (2). Saccà, Murray,
Mei, Nielsen, Schaeffer, VCM, Harnoncourt

Harnoncourt, in his period-instrument recording, characteristically takes a tough, vigorous view of this unpretentious serenata, pressing home allegros vigorously, with the horn and trumpet parts brightly brought out and with timpani added. This means that he misses the tenderness of such numbers as Agemore's first aria, though he relaxes for the most celebrated aria, Aminta's L'amero, beautifully sung by Ann Murray, the most characterful singer in the cast. Neither Robert Saccà as Alessandro nor Marcus Schaeffer as Agemore is stylish or agile enough. With its reverberation the recording enhances the big-scale impression, with occasional audience noises intruding.

Die Zauberflöte (DVD versions)

* DG DVD 073 4106. Popp, Araiza, Gruberová, W. Brendel,
Sieber, Moll, Orth, Bav. State Op. Ch. & O, Sawallisch
(Director: August Everding, V/D: Oeter Windgassen)

🔑  TDK DVD DVWW-CLOPMF. Cotrubas, Schreier,
Gruberová, Talvela, Boesch, Sieber, Hiestermann, V. State

Op. Konzertvereinigung, VPO, Levine (Stage Director: Jean-Pierre Ponnelle, V/D: Brian Large)

🔑  Arthaus DVD 101 085. Lott, Goeke, Sandoz, Luxon, Thomaschke, Glyndebourne Ch., LPO, Haitink (Producer: John Cox, V/D: Dave Heather)

(*) TDK DVD DVWW OPMFP. Röschmann, Beczala, Rancatore, Roth, Le Roi, Salminen, Peper, Paris Nat. Op. Ch. & O, Iván Fischer (Director: Benno Besson, V/D: François Roussillon)

Sawallisch's 1983 Bavarian account of Die Zauberflöte is outstanding in every way and will be difficult to surpass. Lucia Popp sings radiantly as Pamina and Francisco Araiza (who joined the cast at the last minute) is an equally golden-voiced Tamino. Edita Gruverová is a splendidly malignant Queen of the Night and her Der Hölle Rache is breathtaking. The lanky, rugged Wolfgang Brendel makes an utterly believable Papageno. When she arrives, his Papagena (Gudrun Sieber) is the prettiest wife, and after they have sung their famous duet they wheel the little Papagenas and Papagenos (who have appeared to illustrate their words) away in a barrow. This is one of many production touches from August Everding and the designer Jürgen Rose that add to the success of this attractively staged performance, with Rose's costumes completing the picture. Monostatos (Norbert Orth) is a real black-faced villain, and his counterpart, Sarastro (the resonant Kurt Moll) sings and acts nobly. The Three Boys are engagingly knowing and the Three Ladies make a balancing (not impartial) counterpart. Their very opening scene, when they dispatch the monster by magic, is especially effective. The ordeal by fire and water is also simply staged, to make the opera's close very satisfying. Throughout, Sawallisch conducts with inspirationally relaxed timing and gives the performance a natural, spontaneous flow. Vivid recording completes a superb set.

Jean-Pierre Ponnelle's production of Die Zauberflöte, with his own charming toytown sets and costumes. With James Levine at his brilliant and most perceptive as conductor, it struck an ideal between the pantomime element and the weightier implications of the Masonic background to the story. It makes an ideal entertainment on film in this 1982 recording. The cast is excellent, with Peter Schreier in his prime as Tamino, Ileana Cotrubas a charming Pamina and Edita Gruberová a dazzling Queen of the Night. Martti Talvela is the most resonant Sarastro, backed up by the veteran, Walter Berry, as the Speaker. Most imaginative of all is the casting of Christian Boesch as Papageno, a singing actor rather than a regular opera-singer. Few have presented the role quite so engagingly, and his duets with Pamina have a rare tenderness. The chorus and others in the cast are first rate.

What dominates John Cox's lively 1978 production of Die Zauberflöte for Glyndebourne are the sets and designs of David Hockney. He was following up the success of his unique designs for The Rake's Progress, and the vision again is striking, with stylized scenery and landscapes in false perspective, with something of a toytown atmosphere, including a delightful dragon and oriental costumes for Sarastro's followers. That puts the production firmly on the side of pantomime rather than serious drama, but the excellent casting and the powerful conducting of Bernard Haitink ensure that this is not just a trivial entertainment. Though Leo Goeke as Tamino has his roughness of voice, he sings Dies Bildnis beautifully, with the young Felicity Lott a charming Pamina. Benjamin Luxon is a strong and positive Papageno, with May Sandoz light, bright and agile as the Queen of the Night and Thomas Thomashke a well-focused Sarastro, and with the young Willard White as the Speaker. A memorable version.

Not surprisingly, the TDK Paris production is strong on spectacle, changing sets for each colourful scene and using the full stage facilities. The result is visually appealing though there are some curious eccentricities in the production. Papageno (Detlef Roth) is an engaging, fully feathered bird catcher, and as he sings about himself, three birds fly across the stage and into his cage. Dorothea Röschmann, an appealingly resourceful Pamina, creates a stronger role than usual; she sings beautifully yet adds an extra dimension by the strength of her character. Désirée Rancatore is an arresting Queen of the Night and projects her famous aria with vehemence. There are some nice individual touches. The Three Boys are conveyed in a very handsome balloon, and when Tamino entices the animals with his magic flute they arrive elegantly dressed (almost Beatrix Potter style). Later, when Papageno and the old woman have their proposal scene, the disguised Papagena looks very unattractive indeed, then almost instantaneously she is a very pretty wife. The singing throughout is of a very high standard, not least the priests, who nevertheless are strangely casual in dress. But Sarastro, whose two great arias are superbly sung by Matti Salminen, is given an elongated egg-head, quite out of character with his noble personage. But Iván Fisher's musical direction is flexible and spirited, and the whole opera goes with a swing; with such colourful sets and costumes, it makes a very enjoyable entertainment.

Die Zauberflöte (CD versions)

🔑 ✿ * DG 477 5789 (2). Röschmann, Miklósa, Strehl, Pape, Müller-Brachmann, Kleiter, Azesberger, Georg Zeppenfeld, Arnold Schoenberg Ch., Mahler CO, Abbado

 DG 449 166-2 (2); Video VHS 072 447-3. Oelze, Schade, Sieden, Peeters, Finley, Backes, Monteverdi Ch., E. Bar. Sol., Gardiner

 Erato 0630 12705-2 (2). Mannion, Blochwitz, Dessay, Hagen, Scharinger, Les Arts Florissants, Christie

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ () DG mono 435 741-2 (2). Stader, Streich, Fischer-Dieskau, Greindl, Haefliger, Berlin RIAS Ch. & SO, Fricsay

Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 67388-2 (2). Janowitz, Putz, Popp, Gedda, Berry, Frick, Schwarzkopf, Ludwig, Hoffgen (3 Ladies), Philh. Ch. & O, Klemperer

Ⓜ () EMI mono 5 67071-2 (2). Seefried, Lipp, Loose, Dermota, Kunz, Weber, V. State Op. Ch., VPO, Karajan

 Telarc CD-80302 (2). Hadley, Hendricks, Allen, Anderson, Lloyd, SCO & Ch., Mackerras

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 478 0394. Lorengar, Deutekom, Burrows, Fischer-Dieskau, Prey, Talvela, V. State Op. Ch., VPO, Solti

As DG's wording on the box makes clear, this is Abbado's very first Magic Flute on record and indeed – as they claim – it is a triumphant success. René Pape's magnificent Sarastro dominates the opera, just as intended. He and the superb chorus bring just the right touch of gravitas, so all the pantomime fun with Papageno and Papagena is nicely balanced. Moreover, Erika Miklósa's Queen of the Night's second aria, Der Hölle Rache, is quite as dazzling as Rita Streich's celebrated version, and it is slightly fuller in tone. Dorothea Röschmann and Christoph Strehl are a perfectly matched Pamina and Tamino, for both have lovely voices: Strehl is ardent, and Röschmann is infinitely touching. The smaller parts are also without flaw. Kurt Azesberger is a splendid Monostatos, and even the Speaker, George Zeppenfeld, has a honeyed voice. But most magical of all are the little vocal ensembles, wonderfully warm and refined, especially the numbers featuring the Three Ladies, who blend so delightfully but not suavely, and the Three Boys (from the Tölzer Knabenchor), who are just as memorable. Although the moments of drama are not lost, this is above all an affectionately relaxed performance, with Abbado continually revelling in the lyrical beauty of Mozart's wonderful score. It is, of course, a live performance, so it has the extra communicative tension that brings. There is also a first class (74') set of highlights with full texts and translations (DG 4776319).

John Eliot Gardiner rounds off his outstanding series for DG Archiv of Mozart's seven great mature operas with an electrifying account of Zauberflöte, even though the generally inspired casting is marred by the underpowered and uneven Sarastro of Harry Peeters. Gardiner is helped enormously by his choice of singer as Pamina, a young German soprano with a ravishingly pure and sweet voice, flawlessly controlled, Christiane Oelze. Also superb is the American soprano who takes the role of Queen of the Night, with a voice as full and silvery as it is flexible, Cyndia Sieden. The Tamino of Michael Schade has youthful freshness combined with keen imagination; though there are more characterful Papagenos than Gerald Finley, few sing as freshly and cleanly as he. With recording clear and well balanced, the set offers an incidental practical advantage in putting the spoken dialogue on separate tracks.

More than his rivals, Christie wears his period manners easily and amiably, with fast speeds crisp and light, and with some numbers – such as Papageno's first aria – relaxedly expansive. There is no weak link in the cast, with Rosa Mannion a warm, touching Pamina, able to bring out deeper feelings as in Ach, ich fühl's, and Hans-Peter Blochwitz is an imaginative, sweetly expressive Tamino, while Natalie Dessay as Queen of the Night is unusually warm-toned for the role, not so much a frigid figure as a fully rounded character, with the coloratura display dazzlingly clear. Anton Scharinger is a genial, rich-toned Papageno, and Reinhard Hagen a Sarastro satisfyingly clean of focus. Above all, the joyful vigour of Mozart's inspiration captures one from first to last.

Fricsay's recording has been treasured by us since the early days of LP. It is an outstandingly fresh and alert Die Zauberflöte, marked by generally clear, pure singing and well-sprung orchestral playing at generally rather fast speeds which yet never sound rushed. Maria Stader and Dietrich Fischer-Dieskau phrase most beautifully, but the most spectacular singing comes from Rita Streich as a dazzling Queen of the Night, and the relatively close balance of the voice gives it the necessary power such as Streich could convey less readily in the opera house. Ernst Haefliger, too, is at his most honeyed in tone as Tamino, and only the rather gritty Sarastro of Josef Greindl falls short – and even he sings with a satisfying dark resonance. This was the first version to spice the musical numbers with brief sprinklings of dialogue, just enough to prevent the work from sounding like an oratorio.

Klemperer's conducting of The Magic Flute is one of his finest achievements on record; indeed, he is inspired, making the dramatic music sound more like Beethoven in its breadth and strength. The dialogue is omitted, but he does not miss the humour and point of the Papageno passages, and he gets the best of both worlds to a surprising degree. The cast is outstanding – look at the distinction of the Three Ladies alone – but curiously it is that generally most reliable of all the singers, Gottlob Frick as Sarastro, who comes nearest to letting the side down. Lucia Popp is in excellent form, and Gundula Janowitz sings Pamina's part with a creamy beauty that is just breathtaking. Nicolai Gedda too is a firm-voiced Tamino.

The Vienna State Opera cast of Karajan's mono version of 1950 has not since been matched on record: Irmgard Seefried and Anton Dermota both sing with radiant beauty and great character, Wilma Lipp is a dazzling Queen of the Night, Erich Kunz as Papageno sings with an infectious smile in the voice, and Ludwig Weber is a commanding Sarastro. There is no spoken dialogue; but it is a Mozart treat not to be missed, with mono sound still amazingly vivid and full of presence.

Solti's reading is tough, strong and brilliant, but the almost total absence of charm is disconcerting. The drama may be consistently vital, but ultimately the full variety of Mozart's inspiration is not achieved. Among the men, Stuart Burrows is especially impressive, with stylish and rich-toned singing; Martti Talvela and Fischer-Diekau as Sarastro and the Speaker respectively provide a stronger contrast than usual and Hermann Prey rounds out the character of Papageno with intelligent pointing of words. The cast of women is less consistent. Pilar Lorengar's Pamina is sweetly attractive so long as your ear is not worried by the intrusive vibrato, while Cristina Deutekom's Queen of the Night is marred by a curious warbling quality in the coloratura. The recording is brilliant and there is a full libretto, but this is far from a first choice.

The Magic Flute (complete; in English)

Ⓜ  Chan. 3121 (2). Evans, Vidal, Banks, Keenlyside, Tomlinson, Graham-Hall, Mitchell Ch., LPO, Mackerras

Sir Charles Mackerras regularly opts for brisk and flowing speeds, most strikingly in Pamina's great G minor aria, Ach, ich fühl's ('Now I know that love can vanish' in Jeremy Sams's translation). Rebecca Evans sings passionately, as Mackerras suggests, coping splendidly with the florid writing. So does the French coloratura, Elisabeth Vidal, in the Queen of the Night's two big arias, bright and agile. That she betrays a hint of a foreign accent in the spoken dialogue (well edited in helpful links) is only apt. Standing out is the masterly portrayal of Papageno by Simon Keenlyside, vividly acted and flawlessly sung, and Barry Banks as Tamino sings very well in the lyrical numbers. John Tomlinson as Sarastro gives necessary weight to the role, even if he is not always quite as steady as he once was, while John Graham-Hall sings and acts vividly as Monostatos, unfazed by Mackerras's hectic speed for his aria. Defying the fast speeds, the vocal ensembles are wonderfully crisp, as is the playing of the LPO. As well as the well-delivered dialogue, the vivid sound-effects regularly add to the dramatic impact.

RECITALS

'Tutto Mozart'. Arias from: Bastien und Bastienne; Così fan tutte; Don Giovanni; Le nozze di Figaro; Die Zauberflöte. Concert arias: Un bacio di mano; Così dunque tradisci – Aspri rimorsi atroci; Männer suchen stetz zu naschen (also included: JACQUIN: Io ti lascio, o cara, addio; SCHACK: Nun, liebes Weibchen, ziehst mit mir)

🔑  DG 477 5886. Terfel, Persson, Rice, SNO, Mackerras

The astonishing versatility of Bryn Terfel as a Mozart singer is brilliantly demonstrated on this recital disc of 19 Mozart items. Not only does Terfel take on the roles of both Don Giovanni and Leporello in Don Giovanni, but Guglielmo and Alfonso in Così and Figaro and the Count in Figaro, plus a sparkling Papageno, all of them clearly contrasted; and he adds a fascinating collection of rarities to set them in contrast. So you have a duet by Gottfried von Jacquin, orchestrated by Mozart, with the baritone answered by the soprano singing 'Miaow'. Terfel sings with clean, firm tone throughout, avoiding the roughness which has sometimes afflicted his singing. A delightful Mozart offering, beautifully conducted and recorded, with Miah Persson and Christine Rice admirable partners in various items.

Arias from: (i) La clemenza di Tito; (ii) Così fan tutte; Don Giovanni; (ii) Lucio Silla; Mitridate, rè di Ponto; (i) Le nozze di Figaro; Zaïde; Die Zauberflöte

🔑 Ⓑ  CfP 585 9022. SCO, with (i) Murray; cond. Leppard; (ii) Allen; cond. Armstrong

Dating from 1984, when both singers were in their prime, this is one of the most delectable collections of Mozart arias ever assembled on a single disc. Sir Thomas Allen has the lion's share, and he is in superb form in the four Figaro arias and in Papageno's pair from Die Zauberflöte. His honeyed legato in Deh vieni alla finestra from Don Giovanni is matched by the sheer gusto of Finch'han dal vino. To conclude, there are two rarer excerpts from Zaïde, and the engaging Un bacio di mano, an insertion aria which Mozart wote for Pasquale Anfossi's Le gelosie fortunate in 1788. Ann Murray then takes over for splendidly sung excerpts from La clemenza di Tito (Parto parto, with the clarinet obbligato stylishly played by Lewis Morrison) and the spectacular Lungi da te, mio bene from Mitridate, rè di Ponto, with a fine horn obbligato from Frank Lloyd, who also stays around to contribute similarly to the Handelian encore, Va tacito e nascosto from Act I of Giulio Cesare, which is equally impressive. With stylish accompaniments from the Scottish Chamber Orchestra under Sir Richard Armstrong or Raymond Leppard, and warm, natural recording, which (because of the skill of the balance engineer, Stuart Eltham) is kind to both voices. At Classics for Pleasure price this is quite irresistible.

Arias: La clemenza di Tito; Don Giovanni; Die Entführung aus dem Serail; Idomeneo; Le nozze di Figaro; Il re pastore. Concert Arias: Ah, conte, partite, K.418; Resta o cara, K.528; Vado, ma dove?, K.583

Ⓜ  RCA 82876 65841-2. Margaret Price, ECO or LPO, Lockgart

An impressive disc of display arias. Margaret Price shows her versatility by singing excerpts from all three soprano roles in Figaro, but her most impressive performances remain those which demand coloratura brilliance combined with dramatic power. Strong accompaniments and good recording.

Arias from: La clemenza di Tito; Idomeneo; Lucio Silla; Le nozze di Figaro

🔑  Erato 8573 85768-2. Graham, OAE, Bickett – GLUCK: Aria ***

This is a glorious recital of Mozart and Gluck, with Susan Graham radiant and characterful in arias she has sung on stage, highlighting the distinctive points of each character. So from La clemenza di Tito she contrasts Sesto's purposeful first aria with the far gentler second, producing a breathtaking pianissimo on the reprise. Cherubino's two arias from Figaro are made to sound new and intense, with the last and longest item, Cecilio's big, taxing number from Lucio Silla, Il tenero momento, providing the title of the whole recital, making a superb climax. Fine, sympathetic accompaniment and perfect sound.

Arias from: La clemenza di Tito; Così fan tutte; Don Giovanni; Idomeneo; Lucio Silla; Mitridate; Le nozze di Figaro

 RCA 09026 68661-2. Kasarova, Dresden State O, C. Davis

Here in a formidable collection of Mozart arias, much enhanced by Colin Davis's accompaniment, Kasarova demonstrates not only her stylishness and technical prowess – with not a single intrusive aitch allowed – but her musical flair. At the very start, she launches into the recitative before Dorabella's aria in Così fan tutte with a vehemence that takes the breath away, and vehemence is a quality that draws many of these portrayals together, whether as Donna Elvira in Don Giovanni (giving way to tenderness when required), Vitellia in Clemenza or a whole range of trouser-roles, including those in the early Mitridate and Lucio Silla.

'Arie di Bravura' from: Didone abbandonata; Lucio Silla; Die Zauberflöte

 Virgin 3 95250-2. Damrau, Le Cercle de L'Harmonie, Rhorer (with arias by RIGHINI) – SALIERI: Arias ***

For her début recital the brilliant coloratura soprano Diana Damrau has chosen to contrast Mozartian operatic repertoire with arias by Salieri and in the event his contemporary, Vincenzo Righini, whose music she discovered when preparing this programme. The two arias by this contemporary and colleague of Salieri are from Il natal d'Apollo; the first is a virtuoso piece with a violin obbligato, the second, Ombra dolente, is really affecting, a little like Gluck. In the Mozart arias Damrau really rises to the occasion, singing with a rich espressivo in the excerpts from Lucio Silla and the little-known Mozartian version of Dido's Lament, while characterizing a very angry Queen of the Night in a bravura account of Der Hölle Rache as thrillingly accurate as any on record.

Arias from: Don Giovanni; Die Entführung aus dem Serail; La finta giardiniera; Le nozze di Figaro; Il re pastore; Il sogno di Scipione; Zaïde; Die Zauberflöte. Concert aria: Nehmt meinen Dank

🔑  Decca 452 602-2. Fleming, O of St Luke's, Mackerras

Renée Fleming has rarely sounded quite so beautiful on disc as in this wide-ranging collection of Mozart arias, one of the finest available. If it is disappointing not to have her singing the role of the Countess in Figaro, the two Susanna items are both welcome – Deh vieni bringing out her most golden tone and the big alternative aria, Al desio, challenging her to her most brilliant singing. Her account of La Fortuna's aria from Il sogno di Scipione is commanding too, and her ornamentation is phenomenally crisp and brilliant throughout, not least in Ach ich liebte from Entführung. The only reservations come with the brisk treatment, period-style, of Pamina's Ach, ich fühl's and the lovely aria from Zaïde, both of which could be much more tenderly expressive. Excellent, stylish accompaniment and first-rate recording.

Arias from: Don Giovanni; Zaïde; Die Zauberflöte

Ⓑ  EMI 3 68255-2. Yu, Prague Philharmonia, Sato – BACH: Arias ***

The Korean soprano Hyunah Yu is blessed with a gloriously creamy and firm voice, which she uses most expressively in these Mozart arias, notably in the three arias from the incomplete Singspiel, Zaïde, which she has performed on stage – not only the well-known Ruhe sanft but the equally lyrical Trostlos schluchtzet and the violent 'Tiger!' aria, attacking the evil Sultan. Pamina's great Act II aria, Ach ich fühl's, is wonderfully pure and poised, with Yu charming in Zerlina's Vedrai carino from Don Giovanni. Well coupled with impressive Bach arias in EMI's adventurous Debut series.

Arias: Don Giovanni; Die Entführung aus dem Serail; Idomeneo; Le nozze di Figaro; Die Zauberflöte

🔑 Ⓜ () EMI mono 4 76844-2. Schwarzkopf (with various conductors & orchestras, including Pritchard, Krips, Braithwaite, Karajan)

This famous Schwarzkopf mono recital is reissued as one of EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century', with two extra items added (to make 14 in all), including L'amerò sarò costante, Aminto's Act II aria from Il re pastore. This is the earliest, along with the two from Die Entführung; and one of the curiosities is a lovely account of Pamina's Ach, ich fühl's, recorded in English in 1948. The majority, including those from Figaro – Susanna's and Cherubino's arias as well as the Countess's – are taken from a recital disc conducted by John Pritchard in 1953. Full translations are included.

MUFFAT, Georg (1653–1704)

Florilegium secundum: Suites 1–4

Ⓜ (*) Decca O/L 475 9118. AAM, Hogwood

George Muffat was born in Megève, Savoy. The Florilegium secundum was published in 1698 at Passau, where he served at the court of the bishop. It is a set of eight orchestral suites, the first four of which are recorded here. They are formally more adventurous than the dance movements of such contemporaries as Fischer and Schmelzer, though not all of them are of equal interest. These 1981, originally L'Oiseau-Lyre, performances are on period instruments and those unresponsive to the razor-edged strings of that period will probably find the sound unpleasing. The playing is often a bit heavy-handed too, but those intrigued by this set have no current alternative and the recording is very good indeed.

Missa in labore requies

🔑 Ⓑ * HM HMA 1951667. Soloists, Cantus Cölln, Concerto Palatino, Junghänel (with Antonio BERTALI: Sonata a 13; Sonata Sancti Placidi) – BIBER: Litaniae de Sancto Josepho; Sonatas ***

Georg Muffat and Heinrich Biber had much in common. Not only did they work cordially together in Salzburg between 1678 and 1690, when Muffat was court organist, but they died in the same year, 1704. Moreover, Muffat's settings for large forces, vocal and instrumental, followed very much Biber's Salzburg tradition. Little of his music survives, but the Missa in labore requies shows its very high quality, especially the closing Agnus Dei. The performance also interpolates Biber's Sonata Fidicinium sacro-profanum and two sonatas by another contemporary composer, Antonio Bertali (1605–69). The performance here is of the highest quality and the recording admirably spacious. Full texts and translations are included, plus good documentation, making this reissue a very real bargain.

MUNDY, William (c. 1529–c. 1591)

Vox Patris caelestis

🔑 Ⓜ  Gimell (ADD) Gimse 401 Tallis Scholars, Phillips – ALLEGRI: Miserere; PALESTRINA: Missa Papae Marcelli ***

Mundy's Vox Patris caelestis was written during the short reign of Queen Mary (1553–8). The work is structured in nine sections in groups of three, the last of each group being climactic and featuring the whole choir, with solo embroidery. Yet the music flows continuously, like a great river, and the complex vocal writing creates the most spectacular effects, with the trebles soaring up and shining out over the underlying cantilena. The Tallis Scholars give an account which balances linear clarity with considerable power. The recording is first class and the digital remastering for CD improves the focus further.

MUSGRAVE, Thea (born 1928)

(i) Concerto for Orchestra; (ii) Clarinet Concerto; (iii) Horn Concerto; (iv; v) Excursions: 8 Duets for piano, four hands; (iv) Monologue for piano solo

 Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 253. (i) SNO, Gibson; (ii) de Peyer, LSO, Del Mar; (iii) Tuckwell, SNO, composer; (iv) composer (piano); (v) with Williamson

An impressive collection to represent a major but neglected composer, Scottish-born but resident in the USA. The Concerto for Orchestra (its five sections impressively interlinked), like the Horn Concerto, is among Thea Musgrave's most vital and original works. The work for horn has a spatial concept as part of its construction. The orchestral brass form a concertante group within the orchestra, with the percussion spread round the back. At one stage the trumpets take up antiphonal positions on either side of the orchestra, while the orchestral horns move out into the hall, strategically placed so as to surround the soloist. All this is vividly captured by the recording engineers. The Clarinet Concerto is peripatetic, the soloist (for clear artistic and sonic reasons) moving about the orchestra from one group of instruments to another. The tonal results are superbly caught here in wide-spanning stereo, and Gervase de Peyer, the dedicated soloist, gives a stunning performance, helped by an excellent accompaniment from his former colleagues in the LSO under Del Mar. The Monologue for solo piano, an early 12-note experimental piece, could not be more different from the exuberantly witty Excursions, full of charm, with titles like The Sunday Driver, The Drunken Driver, The Road Hog and the final Backseat Driver. The performance from the composer and Malcolm Williamson is most infectiously winning.

MUSSORGSKY, Modest
(1839–81)

The Capture of Kars (Triumphal March); St John's Night on the Bare Mountain (original score); Scherzo in B flat; Khovanshchina: Prelude to Act I; (i) Introduction to Act IV; The Destruction of Sennacherib; (i; ii) Joshua; (i) Oedipus in Athens: Temple Chorus; Salammbô: Priestesses' Chorus (operatic excerpts all orch. Rimsky-Korsakov)

🔑 Ⓜ  RCA (ADD) 09026 61354-2. (i) L. Symphony Ch.; (ii) Zehava Gal; LSO, Abbado

It is particularly good to have so vital and pungent an account of the original version of Night on the Bare Mountain, different in all but its basic material from the Rimsky-Korsakov arrangement. Mussorgsky's scoring is so original and imaginative that the ear is readily held. Best of all are the four choral pieces; even when they are early and atypical (Oedipus in Athens, for example), they are immediately attractive and very Russian in feeling, and they include such evocative pieces as the Chorus of Priestesses (intoning over a pedal bass) from a projected opera on Flaubert's novel. The recording is first rate, and this is one of the most attractive Mussorgsky records in the catalogue.

Night on the Bare Mountain; St John's Night on the Bare Mountain (original score); Pictures at an Exhibition (orch. Ravel); Khovanshchina: Golitsïn's Departure; Sorochinsky Fair: Gopak

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.555924. Nat. SO of Ukraine, Kuchar

It was an imaginative idea to record both Mussorgsky's original score – St John's Night on the Bare Mountain – alongside Rimsky's finished orchestral tone-poem, for in most respects they are entirely different works. For Theodor Kuchar, the far more integrated Rimsky-Korsakov piece is the finer work overall. With a superbly rasping opening from the heavy brass, Kuchar demonstrates its malignant force, deftly amalgamating Rimsky's interpolated, very Russian, brass fanfares, then producing a serenely peaceful close, with lovely playing from the strings and woodwind. St John's Night begins in a comparable atmosphere of malevolence, but the witches' jamboree which follows is bizarrely grotesque rather than evil. Yet Kuchar sustains the tension through the composer's weird sequential repetitions before the brief, unearthly coda, which of course is without Rimsky's radiant apotheosis.

Mussorgsky's jolliest Russian dance, the Sorochinsky 'Gopak', is engagingly spirited, to be followed by a moving performance of the darkly mournful orchestral description of Prince Golitsïn's exile from Khovanshchina. Ravel's incomparable orchestration of Pictures at an Exhibition then proves an excitingly vivid showpiece for this superb Russian orchestra. The percussion really make their mark in The Hut on Fowls' Legs, and the bass drum adds dramatic impact, both here and in the triumphant climax of the closing Great Gate of Kiev, which is thrillingly expansive, with Kuchar broadening the final statement of the great chorale to produce a frisson of weighty spectacle, helped by the demonstration sound-quality. An outstanding disc in every way which is strongly recommendable, quite irrespective of its modest price.

Night on the Bare Mountain (arr. Rimsky-Korsakov); Pictures at an Exhibition (orch. Ravel)

🔑 Ⓜ * RCA SACD (ADD) 82876 61394-2. Chicago SO, Reiner (with TCHAIKOVSKY: Marche slave; Marche miniature; BORODIN: Polovstian March; KABALEVSKY: Colas Breugnon Overture; GLINKA: Ruslan and Ludmilla Overture ***)

Reiner's 1957 Pictures is another demonstration of vintage stereo using simple microphone techniques to achieve a natural concert-hall ambience. The sound-balance is full and atmospheric, and Reiner's approach is evocative to match.

The final climax of The Great Gate of Kiev is massively effective. The Chicago brass is again very telling in Night on the Bare Mountain, made two years later, a performance that is just as strongly characterized. The rest of the orchestral items go splendidly, with the sparkling Colas Breugnon Overture one of the highlights. The charming Marche miniature is played with much delicacy, and there is no lack of energy in the Ruslan and Ludmilla Overture, with its superbly pointed strings and crisp brass. Those with SACD playback facilities will find even greater warmth and spread of sound.

(i) Night on the Bare Mountain (arr. Rimsky-Korsakov); Pictures at an Exhibition (arr. Funtek); (ii) Songs & Dances of Death (arr. Aho)

 BIS CD 325. (i) Finnish RSO, Segerstam; (ii) Järvi, with Talvela

This CD offers an orchestration by Leo Funtek, made in the same year as Ravel's (1922). The use of a cor anglais in The Old Castle mirrors Stokowski, while the soft-grained wind scoring makes the portrait of Samuel Goldenberg and Schmuyle more sympathetic, if also blander. The performances by the Finnish Radio Orchestra under Leif Segerstam both of this and of the familiar Rimsky Night on the Bare Mountain are spontaneously presented and very well recorded. The extra item is no less valuable: an intense, darkly Russian account of the Songs and Dances of Death from Martti Talvela with the orchestral accompaniment plangently scored by Kalevi Aho.

Night on the Bare Mountain; Pictures at an Exhibition; Khovanshchina, Act IV: Entr'acte; Boris Godunov: Symphonic Synthesis (all arr. and orch. Stokowski)

✿ (BB)  Naxos 8.557645. Bournemouth SO, Serebrier (with STOKOWSKI: Slavic Christmas Music. TCHAIKOVSKY: Solitude; Humoresque ***)

This Naxos collection of Stokowski's flamboyant arrangements of Mussorgsky at budget price offers outstanding performances by the Bournemouth Symphony Orchestra, brilliantly recorded in sound if anything even more spectacular than on rival discs. Though Stokowski's arrangement of Pictures at an Exhibition is less refined than that of Ravel, with its weighty brass it is certainly more Russian. The most serious shortcoming is Stokowski's omission of two of the movements, Tuileries and The Market Place at Limoges, made on the grounds that they are too French. The atmospheric qualities of the Boris Godunov symphonic synthesis also come over superbly, starting with a hauntingly rarefied bassoon solo, even if the recording catches the clicking of the keys. The mystery of the chimes in the Coronation Scene as well as the Death Scene are most evocative, and in Night on the Bare Mountain the weight of the arrangement comes over well, and the Khovanshchina Entr'acte, too, has impressive weight and clarity. Among the extra items, the Tchaikovsky song, Solitude, explores an astonishingly wide emotional range within a tiny span, and the jolly Humoresque is a piano piece that Stravinsky memorably used in his ballet The Fairy's Kiss. The baldly effective Slavic Christmas Music, attributed to Stokowski himself, is based not just on a Christmas hymn but on Ippolitov-Ivanov's In a Manger. Altogether a treasurable collection, well worth its modest cost.

Pictures at an Exhibition (orch. Ravel)

🔑 Ⓜ * DG (ADD) 447 426-2. BPO, Karajan – DEBUSSY: La Mer; RAVEL: Boléro ****

🔑 Ⓑ * Sony (ADD) SBK 48162. Cleveland O, Szell – KODÁLY: Háry János Suite; PROKOFIEV: Lieutenant Kijé Suite ****

🔑 Ⓜ * RCA (ADD) 09026 61401-2. Chicago SO, Reiner – RESPIGHI: Fountains of Rome; Pines of Rome ✿ ****

 DG Gold 439 013-2. BPO, Karajan – RAVEL: Boléro, etc. ***

((*)) BBC mono BBCL 4023-2. Philh. O, Giulini – TCHAIKOVSKY: Symphony 6 ((*))

Pictures at an Exhibition (orch. Ravel); Khovanshchina: Prelude

Ⓜ (*) Van. (ADD) Surround Sound SACD ATMCD 1504. New Philh. O, Mackerras

Among the many fine versions of Mussorgsky's Pictures on CD, Karajan's 1966 record stands out. It is undoubtedly a great performance, tingling with electricity from the opening Promenade to the spaciously conceived finale, The Great Gate of Kiev, which has real splendour. The remastered analogue recording still sounds marvellous, and this reissue, in DG's 'Originals' series of legendary recordings, includes a uniquely evocative performance of Debussy's La Mer as well as a very exciting account of Ravel's Boléro.

Szell's 1963 Cleveland performance also remains among the greatest of all recordings of Ravel's vividly inspired orchestration. Even if the recording has a somewhat less expansive dynamic-range, the character of each portrait is firmly drawn with vivid strokes of orchestral colour. The portrayal of Goldenberg and Schmuyle brings superbly full articulation from the lower strings, and Baba-Yaga makes the most incisive impact. Whether in the cheeping and chattering of the unhatched chicks, the bravura swirl of the Limoges Market, or the dignified grandiloquence of that final great gateway of Kiev, the controlled brilliance of the recording projects everything with extraordinary vividness.

With the advantage of the rich acoustics of Symphony Hall, the RCA sound-balance of Reiner's 1957 Chicago performance is highly atmospheric, if less sharply focused. The finale climax of The Great Gate of Kiev shows the concentration of the playing. The remastering is fully worthy, and there is excellent documentation.

Karajan's 1986 recording is one of the most impressive of DG's digital recordings. The tangibility of the sound is remarkable, with the opening brass Promenade and the massed strings in Samuel Goldenberg and Schmuyle notable in their naturalness of sonority. With superb Berlin Philharmonic playing and the weight of the climaxes contrasting with the wit of Tuileries and the exhilaration of The Market at Limoges, this is certainly now among the top recommendations.

The 1973 Vanguard recording was made on eight tracks in Surround Sound, but it is possible to balance the sound to get a forward orchestral placement with the percussion behind, including a spectacular bass drum which can make you jump. Many will enjoy being enveloped by the orchestra, and Mackerras certainly paints a characteristically vivid set of pictures, obviously enhanced by the new technology. The orchestral playing does not bring the ultimate in refinement but has ample verve and colour, and the remaining pictures produce some very dramatic brass playing, even if the final climax is not as overwhelming as in the very finest versions. The Khovanshchina Prelude is well played but is not as evocative as the versions with Szell or Abbado.

Above all, Ozawa shows his feeling for orchestral colour in his undoubtedly successful version. Moreover, the orchestra is on top form; yet the virtuosity is always put to the service of the music's pictorialism and atmosphere. Ozawa does not force the pace or make unnecessary underlining; he lets the work unfold naturally, though with excellent incidental detail, and the climax of The Great Gate of Kiev has all the spectacle you could want. The current transfer is first class and the 1967 recording has plenty of atmosphere and a natural focus.

Though the initial impact of the dry mono sound of 1961 is disconcerting in Giulini's characterful BBC version, the bite and impact is intensified, so that in such a movement as The Hut on Fowl's Legs one even begins to think of this as a precursor of the Rite of Spring. The fast, light articulation of Limoges is very exciting, and the Catacombs brass fiercely sepulchral. Solo playing is immaculate too, despite the lack of bloom, and the closing Great Gate of Kiev makes a spectacularly spacious impact, with a fine contribution from the tam-tam. A generous coupling.

Pictures at an Exhibition (incomplete; orch. Ravel)

(BB) ((*)) Naxos mono 8. 110105. Boston SO, Koussevitzky – BARTÓK: Concerto for Orchestra ()

Koussevitzky's 1943 performance challenges his players to the very limit, as in the hectic account of the Tuileries movement, though, sadly, Koussevitzky omits the two most evocative movements, the Old Castle and Bydlo (the Polish ox-cart), together with the Promenades that frame them.

(i) Pictures at an Exhibition (arr. Leonard for piano and orchestra); 3 Pictures from the Crimea (orch. Goehr); A Night on the Bare Mountain (arr. & orch. Rimsky-Korsakov); Scherzo in B flat (orch. Rimsky-Korsakov); From my Tears (orch. Kindler); Khovanshchina: Prelude (orch. Rimsky-Korsakov); Golitsin's Journey (orch. Stokowski); Sorochinsky Fair: Gopak (orch. Liadov)

Ⓜ  Cala CACD 1030. (i) Ungár; Philh. O, Simon

Lawrence Leonard's arrangement of Mussorgsky's Pictures for piano and orchestra is remarkably effective and very entertaining. The concertante format works admirably, especially powerful in Gnomus and The Hut on Fowl's Legs, charmingly depicting the Unhatched Chicks (a piquant mixture of keyboard and woodwind, spiced with xylophone). There are many added touches of colour. The other pieces are all well worth having, notably Rimsky's chimerical scoring (following the composer's orchestral sketch) of the Scherzo in B flat. The three Pictures from the Crimea are darkly nostalgic, and the lively Gopak, like the Khovanshchina excerpts (Stokowski's arrangement of Golitsin's Journey is sombrely characterful), is very welcome. All Geoffrey Simon's performances have plenty of life, and Tamás Ungár makes an exciting contribution and is fully equal to all the technical demands of the revised piano-part. The recording is warm, full and expansive, but not always sharply defined.

Pictures at an Exhibition (orch. Ellison; Gorchakov; Goehr; Naoumoff; Van Keulen; Ashkenazy; Simpson; Cailliet; Wood; Leonard; Funtek; Boyd; Ravel; Stokowski; Gamley)

 Warner 2564 61954-2. BBC SO & Ch., Slatkin – RESPIGHI: Pines of Rome **(*)

This is the most original orchestral version of Mussorgsky's picture gallery on record. Leonard Slatkin conceived the idea of performing the work at the Proms using orchestrations by 15 different composers, reserving Cum mortis in lingua mortua for Ravel's own dramatic scoring. Byrwec Ellison opens with tolling bells, unpredictable percussion and a galaxy of colours, following (in microcosm) the style of Britten's Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra. Sergey Gorchakov's Gnomus is starkly primitive, and Goehr's following Promenade is contrastingly gentle, leading to Emile Naoumoff's melancholy minstrel's song outside The Old Castle, unexpectedly given a piano obbligato, while Cailliet's Unhatched Chicks trill vociferously. From there on the scoring becomes more and more exotic and extrovert, and none more so than Ashkenazy's larger-than-life Bydlo, using full-throated unison horns, and Henry Wood's Goldenberg and Schmuyle, with a surprise flourish at the latter's appearance, followed by guttural, protesting trombones. Lawrence Leonard's following Promenade (omitted by Ravel) is in piano concertante format. We are already familiar with the outrageous hyperbole of Stokowski's Baba-Yaga, and its spectacle prepares the way for Douglas Gamley's over-the-top, very Russian Great Gate of Kiev, using full chorus and bells and, finally, the thundering Albert Hall organ. The result, expanded by the hall's resonant acoustics, is quite overwhelming.

(i) Pictures at an Exhibition (orch. Ravel); (ii) Pictures at an Exhibition (original piano version)

🔑 Ⓜ  Sony SMK 89615. (i) BPO, Giulini; (ii) Bronfman

Ⓝ  Danacord DACOCD 656. (i) Odense SO, Jan Wagner; (ii) Marshev

Giulini's account of the orchestral score can be considered among the best accounts of the 1990s. Recorded in the Jesus-Christus-Kirche, Berlin, the sound is rich and spacious, the orchestral playing superb. The reading has a pervading sense of nostalgia which haunts the delicate portrayal of The Old Castle and even makes the wheedling interchange between the two Polish Jews more sympathetic than usual. In the lighter pieces the scherzando element brings a sparkling contrast, with the unhatched chicks cheeping piquantly, and there is sonorous solemnity for the Catacombs sequence. A powerful and weighty Baba-Yaga, yet with the bizarre element retained in the subtle rhythmic pointing in the middle section, leads naturally to a majestic finale, with the Berlin brass full-bloodedly resplendent and the tam-tam flashing vividly at the climax.

Yefim Bronfman's account of the original piano score then matches Giulini's approach surprisingly closely. The Old Castle, beautifully graduated, is most poignant, there is strong characterization throughout and plenty of picaresque detail. Bronfman finds an added sense of fantasy in Baba-Yaga and the massive closing spectacle of The Great Gate at Kiev is viscerally thrilling, to give a genuine frisson when the piano recording is so full-bodied, and the playing so grand and powerful.

Very well recorded, this coupling of Mussorgsky's original piano version alongside the masterly Ravel orchestration is highly recommendable. Oleg Marshev is meticulous in following Mussorgsky's markings, as in Bydlo, the Polish Ox Cart, which is loud all the way through until the final diminuendo on the very last bars. It is no exaggeration to say that the subtlety of Ravel's markings greatly improves the work, making it more effective; and the Odense Symphony Orchestra are on their toes throughout the orchestral performance.

Night on the Bare Mountain (trans. Tchernov for piano)

🔑 ✿  Teldec 4509 96516-2. Berezovsky – BALAKIREV: Islamey ✿ ***

This remarkable transcription by Konstantin Tchernov sounds hardly less dazzling in Berezovksy's hands than the outstanding Islamey with which it is coupled. The engineers capture very good piano sound.

Pictures at an Exhibition (original piano version)

🔑 ✿ (BB) * Virgin 2 x 1 4 82055-2 (2). Pletnev – TCHAIKOVSKY: The Seasons; Sleeping Beauty: Suite; Pieces ✿ ****

Pictures at an Exhibition (piano version, ed. Horowitz)

🔑 (B) () RCA 2-CD mono 74321 84594-2 (2). Horowitz – (with CLEMENTI: Sonatas, Op. 14/3; Op. 34/2; Op. 47/2: Rondo ()) – SCRIABIN: Etudes; Preludes; Sonatas ()

There are remarkable effects of colour and of pedalling in Pletnev's performance, which is easily the most commanding to have appeared since Richter's and, one is tempted to say, a re-creation rather than a performance. Pletnev does not hesitate to modify the odd letter of the score in order to come closer to its spirit. The Ballet of the Unhatched Chicks has great wit and The Great Gate of Kiev is extraordinarily rich in colour. With its new couplings this is a truly outstanding reissue.

Horowitz's famous (1951) recording, made at a live performance at Carnegie Hall, is as thrilling as it is perceptive. Mussorgsky's darker colours are admirably caught and the lighter, scherzando evocations are dazzlingly articulated. In The Great Gate of Kiev Horowitz embellishes the texture to make the result even more spectacular. The performances of the Clementi Sonatas, also from the 1950s, are hardly less electrifying, and though the piano-sound is again shallow, the quality is a great improvement on their previous vinyl transfers.

VOCAL MUSIC

Songs

Song-cycles: (i) The Nursery; (ii) Songs and Dances of Death; (i) Sunless Songs: Darling Savishna; Hopak; King Saul; Lullaby; (ii) Mephistopheles' Song of the Flea; (i) Where are you, little star?; The wild winds blow

🔑 (M) () EMI mono 5 67993-2. Christoff, with (i) Labinsky; (ii) Fr. R. & TV O, Tzipine

Between 1955 and 1957 the great Bulgarian bass, Boris Christoff, recorded for EMI a pioneering set of the complete Mussorgsky songs, 63 of them. This well-filled disc in EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century' series offers a very well-chosen selection, including the three great Mussorgsky song-cycles: The Nursery (with Christoff, amazingly for a bass, imitating the sound of a child singing), Sunless and, greatest of all, the Songs and Dances of Death, using the orchestral arrangement of the accompaniment by Glazunov and Rimsky-Korsakov. The selection starts with the earliest of Mussorgsky's songs, Where are you, little star?, and includes the lovely Lullaby to words by Ostrovsky (with Christoff producing a seamless legato), the setting of Byron in translation, King Saul, and the most popular of all Mussorgsky songs, The Song of the Flea, also in orchestral form. Christoff is in superb voice throughout, with his dark bass perfectly focused and steady as a rock. The orchestral sound is thinner than that of the rest, but what matters is the vividness of the voice.

Songs and Dances of Death

 EMI DVD DVA 4901209. Vishnevskaya, Rostropovich – PROKOFIEV: Sinfonia concertante; SHOSTAKOVICH: Cello Concerto 1 ***

Vishnevskaya's classic performance with her husband at the piano was filmed in 1970, and it comes as a bonus for a stunning DVD of Rostropovich playing key cello works by Prokofiev and Shostakovich which were specially written for him.

Songs and Dances of Death (orch. Shostakovich)

 Warner 2564 62050-2. Hvorostovsky, St Petersburg PO, Temirkanov – RACHMANINOV: Symphonic Dances ***

Recorded live in the Albert Hall, Hvorostovsky's powerful and moving performances of these dark (but not depressing) songs, with their mixture of irony and grief, now clearly lead the field. Temirkanov's accompaniments are idiomatic and supportive, and the recording is both atmospheric and well balanced.

OPERA

Boris Godunov (complete DVD versions)

🔑 * Ph. DVD 075 089-9 (2). Lloyd, Borodina, Steblianko, Leiferkus, Kirov Op. Ch. & O, Gergiev (Producer: Andrei Tarkovsky, V/D: Humphrey Burton)

🔑  Ph. DVD 075 099-9 (6). As above – BORODIN: Prince Igor; GLINKA: Ruslan & Ludmilla

 Warner DVD 51011 1851-2. Nesterenko, Pyavko, Sinyavskaya, Kudryashov, Eizen, Bolshoi Theatre Ch. & O, Lazarev (Stage & Video Director: Irina Morozova)

In 1990 the Covent Garden production of Boris Godunov, directed by the Russian, Andre Tarkovsky, and rehearsed by Stephen Lawless, was adopted by the Mariinsky Theatre in St Petersburg. This two-disc DVD offers the resulting film, originally shown on BBC Television, a magnificent presentation of the opera in the edition prepared by David Lloyd-Jones using the original (1872) version of the score. Valery Gergiev conducts an outstanding Kirov Opera cast, joined in the title-role by Robert Lloyd from Covent Garden, giving one of his greatest performances ever, strong and resonant and movingly acted. It is astonishing how the different incidental parts are cast from strength with star singers, each rising superbly to the challenge of a major scene – Pimen, Varlaam, Rangoni and the Simpleton (who sings his pathetic solo twice – in the first scene of Act IV and at the end). Olga Borodina is magnificent as Marina in the Polish scenes opposite the powerful Grigory of Alexei Steblianko, and even such a small part as Feodor, Boris's young son, is taken with passionate intensity by a then-rising star, Larissa Diadkova. Musically it would be hard to imagine a finer performance, even though the recording balance sometimes has voices too distant and unrelated to close-up pictures. Visually it is superb too, with the complex, episodic story told with extraordinary clarity, set on a simple but very grand stage, with a floor in false perspective adding to the grandeur. Costumes are authentic and often colourful, with Tarkovsky's often stylized production bringing unforgettable moments, as when Rangoni comes and sits centre-stage at the end of the love scene between Marina and Grigory, and turns to give the most sinister stare as the curtain falls. This DVD set is now included in an attractive package with two other classic productions (presumably at an attractive discount) to mark Valery Gergiev's 25th anniversary at the Kirov, and those who do not have these performances should take advantage of this. All three performances are outstanding.

Until the late 1960s, in the days of Christoff, the only Boris to be recorded (or to be seen at Covent Garden) was the edition by Rimsky-Korsakov. In recent years it has been driven from the stage in favour of Mussorgsky's original. As learned an authority as Professor Gerald Abraham was at pains to point out that the Rimsky version, recorded here, is also a masterpiece, and it is good to have it again in this 1987 staging. Nesterenko was one of the commanding exponents of the role and it is thrilling to see and hear his magisterial account. The other major roles, Vladislav Pyavko's Grigory, Tamara Sinyavskaya's Marina, Vladimir Kudryashov's Prince Shuisky and Arthur Eizen's Varlaam are pretty impressive, too. Nor are we let down by the orchestral playing under Alexander Lazarev. Of course Gergiev remains supreme, both in the DVD version of the Tarkovsky production and in the five-CD set of the 1869 and 1872 versions. However, this version of the alternative Rimsky-Korsakov score should be added to them. No booklet or notes.

Boris Godunov ((i) 1869 & (ii) 1872 versions) (CD version)

🔑 Ⓜ * Ph. 462 230-2 (5). (i) Putilin, Lutsuk, (ii) Borodina; Vaneev, Galusin; (i; ii) Ohotnikov, Kuznetsov, Trifonova, Bulycheva, Pluzhnikov, Akimov, Kirov Op. Ch. & O, Gergiev

It makes a fascinating contrast on CD in Gergiev's St Petersburg set (five discs for the price of three) to have the original (1869) version of seven scenes set against the 1872 revision with its amplification in the extra Polish Act and elsewhere. Gergiev's incisive, keenly dramatic readings bring out the differences very effectively, and the casting of Boris in each heightens that. In 1869 the character is more direct, more of a villain, less of a victim – reflected in Nikolai Putilin's virile and firm singing – where in the expanded (1872) portrait the character is more equivocal, more self-searching, clearly verging on madness, and there you have Vladimir Vaneev bringing out the element of thoughtfulness and mystery over a wider expressive range. The role of Grigory, the Pretender, brings alternative casting too, but it is only in the 1872 version that the character plays a full part, very well taken by the ringing and clear, very Russian-sounding tenor, Vladimir Galusin. The others make a first-rate team, individually strong and idiomatic, and all enhancing the drama, obviously experienced on stage. Outstanding are Olga Borodina as Marina and Konstantin Pluzhnikov as a sinister Shuisky. The sound is fresh and forward, with voices set in front of the orchestra, more powerful in wind and brass than in the strings. The Abbado set on Sony (see below) offers a more starry cast and a more spacious reading, often more warmly expressive, but the practical advantages of the Gergiev set make it even more recommendable.

Boris Godunov (original version; complete)

 Sony S3K 58977 (3). Kotcherga, Leiferkus, Larin, Lipovšek, Ramey, Nikolsky, Langridge, Slovak Philharmonic Ch., Bratislava, Tölz Boys' Ch., Berlin RSO, Abbado

Ⓜ (*) EMI (ADD) 0 90178-2 (3). Talvela, Gedda, Mróz, Kinasz, Haugland, Polish R. Ch. & Nat. RSO, Semkow

Claudio Abbado recorded Boris Godunov in its original version with speeds that regularly press ahead, and the urgency of the composer's inspiration is conveyed without reducing the epic scale of the work or its ominously dark colouring. Abbado inserts the beautiful scene in front of St Basil's at the start of Act IV, but then omits from the final Kromy Forest scene the episode about the Simpleton losing his kopek. Vocally, the performance centres on the glorious singing of Anatoly Kotcherga as Boris. Rarely has this music been sung with such firmness and beauty as here. Kotcherga may not have a weighty voice, but the darkly meditative depth of the performance is enhanced without loss of power. The other principal basses, Samuel Ramey as the monk, Pimen, and Gleb Nikolsky as Varlaam, are well contrasted, even if Ramey's voice sounds un-Slavonic. The tenor, Sergei Larin, sings with beauty and clarity up to the highest register as the Pretender, not least in the Polish Act, while Marjana Lipovšek is a formidably characterful Marina, if not quite as well focused as usual. Having Philip Langridge as Shuisky and Sergei Leiferkus as Rangoni reinforces the starry strength of the team. The sound is spacious, more atmospheric than usual in recordings made in the Philharmonie in Berlin, and allowing high dynamic contrasts, with the choral ensembles – so vital in this work – full and glowing.

The EMI version offers an analogue recording of 1977, but its warmth and richness go with a forward balance and a high transfer level. The voices have an extra bite, not least the firm, weighty bass of Martti Talvela as Boris or of Aage Haugland, magnificent as Varlaam. Nicolai Gedda is excellent as the Pretender, if not as free on top as Larin in the Abbado set. The other soloists, as well as the chorus, make up a formidable Polish team, with hardly a weak link. Bozena Kinasz as Marina is particularly impressive. Jerzy Semkow may not convey as much bite and beauty as Abbado, but in his rugged, measured way he conveys a full intensity at moments of high drama, helped by the firm, full sound. This now returns to the catalogue at mid-price, neatly packaged with booklet and synopsis. The full libretto and translation is available from www.theoperaseries.com at www.emiclassics.com

Boris Godunov (arr. Rimsky-Korsakov)

Ⓜ  Decca 475 7718 (3). Ghiaurov, Vishnevskaya, Spiess, Maslennikov, Talvela, V. Boys' Ch., Sofia R. Ch., V. State Op. Ch., VPO, Karajan

Ⓜ  EMI 5 67877-2 (3) [567881-2]. Christoff, Lear, Lanigan, Alexieva, Sofia Nat. Op. Ch., Paris Conservatoire O, Cluytens

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.1102424. Christoff, Gedda, Zareska, Bielecki, Borg, Lebedeva, Romanova, Pasternak, Russian Ch. of Paris; French Nat. R. O, Dobrowen

With Ghiaurov in the title-role, Karajan's superbly controlled Decca version, technically outstanding, came far nearer than previous recordings to conveying the rugged greatness of Mussorgsky's masterpiece. Only the Coronation Scene lacked something of the weight and momentum one ideally wants. Vishnevskaya was far less appealing than the lovely non-Slavonic Marina of Evelyn Lear on EMI, but overall this Decca set had much more to offer. This reissue, as one of Decca's Originals, comes with full text and translation.

The EMI set is chiefly valuable for the resonant contribution of Boris Christoff, for a generation unmatched in the role of Boris. Here he takes the part not only of the Tsar but of Pimen and Varlaam, relishing the contrast of those other, highly colourful bass roles. It is good that his glorious voice is so vividly caught on CD, but sadly the overall performance under Cluytens does not add up to the sum of its parts as the earlier, mono recording did.

It is good to welcome back the pioneering (1952) mono Boris in which the celebrated Christoff sang not only Boris himself but Varlaam and Pimen. He skilfully varies his colour in these roles, but also gives a commanding account of Boris which is a triumph in every respect, as is Dobrowen's direction – as vital and idiomatic as any version since. The youthful Nicolai Gedda is a magnificent Grigory and Eugenia Zareska is an unforgettable Marina. Kim Borg doubles as Shchelkalov and Rangoni. And there is more duplication of roles with Andrzej Bielecki as Prince Shuisky, Missail and Krushchov. The choral singing is very good and the French Radio Orchestra under Dobrowen sound as if they are all from Moscow. The set appeared briefly on EMI Références, but Mark Obert-Thorn's transfer is equally fine – if not finer.

Boris Godunov (original, 1869 version): excerpts: Coronation Scene; Varlaam's Song; Apartment Scene; St Basil Scene; Death Scene (sung in English)

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ  Chan. 3007. Tomlinson, Kale, Bayley, Rodgers, Best, Opera N. Ch., E. N. Philh. O, Daniel

This generous, 75-minute selection of excerpts from Boris Godunov is highly recommendable even when compared with current Russian versions of Mussorgsky's masterpiece. John Tomlinson has never been in finer voice on disc than here, with his dark bass-baritone perfectly focused. This is an exceptionally lyrical view of the self-tortured tsar, both dramatically powerful and warmly expressive, letting one appreciate the beauty of Mussorgsky's melodies. Tomlinson is helped by Paul Daniel's inspired direction and opulent recorded sound, with excellent support from singers in the vintage Opera North production, including Stuart Kale as Prince Shuisky, Clive Bayley as Varlaam, Joan Rodgers as Xenia and Matthew Best as Pimen. Anyone who supports the idea of opera sung in English should not miss this highly compelling disc.

Boris Godunov: Selected Scenes

Ⓜ () Cala mono CACD 0535. Rossi-Lemeni, San Francisco Ch. and SO, Stokowski – WAGNER: Parsifal: Good Friday Spell; Symphonic Synthesis of Act 3 ***

In December 1952 in San Francisco, Stokowski conducted a series of concert performances of highlights from Boris Godnov in the Rimsky-Korsakov version, and promptly recorded for RCA the same brilliantly chosen group of favourite passages. The result is spectacular, as Cala's superb CD transfer demonstrates. The sound is so full, vivid and immediate, with an impressive spread – not least in the Coronation Scene with its bells – that it is hard to believe it is in mono. Matching this, Stokowski's conducting inspires performances of the highest voltage, electrifying from first to last. Both the chorus and orchestra are incandescent, and the Russian-Italian bass, Nicola Rossi-Lemeni – then at the beginning of his career – sings with a firmness of focus that later deserted him, at least on disc. He is wonderfully characterful, not just as Boris, but in a wildly exciting account of Varlaam's Song. Well-coupled with selections from Act III of Parsifal, another opera specially dear to Stokowski.

Khovanshchina: Prelude

 BBC (ADD) BBCL 4123-2. Philh. O, Giulini – BRUCKNER: Symphony 7; FALLA: Three-Cornered Hat (excerpts) ***

In his live recording Giulini draws refined, evocative playing from the Philharmonia, an atmospheric supplement to the Bruckner Symphony, the main work.

Khovanshchina (complete; DVD versions)

🔑 * Arthaus DVD 100 310 (2). Ghiaurov, Atlantov, Marusin, Shaklovity; Burchuladze, Shemchuk, Slovak Phil. Ch., V. Boys' Ch.; V. State Op. Ch. & O, Abbado (Stage/Video Dir: Kirchner)

 Opus Arte DVD OA 0989 D (2). Ognovenko, Galouzine, Brubaker, Putilin, Vaneev, Zaremba, Ch. & O of Gran Teatre del Liceu, Boder

Khovanshchina (complete; CD versions)

🔑 * DG 429 758-2 (3). Lîpovšek, Burchuladze, Atlantov, Haugland, Borowska, Kotcherga, Popov, V. State Op. Ch. & O, Abbado

(BB) () Naxos 8.111124/26. Boris Freidkov, Ivan Nechayev, Mark Reizen, Vladimir Ulyanov, Sofya Preobrazhenskaya, Nina Serval, Kirov Ch. & O, Khaikin

This DVD recording was made at the same time as the DG three-CD set, namely in September 1989. There are some differences in cast: to name the most important, the late Aage Haugland who was Ivan Khovansky is sung (wonderfully, too) by Nicolai Ghiaurov, Vladimir Popov's Prince Golitsin is replaced by Yuri Marusin and the Marfa of Marjana Lipovšek by Ludmila Shemchuk. Otherwise the performance does not differ from the rightly admired CD set. Abbado's version is essentially the Shostakovich version (based on Pavel Lamm's 1929 edition) though he lightens some of the scoring and discards the triumphant ending in Act V with the return of the Preobrazhensky March in favour of the finale prepared by Stravinsky. Rimsky-Korsakov's marvellous orchestration is rejected as too sumptuous these days, and his corrections of Mussorgsky's harmony are seen as too academically correct. And with the beautiful, tragic music of Abbado's ending the strength and dignity of the Old Believers is reinforced. However, Abbado, who has for so long been Mussorgsky's most eloquent champion among Western conductors of his generation, is electrifying. There is an intensity here, and a mastery both of pace and of climax. The playing of the Vienna orchestra is exquisite in the quieter episodes and sumptuous in tone throughout. The recording for Abbado, too, is superbly balanced and defined. Visually the production is good to look at, and the camera is expertly directed and always where the viewer wants it. This is a mandatory choice for all lovers of Russian opera.

The recent Liceu DVD version of the Shostakovich score also has a great deal going for it. First of all, Vladimir Ognovenko as Prince Ivan Khovansky and Vladimir Galouzine as his son are both impressive actor-singers and Vladimir Vaneev's Dosifey almost steals the show. What is particularly striking (and perhaps surprisingly so) is the choral singing, which is not lacking in the black tone and strength of Slavonic rivals. Stein Winge's production is intelligent and unobtrusive and the camera-work is excellent: the eye is always where the ear wants it to be. Elena Zaremba's finely characterized Marfa is a little tarnished by a Slav wobble and the Galitzin of Robert Brubaker does not have quite the authority the role calls for.

Abbado's live CD recording also brings the most vivid account of this epic Russian opera yet on CD. Lipovšek's glorious singing as Marfa, the Old Believer with whom one most closely identifies, sets the seal on the whole performance. Aage Haugland is a rock-like Ivan Khovansky and, though Burchuladze is no longer as steady of tone as he was, he makes a noble Dosifey. Stage noises sometimes intrude and voices are sometimes set back, but this remains a magnificent achievement.

You won't hear anything as remarkable as this Naxos Khovanshchina again. First of all, we have the Rimsky-Korsakov version. Secondly, we have an incomparable cast, with Mark Reizen's Dosifey and Sofya Preobrazhenskaya as Marfa. The 1946 recording sounds surprisingly good in Ward Marston's remarkable transfer and the third CD has room for 13 songs, some from the old Mussorgsky Song Society, with Vladimir Rosing. Do not hesitate.

NICOLAI, Carl Otto (1810–49)

The Merry Wives of Windsor

Ⓝ (*) CPO 777 317-2 (2). Banse, Korondi, Markert, Bothmer, Schmitt, Eiche, Reiter, Bav. R. Ch., Munich R. O, Schirmer

There is so much to enjoy in the way of felicitous touches in Nicolai's score, it would be good to have a really recommendable recording. However, until Kubelik's Decca version returns to the catalogue, this will have to do. Recorded live from two performances in 2007 (with dialogue mercifully abridged), the cast is generally very good, with sopranos Juliane Banse and Anna Korondi both displaying excellent technique as well as personality. Alfred Reiter is equally characterful in the role of Falstaff, even if his voice does lack consistent beauty of tone. The chorus sing lustily and the sound is theatrical and vivid; and Schirmer conducts very well indeed. Curiously, the audience applause is heard after the overture and during the performance, but not at the end of the Acts, and this is a little disconcerting. Only a German libretto is printed, but a good synopsis in English is included.

NIELSEN, Carl (1865–1931)

(i) Aladdin Suite, Op. 54; (ii) 3 Motets, Op. 55; (i–iii) Springtime in Fünen

(BB)  Regis RRC 1134. (i) Odense SO, Vetö; (ii) Klint Little Muko University Ch., St Klemens School Children's Ch.; (iii) with Nielsen, von Binzer

Regis offers a well-played account of the engaging Aladdin Suite by the Odense Symphony Orchestra under Tamás Vetö, and the choral Springtime in Fünen, which is one of those enchanting pieces to which everyone responds when they hear it yet which is hardly ever performed outside Denmark. To make up the playing time Regis have now added the Three Motets, Op. 55. This disc is well worth its modest cost.

Clarinet Concerto, Op. 57

🔑  BIS SACD 1463. Fröst, Lahti SO, Vänskä – AHO: Clarinet Concerto ***

 Chan. 8618. Hilton, SNO, Bamert (with COPLAND: Concerto; LUTOSŁAWSKI: Dance Preludes ***)

Martin Fröst's account of Nielsen's fine Concerto, which has the advantage of optional surround sound, is probably the finest now available, given outstanding support by Osma Vänskä, as he successfully responds to the work's changing moods and colours. The coupling is a spectacularly unpredictable concerto by Aho, which is similarly given an outstanding performance and recording.

Janet Hilton gives a highly sympathetic account of the Nielsen Concerto, but it is characteristically soft-centred and mellower in its response to the work's more disturbing emotional undercurrents than Olle Schill's splendid account on BIS – see below. The Chandos recording is first class.

(i) Clarinet Concerto; (ii) Flute Concerto; (iii) Violin Concerto, Op. 33

 Chan. 8894. (i) Thomsen; (ii) Christiansen; (iii) Sjøgren; Danish RSO, Schønwandt

Niels Thomsen's powerfully intense account of the late Clarinet Concerto is completely gripping. Michael Schønwandt gives sensitive and imaginative support, both here and in the two companion works. Toke Lund Christiansen is hardly less successful in the Flute Concerto. Kim Sjøgren and Schønwandt give a penetrating and thoughtful account of the Violin Concerto; there is real depth here, thanks in no small measure to Schønwandt. The recording is first class.

(i) Clarinet Concerto; (ii) Flute Concerto; (iii) Violin Concerto. An Imaginary Journey to the Faeroe Islands; Helios Overture; Pan and Syrinx, Op. 49; Saga-drøm, Op. 39; Symphonic Rhapsody

 EMI Gemini (ADD) 3 81503-2 (2). (i) Stevennson; (ii) Lemmser; (iii) Tellefsen; Danish RSO, Blomstedt

Arve Tellefsen is a first-class soloist in the Violin Concerto and Kjell-Inge Stevennson is pretty stunning in the Clarinet Concerto. The charm and subtleties of the Flute Concerto are hardly less well realized by Franz Lemmser's nimble and sensitive account. Moreover, since the orchestra is Danish, the other works (such as the marvellous Pan and Syrinx and the atmospheric Helios Overture) are played with authentic accents. The collection also includes a novelty in the Symphonic Rhapsody, composed before the First Symphony. Throughout, the EMI engineers secure a natural sound-balance.

(i) Clarinet Concerto; (ii) Flute Concerto; (iii) Wind Quintet

* EMI 5 94421-2. (i) Meyer; (ii) Pahud; (i–ii) BPO, Rattle; (iii) Meyer, Pahud, Schweigert, Kelly, Baborák

Wonderfully elegant and masterly playing from all concerned in these live accounts. Technically immaculate and in terms of artistry highly intelligent and satisfying. If you want this collection of works, this is unsurpassed.

(i) Clarinet Concerto; (ii; iii) Violin Concerto; (ii; iv) Little Suite for Strings, Op. 1

Ⓑ  Warner Apex 0927 48311-2. (i) Kojo, Finnish RSO, Sarasate; (ii) Norwegian R. O, (iii) with Hannisdal, cond. Mikkelsen; (iv) cond. Rasilainen

A fine performance of the Clarinet Concerto from Kullervo Kojo, whose timbre has plenty of colour. He responds to the sudden bursts of bravura with aplomb and does not miss the work's gently musing, improvisatory quality, while Tim Feerce keeps the dramatic percussive interruptions in proportion, helped by a good balance. Henrik Hannisdal is equally at home in the Violin Concerto, and Ari Rasilainen's account of the Little Suite is most persuasive, and this inexpensive Apex disc is thoroughly recommendable.

(i) Clarinet Concerto; (ii) Symphony 3 (Sinfonia espansiva); Maskarade Overture

🔑 * BIS CD 321. (i) Schill; (ii) Raanoja, Skram; Gothenburg SO, Chung

Olle Schill too brings brilliance and insight to what is one of the most disturbing and masterly of all modern concertos. The young Korean conductor secures playing of great fire and enthusiasm from the Gothenburgers in the Third Symphony and he has vision and breadth – and at the same time no want of momentum. Two soloists singing a wordless vocal are called for in the pastoral slow movement, and their contribution is admirable. Myung-Whun Chung also gives a high-spirited and sparkling account of the Overture to Nielsen's comic opera, Maskarade. The BIS recording is marvellous, even by the high standards of this small company.

(i) Flute Concerto; Symphony 1; Rhapsody Overture (An Imaginary Journey to the Faeroe Islands)

🔑 * BIS CD 454. (i) Gallois; Gothenburg SO, Chung

The Flute Concerto is given a marvellous performance by Patrick Gallois, and Myung-Whun Chung and the Gothenburg Symphony Orchestra have an instinctive feeling for Nielsen. They play with commendable enthusiasm and warmth, and Chung shapes the Symphony with great sensitivity to detail and a convincing sense of the whole. The Rhapsody Overture (An Imaginary Journey to the Faeroe Islands) is not the composer at his strongest, but it has a highly imaginative opening.

(i) Flute Concerto; Symphony 5, Op. 50; Aladdin: Entrance March

Ⓜ  Hallé CDHLL 7502. Hallé O, Elder; (i) with Nicholson

Mark Elder has a good feeling for this glorious repertoire and brings to the Fifth Symphony the epic sweep this great score needs. Anthony Nicholson, too, proves an eloquent soloist in the Flute Concerto, and the Hallé respond in both scores with enthusiasm and discipline, and offer the Entrance March from Aladdin as a nice little bonus. Good sound.

Violin Concerto, Op. 33

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * Sony SMK 89748. Lin, Swedish RSO, Salonen – SIBELIUS: Violin Concerto ✿ ****

(i) Violin Concerto; Symphony 5

 BIS CD 370. (i) Kang; Gothenburg SO, Chung

Cho-Liang Lin brings as much authority to Nielsen's Concerto as he does to the Sibelius and he handles the numerous technical hurdles with breathtaking assurance. Salonen is supportive here and gets good playing from the Swedish Radio Symphony Orchestra.

Dong-Suk Kang too is more than equal to the technical demands of this concerto and is fully attuned to the Nordic sensibility. The Fifth Symphony is hardly less successful and is certainly one of the best-recorded versions now available. Myung-Whun Chung has a natural feeling for Nielsen's language and the first movement has real breadth.

Helios Overture, Op. 17; Pan and Syrinx, Op. 49; Rhapsody Overture: An Imaginary Journey to the Færoe Islands; Amor and the Poet; Maskarade: Overture & Dance of the Cockerels; Master Oluf Rides; Saul and David: Prelude; Snefrid; Willemoes: Prelude, Act III

 Dacapo SACD 6 220518. Danish Nat. RSO, Dausgaard

Thomas Dausgaard gets exemplary results from the Copenhagen orchestra and deserves all the acclaim which greeted this issue. There are some treasurable rarities here, such as Pan and Syrinx and the late Rhapsody Overture, along with the more often heard Helios and Maskarade Overtures.

Little Suite for Strings, Op. 1

(BB)  Warner Apex 0927 43075-2. Norwegian R. O, Rasilainen – GRIEG: Holberg Suite; STENHAMMAR: Serenade ✿ ***

An unaffected, well-played account of Nielsen's Op. 1 from Ari Rasilainen and the Norwegian Radio Orchestra, also available above coupled with the Clarinet and Violin Concertos, is here an attractive bonus for the Stenhammar Serenade.

Symphonies: 1, Op. 7; 2 (Four Temperaments), Op. 16; 3 (Espansiva), Op. 27; 4 (Inextinguishable), Op. 29; 5, Op. 50; 6 (Sinfonia semplice) (DVD version)

🔑  Dacapo DVD 2.110403-05. Danish Nat. RSO, Schønwandt

These are the same performances as those discussed below on CD, but this time with vision attached! The camera-work is tactful and restrained and it enhances our enjoyment of what are excellent performances, arguably the best since Blomstedt's San Francisco set – and perhaps even finer. There is a bonus CD in the form of a film by Karl Aage Rasmussen on Nielsen's life and music called The Light and the Darkness, which is well worth having.

Symphonies 1–6; (ii) Violin Concerto; (iii) Clarinet Concerto; (iv) Flute Concerto; (v) Rhapsody Overture, An Imaginary Journey to the Faeroe Islands; Little Suite, Op. 1; Maskarade: Overture; Prelude, Act II; Dance of the Cockerels; Pan and Syrinx; Sagadrøm; The Mother: Prelude; Saul and David: Prelude Act II; Aladdin Suite; Springtime on Fünen; (vi) 3 Motets

(BB)  Regis RRC 6002 (6). (i) LSO, Schmidt; (ii) Matsuyama, Odense SO, Wagner; (iii) McCaw, New Philh. O, Leppard; (iv) Stinton, SCO, Bedford; (v–vi) Odense SO, Vetö; (vi) Inga Nielsen, Von Binzer, Klint, Odense SO Ch.; University Ch., Woldike

This bargain-price collection presents the first accounts of all six symphonies to be recorded in stereo. They have long been out of circulation but are now also available separately (Nos. 1–3 & 6 on RRC 2046; 4 & 5 on RRC 1036) and as a separate set (RRC 3002), and have much going for them. Of the concertos (also available on RRC 1208), that for the Flute played by Jennifer Stinton and Clarinet by John McCaw have been newly and successfully remastered. The Violin Concerto with Saeka Matsuyama as soloist is remarkably fine, blending virtuosity and insight with refined musicianship. The Overtures, tone-poems and orchestral pieces were recorded by the Odense Orchestra under Tamás Vetö in 1988 and the performances are refreshingly idiomatic (RRC 1166). The Odense account of the adorable Springtime on Fünen and the Aladdin Suite comes off equally well. Mogens Wöldike brings special authority to the three late a cappella Motets whose première he conducted soon after their composition (RRC 1134). This is a most valuable set and although its six CDs are offered at a bargain price, they are also available separately.

Symphonies (i) 1–2; (i; ii) 3; (iii) 4; (i) 5; (iii) 6; (i; iv) Clarinet Concerto; (i; v) Flute Concerto; (i; vi) Violin Concerto

Ⓜ  BIS CD 614/6 (4). Gothenburg SO; (i) Chung; (ii) with Raanoja, Skram; (iii) Järvi; (iv) with Schill; (v) Gallois; (vi) Kang

Symphonies 1–2; (i) 3; (ii) Aladdin (suite); Maskarade Overture

🔑 Ⓑ * Double Decca 460 985-2 (2). San Francisco SO, Blomstedt; (i) with Kromm, McMillan; (ii) San Francisco SO Ch.

(i) Symphonies 4–6; (ii) Little Suite; (ii; iii) Hymnus amoris, Op. 12

🔑 Ⓑ * Double Decca 460 988-2 (2). (i) San Francisco SO, Blomstedt; (ii) Danish Nat. RSO, Schirmer; (iii) with Bonney, Pedersen, Mark Ainsley, M. & B. Hansen, Danish Nat. R. Ch., Copenhagen Boys' Ch.

Symphonies 1–6

Ⓑ  RCA 74321 20290-2 (3). Royal Danish O, Berglund (with soloists in 3)

(BB) (*) Regis (ADD) RRC 3002 (3). LSO, Schmidt

Herbert Blomstedt's complete Decca set of the symphonies is pretty well self-recommending. All six performances are among the finest available. The fill-ups are also very recommendable. Blomstedt is an eminently reliable guide to the Aladdin Suite. Ulf Schirmer, too, shows a natural affinity for Nielsen. On the second of the two Doubles, he gives us

Nielsen's early cantata, Hymnus amoris, one of his warmest and most open-hearted scores, and there is also a persuasive account of Nielsen's first published opus, the endearing Little Suite for Strings. To put it briefly, this remains the best all-round modern set of the symphonies and can be purchased with confidence.

Myung-Whun Chung's accounts of the First and Second Symphonies can also hold their own against the best, and his version of the Sinfonia espansiva is one of the very best – and can be recommended alongside Blomstedt. The concertos are all excellent – some may even prefer them to the rival collection on Chandos. The package as a whole with four records for the price of three is eminently competitive.

Berglund's set with the Royal Danish Orchestra was recorded between 1987 and 1989. The ever-fresh First Symphony is given a thoroughly straightforward account and the Sinfonia espansiva (No. 3) is perhaps the finest of his cycle. His two soloists, though unnamed, are very good and the general architecture of the work is well conveyed. The Fourth (Inextinguishable) is more problematic. Berglund tends to be impatient to move things on, particularly in the closing paragraphs. The Fifth opens with a strong sense of atmosphere and the second movement's complex structure is well controlled and satisfyingly resolved. In the Sinfonia semplice (No. 6) Berglund again proves a perceptive guide. Here as elsewhere, the playing of the Royal Danish Orchestra is beautifully prepared and full of vitality and the RCA engineers produce a recording of splendid body and presence.

Symphonies 1 in G min., Op. 7; 2 in B min. (Four Temperaments), Op. 16

 Chan. 8880. RSNO, Thomson

Strong, vigorous accounts of both symphonies from the Royal Scottish Orchestra under Bryden Thomson, with a particularly well-characterized reading of The Four Temperaments. The second movement is perhaps a shade too brisk, but in most respects these performances are difficult to fault.

Symphonies 1; 6 (Sinfonia semplice)

 Dacapo 8.224169. Danish Nat. RSO, Schønwandt

 BIS CD 1079. BBC Scottish SO, Vänskä

(BB)  Naxos 8.550826. Nat. SO of Ireland, Leaper

Michael Schønwandt's account of the Sixth Symphony shows a good grasp of structure, and in the inspired first movement he is particularly successful in conveying its atmosphere and sense of mystery. The First is sound and well proportioned, but does not carry all before it on an irresistible forward current. The First is noteworthy, but the Sixth is now a first recommendation.

Osmo Vänskä's*First Symphony* comes up fresh, though some expressive point-making does inhibit the onward flow in the first movement. The slow movement, perhaps, also needs to move forward a little more. The Sixth Symphony, in intensity and freshness of approach, makes a real challenge to Schønwandt. The BBC Scottish Symphony Orchestra give keenly responsive playing in all departments.

Very good performances indeed of Nielsen's first and last symphonies from Adrian Leaper and the National Symphony Orchestra of Ireland. The sound is exceptionally well balanced, with exemplary detail and good perspective. The playing is well prepared, full of vitality, phrasing is always intelligent and the Naxos disc remains very good value for money.

Symphony 2 (Four Temperaments); Aladdin Suite

🔑  BIS CD 247. Gothenburg SO, Chung

Symphonies 2 (Four Temperaments); (i) 3 (Sinfonia espansiva)

(BB)  Naxos 8.550825. Nat. SO of Ireland, Leaper

 Dacapo 8.224126. Danish Nat. SO, Schønwandt; (i) with Elming

Symphonies 2 (Four Temperaments); 5

 Classico CD296. RLPO, Bostock

Myung-Whun Chung's account of the Second Symphony is among the best, while the Aladdin Suite is particularly successful. The Gothenburg Symphony Orchestra prove a spirited and responsive body of players. The recording is impressive, too, and can be recommended with enthusiasm.

Adrian Leaper gets vibrant and involved playing from the Dublin orchestra in The Four Temperaments, which is as good as any in the catalogue (save for the Jensen), and the Espansiva is well paced, with tempi well judged throughout. Not necessarily a first choice but highly competitive.

Schønwandt gets very cultured playing from his fine orchestra, and judges tempi to excellent effect. There is breadth and nobility in The Four Temperaments and his account of the Espansiva is equally well paced. Its attractions are greatly enhanced by the fine singing of both soloists. This can hold its own with the best.

Bostock's account of The Four Temperaments has tremendous character. In the Fifth, he really inspires his players, who convey enthusiasm and freshness and, though the playing has some rough edges, it more than compensates in fire and intensity.

(i) Symphonies 3 (Sinfonia espansiva); (ii) 5

🔑  Chan. 9067. (i) Bott, Roberts; RSO, Thomson

Bryden Thomson's chosen tempi in the Sinfonia espansiva are just right, particularly in the finale. In the slow movement Catherine Bott and Stephen Roberts are excellent, and the performance has a refreshing directness that is most likeable. The Fifth Symphony is equally committed and satisfying. The recordings are very good indeed.

Symphony 4 (Inextinguishable); Pan and Syrinx

(B)  EMI 5 03428-2. CBSO, Rattle – SIBELIUS: Symphony 5 ***

Symphony 4 (Inextinguishable); Amor og digteren (Cupid and the Poet): extracts; Symphonic Rhapsody; (i) Genrebillede (Genre Picture), Op. 6/1; Ariel's Song; Hjemlige Jul

 Classico CD298. RLPO, Bostock; (i) Lund

Simon Rattle's version of the Inextinguishable dates from 1981 and is very fine indeed; it deserves a strong recommendation, particularly given that it comes with an altogether outstanding account of Pan and Syrinx, and the recording is very good too.

In the Fourth Symphony Douglas Bostock's reading has tremendous character. Bostock includes the early Symphonic Rhapsody (1888), as well as various songs, the Overture and four new excerpts from the incidental music to Amor og digteren. The orchestral version of the Genrebillede (Genre Picture) is also new to the catalogue. Although the Fourth Symphony is not a first recommendation, it is certainly among the most fiery and committed accounts to have appeared in recent times. Good, though not outstanding sound.

Symphony 5, Op. 50

((*)) BBC Legends mono BBCL 4191-2. NPO, Horenstein (with ROSSINI: Semiramide Overture) – MAHLER: Symphony 6 **(*)

Horenstein had a close relationship with the Fifth Symphony. He prepared the orchestra for the very first performance outside Denmark, in Frankfurt under Furtwängler. The broadcast was made only a year before his death and, after Jensen, ranks among the finest on record.

Symphony 6 (Sinfonia semplice)

 BBC mono BBCL 4059-2. NPO, Stokowski – GABRIELI: Sonata pian e forte; LISZT: Mephisto Waltz 1; TIPPETT: Concerto for Double String Orchestra ***

Although Leopold Stokowski conducted the Sixth Symphony in Copenhagen, he never recorded any of the symphonies commercially. The first movement comes off marvellously, not that its companions fare less well. Meticulous playing, expertly prepared and thought through, which leaves one regretting that Stokowski never recorded the Fifth. The sound is very good and balanced beautifully.

CHAMBER MUSIC

(i) Canto serioso for Horn & Piano; Fantasy Piece for Clarinet & Piano (1881); Fantasy Pieces for Oboe & Piano; Moderen: excerpts; (ii) Piano Trio, Op. 2; (i) Serenata in Vano; Wind Quintet, Op. 43

 Dacapo 8.226064. (i) Diamant Ensemblet; (ii) Trio Ondine

This anthology of wind music includes two rarities, the Fantasy Piece for Clarinet and Piano and the Piano Trio in G major, both very early pieces. The Wind Quintet will be the main attraction however, and this expert performance is as well characterized as anything in the catalogue, and the recording is very lifelike and immediate.

String Quartets 1 in G min., Op. 13; 2 in F min., Op. 5

(BB)  Naxos 8.553908. Oslo Qt

String Quartets 3 in E flat, Op. 14; 4 in F, Op. 44

(BB)  Naxos 8.553907. Oslo Qt

String Quartets 1 in G min., Op. 13; 4 in F, Op. 44; (i) String Quintet in G

 Dacapo SACD 6.220521. Young Danish String Qt, (i) with Frederiksen

String Quartets 1–4; (i) String Quintet in G (1888); (ii) Andante lamentoso (At the Bier of a Young Artist) (1910)

 BIS CD 503/4. Kontra Qt; (i) Naegele; (ii) Johansson

String Quartets 1–4; 5 Quartet Movements, FS2

 Kontrapunkt 32150-1(2). Danish Qt

The G major String Quintet with second viola is an early work. The F major Quartet comes from 1906. These are all delightful pieces and it is astonishing that they have not entered the repertoire of international quartets. Good playing from the Young Danish String Quartet, and most realistic SACD recording.

The performances by the Oslo Quartet are spirited, sensitive and very alive. There is a touch of fierceness in the recording quality (they are rather closely balanced) but artistically they are a first recommendation. They also enjoy a hefty price advantage over their Danish rivals.

The Danish Quartet are sensitive to the shape of the phrase, they produce a wide dynamic range, including really soft pianissimo tone when required. They are not always the last word in polish, but everything they do is musical, which makes one forgive the occasional rough edge and the somewhat dry quality and rather close balance of the recording. The set also includes five short movements that Nielsen wrote in his late teens and early twenties.

There is an ardour and temperament to the playing by the Kontra Quartet, which most listeners will find very persuasive. In addition we are given the finest account yet recorded of the G major String Quintet, where they are joined by the American violist Philipp Naegele, and the only current account of the Andante lamentoso (At the Bier of a Young Artist) in its chamber form. The BIS recordings, made in the Malmö Concert Hall, have plenty of presence and clarity, and are rather forwardly (but not unpleasingly) balanced.

String Quintet in G (1888), FS5

 Chan. 9258. ASMF Ens. – SVENDSEN: Octet ***

The String Quintet in G major is very well fashioned and owes more to Svendsen, under whose baton the composer was to play, than to his teacher, Gade. It makes both an agreeable and an appropriate companion for Svendsen's early and delightful Octet. It receives a three-star performance and recording.

Wind Quintet, Op. 43

 Nim. NI 5728. V. Quintet – HINDEMITH: Kleine Kammermusik; LIGETI: 6 Bagatelles ***

The Vienna Quintet give us a totally fresh and delightful account of the Nielsen, which proves, as do its two companions, a delight from start to finish. Beautifully cultured playing which reveals their affection for this piece. The recording, made in the Wiener Konzerthaus, is first class.

PIANO MUSIC

Complete piano music: Chaconne, Op. 32; Humoresque-Bagatelles, Op. 11; Piano music for Young and Old, Op. 53; 3 Piano Pieces, Op. 59; 5 Pieces, Op. 3; Symphonic Suite, Op. 8; Theme and Variations, Op. 40; Suite, Op. 45

Ⓝ 🗝  Hyp. CDA 67591/2 (2). Roscoe

Apart from Grieg, no Scandinavian composer has written for the piano with more individuality or understanding than Nielsen. Even though the early Op. 3 Pieces are Schumannesque, they speak with distinctive and touching personal accents, and all five are strong on both humour and character. Nielsen's greatest piano music is clustered into a period of four years (1916–20) with his final thoughts in the medium, the Three Pieces, Op. 59, of 1928 being composed in the immediate wake of the Clarinet Concerto, music that already breathes the air of other planets. The Suite is not only Nielsen's greatest keyboard work but arguably the mightiest ever written in Scandinavia. Martin Roscoe is right inside this music and guides us through its marvels with great subtlety and authority. Hyperion give him vivid and natural recorded sound and there are outstanding notes by Daniel Grimley.

Chaconne; Humoresque-bagatelles, Op. 11; Luciferian Suite; 5 Pieces, Op. 3; 3 Pieces, Op. 59

Ⓑ  Virgin 2x1 3 49913-2 (2). Andsnes – JANÁČEK: Sonata, etc. ***

Nielsen's piano music is unmissable! The early pieces have great charm, and the later Suite and the Three Pieces, Op. 59, have great substance. Leif Ove Andsnes has a natural feeling for and understanding of this music, while the recorded sound is vivid and lifelike.

VOCAL MUSIC

Songs, Op. 4; 6; 10; Bow Down Your Head Now; Bright are the Leaves in the Woods Now; Flower; Italian Pastoral Aria; Maskerade: Duet; Nature Study; Oft am I Glad; Oh, Strange Evening Breezes

 Dacapo 8.224218. Dam-Jensen, Lassen, Stærk

Nielsen's songs are strophic and fresh, touching and heartwarming. Inger Dam-Jensen captures their special character splendidly, and she has excellent support from the pianist Ulrich Stærk. Her choice ranges over the whole of Nielsen's career, from the Opp. 4 and 6 collections of 1891 through to the Italian Pastoral of 1931. There is also a short duet from the opera Maskerade in which she is partnered by Morten Ernst Lassen. Strongly recommended.

(i) Hymnus amoris; (ii) 3 Motets, Op. 55; The Sleep, Op. 18; (iii) Springtime in Fünen, Op. 43

🗝  Chan. 8853. Soloists; (i) Copenhagen Boys' Ch.; (ii–iii) Danish Nat. R. Ch.; (iii) Skt. Annai Gymnasium Children's Ch., Danish Nat. RSO; (i; iii) Segerstam; (ii) Parkman

Hymnus amoris is full of glorious music whose polyphony has a naturalness and freshness that it is difficult to resist, and which is generally well sung. The harsh dissonances of the middle Nightmare section of Søvnen ('The Sleep') still generate a powerful effect. Segerstam gets very good results in the enchanting Springtime in Fünen, and the solo singing is good. The Three Motets actually contain a Palestrina quotation. Generally excellent performances and fine recorded sound.

STAGE WORKS

Aladdin (complete incidental music), Op. 34

 Chan. 9135. Ejsing, Paevatalu, Danish R. Chamber Ch. & SO, Rozhdestvensky

Until now the Aladdin music has been known only from the 20-minute, seven-movement suite, but the complete score runs to four times its length. Some numbers are choral, and there are songs and a short piece for solo flute. Thirteen of the movements are designed to accompany spoken dialogue and, although not all of it is of equal musical interest and substance, most of it is characteristically Nielsenesque, and much of it is delightful. The two soloists, Mette Ejsing and Guido Paevatalu, are very good and the Danish Radio forces respond keenly to Rozhdestvensky's baton. This is not top-drawer Nielsen but, given such a persuasive performance and excellent recording, one is almost lulled into the belief that it is.

OPERA

Maskarade (complete)

 Dacapo (ADD) SACD 6.220507/8 (2). Hansen, Plesner, Landy, Johansen, Serensen, Bastian, Brodersen, Haugland, Danish R. Ch. & SO, Frandsen

Nielsen's second and last opera now comes realistically remastered on SACD and must be considered a triumphant success in its new format, with the rear speakers (used discreetly) adding to the atmospheric feeling. But it still sounds admirable through a normal stereo set-up. Frandsen's performance is distinguished by good – sometimes very good – singing and alert orchestral support. Above all, the sound is musical, the images are well located and firm, and the overall presentation is vivid. But the deleted Decca set remains first choice.

Saul and David (complete)

✿ * Chan. 8911/12. Haugland, Lindroos, Kiberg, Westi, Ch. & Danish Nat. RSO, Järvi

Nielsen's first opera is here sung in the original language, which is as important with Nielsen as it is with Janáček, and it has the merit of an outstanding Saul in Aage Haugland. The remainder of the cast is very strong and the powerful choral writing is well served by the Danish Radio Chorus. The opera abounds in wonderful and noble music, the ideas are fresh and full of originality. It convinces here in a way that it rarely has before, and the action is borne along on an almost symphonic current that disarms criticism. A marvellous set.

NØRGÅRD, Per (born 1932)

Symphonies 3 & 7

Ⓝ  Dacapo 6.220547. Danish Nat. Ch., R. SO, Dausgaard

Per Nørgård is the leading Danish composer of his generation. He was a pupil of Vagn Holmboe and made a name for himself with his First Symphony (Sinfonia austera). Although Holmboe's influence can be felt in his early twenties, he has developed a distinctive and arresting voice. The Third Symphony comes from 1972–5 and includes a setting of the Ave Maris stella, and lines from the Sonnets to Orpheus of Rilke. The Seventh Symphony (2004–6) was commissioned for the inauguration of the new Danish Radio Concert Hall in 2009. The performances here are very persuasive and the recording gives no possible cause for complaint.

NOVÁK, Vitězslav (1870–1949)

(i) Symphonic poems: About the Eternal Longing, Op. 33; In the Tatra Mountains, Op. 26; (ii) Moravian-Slovak Suite, Op. 32

Ⓜ (*) Sup. (ADD) 11 0682-2. (i) Czech PO; (ii) Brno State PO; Sejna

In the Tatras (1902), an opulent Straussian tone-poem, and About the Eternal Longing (1903–4) were inspired by unrequited love for a beautiful young pupil, Růžna. The Slovak Suite is a heavenly score. In the Church, the opening movement, has something in common with Mozart's Ave verum corpus, though more obviously romantic, and the closing At Night is beguilingly atmospheric. All three works here are also persuasively played on Supraphon. The recording of the two symphonic poems is atmospheric and clear but a bit pale in the more expansive tuttis; the suite has slightly more body and colour.

De profundis, Op. 67; Overture: Lady Godiva, Op. 41; Toman and the Wood Nymph, Op. 40

🔑 * Chan. 9821. BBC PO, Pešek

De profundis, Op. 67; Overture: Lady Godiva, Op. 41; South Bohemian Suite, Op. 64

() Sup. mono 11 1873-2 011. Brno State PO, Vogel

There is a lot of Dvořák in these pieces and a considerable debt to both Strauss and Mahler, plus an obvious awareness of French musical culture. Lady Godiva has something of the opulence of Strauss or the Elgar of In the South. It is full of dramatic fire, and its ideas are bold and orchestrated marvellously. Toman and the Wood Nymph has a lush orchestral palette and rich harmonic language. The dark and anguished De profundis was written in 1941 for a large orchestra with piano and organ. Stunning recorded sound from Chandos and admirably vivid and idiomatic playing from the BBC Philharmonic under Libor Pešek.

The classic Supraphon performances all come from 1960, except for the De profundis, which Jaroslav Vogel recorded two years later. The recordings still sound very good for their period and the performances are very fine. What attractive music it is, too.

Pan (symphonic poem), Op. 43

🔑  Marco Polo 8.223325. Slovak PO, Bílek

Novák's five-movement symphonic poem, Pan, has some lovely music in it, and there is a pantheistic sensibility here. It is beautifully played by the Slovak Philharmonic under Zdenek Bílek, and no less beautifully recorded.

Cello Sonata, Op. 68

* Sup. SU 3515-2. Barta, Cech – KODÁLY: Cello Sonatas ***

As a powerful supplement to Kodály's two cello masterpieces, Jiří Barta and Jan Cech offer one of Vitězslav Novák's late works, written in 1941 during the Nazi occupation of Czechoslovakia. Though it may not quite match the two Kodály works in emotional power, the darkness and intensity of the writing over the closely argued single movement – bringing together elements of a multi-movement sonata structure – are most impressive, particularly in a performance as commanding as this.

Trio quasi una balata

 Sup. SU 3810. Smetana Trio – SMETANA: Piano Trio; SUK: Elégie; Piano Trio ***

Novák described his Trio quasi una balata as a work of blackest Baudelairean pessimism, and though its themes may not be as striking as those in the other works on the disc, all but one of them darkly elegiac, it is most skilfully argued, completing an excellent programme, superbly played and very well recorded.

The Storm, Op. 42

🔑 Ⓜ * Sup. (ADD) SU 3088-2 211. Soloists, Czech PO Ch. & O, Košler

The Storm is a work of great beauty and imagination, scored with consummate mastery and showing a lyrical gift of a high order. It has warmth and genuine individuality; the idiom owes something to Richard Strauss as well as to the Czech tradition, and there is an impressive command of both melody and structure. The performance is fully worthy and has splendid dramatic feeling, helped by good soloists and a fine chorus. The recording, too, is admirably balanced, and there is depth, and plenty of weight, even if the soloists are rather too forward.

OBRECHT, Jacob (1457–1505)

Benedictus in Laude; Plainchant: Sub tuum Praesidium; Missa sub tuum Praesidium; Beata est Maria; Factor orbis; Mille quingentis; Salva crux; Salve Regina a 3

 ASV Gaudeamus CDGAU 341. Clerks' Group, Wickham

This splendidly sung and recorded collection gives an excellent survey of both Obrecht's compositional skills and his restrained but profound religious conviction.

Laudes Christo; Missa Malheur me bat

🔑  ASV Gaudeamus CDGAU 171. Clerks' Group, Wickham – MARTINI: Motets & Magnificat ***

The Dutch composer, Jacob Obrecht, was one of the pioneers in developing a new, more closely organized polyphonic style, notably in his use of segmentation. This is well illustrated in this fine Mass, with the theme on which the work is based successively fragmented. There is a sublime summation at the end when the theme is restored to its original form, radiantly performed by the Clerks' Group, and with warmly atmospheric sound. The coupling is apt – Obrecht ended up as Maestro di capella at the court of Ferrara, where Martini had spent his career.

Missa Caput; Salve Regina: in 4 parts; in 6 parts; Venit ad Petrum

(BB)  Naxos 8.553210. Oxford Camerata, Summerly

Both of the Salve Regina settings are based on plainchant melody and are alternatim settings, the music alternating between a polyphonic treatment of the chant and the unadorned chant itself. Jeremy Summerly and his Oxford Camerata, recorded in the Chapel of Hertford College, Oxford, give expert and committed accounts of this music and they are accorded first-class sound.

OCKEGHEM, Johannes
(c. 1410–97)

Alma redemptoris Mater; Ave Maria; Credo fors seulement; Fors seulement; Intemerata Dei Mater (2 versions); Masses: Au trail suis; Celeste beneficum; Cuiusvis toni; De plus en plus; Ecce ancilla Domini; L'Homme armé; Mi-mi; Prolationum; Quinti toni; Sine nomine (2 settings: à 3 & à 5); Requiem; Salve Regina; S'elle m'amera/Petite camusette

🔑 Ⓑ * ASV Gaudeamus CDGAU 550 (5). Clerks' Group, Wickham

This admirable bargain box collects together the survey by Edward Wickham's Clerks' Group of Ockeghem's major religious works (including 11 Mass settings and the Requiem), all discussed in detail below, but omitting the chansons and Missa caput. A treasure chest.

Alma redemptoris Mater; Missa Mi-Mi; Salve Regina

 ASV Gaudeamus CDGAU 139. Clerks' Group, Wickham (with motets by BUSNOIS, ISAAC and OBRECHT)

Ockeghem's Salve Regina, the motet Alma redemptoris Mater and the Missa Mi-Mi are contrasted here with motets by three of his contemporaries. The Missa Mi-Mi is so named because of the recurring descending fifth, named 'mi' in both the natural and soft hexachords. These performances have a refreshing enthusiasm and the approach to rhythm is remarkably free. An outstanding disc.

Ave Maria; Intemerata Dei Mater; Missa ecce ancilla Domina

 ASV Gaudeamus CDGAU 223. Clerks' Group, Wickham (with OBRECHT: Salve Regina; JOSQUIN DESPREZ: Déploration sur la mort de Ockeghem ***)

Ecce ancilla Domina is a middle-period Mass (c. 1470), but its polyphonic richness and unpredictable rhythmic impetus make for compelling listening in a performance so aptly paced and involvingly spontaneous. The Ave Maria is relatively familiar (see below), but Intemerata Dei Mater (from the 1480s) has a poignant atmosphere all its own which matches the expressive power of Obrecht's six-part Salve Regina from the same period. Josquin's valedictory musical farewell in the plaintive Phrygian mode also has links to Ockeghem's moving supplication to the mother of God. This beautifully recorded disc is well up to the high standard of ASV's admirable series.

Missa caput; Ma maistresse; Missa Ma maistresse: Kyrie & Gloria

 ASV Gaudeamus CDGAU 186. Clerks' Group, Wickham (with ANON.: Hymn: O solis ortus cardine; Motets: O sidus Hispanie; Gaude Marie; SARUM CHANT: Antiphon: Venit ad Petrum)

Only two movements survive of the Missa Ma maistresse, but very fine they are, bright and extrovert in feeling, making ingenious use of the song material. The cantus firmus of the Missa caput is derived from the long melisma on the word 'caput' which we have already heard at the end of the Sarum Antiphon, Venit ad Petrum. It is perhaps an awkward basis for a mass, but Ockeghem's polyphony rises to the challenge, and the work is both texturally and aurally intriguing, yet moves forward on a seemingly inevitable course, in spite of Ockeghem's frequent use of cadences. The two anonymous motets can be found in the same manuscript which is the earliest source of this mass and it is possible that O sidus Hispanie, a eulogy for St Anthony of Padua, was written by Du Fay, who greatly admired this saint. All the performances here are of the highest order and the recording is first class too.

Missa de plus en plus; Missa Fors seulement

 Lyrichord LEMS 8029. Schola Discantus, Moll

This Lyrichord disc joins the beautiful middle-period four-part Missa de plus en plus with a later five-part work, Missa Fors seulement, based on one of the composer's own chansons, which is unfortunately not included here as it is on Edward Wickham's ASV disc (see below). However, the performances are finely sung and blended and have an appealing simplicity. Ken Moll's varied pacing is convincing. The Missa Fors seulement (which only consists of Kyrie, Gloria and Credo) is especially notable for its use of two basses, which darkens the texture very strikingly, although Moll takes care not to provide an exaggerated balance.

Missa L'Homme armé; Alma redemptoris Mater; Ave Maria

🔑 ❀ (BB)  Naxos 8.554297. Oxford Camerata, Summerly (with JOSQUIN DESPREZ: Memor esto verbi tui ***)

Missa L'Homme armé; Missa Sine nomine; Salve Regina (probably by Philippe Basiron)

 Gaudeamus CDGAU 204. Clerks' Group, Wickham (with MORTON (attrib.): Rondeau: Il sera pour vous (L'Homme armé) ***)

On Naxos the soaring opening Ave Maria, gloriously sung, immediately sets the seal on the inspirational power of Ockeghem's music. It is followed by the plainchant, Alma redemptoris Mater, and then its polyphonic setting, simple and flowing and harmonically rich. The robust ballad, L'Homme armé, follows ('The armed man must be feared'), sounding vigorously jolly, like a carol. It must have been hugely popular in its day since so many composers used it as a basis for a Mass. While the polyphony in the Gloria and Credo moves onward inventively, the work's dramatic and emotional peak is readily found in the extended Sanctus (by far the longest section) and resolved in the sublime melancholy of the Agnus Dei. In short, this is a work of striking individuality and beauty, and it is sung superbly here, and marvellously paced. Josquin's setting of sixteen verses from Psalm 119, Memor esto verbi tui, with its expressively fertile imitative devices, makes an eloquent postlude, and the recording, made in the Chapel of Hertford College, Oxford, could hardly be bettered. It dates from February 1997, thus aptly celebrating the 500th anniversary of Ockeghem's death.

Ockeghem's striking L'Homme armé mass is always easy to follow as its cantus firmus is so characterful. On ASV it is quoted first in a rondeau, attributed to Ockeghem's contemporary, Robert Morton, where it is used mockingly; it is surprising that no translation is given, although it is provided for the other music. Both the Missa Sine nomine and the Salve Regina are dubiously attributed to Ockeghem, but he would surely have been glad to acknowledge the rich polyphony of the latter.

The Sine nomine mass for three voices, however, is much less characteristic, although to our ears its flowing lines are very attractive. The performances here are well up to the standard of this excellent group, but the Naxos recording of the Missa L'Homme armé by the Oxford Camerata is even more attractively coupled.

Missa Prolationum; Requiem; Intemerata Dei Mater

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.554260. Musica Ficta, Holten

Ockeghem was a mathematician as well as a composer, and his Missa Prolationum is famous for its intellectually complex polyphony based on double canons, while the rhythmic discipline is also carefully calculated. To all but the most analytical listener this will not matter too much, for the resulting music has a seemingly effortless flow, although the eight-voiced Clerks' Group, without losing melismatic sonority, certainly do not miss the special rhythmic relationships. They support the Mass with five diverse motets by Ockeghem's contemporaries (nearly all set to Marian texts), to make a stimulating introduction to other Franco-Netherlands composers of this period. Excellent recording.

Masses for 3 voices: Missa Sine nomine; Missa Quinti toni

 Lyrichord LEMS 8010. Schola Discantus, Moll

The very austerity of Ockeghem's part-writing, with its serenely flowing polyphony, adds to the potency of his music for modern ears. It is very beautifully sung by a vocal quartet of high quality whose tonal matching and fine tuning are ideal. The recording, too, is clear yet has a perfectly judged ambience.

Requiem; Motet and Missa Fors seulement

🔑 * ASV Gaudeamus CDGAU 168. Clerks' Group, Wickham

Ockgehem's Requiem remains one of the riddles of medieval liturgical music. Its various surviving movements are very different in style, notation and part-writing, and (rather like the Du Fay St Anthony Mass) it was long thought that the manuscript might be a collection of fragments from a number of different works. Even so the Requiem holds together with a convincing unity.

Certainly every bar of the music is memorable in such a dedicated performance as we have from the Clerks' Group under Edward Wickham. In addition we are offered the Kyrie, Gloria and Credo of the Missa Fors seulement, plus the rondeau on which it is based, and further arrangements of the latter by Pierre de la Rue and Antoine Brumel, which offer more splendid music to intrigue the inquisitive ear.

OFFENBACH, Jacques
(1819–80)

(i) Cello Concerto (Concerto militaire); Les Fées du Rhin: Overture, ballet & Grande Valse; Orphée aux Enfers: Overture; Le Voyage dans la Lune: Ballet des Flocons de Neige

🔑  DG 477 6403. Les Musiciens du Louvre, Minkowski, (i) with Pernoo

Long before he scored his big success as a composer of operettas with Orpheus in the Underworld, Offenbach was renowned as the 'Liszt of the cello', an outstanding virtuoso. This 45-minute Concerto militaire is the most important of his compositions from that period, here recorded complete for the first time. Both the first movement and the finale introduce military themes, with timpani prominent in both, and with the main theme of the finale anticipating the style of Offenbach's operettas. That finale, 20 minutes long, offers a wide range of themes, including a funeral procession episode. The sound, recorded live in Grenoble, tends to be plummy, but there is ample detail to bring out the fine quality of the performance both by the soloist, Jerome Pernoo, and of the orchestra of period instruments under Marc Minkowski. The sparkling fill-ups add to the attractions of the disc, with the ballet from Les Fées du Rhin offering the first version of what later became the Barcarolle in the Tales of Hoffmann.

Concerto militaire; Concerto rondo; 4 Impressions: (ii) Deux âmes au ciel – Elégie; (iii) Introduction et valse mélancolique; Rêverie au bord de la mer; (ii) La Course en traîneau

 CPO 777 069-2. Schiefen, WDR R. O, Köln, with (i) Froschauer; (ii) Villiers; (iii) Oskamp

Ofra Harnoy's deleted RCA recording made Offenbach's delightful Concerto rondo a famous novelty. Guido Schiefen's performance offers greater exuberance, but Harnoy offered greater elegance. However, Schiefen gives us the longer Concerto militaire, where there is plenty of sparkle throughout, especially in the irrepressibly catchy finale. The Four Impressions find Offenbach in more reflective mood and are lightly sentimental works of much charm, written for the instrument that he adored. Although Schiefen's timbre is not always as ideally rounded as it might be, there is nothing to deter Offenbachians. Accompaniments are well managed under three different conductors, and the recording is well balanced.

Gaîté parisienne (ballet, arr. Rosenthal; complete)

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * RCA SACD 82876 66419-2. Boston Pops O, Fiedler – ROSSINI/RESPIGHI: Boutique fantasque ***

 Decca Eloquence (ADD) 476 2724. ROHCG O, Solti – GOUNOD: Faust: ballet music ; RESPIGHI: Rossiniana **(*)

Fiedler's Gaîté parisienne is irresistible – one of his very finest records. The orchestra are kept exhilaratingly on their toes throughout and are obviously enjoying themselves, not least in the elegantly tuneful waltzes and in the closing Barcarolle, which Fiedler prepares beautifully and to which the generous acoustic of Symphony Hall affords a pleasing warmth without in any way blunting or coarsening the brilliance. The percussion, including bass drum in the exuberant Can-can, adds an appropriate condiment and John Pfeiffer's superb SACD transfer makes the recording sound remarkably fresh and full.

Solti's 1959 Gaîté parisienne is the most brilliant version committed to disc. While some listeners may feel that the music-making is just that bit too hard-driven to be a top choice, there is no doubting the sheer virtuosity of the orchestra, and their bravura is hard to resist. Exciting music-making, and vintage Decca sound.

Overtures: Barbe-bleue; La Belle Hélène; La Grande Duchesse de Gérolstein; Le Mariage aux lanternes; Orfée aux Enfers

🔑 ✿ (*) Australian Decca Eloquence mono 476 2757. LPO, Martinon (with ADAM: Si j'étais roi; BOIELDIEU: Le Calife de Bagdad; La Dame blanche; HEROLD: Zampa ())

Under Martinon these overtures explode like a suddenly shaken bottle of ice-cold champagne. The LPO strings play with polish as well as fizz, so the can-can finales of Orfée and La Grande Duchesse are both elegant and sparkling. While no one captures the whirlwind Offenbach impetus quite as Martinon does, one relishes this collection also for the charm of the playing. But nowhere is Martinon's rhythmic vitality and lift more apparent than in the deliciously crisp closing section of the rare Le Mariage aux lanternes; here one understands why Rossini dubbed Offenbach 'the Mozart of the Champs-Elysées'. Among the other delights here is the delicate oboe tune in La Belle Hélène, enchantingly played, while during the lilting waltz theme you can understand how Offenbach once beat Johann Strauss in a waltz-writing competition!

Australian Decca have coupled the Offenbach items with Martinon's accounts of other French overtures which we described in the original Penguin review as 'four French soufflés served up by a conductor who obviously relishes every moment and the orchestra giving of their very best'. La Dame blanche is especially enjoyable, with the bravura bassoon accompaniment to the second subject as perky as can be. The early 1950s sound is certainly vivid, although still a shade too bright. A unique disc and well worth any effort to obtain.

Overtures: La Belle Hélène; Bluebeard; La Grande Duchesse de Gérolstein; Orpheus in the Underworld; Vert-vert; Barcarolle from Contes d'Hoffmann

(*) DG 400 044-2. BPO, Karajan

Other hands besides Offenbach's helped to shape his overtures. Most are on a pot-pourri basis, but the tunes and scoring are so engagingly witty as to confound criticism. Karajan's performances racily evoke the theatre pit. The Berlin playing is very polished and, with so much to entice the ear, this cannot fail to be entertaining. However, the compact disc emphasizes the dryness of the orchestral sound; the effect is rather clinical, with the strings lacking bloom.

Overture: La Belle Hélène (arr. Haensch); (i) Les Contes d'Hoffmann: Entr'acte et Barcarolle

🔑 * Chan. 9765. (i) RLPO Ch.; BBC PO, Y. P. Tortelier (with Concert: French bonbons. ***)

Haensch's Overture La Belle Hélène is a far better piece than the more famous overture to Orpheus in the Underworld. A stylish pot-pourri, it includes two of the opera's best tunes, the disarmingly seductive waltz, and a delightfully songful siciliano given to the oboe; it then ends with a brief, infectious can-can. Tortelier has its full measure, shaping it with great style and affection, and reminding us of Martinon's justly famous LPO mono Decca version. The Barcarolle, too, is very seductive, and both are given state-of the-art recording. This is part of an unmissable concert of 'French bonbons'.

Le Papillon (ballet; complete)

Ⓑ  Decca (ADD) 444 827-2 (2). Nat. PO, Bonynge – TCHAIKOVSKY: Nutcracker ***

Le Papillon is Offenbach's only full-length ballet and it dates from 1860. The quality of invention is high and the music sparkles from beginning to end. In such a sympathetic performance, vividly recorded (in 1972 in the Kingsway Hall), it cannot fail to give pleasure.

Cello Duos, Op. 54: Suites 1–2

Ⓑ  HMA 1901043. Pidoux, Péclard

Offenbach was himself a very accomplished cellist, and these two works are tuneful and imaginatively laid out to exploit the tonal possibilities of such a duo. Offenbach's natural wit is especially apparent in the First Suite in E major. The performances are excellent and so is the recording.

PIANO MUSIC

Bella notte (Barcarola); Décaméron dramatique (Album du Théâtre français); Dernier souvenir (Valse de Zimmer); Les Roses du Bengale (6 Valses sentimentales)

 CPO 777 079-2. Sollini

Offenbach's piano music is essentially salon music, tuneful and undemanding, and not terribly pianistic. Not all of it shows Offenbach in the best light, but there are some moments of charm, and his effervescent spirit certainly comes through. Excellent performances and recording, and guaranteed to bring a sentimental tear when the Waltz appears.

OPERA

La Belle Hélène (complete; DVD version)

Ⓝ  Arthaus DVD 107 100. Lott, Beuron, Sénéchal, Le Roux, Naouri, Todorovitch Ch. & Musiciens du Louvre, Minkowski (Stage Director: Laurent Pelly; V/D : Ross MacGibbon)

The new production staged by Laurent Pelly, with costumes by Chantal Thomas, retains all the mythological characters, but they appear to Helen as in a dream – of being the most beautiful woman in the world, and falling in love with the virile young Paris. Her double bed, to which she retires at the beginning, becomes the focus of the action until Act III, which takes place on the beach at Naples, from which she finally sails away with Paris. The whole production fizzes and has touches of romantic naughtiness which only the French can bring off with real style. Favouring brisk speeds and light textures Mark Minkowski gives a winning sparkle to this delectable send-up of the classical story. He also has the benefit of offering a more complete, more authentic text than any predecessor. It was recorded after the highly successful stage production at the Châtelet Théâtre in Paris, when Felicity Lott was hailed as an outstanding star in the role of Hélène. That is true, even if vocally there are moments when her voice is not at its sweetest, not as rounded as it might be; but her feeling for the idiom and her characterization are unerring. Outstanding in the cast is the seductively honey-toned tenor Yan Beuron as Paris. An excellent supporting cast including such stalwarts of the repertory as Michel Sénéchal and François Le Roux. And there is no doubt the DVD version adds an extra dimension to Offenbach's scintillating score.

Highlights from: (i) La Belle Hélène; (ii) Orpheus in the Underworld; (iii) La Vie parisienne (all sung in English)

🔑 ✿ Ⓑ * CfP (ADD) 5 75999-2 (2). (i) Blackham, Fryatt; (i; ii) Miller; (ii) Crofoot; (ii; iii) Bronhill, Shilling, Weaving; (iii) Steele, Sadler's Wells Op. Ch. & O, cond. (i; ii) Faris; (iii) Pollack, Matheson

These sparkling recordings of Sadler's Wells Offenbach productions from the early 1960s remain among the most convincing examples of operetta (or opera) sung in English on record. The English versions by Geoffrey Dunn are excellent examples of how French operetta can be brought to an English audience without losing the Gallic wit of the orginals. La Belle Hélène is a highly infectious performance, catching the comedy without overdoing things.

With a single reservation, Orpheus in the Underworld is the most successful of the three. Without visual help the recording manages to convey the high spirits and genuine gaiety of the piece, plus – and this is an achievement for a non-Parisian company – the sense of French poise and precision. One's only complaint is that Alan Crofoot's King of Boeotians number at the opening of Act III is needlesssly cruel vocally.

In La Vie parisenne the vocal standards may sound thinner on record than they did on stage – even Anna Pollack sounds over-parted – but the production is as imaginative as ever, and it is the Sadler's Wells teamwork that matters, so much of the effervescence of this Second Empire romp comes over well. Throughout, the CD remastering shows how vivid and clear were the original recordings, projecting the words admirably against a warm theatrical acoustic, even though the recordings were made at Abbey Road.

Les Contes d'Hoffmann (The Tales of Hoffmann; complete) (DVD versions)

🔑  Warner DVD 0630 19392-2. Domingo, Serra, Baltsa, Cotrubas, Evans, Nimsgern, Ghiuselev, Lloyd, ROHCG Ch. & O, Prêtre (V/D: Brian Large)

(*) Opus Arte DVD OA0968 D (2). Machado, Gorny, Goeldner, Bayo, Kutzarove, Poblador, Bilbao Op. Ch., Bilbao SO, Guingal (Dir: Giancarlo del Monaco, V/D: Angel Ramirez)

The Warner DVD offers a 1981 performance at Covent Garden with Plácido Domingo ideally cast in the name-part, singing and acting superbly in John Schlesinger's production, here imaginatively directed for video by Brian Large. Georges Prêtre conducts an idiomatic performance, using the traditional score, with the climactic sextet as part of the Venice Act, which comes second in the sequence, leaving the Antonia Act till last and making the epilogue the briefest of afterthoughts.

Like the production, sets and costumes, the casting is lavish. Luciana Serra is bright and agile as the doll, Olympia, though edgy as recorded, while Agnes Baltsa is an imperious Giulietta in the Venice Act, tough and characterful with her tangy mezzo, and Ileana Cotrubas is charming and touching as Antonia. Among those outstanding in the character roles are Geraint Evans as Coppelius, Robert Tear as Spalanzani, and Nicola Ghiuselev as Dr Miracle. The sound is a little dry and is distracting in the context.

Filmed live in the handsome new opera house in Bilbao in 2006, the Opus Arte DVD offers a strong and colourful reading of Offenbach's last masterpiece with the tragic Antonia story left till last. The climactic Septet is included in the conventional place in the Venice scene. The conductor Alain Guingal does at least compensate by bringing the chorus and whole cast together at the end to provide a ringing conclusion. The production is set at the time of composition, towards the end of the 19th century, with good costumes but stylized, chunky sets, involving staircases and the use of drapes instead of a gondola in the Venice scene, but effective enough. As to the casting, Aquiles Machado sings powerfully and well-projected but, built to Pavarotti proportions, he is a totally unromantic figure. The Nicklaus of Katharine Goeldner, firm and true, and the Lindorf of Konstantin Gorny, who ably takes the bass parts through the opera, are both excellent. His Scintille diamant as Dappertutto makes a powerful climax. Sadly, the Olympia of Milagros Poblador is shrill and wobbly, not an attractive doll, though the glamorous Valentina Kutzarove as Giulietta and the touching Olympia of Maria Bayo (good, though not in her sweetest voice) are far preferable. Marco Moncloa is also memorable as an insect-like Schlemil in the Venice scene.

Les Contes d'Hoffmann (The Tales of Hoffmann; complete) (CD versions)

🔑 ✿ * Decca (ADD) 417 363-2 (2). Sutherland, Domingo, Tourangeau, Bacquier, R. Suisse Romande & Lausanne Pro Arte Ch., SRO, Bonynge

Ⓜ (*) EMI 3 58613-2 (3). Shicoff, Murray, Serra, Plowright, Norman, Van Dam, Tear, Op. Nat. du Théâtre Royal de la Monnaie, Brussels Ch. & O, Cambreling

On Decca Joan Sutherland gives a virtuoso performance in four heroine roles, not only as Olympia, Giulietta and Antonia but also as Stella in the Epilogue. Bonynge opts for spoken dialogue, and puts the Antonia scene last, as being the more substantial. His direction is unfailingly sympathetic, while Sutherland is impressive in each role, notably as the doll Olympia and in the pathos of the Antonia scene. As Giulietta she hardly sounds like a femme fatale, but still produces beautiful singing. Domingo gives one of his finest performances on record, and so does Gabriel Bacquier. It is a memorable set, in every way, much more than the sum of its parts.

Cambreling's version broke new ground in opting for the complete text of Fritz Oser's edition, putting together nearly all the material which Offenbach failed to sort out before his untimely death. Here the expansions in the Venetian scene are attractive when the Giulietta is Jessye Norman and Rosalind Plowright brings extra – and satisfying – power to the Antonia episode without losing charm, and Lucia Serra is a bright, clear Olympia. Neil Shicoff as Hoffmann makes a confident Domingo-substitute (often sounding very like that model). Ann Murray is, as ever, a favourite Nicklaus, though the voice regularly loses focus above the stave. José van Dam sings with splendid firmness in the four villainous roles, if too nobly, while Robert Tear is excellent in the four character-tenor roles. EMI certainly does not sell anyone short, with no less than 214 minutes on the three discs and fine recording, but the Decca set manages with only two. There is a cued synopsis with a separate list of tracks.

Les Contes d'Hoffmann: highlights

🔑 Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 458 234-2 (from above set, cond. Bonynge)

The Decca highlights disc is one of the finest sets of excerpts of its kind from any opera. With about 70 minutes of music, it offers a superbly managed distillation of nearly all the finest items and is edited most skilfully, including both the vocal and orchestral versions of the famous Barcarolle.

The Tales of Hoffmann (fairly complete; sung in English)

🔑 Ⓜ () Somm Beecham mono 13-2 (2). (Recording made for the soundtrack of the Michael Powell and Emeric Pressburger film) Rounseville, Bond, Grandi, Ayars, Dargavel, Sinclair, Brannigan, Clifford, Sadler's Wells Ch., RPO, Beecham (Includes Beecham at the piano, playing and singing through the score)

Somm have acquired the rights, not just to the Decca recording of the opera, but also to excerpts from Beecham's fascinating private introduction of the music to Michael Powell and Emeric Pressburger before the film was made.

None of the singers chosen by Beecham were famous, but all justified his confidence in them, and this new transfer brings plenty of bloom to their voices. Robert Rounseville is a warmly lyrical Hoffmann and, as one would expect, Monica Sinclair a superb Nicklaus, while Dorothy Bond makes a charmingly petite Olympia. Margherita Grandi may be a bit over the top in her sultry portrayal of Giulietta, but Ann Ayars is fully equal to the role of Antonia in the demanding final Act. The smaller parts are all characterfully sung, with Grahame Clifford excellent as both Spalanzani and Franz, and Owen Brannigan ready to change roles as Schlemil, Crespel and Hermann. But the surprise choice was Beecham's own discovery, Bruce Dargavel. He takes the three villanous roles, Coppelius, Dappertutto and Dr Miracle, and his richly resonant bass-baritone is wonderfully caught by the microphone in the celebrated So Gleam with Desire and of course in the finale. Franz's sole aria, Day and Night I am Always Slaving, included here, was cut from the film when the last Act was in danger of longueurs. In short this is very enjoyable indeed, for the words are crystal clear.

Les Fées du Rhin (opera; complete in German)

 Accord 472 920-2 (3). Schörg, Gubisch, Beczala, Jenis, Klaveness, Pepper, R. Letton Ch., Montpellier Nat. O, Layer

Into Les Fées du Rhin, or Die Rheinnixen, Offenbach poured everything that embodied German romanticism: from ruined castles at midnight, to soldiers, hunters, village maidens, the Rhine, of course, with its water-sprites, pixies and elves, and even psychic shock is included! Add to this elements of French and Italian grand opera, and just about everything else you can think of, and the result is a Weber-cum-Offenbach mélange, and the opera includes plenty of splendid ensembles and vibrant choruses, as well as a delightful ballet and grande valse. The cast in this live 2002 recording is generally very good: the heroine, Armgard, sung by Regina Schörg, copes well with the coloratura passages. The hero, Franz, a light tenor, sung by Piotr Beczala, has an attractive voice, coping reasonably well in the high passages and singing with sensitivity when called for; he is well contrasted with the baritone of Dalibor Jenis, his rival, in splendid, full-blooded voice. Armgard's mother, Hedwig, sung by Nora Gubisch, is a fine mezzo, and the rest of the cast is good. That the whole thing works is a tribute to Friedemann

Layer, who draws an excellent response from his orchestra. The sound is very good, with very little noise from the audience, and full texts and translations are provided.

Orphée aux enfers (complete; 1858 version) (DVD version)

(*) Arthaus DVD 100 402. Badea, Vidal, Duesing, Macias, Jung, Quaille, Callatat, Théâtre de la Monnaie Ch. & O, Davin (Producer: Herbert Wernicke)

Although the Arthaus DVD performance, recorded in the Brussels Théâtre de la Monnaie in 1997, has been updated to the 20th century, the setting of Mount Olympus in the famous fin-de-siècle café La Mort Subite, with the gods wearing evening dress, ensures that there is less of a visual jolt of the kind which often affects modern productions of Offenbach. There are a few curiosities here which may irritate the DVD collector, notably the use of a honky-tonk piano in the finale of the Act I Can-can. However, the ensuing journey down to Hell, conveyed spectacularly by a steam train plummeting through the surface of Heaven into the Underworld, with great whooshes of steam, is considerable compensation.

The cast is a good one: Alexandru Badea is a younger, more ardent Orpheus than might be expected, but his well-focused tenor and convincing acting is certainly engaging, whilst his coquettish wife, Eurydice, is well characterized by Elizabeth Vidal, though her voice is less well caught by the microphones and is a little harsh at times. Both Dale Duesing and Reinaldo Macias in the roguish roles of Jupiter and Pluto sing with plenty of character. André Jung's drunken John Styx is amusing to watch – though it would be less of a pleasure just to hear – and most of the incidental parts are well done. The conducting is efficient rather than inspired. However, there is plenty to enjoy here and a good deal more so than in many recent productions of this work.

Orphée aux enfers (complete; 1858 version) (CD version)

🔑 (*) EMI 5 56725-2 (2). Dessay, Beuron, Naouri, Fouchécourt, Lyons Nat. Op. O, Grenoble CO, Minkowski

The Minkowski version of Offenbach's first great success is based on the original 1858 version, with additions from the expanded 1874 score, including much of the delightful ballet music. Both the 'earthly' leads are superb: Natalie Dessay's secure, clear coloratura is well employed as the nagging wife, Eurydice, and one genuinely feels sorry for her hapless husband, Orphée, amiably characterized by Yann Beuron. Jean Paul Fouchécourt as Pluto oozes deceptive charm in his pastoral aria, though his true devilish character is revealed in some grotesque falsetto at the end, and Cupid's kissing song is charmingly sung by Patricia Petibon. From the opening bars, Minkowski's approach is apparent in the sparkling, crystal-clear textures, and he propels the opera along at a tremendous pace and with a bouncing rhythmic bite, matched by the exceptionally lively cast. The recording is superbly vivid and clear and adds to the immediacy of the drama.

La Périchole (complete)

🔑 Ⓜ  Erato (ADD) 2292 45686-2 (2). Crespin, Vanzo, Bastin, Friedmann, Trigeau, Rhine Op. Ch., Strasbourg PO, Lombard

Though both Régine Crespin in the title-role and Alain Vanzo as her partner, Piquillo, were past their peak at that time, their vocal control is a model in this music, with character strongly portrayed but without any hint of vulgar underlining. Crespin is fresh and Vanzo produces heady tone in his varied arias, some of them brilliant. Jules Bastin is characterful too in the subsidiary role of Don Andres, Viceroy of Peru. Lombard secures excellent precision of ensemble from his Strasbourg forces, only occasionally pressing too hard. The recorded sound is vivid and immediate. A set of highlights is available at budget price (Apex 2564 61500-2).

Robinson Crusoe (sung in English)

🔑  Opera Rara ORC 7 (3). Brecknock, Kenny, Kennedy, Hartle, Hill Smith, Oliver, Browne, Geoffrey Mitchell Ch., RPO, Francis

More ambitious than Offenbach's operettas, Robinson Crusoe offers a sequence of fresh and tuneful numbers with many striking ensembles. The plot is derived less from Daniel Defoe than from the British pantomime tradition. Characterization is strong and amusing, with a secondary couple shadowing Crusoe and his beloved Edwige. The casting is also from strength, with John Brecknock and Yvonne Kenny outstanding as Crusoe and Edwige, while Man Friday, as in the original Paris production, is sung by a mezzo, Sandra Browne. On the three discs are three hours of music, covering numbers which the composer cut even from the original production. The witty English translation, very freely adapted from the French text, with some changes of plot, is by Don White, and words are admirably clear.

La vie parisienne (complete; DVD version)

Ⓝ  Virgin DVD 5193019. Bou, Callahan, Wesseling, Naouri, Canniccioni, Devellereau, Garcia, Lyon Nat. Op. Ch. & O, Rouland (V/D: François Roussillon; Dir: Laurent Pelly)

The problem with updating productions of Offenbach, such as here in La vie parisienne, is that it is like drinking champagne out of a plastic cup – the champagne makes its presence felt, but the taste has something odd about it. But the key factor is that the champagne comes through, and in this updated production to modern times, the zest and spirit of Offenbach are alive and well. Jean-Sébastien Bou and Marc Callahan make an entertaining Raoul de Gardefeu and Bobinet, and Maria Riccarda Wesseling as Métella is as commanding and sparkling. Her great bitter-sweet waltz aria was one of the best tunes Offenbach ever wrote. She comments on 'youth enjoying itself, singing at the top of its voice' and continues 'is it pleasure or is it fury . . . and when they no longer can, they'll keep silent, gaiety vanishes little by little . . . and that's how the party ends!' and it is as relevant today as it was in 1866. Marie Devellereau makes a delightful Gabrielle – a really nice character performance, and Jesus Garcia is wonderfully vulgar as the Brazilian, while all the smaller roles are very well done. Acts III and IV end in a suitable hedonistic whirl of intoxication. The orchestra plays with wit and style and one (almost) forgives the modern production, which, it has to be admitted, is very well done. There are little tableaux between the Acts which are quite amusing too, and we are even given a reprise of the can-can after the curtain calls – delightful.

Arias from: Barbe-Blue; La Belle Hélène; Les Contes d'Hoffmann; La Grande-Duchesse de Gérolstein; Orphée aux Enfers; La Périchole; Pomme d'Api

Ⓝ (*) Sony 8869 7234552. Kasarova, Bav. R. O, Schirmer

This is a decent enough collection of some of Offenbach's most famous arias and is well played and sung. In the last analysis, it lacks the last ounce of sparkle that makes Offenbach go with a swing, and excellent though Vesselina Kasarova is, she just misses being completely at home. There is plenty to enjoy, though. She is excellent in the La Périchole, not overdoing the drunken aria, 'Ah! Quel diner', which often happens. The result is much funnier when it is sung 'straight', as here. The Overtures to La Grande-Duchesse and Barbe-Blue are included and are well played, the former work offering one of Offenbach's most sparkling arias, 'Ah! Que j'aime les militaries', the latter some delightful rarities. The finale can-can from Orphée aux Enfers is certainly lively enough and Offenbachians will derive much pleasure from this recording. A pity texts were not included.

'The World of Offenbach': Overtures: (i; ii) La Belle Hélène; (iii; iv) La Fille du tambour-major; (i; ii) Orpheus in the Underworld; (iii; iv) Le Papillon: Pas de deux (excerpt); Valse des rayons; Les Contes d'Hoffmann: (v; i; iv) Ballad of Kleinzach; O Dieu! De quelle ivresse; (vi; i; iv) Doll song; (vi; vii; i; iv) Barcarolle (2 versions); La Grande Duchesse de Gérolstein: (viii–x) Portez armes ... J'aime les militaires; La Périchole: (viii; i; x) O mon cher amant (Air de lettre); Ah! quel dîner; (vi; i; iv) Robinson Crusoé: Conduisez-moi vers celui que j'adore (Waltz Song); (xi; iv) Valse tyrolienne

⊶ ❀ Ⓜ * Decca ADD/DDD 452 942-2. (i) SRO; (ii) Ansermet; (iii) LSO; (iv) Bonynge; (v) Domingo; (vi) Sutherland; (vii) Tourangeau; (viii) Crespin; (ix) V. Volksopernorchester; (x) Lombard; (xi) Jo, ECO

This 'lucky-bag' of Offenbachian goodies which Decca have expanded for CD from the original LP selection is bursting with lollipops to make a marvellously entertaining 74 minutes. The programme now opens and closes with the Barcarolle. Ansermet and Bonynge offer much character in the overtures; even if the former takes the famous can-can which closes the Orpheus overture more slowly than usual, he invests it with much rhythmic vigour. Bonynge has another scintillating can-can to offer in La Fille du tambour-major, which opens with an arresting side-drum, and he now also includes two items from Offenbach's only ballet, Le Papillon. The various excerpts from Bonynge's complete Contes d'Hoffmann are matched by Régine Crespin's delightful contribution as La Périchole, and Sutherland returns to sing the Waltz Song from Robinson Crusoé. The other additional item is Sumi Jo's sparkling Valse tyrolienne. With splendidly vivid recording this is an unmissable sampler, to match and even surpass 'The World of Borodin'.

ONSLOW, Georges (1784–1853)

Symphonies 1 – 4

Ⓝ  (1 & 3) CPO 999 747. N German R. Philh.; (2 & 4) CPO 999 738-2, Hannover PO; Goritzki (available separately)

Georges Onslow (a gifted pianist) originally came from an aristocratic English family who emigrated to the Auvergne in France, then, at the time of the French revolution, moved on to Hamburg, where the budding young musician studied with Dussek. In 1800 George moved safely back to the Auvergne where his desire to compose reasserted itself, and he studied under Antonin Reicha and, thus influenced, remained loyal to classicism for the rest of his career. He wrote four symphonies between 1831 and 1846, showing a natural melodic gift: they are never lacking in good ideas in all their four movements. While they are hardly profound works, they are thoroughly entertaining, and well worth investigating by anyone interested in rare symphonies. The performances and recordings are excellent.

Piano Trios, Op. 3/2; Op. 83

Ⓝ  CPO 777 231-2. Trio Cascades

String Quintets: in A min., Op. 34; G, Op. 35

Ⓝ  MDG 603 1253-2. Quintett Momento Musicale

Georges Onslow was one of the few French composers of his generation who wrote a substantial amount of chamber music. His quintets (and quartets) were published in his lifetime and reached a wide audience in their day. The disc of Piano Trios makes an admirable entry into his attractive musical world. The opening movement of Opus 83 has a particularly striking main theme; the movement (at 12 minutes 23 seconds) is impressively wrought and doesn't outlast its welcome, and there is a fine expressive Adagio to follow. The earlier Opus 3 Quintet is more lightweight, but each work offers four traditional classical movements, well crafted. With the excellent pianist Thomas Palm leading, the playing of the Trio Cascades is spontaneously appealing throughout.

The String Quintets, too, emerge as fresh, well-constructed pieces, unfailingly enjoyable. The Adagio movements are beautifully poised, while the lively outer movements have plenty of life – the Presto of Opus 35 is especially winning. The Quintett Momento Musicale have this music under their belts and their playing is seductive. Both CDs are very well recorded.

OPHICLEIDE

'Back from Oblivion' (Collection) includes: PROCTOR: Ophicleide Concerto: Adagio. DEMERSSEMAN: Introduction & Polonaise. ELGAR:

Romance, Op. 62. KUMMER: 5 Variations. RACHMANINOV: Vocalise. HANDEL: O ruddier than the cherry. GRIEG: Ich liebe dich. KLOSÉ: Air Varié. PIAZZOLA: Back from Oblivion

Ⓝ * Melba MR 301111. Nick Byrne, David Miller (available from Melba Foundation, PO Box 415, Elwood, Victoria, Australia 3184; www.melbafoundation.org)

Yes, you are correct, Ophicleide is not the name of a composer, but of an 'obsolete' instrument. Berlioz and other composers scored for it, but it is best known (although now seldom used) to represent Bottom in Mendelssohn's Midsummer Night's Dream Overture. However, we attended a performance of Mendelssohn's Elijah recently in Berkhamsted, Herts, where a member of the orchestra played it to great effect.

It is a curious hybrid instrument, made of brass, but with keys on it, as on a bassoon or clarinet. Richard Bonynge has commented that it has 'a wonderfully plangent quality which stays with one and touches the heart'. Indeed, its uniquely fruity tone and rich bass notes in no way prevent it being played poetically, as is shown here by Nick Byrne (trombonist from the Sydney Symphony Orchestra) in the pieces by Grieg and Rachmaninov. The obvious demonstration item is Handel's 'O ruddier than the cherry', for the ophicleide takes the role of Polyphemus with genial flair. Most impressive of all is the atmospheric Back from Oblivion, a memorable piece by Piazzola, which ends the recital. The CD comes beautifully packaged within a handsome stiff-covered booklet, including full documentation and colour photographs of the instrument being played.

ORFF, Carl (1895–1982)

O Fortuna! (film, by Tony Palmer)

Isolde Films DVD TP-DVD 118. Jones, Chilcott, Johnston, Hermann, Bav. RSO & Ch., Runnicles (Dir: Tony Palmer)

Tony Palmer's film about Carl Orff is typically revelatory. Not only does he demonstrate that Orff's work involved far more than Carmina Burana (much his most popular work), but that his relationship with the Nazi party was far more complex than has generally been thought. Orff accepted the need to go along with the Nazis, and actually accepted a monthly stipend of 1,000 marks in 1942. You could argue that anyone under a totalitarian regime has to play along with the system just to survive, but Orff would quite happily have accepted the role of Reichminister of music had he been offered it. Another aspect of his career that Palmer brings out vividly is the sequence of four wives he had, each related to an aspect of his composing career. One of the principal contributors to the film is Orff's daughter, Godela, who gives a fascinating insight into his household, emphasizing how daring it was for him to set a work in Latin, only to be triumphantly justified by the instant success of Carmina Burana. The film also emphasizes the positive work that Orff did for children, not only in Schulwerk, much valued by the Nazis for the Hitler Youth, but in his fascination with puppets. That Orff was justified in writing Schulwerk has been confirmed by its success outside Germany as an educational tool, and his sequence of operas, each related to one of his wives, makes up a substantial area of his achievement. A fascinating and moving portrait.

Carmina Burana (DVD version)

 RCA DVD 74321 852859. Popp, Van Kesteren, Prey, Bavarian R. Ch., Munich R. O, Eichhorn (Video Producer: Jean-Pierre Ponnelle)

This fine RCA recording of Carmina Burana, conducted by Kurt Eichhorn with outstanding soloists in 1975, has been issued previously on CD, and here is treated to an imaginative staging for DVD by Jean-Pierre Ponnelle. The main background set is a ruined church against which the singers are seen in medieval costume, with action, sometimes surreal, invented to illustrate each section of the work, a technique which seems to anticipate the virtual reality of our digital age. So the roasted swan episode is introduced by a drunken monk, with a large swan in the background actually being roasted on a spit, and Lucia Popp in a medieval wimple looking and sounding enchanting. Hermann Prey is a superb baritone soloist, taking the main burden, and the choir is bright and lively. As a supplementary item comes a long interview with Orff himself – in German with English subtitles – in which he talks animatedly about key childhood experiences and how he came to write Carmina Burana.

Carmina Burana (CD versions)

🔑 Ⓜ * Ph. 464 725-2. Gruberová, Aler, Hampson, Shinyukai Ch., Knaben des Staats & Berlin Cathedral Ch., BPO, Ozawa

🔑 * EMI (ADD) 5 66899-2. Armstrong, English, Allen, St Clement Danes Grammar School Boys' Ch., L. Symphony Ch., LSO, Previn

Ⓝ 🔑 * Chan. SACD CHSA 5067. Claycomb, Banks, Maltman, Tiffin Boys' Ch., L. Symphony Ch., LSO, Hickox

🔑 ❁ (BB) * Sony (ADD) SBK 47668. Harsanyi, Petrak, Presnell, Rutgers University Ch., Phd. O, Ormandy

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.570033. Rutter, Randle, Eiche, Bournemouth SO Ch., Youth Ch. and O, Alsop

(BB)  Regis RRC 1136. Walmsley-Clark, Graham-Hall, Maxwell, Southend Boys' Ch., LSO Ch., LSO, Hickox

Ⓑ  RCA 09026 63981-2. Hendricks, Aler, Hagegård, St Paul's Cathedral Boys' Ch., L. Symphony Ch., LSO, Mata

Ozawa's recording of Orff's justly popular cantata carries all the freshness and spontaneity of his earlier successful Boston version. The Cours d'amours sequence is the highlight of his reading, with the soprano, Edita Gruberová, highly seductive; Thomas Hampson's contribution is also impressive. Ozawa's infectious rubato in Oh, oh, oh, I am Bursting Out all Over, interchanged between male and treble chorus towards the end of the work, is wonderfully bright and zestful, with the contrast of the big Ave formossima climax which follows made to sound spaciously grand. Taken overall, this Philips version holds its position near the top of the list alongside Ormandy, and it has the additional advantage of spectacular, demonstration-worthy, digital recording.

Previn's 1975 analogue version, vividly recorded, is even more sharply detailed than Ozawa's. It is strong on humour and rhythmic point. The chorus sings vigorously, the men often using an aptly rough tone; and the resilience of Previn's rhythms, finely sprung, brings out a strain not just of geniality but of real wit. Among the soloists, Thomas Allen's contribution is one of the glories of the music-making, and in their lesser roles the soprano and tenor are equally stylish. The digital remastering is wholly successful. This is now included among EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century'.

There are many outstanding versions of Carmina Burana, but this live Chandos recording, directed with great flair by Richard Hickox, must go near the top of the list for its exhilaratingly spectacular, surround-sound recording, with the wide dynamic range making the very most of the Barbican acoustics. Hickox's pacing cannot be faulted, and there are many subtle dynamic touches; and the choral singing has such vigour and spontaneity that it is difficult to resist. The soloists are very good too, although Christopher Maltman's dusky baritone does not quite match Thomas Hampson's contribution to Ozawa's version or Thomas Allen's to Previn's. While Laura Claycomb sings tenderly in her soprano solo, she has a slightly intrusive vibrato when she makes her leap of submission. The Tiffin Boys' Choir, although very enthusiastic, does not quite match the eager knowing exuberance the boy trebles bring either to Previn's version or to Hickox's earlier recording with the Southern Boys' Choir. Nevertheless the impact of the Chandos recording is unforgettable.

Ormandy and his Philadelphians have just the right panache to bring off this wildly exuberant picture of the Middle Ages by the anonymous poets of former days, and there is no more enjoyable analogue version. It has tremendous vigour, warmth and colour and a genial, spontaneous enthusiasm from the Rutgers University Chorus, men and boys alike, that is irresistible. The soloists are excellent, but it is the chorus and orchestra who steal the show; the richness and eloquence of the choral tone is a joy in itself. This is quite splendid, one of Ormandy's most inspired recordings.

Marin Alsop also conducts a fine, distinctive reading of Carl Orff's most popular work, brilliantly recorded. The recording heightens the impact of the reading with its exceptionally wide dynamic range, so that pianissimos are hushed and intimate, set against great choral outbursts, with the Bournemouth Chorus and the Youth Choirs providing a powerful mainstay to the whole performance. Much the most important of the soloists is the baritone, here the dark, cleanly focused Markus Eiche, a great strength, while the tenor, Tom Randle, gives a delightful characterization in falsetto for the roast swan sequence, and Claire Rutter sings with perfect purity in the radiant soprano solos in the final section. A top bargain recommendation.

Richard Hickox, on his brilliantly recorded Regis CD, uses the London Symphony Chorus but adds the Southend Boys' Choir, which makes sure we know all about sexual abandon – their Oh, oh, oh, I am Bursting Out all Over is a joy. Penelope Walmsley-Clark, too, makes a rapturous contribution: her account of the girl in the red dress is equally delectable. The other soloists are good if less individual, but the chorus rises marvellously to climaxes, and the sharp articulation when the singers hiss out the words of O Fortuna in the closing section is a highlight. The documentation provides a vernacular narrative for each band, which works well enough when there is no translation. A most successful disc in every way

Mata's splendid 1980 digital recording now comes at super-bargain price and is highly recommendable on all counts. It is a joyously alive and volatile reading, not as metrical in its rhythms as most; this means that at times the London Symphony Chorus is not as clean in ensemble as it is for Previn. The choristers of St Paul's Cathedral sing with purity and enthusiasm but are perhaps not boyish enough, though the soloists are first rate (with John Aler coping splendidly, in high, refined tones, with the Roast Swan episode). There is fine warmth of atmosphere and no lack in the lower range; indeed in almost every respect the sound is superb. This is unbeatable value for those wanting a bargain-priced version.

Carmina Burana; Catulli Carmina

Ⓑ  Sony (ADD) 516026-2 (2). Soloists, Ch., Phd. O, Ormandy

If you want both the fine Ormandy performances, they are available together on this two-CD set, costing slightly less than the individual discs but including less music.

Catulli Carmina

Ⓑ (*) Sony (ADD) SBK 61703. Blegen, Kness, Temple University Ch., Phd. O, Ormandy – STRAVINSKY: Symphony of Psalms ***

The exotic colours and rhythmic ostinatos are well brought out by the Temple University Choir, and Ormandy's vigorous performance produces an altogether rougher experience than Welser-Möst's version, for all the virtuosity of the players and singers. But the bluff humour of the piece comes out boldly. The 1967 recording is generally good, a little thin by modern standards, particularly at the top end, but nothing too serious. An undoubted CD bargain with the excellent Stravinsky coupling.

OPERA

(i) Die Kluge; (ii) Der Mond

Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 7 63712-2 (2). (i) Cordes, Frick, Schwarzkopf, Wieter, Christ, Kusche; (ii) Christ, Schmitt-Walter, Graml, Kuen, Lagger, Hotter; Philh. Ch. & O, Sawallisch

Sawallisch's pioneering Orff recordings of the mid-1950s are vivid and immediate on CD, with such effects as the thunderbolt in Der Mond impressive still. Elisabeth Schwarzkopf is characterful and dominant as the clever young woman of the title in Die Kluge. It is good too to hear such vintage singers as Gottlob Frick and Hans Hotter in unexpected roles. Musically, these may not be at all searching works, but both short operas provide easy, colourful entertainment, with Sawallisch drawing superb playing from the Philharmonia. Full texts are provided, and the discs are very generously banded.

PACHELBEL, Johann
(1653–1706)

Canon and Gigue in D; Partita (Suite) 6 in B flat; Suite in G

BB  Warner Apex 0927 49980-2. Paillard CO, Paillard – FASCH: Concerto; Symphonies **(*)

Pachelbel's famous baroque lollipop is given a warm, nicely paced performance, which brings out its noble progress admirably, but the pair of suites (containing the usual introduction – here brief – plus groups of dances) offers writing that is amiable but no more than that, although two Sarabandes are agreeably expressive. Good playing and pleasing sound, but this is not memorable music like the Canon.

Aria tertia (with 6 variations); Chorale Partita: Was Gott tut, das ist wohlgeten; 6 Chorale Preludes; Ciacona in F min.; Fugues: in C & D min.; Magnificat octavi toni; Prelude in D min.; Ricerars in C & C min.; 2 Toccatas in C

🔑 * Oehms SACD OC 613. Kelemen (organs of St Petri, Erfurt- Büssleben & Klosterkirche, Pappenheim)

Every year the remarkably fine organist Joseph Kelemen sets off on an instrumental pilgrimage to discover new organs and, where possible, the associated composers. He then makes a CD for his record company, now Oehms, and phones us, later following up with the CD itself. Again this year he has been able to make his recording in surround sound, and the result is thrillingly realistic. This recording could not be more authentic, and in the robust opening Prelude in D minor, the fine Ciacona in F minor, the Aria tertia and variations and the impressive closing Toccata in F Kelemen demonstrates the organ's range of colour and power. When playing the CD through, the ear registers the difference as we move from the end of the Chorale Partita (track 25) to the reedy Chorale Prelude (on track 26) as Kelemen moves from Pappenheim to Büssleben.

PACINI, Giovanni (1796–1867)

Alessandro nelle India (complete)

 Opera Rara ORC 35. Ford, Larmore, Claycomb, Mitchell Ch., LPO, Parry

Pacini, born in 1796, lived until 1867; but this, like most of his operas, dates from early in his career, a work built on strong material, here beautifully performed by a first-rate cast under David Parry. The team of women is particularly strong, with Jennifer Larmore radiant. Only the tenor Bruce Ford falls below the beauty and mellifluousness of the women singers, with a slightly gritty delivery. Excellent sound.

Maria, Regina d'Inghilterra (complete)

 Opera Rara ORC 15. Miricioiu, Ford, Fardilha, Plazas, Miles, Bickley, Geoffrey Mitchell Ch., Philh. O, Parry

With an outstanding cast, full, well-balanced recording and powerful, well-paced conducting, this long-neglected opera about Mary Tudor emerges as a surprisingly strong and enjoyable piece, far finer than most conventional Ottocento operas from the contemporaries of Donizetti and Bellini. The admittedly improbable story is loosely based on a Victor Hugo play, centring on the love of Mary for Fenimoore (high tenor), her scheming favourite, also loved by Clotilde, who in turn is loved and protected by Ernesto (baritone). Add to that the Chancellor (bass), who is determined to unmask Fenimoore's evil-doing, and you have an operatic plot that gives ample scope for confrontation in duets and ensembles, skilfully and imaginatively exploited by Pacini.

Nelly Miricioiu sings with warmth and character as the suffering Queen, not least in her final agonized aria on Fenimoore's execution. She is well contrasted with the lighter Mary Plazas as Clotilde, with José Fardilha as Ernesto, distinctive with his flickering vibrato. Alastair Miles sings powerfully as the Chancellor, but it is the prowess of Bruce Ford in the demanding role of Fenimoore that more than anything holds the piece together, from his first evocative off-stage entry in Act I. David Parry draws strong, idiomatic playing from the Philharmonia, with the Geoffrey Mitchell Choir intensifying the big ensembles.

PACIUS, Fredrik (1809–91)

The Princess of Cyprus

 BIS CD-1340. Wentzel, Åman, Eichenholz, Rantanen, Storgård, Jubilate Ch., Tapiola Sinf., Söderblom

Pacius is 'the father of Finnish music'. Even Sibelius paid tribute: 'Everything we musicians do here now is based on the life's work of Fredrik Pacius.' The Princess of Cyprus has been variously described as a Singspiel and sometimes even as an opera, but it is more accurately billed here as 'incidental music to Topelius's play'. In this version the plot is summarized and spoken by a narrator. For all his undoubted importance as a pioneering and inspiring force in Finland's musical life, Pacius's music is not in the least Finnish or Nordic in character, nor is the idiom particularly individual. The musical language is indebted to Weber, Spohr and Mendelssohn, and the texture is beautifully transparent. But what it lacks in individuality, it makes up for in charm, and both performance and recording are excellent.

PAER, Ferdinando (1771–1839)

Sofonisba (highlights)

 Opera Rara ORR 237. Larmore, Evans, Nilon, Palazzi, Lee, Geoffrey Mitchell Ch., Philh. O, Guidarini

In their search for rare 19th-century operas, Opera Rara have lighted on some operas which seem best suited to 'highlight' recordings. This collection illustrates the point, with a complete libretto provided as well as comprehensive notes to let the listener place each selected item. Paer, a close contemporary of Beethoven, is here represented by Sofonisba, an opera first heard in Bologna in 1805. It was inspired by Roman history, involving the Consul, Scipione, as well as Siface and his wife Sofonisba and her former lover, Massinissa. As in other issues in this admirable series the clear mezzo of Jennifer Larmore, most impressive in her opening martial aria with chorus, is well contrasted with the glowing soprano of Rebecca Evans, fresh, pure and agile, an artist whose voice is ideally suited to recording. She is represented here not only by a fine aria, but also in the impressive series of big ensembles, all of them richly justifying Opera Rara's advocacy. Well-balanced sound.

PAGANINI, Niccolò (1782–1840)

Violin Concertos 1–6; 24 Caprices, Op. 1; Duo merveille; Introduction & Variations on 'Di tanti palpiti' from Rossini's Tancredi; Introduction & Variations on 'Nel cor più non mi sento' from Paisiello's La molinara; Maestoso sonata sentimentale; Perpetuela; La primavera; Sonata with Variations on a Theme by Joseph Weigl; Sonata Napoleone; Le streghe (Variations on a Theme by Süssmayr), Op. 8; Variations on 'God Save the King'; Variations on 'Non più mesta' from Rossini's La Cenerentola

Ⓑ * DG 463 754-2 (6). Accardo, LPO, Dutoit

Ⓑ  DG 437 210-2 (Violin Concertos 1–6 only)

A self-recommending set. The Accardo/Dutoit Paganini cycle remains a secure first choice: the Concertos are brilliantly and imaginatively played and well recorded. Indeed, these accounts do not fall down in any department. The individual discs are contained in an excellently packaged DG bargain box. There is also a 3-CD set with just the six concertos.

Violin Concerto 1 in D, Op. 6

🔑 Ⓜ * EMI (ADD) 5 62594-2. Perlman, RPO, Foster – SARASATE: Carmen Fantasy, etc. ****

🔑 * DG 429 786-2. Shaham, NYPO, Sinopoli – SAINT-SAËNS: Concerto 3 ***

 DG 477 6232. Hahn, Swedish RSO, Oue – SPOHR: Violin Concerto 8 ***

 Decca Australian Eloquence 476 748-8. Belkin, Israel PO, Mehta (with TCHAIKOVSKY: Valse-Scherzo) – R. STRAUSS: Violin Concerto **(*)

Ⓜ (*) Warner Elatus 2564 60013-2. Vengerov, Israel PO, Mehta – SAINT-SAËNS: Havanaise; Introduction & Rondo Capriccioso ; WAXMAN: Carmen Fantasy **(*)

Perlman's famous 1971 recording returns at mid-price in the 'Perlman Edition', with two extra Sarasate items added. Provided one does not feel strongly about the traditional cuts in the Paganini, this performance remains unsurpassed. He demonstrates a fabulously clean and assured technique and, with the help of the EMI engineers, he produces a gleamingly rich tone, free from all scratchiness. Lawrence Foster matches the soloist's warmth with an alive and buoyant orchestral accompaniment.

Gil Shaham's technical ease in the histrionics of Paganini's stratospheric tessitura, harmonics and all, is breathtaking, and he can phrase an Italianate lyrical melody – and there are some good ones in this Concerto – with disarming charm and ravishing timbre.

A fine new account from Hilary Hahn, who revels unostentatiously but with easy brilliance in the work's bravura, yet tickles the ear with the first movement's beguiling lyrical melody.

Boris Belkin recorded the Concerto without cuts in 1977 and played it splendidly. He has a marvellous command of his instrument, plus a sweet and appealing tone, and he plays with much aplomb. The Decca recording is spectacular, one of the finest made in the Mann Auditorium in Tel Aviv.

Maxim Vengerov gives a strongly extrovert account, egged on by Mehta, whose fast opening tutti sets the scene without poise. In spite of this, however, the solo contribution has much warmth and some infectious fireworks in the finale.

Violin Concertos 1; 2 in B min. (La campanella), Op. 7

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.550649. Kaler, Polish Nat. RSO, Gunzenhauser

Ilya Kaler is fully equal to Paganini's once-devilish technical demands and the phrasing of warm Italianate melody. In every respect his technique is commandingly secure.

Violin Concertos 1; 4 in D min.

🔑 * Pentatone Surround Sound SACD PTC 5186178. Szeryng, LSO, Gibson

A famous coupling from 1973, originally recorded in quadraphony, emerges here sounding remarkably real and vivid. No. 1 is somewhat cut (as was common at the time). Szeryng plays with his accustomed brilliance and mastery, and in both concertos Alexander Gibson (without the 'Sir' on the original CD credits) is a sympathetic accompanist.

Violin Concertos 3 in E; 4 in D min.

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.554396. Rózsa, Slovak RSO, Dittrich

Ernö Rózsa is a first-class soloist, fully equal to all Paganini's pyrotechnical demands, and on his bow the characteristic cantabile tunes (often over pizzicato accompaniments) sing out very winningly. He also plays his own cadenzas, which are perhaps rather too much of a good thing when these two Concertos are quite long enough already!

CHAMBER MUSIC

Allegro di concert (Moto perpetuo) in C, Op. 11; Cantabile in D, Op. 17; Centone si sonate: in D; in A, Op. 64/2 & 4; Guitar & Violin Sonatas: in A; A min.; E min., Op. 3/1, 4 & 6; Grand Sonata for Violin &

Guitar in A, Op. posth.; Sonata concertata in A, Op. 61; Sonata a preghiera (arr. Hannibal)

🔑  DG 437 837-2. Shaham, Söllscher

The atmosphere of much of this repertoire is comparatively intimate, something these artists readily appreciate, and their playing is immaculate and amiably easy-going. Perhaps at times here the style of performance could with advantage have been more extrovert, but the present hour-long recital will make attractive late-evening entertainment (not taken all at once, of course). The recording has a realistic balance and fine presence.

24 Caprices, Op. 1

🔑 Ⓜ * EMI 5 67237-2 [567257]. Perlman

Ⓜ  EMI 5 67986-2 [567998]. Rabin

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Decca 477 7560. Mintz

(BB)  Naxos 8.550717. Kaler

 Telarc CD 80398. Ehnes

Perlman's superbly played 1972 set now returns to the catalogue at mid-price as one of EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century'. The transfer is immaculate, the violin image very real and vivid, and this can now be recommended without reservation.

Michael Rabin's consistent and astonishing dexterity is heard at its most electrifying in No. 5 in A minor, his sure sense of rhythmic style in No. 9 in E major and his delicious glissandi in No. 13, while he plays the most famous closing number with assured panache. His impeccable technique informs the whole set, and he is most vividly recorded.

There are many breathtaking things to admire in Shlomo Mintz's 1982 version, and plenty of colour and life in the set as a whole. He is recorded with admirable clarity and definition, though the overall effect is not as warm as Perlman's account which, if anything, is more dazzling. No. 17 in E flat is one example when one could wish that he had not been in quite so much of a hurry. On the other hand others, such as the F major, No. 22, could hardly be improved on.

Those looking for a bargain will surely not be disappointed with the Russian fiddler, Ilya Kaler, on Naxos. A pupil of Leonid Kogan, his playing is technically very assured, the lyrical bowing vibrant in a Slavic way, and he projects a strong profile. The 1992 Naxos recording is truthful and real.

James Ehnes is Juilliard-trained and has technique to burn. He tosses off these pieces with great bravura and aplomb. His playing has real personality, even if others have managed to find greater subtlety and delicacy. All the same, there is much to relish in his youthful ardour and the splendid sound the Telarc engineers give us.

Caprice 24, Op. 1/24; Grand Sonata in A

(BB)  Sony (ADD) SBK 62425. Williams (guitar) – GIULIANI: Variations on a Theme by Handel; D. SCARLATTI: Sonatas; VILLA-LOBOS: 5 Preludes ***

John Williams is in excellent form in the Grand Sonata, with its charming central Romanza and ingenuous closing Andantino variato (originally a duo for guitar and violin), and the famous Caprice, for violin solo, both arranged by Williams. The recording is only marginally balanced too forwardly and is otherwise truthful. Most enjoyable.

PALESTRINA, Giovanni Pierluigi da (1525–94)

Ad Dominum cum tribularer; Ad te levavi oculos meos; Alma redemptoris; Dum complerentur; Magnificat & Nunc dimittis; Recordare; Stabat Mater; Veni sancte spiritus; Victimae paschali

🔑 Ⓜ * CRD (ADD) CRD 3519. New College, Oxford, Ch., Higginbottom

A particularly satisfying and beautiful collection of motets and canticles from the New College Choir singing with glorious, yet restrained feeling under Edward Higginbottom. The programme is arranged to give the kind of contrast that Palestrina himself achieves between the paired Vespers and Compline canticles, Magnificat and Nunc dimittis. Higginbottom and his choir achieve their contrasts in sound without attempting extreme left–right effects, and their recording engineer, Mike Clements, has produced a full, relatively homogeneous, yet detailed sound picture in the Chapel, which is very telling when all these works are texturally so rich and often radiant, as at the opening of Ad te levavi oculos meos.

Ardens est cor meum; Congratulamini mihi omnes; Crucem santam subiit; Crux fidelis; Fratres, ego enim accepi; Dominus Jesus; Haec Dies a 6; Improperium; Magnificat terti toni a 6 (with Plainsong: Et respicientes); Popule meus; Pueri Hebraeorum (with introductory Plainsong: Hosanna filio David); O Domine, Jesu Christe a 6; Stabat Mater a 8; Terra tremuit; Victimae paschali laudes a 6

🔑 * ASV Gaudeamus CDGAU 333. Cardinall's Musick, Carwood

Beautifully recorded in the Fitzalan Chapel of Arundel Castle, this outstanding collection is yet another example of the sublime singing of the Cardinall's Musick, directed by Andrew Carwood, in this case a well-planned programme of Palestrina's beautiful music for Holy Week.

Mass & Motet: Assumpta est Maria; Motets: Ave Maria; Beata es, Virgo Maria; Hodie gloriosa semper Virgo Maria; Regina coeli; Magnificat septimi toni

Ⓝ (BB)  EMI Encore 2 08120-2. Clare College, Cambridge, Ch., Timothy Brown

This an exceptionally well-chosen bargain collection, mainly of shorter works, but also including the splendid Missa Assumpta est Maria. The programme ends with an equally fine Magnificat setting. We are familiar with the excellent Clare College Choir and their rich sound (partly achieved by using women's voices) from earlier recordings directed by John Rutter. The EMI début CD introduces a new conductor, Timothy Brown, and the choir responds expressively to his melismatic direction in the beautiful opening motet with which the Mass is associated. The choir is beautifully recorded, and the only minor criticism is the relatively restricted dynamic range, which may partly be caused by the microphone placing, but which certainly reduces the dynamic contrast of the singing. But this remains a thoroughly worthwhile bargain disc, although it is a pity that the documentation has so little to say about the music.

Missa Ave Maria in 6 parts; Missa Brevis; Missa Hodie Christus natus est; Missa Papae Marcelli; Motets: Ave Maria; Canita tuba; Hodie Christus natus est; Jubilate Deo; O magnum mysterium; Tui sunt caeli

Ⓝ (BB) (*) EMI Gemini 2 17655 (2). King's College, Cambridge, Ch., Ledger; Willcocks

Palestrina wrote two Ave Maria Masses, neither of which was published in his lifetime: the present work did not appear in the original book of six-part Masses of 1594 but was included two years later. The merit of the recording here is in the inclusion of the plainchant of the Introit, Gradual and so on, that lends perspective to this Mass. The chant is sung with impressive restraint and a sense of space, and the acoustic is heard to good advantage, the recording superbly atmospheric, but with splendid clarity of texture too. Philip Ledger also directs colourful, dramatic readings of both Palestrina's magnificent eight-part Missa Hodie Christus natus est and six motets, including the one directly related to the Mass. With two choirs set in contrast and cross-rhythms sharply brought out, the joyfulness of Palestrina's inspiration is irresistibly conveyed. The Missa Papae Marcelli, with its apparent simplicity of line and serene beauty which disguises an underlying fervour, is not a work which lends itself readily to performers with an Anglican background. This and the Missa brevis receive smooth, limpid performances, well recorded. The singing style is direct and unmannered; but although the control of dynamic is impressive the inner mystery of the music is not readily conveyed.

Canticum canticorum Salomonis (Book 4 of motets for 5 voices from the Song of Songs)

🔑 (BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55095. Pro Cantione Antiqua, Turner

The Canticum canticorum Salomonis is one of Palestrina's most sublime and expressive works, possibly wider in its range than anything else he composed, and certainly as deeply felt. The ten members of the Pro Cantione Antiqua under Turner bring an appropriate eloquence and ardour, tempered by restraint. They are accorded an excellently balanced and natural-sounding recording.

Lamentations of Jeremiah, Book 3 (complete)

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 67610. Westminster Cathedral Ch., Baker

 Chan. 0652. Musica Contexta, Ravens (with Vexilla regis)

This is the third Book of Palestrina's settings for Maundy Thursday, Good Friday and Holy Saturday, very beautifully sung at Westminster Cathedral and superbly recorded. The variety of the music is much wider than one might have expected, and in Lectio III for Good Friday (Adeph. Ego vir videns paupertatem meam) the trebles soar up into the heavens ecstatically.

Simon Ravens and his Musica Contexta draw on both existing manuscripts with scholarly and eminently musical understanding. At the end of the service, the hymn Vexilla regis marked the recession from the Sistine Chapel, and it is used to close the performance here.

Lamentations and Responsories for Holy Saturday, Book 3, 1–3; Benedictus for Holy Week; Sicut cervus; Stabat Mater

 Chan. 0679. Musica Contexta, Ravens

In his perceptive note Simon Ravens points out that Holy Saturday has inevitably tended to be overshadowed in the church calendar by the days immediately before and after, Good Friday and Easter Day. Yet in this fine collection, superbly performed by his group, Musica Contexta, and vividy recorded, he demonstrates what inspired music Palestrina wrote for this in-between occasion. More than usual, Palestrina's polyphony here has a biting edge, beautifully achieved in this performance. The Stabat Mater for double choir, one of Palestrina's best-loved works, follows up in its dedication, leading to the Benedictus for Easter Saturday and finally to the motet Sicut cervus, which prepares the way as a concluding liturgical act for the celebrations of the following day.

Lamentations of Jeremiah, Book 4 (complete)

🔑 (BB)  Regis RRC 1038. Pro Cantione Antiqua, Turner

Many composers have set the Lamentation Lessons for the Tenebrae services on Maundy Thursday, Good Friday and Holy Saturday but, remarkably, Palestrina did so on five different occasions. The music has a serene but poignant simplicity, which Bruno Turner captures admirably with spacious tempi. The concentration is obvious and the quality of the singing from a group of eight (including several famous names) is of a high order. So is the recording, which is very well balanced in the warm acoustic of St Alban's Church, Brook Street, London.

MASSES

'The Essential Palestrina': Missa Assumpta est Maria (with Plainchant: Assumpta est Maria). Motet: Assumpta est Maria. Missa brevis; Missa Papae Marcelli; Missa Sicut lilium inter spinas. Motet: Sicut lilium inter spinas

🔑 Ⓑ * Gimell (ADD/DDD) CDGIM 204 (2). Tallis Scholars, Phillips

This highly recommendable and well-documented box joins together two CDs recorded by the Tallis Scholars between 1981 and 1989. As is their practice, this group records the Masses together with the motets on which they are based, even if they are by other composers. Their account of the most famous of Palestrina's works, the Missa Papae Marcelli, brings a characteristically eloquent performance.

Missa Assumpta est Maria (including Gregorian Chant Proper for the Feast of the Assumption); Missa Papae Marcelli

🔑 (BB) * Regis RRC 1025. Pro Cantione Antiqua, M. Brown

Mark Brown and his Pro Cantione Antiqua give accounts of these celebrated pieces that aspire to total authenticity in that the forces used are those Palestrina himself would have known: no boys' voices, no women and just one-to-a-part, with the mass sections interspersed with plainchant. The Pro Cantione Antiqua sing with eloquence and power against the background of a resonant acoustic. The mid-1980s recording is splendidly balanced. Whatever other versions you might have of either work, this has special claims, and its outward severity does not preclude depth of feeling – rather the reverse.

Missa de Beata Virgine I (1567)

(BB)  Naxos 8.553313. Soloists of the Cappella Musicale di S. Petronio di Bologna, Vartolo

Sergio Vartolo, the director of the Cappella Musicale di S. Petronio di Bologna, has sought to place the Mass within a liturgical sequence recalling early performance traditions. Thus it opens with the plainchant introit Gaudeamus omnes in Domino (intended for a major feast of the Virgin Mary) and after the Gloria comes a Gradual and an organ paraphrase of the hymn Ave maris stella (by Girolamo Cavazzoni), very well played by Vartolo himself. Then comes the plainchant Alleluia and, following the Credo, the Gregorian Offertory, Beata ex Virgo Maria, which leads on to the Sanctus; the communion verse precedes Palestrina's very beautiful double Agnus Dei. The performance has striking character and powerful devotional feeling and is very well recorded in the Church of St Zeno, Cavalo, Verona.

Missa: Benedicta es (with Plainchant)

🔑 (B)  Gimell GIMSE (DDD/AAD) 402. Tallis Scholars, Phillips (with JOSQUIN DESPREZ: Motet Benedicta es)

It would seem that this Mass was the immediate predecessor of the Missa Papae Marcelli and was composed while the music of Benedictus was still at the forefront of the composer's mind. Palestrina's Missa Benedicta es, coupled with the Josquin motet, Benedicta es, on which it is based, is here a bargain reissue to celebrate the 25th anniversary of the formation of the Tallis Scholars, with the Missa Nasce la gioia mia included as a special bonus. The performances are exemplary, and full documentation is included to make this a genuine bargain.

Missa dum complerentur. Motet: Dum complerentur. Magnificat sexti toni; Spiritus Sanctus replevit totam domum; Veni Creator Spiritus: Veni Sancte Spiritus (Alleluia, Sequence & Motet)

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67353. Westminster Cathedral Ch., Baker

Baker here reinforces his reputation and that of the choir in fresh, energetic accounts of music by Palestrina celebrating Pentecost. The disc starts with the magnificent motet Dum complerentur, with its vivid portrayal of the rushing of winds. The magnificent parody Mass based on that motet, which Palestrina wrote some 30 years later, follows naturally, and so do three brilliant motets in eight voices, as well as the glorious Magnificat sexti toni with its graphic illustrations of the Virgin's prayer.

Missa Ecce ego Johannes; Cantantibus organis; Laudate pueri; Magnificat quarti toni; Peccantem me quotidie; Tribulationes civitatum; Tu es Petrus

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 67099. Westminster Cathedral Ch., O'Donnell

Even among the Westminster Cathedral Choir's superb records this disc stands out. Perfect chording and ensemble, natural and musical phrasing, spot-on intonation and a glorious tonal blend, make this issue one to treasure. The recording serves the choir well and there are scholarly notes by Ivan Moody.

Missa Hodie Christus natus est. Motet: Hodie Christus natus est. Stabat Mater

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.550836. Oxford Schola Cantorum, Summerly – LASSUS: Missa Bell' Amfitrit' alterna ***

Where in their account of Palestrina's Missa Aeterna Christi munera Summerly's group are restrained in their devotional manner, this celebrated Mass for Christmas has them joyful and exuberant. The choir, over 30 strong, brings out both the beauty and the drama of the writing, and equally so in the brief motet setting the Christmas words. The magnificent Stabat Mater is wisely given to a smaller group of 16 singers, two to a part, with added clarity in the complex polyphony. Well coupled with one of Lassus's best-loved Masses, Palestrina's close contemporary from Flanders, this CD represents the work of two supreme polyphonic masters who died in the same year.

Missa Hodie Christus natus est. Motets: Alma redemptoris mater; Canite tube; Deus tu converses; Christus, redemptor omnium; Hodie Christus natus est; Magnificat Primi toni; O admirabile commercium; O magnum mysterium; Tui sunt coeli

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 67396. Westminster Cathedral Ch., Baker

Vividly set against the cathedral acoustic, warm but clear, this performance of the Christmas music brings out better than most rival versions the exuberance of the cries of 'Noe' (Noel) that dramatically punctuate the piece, reflecting individual joy in welcoming the birth of Christ. The eight other items, all relating to Advent and Christmas, culminate in the Magnificat Primi toni with its rich textures, framed before and after by the plainsong antiphon, Hodie Christus natus est.

Missa: Nasce la gioia mia; Missa brevis (with PRIMAVERA: Madrigal: Nasce la gioia mia)

 Gimell CDGIM 008. Tallis Scholars, Phillips

The Missa: Nasce la gioia mia is a parody Mass, modelled on the madrigal, Nasce la gioia mia by Giovan Leonardo Primavera. The Tallis Scholars and Peter Phillips give expressive, finely shaped accounts of both the Missa brevis and the Mass, which they preface by the madrigal itself. A most rewarding disc: no grumbles about the recording.

Missa: Nigra sum (with Motets on Nigra sum by L'HERITIER; VICTORIA; DE SILVA)

🔑  Gimell CDGIM 003. Tallis Scholars, Phillips

Palestrina's Missa: Nigra sum is another parody Mass, based on a motet by Jean L'Heritier, and follows its model quite closely; its text comes from the Song of Solomon. On this record, the plainchant and the L'Heritier motet precede Palestrina's Mass, plus motets by Victoria and Andreas de Silva, a relatively little-known Flemish singer and composer who served in the Papal chapel and later in Mantua. The music is inspiring and the performances exemplary. This is a most beautiful record and the acoustic of Merton College, Oxford, is ideal.

Missa Papae Marcelli; Alma redemptoris Mater; Magnificat 1 toni; Nunc dimittis; Stabat Mater; Surge illuminare

(*) Gimell CDGIM 994-2. Tallis Scholars; Phillips (with ALLEGRI: Miserere *)

Missa Papae Marcelli; Missa brevis

🔑  Hyp. CDA 66266. Westminster Cathedral Ch., Hill

Missa Papae Marcelli; Stabat Mater; Tu es Petrus

* Gimell CDGIM 041. Tallis Scholars, Phillips – ALLEGRI: Miserere ***

David Hill and the Westminster Cathedral Choir give an imposing and eloquent Missa Papae Marcelli that many collectors may prefer to the finely sung Gimell issue from the Tallis Scholars. They, too, have the advantage of a spacious acoustic and excellent recording.

For their second, digital recording, the Tallis Scholars were recorded in the Basilica of Maria Maggiore in Rome, where Palestrina was a choirboy and, later, master of the choristers. The most celebrated of Palestrina's Masses, Missa Papae Marcelli, receives as eloquent a performance as any in the catalogue. The Tallis Scholars have wonderful fluidity and the sense of movement never flags in this finely tuned, well-paced reading. Much the same goes for the remaining motets here and, of course, for the Allegri Miserere, which had a unique association with the Sistine Chapel. As the recording was made before an audience, there is applause, which is quite inappropriate and very tiresome. In every other respect this is a first-class issue and can be warmly recommended.

For their third (2006) recording of the Missa Papae Marcelli, the Tallis Scholars have returned to England and Merton College, Oxford. These pieces are beautifully sung, but the Rome performance is even more inspired.

Missa Veni sponsa Christi (with Motet)

Ⓑ (*) CfP 575 5602. St John's College, Cambridge, Ch., Guest – ALLEGRI: Miserere; LASSUS: Missa super Bell' Amfitrit' altera' **(*)

Every section of the Veni sponsa Christi Mass is introduced by the same idea with much subtle variation, and this impressive work ends with two Agnus Dei settings, the second with an additional tenor part. It receives an eloquent, imaginatively detailed and finely shaped performance here, and the relative restraint of the Anglican choral tradition suits Palestrina's flowing counterpoint better than it does the Lassus Venetian coupling.

COLLECTIONS

Hodie Beata Virgo; Litaniae de Beata Virgine Maria in 8 parts; Magnificat in 8 parts (Primi toni); Senex puerum portabat; Stabat Mater

Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 466 373-2. King's College Ch., Willcocks – ALLEGRI: Miserere ***

The flowing melodic lines and serene beauty which are the unique features of Palestrina's music are apparent throughout this programme, and there is no question about the dedication and accomplishment of the performance. The recording is no less successful, sounding radiantly fresh and clear as remastered for Decca's Legend series.

25 Offertoria (Rome 1593)

 Chan. 0732. Trinity College, Cambridge, Ch., Marlow

Here are 25 of the 68 pieces Palestrina published in 1593 for all Sundays and festivals of the church year. The offertory is that part of the Eucharist when the bread and wine are placed on the altar, and in Rome it is one of the main points in the service at which short motets would be performed. The collection here shows the full scope of these motets, which vary from Ave Maria and Jubilate Deo to Laudate Dominum and Benedicti. None of the pieces exceeds three minutes. Richard Marlow's choir is mixed, but it produces much of the purity of sound that is to be found in other traditionally male Oxbridge colleges and recorded in the best Chandos fashion and very rewarding.

PANUFNIK, Andrzej (1914–91)

Cello Concerto

🔑  NMC Single D 0105. Rostropovich, LSO, Wolff

Panufnik's Cello Concerto was his very last work, completed only days before his death in September 1991. The recording is even more successful at conveying the purposefulness of the writing than the first performance, bringing out the tautness of the palindromic structure, with the two movements, each in arch form, a mirror-image of the other, slow then fast. The result is not a drily schematic work, as one might expect, but a piece that in its warmth reflects the player who inspired it, strong and eventful with a more open lyricism than in many previous Panufnik compositions.

(i) Piano Concerto; Symphony 9 (Sinfonia della speranza)

(M)  RCA 82876 64280-2. (i) Poblocka; LSO, composer

In a massive single movement of 41 minutes Panufnik's Ninth Symphony brings a formidable example of the composer's fascination with translating geometric concepts into notes. The visual analogy here is with light travelling through a prism, and the accompanying booklet provides a diagram illustrating how this formula works, using a three-note cell refracted in various ways. The result has similarities with a gigantic passacaglia and there is no denying the music's strength.

Panufnik's Piano Concerto is not so extended, but it carries comparable weight. The opening Entrada has a neoclassical flavour in its ostinatos for the solo instrument, leading to a bald, spare, central slow movement. The mood is rather like that of some of Bartók's night music. By contrast the finale is violently rhythmic, with jazzy syncopations. Though the piano writing gives the soloist relatively little chance for conventional keyboard display, her playing adds to the power of the composer's purposeful interpretation. The piano tone is a degree too clangy, but otherwise the recording is spacious and full.

Sinfonia di sfere; Sinfonia mistica (5 & 6)

(M)  Explore (ADD) EXP 0014. LSO, Atherton

The Sinfonia di sfere consists of three movements in ternary form, representing a journey through three concentric spheres. The Sinfonia mistica takes the number '6' as its root in a single movement of six sections, with each parameter dominated by that division into sixths. Though the cerebration of the scheme sometimes has one questioning the intensity of emotion conveyed, the idiom is not difficult, and the structural firmness adds very plainly to the immediate sense of conviction in each sharp contrast as it develops. Excellent performances and fine (originally Decca) recording.

(i) Sinfonia rustica (No. 1); Sinfonia sacra (No. 3); (ii) Sinfonia concertante for flute, harp & strings (No. 4)

(BB)  EMI (ADD) 3 52289-2. (i) Monte Carlo Opera O; (ii) Nicolet, Ellis, Menuhin Festival O; all cond. composer

The Sinfonia rustica is a highly individual piece and has plenty of character. The Sinfonia sacra is based on 'the earliest known hymn in the Polish language', which in the Middle Ages was used as both a prayer and an invocation before battle. The work is in three Visions – the first a brass fanfare to introduce the more expressive and poignant writing which follows, while the hymn is expanded in the fourth-movement finale, which is as long as the other three movements put together, and draws on the fanfare material at its close.

The Sinfonia concertante contrasts two movements, Molto cantabile and Molto ritmico, with the soloists well integrated to add colour and atmosphere to the texture, and it ends with a poignantly lyrical Postscriptum. All the performances here are directed by the composer, who also provides the notes in the accompanying booklet. The playing of the Monte Carlo Orchestra is both spirited and expressive (even if the orchestra itself is not in the top flight) but the Menuhin Festival Orchestra, with its two celebrated soloists, plays with great finesse and understanding. The recording is excellent.

Symphony 8 (Sinfonia votiva)

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55100. Boston SO, Ozawa – SESSIONS: Concerto for Orchestra ***

The Sinfonia votiva has a strongly formalistic structure, but its message is primarily emotional. Though Panufnik's melodic writing may as a rule reflect the formalism of his thought rather than tapping a vein of natural lyricism, the result is most impressive, particularly in a performance of such sharp clarity and definition as Ozawa's. Very well recorded, and excellent value.

PARKER, Clifton (1905–89)

Film music from: The Blue Lagoon: Rhapsody for Orchestra; Blue Pullman; Night of the Demon: Theme; Sea of Sand: March; Sink the Bismarck!: March; The Sword and the Rose; Treasure Island: Suite; Virgin Island: A Caribbean Rhapsody; Western Approaches: Seascapes

 Chan. 10279. BBC Concert O, Gamba.

This Chandos CD shows just what a good film music composer Clifton Parker was. His bold, swashbuckling style was well suited to sea-subjects, and the music from Treasure Island (1949) is bold and briny. Seascapes (from the 1944 film, Western Approaches) is an effective and more restrained piece of descriptive writing, and both The Blue Lagoon (1948) and A Caribbean Rhapsody offer a touch of the exotic in Parker's picturesque writing. Blue Pullman is a British Transport Film about a new passenger express; it starts rather broodily before it gets into its stride. Both the Night of the Demon (1957) and Sink the Bismarck! (1960) excerpts are entertaining and very atmospheric. The former is a classic 'horror' film which can still send shivers down the spine 50 years after it was made. Excellent performances and sound.

PARRY, Hubert (1848–1918)

(i) The Birds: Bridal March; (ii) English Suite; Lady Radnor's Suite (both for strings); Overture to an Unwritten Tragedy; Symphonic Variations

🔑 * Lyrita SRCD 220 [id.]. (i) LPO; (ii) LSO; Boult

The Bridal March comes from Parry's equivalent to Vaughan Williams's Wasps, a suite of incidental music for The Birds, also by Aristophanes. Here the rich, nobilmente string melody asserts itself strongly over any minor contributions from the woodwind aviary. The two Suites of dances for strings have some charming genre music and the Overture is very strongly constructed. But best of all is the set of variations, with its echoes of Brahms's St Anthony set and its foretastes of Enigma: a big work in a small compass. Boult's advocacy is irresistible and the CD transfer demonstrates the intrinsic excellence of the analogue recordings, with gloriously full string-sound.

Piano Concerto in F sharp min.

 Hyp. CDA 66820. Lane, BBC Scottish SO, Brabbins – STANFORD: Piano Concerto ***

The Piano Concerto in F sharp minor may at first seem rather naïve in the way it embraces a grand manner but, written in 1880, it is a relatively early work which appeals openly with its directness and lyricism. The Brahmsian echoes are supplemented in the finale by clear if momentary echoes of Bizet's Carmen, then a very new work. Piers Lane plays with feeling and brilliance, helped by beautiful sound.

Concertstück in G min.; Elegy for Brahms; From Death to Life; Symphonic Variations

🔑 Ⓜ  Chan. 6610. LPO, Bamert

The eloquent Concertstück, literally a 'concert piece' without a soloist and with a strong Wagnerian flavour, is the least known work here. The Elegy for Brahms conveys grief, but its vigour rises above passive mourning into an expression of what might almost be anger. From Death to Life consists of two connected movements – hardly Lisztian as the title implies but exuberantly melodic, with a theme in the second that echoes Sibelius's Karelia and is at the same time Elgarian in its sweep. But the finest work of all is the Symphonic Variations, with its echoes of Brahms's St Anthony set and its foretastes of Enigma. Shorter than either, it does not waste a note: a big work in a small compass. The performances could hardly be more sympathetic, and the Chandos sound is suitably rich and clear.

Lady Radnor's Suite

 Nim. NI 5068. E. String O, Boughton – BRIDGE: Suite; BUTTERWORTH: Banks of Green Willow, etc. ***

Parry's charming set of pastiche dances, now given an extra period charm through their Victorian flavour, makes an attractive item in an excellent and generous English collection, one of Nimbus's bestsellers. Warm, atmospheric recording, with refined playing set against an ample acoustic.

Symphonies 1–5; Symphonic Variations in E min.

🔑 * Chan. 9120-22 (3). LPO, Bamert

Bamert takes us convincingly through the symphonic terrain of a highly influential composer about whom Elgar declared, 'He is our leader – no cloud of formality can dim the healthy sympathy and broad influence he exerts upon us. Amidst all the outpourings of modern English music the work of Parry remains supreme.' Bamert's set, discussed in detail below, is offered here complete on three CDs and includes also Parry's best-known orchestral work, the Symphonic Variations.

Cello Sonata in A

Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7102. Fuller, Dussek – HARTY: Butterflies; Romance & Scherzo, Op. 8; Wood-Stillness; HURLSTONE: Cello Sonata in D ***

Parry's Cello Sonata is finely wrought, though it does not wear its debt to Brahms lightly – understandably, perhaps, since it is a fairly early piece dating from 1879. It is designed on an almost symphonic scale – particularly the sinewy Allegro first movement. A splendid performance and recording.

Nonet in B flat

🔑 (BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55061. Capricorn – STANFORD: Serenade (Nonet) ***

Parry's Nonet is for flute, oboe, cor anglais and two each of clarinets, bassoons and horns. Although the finale is perhaps a little lightweight, it is a delight from beginning to end. If one did not know what it was, one would think of early Strauss, for it is music of enormous accomplishment and culture as well as freshness. An excellent performance and recording, the more attractive at bargain price.

(i) Piano Quartet in A flat; Piano Trio 1 in E min.

(*) Mer. CDE 84248. Deakin Piano Trio; (i) with Inoue

The E minor Piano Trio is both shorter and more direct than the Piano Quartet, which is more ambitious, with a darkly meditative slow introduction echoing late Beethoven. Though the performance on the disc is not as polished as one would like, Parry's melodic writing is more than distinctive enough to rebut the charge of mere imitation, with such a movement as the dashing tarantella-like Scherzo of the Piano Quartet very effective indeed. The recording balances the piano rather behind the rest, which is a pity when Catherine Dubois so often takes the lead.

Piano Trios 2 in B min.; 3 in G

 Mer. CDE 84255. Deakin Piano Trio

In the two Piano Trios the English element in Parry's invention is more clearly identifiable, with some themes bringing anticipations of Elgar. Equally, the healthy outdoor feel of the triple-time main themes of the finales of both Trios has a hint of English folk music. Both works are richly enjoyable, with the warm, open lyricism of the slow movement of No. 2 particularly attractive. The players of the Deakin Piano Trio seem more happily adjusted to the rigours of recording than in the first volume, with rather better matching and intonation.

Violin Sonata in D, Op. 103; Fantaisie-sonata in B, Op. 75; 12 Short Pieces

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55266. Gruenberg, Vignoles

The Fantaisie-sonata provides a fascinating example of cyclic sonata form, earlier than most but also echoing Schumann. The three-movement Sonata in D is another compact, meaty piece, the strongest work on the disc. The Twelve Short Pieces, less demanding technically, are delightful miniatures. Gruenberg and Vignoles prove persuasive advocates, and the recording is first rate.

ORGAN MUSIC

Choral Fantasies on: 'When I survey the wondrous cross'; The Old Hundredth; 7 Chorale Preludes, Sets I & II; Elégie; Elegy; Fantasia & Fugue in G (2 versions); Toccata & Fugue (The Wanderer). A Little Organ Book in Memory of Sir Hubert Parry

(*) Priory PRCD 682 AB (2). Lancelot (organ of Durham Cathedral)

Although Parry is not now remembered for his organ music, he was fascinated by the instrument. Like Bach, he loved to try out every organ he came into contact with, and he had a fine knowledge of their strengths and weaknesses. His two versions of the G major Fantasia and Fugue, which frame the programme here, demonstrate the confident, traditional style of his writing. But his two sets of Chorale Preludes make full use of the changing colours and contrasting registrations. The spectacular Toccata and Fugue (The Wanderer – the composer's yacht, stirringly seaborne) offers plentiful opportunities for bravura, as do the opening and closing sections of his Fantasia on the Old Hundredth, where Parry really lets himself go. But the most admired work here, the Fantasia on 'When I survey the wondrous cross', deeply expressive, was highly praised by Gerald Finzi. For the Appendix, James Lancelot has added an engaging series of miniatures written in the composer's memory. James Lancelot is thoroughly at home in all this repertoire and plays with flair and understanding. The organ of Durham Cathedral seems well chosen, although, as with many English cathedrals, the resonance prevents absolute internal clarity in the recording.

VOCAL MUSIC

(i) Blest Pair of Sirens; I was Glad (anthems); (ii) Invocation to Music (An Ode in Honour of Purcell); (iii) The Lotus Eaters; (iv) The Soul's Ransom

🔑 Ⓑ * Chan. 2 for 1 241-31 (2). (i) L. Symphony Ch., LSO, Hickox; (ii) Dawson, Davies, Rayner Cook; (iii; iv) Jones; (iv) Wilson Johnson; (ii–iv) LPO Ch., LPO, Bamert

Here is an outstanding collection of some of Parry's finest choral music, with two of his most popular anthems, admirably directed by Richard Hickox, used on the second disc to frame what is perhaps his most influential and powerful vocal work, the Invocation to Music, a superb setting of Robert Bridges's Ode in Honour of Purcell. Parry's inspiration was at its peak, and the flowing, richly melodic lyrical style was to anticipate the Elgar of the Coronation Ode and even Gerontius. The soloists here are splendid, with the passionate central soprano and tenor duet, Love to Love calleth, followed by the magnificent bass Dirge, and the very Elgarian chorus Man, born of desire, later to be capped by the glorious closing apotheosis, O Queen of sinless grace, which Matthias Bamert moves on arrestingly to its final climax.

The first disc pairs The Lotus Eaters, a setting for soprano, chorus and orchestra of eight stanzas from Tennyson's choric song of that name, with The Soul's Ransom, using a biblical text. This is subtitled Sinfonia sacra and forms a broadly symphonic four-movement structure with references back not only to Brahms and the 19th century, but to much earlier choral composers, notably Schütz. Della Jones is the characterful soloist in both works, to be joined by David Wilson Johnson in the latter piece. The singing of the London Philharmonic Chorus throughout is first class, warmly sympathetic, as is the orchestral playing, and Matthias Bamert is in his element in this repertoire, as is the Chandos recording team.

The Chivalry of the Sea

Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7172. BBC Ch. & SO, Lloyd-Jones (with KELLY: Elegy (In Memoriam Rupert Brooke); ELKINGTON: Out of the Mist ()) – ELGAR: The Spirit of England; GURNEY: War Elegy ***

Parry wrote this cantata in 1916 to commemorate the loss of HMS Invincible when it exploded, with many victims, at the battle of Jutland. The piece, which has many fine qualities, is saddled with a very poor poem, full of oddly archaic language, by the then Poet Laureate, Robert Bridges. Nevertheless, what matters is the quality of Parry's writing, not just elegiac but including vigorous passages and one sequence in sea-shanty rhythm. It comes on a fascinating disc offering first recordings of five war-inspired works.

Evening Service in D (Great): Magnificat; Nunc Dimittis. Hear My Words, ye People; I Was Glad when They Said Unto Me; Jerusalem; Songs of Farewell

🔑  Hyp. CDA 66273. St George's Chapel, Windsor, Ch., Robinson; Judd (organ)

Everyone knows Jerusalem, which highlights this collection resplendently. In the Songs of Farewell trebles are used and the effect is less robust than in Marlow's version, but undoubtedly very affecting. Perhaps the stirring coronation anthem, I Was Glad, needs the greater weight of an adult choir, but it is still telling here. The excerpts from the Great Service in D are well worth having on record, as is the anthem, Hear My Words, ye People. Excellent recording, the chapel ambience colouring the music without blunting the words.

I Was Glad (from Psalm 122)

Ⓜ (*) EMI (ADD/DDD) 5 85148-2. Cambridge University Musical Soc., King's College, Cambridge, Ch., New Philh. O, Ledger – ELGAR: Coronation Ode etc. ***

This expansive version of Parry's most popular church anthem, very well recorded in 1977, makes an excellent bonus on this splendid Elgar disc.

Job (oratorio)

(*) Hyp. CDA 67025. Coleman-Wright, Spence, Davies, Hitchcock, Guildford Choral Soc., RPO, Davan Wetton

Though Parry, as a Victorian, sidesteps the problem of conveying the pain and bitterness in the story of Job, this is a warm, beautifully written oratorio which is most welcome on disc, very English and optimistic. It would be even better, had Hilary Davan Wetton drawn a more biting response from the chorus and had Peter Coleman-Wright in the title role, clear and direct as he is, sounded less respectful. The other soloists are first-rate, notably Toby Spence in the tenor part of Satan, and the recording is warm and atmospheric, though with the chorus rather backwardly placed. For all its limitations a highly enjoyable curiosity.

Ode on the Nativity

 Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 270. Cahill, Bach Ch., Royal College of Music Ch., LPO, Willcocks – HOLST: The Mystic Trumpeter; VAUGHAN WILLIAMS: Sons of Light ***

Parry's Ode is an elaborate, often highly contrapuntal setting of a poem of William Dunbar. Each of its six stanzas ends with the Latin line, Et nobis Puer natus est, which each time inspired Parry to a moment of dedicated intensity. The thematic material may not be as memorable as some of Parry's finest works (it was written in 1912, only five years before his death), but in a performance as committed as this, beautifully recorded, it makes a welcome rarity on record, and the couplings are equally rare.

PARSONS, Robert (1535–72)

First Great Service; Responds for the Dead

(BB)  Naxos 8.570451. Voces Cantabiles, Barnaby Smith

Robert Parsons was a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal from 1563 until his death in 1572. Not only was his Great Service revolutionary in setting the English texts but it was also one of the first settings to attempt a musical unification between the different movements. As this disc shows, he was a master of polyphony and his First Great Service was probably the model for both Byrd and Tomkins. The Liturgy, interspersed with items from the Responds for the Dead, is very English in flavour, freshly and euphoniously so, making this yet another Naxos issue to expand our range of repertory. Barnaby Smith and his Voces Cantabiles make a strong case for this little-known master, and their expert recording team do them full justice. Excellent sound. Strongly recommended.

PÄRT, Arvo (born 1935)

(i) Arbos (2 performances); (ii) Pari Intervallo; (iii) An den Wassern zu Babel; De Profundis; (iv; v) Es sang vor langen Jahren; (iii) Summa; (iii; v; vi) Stabat Mater

 ECM 831 959-2. (i) Brass Ens., Stuttgart State O, Davies; (ii) Bowers-Broadbent; (iii) Hilliard Ens., Hillier; (iv) Bickley; (v) Kremer, Mendelssohn; (vi) Demenga

All the music recorded here gives a good picture of Pärt's musical make-up with all its strengths and limitations. Arbos, which is heard in two different versions, 'seeks to create the image of a tree or family tree'. It does not modulate and has no development, though pitch and tempi are in proportional relationships. The Stabat Mater (1985) for soprano, counter-tenor, tenor and string trio is distinguished by extreme simplicity of utterance and is almost totally static. This music relies for its effect on minimal means and invites one to succumb to a kind of mystical, hypnotic repetition rather than a musical argument. The artists performing here do so with total commitment and are excellently recorded.

Bogoróditse Djévo; Dopo la vittoria; I Am the True Vine; Kanon pokajanen (Ode); Nunc dimittis; Tribute to Caesar; Triodin; The Woman with the Alabaster Box

(BB)  Naxos 8.570239. Elora Festival Singers, Edison

It is good to have an inexpensive collection to emphasize the strength of Arvo Pärt's choral writing. All this music has a ready appeal, particularly I Am the True Vine and The Woman with the Alabaster Box, set to unexpected texts, while the sparer Nunc dimittis reminds the listener of the individuality of the composer's ecclesiastical music. Excellent performances and very good recording.

(i) Cantus in Memory of Benjamin Britten; (ii) Festina lente; (i) Fratres (for string orchestra & percussion); Summa (for string orchestra); (iii) Fratres; Spiegel im Spiegel (both for violin & piano); (iv) The Beatitudes for Choir & Organ; Magnificat; (v) 7 Magnificat Antiphons; Summa

🔑 (B) * CfP 585 9142. (i) Estonian Nat. SO, Järvi; (ii) Bournemouth Sinf., Studt; (iii) Little, Roscoe; (iv) King's College, Cambridge, Ch., Cleobury; (v) Varsai Singers, Backhouse

An admirable and enterprising compilation. In the two works for violin and piano, Tasmin Little holds the listener's attention by the intensity of her commitment and the powerful projection of her playing. Summa is heard in two versions, the choral one being a fresh and carol-like setting of the Creed, and this leads naturally into the brief but concentrated Magnificat Antiphons, with the seventh the longest and most telling. Pärt's comparatively static Magnificat relies on intensity of sonority rather than movement; his better-known Beatitudes, gentle and rippling, is regularly pierced by dissonance, with the organ entering briefly and unexpectedly at the end to add a florid postlude and then disappear into infinity. Fine, idiomatic performances throughout and excellent recording.

(i) Cantus in Memory of Benjamin Britten; Festina lente (for string orchestra & harp); Summa (for string orchestra); (ii; iii) Fratres; Spiegel im Spiegel (both for violin & piano); (iv; v) The Beatitudes (for choir & organ); (iv) Summa (for choir); (i; ii; v; vi) Tabula rasa (for 2 violins, string orchestra & prepared piano)

 Telarc CD 80387. Manning, Springuel, Gleizes, I Fiamminghi, Werthen

Cantus in memoriam Benjamin Britten; Fratres (6 versions)

(BB)  Naxos 8.553750 Hungarian State Op. O, Benedek

For all the repetitions involved in Pärt's minimalist progressions there are no more hypnotic examples of his curiously compelling, ritualistic writing than this sequence of six settings of a very simple monastic chorale which he calls Fratres. We hear it first slowly swelling up from a piano-pianissimo on strings, with unobtrusive decorative percussion, then sinking away again. Then follow variants and finally rustling on the cello with the piano tolling a bell-like accompaniment until a closing climax builds and abates. The Britten tribute and Festina lente for Strings and Harp ad libitum are used as interludes. The playing here has great atmosphere and concentration, while Telarc's glowing sound adds to the sensuous physical beauty.

However the Naxos Hungarian performance is also very fine, splendidly played and richly recorded. Festina lente is omitted; instead the Cantus is used as a powerful apotheosis to end the disc with a thrilling climax.

CHORAL MUSIC

And One of the Pharisees; (i) The Beatitudes; Cantate Domino (Psalm 95); (ii) De profundis (Psalm 129); Magnificat; 7 Magnificat Antiphons; Missa Syllabica; Solfeggio; Summa (Credo)

 HM HMU 907182. Theatre of Voices, Hillier; (i) with Bowers-Broadbent (organ); Kennedy (percussion)

This 76-minute collection covers a very wide range of Pärt's choral output, from the short Solfeggio of 1964, which seems to float in space, to The Beatitudes (1990) of which this is the recording première. De Profundis again uses an organ pedal to underpin the climax. The Missa Syllabica (1977), heard here in a slightly revised version, is a fine example of Pärt's use of the simplest means to communicate his expression of the liturgical text, the repetitions within the 'Credo' a characteristic example. And One of the Pharisees is a setting for three voices of a text from Chapter 7 of St Luke's Gospel and its powerful medieval atmosphere, including solo chants, reminds us of the link which Pärt's liturgical music has with the distant past. The performances here could hardly be more powerful or atmospheric, yet they are firmly controlled. They are magnificently recorded.

St John Passion

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.555860. Macdonald, Anderson, Tonus Peregrinus, Pitts

 ECM 837 109-2. George, Potter, Hilliard Ens., Western Wind Chamber Ch. (Instrumental group), Hillier

Since it appeared in the late 1980s, the spare ritual of Arvo Pärt's setting of the Passion According to St John has established itself far more widely than could ever have been predicted, reflecting the hypnotic quality of this characteristic example of spiritual minimalism in music. Antony Pitts draws a magnetic performance from his newly founded choir, Tonus Peregrinus, and the soloists taking the roles of Christ and Pilate, and they are atmospherically recorded in bright, clear sound. It helps to sustain tension that the performance at just over an hour is some ten minutes shorter than its previous rival though that too is a dedicated performance, impeccably recorded.

PATTERSON, Paul (born 1947)

Missa brevis

Ⓑ  EMI 5 05921-2. LPO Ch., Arwel Hughes – Michael BERKELEY: Or shall we die? **(*)

The Missa brevis uses a seemingly simple style boldly and freshly. It must be as grateful for the singers as it is for the listener, with moments of pure poetry as in the Benedictus. The performance is first class.

PENDERECKI, Krzysztof (born 1933)

(i) Anaklasis; (ii; iii) Capriccio for Violin & Orchestra; (iii; iv) Cello Concerto; (iii) De natura sonoris I & II; The Dream of Jacob; Emanationen for String Orchestras; Fonogrammi; (iii; v) Partita for Harpsichord & Orchestra; (iii) Threnody for the Victims of Hiroshima; (i) Symphony; (vi) Canticum canticorum Salomonis

🔑 (BB) * EMI Gemini (ADD) 3 81508-2 (2). (i) LSO; (ii) Wilkomirska; (iii) Polish Nat. RSO; (iv) Palm; (v) Blumenthal; (vi) Krakow Philh. Ch.; all cond. composer

For those who admire such athematic music this inexpensive anthology in authoritative performances under the composer's own direction makes a splendid introduction to Penderecki's music. Anaklasis is an inventive piece for strings and percussion, and De natura sonoris is also brilliant in its use of contrasts. Wilkomirska proves a superb soloist in the Capriccio and so does Palm in the Cello Concerto. The beautiful and touching Threnody for 52 Strings is the composer's best-known piece, and it is here given a magnificent performance. The Dream of Jacob of 1974 is as inventive as the rest, but sparer. Penderecki's music relies for its appeal on the resourceful use of sonorities, and his sound-world is undoubtedly imaginative, albeit limited. The choral work is a setting of a text from the Song of Solomon for large orchestra and 16 solo voices. But the Symphony is the most ambitious work here. With such a committed performance it is certainly memorable. The 1970s recordings are excellent, and this EMI Gemini is an undoubted bargain.

(i) Concerto grosso 1 for 3 Cellos & Orchestra. Largo for Cello & Orchestra; Sonata for Cello & Orchestra

Ⓝ (BB) (*) Naxos 8.5709509. Monighetti, (i) Noras, Kwaitkowski; Warsaw Nat. PO, Wit

The most interesting and most enjoyable work here is the Concerto grosso, in which the concertino is made of three cellos, often used to create a sumptuously rich amalgam of tone or comparable polyphony. The work is in six contrasted sections, alternating vigorous and slow music and with orchestral tuttis pulsatingly complex, even Straussian – indeed, the central Allegro giocoso brings a hint of Till Eulenspiegel. There is a good deal of dissonance, although the closing Adagio brings a certain calm. The Largo for Cello and Orchestra (in fact a 28-minute triptych of three, mainly slow, movements) is even more vigorously strident at its climaxes and, to be frank, hard going at times! The aggressiveness persists in the two-movement Sonata, which also has moments of feigned irony and is scored for a large orchestra, including two bongos, three wood blocks, whip, clave and tam-tam for good measure. All three performances are of high quality, played with total, even frenzied conviction and spectacularly recorded. But this is not a disc for faint-hearts.

CHORAL MUSIC

Benedictus; Benedictus Domine; Magnificat: Sicut locutus est; Polish Requiem: Agnus Dei; Saint Luke's Passion: Stabat Mater; In pulverem mortis; Miserere; Veni creator; Song of Cherubim

🔑 (BB) * Warner Apex 8573 88433-2. Tapiola Chamber Ch., Kulvanen

This superbly sung collection inexpensively monitors Penderecki's changing style of vocal writing beginning with the excerpts from the St Luke's Passion (1962) for three mixed choruses, using dramatic spoken utterance as well as powerfully sustained block choral sonorities. The Sicut locutus est from the Magnificat (1974) works in a similar way. Then with the lovely, plaintive Agnus Dei (for eight-part mixed chorus) of 1981 there is much more movement, and a surge of romantic feeling, with a dissonant climax of real angst. The new, freer romantic style reaches its peak in the powerful and often seraphic Song of Cherubim (1986) with its gentle closing Alleluias, the finest work here. But the remarkable setting of Veni creator (1987) returns to the spoken murmurings and interjections, while climaxing with a passionate affirmation, before the ethereality of the closing Amen. By 1992 the Benedictus Domine for five-part male choir is looking back to organum, and the closing Benedictus, based on the text of the medieval Sanctus trope is linked to liturgical chant, yet romanticized and brought into our own time. The Tapiola Choir sings passionately, with fine blending and a bright firm line in an atmospheric but never blurring acoustic. With texts and translations included, this is a real bargain.

Symphony 7 (Seven Gates of Jerusalem)

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.557766. Pasychniyk, Mikolaij, Marciniec, Tesarowicz, Carmel, Warsaw Nat. Ch. & PO, Wit

This is a massive cantata in seven movements, setting Psalms in Hebrew, with Penderecki handling colossal forces with thrilling mastery. The sequence of movements brings together the choral and symphonic elements in his work very effectively. The figure '7' is used obsessively, not least in seven-note themes. The very opening is shattering in its impact, setting Psalm 48, while the longest of the seven movements is the fifth, Lauda Zion, setting Psalm 147, a Scherzo introduced by timpani and percussion. With striking and immediately attractive themes, it brings a colossal climax as powerful as anything Penderecki has written. At its peak it is interrupted by the sixth movement, setting a declamation of words from the Book of Ezekiel, representing the word of God, reinforced by a distinctive bass trumpet solo. The seventh movement then rounds the work off with a triumphant setting of Psalm 48. Performances under Antoni Wit are superb, strong and intense, with an excellent chorus and team of soloists.

OPERA

Der Teufel von Loudun (complete; DVD version)

 Arthaus DVD 101 279. Troyanos, Hiolski, Ladysz, Sotin, Gerdesmann, Hamburg State Op. Ch., Hamburg Philharmonic State O, Janowski (Dir: Rolf Liebermann, V/D: Joachim Hess)

Krzysztof Penderecki adapted his opera, Der Teufel von Loudon, writing his own libretto from the John Whiting play drawn from Aldous Huxley's Evils of Loudun. From beginning to end it is wonderfully effective, with sinister scenery and costumes in period and Liebermann's inspired production all adding to the impact. The persecution of the priest Urbain Grandier and his burning at the stake in 1634, the victim of political intrigue, is a historical fact. Round this Huxley, Whiting and Penderecki have woven an effective web of characters, some of them satirically portrayed (the persecutors) but including a group of nuns. Leading them is Tatiana Troyanos, at her powerful peak, well supported by Cvetka Ahlin, Ursula Boese and Helga Thieme as her flock, as well as the young nun, Philippe, with Ingeborg Kruger scaling stratospheric heights. Andrzej Hiolski is excellent as Urbain himself, as is Bernard Ladysz in the role of Father Barre. A historic film, well directed to attract many who would not normally respond to a modern opera.

PERGOLESI, Giovanni
(1710–36)

Confitebor tibi Domine

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ  DHM/BMG 82876 60145-2. Monoyios, Landauer, Balthazar-Neumann Ch., Freiburg Bar. O, Hengelbrock – DURANTE: Magnificat in B flat; D'ASTORGA: Stabat Mater. ✿ ***

Pergolesi's little-known setting of Psalm 110 immediately arrests the attention with its richly eloquent choral opening, but later it depends upon the solo soprano, who has a dialogue with the chorus in the Confessio, and the solo alto, whose Sanctum et terrible and Intellectus bonus create the work's expressive climax. Both Ann Monoyios and Bernhard Landauer rise to the occasion here, as does the chorus in the closing Gloria Patri and Sicut erat. The excellent period-instrument Freiburg Baroque Orchestra are notable for their characterful contribution to the Sanctum. In short, this performance, directed with life and spirit by Thomas Hengelbrock, is first class in every way, and so is the recording. Highly recommended.

(i) Magnificat in C; (ii) Stabat Mater

Ⓑ (*) Double Decca 443 868-2 (2). (i) Vaughan, J. Baker, Partridge, Keyte, King's College Ch., ASMF, Willcocks; (ii) Palmer, Hodgson, St John's College, Cambridge, Ch., Argo CO, Guest – BONONCINI: Stabat Mater; D. SCARLATTI: Stabat Mater; A. SCARLATTI: Domine, refugium factus es nobis; O magnum mysterium; CALDARA: Crucifixus; LOTTI: Crucifixus ***

This well-planned Double Decca collection centres on three different settings of the Stabat Mater dolorosa. Pergolesi's version dates from 1735 and, subsequently, settings were made by many other composers, including Vivaldi and Haydn. Pergolesi conceived a work which has secular and even theatrical overtones, and its devotional nature is unexaggerated. George Guest directs a sensible, unaffected performance, simple and expressive, with relaxed tempi, not overladen with romantic sentiment. The Magnificat – doubtfully attributed, like so much that goes under this composer's name – is a comparatively lightweight piece, notable for its rhythmic vitality. The King's College Choir under Willcocks gives a sensitive and vital performance, and the recording matches it in intensity of atmosphere.

Stabat Mater (DVD version)

Ⓝ  Medici Arts DVD 2072378. Ricciarelli, Terrani, La Scala, Milan, O, Abbado (V/D: Hugo Käch) (with VIVALDI: *Concertos: in C 'per la solennita di S. Lorenzo' RV 556; in G min., 'per l'orchestra di Dresda', RV 777 ****)

Ⓝ  EMI DVD 5 99404-9. Frittoli, Antonacci, La Scala Filharmonica, Muti (V/D: Xarlo Assalimi)

Both Abbado's and Muti's performances have two first-class soloists, who make a fine partnership in their expressive vocal exchanges and (more importantly) matching their vibratos. Both performances are beautifully sung; each conductor chooses spacious tempi, and the use of modern instruments and the resonant acoustic of each venue ensures a warm and beautiful sound from the comparatively modest-sized orchestral groups. The soloists are clearly focused and well balanced in relation to the overall visual imagery. The Medici Arts video uses the glorious baroque church of Stiftskirche, Ossiach, while the backcloth of the EMI version features the beautiful Cupola Frescoes of Gaudenzio Ferrari, on which the camera frequently dwells to poignant effect, to illustrate the crucifixion and the image of Mary standing at the foot of the Cross. The EMI bonuses include a long and intellectual exposition by Muti of the historical development of Italian music, and a whimsical commentary, 'Pergolesi and his Double', confirming that a great deal of music attributed to Pergolesi (but not the Stabat Mater) was written by others, hoping to take advantage of his reputation. The Medici Arts DVD, however, includes two of Vivaldi's finest concerti con multi istrumenti, superbly played and most effectively photographed, which are surely more enticing than the spoken alternative!

Stabat Mater (CD versions)

🔑 ❀ Ⓜ * Naïve OP 30441. Bertagnolli, Mingardo, Concerto Italiano, Alessandrini – A. SCARLATTI: *Stabat Mater *****

 DG 415 103-2. Marshall, Terrani, LSO, Abbado

(i; ii) Stabat Mater; (ii) In coelestibus regnis; (i) Salve Regina in A

 Hyp. CDA 66294. (i) Fisher; (ii) Chance; King's Consort, King

(i; ii) Stabat Mater; (ii) Salve Regina in A min.; (i) Salve Regina in F min.

 Virgin 3 63340-2. (i) Röschmann; (ii) Daniels; Europa Galante, Biondi

 Decca 466 134-2. (i) Scholl; (ii) Bonney, Les Talens Lyriques, Rousset

Both the soprano, Gemma Bertagnolli, and the contralto, Sara Mingardo (with her remarkably resonant lower register) have extraordinarily colourful voices, which blend beautifully at the work's sustained opening, but which only display their full richness in their solos, notably Cujus animam gementem and Fac ut portem Christi mortem. This is a totally Italianate performance of both high drama and moving pathos. The closing Quando corpus morietur, in which both singers join in sustained legato, is very moving indeed, followed by a passionately final affirmation of faith. Alessandrini's instrumental support could not be more telling and the recording is made in an ideal acoustic.

Abbado's account brings great intensity and ardour to this piece, and he secures marvellously alive playing from the LSO – this without diminishing religious sentiment. The DG recording has warmth and good presence and the perspective is thoroughly acceptable. But there is no coupling.

The voices of Dorothea Röschmann and David Daniels blend perfectly together, and their performance of the Stabat Mater is movingly expressive, with Biondi and Europa Galante providing persuasive instrumental backing. Then each singer is given a different setting of Salve Regina, which they also sing with some distinction. Excellent recording, but not a first choice for the Stabat Mater.

The combination of Andreas Scholl's alto and Barbara Bonney's soprano makes a well-matched and certainly individual tonal blend and they often sing exquisitely, both solo and in tandem. Both settings of the Salve Regina are authentic: Andreas Scholl sings the A minor, Barbara Bonney the F minor. Throughout, Christophe Rousset's period-instrument accompaniments are outstandingly fine and full of life, and the Decca recording is splendidly real.

The Hyperion recording also makes a very good case for authenticity in this work. The combination of soprano and male alto blends well together yet offers considerable variety of colour. Gillian Fisher's Salve Regina is quite a considerable piece in four sections, whereas Michael Chance's motet is brief but makes an engaging postlude. Excellent sound.

PEROTINUS, Magister

(c. 1160–1225)

Organa: Alleluya, Nativitas; Sederunt principes

 Lyrichord (ADD) LEMS 8002. Oberlin, Bressler, Perry, Barab – LEONIN: Organa

Perotinus extended the simple polyphony of Leonin from two to three and four parts, and the ear is very aware of the intervals which characterize the organum: unison, octave, fourths and fifths. This music is more florid, freer than the coupled works written several decades before. The performances here are totally compelling and the recording excellent.

Beata viscera; Sederunt principes; Viderunt omnes (with Plainchant)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.557340. Tonus Peregrinus (with ANON.: Vetus abit littera. Clausulae Motet on Dominus; Non nobis Domine) – LEONIN: *Viderunt omnes ****

The Naxos disc opens with a monophonic conductus, freely flowing and soaring, which reminds one of the music of Hildegard. But later in the collection we are offered Viderunt omnes as a four-part organum for male voices, a darkly powerful setting. Later, Sederunt principes brings in female voices over a drone effect; to conclude the disc, we are offered a four-part conductus for mixed voices, joyfully rhythmic in the way of a dance. The performances are first rate and the echoing acoustic is just right. If you have never heard organum with its bare intervals (octave, fourths and fifths), you will find this disc aurally fascinating.

PERRY, William (born 1930)

Mark Twain Film Scores: Adventures of Huckleberry Finn; Innocents Abroad; Life on the Mississippi; (i) The Mysterious Stranger; The Private History of a Campaign that Failed; Pudd'nhead Wilson

(BB) * Naxos 8.570200. Various orchestras, composer; (i) with V. Boys' Ch.

William Perry wrote his Mark Twain film scores between 1980 and 1986, still golden years for Hollywood film music. The brilliant orchestrations were by Richard Hayman (who also plays the harmonica in the sessions) and three other musician-arrangers, besides the composer himself. Perry was not only a natural tunesmith, he had a feeling for the folksy American atmosphere essential for this repertoire. He could create a memorable Hollywoodian sweep too, as in the opening music for Adventures of Huckleberry Finn, where the ten vignettes are like a miniature suite, full of ear-tickling invention and glowing orchestral colour. But the other scores here are hardly less inventive. In Life on the Mississippi the hero's girl-friend Emmeline is given a charming waltz for her courtship, and Innocents Abroad brings orchestral vignettes of Paris, Venice and Genoa. The title music of The Private History is equally ear-catching and, to round things off, Perry employs the Vienna Boys' Choir for The Mysterious Stranger. The performances here, by three different orchestras, conducted by the composer, could not be more persuasive, and Hayman's harmonica interludes add to the rustic feeling. Excellently sumptuous and vivid recording increases the pleasures of this entertaining disc.

PERSICHETTI, Vincent (1915–87)

Divertimento for Band, Op. 42; Chorale Prelude, O God Unseen, Op. 160; Masquerade, Op. 102; O Cool is the Valley, Op. 118; Pageant, Op. 59; Parable, Op. 121; Psalm, Op. 53

(BB)  Naxos 8.570123. LSO Winds, Amos

Persichetti was an inventive and powerful symphonist who followed the traditions of Piston, Roy Harris and William Schuman. He was a particularly distinguished composer for wind ensemble, and these inventive and vital works are well worth exploring. The playing of the LSO Winds under David Amos is virtuosic and infectious.

PETTERSSON, Allan (1911–80)

Violin Concerto 2

 CPO 777 199-2. Van Keulen, Swedish RSO, Dausgaard

Symphonies 1–15

(B)  CPO 777 247-2 (12). BBC Scottish SO; Saarbrücken RSO, Francis; Berlin Deutsche SO, Francis, Trojahn or Ruzicka; Hamburg PO, Albrecht; Berlin RSO, Thomas Sandering or Arnell; NDR SO, Francis; Swedish R. Ch. & SO, Honeck

CPO have made something of a speciality of recording the music of Allan Pettersson. A pupil of René Leibowitz in Paris, Pettersson soon turned his back on twelve-note music. The Swedish public had been force-fed on serial and post-serial music and understandably turned to his tonal music with relief. The Second Violin Concerto comes from the late 1970s, in the last years of his life. The revision is blessed with the most dedicated and brilliant advocate in Isabelle van Keulen, who is expertly partnered by the same orchestra under Thomas Dausgaard. There is an unappealing vein of self-pity in Pettersson's music and none of the concentration and distinction of mind you find in such Nordic contemporaries as Rosenberg, Holmboe or Tubin. But Pettersson's many admirers can rest assured that the playing could hardly be bettered, and the recording is natural and lifelike.

All 15 of his Symphonies plus the Symphonic Movement have been recorded on the CPO label (CPO 777 247-2) and there are separate recordings on the BIS label of Nos. 5, coupled with the amorphous Viola concerto (BIS CD 480), 7 and 11 (BIS CD 580); and 8 and 10 (BIS CD 880). This music has a strong emotional appeal for some music lovers. Much of it (the Seventh, for instance) wears an anguished visage and packs a strong emotional punch. But in musical substance these works are less weighty than appears to be the case on first acquaintance. Often invention flags and (as in the Fifth Symphony) the brooding, expectant atmosphere and powerful ostinatos arouse more promise of development than fulfilment. In the Eighth Symphony the music is often static and wanting symphonic coherence. The Ninth Symphony was composed in the valley of the shadow of death. Life being short and sweet, one can only say that the 70 minutes which it takes to unfold seem an eternity. The Tenth is shorter, but is still essentially empty: the music of gesture, not substance.

PHILIPS, Peter (1560–1628)

Music for Clavichord, Harpsichord, Organ and Virginal

 MDG 341 1257-2. Rampe (various keyboard instruments)

This disc is part of a Dabringhaus und Grimm series planning a complete survey of Peter Philips's keyboard works. But for most collectors this single disc will serve as an admirable introduction, as Siegbert Rampe is not only an expert keyboard player, but is also very knowledgeable about the repertoire. He uses two different organs to introduce and end his programme, and as a centrepiece plays on two different clavichords, a virginal and a Ruckers harpsichord. Moreover, the variety of the music (which all springs vividly to life) is increased by the Italian influence on Philips's compositions after he had fled to Rome in 1582 to escape persecution in England as a Catholic. Also much of his keyboard writing takes the form of intabulations of Italian vocal works – by Lassus, among others. There are seven such arrangements here. The performances are admirable, and so is the recording.

14 Motets

🔑 (BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55254. Winchester Cathedral Ch., Parley of Instruments, Hill

Peter Philips is the least known of the 'Elizabethan' composers and, as this splendid collection of his vocal music readily demonstrates, this is not because his compositions are of poor quality. Indeed their invention overflows with vitality and expressive conviction. His music is spirited and full of expressive fervour and joy, and this comes out splendidly in these eloquent performances by David Hill and his Winchester Cathedral Choir, accompanied by the Parley of Instruments, who in this instance use a continuo of lute, theorbo, double harp and chamber organs.

PHILLIPS, Montague (1885–1969)

Arabesque; Moorland Idyll; The Rebel Maid: 4 Dances; Revelry Overture; A Shakespearean Scherzo (Titania and her Elvish Court); Sinfonietta; A Surrey Suite; Symphony in C min.

Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7140. BBC Concert O, Sutherland

Montague Phillips's collection gets off to an exhilarating start with the Revelry Overture of 1937, a lively six-minute piece encompassing many attractive ideas, all brightly orchestrated. The Four Dances from his comic-opera The Rebel Maid are very much in the vein of Edward German and Sullivan – and none the worse for that – with their rustic atmosphere also pervading other numbers, including the pleasing Moorland Idyll, which has a lilting middle section in the manner of Dvořák. The two movements which make up the C minor Symphony (first heard in 1912) include A Summer Nocturne, showing the composer in a rather deeper emotional mood, while A Spring Rondo is in a more characteristic and lighter vein (the other two movements of the Symphony have yet to be reconstructed). The Arabesque of 1927 has an appealing Russian flavour, while the Shakespearean Scherzo, a lively and inventive mini tone-poem, is very enjoyable too. Although written during wartime Britain in 1943, the Sinfonietta is stiff-upper-lip heroic music rather than reflecting the horrors of war, and the slow movement is agreeably nostalgic. The work ends triumphantly. Excellent performances as usual from Gavin Sutherland, well known from his ASV recordings, but here on one of Dutton's discs, superbly engineered.

Charles II Overture; Empire March; Festival Overture (In Praise of my Country); Hampton Court; In May Time; In Old Verona: A Serenade for Strings; Hillside Melody; (i) Phantasy for Violin & Orchestra, Op. 16

 Dutton CDLX 7158. BBC Concert O, Sutherland, (i) with Trusler

This second volume of Montague Phillips's orchestral music is every bit as good as the first. All this is 'light' music of the highest order, of the sort that rarely, if ever, gets played nowadays. Excellent performances and recording.

PIAZZOLA, Astor (1921–92)

Milonga del Angel; 3 Movimientos tanguisticos portenos; Sinfonietta; Tangazo

 Chan. 10049. Württemberg Philharmonie Reutlingen, Castagno

Those who know Piazzola's music from popular arrangements of his tangos will be intrigued by this collection of more ambitious works, all of which demonstrate his vivid imagination in devising distinctive melody and harmonies, colourfully orchestrated. The strongly committed performances are very well recorded.

PIERNÉ, Gabriel (1863–1937)

(i) Andante; Berceuse; Canzonetta; Chamber Sonata; La Danseuse espagnole; Fantaisie impromptu; Violin Sonata; (ii) Giration (ballet); Sérénade; Pastorale variée; (ii; iii) Nuit divine; (ii) Pastorale for Wind Quintet; Pièce for Oboe & Piano; Piano Quintet; Préludio e fughetta; Solo de concert

🔑  Timpani 2C 1110 (2). (i) Koch & Ivaldi; (ii) Instrumental Soloists of Luxembourg PO, Ivaldi; (iii) with Rémy Franck (narrator)

Those readers remembering the 78-r.p.m. era may recall Gabriel Pierné's once famous novelty, the Parade of the Little Lead Soldiers. He made his initial reputation with orchestral morceaux of this kind. With the arrival of the Violin Sonata at the turn of the century he began to write music of more depth. It is a work of feeling, the lyrical inspiration of the first movement is appealing, and the dreamy, folksy Andante tranquillo is hardly less endearing. Influences of Pierné's mentor, César Franck, are plain. But the work is impressive in its own terms, especially when played with such warmth and conviction as it is by Philippe Koch and Christian Ivaldi, and vividly recorded. The Piano Quintet of 1916/17 is also strongly influenced by the comparable Franck work. The performers play throughout with great conviction. However, with the wind music on the second disc, the ear is endlessly diverted. The pieces for plangent oboe, or bubbling bassoon (with piano) are delightful, as is the Pastorale variée for wind septet (including trumpet), while the Giration ballet (of 1933) is whimsically inventive and engagingly scored. These works are all played with pleasing elegance and are beautifully recorded. At times one is reminded of the music of Françaix. However, the last, rather sentimental item on the disc, Nuit divine, includes the recitation of a poem by d'Albert Samain for which no translation is provided! Otherwise presentation and documentation are impeccable.

Cello Sonata in F sharp min., Op. 46

 Hyp. CDA 66979. Lidström, Forsberg – KOECHLIN: Cello Sonata; etc. ***

Pierné was an interesting and cultured composer. His sonata is finely wrought with touches of real individuality, and well worth getting to know. Mats Lidström and Bengt Forsberg play with great intelligence and refinement and are well served by the engineers.

PIGGOTT, Patrick (1915–90)

Fantasia quasi una sonata (No. 1); Sonata 2; 8 Preludes and a Postlude (3rd Set)

 British Music Soc. BMS 430CD. Malcolm Binns

Born in Dover, Patrick Piggott developed first as a brilliant pianist. The Fantasia quasi una sonata is one of the few works from his earlier years that he acknowledged. Not surprisingly, for his complex individual musical language is firmly stamped upon it. The Second Sonata and Third Set of Preludes date from his later years; both were dedicated to Malcolm Binns. The Preludes unpredictably contrast fast and slow tempi (and sections) and, while the central Presto Commodio and following Con Moto both demand considerable bravura, the repose of the intervening sections makes for a satisfying emotional sequence; and the work ends with a dignified, contemplative Postlude – In Tempo di Corteo. The mature Second Sonata sums up Piggott's musical language, with its complex, all but obsessive figurations and its ambiguity of mode, though not easy to get to grips with, it undoubtedly blossoms with repeated listening. It is played persuasively and expertly by an artist who really understands its inherent ruminative intricacies, and very naturally recorded.

PINTO, George Frederick (1785–1806)

Fantasia & Sonata in C min. (completed Joseph Woelfl); Grand Sonatas 1 in E flat; 2 in A, Op. 3/1–2; in C min.; Minuetto in A flat; Rondo in E flat; Rondo on an Irish Air, 'Cory Owen'

🔑  Chan. 9798. O'Rorke (piano)

This unmissable Chandos collection reveals another forgotten composer of distinction, who might have become a very considerable figure had he not died prematurely at the age of 21. His first two Grand Sonatas were published in 1801 when Pinto was 16 and already a very accomplished composer indeed, with a distinct individuality, yet writing in a forward-looking lyrical style, that sometimes reminds us of the young Schubert. The C minor Sonata, however, is dedicated to John Field and delightfully identifies with that composer's melodic simplicity. But most striking of all is the Fantasia and Sonata in C minor, left unfinished at the composer's death, the opening quite worthy of Mozart, with a following Adagio–Fugato which has all the serenity of Bach, followed by a Beethovenian finale, which yet still has a personality of its own. Míceál O'Rorke plays all this music very persuasively indeed and is beautifully recorded.

PISENDEL, Johann Georg (1687–1755)

Sonata in C min. for 2 Oboes & Strings; (i) Violin Concerto in D

Ⓑ  DHM 05472 77339-2. (i) von der Goltz; Freiburg Bar. O, von der Goltz – ZELENKA: Concertos ***

Pisendel, also the leader/concert master of the Dresden Court Orchestra, was a famous solo violin virtuoso in his day, and a friend of Vivaldi. Compared with Zelenka, with whom he is paired on this disc, his music is more conventional, much less capricious, but the Violin Concerto is laced with virtuoso interludes for the soloist of which Gottfried von der Goltz takes full advantage. This is the Freiburg Baroque Orchestra of 1994, but it is already a very impressive ensemble.

5 Violin Sonatas

 CPO 999 982-2. Steck, Rieger

Johann Pisendel wrote his Violin Sonatas after studying with Vivaldi in Italy, but these works have a distinct personality of their own, with plenty of dazzling bravura reflecting the composer's own virtuosity. The performances here by Anton Steck and Christian Rieger (harpsichord) revel in the bravura, but are also sensitively expressive. The recording is very good and this collection certainly brings its composer's music to life.

PISTON, Walter (1894–1976)

(i) Capriccio for Harp & String Orchestra; 3 New England Sketches; Serenata; Symphony 4

🔑 ✿ (BB) * Naxos 8.559162. Seattle SO, Schwarz, with (i) Wunrow

The Fourth is Piston's most radiant and appealing symphony, one of the masterpieces of American – and not only American – symphonic writing. This and the three New England Sketches are among the composer's strongest and most attractive scores, and they come here in outstanding performances under Gerald Schwarz, originally issued on the Delos label, and here made doubly attractive at super-bargain price. The four movements of the Symphony are all strongly characterized, with the gentle piacevole opening of the first movement leading to tough counterpoint, strongly syncopated, and the second movement Ballando rather like a hoe-down, vigorous open-air music, with the evocative slow movement leading to a jaggedly rhythmic finale. The New England Sketches are more specifically evocative, set in contrast like a symphony, with a delicate picture of a Summer Evening placed between the opening picture of the seaside and the final rugged picture of Mountains. Even so, the musical argument is cogent, and although the Capriccio is less tautly constructed, it has an element of fantasy beautifully realized here by the excellent harpist, Therese Elder Wunrow. First-rate sound.

Violin Concertos 1–2; Fantasia for Violin & Orchestra

🔑 ✿ BB * Naxos 8.559003. Boswell, Ukraine Nat. SO, Kuchar

It is quite extraordinary that a work as inspired as Piston's First Violin Concerto (1939) should not already be in the standard repertoire alongside the Barber, with which it has much in common, including a comparable profusion of individual, lyrical melody. The second subject of the first movement persists in the memory until, most engagingly, it is rhythmically transformed to become the secondary theme of the riotous Rondo finale. The Second Concerto is more elusive, but its opening is no less haunting. The first movement is a two-part structure, developing two ideas, one sinuously 'expressible', the other pungently rhythmic and angular. The extended Adagio introduces a calm and very beautiful theme which is later to form a canonic duet with the flute. The Fantasia is a late work, first performed in 1973. Ruminative and searching, its language is more dissonant. It may seem remarkable that these works should be given their CD début by a Ukrainian orchestra, but they play the music with security, splendid commitment and feeling. James Boswell, who studied at Juilliard, is a superbly accomplished, dedicated and spontaneous soloist, and the recording is first class.

Symphonies 2; 6

🔑 BB * Naxos 8.559161. Seattle SO, Schwarz

Make no mistake, these are superb works and they are interpreted here with total dedication and eloquence. This competitively priced coupling makes as good an entry point into Piston's musical world as any – almost as good as the Fourth. On its original Delos release an additional work, the Sinfonietta, was included but is omitted here.

Symphonies 5; (i) 7 & 8

 Albany AR 011. Louisville O, Whitney; (i) Mester

The Fifth Symphony has a sureness of purpose and feeling for organic growth that are the hallmark of the true symphonist. The Seventh and Eighth Symphonies, though not quite the equal of the finest Piston, are powerful and rewarding works which will speak to those who are more concerned with substance than with surface appeal. The Louisville performances are thoroughly committed and good, without being outstanding. The recordings sound better than they did on LP.

Flute Quartet; Piano Quartet; Piano Quintet; String Sextet

BB  Naxos 8.559071. Shylayeva, Gurt, Munrow, Buswell, Walsh, Hall, Gault, Kuchar, Kelly, Glyde, Ou

The Piano Quintet is not only one of his finest works but one of the great quintets of the twentieth century, with a master's understanding of the medium and the musical material most effective and natural to it. It is a gripping and powerful piece, and the Flute Quartet and Piano Quartet are also well worth getting to know when the performances here are so sympathetic and the recording very good.

PIZZETTI, Ildebrando
(1880–1968)

Clitennestra: Preludio. Concerto dell'estate; La festa delle Panatenee: 3 pezzi per orchestra. Tre preludii Sinfonici per L'Edipo Re di Sofocle

N BB (*) Naxos 8.572013. Thessaloniki SO, Michailidis

The Concerto dell'estate has not been recorded since the days of LP, when it was very successfully performed by Lamberto Gardelli for Decca. It is a work of inventive skill and resource, and has no lack of charm, as have its companions on this disc. The performances from Thessalonika under Myron Michailidis are good without being top-drawer.

Concerto de l'estate; La pisanella: Suite

(*) Decca Australian Eloquence (ADD) 476 9766. SRO, Gardelli – RESPIGHI: Trittico Botticelliano *; ROTA: Concerto for Strings ***

The best music here is contained in the La pisanella excerpts, where the colourful score is redolent of Respighi and full of lush orchestral sonorities. The Concerto de l'estate is a later work, dating from 1929, and does not wear quite so well. It may strike one as being as hollow as an Eastman-color epic, if you are not in the right mood, and its pentatonic opening soon becomes tiresome. However, if you are in the mood, Gardelli's direction is very positive, even if the Suisse Romande Orchestra is not the most virtuosic. The Decca sound is impressive for its age. Good couplings.

L'Edipo Re di Sofocle; La pisanella; Preludio a un altro giorno; Rondò veneziano

N BB  Hyp. Helios CDH55329. BBC Scottish SO, Vänskä

Pizzetti's La pisanella is a delight and was one of his few works to make it into the 78-r.p.m. catalogue. But Pizzetti is, like Respighi, a master of the orchestra and richly inventive. Osmo Vänskä conducts with authority and flair, and obviously believes in these all-too-rarely performed scores.

La pisanella; Preludio a un altra giorno; 3 Symphonic Preludes (from L'Edipo Re); Rondò veneziano

N  Hyp. CDA 67084. BBC Scottish SO, Vänskä

This well-filled programme makes an excellent introduction to Pizzetti. The Rondò veneziano of 1929 was first performed by Toscanini; the three Preludes from the opera L'Edipo Re di Sofocle are full of interest, and La pisanella is a sunny and glorious work. Osmo Vänskä plays all these pieces with appropriate feeling, but the string sound lacks real body and richness, particularly at the bass end of the spectrum.

Messa di requiem; De profundis

🔑 🏵 * Hyp. CDA 67017. Westminster Cathedral Ch., O'Donnell – MARTIN: Mass for Double Choir, etc. 🏵 ****

Messa di Requiem; 2 composizioni corali: Il giardino dia Afrodite; Piena sorgeva la luna; 3 composizioni corali: Cade la sera; Ululate; Recordare, Domine

(*) Chan. 8964. Danish Nat. R. Chamber Ch., Parkman

Pizzetti's 'serene and lyrical Requiem' (as his biographer, Guido Gatti puts it) is a work of surpassing beauty which will be a revelation to those who have not encountered it before, particularly in this fervent and inspired performance. It comes with the De profundis he composed in 1937 to mark the healing of his breach with Malipiero. Fine though the performance by the Danish Radio Chamber Choir under Stephen Parkman is, coupled with other Pizzetti choral pieces, this Westminster Cathedral version completely supplants it.

Assassinio nella Cattedrale (opera; complete)

Ⓝ 🏵 * Decca DVD 0743253. Raimondi, Cordella, Valleggi, De Gobbi, Fabbian , Marrocu, Zarmella, Soloists & Ch. of the Conservatorio Piccinni di Bari, O Sinf. della Provincia di Bari, Morandi

Assassinio nella Cattedrale (1958) is the only Pizzetti opera to have been professionally staged in England. It is based on Alberto Castelli's translation of T. S. Eliot's play, which Pizzetti shortened and adapted: he omits the knights' justification of the murder of the archbishop in Eliot's epilogue. This performance, recorded in Basilica di San Nicola in Bari, should do much to put this wonderful score back on the map. Ruggero Raimondi has tremendous presence as the Archbishop and is in magnificent voice (he must now be in his mid-sixties) and acts majestically. The remainder of the cast is hardly less inspired, and the production is visually sumptuous. The opera is short, but it is totally compelling, both musically and dramatically. The musical flow is dignified and stately as befits the subject matter and the orchestral palette subtle in its colouring. There are moments when its melodic lines suggest that the lessons of Mussorgsky and Pelléas have been observed as well as late Verdi, and the choral writing has an almost symphonic sweep. Assassinio nella Cattedrale has been absurdly neglected on the stage (as indeed has Pizzetti generally) but this superbly paced and intensely felt reading brings home the beauty and nobility of this score. Recommended with enthusiasm.

PLEYEL, Ignaz (1757–1831)

Clarinet Concertos 1–2 in B flat; (i) Sinfonia concertante in B flat for 2 Clarinets & Orchestra

Ⓝ  CPO 777 241-2. Klöcker; (i) Arnold; SW Deutsches CO, Pforzheim, Tewinkel

The name of Ignaz Pleyel is famous as a French manufacturer of pianos but, around the time that Haydn was visiting London for the Salomon concerts, Pleyel was far better known as a composer and his easily tuneful music was enormously popular. His writing is a bit like Boccherini without the pathos. Here the two Clarinet Concertos with their debt to Mozart (and others) have plenty of surface charm, especially in the jocular finales. The Sinfonia concertante is rare, not only in featuring a pair of clarinets, but also in using them a great deal in close duet, often playing in thirds – so the effect is more like a double concerto. Again the music is pleasing and it is very well played and recorded.

Violin Concerto in D; Symphonies concertantes: (i) in A; (ii) in B flat

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.570320. Perry; (i) Lippi (violin); (ii) Chiang (viola); Baltimore CO, Thakar

As can be seen from the listing, the B flat Sinfonie Concertante features the viola as its second solo instrument. It has only two movements, the first characteristically expansive; but it is the A major that is the more striking work with its opening tutti sounding very like Mozart. It has a brief but memorable Adagio and closes with a delightful 'tic-toc' rondo that might almost have been by Paganini. The solo Violin Concerto has another fine Cantabile slow movement and a catchy finale (composed several years after the first two movements). Excellent solo playing, especially from the nimble David Perry, a stylish modern-instrument accompaniment from the Baltimore Chamber Orchestra and excellently balanced recording.

'Prussian Quartets': 7 in D; 8 in F; 9 in G min.

Ⓝ  CPO 777 315-2. Pleyel Qt Köln

In 1776 Pleyel completed his studies with Haydn, with whom he had learned much about the string quartet medium. Even so, he preferred a three-movement format, and wrote 57 works in this form. It is not clear when the 12 Prussian Quartets were written, but they became the most popular of Pleyel's output. Mozart admired them and had commented earlier to his father, 'it will be a lucky day for music if later on Pleyel should be able to replace Haydn'. Certainly the three quartets here show a natural aptitude for the medium. The D major work has a fine Amoroso slow movement; the F major has only two movements because the second is extended, a set of variations on an engaging siciliano-type melody. It is the G minor, which has the most striking finale, a busy moto perpetuo frames a central Menuetto cantabile. All three works are excellently played and recorded.

PLUMMER, John (died c. 1487)

Missa Sine nomine

 Signum SIGCD 015. Clerks' Group, Wickham (with BEDYNGHAM: Myn hertis lust; Fortune alas; Mi verry joy; ANON.: Kyrie; Song; Pryncesse of youthe ) – FRYE: Missa Flos regalis, etc. ***

We know very little about the English composer, John

Plummer, whose Mass only survives in a Brussels manuscript. His setting is rather bare and primitive in its part-writing, less inspired than its coupling by Walter Frye, but it makes a fascinating aural glimpse into an unfamiliar period of English polyphony. The coupled songs by Bedyngham are delightful and this whole collection, beautifully sung and recorded, is treasurable.

PONCE, Manuel (1882–1948)

Concierto del sur

🔑  Warner 2564 60296-2. Isbin, NYPO, Serebrier – RODRIGO: Concierto de Aranjuez; VILLA-LÔBOS: Guitar Concerto ***

As Sharon Isbin suggests in her notes to this CD, Ponce has 'a magical gift of lyricism, counterpoint and colour', and this is a delightful, lightweight concerto, scored with a delicate palette and engaging transparency. Throughout, the guitar, in free fantasia, embroiders the glowing orchestral texture. The themes are gentle but soon insinuate themselves into the listener's consciousness, while Isbin's subtle guitar frescos and roulades captivate the ear. She plays marvellously and is accompanied by Serebrier with great skill.

Folia de España (Theme & Variations with Fugue)

🔑 (BB)  Sony (ADD) SBK 47669. Williams (guitar) – BARRIOS: Collection ***

Ponce's Variations on 'Folia de España' are subtle and haunting, and their surface charm often conceals a vein of richer, darker feeling. The performance is first rate and the sound admirably clean and finely detailed, yet at the same time warm.

PONCHIELLI, Amilcare (1834–86)

La Gioconda (complete; DVD version)

(*) TDK DVD DVWW OPGIOC (2). Voigt, Fiorillo, Columbara, Podles, Margison, Guelfi, Liceu Theatre Ch. & O, Callegari (Dir: Pier Luigi Pizzi, V/D: Pietro d'Agonistino)

Recorded in Barcelona at the Liceu Theatre in 2005, this DVD offers a powerful reading of Ponchielli's most celebrated opera, led by the formidable Deborah Voigt in the title-role, powerfully intense, not least in her Suicidio. Opposite her in the tenor role of Enzo is Richard Margison, strong and lusty rather than subtle in his big aria, Cielo el mar. Visually, neither is a romantic figure, nor is Elisabetta Fiorillo as Laura, but Carlo Columbara as Alvise is strong and handsome. Impressive too is the fruity-toned contralto, Eva Podles, as La Cieca, adding to the melodrama. In the Pizzi production the melodrama is sometimes overdone, as when La Gioconda stabs herself; but, with traditional costumes set against stylized sets involving a sequence of staircases, the production does not get in the way of the story-telling. Daniele Callegari is a lively conductor, drawing crisp playing from the orchestra in the celebrated Dance of the Hours.

La Gioconda (complete)

🔑  EMI 5 57451-2 (3). Urmana, Domingo, d'Intino, Fiorillo, Scandiuzi, Ataneli, Bavarian R. Ch., Munich R. O, Viotti

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 56291-2 (3) also 3 81854-2 (2). Callas, Cossotto, Ferraro, Vinco, Cappuccilli, Companeez, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Votto

Ⓜ  Decca 475 6670 (3). Caballé, Baltsa, Pavarotti, Milnes, Ghiaurov, Hodgson, L. Op. Ch., Nat. PO, Bartolletti

Ⓜ () Fonit mono 3984 29355-2 (3). Callas, Barbieri, Amadini, Silveri, Neri, Poggi, Turin R. Ch. & O, Votto

Though Plácido Domingo was 61 by the time of the sessions, you would never know that from his singing, which is full and rounded with no hint of strain, rising to a performance of the big tenor aria, Cielo e mar, that is beautiful, deeply felt and finely shaded. He is well matched by the soprano, formerly a mezzo, Violeta Urmana, in the title-role of La Gioconda. She may not have the temperament of such leading rivals on disc as Maria Callas and Montserrat Caballé, but the firm, rich focus of her voice is consistently satisfying. She brings out the musical qualities of Ponchielli's writing, with the big Act IV aria, Suicidio, offering a formidable range of tone and expression. Similarly, others in the generally excellent cast, such as Luciana d'Intino as Laura, Elisabetta Fiorillo as La Cieca and Lado Ataneli as the scheming Barnaba, may not be as characterful as some on the finest rival sets (none recent), but they tackle the vocal problems of this demanding score most satisfyingly. A clear choice among digital versions.

Maria Callas gave one of her most vibrant, most compelling, most totally inspired performances on record in the title-role of La Gioconda, with flaws very much subdued. The challenge she presented to those around her is reflected in the soloists – Cossotto and Cappuccilli both at the very beginning of distinguished careers – as well as the distinctive tenor Ferraro and the conductor Votto, who has never done anything finer on record. The recording still sounds well, though it dates from 1959. This a mid-priced set with a synopsis.

The casting of Decca's 1980 La Gioconda could hardly have been bettered in its day, with Caballé just a little overstressed in the title-role but producing glorious sounds. Pavarotti, for long immaculate in the aria Cielo e mar, here expands into the complete role with equally impressive control and heroic tone. Bartolletti proves a vigorous and understanding conductor, presenting the blood-and-thunder with total commitment but finding the proper charm in the most famous passage, the Dance of the Hours. Full texts and translation are included in this mid-priced Classic Opera release.

Like the companion Callas set of La Traviata, this Fonit set was recorded (for Cetra in 1952) very early in the diva's career. She was to re-record the opera in 1959, again Votto, but, as in the remake, the present set shows her dramatic powers at their peak and the voice fresher than ever. Votto conducts with understanding, maintaining a spontaneous dramatic flow and the remastering of the old mono recording is surprisingly good.

La Gioconda: Dance of the Hours

 Testament (ADD) SBT 1327. Philh. O, Mackerras – VERDI: Overtures and ballet music; WOLF-FERRARI: Overtures, Intermezzi & Dances ()

With the Philharmonia Orchestra in superb form, Mackerras brings refinement and point to his performance without loss of sparkle.

PORTER, Quincy (1897–1966)

String Quartets 1–4

(BB)  Naxos 8.559305. Ives Qt

Quincy Porter comes from Connecticut and belongs to the generation of Roy Harris, Howard Hanson and Roger Sessions. The first four quartets, accommodated on this disc, were composed over the period 1922–31 and are highly civilized, beautifully crafted pieces, though there is quite a lot of Bloch in them. There is, as one might expect, a Gallic feel to much of it, but the listener is held throughout and the composer has a fine sense of line, and the contrapuntal writing and the texture are always transparent and full of interest. A very enjoyable disc, which whets one's appetite for the remaining five quartets.

POTTS, Francis (born 1957)

Christus (Passion Symphony for solo organ)

Ⓝ * Signum SIGCD 062 (2). Filsell (organ of St Peter's Church, Eaton Square, London)

Francis Potts is a virtuoso performer on both piano and organ, and is Head of Composition and Research Development at the London College of Music. It is perhaps surprising he chose not to record Christus himself; but in the event Jeremy Filsell was an expert choice, and the magnificent new organ at St Peter's, Eaton Square, proves ideal for the music itself. In the composer's own words, 'Christus owes little to the French tradition of organ symphony', and he further acknowledges the great influence of Carl Nielsen on his music. The five movements of Christus trace the 'Coming of Christ', the 'Deposition', 'Gethsemane', 'the Tomb' and finally 'the Resurrection', portrayed as 'a vast struggle towards ultimate triumph'. The music is fundamentally tonal, but the work's first four notes provide a continual motivic presence throughout. That Christus is astonishingly original goes without saying and yet it is wholly accessible. The composer has provided an extremely detailed note about the music's progress which it is possible to follow while listening, although one regrets that it is not closely cued to the 45 bands offered on the pair of CDs.

POULENC, Francis (1899–1963)

ORCHESTRAL MUSIC

(i) Les Animaux modèles; (ii; iii) Les Biches (ballet; complete); (ii) Bucolique; (i; iv) Concert champêtre (for harpsichord & orchestra); (i; v) Double Piano Concerto in D min.; (vi) 2 Marches et un intermède (for Chamber Orchestra); Les Mariés de la Tour Eiffel (La Baigneuse de Trouville; Discours du général); (ii) Matelote provençale; Pastourelle; (vi) Sinfonietta; Suite française

🔑 Ⓑ * EMI Rouge et Noir (ADD/DDD) 5 69446-2 (2). (i) Paris Conservatoire O; (ii) Philh. O; (iii) Amb. S.; (iv) van der Wiele; (v) composer; Février; (vi) O de Paris; all cond. Prêtre

Les Biches comes here in its complete form, with the choral additions that Poulenc made optional when he came to rework the score. The music is a delight, and so too is the group of captivating short pieces, digitally recorded at the same time (1980): Bucolique, Pastourelle and Matelote provençale. High-spirited, fresh, elegant playing and sumptuous recorded sound enhance the claims of all this music. The Suite française is another highlight. It is well played and recorded in a pleasing, open acoustic. Poulenc himself was a pianist of limited accomplishment, but his interpretation with Jacques Février of his own skittish Double Concerto is infectiously jolly. In the imitation pastoral concerto for harpsichord, Aimée van der Wiele is a nimble soloist, but here Prêtre's inflexibility as a conductor comes out the more, even though the finale has plenty of high spirits. With nearly 156 minutes' playing time, these CDs are well worth exploring.

Aubade; Concert champêtre; Piano Concerto; Double Piano Concerto in D min.; Organ Concerto in G min.; Sinfonietta

Ⓝ (BB)  Virgin 2CD 2 522045-2 (2). Pommier, Cole, Queffélec, Weir, City of L. Sinf., Hickox

Jean-Bernard Pommier gives a thoroughly idiomatic and incisive account of the Aubade, and both he and Anne Queffélec play the Concerto for Two Pianos to the manner born. They have the measure of the pastiche Mozart slow movement and the quasi-Gamelan first. Pommier seems less at home in the Piano Concerto and misses the gamin-like charm of the opening. The instrument is also a bit laid back and has a slightly resonant halo. The Concert champêtre is charming, though the perspective is not good. However, Gillian Weir is splendidly idiomatic in the Organ Concerto and Hickox gives an affectionate and charming account of the Sinfonietta. So, all in all this set is a good bargain.

Aubade; Piano Concerto; (i) Double Piano Concerto in D min.

🔑 * RCA 82876 60308-2. Le Sage, Liège PO, Denève; (i) with Braley

🔑 (BB) * Warner Apex 2564 62552-2. Duchable, Rotterdam PO, Conlon; (i) with Collard

After the ambivalent mood of the opening Toccata, Poulenc's Aubade ('an allegory of women and feminine solitude') is a series of brief vignettes, witty, audacious and melancholy by turns. The easy going charm of the opening of the Piano Concerto is also admirably caught, the Andante wistfully romantic and the skittish finale making a perfect foil. Both are played with style and panache by Eric le Sage, persuasively accompanied by Stéphane Denève.

Frank Braley enthusiastically joins the team for the Double Piano Concerto, which opens at high speed, with exhilarating, almost reckless dash, so the contrast of the gentle quasi-Mozartian pastiche of the Larghetto is the more enticing. More fireworks in the finale, which brings virtuosic precision of articulation from the soloists, yet keeps its élan. All in all, a very successful, consistently diverting triptych, very well (if resonantly) recorded.

This Apex CD is one of the most attractive of all the issues in this enterprising series. The Aubade is an exhilarating work of great charm; the Piano Concerto evokes the faded charms of Paris in the 1930s. The performance of these two solo works by François-René Duchable and the Rotterdam Orchestra has a certain panache and flair that is most winning.

(i) Aubade. Sinfonietta

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55167. New L. O, Corp – HAHN: Le Bal de Béatrice d'Este. ***

The Sinfonietta is a fluent and effortless piece, full of resource and imagination, and Ronald Corp and the New London Orchestra do it proud. Julian Evans is an alert soloist in the Aubade: his is a performance of real character and his account can hold its own artistically with the competition.

Les Biches (ballet; suite)

🔑 * Chan. 9023. Ulster O, Y. P. Tortelier – IBERT: Divertissement; MILHAUD: Le Bœuf; La Création ****

() Testament mono SBT 1294. Paris Conservatoire O, Desormière (with DELIBES: Coppélia & Sylvia Suites ())

Yan Pascal Tortelier and the Ulster Orchestra give an entirely winning account of Poulenc's ballet suite. Here the opening has delightfully keen rhythmic wit, and the playing is equally polished and crisply articulated in the gay Rag-Mazurka and infectious Finale. The lovely Adagietto is introduced with tender delicacy, yet reaches a suitably plangent climax. Top-drawer Chandos sound and splendid couplings ensure the overall success of this admirable compilation.

Desormière's pioneering 1951 mono set of the orchestral numbers from Les Biches has been out of circulation for almost four decades, but in terms of style and character it has never been surpassed and the present restoration makes it sound very good indeed.

(i; ii) Concert champêtre; (iii; iv) Organ Concerto; (ii; iii) Piano Concerto; (ii; iii; v) Double Piano Concerto; (i) Les Animaux modèles – Suite d'après La Fontaine; (i; ii) Aubade; (i) La Baigneuse de Trouville; Les Biches: Suite; Bucolique; Discours du Général; Fanfare; 2 Marches et un Intermède; Matelote provençale; Pastourelle; Pièce brève sur le nom d'Albert Roussel; 2 Préludes posthumes et une Gnossienne; Sinfonietta; Suite française; 3 Mouvements perpétuels; Valse; (i; vi) Le Bal masqué; Le Bestiare ou Le Cortège d'Orphée; Cocardes; (i; vi; vii) Le Gendarme incompris (Comédie-bouffe); (i; viii) Gloria; (ix) Litanies à la Vierge noire; (i; vi) 4 Poèmes de Max Jacob; Rapsodie nègre; (i; viii) Stabat Mater

🔑 (B)  Decca 475 8454 (5). Dutoit, with (i) O Nat. de France; (ii) Rogé; (iii) Philh. O; (iv) Hurford; (v) Deferne; (vi) Le Roux; (vii) Visse, Wilson; (viii) Pollet, R. France Ch.; (ix) Maîtrise de R. France

This Decca set makes an ideal choice for those wanting the main orchestral and choral works of Poulenc. The Aubade is particularly delightful, and the richly orchestral arrangement of Satie's Gnossiennes ends the third disc magnetically. Dutoit readily catches in Les Biches the music's languid warmth and veiled eroticism, notable in the beautiful Adagietto, but the opening Rondeau, with its pert, jazzy trumpet solo, might have had more bite, partly the fault of the warm resonance of the recording. The major works on the second disc are the Sinfonietta, which comes off marvellously, and the Concert champêtre, where Pascal Rogé proved as fine a clavecinist as pianist and his account, equally strong on charm and elegance, ranks very highly indeed. He is equally captivating in the Piano Concerto, readily catching its moments of tenderness and gamin-like joie de vivre. In the D minor Concerto for two pianos he is partnered by Silvia Deferne, and both artists are completely attuned to the sensibility and spirit of this still underrated master. Hurford is hardly less successful in the Organ Concerto and the Philharmonia Orchestra produces a cultivated sound for Dutoit, marginally less characterful and idiomatic perhaps than the French orchestra on the companion discs, but warmly elegant. The fourth CD offers Le Gendarme incompris ('The misunderstood policeman'), a spoken entertainment. The rest of the CD comprises mainly early pieces, and they are offered together with the later, better-known and always captivating Le Bal masqué. Such was the popularity of the Trois Mouvements perpétuels that Poulenc orchestrated them in 1925 and made a second arrangement for nine instruments, as offered here. Le Bestiare is recorded in its original form, for baritone and a small instrumental ensemble without piano. The fifth disc offers the large-scale choral works: the opening of the Gloria is a bit heavy but is otherwise satisfactory, and there is much warmth and beauty found in the Stabat Mater. All in all, highly recommendable, and texts and translations are included.

Concerto in G min. for Organ, Strings & Timpani

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex 2564 61912-2. Alain, Bamberg SO, Kantorow – ALAIN: Sarabande for Organ, String Quintet & Timpani; DURUFLÉ: 3 Dances; Prélude et Fugue ***

 Ondine ODE 1094-5. Latry, Phd. O, Eschenbach – SAINT-SAENS: Symphony 3; BARBER: Toccata Festiva ***

(*) Chan. 9271. Tracey (organ of Liverpool Cathedral), BBC PO, Tortelier – GUILMANT: Symphony 1; WIDOR: Symphony 5 *

Marie-Claire Alain's 1997 Bamberg recording is second to none. The unnamed organ in the Sinfonie an der Regnitz is eminently suitable, and she plays with her usual flair. Kantorow accompanies her with comparable élan, and the recording is excellent. The couplings too are highly desirable.

On Ondine the strikingly full and vivid (if rather dry) sound instantly commands attention. Eschenbach goes all out for drama, but the superb playing and beauty of the lyrical passages are equally impressive. This exciting version has something fresh to say about this marvellous work, and it is thoroughly recommended.

The wide reverberation period of Liverpool Cathedral produces gloriously plush textures (the orchestral strings are radiantly rich in colour) but little plangent bite, and some may feel that the effect is too overwhelmingly sumptuous for Poulenc's Concerto. Yet it is easy to wallow in the gloriously full sounds, and the performance itself, spacious to allow for the resonance, is certainly enjoyable.

'Francis Poulenc and Friends': (i) Double Piano Concerto in D min.; (ii) Concerto in G min. for organ, timpani & strings; (iii) Dialogues des Carmélites; La voix humaine; Les Mamelles de Tirésias; La Courte Paille; (iv) Flute Sonata; (v) Pastourelle; Toccata; (vi) 3 Mouvements perpétuells; (vii) Banalités; Chansons villageoises; Chansons gaillardes; (viii) Sarabande (DVD versions)

🔑  EMI DVD DVB 3102009. Composer, with (i) Février, O Nat. de l'ORTF, Prêtre; (ii) Grunewald, PO de l'ORTF, Prêtre; (iii) Duval; (iv) Rampal, Veyron-Lacroix; (v) Tacchino; (vi) Février; (vii) Bacquier, Février; (viii) Gendron, Ivadli

An indispensable item for admirers of this inspiriting and life-loving composer. Much of this DVD derives from a concert in the Salle Gaveau to mark Poulenc's sixtieth birthday, where he is seen in conversation with Bernard Gavoty. (He is as entertaining a speaker as he is witty a composer.) The two Concertos come from 1962 and 1968 respectively, the former at about the time when these artists recorded it commercially. Poulenc's score is both witty and at times profound, though he is by no means as elegant or polished at the keyboard as, say, Britten or for that matter his partner here, Jacques Février. It is good to see and hear the delightful Denise Duval, who sings with great artistry; small wonder that Poulenc adored her so much. The picture quality is variable but acceptable and, though the camerawork in the first movement of the D minor Concerto is a bit fussy, it is otherwise exemplary both in the other movements and elsewhere in this compilation.

The Story of Babar the Elephant (orch. Jean Françaix)

🔑 ✿ (BB) * Naxos 8.554170. Humphries, Melbourne SO, Lanchbery – BRITTEN: Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra; PROKOFIEV: Peter and the Wolf ****

Barry Humphries adopts an engagingly cultivated male persona to tell The Story of Babar with an elegance and a sense of innocence which make the narrative seem completely believable, within a children's world where elephants can assume human vanities and aspirations. He is genial, gently touching and animated by turns, but always stylish; and so is Lanchbery's matching orchestral accompaniment, which catches the moments of nostalgia and joy with equal sensitivity and flair.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Complete chamber music: Cello Sonata; Clarinet Sonata; Sonata for 2 Clarinets; Sonata for Clarinet & Bassoon; Elégie for Horn & Piano (in Memory of Dennis Brain); Flute Sonata; Oboe Sonata; Sarabande for Guitar; Sextet for Piano, Flute, Oboe, Clarinet, Bassoon & Horn; Sonata for Horn, Trumpet & Trombone; Trio for Piano, Oboe & Bassoon; Villanelle for Piccolo (pipe) & Piano; Violin Sonata

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67255/6. Nash Ens., with I. Brown (piano)

Poulenc's delightful chamber music has done well in recent years: the set by various British artists on Cala has strong claims on the collector (see below). Poulenc is quintessential Nash Ensemble territory and their Hyperion survey is of predictable excellence. Common to most of these works is the pianist Ian Brown, a stylist if ever there was one, whose playing lends such character to the proceedings. There are few performances that fail to delight and fewer that are surpassed elsewhere. Very good recorded sound makes this an excellent recommendation.

Clarinet Sonata, Op. 184

🔑  EMI 3 79787-2. Meyer, Maisenberg – MILHAUD: Scaramouche; DEVIENNE; SAINT-SAËNS: Sonatas ***

Sabine Meyer and Oleg Maisenberg give a captivating account of the delightful Poulenc Sonata, with tristamente and très calmé dominating the mood of the first two movements, but with plenty of high spirits in the Allegro con fuoco finale (très animé – taken more than literally!).

(i) L'Invitation au château (for Clarinet, Violin & Piano); (i; ii; iv–vii) Mouvements perpétuels for Flute, Oboe, Clarinet, Bassoon, Horn, Violin, Viola, Cello & Bass; (i; ix; x) Rapsodie nègre for Flute, Clarinet, String Quartet, Baritone & Piano; (i; iv–vii; xi) Sextet for Flute, Oboe, Clarinet, Bassoon, Horn & Piano; (i; vi) Sonata for Clarinet; Sonata for Clarinet & Bassoon; (i) Sonata for 2 Clarinets; (iv; ix) Sonata for Flute & Piano; (v; x) Oboe Sonata; (iv; v; x) Trio for Oboe, Bassoon & Piano; (iv–ix) Villanelle for Piccolo & Piano

🔑 Ⓑ * Cala CACD 1018 (2). (i) Campbell; (ii) Carter; (iii) York; (iv) Bennett; (v) Daniel; (vi) Gough; (vii) Watkins; (viii) Tapping, Schrecker, West; (ix) Allegri Qt, Sidhom; (x) Drake; (xi) Benson – RAVEL: Introduction & Allegro, etc. ***

These Cala discs are a terrific bargain. The Poulenc accounts for the bulk of the two CDs (two hours' music in fact), all of it full of sparkle and freshness of invention. The discs comprise the complete chamber music for woodwind by Ravel and Poulenc, with the exception of works written primarily for the voice. The performances have great elegance and finesse. Poulenc has the rare gift of being able to move from the most flippant high spirits to the deepest poignancy, as in the Oboe Sonata, expressively played by Nicholas Daniel. His pianist, Julius Drake, is highly sensitive, though the piano is not always ideally focused in the excessively resonant acoustic. Elsewhere, in the captivating incidental music to a play by Jean Cocteau and Raymond Radiguet, L'Invitation au château, the playing is expert, tasteful and stylish. The Mouvements perpétuels, the Sextet and the various wind sonatas are beautifully played with great relish and spirit.

Sextet (for Piano and Wind)

 Chan. 10420. Vovka Ashkenazy, Reykjavik Wind Qt (with FRANÇAIX: L'Heure du berger; D'INDY: Sarabande et Menuet, Op. 72; SAINT-SAËNS: Caprice sur des air danois et russes, Op. 79) – RIMSKY-KORSAKOV: Piano Quintet ***

Ⓜ  Chan. 6543. I. Brown, Athena Ens. – GOUNOD: Petite Symphonie in B flat; IBERT: 3 Pièces brèves ***

From Ian Brown and the Athena Ensemble a bravura and responsive performance of Poulenc's many-faceted Sextet, catching its high spirits as well as its wit, and the gentle melancholy which intervenes at the close of the boisterous finale. The recording is excellent, slightly dry, yet with a nice ambience. Even though the programme is short measure, every minute is enjoyable.

The alternative Chandos disc is equally attractive, bringing an enterprising programme from the Reykjavik Wind Quintet and Vovka Ashkenazy. The Sextet for piano and wind is a winner, full of charm, and beautifully done by these artists – and excellently recorded too.

Sextet for Piano & Wind; Trio for Piano, Oboe & Bassoon; (i) Le Bal masqué; Le Bestiaire

🔑 Ⓜ  CRD CRD 3437. (i) Allen; Nash Ens., Friend

Thomas Allen is in excellent voice and gives a splendid account of both Le Bal masqué and Le Bestiaire. The Nash Ensemble play both the Trio and the Sextet with superb zest and character. The wit of this playing and the enormous resource, good humour and charm of Poulenc's music are well served by a recording of exemplary quality and definition. Not to be missed.

PIANO MUSIC

Piano duet

Capriccio; Elégie; L'Embarquement pour Cythère; Sonata for Piano, 4 Hands; Sonata for 2 Pianos

🔑  Chan. 8519. Tanyel, J. Brown

These two artists have a very close rapport and dispatch this repertoire with both character and sensitivity. The Chandos recording is excellent, very vivid and present.

Solo piano music

Complete Solo Piano Music: Badinage; Les Biches: 3 excerpts, including Adagietto; Bourrée, au pavillon d'Auvergne; Caprice; Feuillets d'album; Française; Humoresque; 5 Impromptus; 15 Improvisations; Intermède; Intermezzi 1–3; Mélancolie; Mouvements perpetuels; Napoli (Suite); Nocturnes Nos. 1–8; 3 Novelettes; Pastourelle; 3 Pièces; Pièce brève sur le nom d'Albert Roussel; Presto in B flat; Promenades; La Soirée de Nazelles (Suite); Suite; Suite française; Thème varié; Valse; Valse impromptu sur le nom de Bach; Villageoises

Ⓜ  Chan. 10014 (3). Parkin

Eric Parkin is a much underrated artist who has never really received his due. He is a stylist and plays this music with elegance and taste, and is to be preferred to Eric le Sage's RCA set, which has great clarity and intelligence but, good as it is, is sometimes a bit short on charm.

Badinage; Bourrée, au pavillon d'Auvergne; Humoresque; Suite Française d'après Claude Gervaise; 15 Improvisations; 5 Impromptus; Intermède en ré mineur; 3 Intermezzi; Pastourelle; Presto en si bémol; Mélancolie; 3 Mouvements perpétuels; Napoli (suite); 8 Nocturnes; 3 Novelettes; 3 Pièces; Les Soirées de Nazelles; Suite; Suite française; Valse; Valse improvisation sur le nom de Bach

Ⓑ  RCA 2 CD 74321 84603-2 (2). Le Sage

Eric le Sage is a virtuoso of a high order, as he immediately demonstrates in the opening Presto en si bémol (marked by Poulenc to be played as fast as possible), and later with the most precisely delicate articulation in Les Soirées de Nazelles, and in the second disc the amazingly varied Improvisations and the Impromptus, which are presented with great élan. Sometimes his tempi seem a fraction fast, as in the most famous of the Mouvements perpétuels, but he can readily please the ear. In short, the playing here is full of character and certainly does not lack spontaneity or variety of style and timbre. The closing group of Nocturnes are exquisite. The recording is very real and vivid.

CHORAL MUSIC

Sacred Music: Ave verum corpus; Exultate Deo; Laudes de Saint Antoine de Padoue; (i) Litanies à la vierge noire; 4 Motets pour un temps de Noël; 4 Motets pour un temps de Pénitence; Salve Regina; Secular Music: Chanson à boire; 7 Chansons (1936); 8 Chansons françaises (1945); Figure humaine; Un Soir de neige

(BB) (*) EMI Gemini 5 85776-2 (2). Groupe Vocal de France, Alldis; (i) with Alain (organ)

Recognizing the need for a French chamber choir to match the great international choirs, the Groupe Vocal de France was formed in 1976. The result was these two recorded collections: the sacred, recorded in 1981 in L'Eglise Saint Germain, and the secular, recorded six years later in the Salle Wagram. This is all music that ideally needs French voices, and John Alldis has trained his French group splendidly so that they combine precision and fervour with a natural feeling for the words.

(i; ii) Gloria; Ave verum corpus; Exultate Deo; (ii) Litanies à la Vierge Noire; 4 Motets pour le temps

de Noël; 4 Motets pour un temps de pénitence; Salve Regina

🔑 Ⓜ  Coll. CSCD 506. (i) Deam, Cambridge Singers; (ii) City of L. Sinfonia, Rutter

A generous selection of Poulenc's choral music, much of it of great beauty and simplicity, in very fresh-sounding performances and well-focused sound. The performance of the Gloria is particularly fine and this disc is now offered at mid-price.

(i) Gloria; (ii) Stabat Mater

 Australian Decca Eloquence 476 2947. (i) Greenberg, Lausanne Pro Arte Ch., Swiss R. Ch., SRO, López-Cobos; (ii) Pollet, R. France Ch. & O, Dutoit – BIZET: Te Deum **(*)

López-Cobos's account of the Gloria is here coupled with an equally fine performance of the Stabat Mater, where Dutoit brings out both its lyrical and its dramatic qualities with characteristic flair. In his hands it is a work full of character and memorable ideas, much helped by the atmospheric recording. The choir is excellent, as is the soloist.

Mass in G

Ⓑ  CfP 3 75906-2. Harris, Winchester Cathedral Ch., Neary (with DURUFLÉ: Tu es Petrus; Tantum ergo) – FAURÉ: Requiem; Messe basse ***

Martin Neary gets another fine perfomance from the Winchester Cathedral Choir and his fine treble soloist, Mark Harris. The recording is excellent, with well-defined detail and firm definition.

(i) Mass in G; Exultate Deo; (ii) Litanies à la Vierge Noire; Salve Regina

🔑 Ⓑ  Double Decca (ADD) 436 486-2 (2). St John's College, Cambridge, Ch., Guest; (i) with Bond; (ii) Cleobury – FAURÉ; DURUFLÉ: Requiems ***

As an extraordinarily generous bonus for the two great Requiems of Fauré and Duruflé, this Double Decca set offers the Poulenc Mass in G together with two motets, Exultate Deo and Salve Regina, finely wrought pieces in performances of great finish. Then, together with Stephen Cleobury, they give us the cool, gently dissonant Litanies à la Vierge Noire, a dialogue between voices and organ in which the voices eventually take dominance. It is beautifully done and the St John's College forces cope with the delicacy and sweetness of Poulenc's chromatic harmony throughout. The (originally Argo) recording is eminently realistic and truthful.

4 Motets pour le temps de Noël

Ⓑ  CfP 586 172-2 (2). Winchester Cathedral Ch., ECO, Neary – BERLIOZ: L'enfance du Christ (*); HONEGGER: Une Cantate de Noël ***

Martin Neary gets excellent results from the Winchester Cathedral Choir in the delightful Christmas Motets, and the EMI recording is also first rate. The couplings are apt, and this is a very worthwhile CfP Double.

MÉLODIES

Mélodies (complete)

Ⓜ  Decca 475 9085 (4). Lott, Dubosc, Kryger, Le Roux, Cachemaille, Rogé

At mid-price, this collection repackages Decca's four CDs of Poulenc songs, accompanied by the ever-sensitive Pascal Rogé. For those who insist on fine modern recording, this provides consistently refined and idiomatic performances. Felicity Lott is a stylist par excellence and her sympathy for and affinity with the songs of Poulenc is long-standing. Her recordings centre on the theme of childhood, and range from La courte paille – written for Denise Duval, Poulenc's favourite soprano, to sing to her young son – to the Cinq poèmes de Max Jacob, which evoke the childhood memories of Brittany. Dame Felicity is in excellent form throughout and brings the right blend of feeling and style to everything here. Hier, the third of the Trois poèmes de Louise Lalanne, is marvellously characterized and quite haunting. Catherine Dubosc is thoroughly at home in the Poulenc idiom. Like her fellow artist, the baritone Gilles Cachemaille, she is rather forwardly balanced. Francois Le Roux, a high baritone who can cope with the demanding tessitura of the songs written for the composer's friend, Pierre Bernac, takes on the major share of his disc, notably the fine cycle Tel jour, telle nuit. He also sings superbly the three extra songs for Le bestiaire. On the fourth CD, Gilles Cachemaille, a warmer but less versatile baritone, and Urszula Kryger provide contrast in an equally varied selection. Throughout this series Pascal Rogé is the intensely poetic accompanist.

Banalités; 2 Mélodies de Guillaume Apollinaire

 Virgin 5 45360-2. Gens, Vignoles – DEBUSSY, FAURÉ: Mélodies ***

Véronique Gens possesses a delightful voice of much beauty, and is very much at home in Poulenc's world. As with the Debussy, she is both imaginative and characterful. She receives sensitive support from Roger Vignoles, and Virgin give her excellent and natural sound.

Mélodies including Banalités; 4 Chansons pour enfants; Métamorphoses; 2 Poèmes de Louis Aragon; 3 Poèmes de Louise Lalanne

 Hyp. CDA 66147. Songmakers' Almanac: Lott, Rolfe Johnson, Murray, Jackson

Felicity Lott sings the great majority of the songs here, joyful and tender, comic and tragic by turns. The other soloists have one song apiece, done with comparable magnetism, and Richard Jackson joins Felicity Lott (one stanza each) in Poulenc's solitary 'song for two voices', Colloque. First-rate recording, though Lott's soprano is not always as sweetly caught as it can be.

OPERA

Dialogue des Carmélites (complete; DVD versions)

🔑 ✿ * Arthaus DVD 100 004. Schmidt, Fassbender, Petibon, Henry, Dale, Chœurs de l'Opéra du Rhin, Strasbourg PO, Latham-Koenig

Ⓝ  TDK DVD 01442 248601. Dever, Schellenberger, Silja, Aikin, Robertson, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Muti (Dir: Robert Carson)

Poulenc set great store by this opera and this DVD is a remarkably gripping and wholly convincing production which may well serve to persuade those who have not seen the light about this piece. In Anne-Sophie Schmidt it has a Blanche who looks as good as she sounds, and a cast which has no weak member. The production conveys the period to striking effect and the claustrophobic atmosphere of the nunnery. The camerawork is imaginative without ever being intrusive and the production so well managed that the longueurs that normally afflict the closing scene in the opera house pass unnoticed. Of the other roles Hedwig Fassbender (Mère Marie de l'Incarnation), Patricia Petibon (Sœur Constance), Didier Henry (Le Marquis de la Force) and Laurence Dale (as the Chevalier de la Force) are exemplary both as singers and as interpreters.

Poulenc composed the Dialogue des Carmelites for La Scala, although in the event this 2004 production was staged in the smaller Teatro degli Arcimboldi. Nothing is lost as the stage is bare of elaborate sets, and this places the action, including the horrifying closing death scene (which is well handled), against a literal, unatmospheric background. The singing is generally of quality, with Blanche (Dagmar Schellenberger) and Barbara Dever (Mère Marie) standing out, although Anja Silja (Madame de Croissy) is rather less impressive. Muti conducts vividly, although the overall sound-picture in the Strasbourg production on Arthaus (perhaps not surprisingly) has more of a French feel, partly a matter of orchestral texture. The latter performance is a first choice for its added intensity, but this Italian version still has much to offer, it is well recorded, and the cameras are in the right place.

(i) Dialogue des Carmelites. (ii) PUCCINI: Manon Lescaut. (iii) DONIZETTI: Don Pasquale (complete; DVD versions)

Ⓝ Ⓜ  TDK Gold DVD DVWW GOLDBOX3 (3). La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Muti, with (i) Dever, Schellenberger, Aikin, Silja; (ii) Guleghina, Cura, Gallo; (iii) Furlanetto, Focile, Gallo, Kunde

These three highly contrasted operas (all reviewed separately within these pages) come in a gold box at mid-price.

The Carmelites (sung in English)

Ⓜ (*) Chan. 314 (2). Wyn-Davies, Palmer, Barstow, Boylan, Powell, Gibbons, Davies, Wedd, Holland, ENO Op. Ch. & O, Daniel

The success of the English language version of Poulenc's masterly opera, one of Peter Moores's long series, is largely due to the fact that it was recorded soon after a series of live performances by the ENO, with a similar cast at the Coliseum. Catrin Wyn-Davies sings touchingly as Sister Blanche, and the other principal soloists, Felicity Palmer, Josephine Barstow and Orla Boylan, are characterfully contrasted, even if their voices have some unevenness of production. Excellent, atmospheric sound, bringing a harrowing account of the final guillotine scene.

La Voix humaine

🔑 Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 2564 60680-2. Migenes, O Nat. de France, Prêtre

Julia Migenes's dramatic and moving performance of Poulenc's theatrical telephone monologue, La Voix humaine, is the finest modern version on record. It is linked with the cantata, Figure humaine, and with some a cappella motets, but this separate issue is most welcome.

PRAETORIUS, Michael
(1571–1621)

Dances from Terpsichore

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67240. Parley of Instruments, Renaissance Violin Band, Holman

Terpsichore is a huge collection of some 300 dance tunes used by the French-court dance bands of Henri IV. They were enthusiastically assembled by the German composer, Michael Praetorius, who also harmonized them and arranged them in four to six parts; however, any selection is conjectural in the matter of orchestration. This 70-minute collection from Peter Holman and his various instrumental groups must be regarded as the most authentic and comprehensive now available. Praetorius makes it clear in the preface to Terpsichore that he regards these as French dances, and Holman convincingly suggests that they were intended primarily for performances on a French-style violin band, or a lute combination (a group of four lutes play together here), and that is the instrumentation that he very refreshingly offers.

Advent and Christmas Music

🔑  CPO 777 327-2. Bremer Bar. Cons., Cordes

These performances of some of Praetorius's most attractive Christmas music (many of the tunes familiar) are played and sung by a small vocal consort and chamber-sized instrumental group, using recorders, violas da gamba, harp and chamber organ. The textures are delightfully intimate: the arrangements of In dulci jubilo, Puer natus in Bethlehem and especially the combination of Resonet in laudibus and Joseph, lieber, Joseph mein are all especially memorable. Recommended.

Christmas music: Polyhymnia caduceatrix et panegyrica 9–10, 12 & 17; Puericinium 2, 4 & 5; Musae Sionae VI, 53: Es ist ein Ros' entsprungen; Terpsichore: Dances 1; 283–5; 310

 Hyp. CDA 66200. Westminster Cathedral Ch., Parley of Instruments, Hill

Praetorius was much influenced by the polychoral style of the Gabrielis; these pieces reflect this interest. The music is simple in style and readily accessible, and its performance on this atmospheric Hyperion record is both spirited and sensitive.

Lutheran Mass for Christmas Morning (1620)

 DG 439 250-2. Soloists, Boys' Ch. and Congregational Ch. of Roskilde Cathedral, Gabrieli Consort & Players, McCreesh

Following on after Paul McCreesh's hypothetical re-creation of Schütz's Christmas Day Vespers of 1664 (see below), this is an even more stimulating and enjoyable liturgical Feast-day celebration. It is also a most attractive way to present a great deal of Praetorius's music within a Lutheran Mass, as it might have been heard at one of the churches in central Germany around 1620.

Opening with a choral processional to a simply harmonized Lutheran melody, we pass straight into the Introit, Puer natus in Bethlehem, for three soloists and three choirs; and after the Alleluia comes a spectacularly fast choral entry, Singet jubiliret triumphiret. The Kyrie follows, set for pairs of soloists, and then the brilliantly florid Gloria, where the singers (solo and choral) are again joined by brass and organ. This alternation sets the pattern for much that is to follow. The congregation participates richly in the Gradual hymn, Vom Himmel hoch, and as the Mass proceeds, there are also organ interludes and even a five-part brass sonata by Schein. After the jaunty closing hymn, Puer nobus nascitur, the Mass ends with the thrillingly exultant setting of In dulci jubilo for five choirs, including organ, six trumpets and drums. Here, magnificently sung and played in the echoing acoustic of Denmark's Roskilde Cathedral, the effect is most spectacular.

Renaissance Christmas Music

🔑  BIS CD 1035. Viva Voce

In collecting and arranging his litugical music, Praetorius indicated the part-writing in his manuscripts, but the choice of voices to be used and the continuo instruments (if any are indicated) is left to the performers. In this wholly delightful collection of Christmas music Viva Voce have solved this problem arbitrarily but convincingly. The basic group employs six voices, lute and organ; but the performances often vary the number of singers between different verses of a hymn or motet. The results, freshly sung and with tasteful accompaniments, could not be more appealing, less robust than some Praetorius presentations, but very effectively so. The recording is first class, and full texts and translations are included.

PREVIN, André (born 1929)

The Kindness of Strangers (Profile of the conductor and musician)

Ⓝ  Isolde Films TP DVD 153. Fleming, Gilfry, San Francisco Opera Ch. & O, Previn

This profile of André Previn, bringing out the astonishing range of his achievements, was made in 1998 at the time of the first production of Previn's opera, A Streetcar Named Desire, based on the Tennessee Williams play. Now Bernstein has left us, no one today begins to match Previn as a musical polymath in so many fields, not just in conducting and composing, but in playing jazz and writing film music, winning his four Oscars before boldly giving up Hollywood and seeking to conquer the classical world, both as pianist and conductor. The profile is based not only on the opera, with extensive clips of Renée Fleming singing in a role created for her, but covers his many activities, giving a fair idea of his career, from his birth in Berlin into a prosperous Jewish family, with his father teaching him to sight-read music and keep up to speed, a valuable asset, to his career in MGM in Hollywood, writing his first score for a film starring Lassie and Jeanette Macdonald. But before that, when still at school, he was scoring the music of other Hollywood composers, being used a great deal, because, as he says, 'I was cheap.' The survey of his conducting career is necessarily limited, as is the survey of his many marriages. He remains a close friend of his last partner, the violinist Anne Sophie Mutter, despite being divorced. The clips of Streetcar include Renée Fleming's moving last monologue and the plaudits of the audience. Earlier clips include Kiri Te Kanawa singing to his accompaniment and his performance of jazz with bassist Ray Brown, all most illuminating. Over everything is Previn's own commentary, full of wit as well as graphic information. The interview with Tennessee Williams is particularly valuable. Tony Palmer has excelled himself in the range and depth of this profile, a masterpiece of a film.

PROKOFIEV, Serge (1891–1953)

Andante for Strings, Op. 50 bis; Autumnal (symphonic sketch), Op. 8; Lieutenant Kijé: Suite, Op. 60; The Stone Flower: Suite, Op. 118; Wedding Suite, Op. 126

 Chan. 8806. SNO, Järvi

The Andante is a transcription for full strings of the slow movement of the First String Quartet, and its eloquence is more telling in this more expansive format. Autumnal, on the other hand, is an early piece, much influenced by Rachmaninov and full of imaginative touches. Järvi takes it at a fairly brisk tempo but it remains appropriately atmospheric. The Wedding Suite is drawn from The Stone Flower and complements the Op. 118 suite from Prokofiev's last full-length ballet. The performances and recording are in the best traditions of the house.

Autumnal, Op. 8; Egyptian Nights, Op. 61; Hamlet (incidental music), Op. 77; (i) Flourish, Mighty Land, Op. 114; Hail to Stalin, Op. 85

 Chan. 10056. Russian State SO, Polyansky

The Egyptian Nights comes from incidental music composed in 1934, soon after Prokofiev's return to the Soviet Union, and the suite was made four years later, the year in which he also wrote a score for Sergei Radiov's production of Hamlet. Prokofiev at second best is better than most of his contemporaries on top form. Despite its naïve touches, the Stalin

Cantata is far from negligible. An interesting disc, well performed and recorded.

Boris Godunov, Op. 70 bis: Fountain Scene; Polonaise; Dreams, Op. 6; Eugene Onegin, Op. 71: Minuet, Polka, Mazurka; 2 Pushkin Waltzes, Op. 120; Romeo and Juliet (ballet): Suite 2, Op. 64

 Chan. 8472. SNO, Järvi

Järvi's second suite from Romeo and Juliet has sensitivity, abundant atmosphere, a sense of the theatre, and is refreshingly unmannered. A fuller selection of the music Prokofiev wrote for a production of Eugene Onegin is available, but what is offered here, plus the Two Pushkin Waltzes, are rather engaging lighter pieces. The performances are predictably expert, the balance finely judged and detail is in exactly the right perspective.

Chout (ballet; complete), Op. 21

🔑  CPO 999 975-2. WDR SO, Cologne, Jurowski

Chout ('The Buffoon'), which Diaghilev mounted in 1921, did not enjoy the success its score deserved, though the music was not slow to reach the gramophone. It is a deliciously scored and inventive work with relatively few longueurs. Jurowski and his team maintain the high standards that he achieved in The Stone Flower. The NordWestDeutscher Rundfunk recording is to a very high standard in terms of clarity and definition.

Chout (ballet): Suite, Op. 21a; The Love for Three Oranges: Suite, Op. 33a; Le Pas d'acier: Suite, Op. 41a

 Chan. 8729. SNO, Järvi

Järvi has a natural affinity for this repertoire and gets splendid results from the SNO; and the recording is pretty spectacular.

Cinderella (ballet; complete), Op. 87

(BB) * Double Decca 455 349-2 (2). Cleveland O, Ashkenazy – GLAZUNOV: The Seasons ***

Cinderella (ballet: complete); Symphony 1 in D (Classical), Op. 25

Ⓑ  EMI Gemini (DDD/ADD) 4 76945-2 (2). LSO, Previn

Artistic honours are very evenly divided between the Ashkenazy and Previn recordings. Some dances come off better in Previn's EMI version and there is an element of swings and roundabouts in comparing them. Ashkenazy gets excellent results from the Cleveland Orchestra. On CD, the recording's fine definition is enhanced, yet not at the expense of atmosphere, and the bright, vivid image is given striking projection. The appeal of the Double Decca is greatly increased by the inclusion of Ashkenazy's splendid account of Glazunov's finest ballet score. However, the EMI engineers have a more spacious acoustic within which to work and yet lose no detail. Moreover the CD reissue adds a splendid account of the Classical Symphony, sunlit and vivacious and hardly less well recorded five years previously.

Cinderella: Suite 1, Op. 107; Lieutenant Kijé (suite); The Love for Three Oranges: March; Scherzo; The Prince and Princess. Romeo and Juliet: Madrigal; Dance of the Girls with Lilies

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.550381. Slovak State P.O, (Košice), Mogrelia

The calibre of this excellent Slovak Orchestra is well demonstrated here, and its perceptive conductor, Andrew Mogrelia, is at his finest in his gently humorous portrait of Lieutenant Kijé, the three 'best bits' from The Love for Three Oranges and the charming items from Romeo and Juliet. Excellent recording.

Cinderella: Suite. The Love for Three Oranges: March & Scherzo. The Prodigal Son: Suite. Romeo and Juliet: Suite. Scythian Suite

Ⓝ (*) Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 480 0830 (2). SRO, Ansermet

A well-chosen anthology of some of Prokofiev's finest ballet scores, characterfully played by Ansermet. The Scythian Suite is one of the composer's most powerful and imaginative scores. The Prodigal Son is related to his Fourth Symphony, and the composer thought so highly of it that he made the Suite recorded here. He was right to do so, for this lyrical, inventive work must rank among his finest ballets. In both the more famous Cinderella and Romeo and Juliet Suites, Ansermet never forgets that this is ballet music, with extremes of tempo eschewed in favour of characterful and atmospheric performances. True, the Suisse Romande Orchestra is not the most precise orchestra in the world, but they make up for it in their distinctive and characteristic way, and none of these scores is wanting in drama. The early 1960s sound throughout this set is both warm and vivid.

Cinderella (ballet; excerpts)

Ⓑ  CfP (ADD/DDD) 3 93233-2. LSO, Previn – TCHAIKOVSKY: Nutcracker (complete); 1812; Marche slave ***

Previn and the LSO offer seven short excerpts (about a quarter of an hour of music) from their fine, complete recording of Cinderella as a bonus for a highly recommendable Tchaikovsky collection.

Concertino in G min. for Cello & Orchestra (original version); Cello Concerto in E min., Op. 58

 Chan. 9890. Ivashkin, Russian State SO, Polyanski

This Chandos disc is called 'The Unknown Prokofiev' and offers the Cello Concerto in its original form, before Prokofiev reworked it for Rostropovich. These performances are very good indeed and splendidly recorded. There is much to be said for the original version of this piece: Prokofiev's second thoughts were not in every case improvements and he cut some inventive ideas.

(i) Concertino in G min. for Cello & Orchestra, Op. 132 (completed orch. Kabalevsky & Rostropovich); (ii) Piano Concertos 1–5; (iii) Violin

Concertos 1–2; (i) Sinfonia concertante for Cello & Orchestra, Op. 125

🔑 Ⓜ  Decca Trio (ADD/DDD) 473 259-2 (3). (i) Harrell, RPO, Ashkenazy; (ii) Ashkenazy (piano), LSO, Previn; (iii) Bell, Montreal SO, Dutoit

The Cello Concertino, inspired by Prokofiev's collaboration with Rostropovich in Op. 125, is a comparatively slight piece, but it is very well played by Lynn Harrell. He gives an even more impressive account of the Sinfonia concertante and he sounds as if he is relishing the numerous challenges to his virtuosity that this score poses. His playing of the cadenza in the middle movement (fig. 18 in the score and the ensuing paragraphs) is pretty stunning and Ashkenazy draws strongly characterized playing from the RPO. Turning to the keyboard, Ashkenazy then offers vintage, authoritative accounts of the five Piano Concertos, which have been much praised by us. (These are also available separately – see below.)

Employing a measure of emotional restraint and an exceptionally pure tone, Joshua Bell completes this outstanding anthology with ravishingly beautiful accounts of both Violin Concertos, heightening the light and shade in the great lyrical passages to contrast with the formidable bravura writing, which finds him at his most commanding.

Concertino in G min. for Cello & Orchestra; Symphony-Concerto in E min. for Cello & Orchestra, Op. 125; 2 Pushkin Waltzes, Op. 120

(BB)  Naxos 8.553624. Rudin, Ukraine Nat. SO, Kuchar

The Russian cellist, Alexander Rudin, proves a powerful interpreter of these two concertante works. Rudin can match and even outshine most other rivals, not least in the beauty of his half-tones, as in the slow movements of both works. He and the conductor, Theodore Kuchar, inspire the Ukraine Orchestra to play with similar incisiveness, helped by vivid, immediate sound. The two charming Pushkin-based Waltzes make an attractive fill-up, winningly pointed.

Piano Concertos 1–5

🔑 Ⓑ * Double Decca (ADD) 452 588-2 (2). Ashkenazy, LSO, Previn

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Chan. 10522 (2). Berman (in 1, 4 & 5); Gutiérrez (in 2 & 3), Concg. O, Järvi

(BB) (*) Warner Apex 2564 61694-2 (2). Krainev, Frankfurt RSO, Kitaenko

Piano Concertos 1 in D flat, Op. 10; 3 in C, Op. 26; 4 in B flat, Op. 53

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.550566. Paik, Polish Nat. RSO (Katowice), Wit

Piano Concertos 2 in G min., Op. 16; 5 in G, Op. 55

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.550565. Paik, Polish Nat. RSO (Katowice), Wit

(i) Piano Concertos 1–5; (ii) Overture on Hebrew Themes; Visions fugitives, Op. 22

(BB) (*) EMI Gemini 5 17629-2 (2). Béroff; (i) with Leipzig GO, Masur; (ii) with Portal, Parrenin Qt

Ashkenazy is a commanding soloist in both the First and Second Concertos, and his virtuosity in the First is quite dazzling. If he is curiously wayward in the opening of the Second, there is no question that this too is a masterly performance. The Third Concerto is keen-edged and crisply articulated, and the only reservation here concerns the slow movement which at times is uncharacteristically mannered. Ashkenazy is authoritative in No. 4 and gives an admirable account of No. 5: every detail of phrasing and articulation is well thought out, and yet there is no want of spontaneity or any hint of calculation. Throughout, Previn and the LSO accompany sympathetically. Berman plays with panache in Nos. 1, 4 and 5, and has the nervous energy and ebullience the music needs. Gutiérrez gives vital and brilliant accounts of the solo parts of the remaining two Concertos (2 and 3) and is keenly responsive to the shifting moods and extreme dynamics of Prokofiev's writing. The Concertgebouw Orchestra under Neeme Järvi play magnificently throughout. As a package, their claims are strong, both artistically and in terms of recording quality.

Gutiérrez gives vital and brilliant accounts of the solo parts of the remaining two Concertos (2 and 3) and is keenly responsive to the shifting moods and extreme dynamics of Prokofiev's writing. The Concertgebouw Orchestra under Neeme Järvi play magnificently throughout. As a package, their claims are strong, both artistically and in terms of recording quality.

Kun Woo Paik's playing throughout these five concertos has exhilarating bravura. Tempi are dangerously fast at times and occasionally he has the orchestra almost scampering to keep up with him, but they do, and the result is often electrifying. The famous theme and variations central movement of the Third Concerto is played with great diversity of mood and style and the darkly expressive Larghetto of No. 5 is very finely done. The First Concerto, which comes last on the first CD has great freshness and compares well with almost any version on disc. In short, with vivid recording in the Concert Hall of Polish Radio, which has plenty of ambience, this set is enormously stimulating and a remarkable bargain. It has far better sound than the remastered Decca recording for Ashkenazy.

Vladimir Krainev and the Frankfurt Radio Orchestra under Dmitri Kitaenko are also formidable contenders in their Apex Double format. The recordings were made in 1992 and offer sound of considerable warmth and naturalness.

A satisfying Rouge et Noir set from Michel Béroff, who plays masterfully and is a pianist of genuine insight where Prokofiev is concerned; Masur gives him excellent support. Béroff is free from some of the agogic mannerisms that distinguish Ashkenazy in the slow movement of the Third, and he has great poetry.

(i) Piano Concertos 1–5; (ii) Violin Concerto 1 in D, Op. 19

(*) Testament (ADD) SBT2 1376. Boston SO, Leinsdorf with (i) Browning; (ii) Friedman

Browning gives pretty magisterial accounts of all five Prokofiev concertos, but his Second is particularly imposing in its breadth and grandeur, and he is very persuasive in the enigmatic but rewarding Fourth for the left hand alone. The First Violin Concerto inhabits a totally different world from the first two piano concertos. There is poetry, great tenderness and a fairy-tale quality that on Erick Friedman's bow immediately draws the listener into its world.

Piano Concerto 1 in D flat

Ⓝ  Naïve V 5053. Lise de la Salle, Gulbenkian Foundation O, Lisbon, Foster – LISZT: Concerto 1; SHOSTAKOVICH: Concerto 1 ***

Lise de la Salle sails off with captivating aplomb and dash, yet her slow movement (as with the Liszt coupling) captures the music's special romantic allure. This is a brilliantly commanding début, with Lawrence Foster providing an admirable partnership.

(i) Piano Concerto 1; Symphony 1 (Classical) (DVD version)

🔑 ✿  TDK DVD DVWW-COMARG. (i) Argerich; Flanders SO, Rabinovitch-Barakovsky (V/D: Frédéric le Clair) – BEETHOVEN: Triple Concerto; SCHUMANN: Violin Sonata 1 ***

Alexander Rabinovitch-Barakovsky's account of the Classical Symphony with the excellent Flanders Symphony Orchestra is in every way first class, polished, witty and genial, but our Rosette is for Martha Argerich's dazzlingly passionate account of the First Piano Concerto. In the Symphony the camera angles change too readily, but in the Concerto the video director focuses a great deal on his sparkling soloist and often on her breathtaking digital dexterity, which makes the performance even more vividly communicative. The recording, resonant and vivid, but not absolutely refined, has the piano balanced forwardly, but the orchestra is well in the picture. This is a thrilling example of DVD at its most electrifying.

Piano Concerto 1 in D flat; Suggestion diabolique, Op. 4/4

🔑 (BB) * EMI Encore 5 86881-2. Gavrilov, LSO, Rattle – BALAKIREV: Islamey; TCHAIKOVSKY: Piano Concerto 1 etc. ****

A dazzling account of the First Concerto from Andrei Gavrilov. This version is second to none for virtuosity and sensitivity. Apart from its brilliance, it scores on other fronts too. Simon Rattle provides excellent orchestral support and the EMI engineers offer the most vivid recording, while the Suggestion diabolique makes a hardly less brilliant encore after the Concerto.

Piano Concertos 1; 3

🔑  DG 439 898-2. Kissin, BPO, Abbado

Ⓜ (*) EMI 228531-2. Argerich, Montreal SO, Dutoit – BARTÓK: Piano Concerto 3 **(*)

(i) Piano Concertos 1; 3; Piano Sonata 7 in B flat, Op. 83

 ASV CDDCA 786. Kodama; (i) with Philh. O, Nagano

Yevgeni Kissin gives a virtuosic, dashing account of both concertos and is given highly sensitive and responsive support from the Berlin Philharmonic under Abbado. It is unfailingly brilliant, aristocratic in feeling and wonderfully controlled pianism, and the recording is very good. It is a pity that DG did not offer a fill-up, as this CD offers only 42 minutes 27 seconds of playing time.

Mari Kodama is a vital and imaginative player and the performances are wonderfully alert and fresh-eyed; there is splendid rapport between soloist and conductor (not surprisingly since they are husband and wife) and they benefit from first-class recording.

Argerich is pretty dazzling in the First Concerto, though there is perhaps more grace than fire. Indeed some will find it just a shade underpowered. The Third, too, has many felicitous touches and great refinement though it does not supersede the earlier version she made in Berlin for DG with Abbado (see below).

Piano Concertos 1; 4 for the Left Hand; 5

() Hyp. CDA 67029. Demidenko, LPO, Lazarev

Nikolai Demidenko possesses formidable technical address but his musical personality is too intrusive for this to be the kind of recommendation his virtuosity should ensure. Tone above forte is not always beautiful, pianissimo markings are not always observed, and though there is much to admire, it is the pianist rather than the composer to whom one's attention is too often drawn.

Piano Concerto 2 in G min., Op. 16

 DG 477 6593. Yundi Li, BPO, Ozawa – RAVEL: Piano Concerto in G **(*)

Yundi Li makes a bold choice with the Prokofiev Second Concerto, for which he professes a special affection and admiration. Prokofiev himself played it when he was in his early twenties (the same age as the present soloist) and it is difficult to think of him surpassing this. Ozawa and the Berlin Philharmonic give him excellent support.

Piano Concerto 3 in C, Op. 26 (DVD version)

() EMI mono DVD DVB 3 101989. Janis, O. Nat. de l'ORTF, Paray (with bonus: BRAHMS: Piano Sonata 2 in F sharp min., Op. 2; Hungarian Dances 4 & 5 – Julius Katchen) – RACHMANINOV: Rhapsody on a Theme by Paganini ()

Byron Janis was recorded by French Radio in 1963 in a black-and-white film, and the mono sound ought to be better than this. But if the violins sound thin and pinched, the piano tone is acceptable and, not surprisingly, Janis's virtuosity is dazzling. He is fascinating to watch, while the Concerto's full lyricism is caught in the orchestra, thanks to Paray: it just gets dehydrated by the inadequate microphones. The Brahms works are played commandingly by Katchen, and here the 1968 sound is much better.

Piano Concerto 3 in C, Op. 26

🔑 Ⓜ * DG (ADD) 447 438-2. Argerich, BPO, Abbado – RAVEL: Piano Concerto in G; etc. ****

Ⓜ (*) RCA SACD (ADD) 82876 67894-2. Van Cliburn, Chicago SO, Hendl – RACHMANINOV: Piano Concerto 3 **(*)

((*)) Testament mono SBT 1300. Katchen, SRO, Ansermet – BARTÓK: Piano Concerto 3, etc. **(*)

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.110673. Kapell, Dallas SO, Dorati – KHACHATURIAN: Piano Concerto (); SHOSTAKOVICH: 3 Preludes; Piano Concerto 3 ()

(i) Piano Concerto 3; Conte de la vieille grand-mère, Op. 31/2–3; Etude, Op. 52; Gavotte, Op. 32/3; Paysage, Op. 59/2; Sonata 4, Op. 29: Andante assai; Sonatine pastorale, Op. 59/3; Suggestion diabolique, Op. 4/4; Visions fugitives, Op. 22/3, 5–6, 9, 10–11, 16–18

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.110670. Composer; (i) with LSO, Coppola

Martha Argerich made her outstanding record of the Prokofiev Third Concerto in 1967, while still in her twenties. There is nothing ladylike about the playing, but it displays countless indications of sensuous feminine perception and subtlety, and Abbado's direction underlines that from the very first, with a warmly romantic account of the ethereal opening phrases on the high violins. This is a much more individual performance of the Prokofiev than almost any other available and brings its own special insights. The 1967 recording, always excellent, sounds even more present in this new transfer.

Van Cliburn plays the work not only with astonishing digital brilliance but also with much sympathetic warmth. With a forward balance for the piano, the bold projection of both orchestra and soloist is undoubtedly telling, and especially so in the sharply characterized slow movement. But then the new compatible SACD transfer brings out the background Chicago ambience and the result is more flattering, less brittle than the original LP, even if the piano timbre is less than ideally sonorous.

In the 1930s and 1940s the Third Piano Concerto was represented in the catalogue solely by Prokofiev's own records on 78s, and Katchen's 1953 account was the first LP version to be issued in Britain. The 1955 edition of the Record Guide called his playing 'immaculate, deliciously fanciful but never merely superficial', and even now, half-a-century later, it sounds fresh and spontaneous. The transfer by Paul Baily is also immaculate.

Kapell's fabulously played and electrifying account of the Prokofiev concerto is a must. He outstrips even the composer himself – and most others who came after him. Not to be missed.

(i) Piano concerto 3; (ii) Symphony 5

(BB) () Dutton Lab mono CDBP 9706. (i) Composer, LSO, Coppola; (ii) Boston SO, Koussevitzky

Two classic performances from the days of shellac. Prokofiev's own pioneering and exhilarating account of his then relatively new Third Piano Concerto from 1932 coupled with the superb 1946 Boston version of the Fifth Symphony under Koussevitzky. Both are indispensable and both have never sounded better.

(i) Piano Concerto 5; Piano Sonata 8 in B flat, Op. 84; Visions fugitives, Op. 22/3, 6 & 9

🔑 Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 449 744-2. Richter; (i) with Warsaw PO, Rowicki

Richter's account of the Fifth Piano Concerto is a classic. It was recorded in 1959, yet the sound of this excellent CD transfer belies the age of the original in its clarity, detail and vividness of colour. Richter then plays the Eighth Sonata and the excerpts from the Visions fugitives with comparable mastery, the latter deriving from a live recital. In both cases the recording is surprisingly good.

Violin Concerto 1 in D, Op. 19 (DVD version)

Ⓝ  Medici Arts DVD 3085228. Perlman, BBC SO, Rozhdestvensky (with SAINT-SAËNS: Intro & Rondo capriccioso) – ELGAR: Violin Concerto ***

An elegant account of the magical D major Concerto from Perlman and the BBC Symphony Orchestra, recorded at the orchestra's 50th anniversary concert in October 1980. There is a bonne-bouche in the form of the Saint-Saëns concerto, recorded ten years earlier (29 October 1970) at the London Coliseum with the Sadler's Wells Orchestra and Charles Mackerras.

Violin Concerto 1 in D, Op. 19 (CD versions)

🔑 * Pentatone SACD PTC 5186 059. Fischer, Russian Nat. O, Kreizberg – GLAZUNOV: Violin Concerto; KHACHATURIAN: Violin Concerto ****

✿ (BB) () Naxos mono 8.110973. Szigeti, LPO, Beecham – BARTÓK: Portrait; BLOCH: Violin Concerto. ✿ ()

Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 0927 49014-2. Mutter, Nat. SO, Rostropovich – GLAZUNOV: Violin Concerto, Op. 82; SHCHEDRIN: Stihira ***

On Pentatone the unique triptych of three warmly compelling concertos from this brilliant young German virtuoso, Julia Fischer, superbly recorded in full, bright, clear sound, could hardly be bettered. Central to her choice is her love of the Khachaturian, but her approach to the Prokofiev is just as warm. With fine shading, she takes a thoughtful, meditative view of the yearning melodies, the element in the work that, as she says, most attracts her, but her bravura playing is just as impressive.

Szigeti's pioneering version of the Prokofiev D major Concerto with Sir Thomas Beecham and the LPO captures the bitter-sweet intensity of this magical score to perfection. The demonic brilliance of the Scherzo has never been surpassed, even by such great soloists as Oistrakh and Milstein, and the sense of character throughout is superb. Szigeti was a strongly individual artist, and the partnership with Sir Thomas and the LPO brings altogether special results.

As in the Glazunov, Anne-Sophie Mutter gives a warmly sympathetic account, responding to the inspirational direction of Rostropovich. The great melodies of the outer movements are tenderly expressive and the central Scherzo delightfully witty. The Washington recording, airy and spacious, has the soloist forwardly balanced.

Violin Concertos 1, Op. 19; 2, Op. 63

Ⓜ * Decca (ADD) 425 003-2. Chung, LSO, Previn – STRAVINSKY: Concerto ****

🔑 Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 0927 49567-2. Vengerov, LSO, Rostropovich – GLAZUNOV: Concerto ***

(BB)  Virgin 2x1 5 61633-2 (2). Sitkovetsky, LSO, C. Davis – SHOSTAKOVICH: Concertos ***

 Chan. 8709. Mordkovitch, RSNO, Järvi

Kyung-Wha Chung's performances emphasize the lyrical quality of these concertos with playing that is both warm and strong, tender and full of fantasy. Previn's accompaniments are deeply understanding, while the Decca sound has lost only a little of its fullness in the digital remastering, and the soloist is now made very present. The Stravinsky coupling is equally stimulating.

Vengerov's account of the First Concerto was originally coupled with the Shostakovich First and as such not only won the Gramophone Concerto Award in 1995 but was also voted 'Record of the Year'. Now it reappears at mid-price, joined to a hardly less fine account of the Second Concerto. Vengerov's magnetism in both is in no doubt: his playing is full of life and spontaneous feeling, helped by Rostropovich's highly supportive accompaniments. In the Second Concerto Vengerov opens the Andante magically on a thread of tone, and the playing and orchestral backing are quite ravishing. The finale has splendid vigour and bite. This now becomes the primary recommendation, and the Glazunov is no less remarkable.

The Virgin two-for-one Double makes an amazing bargain in offering first-class versions of both the paired concertos of Prokofiev and Shostakovich. Dmitri Sitkovetsky conveys the demonic side of the First Concerto more effectively than any other player, without losing sight of its lyricism or sense of line. His version of the Scherzo touches an ironic, almost malignant nerve, while he has the measure of the ice-maiden fairy-tale element at the opening. He has a sympathetic collaborator in Sir Colin Davis and the Second Concerto is hardly less powerful, and the internal orchestral balance is very natural.

Lydia Mordkovitch gives readings of strong personality and character. She is well supported by the RSNO and Järvi, and more than holds her own with rival versions. There are some splendidly malignant sounds in the Scherzo of No. 1, and both performances make a very satisfying alternative and have first-class sound.

(i) Violin Concertos 1–2; (ii) Sonata for 2 Violins, Op. 56

Ⓝ (BB)  EMI Encore 2 08118-2. Perlman; (i) BBC SO, Rozhdestvensky; (ii) Zukerman

Perlman's 1980 performances bring virtuosity of such strength and command, one is reminded of the supremacy of Heifetz. Though the EMI recording has warmth and plenty of bloom, the balance of the soloist is unnaturally close, which has the effect of obscuring important melodic ideas in the orchestra behind mere passagework from the soloist, as in the second subject of the First Concerto's finale. Nevertheless, in their slightly detached way these performances are impossible to resist as, excluding the balance, the recording is excellent. The Double Violin Sonata dates from 1932 when Prokofiev was still living in Paris and is lyrical in feeling, offering both depth and charm. The playing is excellent – as one has every right to expect from this partnership.

(i) Violin Concertos 1–2; (ii) Violin Sonatas 1–2; 5 Mélodies, Op. 35 bis

🔑 Ⓑ * Decca 475 6712 (2). Bell; (i) Montreal SO, Dutoit; (ii) Mustonen – SHOSTAKOVICH; Piano Trio 2 ***

Joshua Bell gives a ravishingly beautiful account of both concertos, heightening in the great lyrical passages the light and shade contrasts with the formidable bravura writing, which finds him at his most commanding. Others like Chung may find darker emotions here but, with recording outstanding even by Decca's Montreal standard, these performances are made the more attractive by their coupling on a Double with the Violin Sonatas and the charming Cinq Mélodies. They give a highly intelligent reading of all three works.

Violin Concertos (i) 1; (ii) 2; (iii) Violin Sonata 2 in D, Op. 94

🔑 Ⓜ () EMI mono/stereo 5 62888-2. Oistrakh, with (i) LSO, Matačić; (ii) Philh. O, Galliera; (iii) Yampolsky

These famous Oistrakh performances from the 1950s fully deserve their classic accolade. The First, with Lovro von Matačić and the LSO, is from the mid-1950s (like the D major Sonata), and only the Second (with Galliera and the Philharmonia) of 1958 is in stereo. But this is incomparable playing, and the transfers by Andrew Walter are immaculate.

Violin Concerto 2 in G min., Op. 63

🔑 (BB)  EMI Gemini (ADD) 3 81487-2 (2). D. Oistrakh, Philh. O, Galliera – BEETHOVEN: Triple Concerto for Violin, Cello & Piano; BRAHMS: Double Concerto; MOZART: Violin Concerto 3 ***

Ⓜ  RCA (ADD) SACD 82876 66372-2. Heifetz, Boston SO, Munch – GLAZUNOV, SIBELIUS: Concertos ***

Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 2564 61572-2. Perlman, Chicago SO, Barenboim – STRAVINSKY: Violin Concerto ***

() Testament mono SBT 1224. Kogan, LSO, Cameron – TCHAIKOVSKY: Violin Concerto, etc. ()

David Oistrakh's is a beautifully balanced reading which lays stress on the lyricism of the Concerto, and the orchestral support he receives could hardly be improved on. The 1958 recording is admirably spacious and atmospheric, with finely focused detail and great warmth. The CD transfer is immaculate. An altogether marvellous performance, and the Gemini compilation of four very distinguished recordings is extraordinary value for money.

In the arioso-like slow movement, Heifetz chooses a faster speed than is usual, but there is nothing unresponsive about his playing, for his expressive rubato has an unfailing inevitability. In the spiky finale he is superb, and indeed his playing is glorious throughout. The recording is improved on SACD, and it has been made firmer in the current RCA remastering. No one is going to be prevented from enjoying this ethereal performance because the technical quality is dated.

Though Perlman's coupling of Prokofiev's Second Concerto and the Stravinsky is ungenerous, this performance, recorded live, is more compelling than his earlier studio recording, with Barenboim adding to the urgency and energy.

Leonid Kogan's mono recording from 1955 has never been reissued on CD and its reappearance here gives us a welcome chance to reassess it. No doubt some will find it cooler than Oistrakh, but Kogan is very aristocratic and has tremendous grip and energy. Basil Cameron proves how supportive an accompanist he could be.

Divertimento, Op. 43; Sinfonietta, Op. 5/48; (i) Sinfonia concertante, Op. 125

Ⓜ  Chan. 10312X. SNO, Järvi; (i) with Wallfisch

The engaging Divertimento now comes additionally recoupled with the Sinfonia concertante, in which Wallfisch has the measure of the leisurely first movement and gives a thoroughly committed account of the Scherzo and the Theme and Variations which follow. Neeme Järvi lends him every support. The early Sinfonietta is offered as a highly attractive bonus (what a sunny and charming piece it is), and the recording throughout has great range, with no complaints about the balance elsewhere.

The Gambler: 4 Portraits, Op. 49; Semyon Kotko: Symphonic Suite, Op. 81 bis

 Chan. 8803. RSNO, Järvi

Prokofiev's Four Portraits enshrine the best of the opera and are exhilarating and inventive. Semyon Kotko, though not top-drawer Prokofiev, is still thoroughly enjoyable. Järvi gives a thoroughly sympathetic reading in vivid and present sound.

Ivan the Terrible (Complete ballet, arr. Tchulaki; DVD version)

 Arthaus DVD 101 107. Bolshoi Ballet & Theatre O, Zhuraitis (V/D: Motoko Sakaguchi)

The composer Mikhail Tchulaki was asked by the Bolshoi company to adapt the film score that Prokofiev wrote for the Eisenstein film, Ivan the Terrible, into a two-act ballet. Cunningly, he used not only 377 fragments from the original score, but also various extracts from other works of Prokofiev, including Symphony No. 3 and the Alexander Nevsky Cantata. In the lavish Bolshoi production it works well, with spectacular dancing, atmospheric sets and costumes, a welcome addition to the list of the composer's ballets, well conducted here by Algis Zhuraitis.

Lieutenant Kijé (incidental music): Suite, Op. 60

🔑 (BB) * Sony (ADD) SBK 48162. Cleveland O, Szell – KODÁLY: Háry János Suite; MUSSORGSKY: Pictures at an Exhibition ****

Szell is on his highest form. Seldom on record has the Lieutenant Kijé music been projected with such drama and substance, and Szell is wonderfully warm in the Romance without a suggestion of sentimentality. The recording, like the couplings, is balanced too closely, but the orchestral playing is so stunning one hardly minds, for the opening and closing trumpet-calls are properly distanced.

The Love for Three Oranges: Suite, Op. 33

 BBC (ADD) BBCL 4056-2. BBC SO, Kempe – BEETHOVEN: Overture: Leonore 3; DVOŘÁK: Symphony 9 ✿ ***

The Prokofiev suite, strikingly intense, finds Kempe at home in a sharply characterized performance full of grotesquerie. With well-defined contrasts of light and shade, bite and tenderness, it becomes more than a sequence of genre pieces. Vivid transfer of the 1975 radio recording, with high dynamic contrasts.

On the Dnieper, Op. 51 (ballet); (i) Songs of Our Days, Op. 76

 Chan. 10044. Russian State SO, Polyansky with (i) Smolnikova, Tarasov, Russian State Symphonic Cappella

On the Dnieper or Sur le Borysthène was composed immediately after The Prodigal Son and though its invention is not as strong as The Prodigal Son nor is it as imaginative as Chout, it is well worth hearing. Songs of Our Days comes from 1937 and is simple in language and patriotic in sentiment. It is an attractively naïve and enjoyable piece splendidly sung by the soloists and chorus. Good playing from Valéry Polyansky and his Moscow forces and very musically balanced recorded sound.

The Prodigal Son, Op. 46; Le Pas d'acier, Op. 41 (ballets; complete)

 CPO 999 974-2. West German RSO, Cologne, Jurowski

The Prodigal Son, on which Prokofiev drew for the Fourth Symphony, is a fine work. Le Pas d'acier is a little earlier and is as inventive and characterful, so this well-played and recorded newcomer deserves a welcome.

Peter and the Wolf (animated DVD version)

🔑 ✿ * Arthaus DVD 101 804. Philh. O, Stephenson (adapted and directed by Suzie Templeton)

This DVD film of Peter and the Wolf is a treasure. Adults enjoy it immensely and it would be a perfect gift for children. Suzie Templeton tells the story entirely without narration (one finds oneself whispering it at times), using very realistic puppets who behave and move very believably indeed, using stop-frame model animation. Peter and his grandfather live in a cottage in the wilds. There is snow all around and the weather is singularly inclement. We first meet the characters involved, a bird who because of wing damage cannot fly without the aid of a balloon, a winsome, long-necked duck and a particularly noxious cat. The wolf is very formidable indeed. Peter proves very resourceful in setting out while his grandfather is asleep and the story continues as Prokofiev planned it until the close. Then Peter defeats the incompetent hunters, and lets the wolf escape. Alas, the duck remains unrescued. The music is admirably played by the Philharmonia under Mark Stephenson, and this is altogether enchanting. A bonus takes us into the world of stop-frame model animation and shows us how the film was made.

Peter and the Wolf, Op. 67 (CD versions)

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.554170. Dame Edna Everage, Melbourne SO, Lanchbery – BRITTEN: Young Person's Guide *; POULENC: The Story of Babar ✿ ***

(BB) ()Naxos mono 8.111437. Eleanor Roosevelt, Boston SO, Koussevitzky – SIBELIUS: Symphony 2 ()

Ⓑ (*) CfP 586 1752. Rushton, LPO, Edwards (with DEBUSSY: Children's Corner: 3 Pieces) – BRITTEN: Young Person's Guide ; RAVEL: Ma Mère l'Oye **

Ⓑ (*) CfP (ADD) 3 82230-2. Richard Baker, New Philh. O, Leppard – BRITTEN: The Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra; RAWSTHORNE: Practical Cats **(*)

(i) Peter and the Wolf; (ii) Lieutenant Kijé: Suite

Ⓜ (*) Decca Phase Four (ADD) 444 104-2. (i) Connery (nar.), RPO; (ii) Netherlands R. PO; Doráti – BRITTEN: Young Person's Guide **(*)

If you react adversely to Dame Edna Everage's exuberantly eccentric persona, the Naxos version cannot be recommended. But for those willing to be included among her possums it is a highly entertaining and very dramatic narrative, with the orchestral accompaniment splendidly paced to match the gripping onward flow of the story. The couplings are equally splendid.

Although the narrative and orchestral commentary were recorded separately on the CfP disc, it is remarkable how well the two fit together. But the flair and professionalism of Sian Edwards meant that William Rushton was able to add his story-telling to a vividly colourful orchestral tapestry which had its momentum already established. He is a personable narrator, adding touches of his own like 'a vast grey wolf' and 'nothing to report' from the bird, and, overall this is a fine, sparkling presentation, brightly and realistically recorded, which cannot fail to entertain.

Naxos also offers Koussevitzky's second recording of Peter and the Wolf, with a former First Lady, Eleanor Roosevelt, as narrator. His account is supremely natural and should provide a model for young conductors. It comes with a powerful and unforgettable account of Sibelius's Second Symphony in which the mono sound may be regarded as historic.

Richard Baker, balanced well forward in a different acoustic from the orchestra, provides an extra introductory paragraph. But, conveniently, this is banded separately, as is each section of the story, and he enters into the spirit of the story and is only occasionally a little coy. Raymond Leppard provides an excellent accompaniment, the recording is vivid, and overall the presentation has a certain charm.

Sean Connery uses a modern script by Gabrielle Hilton which brings a certain colloquial friendliness to the narrative and invites a relaxed style, to which the actor readily responds. If you can accept such extensions as 'dumb duck' and a pussy cat who is 'smooth, but greedy and vain', you will not be disappointed with Connery's participation in the climax of the tale, where Doráti supports him admirably. Both Peter and the Wolf and The Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra start with the orchestra tuning up, to create an anticipatory atmosphere, and the introductory matter is entirely fresh and informal. In Lieutenant Kijé Doráti is characteristically direct, with everything boldly characterized, and he secures excellent playing from the Netherlands orchestra. As with Peter and the Wolf, the extremely vivid Decca Phase Four recording (not unnaturally balanced but ensuring every detail is clear) gives the performance a strong projection.

Romeo and Juliet (ballet; complete; choreography and staging by Rudolf Nureyev; DVD version)

🔑  Warner NVC Arts DVD 0630 15154-2. Legris, Loudières, Jude, Delanoe, Carbonnel, Martinez, Paris Opéra O, Pähn. (Dir: Alexandre Tarta; Producers: François Duplet and Damien Mathieu)

David Garforth conducts the La Scala Orchestra with a passionate commitment to Prokofiev's inspired score, yet he shows a wonderful ear for detail, making the music totally at one with the stage action. The recording is first class, and watching and listening to this superb DVD is a truly memorable experience.

Rudolf Nureyev famously created the role of Romeo for the Royal Ballet in 1965 with Margot Fonteyn as Juliet. In 1977 he revised the choreography for his own London Festival Ballet production, and in 1984 reworked the entire ballet for the Paris Opéra Ballet. The present live performance dates from 1995, with Manuel Legris dancing the role of Romeo with great distinction and Monique Loudières a delightful, elegantly graceful and passionate Juliet. Their love scenes together, at first romantic and finally erotically ardent, are among the ballet's highlights. But so too are the scenes with Tybalt (Charles Jude) and Mercutio (Lionel Delanoe) on whom Nureyev's choreography places special emphasis as 'champions' of the younger generation of the two rival families.

The orchestra plays Prokofiev's infinitely inspired score very well indeed, and the recording, too, is very good (it seems to gain range and impact as the ballet proceeds). But it is not up to the superb demonstration quality provided by Decca for Ashkenazy's RPO audio recording (see below), which is surely an essential supplement to the DVD.

Romeo and Juliet, Op. 64 (ballet; complete)

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca 436 078-2 (2). RPO, Ashkenazy

Ⓜ  Double Decca (ADD) 452 970-2 (2). Cleveland O, Maazel

Ⓑ  EMI Gemini (ADD) 5 86254-2 (2). LSO, Previn

Vladimir Ashkenazy's outstanding version of Romeo and Juliet was recorded as long ago as early 1991 yet did not appear until 2003. That delay is all the more a mystery, when this version sets new standards: it is a full and rich digital recording of a reading that at once combines brilliance, warmth and a feeling of fantasy, with crisply sprung rhythms at speeds that are fresh and alert. The result is lighter and more idiomatic than the much earlier Decca analogue version from Lorin Maazel, and more sparkling than the Gergiev version on Philips.

Previn and the LSO made their recording in conjunction with live performances at the Royal Festival Hall, and the result reflects the humour and warmth which went with those live occasions. Previn's pointing of rhythm is consciously seductive, whether in fast, jaunty numbers or in the soaring lyricism of the love music. The Kingsway Hall recording quality is full and immediate, yet atmospheric too.

Maazel by contrast will please those who believe that this score should above all be bitingly incisive. The rhythms are more consciously metrical, the tempi generally faster, and the precision of ensemble of the Cleveland Orchestra is little short of miraculous. The recording is one of Decca's most spectacular, searingly detailed, but atmospheric too.

Romeo and Juliet, Op. 64 (ballet; highlights)

🔑 (BB) * Sony SBK 89740. BPO, Salonen

With magnificent playing from the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, Esa-Pekka Salonen's set of excerpts – now reissued at bargain price – is probably a 'best-buy' for those wanting an inexpensive single disc of highlights from Prokofiev's masterly score. The orchestral playing has an enormous intensity and a refined felicity in the score's more delicate evocations. One is touched and deeply moved by this music-making, while the selection admirably parallels the ballet's narrative. The recording, made in the Philharmonie, matches sumptuousness with a potent clarity of projection, and the dynamic range is dramatically wide.

Romeo and Juliet (ballet): Suites 1–3

🔑 ✿ * BIS Surround Sound SACD 1301. Bergen PO, Litton

Romeo and Juliet (ballet; excerpts including Suite 2)

🔑 Ⓜ  Classic fM 75605 57047. RPO, Gatti – TCHAIKOVSKY: Romeo and Juliet (Fantasy Overture) ***

Romeo and Juliet: Suites 1 & 2 (ballet; excerpts)

🔑 Ⓜ  Telarc CD 80089. Cleveland O, Levi

Litton offers the composer's three suites (74 minutes), but he presents the music in the order in which it appears in the ballet. He does not always press the music forward, as in concert performances, but follows ballet tempi, taking his time to relish the score's magical delicacy, with no loss of tension; and, with the recording providing the widest dynamic range, the Bergen Philharmonic's pianissmo playing is ravishing. The recording is in the demonstration bracket – and especially so played back in Surround Sound.

After a bitingly pungent opening (Montagues and Capulets), Daniele Gatti's 50-minute selection effectively encapsulates the ballet's dramatic narrative in nine key numbers. The RPO characterizes very strongly indeed and, with generally brisk tempi, the strongest contrast is made between the bold, pungent rhythms of the more vigorous dances and the exquisite delicacy of the gentler, romantic evocation with its wonderfully translucent orchestral colouring. The portrait of Friar Laurence is touchingly gentle, but the ballet's passionate climax could not be more heart-rendingly plangent. The recording is superb, very much in the demonstration bracket, and the coupling with Tchaikovsky's Fantasy Overture is made the more apt by Gatti's highly romantic approach to that quite different response to Shakespeare's tragedy.

Yoel Levi also seems to have a special affinity with Prokofiev's score, for pacing is unerringly apt and characterization is strong. There are some wonderfully serene moments, as in the ethereal introduction of the flute melody in the first piece (Montagues and Capulets). The quicker movements have an engaging feeling of the dance and the light, graceful articulation in The Child Juliet is a delight; but the highlights of the performance are the Romeo and Juliet Love Scene and Romeo at Juliet's before Parting, bringing playing of great intensity, with a ravishing response from the Cleveland strings. The rich Telarc recording is in the demonstration class, and if this offers less music than several of its competitors it is now at medium price.

Romeo and Juliet (excerpts); Lieutenant Kijé: Suite, Op. 60

Ⓜ (*) Sony stereo/mono 82876 78761-2. NYPO, Mitropoulos (with MUSSORGSKY: Night on the Bare Mountain)

(*) Testament SBT 1394. Boston SO, Leinsdorf

Mitropoulos's splendid record comes from 1958 but, considering its date, the recording is remarkably good; it is very brightly lit but responds to the controls. The playing of the NYPO is electrifying. Prokofiev's score can seldom have received more passionate advocacy over the years, yet there are gentle moments too, for Mitropoulos can be tender as well as pungent. Even though the drama of the narrative is thrillingly projected, there is no feeling of aggressiveness here in either performance. A disc to be snapped up by admirers of this underrated conductor.

Leinsdorf devised from the ballet a suite of his own, which continues uninterrupted, making a chronological sequence that conveys the dramatic narrative of Prokofiev's masterpiece. This he recorded in Boston in 1967, together with a fine account of Lieutenant Kijé. He is not perhaps as subtle as some of his rivals, but there is plenty of dramatic tension and atmosphere here and very good recorded sound.

Romeo and Juliet: Suite 2

(BB) () Dutton mono CDBP 9754. Moscow State PO, composer – GLAZUNOV: The Seasons ()

Prokofiev's own 1943 recording of music from his Romeo and Juliet ballet – at that time not yet recognized as a masterpiece – brings some rough ensemble in playing, not helped by the dry acoustic. Yet the warmth and energy of the playing under the composer make this a valuable document, with the Dutton transfer greatly improving the original 78-r.p.m. sound. It is a pity that in the notes so little information is given on the backgrounds, either to this or to the Glazunov.

Russian Overture, Op. 72; Summer Night: (suite from The Duenna), Op. 123; War and Peace (suite, arr. Palmer)

 Chan. 9096. Philh. O, Järvi

The Russian Overture is determinedly popular in appeal, and it teems with ideas, both lyrical and grotesque, and has plenty of vitality. The Summer Night Suite is notable for its delicate Serenade and a charmingly romantic movement called Dreams. But the finest music here is Christopher Palmer's suite of interludes from War and Peace, full of splendid ideas. It ends triumphantly with the magnificent patriotic tune associated with Marshal Kutuzov, the architect of the Russian victory. Järvi and the Philharmonia Orchestra are thoroughly at home in these scores, and the Chandos recording is characteristically spectacular.

Scythian Suite, Op. 20 (with rehearsal; DVD version)

🔑  Arthaus DVD 100 314. Rotterdam PO, Gergiev (with DEBUSSY: Le Martyre de Saint-Sébastien). (Dir: Rob van der Berg, V/D: Peter Rump) – STRAVINSKY: Piano Concerto, etc. ***

Apart from performing it, Gergiev here discusses the Scythian Suite and its composer, championing the score with much eloquence. There are few pieces in 20th-century music that are as imaginative as its third movement, Night, or as inventive as the first, The Adoration of Vélèss and Ala, with its extraordinary lush contrasting group. Gergiev's performance has great fervour and eloquence. This includes some valuable archive material of Prokofiev himself and a contribution from his second son, the painter Oleg (who is also now no longer with us). The camera-work is unobtrusive and intelligent, though – as so often – one could do without some of the aerial shots of the orchestra. The Scythian Suite is difficult to balance, and some of the detail emerges in greater prominence than the main lines; but for the most part the sound balance is vivid and very present. The Debussy excerpts from Le Martyre de Saint-Sébastien are also most impressively played and recorded. This is an outstanding and invaluable DVD that is hugely enjoyable.

Sinfonia concertante for Cello & Orchestra, Op. 125 (DVD version) – see also under Divertimento and Concertino

🔑 ✿ * EMI DVD DVA 4901209. Rostropovich, Monte Carlo Nat. Op. O, Kamu – SHOSTAKOVICH: Cello Concerto 1. Bonus: MUSSORGSKY: Songs and Dances of Death ***

The Prokofiev Sinfonia concertante, which reputedly inspired the coupled Shostakovich concerto, is an altogether more romantic, essentially lyrical work. But it has an extraordinarily manic Scherzo which Rostropovich plays with such breathtaking virtuosity that the audience breaks into applause at the end of the movement. The work then moves back to warm lyricism and on to a characteristic Allegro marcato theme, which the cellist shares joyfully with the orchestra, glancing towards other orchestral soloists when they take up the theme from him. Throughout both works the camera frequently focuses closely on the solo cello, which makes Rostropovich's playing intensely involving. The live communication between soloists and orchestra, projected out to the watcher/listener, is marked, with the work's close leaving one with the feeling that there is no more to be said. This is a DVD that is a historical treasure and also offers a performance that in its own right can surely never be surpassed and is here caught on the wing. The very dry Monte Carlo acoustic does not help the orchestra, but one soon adjusts to the unexpansive orchestral sound when the solo playing is so electrifying.

Sinfonia concertante in E min., Op. 125 (CD versions)

🔑 ✿ * EMI 3 80013-2. Rostropovich, RPO, Sargent – MIASKOVSKY: Cello Concerto in C min.; RACHMANINOV: Vocalise ***

 Avie AV 2090. Harrell, RLPO, Schwarz – SHOSTAKOVICH: Cello Concerto 2 ***

This well-nigh definitive account of Prokofiev's reworking of material from his pre-war Cello Concerto is a classic. The composer and soloist worked together on the piece (originally billed as Symphony-Concerto) and Rostropovich gave the very first performance with a youth orchestra conducted by Sviatoslav Richter.

Lynn Harrell here is captured live with the excellent Liverpool Orchestra under Gerard Schwarz to impressive effect. The performance has great ardour and intelligence and those who do not possess the earlier account should invest in this, not only for its artistic quality but for the valuable coupling which Harrell has not given us before.

(i) Sinfonia concertante for Cello & Orchestra, Op. 125; (ii) Cello Sonata in C, Op. 119

🔑 (BB)  EMI Encore 208119-2. Han-Na Chang, with (i) LSO, Pappano; (ii) Pappano (piano)

Han-Na Chang, in warm partnership with Pappano and the LSO, gives a rich, heartfelt, urgently impulsive reading of the Sinfonia concertante, powerful as well as polished, with the element of fantasy brought out in the central Allegro giusto, and the pawky humour nicely pointed. The late Cello Sonata makes an ideal coupling. Chang again brings youthful ardour and vigour to her performance, with Pappano at the piano proving a warmly sympathetic partner, even though the instrument is placed well behind the cello. A splendid, modestly priced reissue.

The Stone Flower (ballet; complete)

🔑  Chan. 10058 (2). BBC PO, Noseda

Ⓜ  CPO 999 385-2 (3). Hanover R. PO, Jurowski

Conceived in 1948, during Stalin's worst artistic crackdown, but not staged until 1954, after the composer's death, The Stone Flower is a massive ballet built on folk stories in 46 numbers lasting two and a half hours. The freshness of invention, with one striking idea after another, demonstrates Prokofiev's astonishing ability to work under the most severe mental stress and yet remain his highly individual self. As in other late works, he eked out his ideas with material drawn from earlier pieces, but a warm, colourful performance, brilliantly recorded, such as this from the BBC Philharmonic under Gianandrea Noseda, makes one appreciate that this deserves to be in the ballet-theatre repertory. The variety of mood is a delight, with incidental divertissements developing naturally in the telling of the story of the hero, Danilo, in search of the stone flower – symbolic, no doubt, of the artist's search for an otherworldly goal. The chain of numbers over four acts ends in a triumphant Adagio in characteristically flamboyant ballet style; then follows a bold epilogue with a touch of Hollywood in it, all vividly presented in this opulent Chandos recording.

The version from Hanover under Mikhail Jurowski has a lot going for it. The orchestral playing is polished and characterful, and the CPO recording is fresh and well detailed, though it is expensive on three mid-price discs.

SYMPHONIES

Symphonies 1, Op. 25 (Classical); 2, Op. 40; 3, Op. 44; 4, Opp. 47 & Op. 112 (rev. 1947); 5, Op. 100; 6, Op. 111; 7, Op. 131

Ⓝ 🔑  Chan. 10500X (4). RSNO, Järvi

These Chandos recordings from the mid-1980s are of the highest quality. They have been shorn of their couplings in this box, the only important loss being the delightful Sinfonietta. Both versions of the Fourth Symphony are included: the 1947 revision appears with the Classical on the first disc, while the 1930 original is coupled with the Third. Nos. 2 and 6 are on the third disc, and 5 and 7 on the last, so no side-breaks are involved. As performances, these are the equal of the best.

Symphony 1 in D (Classical), Op. 25 (DVD version)

🔑  TDK DVD DV-VPOVG. VPO, Gergiev (includes Gergiev talking on Prokofiev and Stravinsky) (V/D: Brian Large) – SCHNITTKE: Viola Concerto; STRAVINSKY: Firebird Complete Ballet ***

As the opening scenic view discloses, Gergiev's splendid performance, admirably paced and very well played, was recorded at the 2000 Salzburg Festival. The orchestra is perceptively photographed (the video director is Brian Large), although curiously, among the many effective instrumental spotlights, the camera misses the bassoon's genial solo in the first movement. Gergiev, although he looks as if he might need a shave, is always fascinating to watch; facial communication and hand movements equally expressive. Excellent sound, too.

Symphonies 1 (Classical); 4 in C, Op. 112 (revised, 1947 version)

 Chan. 8400. RSNO, Järvi

Järvi succeeds in making out a more eloquent case for the revision of the Fourth Symphony than many of his predecessors. He also gives an exhilarating account of the Classical Symphony, one of the best on record. The slow movement has real douceur and the finale is wonderfully high-spirited. On CD in the Fourth Symphony the upper range is a little fierce in some of the more forceful climaxes.

Symphonies 1 (Classical); 5, Op. 100

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550237. Slovak PO, Gunzenhauser

The Naxos coupling is very good value indeed. The recording is altogether first class: there is splendid detail and definition, and the balance is extremely well judged. Moreover the American conductor, Stephen Gunzenhauser, gets very good playing from the excellent Slovak Philharmonic and the performances have the merit of being straightforward and unaffected.

Symphonies (i; ii) 1 (Classical); (ii) 5; 6

Ⓝ *() Australian Decca Eloquence mono/stereo 480 0834 (2). (i) Paris Conservatoire; (ii) SRO; cond. Ansermet

This two-CD set includes both of Ansermet's performances of the Classical Symphony, the earlier, mono recording with the Paris Conservatoire Orchestra dating from 1953, and the later, stereo re-make with the Suisse Romande Orchestra from 1961. The difference in sound quality is a tribute to how quickly Decca's recording technology transformed the vivid but rather over-bright mono sound to rich, warm and superbly vivid stereo sound. The performances are remarkably similar, though the sound of the earlier, Paris performance makes it particularly distinctive. Ansermet chooses quite slow tempi for the Classical Symphony, yet both are elegantly enjoyable performances. The Fifth, also caught in vivid stereo, was one of Ansermet's finest performances, straight and unaffected, and the playing of the SRO, though not the last word in virtuosity, is eminently spirited: the pointing and the crispness of the strings in the finale is one joy of this performance. The Sixth Symphony – a rare recording – has perhaps over-bright but vivid mono sound, and dates from 1951. If the first movement is a bit cool, the second is warm and passionate and the last sharply pointed and strongly characterized.

Symphonies 1 (Classical); 7, Op. 131; The Love for 3 Oranges: Suite

🔑 Ⓑ  CfP 3 82229-2. Philh. O, Malko – TCHAIKOVSKY: Nutcracker Suite ***

All the performances on CfP are quite excellent and the Seventh Symphony, of which Malko conducted the UK première, is freshly conceived and finely shaped. What is so striking is the range and refinement of the 1955 stereo recording: the excellence of the balance and the body of the sound are remarkable. Moreover, the reissue comes with a fine account of Tchaikovsky's Nutcracker Suite from the same year which was among the very first of EMI's stereo recordings.

Symphony 2 in D min., Op. 40; Romeo and Juliet (ballet): Suite 1

 Chan. 8368. RSNO, Järvi

The Second Symphony reflects Prokofiev's avowed intention of writing a work 'made of iron and steel'. Neeme Järvi produces altogether excellent results from the Scottish National Orchestra and the Chandos recording is impressively detailed and vivid. The Romeo and Juliet suite comes off well; the SNO play with real character.

Symphonies 2; 6 in E flat min., Op. 111

 Testament (ADD) SBT 1395. Boston SO, Leinsdorf

The Boston Symphony had a close relationship with Prokofiev. And so it was natural that in the 1960s they should have embarked on (though never completed) a Prokofiev cycle. The Second has a layout similar to that of Beethoven's C minor Sonata, Op. 111, a powerful, concentrated sonata-form movement followed by a theme and variations, and it is in the latter that its most inspired invention is to be found. The quality of its invention and its fantasy and poetic feeling make its neglect hard to explain. The Sixth is the darkest and most concentrated, and Leinsdorf gives a powerful reading that (for its day) has an outstanding recorded sound. It still sounds very impressive.

Symphonies 3; 4 in C, Op. 47 (original, 1930 version)

 Chan. 8401. RSNO, Järvi

Neeme Järvi's account of the Third is extremely successful. In many ways the original of the Fourth Symphony seems more like a ballet suite than a symphony: its insufficient tonal contrast tells – yet the Scherzo, drawn from the music for the Temptress in The Prodigal Son ballet, is particularly felicitous.

Symphonies 3, Op. 44; 5 in B flat, Op. 100

(*) Testament (ADD) SBT 1396. Boston SO, Leinsdorf

Leinsdorf's account of the Third gets a strong atmosphere and a fine sonority from the Boston Orchestra in this highly imaginative score. The Fifth is a well-shaped account, though not everyone will care for the ritenuto Leinsdorf makes between the Trio section and the return of the Scherzo in the second movement. All the same, these performances make one regret that Leinsdorf never went on to complete his Prokofiev cycle. Exemplary transfers.

Symphony 4 in C (revised, 1947 version), Op. 112; The Prodigal Son (ballet; complete), Op. 46

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553055. Ukraine NSO, Kuchar

It makes an ideal coupling having the Symphony No. 4 alongside the ballet score from which Prokofiev drew most of the material. The 1947 revision of the symphony, now generally preferred, is richer in both structure and instrumentation. Kuchar's readings are both powerful and idiomatic, with crisply disciplined playing from the Ukraine Orchestra bringing home the weight and violence of much of the writing. These are performances to match and even outshine current rivals at whatever price; the Naxos recording is satisfyingly full-bodied, not least in vivid brass and percussion sounds, with the piano both clear and well integrated in the Symphony.

Symphony 5 in B flat, Op. 100

🔑 Ⓜ * DG (ADD) 463 613-2. BPO, Karajan –
STRAVINSKY: Rite of Spring **(*)

Ⓝ () Orfeo mono 427041. VPO, Mitropoulos –
SCHUMANN: Symphony 2 in C ()

Symphony 5; Lieutenant Kijé: Suite

 Telarc CD80683. Cincinnati SO, Järvi

Symphony 5; Romeo and Juliet: Death of Tybalt

 BBC (ADD) BBCL 4184-2. Leningrad PO, Rozhdestvensky – BRITTEN: Young Person's Guide ***

Symphony 5; Waltz Suite, Op. 110

 Chan. 8450. RSNO, Järvi

Karajan's reading of the Fifth Symphony is outstanding in every way. It is a totally unaffected, beautifully played account, with the Berlin Philharmonic on top form, and the DG engineers at their best. The recording is a model of its kind, allowing all the subtleties of the orchestral colouring to register without any distortion of perspective. It has splendid range and fidelity and is wholly free from any artificial balance. It is here paired with his highly individual version of The Rite of Spring to make an intriguing coupling in DG's Originals series.

Mitropoulos was an outstanding conductor, and anything he did was special. Prokofiev's Fifth was recorded with the Vienna Philharmonic at the 1954 Salzburg Festival and the sound is light years removed from Telarc's Järvi. Moreover, the ORF (Austrian Radio) balance is not ideal either. However, there is only one word for the performance: electrifying. Readers should hear this powerful reading for themselves.

Rozhdestvensky's Fifth Symphony was recorded in September 1971 at the Royal Albert Hall, and the Death of Tybalt from Romeo and Juliet was an encore at an Edinburgh Festival concert during their 1960 tour when the Leningrad Orchestra brought the Fourth Symphony to the West for the first time. The Fifth was acclaimed by the late lamented Joan Chissell in The Times: 'this conductor relishes theatrical strokes, grotesquerie, the boldness and high voltage' . . . and 'his own high spirits burst out of every note'. The virtuosity of the orchestra is well captured by the BBC engineers.

Järvi's direction is unhurried, fluent and authoritative. His feeling for the music is unfailingly natural. The three Waltzes which derive from various sources are all elegantly played. The Chandos recording is set just a shade further back than some of its companions in the series, yet at the same time every detail is clear.

The Cincinnati Orchestra give a very well-prepared and polished account (without the rough edges in, for example, the Scherzo that are part of its character) and the Telarc recording reveals every strand in the texture. Very good playing, then, and an altogether excellent Lieutenant Kijé, although the first recommendations remain unchallenged.

Symphony 5; Ode to the End of the War

 Pentatone SACD PTC 5186 083. Russian Nat. O, Jurowski
(with RIMSKY-KORSAKOV: Russian Easter Festival Overture ) – RACHMANINOV: Symphony 1 ***

Vladimir Jurowski and the Russian National Orchestra give a performance of strong personality and striking character. He conveys the asperity of the Scherzo and the incisiveness of the finale to excellent effect; everything is alive and immediate, and he does justice to the breadth and lyricism of the slow movement. The unusual (to put it mildly) orchestration of the coupled Ode to the End of the War (eight harps, four pianos, wind ensemble with no strings, only double-basses) makes for a startling and spectacular aural experience. Although it comes from 1945, Prokofiev draws on several passages from the 1936 cantata, October. This is an important and competitive issue, with good, well balanced sound.

Symphonies (i) 5 in B flat, Op. 100; (ii) 6, Op. 111

 Praga PR 250 079. (i) Czech PO, Baudo; (ii) Leningrad PO, Mravinsky

Two Prokofiev symphonies recorded in the Smetana Hall, Prague. Serge Baudo's excellent account of the Fifth comes from 1976; Mravinsky's account of the Sixth with his visiting Leningrad Philharmonic Orchestra is from 1967, the year before the Soviet invasion, and is a great performance, taut, dramatic and intense. Very acceptable sound.

Symphony 6; Waltz Suite, Op. 110/1, 5 & 6

🔑  Chan. 8359. RSNO, Järvi

The Sixth Symphony goes much deeper than any of its companions; indeed it is perhaps the greatest of the Prokofiev cycle. Neeme Järvi shapes its detail as skilfully as he does its architecture as a whole. These artists have the measure of the music's tragic poignancy more than almost any of their predecessors on record. The fill-up is a set of waltzes, drawn and adapted from various stage works.

Symphony 7 in C sharp min., Op. 131; Sinfonietta in A, Op. 5/48

 Chan. 8442. RSNO, Järvi

Neeme Järvi's account of the Seventh Symphony is hardly less successful than the other issues in this cycle. He draws very good playing from the SNO and has the full measure of this repertoire. The early Sinfonietta is a highly attractive coupling (what a sunny and charming piece it is!). The digital recording has great range and is excellently balanced.

Visions Fugitives (arr. Barshai)

* Warner ONYX 4017. Moscow Soloists, Bashmet – STRAVINSKY: Apollo; Concerto in D ****

 Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 442 8414. ASMF, Marriner – BARTÓK: Divertimento; HINDEMITH: 5 Pieces; VIVALDI: Concertos ***

Rudolf Barshai made these brilliant string arrangements of Prokofiev's piano pieces for his Moscow Chamber Orchestra, so the superb new performance by the Moscow Soloists under Yuri Bashmet is especially welcome. Virtuosity and perfect ensemble are matched by expressive commitment, and the characterization of each vision is very striking. First-class recording too, and an apt coupling.

The Saint Martin's Academy equally relish the ingenuity of the transcription, which makes this sound like original string music. Fine, atmospheric recording and worthwhile couplings.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Music for cello and piano: Adagio (Cinderella), Op. 97b; Ballade in C min., Op. 15; Cello Sonata Op. 119; Solo Cello Sonata, Op. 134; 5 Mélodies, Op. 35 bis (arr. Wallfisch); The Love for Three Oranges: March; The Tale of the Stone Flower: Waltz

🔑 * Black Box Music BBM 1027. Wallfisch, York

Adagio (Cinderella); Ballade, Op. 15; Cello Sonata, Op. 119

 HM Chant du Monde LDC 2781112. Hoffman, Bianconi – SHOSTAKOVICH: Cello Sonata; Moderato **(*)

Cello Sonata in C, Op. 119

🔑 (BB) * Double Decca 473 807-2 (2). Harrell, Ashkenazy – RACHMANINOV: Cello Sonata, etc.; SHOSTAKOVICH: Cello Sonata, etc. ****

 Virgin 2x1 4 82067-2 (2). Mørk, Vogt – MIASKOVSKY, RACHMANINOV, SHOSTAKOVICH: Cello Sonatas; STRAVINSKY: Suite italienne ***

Ⓜ  Somm CD 029. Walton, Grimwood – KABALEVSKY, MIASKOVSKY: Cello Sonatas ***

 Chan. 8340. Turovsky, L. Edlina – SHOSTAKOVICH: Sonata ***

 Berlin Classics 0017832BC. Bohorquez, Groh – BRITTEN, DEBUSSY: Cello Sonatas ***

Prokofiev's Cello Sonata is the product of his last years and, like the Sinfonia concertante, was inspired by the playing of the young Rostropovich. The excellent account from 1988 on Double Decca remains one of the top recommendations; readers will find Lynn Harrell and Vladimir Ashkenazy wholly satisfying on all accounts. The rest of the programme is equally fine.

In addition to the Cello Sonata Raphael Wallfisch and John York on Black Box give us the early Ballade, Op. 15, as well as Wallfisch's own transcription of the enchanting Cinq mélodies, Op. 35, and the Solo Sonata which Prokofiev began just before his death and whose first movement Vladimir Blok put into shape some years later. Wallfisch plays with superb golden tone and with great expressive eloquence. John York is a sensitive and intelligent partner. Their account can rank with the best.

Truls Mørk and Lars Vogt give a perceptive and thoughtful account of the Sonata, are expertly recorded in the Eidsvoll Church, Norway. In addition to the Shostakovich the set has the advantage of equally fine couplings of the Miaskovsky and Rachmaninov Sonatas and the Stravinsky Suite italienne.

Jamie Walton and Daniel Grimwood are new to the artists' catalogue, and their intelligently planned programme is a splendid visiting card. The Prokofiev Sonata is given with great character and musicality, and can hold its own with most of the competition. Moreover, the coupling with the Miaskovsky Sonata is a considerable plus point. Good recording, too.

Gary Hoffman and Philippe Bianconi are hardly less fine than their distinguished rivals and are every bit as well recorded. Indeed, there is more air round the aural image in their recital. They opt for the more traditional Shostakovich coupling but do offer the early Ballade.

Yuli Turovsky and Luba Edlina are also eloquent advocates of this Sonata and the balance is particularly lifelike.

Claudio Bohorquez, with a fine fellow artist at the piano, brings out the power of the first movement, measured until the final animato section. His account of the central Moderato movement is built on high contrasts between the wit of the opening and the lyricism of the later passages, while power again dominates in his weighty reading of the strongly rhythmic Allegro finale.

Flute Sonata in D, Op. 94

🔑 * EMI 5 56982-2. Pahud, Kovacevich – DEBUSSY: Syrinx; Bilitis, etc.; RAVEL: Chansons madécasses ***

Ⓜ  RCA (ADD) 09026 61615-2. Galway, Argerich – FRANCK, REINECKE: Sonatas ***

Prokofiev's Flute Sonata (1943) is one of his sunniest and most serene wartime compositions. Played as it is on EMI, it is quite captivating. Emmanuel Pahud and Stephen Kovacevich set ideal tempi in each movement and their characterization is perfect as a result. The familiar ideas sound completely fresh and novel. Easily a first recommendation. A perfectly balanced recording.

With its combination of effortless virtuosity and spontaneity of feeling, every detail of the Galway/Argerich version falls naturally into place. The RCA recording is most sympathetic.

(i) String Quartets 1–2; (ii) Cello Sonata

(BB)  Naxos 8.553136. (i) Aurora Qt; (ii) Grebanier, Guggenheim

The Aurora Quartet give thoroughly straightforward, unaffected accounts of both Quartets. They are recorded in a warm, resonant acoustic. The Cello Sonata is a thoroughly musical account, not perhaps as strongly characterized as some, but eminently satisfying, and well recorded.

String Quartet 2 in F, Op. 92

✿ () Testament mono SBT 1052. Hollywood Qt – HINDEMITH: Quartet 3; WALTON: Quartet in A min. ✿ ***

The pioneering Hollywood Quartet version of the Second Quartet is a stunning performance which has an extraordinary precision and intensity (as well as repose when this is required). The transfer sounds excellent.

Violin Sonata (for solo violin), Op. 115

 Claudio CB 5256-2. Jin – LALO: Symphonie espagnole; SARASATE: Carmen Fantasy, Op. 25  (with KROLL: Banjo and Fiddle, orch. Bradbury; TARREGA: Recuerdos de la Alhambra, arr. Ricci **(*))

Violin Sonata (for solo violin), Op. 115; Sonata for 2 Violins

 Chan. 8988. Mordkovitch, Young – SCHNITTKE: Prelude; SHOSTAKOVICH: Violin Sonata ***

Violin Sonatas (i; ii) 1 in F min., Op. 80; (iii; iv) 2 in D, Op. 94; (i; iii) Sonata for 2 Violins, Op. 56

(BB)  Warner Apex 2564 60623-2. (i) Jaakko; Kuusisto; (ii) Paananen; (iii) Pekka Kuusisto; (iv) Kerppo

Violin Sonatas: 1; 2. 5 Melodies, Op. 35; March, Op. 12/1; Love for 3 Oranges: March. Romeo & Juliet: Masks (all trans. Heifetz)

Ⓑ  Artemis Vanguard CD 1555 (2). Gil & Orli Shaham

Sonata for 2 Violins, Op. 56

 Hyp. CDA 66473. Osostowicz, Kovacic – MARTINŮ: Violin Sonata; MILHAUD: Violin Duo, etc. **(*)

The solo Violin Sonata in D, Op. 115, is a crisply characteristic piece in three short movements. The Sonata in C for Two Violins, written much earlier, is just as effective. The warmth of Lydia Mordkovitch is well matched by her partner, Emma Young.

Min Jin's disarmingly direct approach to the Solo Sonata is most appealing, crisply so in the opening Moderato, seductively simple in the Tema con variazioni, buoyantly rhythmic and certainly Con brio in the closing Allegro precipitato, where she brings out the lyrical underlay. She is truthfully recorded and not balanced too closely. An unexpected but welcome coupling for an equally fresh approach to Lalo's Symphonie espagnole.

Both Jaakko and Pekka Kuusisto produce playing with a youthful ardour and vitality that is refreshing. This (originally Finlandia) Apex reissue ranks among the best, yet it is now very inexpensive. Anyone investing in it is unlikely to be disappointed.

Gil and Orli Shaham (frère and soeur) form a mutually understanding partnership to present Prokofiev's three key works for violin and piano, interlaced with a trio of transcriptions by Heifetz. The major works are strongly characterized and are played with a nice balance between ardent boldness and lyrical delicacy. The Five Melodies are made strikingly diverse, and the account of the Second, D major, Sonata is particularly compelling. Clear, forward, if slightly dry recording, but a good balance, with the violin dominating, but the piano well in the picture.

The Sonata for Two Violins gives the impression of being vintage Prokofiev, as performed by Krysia Osostowicz and Ernst Kovacic. The slow movement is played with exceptional imagination and poetry.

Violin Sonata 1 in F min., Op. 80

 Orfeo (ADD) C489981B. Oistrakh, Richter – BRAHMS: Sonata 2 ***

(*) Avie AV0023. Gleusteen, Ordronneau – JANÁČEK: Violin Sonata; SHOSTAKOVICH: 19 Preludes from Op. 34 **(*)

This Orfeo disc records the Oistrakh–Richter partnership in a live concert at the 1972 Salzburg Festival at the very top of their form. The playing, as one might expect, silences criticism and the recording from ORF (Austrian Radio) is perfectly serviceable.

Even more than in the Janáček and Shostakovich works,

Kai Gleusteen is in his element, and so is Catherine Ordronneau, bringing out the often violent contrasts in the writing, as well as the fantasy of the Andante third movement and the power and ebullience of the two fast movements, the second and the finale. The recording, one of a series made in Crear on the west coast of Scotland, is on the reverberant side, thanks to the large, bare studio in which it was made, but there is no lack of detail.

Violin Sonata 2 in D, Op. 94a

🔑  New Note Quartz QTZ 2002. Liebeck, Apekisheva – CHAUSSON: Poème; SAINT-SAENS: Sonata 1; YSAŸE: Sonata 3 ***

Jack Liebeck's performance of the D major Sonata, admirably partnered by Katya Apekisheva, is second to none among modern recordings. The opening is exquisitely played, and the Scherzo crackles with rhythmic vitality. The wry, wistful quality of the Andante is perfectly caught and is followed by a gutsy, irresistibly spirited finale. The recording is vividly real, with the violin perhaps a little too close, and the couplings are equally good.

PIANO MUSIC

Cinderella: 3 Pieces, Op. 95; 3 Pieces, Op. 97; Romeo and Juliet: 10 Pieces, Op. 75; War and Peace: 3 Pieces, Op. 96

(BB)  HM HCX 3957150. Chiu

Prokofiev's transcriptions of the ballet music from Romeo and Juliet are better known than Cinderella or the three pieces from the opera War and Peace (which include the delectable Grand Waltz). Frederic Chiu, who has already given us a first class set of the sonatas, plays with vivid colouring, often dazzling with his bravura. He is rather closely balanced, but the bright piano image is real enough, and this can be strongly recommended. Excellent value for money.

Piano Sonatas 1–9 (complete); Lieutenant Kijé (suite, transcribed Chiu)

🔑 * Chan. (as listed below). Berman

Piano Sonata 1 in F min., Op. 1; 4 Pieces, Op. 4; Prelude & Fugue in D min. (Buxtehude, arr. Prokofiev); 2 Sonatinas, Op. 54; Gavotte (Hamlet, Op. 77 bis); 3 Pieces, Op. 96 (Chan. 9017)

Piano Sonata 2 in D min., Op. 14; Cinderella: 3 Pieces, Op. 102; Dumka; 3 Pieces, Op. 69; Waltzes (Schubert, arr. Prokofiev) (Chan. 9119)

Piano Sonata 3 in A min., Op. 28; Cinderella: 6 Pieces, Op. 95; 10 Pieces, Op. 12; Thoughts, Op. 62 (Chan. 9069)

Piano Sonata 4, Op. 29; Music for Children, Op. 65; 6 Pieces, Op. 52 (Chan. 8926).

Piano Sonata 5 in C, Op. 38/135; 4 Pieces, Op. 32; The Love for Three Oranges: Scherzo & March. Romeo and Juliet: 10 Pieces, Op. 75 (Chan. 8851)

Piano Sonatas 5 in C, Op. 38; 6 in A, Op. 82; 10 in E min., Op. 137 (fragment); Gavotte (from Classical Symphony, Op. 25); Juvenilia; Toccata, Op. 11 (Chan. 9361)

Piano Sonata 7; Sarcasms, Op. 17; Tales of an Old Grandmother, Op. 31; Visions fugitives, Op. 22 (Chan. 8881)

Piano Sonata 8; Cinderella: 10 Pieces, Op. 97; 4 Pieces, Op. 3 (Chan. 8976)

Piano Sonata 9; Choses en soi, Op. 45; Divertissement, Op. 43 bis; 4 Etudes, Op. 2 (Chan. 9211)

Boris Berman always plays with tremendous concentration and control. He commands a finely articulated and vital rhythmic sense as well as a wide range of keyboard colour. In the Second Sonata in D minor Berman is quite magnificent and full of panache. The Third remains one of the most desirable of the set. The Fourth Sonata, like its predecessor, takes its inspiration from Prokofiev's earlier notebooks. The Op. 52 Pieces are transcriptions of movements from other works. Berman plays them incisively, with marvellous articulation and wit. He plays the post-war revision of the Fifth Sonata, and its crisp, brittle inner movement is heard to splendid advantage. The other works are presented with equal perception.

With the Sixth Sonata Berman is traversing hotly contested ground. Yet his cooler and more collected reading remains eminently recommendable. He then gives us the original (1923) version of the Fifth Sonata (generally to be preferred to the revision) but also the minute or so that survives of a Tenth Sonata. Berman is completely inside the astringent idiom and subtle character of the Seventh Sonata, and his playing in the Sarcasms could scarcely be bettered.

In the expansive Eighth Sonata, there is pianistic refinement in Berman's account, though it is in the ten numbers from Cinderella and the Op. 3 Pieces that Berman's command of atmosphere and character tells most.

Berman plays the Ninth Sonata with tremendous concentration and control. The Choses en soi (Things in Themselves) comes from the period of the Third Symphony, though there is a momentary hint of The Prodigal Son. The Divertissement is a delightful piece in Prokofiev's most acerbic manner which derived from the ballet, Trapeze. Berman couples them with the brilliant Op. 2 Etudes of 1909. First class recording throughout.

Piano Sonatas 1; 6–7; Toccata in C, Op. 11

 BIS CD 1260. Kempf

Freddy Kempf's Prokofiev finds him totally inside the idiom. He has all the technical address, flair and temperament this music needs. At present the sonatas are uncommonly well served on record. Kempf doesn't displace any of them, but his playing is satisfying and his admirers need not hesitate.

Piano Sonatas 4; 6; 10 Pieces from 'Romeo and Juliet', Op. 75

🔑 * Warner 2564 61255-2. Lugansky

Dazzling playing from Nikolai Lugansky, performances that stand out even in exalted company. The Sixth Sonata is the most exciting and authoritative now before the public and supersedes the likes of Pogorelich and Kissin in musical insight and virtuosity. The Romeo and Juliet Pieces have equal mastery and fascination. Remarkable Prokofiev playing, wonderful in terms of characterization and effortless virtuosity.

Piano Sonatas 6; 8

🔑  Naive V 4898. Guy

Prokofiev's wartime trilogy of piano sonatas comprises Nos. 6 through to 8, and it is a pity that the present disc does not include No. 7. Be that as it may, these are electrifying performances of virtuosity and great musical intelligence.

Piano Sonatas 7; 8; Romeo and Juliet: Romeo and Juliet before Parting; Masks

Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 468 497-2. Ashkenazy – LISZT: Impromptu (Nocturne); Mephisto Waltz 1 ***

Ashkenazy's commanding performances of these two sonatas, recorded in 1967, have great authority and conviction and the present recordings are rather special. The rhapsodical excerpts from Romeo and Juliet are also memorable and the Liszt couplings are hardly less impressive, the Mephisto Waltz is predictably dazzling.

Piano Sonatas 7–9

 ASV CDDCA 755. Lill

This disc, coupling the last three Sonatas, offers good value, and the excellent ASV recording was made in Henry Wood Hall. All three performances are of high quality, and John Lill is never less than a thoughtful and intelligent guide in this repertoire.

Piano Sonata 8 in B flat, Op. 84

 MDG 604 1141-2. Eckardstein – JANÁČEK: Sonata 1.X.1905; MESSIAEN: La Rousserolle effarvatte ***

Severin von Eckardstein won a special commendation at the Leeds Piano Competition for his advocacy of 20th-century music. His performance of the Eighth Sonata is beautifully shaped and expertly controlled. A fine début CD.

VOCAL MUSIC

Alexander Nevsky (cantata), Op. 78 (in English)

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * RCA (ADD) 09026 63708-2. Elias, Chicago SO & Ch., Reiner – KHACHATURIAN: Violin Concerto ****

Alexander Nevsky (cantata), Op. 78 (in Russian)

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Medici Arts (ADD) MM 028-2. Van Sante, Netherlands R. Ch. & R. PO, Stokowski (with RAVEL: Fanfare: L'Eventail de Jeanne ) – FRANCK: Symphony **(*)

Ⓜ (*) Sup. (ADD) SU 3696-2. Soukupová, Prague Philh. Ch., Czech PO, Ančerl – Symphony-Concerto for Cello **

Even now these early stereo Chicago recordings can astonish the listener, while Reiner's performance is among the most exciting accounts available, with the music for the Teutonic invaders as sinister as the Battle on the Ice is thrilling. No less effective is the scherzando-like middle section of the battle music, which Reiner points in the most sparkling manner. The fervour of the choral singing is matched by the eloquence of Rosalind Elias'sLament.*

Stokowski's broadcast recording has the advantage of the superb acoustics of the De Doelen concert hall in Rotterdam, which provides spectacular detail, colour and warmth for chorus and orchestra alike. Sophie van Sante gives a very touching performance of the Lament for the Dead; but it is the magnificent singing of the Netherlands Radio Chorus (uncredited in the listing!) that dominates the performance, although the orchestral textures also glitter tellingly. The sung text is available at www.mediciarts.co.uk

The strength of the Supraphon performance lies in the magnificent singing of the Prague Philharmonic Choir, richly resonant and clear. The closing chorus for Alexander's entry into Pskov is thrilling, sung in Russian (like the rest of the work), which adds much to its character. Vera Soukupová gives her elegiac tribute to the dead on the field of battle very movingly, if without the passion of a traditional Russian reading. Ančerl conducts a reading which is lyrically strong. Even if he misses much of the sinister quality of those menacing Teutonic Knights in Eisenstein's great film, the Battle on the Ice is still powerful, helped by the spectacular Supraphon recording, which sounds newly minted here. It is a pity that the coupling, although well played, is not more appropriate.

(i) Alexander Nevsky, Op. 78; Hamlet (incidental music), Op. 77: The Ghost of Hamlet's Father. Ivan the Terrible: Dance of the Oprichniks, Op. 116. Pushkiniana (ed. Rozhdestvensky)

(BB)  Naxos 8.555710. (i) Gelahova, Stanislavsky Ch.; Russian State SO, Yablonsky

(i) Alexander Nevsky, Op. 78; (ii) Lieutenant Kijé, Op. 60; Scythian Suite, Op. 20

🔑 Ⓜ * DG (ADD) 447 419-2. (i) Obraztsova; L. Symphony Ch., LSO; (ii) Chicago SO; Abbado

(i) Alexander Nevsky, Op. 78; Scythian Suite, Op. 20

🔑 * Chan. 8584. (i) Finnie, RSNO Ch.; RSNO, Järvi

Abbado's performance of Alexander Nevsky culminates in a deeply moving account of the tragic lament after the battle (here very beautifully sung by Obraztsova), made the more telling when the battle itself is so fine an example of orchestral virtuosity. The chorus is as incisive as the orchestra. A fine account of Lieutenant Kijé and what is among the best versions of the Scythian Suite to appear in recent years make this a very desirable reissue.

The bitter chill of the Russian winter can be felt in the orchestra at the very opening of Järvi's reading and the melancholy of the choral entry has real Slavic feeling. His climactic point is the enormously spectacular Battle on the Ice, with the recording giving great pungency to the bizarre orchestral effects and the choral shouts riveting in their force and fervour. Linda Finnie sings the final lament eloquently and Järvi's apotheosis is very affecting. As coupling, Järvi also chooses the Scythian Suite.

Dmitri Yablonsky gives a strongly atmospheric account of Alexander Nevsky, with plenty of dramatic feeling and fire. The short movements from Onegin included in Pushkiniana, which Rozhdestvensky scored in the 1960s, and the excerpts from Hamlet are very well played. Good recording, too, and no one opting for this Naxos CD will be disappointed.

Cantata for the 20th Anniversary of the October Revolution, Op. 74; Stone Flower Suite

 Chan. 9095. Rozhdestvensky (speaker), Philh. Ch. & O, Järvi

Even Prokofiev rarely wrote so wild and totally original a piece as this cantata. The key movement, centrally placed and the longest, uses such exotic percussion as rattles and sirens, with shouting from the chorus, in a graphic description of the revolution in St Petersburg. Järvi, here with his fellow-conductor Gennadi Rozhdestvensky as narrator, has made a first complete recording with the Philharmonia Chorus and Orchestra. As a valuable fill-up comes a suite of excerpts from the folk-tale ballet of 1948, The Stone Flower.

Ivan the Terrible (complete filmscore)

🔑  Ph. 475 7778-2. Sokolova, Putilin, Kirov Op. Ch., Rotterdam PO, Gergiev

Prokofiev's vividly colourful music for the Eisenstein film of Ivan the Terrible has never sounded quite so bitingly dramatic on disc as under Gergiev – as electrifying as any of his opera recordings with the Kirov Company. Here he has the advantage of excellent sound, recorded in the Rotterdam hall, De Doelen, with his 'other' orchestra, thrustful and earthy. Like competing versions, this one is based on Abram Stassevich's editing of the music into an 'oratorio', but without the spoken narration – hardly necessary on disc, when notes and text are provided. The two soloists, Liubov Sokolova and Nikolai Putilin, vibrantly Slavonic, add to the drama, as do the Kirov Chorus.

On Guard for Peace; Queen of Spade (Suites)

Ⓝ  Chan 10619. Tchistjakova, Docherty, RSNO Ch. & O, Järvi

These two Prokofiev rarities make a worthwhile coupling. On Guard for Peace is a cantata from the Soviet period; in many ways it echoes the Alexander Nevsky cantata, though with less memorable material. It makes a powerful impact nonetheless with its massed choral forces which include children's voices as well as a treble soloist, Neil Docherty. Here, as in Nevsky, there is a mezzo solo over a Lullaby. The orchestration adds consistently to the work's impact. The Suite from the Queen of Spades music is taken from an unrealized film score, with Michael Berkeley arranging and elaborating the sketches which have been found relatively recently. There is a fine Adagio and a jolly dance with a delightful pay-off. Not great music but well worth hearing in a performance as fine as this. First-rate, atmospheric sound.

OPERA

L'Amour des trois oranges (The Love for Three Oranges; sung in French; DVD version)

🔑  Arthaus DVD 100 404. Bacquier, Viala, Perraguin, Le Texier, Gautier, Henry, Reinhart, Lagrange, Caroli, Fournier, Dubosc, Bastin, Uria-Monzon, Lyon Opéra Ch. & O, Nagano (Producer: Erlo, V/P: Jung)

Although it contains some of Prokofiev's most popular orchestral interludes, the opera is in some ways less successful than its companions. As in The Gambler and The Fiery Angel, there are no set-pieces for the singers and there is scant thematic development. Indeed, the familiar orchestral March and Scherzo are practically the only elements that reappear. There is, however, no want of invention and exuberance, and the opera is ideal for DVD as it is very visual. The cast here is excellent, and so is the video recording. It offers subtitles in English, German, Italian, Spanish and the French in which it is sung. Recommended.

The Love for Three Oranges (complete; in Russian)

🔑  Ph. 462 913-2 (2). Akimov, Kit, Diadkova, Morozov, Pluzhnikov, Gerello, Shevchenko, soloists, Kirov Op. Ch. & O, Gergiev

Gergiev adds to his formidable Kirov series of Russian opera recordings with a brilliant reading of this fantasy fairy-tale. Using the Russian text this is earthier, tougher and more biting than the smoother French version offered on Virgin by Kent Nagano and his Lyon Opera team. The satirical element of the piece with its wry humour comes over the more sharply, with more sparkle, and though not all the Kirov cast can quite match their Lyon counterparts in vocal beauty, they are on balance more characterful, notably the formidable mezzo, Larissa Diadkova, as Princess Clarissa.

The Love for 3 Oranges (CD version; in English)

 Chan. 10347 (2). Humble, MacMaster, Tahu Rhodes, Arthur, Whitehouse, Op. Australia Ch., Australian Op. & Ballet O, Hickox

There is every advantage in having this opera in English, particularly when the deft translation by Tom Stoppard is used. Recorded live, the humour comes over naturally, helped by the crispness of ensemble, even in the most complex passages. Richard Hickox proves the liveliest interpreter, securing excellent playing from the orchestra, brilliantly recorded, with crisp and incisive singing from the chorus. The singing of the principals is consistently strong and positive, even if the voices are not specially distinctive, with Teddy Tahu Rhodes as Leandro, William Ferguson as Truffaldino, John MacMaster as the Prince, and Elizabeth

Whitehouse as Fata Morgana all first rate. The set also scores over its rivals in the full, atmospheric, well-focused sound.

The Fiery Angel (complete; DVD version)

🔑 ✿ * Arthaus DVD 100 390; CD Ph. 446 078-2 (2). Gorchakova, Leiferkus, Pluzhnikov, Ognovanko, soloists; Kirov Op. Ch. & O, Gergiev

The presence of vision in the finely directed DVD serves to underline an implicit ambiguity in the opera – whether Madiel and the spirits conjured up in Act II are real or are just Renata's paranoid delusions. Here the use of mimed figures, unseen by the protagonists but perceived by the audience, was a brilliant solution. The frenetic, highly charged atmosphere of the final Convent scene benefits by vision particularly in this splendid production. The sound has marvellous presence and detail.

The Fiery Angel (CD versions)

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * Ph. 446 078-2 (2). Gorchakova, Leiferkus, Pluzhnikov, Ognovanko, Kirov Op. Ch. & O, Gergiev

Ⓜ  DG 477 5596 (2). Secunde, Lorenz, Zednik, Moll, Gothenburg SO, Järvi

Impressive as was Neeme Järvi's 1990 recording for DG of this elusive but powerful opera, Gergiev's with Kirov forces is even finer. From the very outset the style is declamatory in a way that recalls Mussorgsky. The vocal line is largely heightened speech, but Prokofiev does provide a series of leitmotivs which are identified with characters or situations in the opera. This Philips live recording, with full, forward sound, avoids most of the snags of a recorded stage-performance. Above all, it offers in the singing and acting of Galina Gorchakova in the central role of Renata, the hysterical woman obsessed by demons, one of the most compelling operatic performances in years, with the timbre of the voice often sensuously beautiful, even when stretched to the limit. Sergei Leiferkus as Ruprecht with his clear, firm baritone is also ideally cast; the remainder of the cast, from the Landlady of Evgenia Perlasova to the resonant Inquisitor of Vladimir Ognovanko, are absolutely first class, while the Kirov team provides outstanding, always idiomatic and individual performances in smaller roles. Gergiev proves an inspired conductor who secures orchestral playing of great dramatic eloquence. There are the inevitable stage noises, but any snag is quickly forgotten.

With Järvi, the final scene with the Inquisitor (Kurt Moll, ever sinister) and chattering nuns does not quite rise to the expected climax. Nadine Secunde sings passionately as Renata and she is well supported by Siegfried Lorenz as Ruprecht. With such warm advocacy once can fully appreciate the work's mastery, even if the reasons for its failure to get into the repertory remain very clear.

Ivan the Terrible, Parts I and II (complete; DVD version)

() Eureka DVD EKA 40018 (2). Cherkassov, Tselikovskaya, Birman (Dir: Sergei Eisenstein)

The subject of Ivan the Terrible equally inspired Prokofiev to write a powerful and distinctive score, which can stand on its own as a concert work. Yet over two films (94 and 85 minutes respectively) the result is necessarily more diffuse. Eisenstein's astonishingly striking and beautiful images in black and white have remarkable impact on DVD, based on an excellent copy of the original film, but sadly, the soundtrack is depressingly crumbly and ill-focused. Though it makes it hard to enjoy Prokofiev's music, its power is still very clear, enhancing the heavyweight treatment of history. It is a pity that it was not possible to superimpose a modern recording of the music, as has been effectively done in live concert-showings of the film.

Semyon Kotko (complete)

Ⓜ () Chan. mono 10053 (3). Gres, Gelovani, Yanko, Troitsky, Penchekhin, USSR R. Ch. & O, Zhukov

Semyon Kotko (slightly abridged)

🔑  Ph. 464 605-2 (2). Lutsiuk, Pavlovskaya, Savoya, Bezzubenkov, Nikitin, Chernomortsev, Solovieva, Markova-Mikhailenko, Karasev, Akimov, Kirov Ch. & O, Gergiev

Semyon Kotko was the fifth of Prokofiev's eight operas and the first on a Soviet theme. It is a story of love and heroism in the Ukraine during the disturbed period after the 1917 Revolution. As for the music, it demonstrates once again that even when he was saddled with a propagandist Soviet theme, Prokofiev's fluent originality could not be submerged. The only disappointment is that it lacks the big surging melodies that make Prokofiev's masterpiece, War and Peace, so memorable, though some of the choruses come close.

This first really complete recording on Chandos stems from a studio performance for Moscow Radio in 1960, which in mono sound captures the voices vividly, with words exceptionally clear. It has the authority of being conducted by Mikhail Zhukov who was responsible for the 1940 première and would have known Prokofiev's intentions. It scores surprisingly well alongside the 1999 Philips version with Kirov soloists in concert conducted by Valery Gergiev, containing some 45 minutes more of music omitted from that later set. The Moscow cast is strong too, with Slavonic wobblers excluded. The tenor, N. Gres, in particular is magnificent in the title-role, firmer and more heroic than his opposite number on Philips. While most collectors will opt for the modern stereo version, this earlier recording is by no means outclassed.

On Philips Viktor Lutsiuk as Semyon and Tatiana Pavlovskaya as his fiancée Sofya are both first class; however, the real hero is Gergiev who phrases sensitively and paces the music with all his dramatic expertise and gets an enthusiastic response from his Kirov forces. The recording is excellent.

The Story of a Real Man (opera; complete)

Ⓜ  Chan. (ADD) 10002(2). Kibkalo, Deomidova, Leonova, Pankov, Rezhetin, Maslennikov, Bolshoi Ch. & O, Ermler

Prokofiev's last opera, The Story of a Real Man, written just after the Second World War, was based on a novel by Boris Polevoy that, reflecting a true story, tells of a Soviet pilot, Alexei, who is shot down behind the German lines and who, for 18 days, crawls to find safety. This first CD version brings a transfer of the 1961 Soviet recording based on that first stage production at the Bolshoi, and the sound is astonishingly full and vivid, with the voices clear and immediate. Central to the success of this recorded performance is not just the inspired conducting of Mark Ermler, but also the brilliant singing of Yevgeny Kibkalo as Alexei, satisfyingly firm and dark, and rising to the challenge of the arioso passages of heightened lyricism, notably when his rehabilitation monologue leads to a duet with the great Russian bass, Mark Rezhetin, as the head surgeon. Other Bolshoi basses in the cast are splendid too, as is the tenor, Alexei Maslennikov, as a pilot colleague, though Glafira Deomidova in the surprisingly small role of the heroine, Olga, is disappointingly edgy.

War and Peace (DVD versions)

 Arthaus DVD 100 370-9. Gergalov, Prokina, Volkova, Sonya, Kanunnikova, Alexashkin, Gregoriam, Borodina, Bezukhova, Marusin, Morozov, Kit, Okhotnikov, Gerello, Kirov Ch. and O, Gergiev (Dir: Graham Vick; V/D: Humphrey Burton)

 TDK DVD DV OPWP (2). Guryakova, Gunn, Brubaker, Kotcherga, Obraztsova, Gerello, Zaremba, Margita, Poretsky, Paris Nat. Op. Ch. & O, Bertini (Dir: Zambello, Hugues R. Gall)

We now have two versions of Prokofiev's monumental opera to choose between on DVD. Bertini's account was recorded at the Opéra Bastille in March 2000 and was the opera's first (and much heralded) staging in France. It has plenty in its favour, including a good cast, with an excellent Natasha in Olga Guryakova. There is a fine Bolkonsky in Nathan Gunn and an ideal Pierre Bezhukov (Robert Brubaker), who both looks and sounds exactly right. Perhaps Anatoli Kotcherga is not quite as memorable a Kutuzov as Nikolai Okhotnikov on the Kirov set, but he is commanding nevertheless. Gary Bertini conducts his fine chorus and orchestra well and, generally speaking, there are few serious weaknesses. In addition to the 210 minutes of the opera itself, the Paris recording includes two features on the production, running to 79 minutes or so. No one investing in the set is likely to be greatly disappointed, for the viewer is held from start to finish.

The alternative 1991 Kirov production was directed by Graham Vick with simple – but, on the whole, effective – designs and costumes. The Bolkonsky (Alexandr Gergalov), Pierre (Gegam Gregoriam) and Kutuzov (Nikolai Okhotnikov) are impressive, though the production, particularly in the first half, is not as distinguished as everyone said it was. However, it is the quality of Gergiev's conducting – War and Peace was the first opera he conducted, a quarter of a century ago – and the magnificent choral forces he has at his command that would probably in the end tip the scales in favour of the St Petersburg set, were we forced to choose. However, we would be happy with either.

War and Peace (CD versions)

🔑 * Chan. 9855 (4). Morozova, Williams, Lavender, Balashov, Dupont, Stephen, Ionova, Ewing, Opie, Russian State Symphonic Cappella, Spoleto Fest. O, Hickox

Ⓜ  Erato (ADD) 2292 45331-2 (4). Vishnevskaya, Miller, Ciesinski, Tumagian, Ochman, Ghiuselev, Smith, Paunova, Petkov, Toczyska, Zakai, Gedda, Fr. R. Ch. & Nat. O, Rostropovich

Recorded live at the 1999 Spoleto Festival in full and open Chandos sound, Richard Hickox's formidable version of Prokofiev's epic opera offers a strong, thrustful performance with a cast more consistent than those on rival sets. With a warm understanding of the idiom, helped by a substantial Russian element among the singers, not least the chorus, Hickox keeps the 13 scenes moving well at speeds often on the fast side. Pointing the dramatic contrast between personal tragedy and great public events, the surging lyricism of Prokofiev's inspiration is sharply set against bitingly rhythmic writing, whether in the party scenes of the first part or the wartime scenes of the second half. The glorious tunefulness of the patriotic numbers has just the gulp-in-throat quality needed, whether General Kutuzov's big aria, nobly sung by Alan Ewing, or the big choruses fervently sung by the Russian choir.

Ekaterina Morozova is a moving Natasha, Slavonic in timbre, weighty but still girlish enough, with an edge to the voice that rarely turns squally. She is well matched in the beautiful opening scene by Pamela Helen Stephen as her cousin, Sonya, while Roderick Williams is a fresh, virile Andrei, and Justin Lavender a vulnerable-sounding Pierre, who convincingly erupts in anger.

Alan Opie is a characterful Napoleon, with the battle scene of Borodino thrillingly vivid, not least in shattering cannon shots. Other versions may have starrier individual contributions, but this one has no weak link, and the recording is not just full and brilliant, but, beautifully balanced, captures the sweetness of the Spoleto strings very persuasively. The four-disc layout (for the price of three) means breaks come at the ends of scenes.

In Rostropovich's powerful reading one revels – thanks also to the lively Erato recording – in the vividness of the atmosphere, both in the evocative love scenes and ball scenes of the first half (Peace) and in the high tensions of the battle scenes in the second (War). The opera culminates in a great patriotic chorus, using the most haunting tune of all, earlier sung by General Kutuzov after the Council of Fili, and the emotional thrust is overwhelming. The French Radio Choir sings that chorus with real Russian fervour. It was natural that Rostropovich's wife, Galina Vishnevskaya, should sing the central role of Natasha, as she did in the earlier, much-cut, Bolshoi recording. It is extraordinary how convincingly this mature soprano in her early sixties characterizes a young girl; there may be raw moments, but she is completely inside the role. The Hungarian baritone, Lajos Miller, not flawless either, is a clear-voiced Andrei, and Wieslaw Ochman is a first-rate Pierre, with the veteran, Nicolai Gedda, brought in as Kuragin. Katherine Ciesinski is a warm-toned Sonya, but Dimiter Petkov is disappointingly unsteady as Natasha's father, Count Rostov. The small role of Napoleon is strongly taken by Eduard Tumagian, while Nicola Ghiuselev is a noble Kutuzov, in some ways the most impressive of all. The libretto contains French and English translations, but no Russian transliteration, only the Cyrillic text in a separate section.

PUCCINI, Giacomo (1858–1924)

Capriccio sinfonico; Crisantemi; Minuets 1–3; Preludio sinfonico; Edgar: Preludes, Acts I & III; Manon Lescaut: Intermezzo, Act III; Le Villi: Prelude. La Tregenda (Act II)

Ⓜ  Decca 475 7722. Berlin RSO, Chailly

In a highly attractive collection of Puccinian juvenilia and rarities, Chailly draws opulent and atmospheric playing from the Berlin Radio Symphony Orchestra, helped by outstandingly rich and full recording. The Capriccio sinfonico of 1876 brings the first characteristically Puccinian idea in what later became the opening Bohemian motif of La Bohème. There are other identifiable fingerprints here, even if the big melodies suggest Mascagni rather than full-blown Puccini. Crisantemi (with the original string quartet version expanded for full string orchestra) provided material for Manon Lescaut, as did the three little Minuets, pastiche 18th-century music.

Crisantemi for String Quartet

Ⓜ  CRD (ADD) CRD 3366. Alberni Qt – DONIZETTI: Quartet 13; VERDI: Quartet ***

Crisantemi is given a warm, finely controlled performance by the Alberni Quartet and makes a valuable makeweight for the two full-scale Quartets by fellow opera-composers. The sound is excellent.

Crisantemi; Fugues 1–3; Minuets 1–3; Scherzo in A min.; String Quartet in D

 ASV CDDCA 909. Puccini Qt – CATALANI: String Quartet in A, etc. ***

The Minuets are hardly identifiable as by Puccini. Then suddenly the full Puccini emerges in the beautiful Crisantemi of 1890. It is strange that though Puccini's musical personality began to emerge early in his choral and orchestral works, this sparer genre found him more anonymous, even in his melodies. Nonetheless, a delightful disc, warmly played and atmospherically recorded.

(i) Messa di gloria; (ii) Preludio sinfonico; Crisantemi

🔑 * EMI 3 56519-2. (i) Alagna, Hampson, LSO Ch. LSO, Pappano

(BB)  Warner Apex (DDD/ADD) 0927 48692-2. (i) Carreras, Prey, Amb. S., Philh. O; (ii) Monte Carlo Op. O; Scimone

Messa di gloria; Crisantemi; Preludio sinfonico

(BB)  Naxos 8.555304. Palombi, Lundberg, Hungarian R. Ch. & Op. O, Morandi

Puccini's Messa di gloria is by far the most ambitious of his early works. He even uses material from the Agnus Dei in Manon Lescaut, yet the piece has been unfairly neglected on disc, when particularly the extended setting of the Gloria is so memorable, starting with a swaggering march such as Rossini might have put into a religious work.

Antonio Pappano easily outshines his rivals on disc, enhancing the operatic element, including obvious echoes not just of the Verdi Requiem, but of Otello. Ideal soloists in Alagna and Hampson, with the London Symphony Chorus and LSO in incandescent form. The two bonuses are welcome, aptly chosen and very well played.

The return of Scimone's second (1983) digital version on the super-bargain Apex label makes this version much more attractive, particularly as he includes the same two orchestral pieces as Pappano as makeweights. Excellent, atmospheric sound.

The Naxos recording from Budapest brings bright, urgent singing and playing under Pier Morandi. The early orchestral works make an attractive bonus.

OPERA

Collection: Renata Tebaldi: 'The Classic Puccini Recordings': La Bohème; Madama Butterfly; Turandot; La Fanciulla del West (with soloists, Ch. & O of Rome Santa Cecilia Academy)

Ⓑ ((*)) Decca mono/stereo (ADD) 475 9385 (15)

Here are the LP sets that not only revealed Renata Tebaldi as one of the supreme 20th-century sopranos, at her very finest in Puccini, but that also helped to establish Decca as a major source of opera recordings. Listening through these remarkable recordings not only gives pleasure but also excites nostalgia for a period of recording history when the long playing record (and later stereo) transformed the operatic medium for home-listening. The operas are all available separately.

La Bohème (with Prandelli, Gueden, Inghilleri, Corena, Arié; cond. Erede)

Ⓑ Decca 440 233-2 (2)

The recording of La Bohème dates from 1951 and is still a lovely performance, more than fifty years later. Gueden is a most characterful Musetta, if not always in style vocally; Prandelli is a light-voiced but ardent and likeable Rodolfo; and Inghilleri is old-sounding but still interesting as Marcello. The main weakness lies in Erede's conducting, which is not terribly inspired. But even that is no serious drawback when the singing is so consistently compelling. The balance is still remarkably realistic, and the thin, edgy violins (for which early Decca LPs became notorious) have been satisfactorily contained in this vivid new transfer.

Madama Butterfly (with Campora, Rankin, Inghilleri; cond. Erede)

Ⓑ Decca 440 236-2 (2)

Madama Butterfly was also recorded in 1951, and astonishingly this set was made before Tebaldi ever sang the part in the opera house. Once again, the orchestral strings now offer little to worry the ear and generally sound much more full-bodied than previously.

Turandot (with Borkh, del Monaco; cond. Erede)

Ⓑ Decca 452 964-2 (2)

Turandot, recorded a year later in 1955, proved to be the one near-failure of the series. The recording has a glitter and brilliance to match even the fabulous court of the emperor of China, yet somehow the performance lacks atmosphere and sheer vitality. Tebaldi opted for the part of Liù and sings beautifully, but Inge Borkh proved not the most biting of princesses, and the recording is not kind to her upper register, bringing out its unevenness. Monaco is his own loud-voiced self as the stranger prince, but Erede's conducting seems too careful in passages that should have the most barefaced oriental panache.

La Fanciulla del West (with del Monaco, MacNeil, Tozzi; cond. Capuana)

Ⓑ Decca 421 595-2 (2)

Such was the success of La Fanciulla del West, made three years later in the summer of 1958, that it has remained unsurpassed until this day. It is discussed more fully below. Sufficient to say that both Tebaldi and del Monaco were at their finest, and Tozzi as Jake Wallace proved another outstanding asset. The Decca producers, James Walker and Christopher Raeburn, again demonstrated Decca's imaginative production values at their most impressive.

Other Recordings

(i) La Bohème; (ii) Madama Butterfly; (iii) Tosca (complete; DVD Versions)

🔑 Ⓜ (*) DG DVD 073 4417 (3). (i) Freni, Martino, Raimondi, La Scala Ch. & O, Karajan; (ii) Freni, Ludwig, Domingo, VPO, Karajan; (iii) Kabaivanska, Domingo, Milnes, New Philh. O, Bartoletti

These three splendidly traditional filmed productions with starry casts are very highly recommendable and are discussed below. Two feature Mirelli Freni, two are with Domingo (both on top form), and two are conducted by Karajan and the third equally magnetically by Bartoletti; altogether they make a wonderful mid-priced package. This is what filmed opera should be about; and here it is, with backgrounds and productions which follow the composer's intentions. The wide-ranging photography is very well handled and the miming is not too distracting. The packaging is minimal but there is a good accompanying booklet.

'The Great Decca Puccini recordings': (i–iv) La Bohème; (i; ii; v) Madama Butterfly; (i; ii; vi) Manon Lescaut; (i; ii; vii) Tosca; (i; iii; viii) Turandot

Ⓝ Ⓑ  Decca 475 9409 (11). (i) Pavarotti; (ii) Freni; (iii) Ghiaurov; (iv) Harwood, BPO, Karajan; (v) Ludwig, Kerns, VPO, Karajan; (vi) Met. Op. Ch. & O, Levine; (vii) Milnes, Nat. PO, Rescigno; (viii) Sutherland, Caballé, Krause, Alldis Ch., LPO, Mehta

'The EMI Operas':

La Bohème (Freni, Gedda, Adani, Sereni, Basiola, Mazzoli, Rome Op. Ch. & O, Schippers)

La Fanciulla del West (Nilsson, Gibin, Mongelli, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Matačić)

Tosca (Callas, Bergonzi, Gobbi, Paris Op. Ch. & Conservatoire O, Prêtre)

Madama Butterfly (De los Angeles, Björling, Pirazzini, Rome Op. Ch. & O, Santini)

La Rondine (Gheorghiu, Alagna, L. Voices, LSO, Pappano)

Il trittico (Il tabarro; Suor Angelica; Gianni Schicchi) (Guelfi, Guleghina, Shicoff, Gallardo-Domas, Manca di Nissa, L. Voices, LSO, Tiffin Boys' Ch., Philh., Pappano; Gobbi, De los Angeles, Rome Op. O, Santini)

Turandot (Nilsson, Corelli, Scotto, Rome Op. Ch. & O, Molinari-Pradelli)

Ⓝ Ⓑ (*) EMI 2 15460-2 (17)

The Complete Callas Studio Recordings

La Bohème (with Di Stefano, Panerei, Moffo, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Votto)

Madama Butterfly (with Gedda, Danieli, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Karajan)

Manon Lescaut (with Di Stefano, Fioravanti, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Serafin)

Tosca (with di Stefano, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, De Sabata)

Tosca (with Cioni, Gobbi, ROHCG Ch. & O, Cillario)

Turandot (with Schwarzkopf, Fernandi, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Serafin)

Arias (1954) (with Philh. O, Serafin)

Ⓝ Ⓑ () EMI mono/stereo 2 15894-2 (15)

To celebrate the 150th anniversary of Puccini's birth, at the end of 2008 Decca and EMI both made available their key recordings gathered together as sets. They are economically priced and suitable for those wanting to replace their collections in a way that reduces storage space but still makes the individual recordings easily accessible.

La Bohème (complete; DVD versions)

🔑 ✿ * DG DVD 073 4025. Scotto, Pavarotti, Niska, Wixell, Monk, Plishka, Tajo, Met. Op. Ch. & O, Levine; Introduction: Tony Randall (Dir: Kirk Browning)

Ⓝ 🔑 ✿ * EMI DVD 2 17417-9. Gheorghiu, Vargas, Arteta, Tézier, Gradus, Kelsey, Plishka, Met. Op. Ch. & O, Luisotti (Producer: Franco Zeffirelli)

(*) DG DVD 073-4071. Freni, Martino, Raimondi, Panerai, La Scala Ch. & O, Karajan (Dir: Franco Zeffirelli)

(*) Warner DVD 4509 99222-2. Cotrubas, Shicoff, Allen, Zschau, Howell, Rawnsley, ROHCG Ch. & O, Gardelli (Producer: John Copley, V/D: Brian Large)

(*) Arthaus DVD 100 046. Freni, Pavarotti, Pacetti, Quilico, Ghiaurov, San Francisco Ch. & O, Severini (V/D: Brian Large)

(*) TDK DVD DV-OPBOH. Gallardo-Domas, Hong, Alvarez, Servile, Carolis, Parodi, La Scala Ch. & O, Bartoletti (V/D: Carlo Battistoni)

This is the Bohème we have been waiting for, the 1972 Chicago Lyric Opera production, the first to be filmed in colour at the New York Met., in 1977. Three decades ago Pavarotti was in his prime, and he makes an ideal Rodolfo, not only singing with his usual vocal charisma, but acting movingly, particularly in the final scene. Renata Scotto's Mimì very nearly steals the show. She is plainly dressed, but her face lights up with a wonderful smile when she declares her feelings for Rodolfo. Ingvar Wixell's Marcello, with his rich baritone, is as passionately warm-hearted as you could wish, and Maralin Niska is a wilfully attractive and resourceful Musetta. Among the smaller parts Italo Tajo's Benoit stands out, and of course Allan Monk's Schaunard and Paul Plishka's Colline add much to the boisterous antics of the male quartet which frames the opera. James Levine conducts with wonderful flexibility, especially when accompanying Scotto, and the orchestra responds warmly, even if the recording does not do its opulence full justice. Never mind, to watch this (with subtitles) makes a wonderful evening's entertainment.

Zeffirelli's extraordinary set especially built for the Met. production of La Bohème has already been used for over 300 performances, over the years. It is still unsurpassed and visitors walking in the Act II street scene have felt they were actually in Paris itself! The opera opens and closes just as seductively in the house-top garret, while the snow in Act III is astonishingly tangible. One wishes opera settings could always be like this, instead of following producers' crazily eccentric whims, with no connection to the music. Gheorghiu's return to the Met. for this production was rightly celebrated. She sings gloriously, of course, but her portrayal of Mimì has matured, notably so in her acting in the opening scene, her first meeting with Rudolfo (Ramón Vargas), also singing ardently. Clearly this lovers' meeting is not quite as innocent as it seems, although Rudolfo is equally complicit in hiding the key. But what a shame that the surtitles (although otherwise admirable) have abandoned the familiar words 'Your tiny hand is frozen – let me warm it into life.' Before that, the horseplay between the four bohemians has been tingling with zest. Then the Café Momus scene of Act II is dazzling, with the interplay of a huge animated cast dominated by Ainhoa Arteta's sparklingly unpredictable Musetta. Marcello (Ludovic Tézier) joins Act III in the snow to sing in the memorable quartet, and the opera's closing scene could not be more moving. Throughout, Nicola Luisotti conducts Puccini's greatest score with passion and much tenderness, and the recording projects the voices and orchestra with admirable realism. A triumph, and wonderfully enjoyable to watch and listen to.

Based on Zeffirelli's spectacular 1963 production at La Scala, Milan, this Karajan DVD version of La Bohème gives no idea of stage limitations. Indeed by completely avoiding shots of the full stage, Acts II and III give the illusion of being out of doors. One snag is that with the singers miming to recorded voices, often distant, there is sometimes little relationship between what one hears and what one sees in close-up. Nonetheless, with Karajan second to none as a Puccini interpreter, pointing the great emotional climaxes unerringly, and with Freni a meltingly beautiful Mimì, the combination of vividly atmospheric settings and a high-powered performance have one forgiving any discrepancies. Gianni Raimondi is a forthright Rodolfo with his ringing, unstrained tenor, while Panerai is an outstanding Marcello, and Adriana Martino a spunky Musetta.

Recorded for television in February 1982 with Brian Large directing, the alternative Warner DVD gives a vivid idea of John Copley's classic production of La Bohème at Covent Garden when it was new, with its evocative sets by Julia Trevelyan Oman. Though Lamberto Gardelli's conducting is relatively relaxed, veering towards expansive speeds, the results are keenly idiomatic with an excellent cast of soloists. Neil Shicoff may be too loud at times, but this is yet a warmly sympathetic portrayal, never coarse, and Ileana Cotrubas at the peak of her career makes a charming Mimì, if at times with a beat in her voice. Thomas Allen, at his full maturity, is superb as Marcello, commanding in every way, but, for all her vivacity, the Musetta of Marilyn Zschau, suffering from a very slow speed in the Waltz Song, is often too tremulous.

Recorded in 1988, the San Francisco Opera production with Pavarotti and Freni offers a traditional production by Francesca Zambello, with the great tenor at his peak as Rodolfo and Freni still a tenderly moving Mimì, even though the voice is not as pure and even as it had been. She rises splendidly to the challenge of her big moments, such as Mimì's Farewell, like Pavarotti happily sustaining the lusciously measured speeds often allowed by the conductor, Tiziano Severini. Sandra Pacetti as Musetta is bright and characterful, and Gino Quilico as Marcello and Nicolai Ghiaurov as Colline are both excellent. The recording generally wears well, though the balance of voices in this live recording is sometimes odd.

Franco Zeffirelli's production of La Bohème for La Scala, Milan, was first seen in 1963 and was used by Karajan (see above). It here is filmed in a 2003 revival, celebrating its fortieth anniversary. In an interview, Zeffirelli marvels at its longevity, noting that many in the excellent team of singers had not even been born when the production was new. Marcelo Alvarez proves an outstanding Rodolfo from the younger generation, opposite the fresh and girlish Mimì of Cristina Gallardo-Domas. Hei-Kyung Hong is a charmingly petite Musetta with a surprisingly strong character, and Roberto Servile as Marcello is powerful if rough at times. Bruno Bartoletti conducts a warm, well-paced and well-recorded reading, but it is the spectacle of Zeffirelli's lavish production that commands first attention.

La Bohème (complete; CD versions)

Ⓝ 🔑 ✿ * DG 477 6600 (2). Netrebko, Villazón, Cabell, Daniel, Children's Ch. & Bav. R. Ch. & SO, De Billy

Ⓝ * DG 477 7949 (2). Soundtrack recording with cast as above (includes bonus interviews with the principal singers)

* EMI 3 58650-2 (2). Vaduva, Alagna, Swenson, Hampson, Keenlyside, Ramey, L. Voices, boys from L. Oratory School, Philh. O, Pappano

* Decca (ADD) 478 0254 (2). Freni, Pavarotti, Harwood, Panerai, Ghiaurov, German Op. Ch., Berlin, BPO, Karajan

 Decca 466 070-2 (2). Gheorghiu, Alagna, Scano, Keenlyside, D'Arcangelo, La Scala, Milan, Verdi Ch. & O, Chailly

🔑 Ⓑ * Double Decca (ADD) 448 725-2 (2). Tebaldi, Bergonzi, Bastianini, Siepi, Corena, D'Angelo, St Cecilia Ac. Ch. & O, Serafin

Ⓜ  RCA (ADD) 82876 82621-2 (2). Moffo, Tucker, Merrill, Costa, Rome Op. Ch. & O, Leinsdorf

() EMI mono 5 56295-2 (2). Callas, di Stefano, Moffo, Panerai, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Votto

This new DG recording is surely the La Bohème for our time, and we are glad to see that the distinguished vocal critic of the Gramophone, John Steane, has given the set his enthusiastic imprimatur and has commented that the the singing of its two stars, the glorious-voiced Anna Netrebko and the thrilling Rolando Villazón, is 'as finely performed as in any recording known to me'. One need say little more, except that Nicole Cabell as Musetta and Boaz Daniel as Marcello are equally memorable, as is the vividly alive and expressive orchestral playing under Betrand De Billy. The recording also has splendid reality and projection. The set comes in a handsome box with libretto; an alternative jewel-case package offers a film soundtrack plus bonus material, including interviews with the principal artists. No doubt a DVD is in preparation which will be worth waiting for.

Pappano's CD recording of Bohème is conducted with ever-fresh imagination, bringing out not just subtle emotions alongside high passion, but also the fun of the piece in lightly sprung rhythms. Yet the exchanges when Mimì arrives have the most moving intimacy at the gentlest pianissimo, with the singers given full expressive freedom within a purposeful frame. The great set-piece numbers at the end of Act I, then have the freshness of genuine emotion swelling in a radiant, towering crescendo. Alagna's tenor may not be velvety, but it has a fine tonal range with a heroic ring and Adriva is similarly characterful rather than just sweet. The others make a superb team, virtually incomparable today – Ruth Swenson using her dramatic timbres most delicately even in the outburst of the waltz song, Thomas Hampson a swaggering Marcello, with Samuel Ramey and Simon Keenlyside characterfully contrasted as the other two Bohemians, all relishing the fun.

On Decca, Karajan takes a characteristically spacious view of La Bohème, but there is an electric intensity which holds the whole score together as in a live performance. Pavarotti is an inspired Rodolfo, with comic flair and expressive passion, while Freni is just as seductive as Mimì. Elizabeth Harwood is a charming Musetta. Fine singing throughout the set. The reverberant Berlin acoustic is glowing and brilliant in superb Decca recording, with the clean placing of voices enhancing the performance's dramatic warmth. The set is now beautifully re-packaged with lots of session photographs.

The husband-and-wife partnership of Gheorghiu and Alagna is formidably demonstrated in Decca's more recent recording, though with Chailly in taut control and speeds consistently on the fast side, this is a performance that misses some of the tenderness in the score, as well as some of the fun. Gheorghiu's glorious singing is powerfully matched by the heroic tones of Alagna, culminating in a deeply moving death scene. The notable casting among the rest is that of Simon Keenlyside, promoted to Marcello this time from Schaunard in the EMI set, again consistently responsive and alert. Elisabetta Scano is a light, bright Musetta, strongly contrasted with Gheorghiu, if a little shrill on top. Roberto di Candia makes a positive Schaunard, but Ildebrando d'Arcangelo as Colline is not helped by the close vocal balance, with a flutter emerging in the Act IV Coat Song.

Tebaldi's Decca set with Bergonzi dominated the catalogue in the early days of stereo, and it still sounds astonishingly vivid, with a very convincing theatrical atmosphere. Vocally the performance achieves a consistently high standard, with Tebaldi as Mimì the most affecting. Carlo Bergonzi is a fine Rodolfo; Bastianini and Siepi are both superb as Marcello and Colline, and even the small parts of Benoit and Alcindoro (as usual taken by a single artist) have the benefit of Corena's magnificent voice. The veteran Serafin was more vital here than on some of his records. The set comes with a perfectly adequate cued synopsis, for La Bohème is an exceptionally easy opera to follow.

Though Anna Moffo's singing career ended disappointingly, in her prime she was one of the great strengths of the company of the Met. in New York. Here in this vividly engineered set in the Living Stereo series, she sings magnetically as Mimì opposite Richard Tucker as an excellent Rodolfo and Robert Merrill typically strong and characterful as Marcello and Mary Costa as Musetta. Leinsdorf in this Rome Opera House recording is more sympathetic than he often was on disc at this period.

Callas, flashing-eyed and formidable, may seem even less suited to the role of Mimì than to that of Butterfly, but characteristically her insights make for a vibrantly involving performance. Though Giuseppe di Stefano is not the subtlest of Rodolfos, he is in excellent voice here, and Moffo and Panerai make a strong partnership as the second pair of lovers. Votto occasionally coarsens Puccini's score but he directs with energy.

The justly famous Beecham mono set with Victoria de los Angeles and Jussi Björling remains as a reminder of past glories (EMI mono 5 67750-2), while Naxos offer an admirable alternative transfer. This adds, at super-bargain price, an earlier recording of the whole of Act IV made by Beecham in 1936 at Abbey Road with Heddle Nash and Dora Labette singing memorably as Rodolfo and Mimì; also included is Labette's exquisite performance of D'onde lieta usci from Act III (Naxos mono 8.111249/50). Regis too offer a very acceptable transfer at a comparable cost, and their bonus is seven key Puccini arias sung by Björling (RRC 2057).

La Bohème (complete; in English)

 Chan. 3008 (2). Haymon, O'Neill, McLaughlin, Miles, Dazeley, Geoffrey Mitchell Ch., Peter Kay Children's Ch., Philh. O, Parry

The magic mixture of humour and pathos in this unsinkable masterpiece is brought all the closer for having it in translation, even if the occasional line may ring false. Dennis O'Neill reinforces his high reputation as the regular tenor in the series, despite some intrusive vibrato under pressure, and Cynthia Haymon as a touching Mimì has never sounded more beautiful on disc, with the widest range of expression and tone. Marie McLaughlin is a warm-toned Musetta, temperamental rather than just flighty, and the other three Bohemians are ideally cast. Voices are vividly caught in the atmospheric recording, with the crowd scenes of Act II beautifully clarified. Highest praise too for David Parry who knows how to relax in tenderness, as well as when to press home hard. Warm, refined playing from the Philharmonia. Highly recommended to all who enjoy opera in English.

Edgar (complete)

🔑  Naïve V4957 (2). Varady, McCormick, Tanner, Jenis, Cigni, R. France Ch. & O, Levi

Ⓜ  Sony (ADD) M2K 79213 (2). Scotto, Bergonzi, Sardinero, Killibrew, NY Schola Cantorum and Op. O, Queler

Edgar has an elaborate story, with absurd developments that no composer could make convincing. However, the score of Edgar brings important developments in Puccini's technique as a composer, through-composed, merging arias and ensembles. The recording of Edgar scores in the refinement of the sound. Julia Varady as Fidelia and Carl Tanner in the title-role of Edgar are both outstanding, allowed a range of expression largely denied to their rivals on Queler's Sony version, which suffers from aggressively close-up sound. Mary Ann McCormick as Tigrana is well contrasted with Varady, with her firm, clear mezzo finely controlled. Clean-cut singing too from Dalibor Jenis as Frank and Carlo Cigni as Gualtiero, with excellent choral work from the Choir of Radio France, whose choirmaster is the great Norbert Balasch. Yoel Levi proves a warmly understanding Puccinian, pointing rhythms and phrases with natural sympathy.

There is much to enjoy in the alternative Sony version. The melodies are not quite vintage Puccini, but Scotto as Fidelia, Killibrew as Tigrana and Bergonzi as Edgar give them compelling warmth. Eve Queler proves a variably convincing conductor, with Act III in need of more rehearsal. But this set, edited from live performances at Carnegie Hall, and commendably well recorded, makes a welcome alternative.

La Fanciulla del West (DVD versions)

🔑 * DG DVD 073 4023. Daniels, Domingo, Milnes, Yannissis, Metropolitan Op. Ch. & O, Slatkin (V/D: Brian Large)

🔑 * Warner DVD 5050466-8356-2-8. Neblett, Domingo, Carroli, Lloyd, Howell, ROHCG Ch. & O, Santi (V/D: John Vernon)

 Opus Arte DVD OA LS 3004. Zampieri, Domingo, Pons, Roni, Salvadori, La Scala Ch. and O, Maazel (Executive producer: Hans Petri)

Leonard Slatkin conducts a bitingly dramatic account of Puccini's American opera with an outstanding cast in Giancarlo del Monaco's ultra-realistic production for the Met. in New York. In 1992 Sherrill Milnes was still an outstanding Rance, at once handsome and sinister, while Plácido Domingo is just as warmly expressive, both lyrical and heroic, as he is in the Covent Garden DVD of nine years earlier. As Minnie, the pretty and buxom Barbara Daniels with her bright, big soprano gives a characterful performance, even if her cheating in the poker game of Act II is no more convincing than usual. As Jake Wallace, the camp minstrel, Yanni Yannissis in his Act I solo is strong if a little tremulous. Bright, clear recording, bringing out the emotional tug behind Slatkin's reading, powerfully so at the very end.

Recorded live at Covent Garden in 1983, Piero Faggioni's production with realistic sets by Ken Adam offers a similar cast to that on the vintage DG audio recording made in the studio, except that Silvano Carroli replaces Sherrill Milnes as Rance and Nello Santi replaces Zubin Mehta as conductor. Plácido Domingo is in superb voice as Dick Johnson, the reformed bandit who falls in love with Minnie, Girl of the Golden West; and Carol Neblett as the Girl sings freshly with an appealing directness, untroubled by the formidable demands of the role. Carroli makes an aptly sinister Rance, with Robert Lloyd forthright as Ashby and Gwynne Howell as the Minstrel shining in his brief appearance at the start of Act I. Faggioni's production has its symbolic moments, as when Minnie concedes her very first kiss to Dick and the door of her hut flails wildly back and forth.

Jonathan Miller's production for La Scala, Milan, was recorded in 1991 with costumes by Sue Blane and sets by Stefanos Lazaridis half-stylized, half-realistic. What matters is that the singing cast is strong, and Lorin Maazel's conducting is persuasive, despite a tendency to dawdle in grand moments. As at Covent Garden eight years earlier, Plácido Domingo makes a heroic Dick Johnson, and though Mara Zampieri cannot match Kiri Te Kanawa in glamour of voice or presence, with occasionally hooty tone, it is a strong, positive performance, as is Juan Pons as Rance. Domingo is in superb voice and rightly wins ovations for each of his big solos. Juan Pons too is wonderfully firm and dark of tone as Jack Rance, and Mara Zampieri as Minnie sings with fine, clear focus with no suspicion of a wobble.

La Fanciulla del West (The Girl of the Golden West; CD versions)

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * Decca (ADD) 421 595-2 (2). Tebaldi, Del Monaco, MacNeil, Tozzi, St Cecilia Ac., Rome, Ch. & O, Capuana

Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 474 840-2 (2). Neblett, Domingo, Milnes, Howell, ROHCG Ch. & O, Mehta

Ⓝ () Regis mono RRC 2080 (2). Steber, Guelfi, Del Monaco, De Palma, Tozzi, Maggio Musicale Fiorentino Ch. & O, Mitropoulos

Tebaldi here gives one of her most warm-hearted and understanding performances on record, and Mario del Monaco displays the wonderfully heroic quality of his voice to great – if sometimes tiring – effect. Cornell MacNeil as the villain, Sheriff Rance, sings with great precision and attack, but unfortunately has not a villainous-sounding voice to convey the character fully. Jake Wallace's entry and the song Che faranno i viecchi miei is one of the high spots of the recording, with Tozzi singing beautifully. Capuana's expansive reading is matched by the imagination of the production, with the closing scene wonderfully effective in spectacular sound.

On DG, Mehta's manner – as he makes clear at the very start – is on the brisk side, even refusing to let the first great melody, the nostalgic Che faranno i viecchi, linger into sentimentality. Sherrill Milnes as Jack Rance makes that villain into far more than a small-town Scarpia, giving nobility and understanding to the Act I arioso. Domingo, as in the theatre, sings heroically, disappointing only in his reluctance to produce soft tone in the great aria, Ch'ella mi creda. The rest of the team is excellent, not least Gwynne Howell as the minstrel who sings Che faranno i viecchi miei; but the crowning glory of a masterly set is the singing of Carol Neblett as the Girl of the Golden West herself, gloriously rich and true, with formidable attack on the exposed high notes. Full, atmospheric recording to match.

Regis have come up trumps with this early (1954) live Florence recording of La Fanciulla del West, thrillingly conducted by the underrated Dimitri Mitropoulos, with Eleanor Steber (as Minnie), Mario del Monaco (in his finest role) as Dick Johnson and Gian Giacomo Guelfi a splendidly ardent Jack Rance. Incidentally, Giorgio Tozzi features in the smaller part of Jake Wallace, who sings the ballad Che faranno i viecchi miei offstage. The sound is not of the finest but is more than acceptable when the performance is so thrilling.

Gianni Schicchi (DVD version)

🔑  Opus Arte DVD OA 0918 D. Corbelli, Matthews, Giordano, Palmer, McLaughlin, LPO, Jurowski (V/D: Francesca Kemp)

Puccini's comic masterpiece comes in a production by Annabel Arden that determinedly underlines the black side of this sparkling farce. The conductor, Vladimir Jurowski, also emphasizes that point, suggesting that Puccini's construction anticipates that of the modern film in its timing and cutting of scenes. The claustrophobic side of the piece is underlined by the heavily enclosed set of Vicki Mortimer, backing up the updating of the story from medieval to Edwardian times and largely eliminating the uplifting background of Florence. Alessandro Corbelli proves a masterly Schicchi, at once characterful, funny and sinister, and the two lovers are well taken by the tenor, Massimo Giordano, and the young soprano, Sally Matthews, with her fresh, flickering vibrato. Interviews with Jurowski, Arden and Corbelli come as extras.

Gianni Schicchi (CD versions)

🔑 Ⓜ  RCA 74321 25285-2. Panerai, Donath, Seiffert, Bav. R. Ch., Munich R. O, Patanè

The RCA (formerly Eurodisc) recording of Gianni Schicchi brings a co-production with Bavarian Radio, and the recording is vivid and well balanced. Central to the performance's success is the vintage Schicchi of Rolando Panerai, still rich and firm. He confidently characterizes the Florentine trickster in every phrase, building a superb portrait, finely timed. Peter Seiffert as Rinuccio gives a dashing performance, consistently clean and firm of tone, making light of the high tessitura and rising splendidly to the challenge of the big central aria. Helen Donath would have sounded even sweeter a few years earlier, but she gives a tender, appealing portrait of Lauretta, pretty and demure in O mio babbino caro. Though Italian voices are in the minority, it is a confident team.

Madama Butterfly (complete; DVD version)

Ⓝ 🔑  Warner NVC Arts DVD 4509 99290-2. Kabaivanska, Antinori, Jankovic, Saccomani, Ferrara, Verona Ch. & O, Arena (Producer: Giulio Chazzalettes, V/D: Brian Large)

(*) Decca DVD DG 073 4037. Freni, Ludwig, Domingo, Kerns, Sénéchal, VPO, Karajan (Dir: Jean-Pierre Ponnelle)

The Warner NVC Arts Madama Butterfly from Verona has no obvious starry names in the cast, but it has an unforgettably moving performance from Raina Kabaivanska as Butterfly herself. From the moment she comes demurely on stage she identifies completely with her role: she looks like Butterfly, she sings as Butterfly (One fine day is a real highlight), indeed she is Butterfly, and as her tragedy unfolds in Act II the result is increasingly moving. Nazzareno Antinori sings ardently as a convincingly unthinking Pinkerton, and Eleonora Jankovic is a touchingly sympathetic Suzuki. Lorenzo Saccomani takes the thankless role of Sharpless warmly. The Verona set may give Butterfly a larger house than would be realistic but, like the costumes, it is authentically designed, and the surrounding gardens provide an attractive setting for much of the action. Mario Ferrara is an appropriately wily marriage-broker, and the little boy who subsequently appears as Cio-Cio-San's son is charmingly portrayed. Maurizio Arena conducts Puccini's marvellous score with rich feeling, and if the recording is at times a little over-bright, it has fine clarity and depth. Highly recommended: if you watch it at home, there won't be a dry eye in the house!

Recorded for television in 1974 in the same period as he recorded the opera for audio disc, Karajan's DVD of Butterfly is similarly magical in its evocation of Puccini's most atmospheric score. As on CD the title-role is taken by Mirella Freni, as tenderly appealing to see as to hear, but where for audio the role of Pinkerton was taken by Luciano Pavarotti, here you have the much more telegenic Plácido Domingo, singing with similar fervour, responding to the inspired stage direction of Jean-Pierre Ponnelle to make this cad of a hero more complex than usual. Otherwise the setting is conventional and effective, with a comic portrait of Goro given by Michel Sénéchal, politically incorrect in its Japanese send-up, and the Bonze rather like a caricature from Turandot. The sound is full and atmospheric, though there is a curious pitch-problem in the middle of the Flower Duet, one of the few flaws in a fine issue.

(i) Madama Butterfly; (ii) Tosca; (iii) Turandot (complete; DVD versions)

Ⓝ Ⓑ  Warner DVD 50-51442-8637-2-7 (3). Verona productions, with (i) Kabaivanska, cond. Arena; (ii) Marton, cond. Oren; (iii) Dimitrova, cond. Arena (see below)

These three outstanding Verona productions make a tempting bargain box, with both Madama Butterfly and Turandot among the finest available versions. The documentation is minimal, but adequate.

Madama Butterfly (CD versions)

🔑 * Decca (ADD) 417 577-2 (3). Freni, Ludwig, Pavarotti, Kerns, V. State Op. Ch., VPO, Karajan

 DG 423 567-2 (3). Freni, Carreras, Berganza, Pons, Amb. Op. Ch., Philh. O, Sinopoli

Ⓑ  Double Decca (ADD) 452 594-2 (2). Tebaldi, Bergonzi, Cossotto, Sordello, St Cecilia Ac., Rome, Ch. & O, Serafin

Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 67885-2 [567888] (2). Scotto, Bergonzi, di Stasio, Panerai, de Palma, Rome Op. Ch. & O, Barbirolli

Ⓝ (BB) () Naxos mono 8.111291/2. De los Angeles, Di Stefano, Gobbi, Canali, Rome Op. Ch. & O, Gavazzeni

(BB) () Regis mono RRC 2070 (2). De los Angeles, Di Stefano, Gobbi, Canali, Rome Op. Ch. & O, Gavazzeni

Ⓝ Ⓜ  EMI mono ADD 2 12711-2 (2). Callas, Gedda, Danieli, Borriello, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Karajan

Karajan's Decca CD set is extravagantly laid out on three discs instead of two as for most of the rival sets – slow speeds partly responsible. However, he inspires singers and orchestra to a radiant performance which brings out all the beauty and intensity of Puccini's score, sweet but not sentimental, powerfully dramatic but not vulgar. Freni is an enchanting Butterfly, consistently growing in stature from the young girl to the victim of tragedy, sweeter of voice than any rival on record. Pavarotti is an intensely imaginative Pinkerton, actually inspiring understanding for this thoughtless character, while Christa Ludwig is a splendid Suzuki. The recording is one of Decca's most resplendent, with the Vienna strings producing glowing tone.

However expansive his speeds, Sinopoli is never sentimental or self-indulgent. Puccini's honeyed moments are given, not sloppily, but with rapt intensity, through to the final aria, tough and intense. As she was for Karajan in his classic Decca set, Freni is a model Butterfly; though the voice is no longer so girlish, she projects the tragedy even more weightily than before. José Carreras is similarly presented as a large-scale Pinkerton. Juan Pons is a virile Sharpless and Teresa Berganza an equally positive, unfruity Suzuki.

Serafin's sensitive and beautifully paced reading finds Tebaldi at her most radiant. Though she was never the most deft of Butterflies dramatically, her singing is consistently rich and beautiful. The excellence of the Decca engineering in 1958 is amply proved in the CD transfer.

Under Sir John Barbirolli, players and singers perform consistently with a dedication and intensity rare in opera recordings made in Italy, and the whole score glows more freshly than ever. There is hardly a weak link in the cast. Bergonzi's Pinkerton and Panerai's Sharpless are both sensitively and beautifully sung; Anna di Stasio's Suzuki is more than adequate, and Renata Scotto's Butterfly has a subtlety and perceptiveness in its characterization that more than make up for any shortcoming in the basic beauty of tone-colour. (There is a rather meagre set of highlights (54') on CfP 393370-2 with an equally meagre cued synopsis!)

Victoria de los Angeles's first recording of Madama Butterfly, a role which for a decade or more she made her own, was done in mono in 1954. The performance has many advantages over the later, stereo version. De los Angeles's tone is even more beautiful, Di Stefano is a more ardent Pinkerton, and Tito Gobbi, unexpectedly cast as a rugged Sharpless, uses that small role to point some of the set's most memorable moments, notably the Act I toasting duet with Pinkerton and the Act II confrontation with Butterfly. The Regis mono transfer is kind to the voices, which are given a full presence, and if the orchestra sounds a bit dry it still makes a vivid backcloth. There is a cued synopsis and good documentation.

The Naxos set is expertly restored by Mark Obert-Thorn and also comes with an excellent keyed synopsis.

Callas's view, aided by superbly imaginative and spacious conducting from Karajan, gives extra dimension to the Puccinian little woman, and with some keenly intelligent singing too from Gedda as Pinkerton this is a set which has a special compulsion. The performance projects the more vividly on CD, even though the lack of stereo in so atmospheric an opera is a serious disadvantage, and the new transfer is full and fairly spacious. It is now at mid-price as one of EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century'.

Madam Butterfly (complete; in English)

Ⓜ (*) Chan. 3070 (2). Barker, Clarke, Rigby, Yurisich, Kale, Geoffrey Mitchell Ch., Philh. O, Abel

With Cheryl Barker a warm, fresh heroine, bringing out the girlish shyness at the beginning, and singing with radiant tone, this set of Butterfly in English, sponsored by the Peter Moores Foundation, fills an important gap (as do many other operas in English). Cheryl Barker is helped by the expressive conducting of Yves Abel which consistently brings out the beauty of Puccini's orchestration, helped by full-bodied Chandos sound. As Pinkerton, the tenor, Paul Charles Clarke, is a disappointment with his gritty, tight tone, penetrating and un-Italianate, but he characterizes sensitively, and Gregory Yurisich is a splendid Sharpless and Jean Rigby a fine Suzuki. The old Elkins translation is used with a few necessary modifications.

Manon Lescaut (complete; DVD Versions)

Ⓝ 🔑 * EMI DVD 2 17420 9. Mattila, Giordani, Croft, Travis, Met. Opera Ch. & O, Levine (Stage Director: Gina Lapinsky, V/D: Brian Large)

🔑 * Warner DVD 5050466-7174-2-9. Domingo, Te Kanawa, Allen, ROHCG Ch. & O, Sinopoli (V/D: Humphrey Burton)

Ⓝ  TDK DVD DVWW-OPMLES. Guleghina, Cura, Roni, Gallo, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Muti (Stage Director & V/D: Liliana Cavani)

(*) NVC Arts DVD 50-0489-2-6. Nitescu, Denniston, De Candia, Palombi, Glyndebourne Ch., LPO, Gardiner (V/D: Humphrey Burton)

Ⓝ  Arthaus DVD 101 319. Weber, Zurabishvili, Trinsinger, Räsänen, Chemnitz Opera Ch. & Robert Schumann Philharmonie, Beermann (Dir: Patrick Buttmann)

Whether in the very realistic opening Amiens inn scene or in Geronte's sumptuous apartment in Act II, the Met. production is characteristically spectacular, with superb costumes to match the sets, while the deportation in Act III is frighteningly realistic. The only let-down is the closing scene in the American wasteland of Act IV, which always seems an unrealistic ending, but that is Puccini's miscalculation, not the Met's. Karita Mattila is a beautiful Manon, but we see her age as the opera progresses. She sings very affectingly indeed and is matched by the ardent Des Grieux of Marcello Giordani, with a tenor voice of comparably rich quality. Dale Travis makes a splendidly unlikeable Geronte. James Levine conducts with a flowing, passionate lyricism; indeed the performance of the famous Intermezzo is an unforgettably passionate highlight. Very good sound completes a production which can be recommended alongside the Sinopoli Covent Garden version, which it equals; indeed, choice between them is difficult, while the TDK version below is also very competitive.

Götz Friedrich's production with solidly realistic sets by Gunther Schneider Siemssen was filmed at Covent Garden in 1983 with an ideal cast of principals and passionate, idiomatic conducting by Giuseppe Sinopoli. With voices well forward of the orchestra, the glorious singing of Plácido Domingo as Des Grieux comes over heroically, and Kiri Te Kanawa as Manon is both girlish and provocative, carefully modifying her tone between the open freshness of In quelle trine morbide in Act II and the darkened tone for her despairing final monologue in Act IV, Sola, perduta, abbandonata. Thomas Allen is equally strong and characterful as Lescaut, and the rest of the cast has no weak links. For a realistic presentation it would be hard to find any rival. No booklet is provided, with the full cast list given only on the film itself.

The 1998 La Scala production is less ambitious than the spectacle the Met. can provide, but it is still impressive, with the opening inn scene colourful and teeming with choral vitality, and Geronte's apartment certainly not lacking luxury. Moreover the harbour scene in Act III is strikingly realistic, and only the closing sequence 'in the wilderness outside New Orleans' with rocks all over the stage, is unconvincing. How did they get there? Costumes, too, are in period and the whole atmosphere is authentically French. The principals, too, are excellent. Although (as nearly always) Manon (Maria Guleghina) looks too old in Act I, she sings gloriously, and her love scene with her similarly ardent and warm-voiced Des Grieux (José Cura) in a splendidly staged Act II is suitably passionate. Muti, as always, directs with a happy combination of Puccinian lyricism and energy.

In this NVC Glyndebourne production, the two principal singers, Patrick Denniston (as Chevalier des Grieux) and Adina Nitescu's Manon, are only partly successful in managing the last Act, not helped visually by a set which is a flat plain with tiny 'boulders' scattered on it. The stage sets throughout are bare. Fortunately the costumes bring plenty of colour and the dance scene in Geronte's house in Act II is effectively staged, as is the climax of Act III, when Des Grieux is finally allowed to accompany Manon to America. Although he seems too old for a student part, Denniston sings ardently throughout, and Nitescu is a sympathetic Manon and sings her key numbers well. One of the other plus points of the performance is the vividly lively direction of the opera by John Elliot Gardiner. But overall this is not a match for the Domingo/Te Kanawa Warner version.

Although it is well sung, especially by Astrid Weber, a charmingly pretty, if initially too sophisticated and not strikingly young Manon, and by the fervent Zurab Zurabishvili as Des Grieux, this Arthaus production cannot be recommended for a number of reasons. The Stage Director Ansgar Weigner has decided to revise the plot-line to fit his own conception of the opera's characters (and their motivations). It is in modern dress, which places its atmosphere immediately out of period, and the characterization of Geronte (Kouta Räsänen) is lacking in elegance. But most importantly, the plot is altered in Act III when Manon succeeds in fleeing with Des Grieux and staying in Paris, instead of being deported. In Act IV she perishes in what is described as an 'underground dead-end' under the city. With Frank Beermann directing the orchestra vividly, the narrative is certainly alive, but hardly what Puccini intended.

Manon Lescaut (complete; CD Versions)

🔑 * Decca 440 200-2 (2). Freni, Pavarotti, Croft, Taddei, Vargas, Bartoli, NY Met. Op. Ch. & O, Levine

🔑 Ⓜ * DG 477 6354 (2). Freni, Domingo, Bruson, ROHCG Ch., Philh. O, Sinopoli

Ⓑ  Double Decca 460 750-2 (2). Te Kanawa, Carreras, Coni, Tajo, Matteuzzi, Ch. & O of Teatro Comunale di Bologna, Chailly

(BB)  Naxos 8.660019/20 (2). Gauci, Sardinero, Kaludov, BRT Philh. Ch. & O, Rahbari

() EMI mono 5 56301-2 (2). Callas, Di Stefano, Fioravanti, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Serafin

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.111030/1 (2). Albanese, Bjoerling, Merrill, Calabrese, Rome Op. Ch. & O, Perlea (with Arias from BOITO: Mefistofele; CATALANI: La Wally; CHARPENTIER: Louise; CILEA: Adriana Lecouvreur; VILLA-LOBOS: Bachianas Brasileiras 5)

(BB) () Regis Alto mono ALC 2001 (2). Albanese, Bjoerling, Merrill, Calabrese, Rome Opera Ch. & O, Perlea (with Arias from Madama Butterfly, La Bohème & Gianni Schicchi)

With Luciano Pavarotti as a powerful Des Grieux, James Levine conducts a comparably big-boned performance of Manon Lescaut, bringing out the red-blooded drama of Puccini's first big success, while not ignoring its warmth and tender poetry. Pavarotti tackles his little opening aria, Tra voi belle, with a beefy bravado that misses the subtlety and point of Domingo, for example. But then he characteristically points word-meaning with a bright-eyed intensity that compels attention, and there is little harm in having so passionate a portrait of Des Grieux as Pavarotti's. The rest of the cast is strong too, with Dwayne Croft a magnificent Lescaut who brings out the character's wry humour. The veteran Giuseppe Taddei is superbly cast as Geronte, very characterful and still full-throated, while Cecilia Bartoli makes the unnamed singer in the Act II entertainment into far more than a cipher.

Plácido Domingo's portrait of Des Grieux on DG is far subtler and more detailed, with finer contrasts of tone and dynamic, than in his earlier, EMI recording opposite Caballé. Freni proves an outstanding choice: her girlish tones in Act I rebut any idea that she might be too mature. Of the others, a first-rate team, Renato Bruson nicely brings out the ironic side of Lescaut's character, and having Brigitte Fassbaender just to sing the Madrigal adds to the feeling of luxury, as does John Tomlinson's darkly intense moment of drama as the ship's captain.

The digital Chailly set dates from as recently as 1988. Dame Kiri gives an affecting characterization of Manon, at times rather heavily underlined but passionately convincing in the development from innocent girl to fallen woman. The playing from Chailly's Bologna Orchestra cannot quite match that of the Philharmonia for Sinopoli, yet Chailly is a degree more idiomatic in his pacing. Carreras is in good form, but sounds a little strained at times. The Decca sound, with the voices well forward is characteristically vivid.

On the Naxos issue, Miriam Gauci gives one of the most sensitive performances of this rôle on any set. The young Bulgarian, Kaludi Kaludov, is a clean-cut, virile Des Grieux, opening up impressively in his big moments. Vincente Sardinero makes a powerful Lescaut, and Rahbari is a red-blooded interpreter of Italian opera, generally pacing well, even if at the very start he is disconcertingly hectic.

It is typical of Callas that she turns the final scene into the most compelling part of the opera. Serafin, who could be a lethargic recording conductor, is here electrifying, and Di Stefano too is inspired to one of his finest complete opera recordings. The cast-list even includes the young Fiorenza Cossotto, impressive as the singer in the Act II Madrigal. The recording – still in mono, not a stereo transcription – minimizes the original boxiness and gives good detail.

With Bjoerling as Des Grieux giving one of his very finest performances on disc and with Robert Merrill in glorious voice as Lescaut, the Romanian conductor Jonel Perlea conducts one of the most passionate performances of this opera ever recorded. Timing is masterly, and, though Licia Albanese no longer sounded girlish in 1954, she has the deepest understanding of the role of Manon. The transfer is bright and clear, with an edge that can readily be tamed. This was one of the very first complete operas recorded by RCA in Italy, and the thrust and enthusiasm of the whole company reflect that. As a bonus comes a valuable collection of Albanese's solo recordings, including most of the arias for which she was especially famous. Also the celebrated Aria from Villa-Lobos's Bachianas brasileiras No. 5 with Leopold Stokowski conducting.

The Regis Alto transfer is bright and clean, and here the bonus features an all-Puccini programme with Albanese joined by Jan Peerce, and Di Stefano in his best voice in Bohème. The sound is impressive.

La Rondine (complete; DVD versions)

Ⓝ  Arthaus DVD 101 329. Cedolins, Portari, Pastrana, Giannino, Antonucci, Teatro La Fenice, Venice, Ch. & O, Rizzi (V/D & Dir: Tiziano Mancini)

Ⓝ Ⓑ  Naxos DVD 2.110266. Vassileva, Sartori, Dashuk, Giannino, Giossi, Nice Puccini Festival Ch. & O, Veronesi (Dir: Lorenzo Amato, V/D: Matteo Ricchetti)

Puccini was never quite satisfied with La Rondine and revised it several times. The Nice version takes in some of his final revisions, whereas La Fenice uses the published score. The opera is very visual and the staging requires a special balance between sophistication and light-hearted delicacy, especially in the opening scene where the famous 'Che il bel sogno di Doretto' is a highlight. It is this lightly evoked atmosphere that Graham Vick, the director of the Venice production, captures admirably, alongside its growing warmth of passion as the two couples become more and more intertwined. The casting too in Venice is very successful with Fiorenza Cedolins an appealing Magda, and Fernando Portari a memorably warm-voiced, passionate Ruggero. Sandra Pastrana is a practical Lisette, a character not unlike Despina in Così fan tutte, although not so whimsical, and she pairs up well with her fake-poet, Prunier (Emanuele Giannino), who is excellent and is common to both DVDs. The production in Venice is very colourful, especially the spectacular scene at Bulliers (with a sparkling dancing sequence), which climaxes with the splendidly sung quartet, featuring the four lovers. Carlo Rizzi secures very polished orchestral playing and finds all the wistful delicacy in Puccini's lovely score.

In the Naxos version the story is well characterized and well sung by the four principals, although Svelta Vassileva's high tessitura (and Magda's part lies very high at times) is affected by her tight vibrato. But overall the performance misses the full Puccinian charm (especially in the opening scene) and the sets are less enticing than on Arthaus, though the central Act is lively enough. One curious feature is a pair of ballet dancers, all but naked, who dance a passionate pas de deux in each Act. Although this version has obvious merits, the Venice version is far preferable.

(i–iii) La Rondine (complete); (i; iii) Le Villi: Prelude, L'abbandono; La tregenda; Ecco la casa ... Torna al felice; (i; iv) Song: Morire!

🔑 * EMI 5 56338-2 (2). (i) Alagna; (ii) Gheorghiu, Mula-Tchako, Matteuzzi, Rinaldi; (iii) L. Voices, LSO, Pappano; (iv) Pappano (piano)

Pappano on this EMI issue transforms the work, revealing it to be another masterpiece. He is aided by the partnership of Angela Gheorghiu, most moving in the Violetta-like role of the heroine, Magda, and of Alagna as the ardent young student she falls in love with. Consistently Gheorghiu makes you share the courtesan's wild dream of finding her young student. As Ruggero, the hero, Alagna winningly characterizes in his freshest voice. What will specially delight Puccinians in this set is that he is given an extra aria about Paris, Parigi e un citta, which transforms his otherwise minimal contribution to Act I. The role of the poet, Prunier, is also transformed thanks to the casting of the clear-toned William Matteuzzi in what is normally a comprimario role. Inva Mula-Tchako is equally well cast in the soubrette role of Lisette, bright, clear and vivacious, with Alberto Rinaldi making the sugar-daddy, Rambaldo, the dull dog intended. The excerpts from Le Villi, warm and dramatic, include two orchestral showpieces. Alagna also gives a ringing account of Roberto's aria, as he does of the song, Morire! – with Pappano at the piano – the source of the extra aria for Ruggero included in the main opera.

Suor Angelica (complete; CD version)

Ⓜ (*) RCA (ADD) 74321 40575-2. Popp, Lipovšek, Schiml, Jennings, Bav. R. Ch., Munich R. O, Patanè

Ⓝ (BB) ((*)) Regis mono RRC 1306. De los Angeles, Barbieri, Doro, Marimpietri, Rome Op. Ch. & O, Serafin (includes 3 excerpts from La Bohème)

Patanè's performance is idiomatic and consistently well placed. Neither Lucia Popp as Angelica nor Marjana Lipovšek as the vindictive Zia Principessa is ideally cast – the one overstressed, the other sounding too young – but these are both fine artists who sing with consistent imagination, and the recording is pleasingly atmospheric. There is a libretto/translation provided, and the only snag is the lack of cueing: only two tracks are indicated, one 28 minutes into the opera and the second 12 minutes later.

It is good to have a separate issue of Victoria de los Angeles's famous 1957 mono recording of Suor Angelica. The Regis transfer is warm and the voices are clear. No doubt we shall have a superior Naxos transfer in due course, but this is very acceptable, and includes three excerpts from Beecham's La Bohème, recorded a year earlier.

Il tabarro (complete; CD version)

Ⓝ (BB) () Naxos mono 8.111307. Gobbi, Prandelli, Mas, Rome Op. Ch. & O, Bellezza (with Gobbi: Arias from: La Fanciulla del West. MOZART: Don Giovanni; Le nozze di Figaro. ROSSINI: Il barbiere di Siviglia. VERDI: La forza del destino; Otello)

There is little to choose between the Naxos and Regis transfers, although Mark Obert-Thorn's on Naxos is marginally preferable. Choice may depend on the different bonuses offered by Naxos and Regis. However, the Naxos disc does offer a preferable keyed synopsis.

(i) Il Tabarro (complete); (ii) Excerpts from La Bohème; Gianni Schicchi; Manon Lescaut; Tosca

(BB) () Regis mono RRC 1263. (i) Gobbi, Prandelli, Mas; Welitsch; Tucker; Olivero; Sayao; Rome Op. Ch. & O, Bellezza

Good for Regis in making a perfectly good transfer of this famous pioneering mono recording of Il Tabarro. The central role of the cuckolded bargemaster, Michele, inspired Gobbi to one of his finest performances on record and, although the voices are rather forward, the mono recording has fair atmosphere. As a bonus we are offered some other key Puccini items. Ljuba Welitsch sings Vissi d'arte from Tosca and then is joined by Richard Tucker in the Act I Love Duet. Magda Olivero sings Donde lieta usci from Bohème and the two key arias from Manon Lescaut, and – an unexpected but welcome choice – Bidú Sayao closes the selection with the delightful O mio babbino caro from Gianni Schicchi.

Tosca (complete; DVD versions)

🔑 * DG DVD 073 4038. Kabaivanska, Domingo, Milnes, Ch. & New Philh. O, Bartoletti (Dir: Gianfranco De Bosio, V/D: Harald Gericke)

 TDK DVD DV-OPTOS. Guleghina, Licitra, Nucci, Parodi, Mariotti, La Scala Milan Ch. & O, Muti (V/D: Pierre Cavasillas)

 Opus Arte DVD OA 0883 D. Gheorghiu, Alagna, Raimondi, ROHCG O, Pappano (Dir: Benoit Jacquot)

 NVC Arts DVD 4509 99219-2. Marton, Aragall, Wixell, Ch. & O, of the Verona Arena, Oren (V/D: Brian Large)

Ⓝ () Phoenix DVD 801. Michael, Todorovich, Saks, Bregenzer Festival Ch., VPO, Schirmer (Producer: Philipp Himmelmann)

Filmed on location in Rome with real-life backgrounds and recorded in Walthamstow (with Surround Sound), this DG set is unsurpassed. The singers mime to their parts and the lip-sync. is generally impressive (especially Raina Kabaivanska's thrillingly sung Tosca), although at the opening Domingo is obviously miming the part of Cavaradossi. But he sings so magnificently that one soon adjusts. Sherrill Milnes, whose vocal contribution is hardly less powerful, is an equally memorable Scarpia, patently evil, yet so smooth and commanding in his scenes with Tosca that it is not surprising that she is taken in. At the opening, the film cameras are outside the castle, so we see the escaping Angelotti arrive, search for the key, and find his way into the very beautiful church which is so ideal for the later spectacle of the Te Deum and Scarpia's brooding monologue. We then move to his lavish apartment for Act II, with its dramatically vivid torture scene, attempted rape and murder. For the finale we are taken to the battlements of the castle, and Puccini's closing vision of Tosca hurling herself off the battlements is fully maintained. With superb singing and fine acting from all concerned, and equally impressive conducting from Bartoletti, who has the New Philharmonia on top form, this is all pretty irresistible.

Muti knows unerringly how to pace his singers, letting them phrase expansively where needed, yet holding the structure firmly together. Maria Guleghina makes a formidable Tosca, at her finest in the great scene with Scarpia in Act II, leading up to a radiant account of Vissi d'arte and a chilling murder. The veteran Leo Nucci, tall, thin and mean, is most compelling as the police chief, at times a smiling villain, though the voice has its occasional roughness. As Cavaradossi Salvatore Licitra may be an unromantic figure, and he is heavy-handed at the start in Recondita armonia, but he develops from there and in Act III sings superbly, with fine shading of tone. The production, directed by Luca Ronconi, consistently heightens the dramatic conflicts. In period it is updated by roughly half a century from the Napoleonic era, with handsome costumes by Vera Marzot, though the sets of Margherita Palli bring a surreal contradiction between realism and fantasy. That makes the battlements of the Castell Sant'Angelo look like a bomb-site, which Tosca has to climb to fling herself to her death.

Using the outstanding EMI recording of Tosca conducted by Antonio Pappano for a soundtrack, the French film director Benoit Jacquot has created what he describes as a mixture of fiction and documentary. Clips of the recording sessions at Abbey Road in black and white punctuate elaborate stagings of the opera in full colour, filmed on location and with the singers miming to the music. In places – as when Scarpia voices his own thoughts while in conversation with Tosca – you hear Ruggero Raimondi singing without his lips moving. With shots of the action regularly taken from imaginative angles, and with Angela Gheorghiu the most masterful actress – herself very near the character, as Jacquot suggests – and Raimondi the most believably sinister of Scarpias, the mix works well, though reproduction of the EMI recording is not always perfect. Though Roberto Alagna as Cavaradossi is not at his most lyrical, the visuals certainly reinforce the judgement that this is the finest among recent versions of the opera, electrifyingly conducted by Antonio Pappano, who, along with Gheorghiu and Jacquot, contributes an interview.

The producer, Sylvano Busotti and designer, Fiorenzo Giorgi, have made the most of the spectacular natural Verona backcloth, a dramatic setting to all three acts, and with a fine acoustic for the solo voices, chorus and orchestra, so that the big Te deum scene at the close of Act I is very effective indeed. Eva Marton is perhaps not as glamorous a Tosca as Gheorghiu, but she is a handsome woman with fine presence. She and Giacomo Aragall are a well-matched pair of lovers, both in strong, unstrained vocal form, and the only drawback is that the key arias (very well sung) bring extended ovations from the audience which interrupt the continuity. However their presence undoubtedly adds to the tension. Wixell is a superb Scarpia, dignified as well as evil, and he sings magnificently throughout Act II. The murder scene with Tosca and the close of the opera itself are handled powerfully but without melodrama. Throughout Daniel Oren conducts his excellent chorus and orchestra with fine lyrical Puccinian ardour.

Johannes Leiacker, the stage designer of the Phoenix Tosca, created his own analysis of the opera's scenario, dominated by Scarpia, chief of the secret police, by having as a backcloth to the stage a huge eye, fifty metres wide and thirty metres high – a 'visual symbol of the surveillance state'. There are other eccentricities too, including occasionally sub-dividing the video imagery into four different quarters of the screen, while the basic set at the opening is more like a construction site than any part of a church. Scarpia still has his torture chamber, but at the close of the opera Cavaradossi's dead body disappears into the river and Tosca's suicidal leap follows him. The singing of the main characters is impressive, Nadja Michael's Vissi d'arte and Zoran Todorovich's Elucevan e stele do not disappoint, and Scarpia's performance exudes sinister villainy. The chorus and orchestra, directed by Ulf Schirmer, are strongly supportive. But unless you are a fan of weird opera productions, this is not generally recommendable.

Tosca (complete; CD versions)

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * EMI mono 5 62890-2 (2). Callas, Di Stefano, Gobbi, Calabrese, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, De Sabata

🔑 (BB) * EMI mono 5 85644–2 (2). Callas, Di Stefano, Gobbi, Calabrese, Mercuriali, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, De Sabata

🔑 * EMI 5 57173-2 (2). Gheorghiu, Alagna, Raimondi, ROHCG Ch. & O, Pappano

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca 475 7522 (2). Price, Di Stefano, Taddei, V. State Op. Ch., VPO, Karajan

🔑 ✿ Ⓑ * Pentatone Surround Sound SACD 5186 147 (2). Caballé, Carreras, Wixell, ROHCG Ch. & O, C. Davis

Ⓜ  RCA 82876 70783-2 (2). L. Price, Domingo, Milnes, Plishka, Alldis Ch., Wandsworth School Boys' Ch., New Philh. O, Mehta

Ⓜ ((*)) ROH mono ROHS 005 (2). Milanov, Corelli, Guelfi, ROHCG Ch. & O, Gibson

(*) Decca 414 597-2 (2). Te Kanawa, Aragall, Nucci, Welsh Nat. Op. Ch., Nat. PO, Solti

Ⓜ (*) EMI CfP 2 08827-2 (2). Scotto, Domingo, Bruson, Amb. Op. Ch., St Clement Danes School Boys' Ch., Philh. O, Levine

There has never been a finer recorded performance of Tosca than Callas's first, with Victor de Sabata conducting and Tito Gobbi as Scarpia. Gobbi makes the unbelievably villainous police chief into a genuinely three-dimensional character, and Di Stefano, as the hero Cavaradossi, was at his finest. The conducting of De Sabata is spaciously lyrical as well as sharply dramatic, and the mono recording is superbly balanced in Walter Legge's fine production. The recording now rightly takes its place as one of EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century' and the new transfer brings enhanced sound that could almost be stereo, with the voices caught gloriously, and the mid-priced set includes a full libretto and translation.

EMI's super-bargain transfer of the classic Callas–Gobbi set with De Sabata conducting is designed to outclass the rival set from Naxos. As well as being packaged much more attractively, it brings a transfer which, taken from the original tapes, has the voices brighter and more immediate than on the Naxos set. Though painstakingly transferred from a series of different LPs, with minor imperfections ironed out, the Naxos set brings few advantages (8.110256/7). The immediate impact of the voices on EMI will for most be the deciding factor. Neither set has a libretto, but both helpfully provide a detailed synopsis linked to the index points on the disc.

With all three principals the clarity of words adds to the power of this Pappano performance, most strikingly with Gheorghiu, who constantly sheds new light on one phrase after another. When Cavaradossi attempts to explain the black eyes of the Madonna he is painting, Gheorghiu, responding in the half-tone phrase 'Ah, quegli occhi' ('Ah, those eyes'), conveys her doubt with heart-stopping intensity. In Act II, when Scarpia is all-dominant, Gheorghiu, instead of being defiant from the outset is plainly frightened out of her wits, so that we then movingly witness the build-up of resolve that will lead to murder, punctuated by an account of the aria Vissi d'arte of velvet beauty. Gheorghiu's is a great performance, significantly expanding on what we already know of her, as magnetic as Callas's, rich and beautiful as well as dramatic. The EMI sound is superb, full, clear and atmospheric, making this a classic among the many versions of this opera.

Karajan's 1962 Vienna Tosca is now reissued as one of Decca's Originals, so it still includes a full libretto and translation. It remains one of the finest versions, with Leontyne Price at the peak of her form and Di Stefano singing most sensitively. But Karajan deserves equal credit with the principal singers, and the sound is first class.

Pacing the music naturally and sympathetically, Sir Colin Davis proves a superb Puccinian, one who not only presents Puccini's drama with richness and force but gives the score the musical strength of a great symphony. In this the quality of the singing from a cast of unusual consistency plays an important part. Caballé may not be as sharply jealous a heroine as her keenest rivals, but with the purity of Vissi d'arte coming as a key element in her interpretation, she still presents Tosca as a formidable siren-figure ('Mia sirena' being Cavaradossi's expression of endearment). Carreras reinforces his reputation as a tenor of unusual artistry as well as of superb vocal powers. Though Wixell is not ideally well focused as Scarpia, not at all Italianate of tone, he presents a completely credible lover-figure, not just the lusting ogre of convention. The 1976 analogue recording is full as well as refined, bringing out the beauties of Puccini's scoring, and now sounds very spectacular indeed, remasked in four channel sound by Pentatone.

Leontyne Price made her second complete recording of Tosca (for RCA) ten years after the first under Karajan, and the interpretation remained remarkably consistent, a shade tougher in the chest register – the great entry in Act III a magnificent moment – and a little more clipped of phrase. That last modification may reflect the relative manners of the two conductors – Karajan more individual in his refined expansiveness, Mehta more thrustful. On balance, taking Price alone, the preference is for the earlier set, but Mehta's version also boasts a fine cast, with the team of Domingo and Milnes at its most impressive. The recording, too, is admirable, even if it yields to the Decca in atmosphere and richness.

The spectacular qualities of the classic Tosca production with Callas and Gobbi have tended to put this other impressive presentation of the opera in the shade. Yet with good, bright, mono sound the performances of Zinka Milanov and Franco Corelli are both commanding, Corelli making his début at Covent Garden. He exaggerates boldly in his opening aria – but understandably so when, in 1957 at the time of this recording, he was little known. Gian Giacomo Guelfi is impressive as Scarpia, if not as commanding as Tito Gobbi, and Alexander Gibson demonstrates what a powerful opera conductor he was at this period.

Rarely has Solti phrased Italian melody so consistently con amore, his fiercer side subdued but with plenty of power when required. Even so, the timing is not always quite spontaneous-sounding, with transitions occasionally rushed. But the principal raison d'être of the set must be the casting of Dame Kiri as the jealous opera-singer. Her admirers will relish the glorious sounds, but the jealous side of Tosca's character is rather muted.

Levine directs a red-blooded performance which underlines the melodrama. Domingo here reinforces his claim to be the finest Cavaradossi today, while the clean-cut, incisive singing of Renato Bruson presents a powerful if rather young-sounding Scarpia. Renata Scotto's voice is in many ways ideally suited to the role of Tosca, certainly in its timbre and colouring; as caught on record, however, the upper register is often squally. The digital recording is full and forward. The set now comes with a full libretto.

Tosca (complete; in English)

🔑 Ⓜ  Chan. 3000 (2). Eaglen, O'Neill, Yurisich, Mitchell Ch., Kay Children's Ch., Philh. O, Parry

David Parry with Jane Eaglen, in one of her finest performances on disc, directs a gripping account of Puccini's red-blooded drama, sung in English. What above all seals the success of the set is the power and command of Jane Eaglen as Tosca. The confident sureness with which she attacks every top note is a delight, so that in Act I she expresses her jealousy with the vehemence of a Wagnerian, while singing with warm, rounded tone. She is well matched by Dennis O'Neill as Cavaradossi, aptly Italianate, and Gregory Yurisich makes a powerful Scarpia, younger-sounding than most and therefore a plausible lover. The others are well cast too, notably Peter Rose as a fresh-voiced Angelotti. The Geoffrey Mitchell Choir and children's choir are superb in the crowd scenes of Act I. Highlights are available on CHAN 3066.

Il Trittico: (i) Il Tabarro; (ii) Suor Angelica; (iii) Gianni Schicchi (complete; DVD versions)

🔑  Warner DVD 5050467 0943-2. (i) Cappuccilli, Sass, Martinucci, Bertocchi, Bramante, Jankovic; (ii) Plowright, Vejzovic, Allegri, Verri, Santelli, Spezia, d'Amico; (iii) Pons, Gasdia, Marusin, Jankovik, Poggi; La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Gavazzeni (V/D: Brian Large)

 TDK DVD DVWW-OPTRIT. Nizza; (i; iii) Mastromarino; (i) Pelizarri; (ii–iii) Chiuri; (iii) Giovannini; Modena Coro Lirico Amadeus, O della Fondazione Arturo Toscanini, Reynolds (Dir: Cristina Pezzoli, V/D: Loreena Kaufmann)

This La Scala production brings a fairly traditional approach and it will do very well, as the casting does not disappoint either. Piero Cappuccilli as the bargemaster is well supported by the believably hard-voiced Sylvia Sass as Giorgetta, and the melodrama is brought off effectively. In the title-role of Suor Angelica, Rosalind Plowright is at her finest, both vocally and in commanding our sympathy; Dunja Vejzovic's Princess is not as intimidating as she should be, but she sings well enough. The set for Gianni Schicchi is unrealistially spacious but Cecilia Gasdia is a rich-voiced Lauretta and, at the centre of the story, Juan Pons is a firm and believable Schicchi, although the staging of his final solo as a devil from hell is totally misguided in just the way that producers refuse to let well alone. But the veteran Gianandrea Gavazzeni conducts throughout with vitality and warmth, and altogether this has much to offer.

However, the live performances recorded at Modena are also very enjoyable indeed. There are no stars in the cast, but Amarilli Nizza is excellent in all three key roles and is especially moving as Suor Angelica, where Annamaria Chiuri is most commanding as La Zia Principessa. Alberto Mastromarino also makes a fine transformation between the two key male roles, the bargemaster and Gianni Schicchi, and the supporting cast are excellent too. The chorus is splendid, especially in Suor Angelica, which is very moving, musically as well as visually. It has a splendidly solid yet versatile set which moves to accommodate each scene. But all three sets are admirably realistic and the costumes too are well chosen with real grotesquerie in Gianni Schicchi.

Il Trittico*: (i) Il Tabarro; (ii) Suor Angelica; (iii) Gianni Schicchi (CD versions)

🔑 * EMI 5 56587-2 (3) (i; iii) Gheorghiu, Alagna; (i) Guelfi, Guleghina, Shicoff; (ii) Gallardo-Domâs, Manca di Nissa; (ii; iii) Palmer; (iii) Van Dam, Roni; (i; ii) L. Voices; (ii) Tiffin School Boys' Ch., LSO or Philh. O, Pappano

Ⓝ Ⓜ  EMI stereo/mono 2 171402 (3). (i; iii) Gobbi; (i) Prandelli, Mas; (ii; iii) De los Angeles; (ii) Barbieri; (iii) Canali, Del Monte, Montarsolo; Rome Op. Ch. & O; (i) Bellezza; (ii) Seafin; (iii) Santini

Ⓝ Ⓜ () Decca 478 0341 (3). (i–iii) Freni; (i) Pons; Giacomini; (ii) Souliotis; (iii) Nucci, Alagna; Ch. & O of Maggio Musicale Fiorentino, Bartoletti

No previous recordings of the three one-acters in Puccini's triptych bring quite such warmth or beauty or so powerful a drawing of the contrasts between each – in turn Grand Guignol melodrama, pure sentiment and high comedy. Pacing each opera masterfully, Pappano heightens emotions fearlessly to produce at key moments the authentic gulp-in-throat, whether for the cuckolded bargemaster, Michele, for Sister Angelica in her agonized suicide and heavenly absolution, or for the resolution of young love at the end of Gianni Schicchi.

Angela Gheorghiu and Roberto Alagna, as well as making a tiny cameo appearance in Il Tabarro as the off-stage departing lovers, sing radiantly as Lauretta and Rinuccio in Gianni Schicchi, with the happy ending most tenderly done. Maria Guleghina, well known for her fine Tosca, makes a warm, vibrant Giorgetta, and the touch of acid at the top of the voice adds character. Even more remarkable is the singing of the young Chilean soprano, Cristina Gallardo-Domâs as Sister Angelica. This is a younger, more tender, more vulnerable Angelica than usual, the dynamic shading brings pianissimos of breathtaking delicacy, not least in floated top-notes. The casting in the middle opera is as near flawless as could be. The Zia Principessa is sung with chilling power by Bernadette Manca di Nissa, her tone firm and even throughout. Felicity Palmer with her tangy mezzo tone is well contrasted as the Abbess, and she is just as characterful as the crabby Zita in Gianni Schicchi. Among the men, Carlo Guelfi makes a superb Michele in Il Tabarro, incisive, dark and virile. Neil Shicoff makes a fine Luigi, his nervy tenor tone adding character. As Gianni Schicchi, José van Dam is in fine voice, with his clean focus bringing out the sardonic side of Schicchi, and his top Gs wonderfully strong and steady still. The recording is comfortingly sumptuous and atmospheric, very wide in its dynamic range, with magical off-stage effects.

The classic set of Il Trittico, which now returns as one of EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century', has dominated the catalogue since the earliest days of LP, with Tito Gobbi giving two of his ripest characterizations. The central role of the cuckolded bargemaster, Michele, in the mono Il Tabarro inspired him to give his very best, both as actor and as singer. The central leaf of the triptych, Suor Angelica, brings a glowing performance from Victoria de los Angeles, giving a most affecting portrayal of Angelica, with Fedora Barbieri formidable as her unfeeling aunt, the Zia Principessa. De los Angeles reappears, charmingly girlish, as Lauretta, in Gianni Schicchi, where the high comedy fizzes deliciously. Though Gobbi's incomparable baritone is not by nature comic-sounding, he is unequalled as Schicchi. Only the last opera is in genuine and excellent stereo; Il Tabarro (1955) and Suor Angelica (1957) are mono, but the latest EMI transfers are expert, clear and convincingly balanced. A libretto comes with the reissued set.

It is a pity that Mirella Freni did not record Il Trittico earlier. It is taxing for any soprano to tackle three such contrasted roles as Giorgetta, Angelica and Lauretta, and in her 1991 Decca recording the only performance which sounds in character is the first of the three, with the portrait of the bargemaster's wife bright and detailed. The tenor, Giuseppe Giacomini, gives a weightier performance as Luigi than usual, his voice strong and baritonal. That makes Juan Pons's portrait of the cuckolded bargemaster, Michele, sound too light. The big aria, Nulla, silenzio, is cleanly sung, but with no bite of venom and Bartoletti's conducting in all three operas lacks the tension needed in such colourful, atmospheric pieces. Freni's soprano too often sounds strained in the role of Angelica, spreading uncomfortably at the top under pressure, and missing the beauty and poise, while, characterful though she is, Elena Souliotis is vocally idiosyncratic as the Zia Principessa. The high comedy of Gianni Schicchi suffers most of all from Bartoletti's limpness, and Freni is not remotely young-sounding in O mio babbino caro. Roberto Alagna, then very much a rising tenor, gives a clean, trumpet-toned performance as Rinuccio and, though Leo Nucci sings well enough in the title-role, he conveys nothing of the ironic humour behind this magic manipulator.

Turandot (complete; DVD versions)

* TDK DVD DVWW-CLOPTUR. Marton, Carreras, Ricciarelli, Bogart, V. Sängerknaben, V. State Op. Ch. & O, Maazel (Dir: Harold Prince, V/D: Rodney Greenberg)

Ⓝ  Warner DVD 50 51442 8585 2. Dimitrova, Martinucci, Gasdia, Vinco, Verona Arena Ch. & O, Arena (Producer: Giuliano Montaldo, V/D: Brian Large)

(*) Arthaus DVD 100 088. Marton, Sylver, Mazzaria, Langan, San Francisco Op. Ch. & O, Runnicles (Production/Design: David Hockney, Dir: Peter McClintock, V/D: Brian Large)

Maazel's spectacular 1983 Vienna State Opera version, recorded live, is outstanding in every way and is unlikely to be surpassed by more modern versions. The production, with splendidly vivid oriental costumes, using masks on the chorus and most of the principal characters, is exotically telling, with the set equally theatrical, its central staircase ideal for the enormously compelling scene where Turandot (Eva Marton) asks the three questions and José Carreras replies, with just the right degree of hesitation to keep the tension high. Eva Marton was surely born to take the part of the heroine, singing with great power, and conveying her final change of heart most believably. Carreras also sings gloriously, creating the role of Calaf as both heroic and warmly sympathetic. Katia Ricciarelli is a very touching Liù, her voice creamily beautiful, and Ping, Pang and Pong (again exotically costumed and masked) bring almost a Gilbertian touch to their bizarre characterization. The Vienna State Opera Chorus sing gloriously in the big scenes and the orchestra play with the utmost vividness under Maazel's thrilling direction. Very highly recommended.

The Verona Arena is ideal for Turandot; the spectacle of the big scenes is breathtaking, with a huge chorus. The title-role is superbly taken by the Bulgarian soprano Ghena Dimitrova and her big, powerful voice rides over the set-piece arias gloriously. She almost upstages her Calaf, but Nicola Martinucci too sings resoundingly and his Nessun dorma does not disappoint. But it is Dimitrova as Turandot who dominates, and her key riddle scene in Act II is vocally thrilling. The scene with the well-cast Ping, Pang and Pong is neatly contrasted. Cecilia Gasdia is a delightful, pure-voiced Liù, singing radiantly, and Ivo Vinco is a sympathetic Timur, who handles Liù's suicide very touchingly. Maurizio Arena conducts with flair and vigour, and the choral scenes are truly magnificent, to make a most satisfying musical and visual experience.

The Arthaus DVD comes from a 1994 San Francisco production and has Eva Marton in the title-role. Hers is a big, dramatic voice, but with far too little expressive variation in tone and she is content to sing loudly and leave it at that. However, there are other things in its favour: a decent Calaf in Michael Sylver, a good Ping (Theodore Baerg), Pang (Dennis Peterson) and Pong (Craig Estep). We have heard more moving accounts of Liù than Lucia Mazzaria's, but generally speaking the cast are more than acceptable. The orchestral and choral forces are very well harnessed by Donald Runnicles, who fires on all cylinders and visually the designs by David Hockney are vivid and bold (some might think them garish, and they have had a dismissive press) but they will strike most readers as effective. The sound is rather forward and bright, and although there are more subtle Turandots to be found than Marton, the performance is thoroughly gripping.

Turandot (complete; CD versions)

🔑 * Decca (ADD) 414 274-2 (2). Sutherland, Pavarotti, Caballé, Pears, Ghiaurov, Alldis Ch., Wandsworth School Boys' Ch., LPO, Mehta

🔑 Ⓜ  RCA (ADD) 82876 82624-2 (2). Nilsson, Tebaldi, Bjoerling, Tozzi, Rome Op. Ch. & O, Leinsdorf

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 7 69327-2 (2). Nilsson, Corelli, Scotto, Mercuriali, Giaiotti, Rome Op. Ch. & O, Molinari-Pradelli

 DG 423 855-2 (2). Ricciarelli, Domingo, Hendricks, Raimondi, V. State Op. Ch., V. Boys' Ch., VPO, Karajan

Ⓜ () EMI mono 5 09683-2 (2). Callas, Fernandi, Schwarzkopf, Zaccaria, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Serafin

Ⓝ (BB) ((*)) Regis mono RRC 2082 (2). Callas, Fernandi, Schwarzkopf, Zaccaria, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Serafin

Joan Sutherland gives an intensely revealing and appealing interpretation, making the icy princess far more human and sympathetic than ever before, while Pavarotti gives a performance equally imaginative, beautiful in sound, strong on detail. To set Caballé against Sutherland was a daring idea, and it works superbly well; Pears as the Emperor is another imaginative choice. Mehta directs a gloriously rich and dramatic performance, superlatively recorded, still the best-sounding Turandot on CD, while the reading also remains supreme.

Recorded as long ago as 1959, the Turandot set, with Birgit Nilsson, Renata Tebaldi and Jussi Bjoerling an exceptionally strong team of principals and with the two distinguished sopranos perfectly contrasted, remains one of the finest, most powerful versions of the opera ever recorded. Leinsdorf is at his finest, thrusting and intense, and the new digital transfer in Living Stereo is admirably vivid.

The EMI set brings Nilsson's second assumption on record of the role of Puccini's formidable princess. As an interpretation it is very similar to the earlier, RCA performance, but its impact is immediate, thanks to the conducting of Molinari-Pradelli. Corelli may not be the most sensitive prince in the world, but the voice is in glorious condition. Scotto's Liù is very beautiful and characterful too. With vividly remastered sound, this makes an excellent mid-priced recommendation, though the documentation, as yet, does not include an English translation.

In Karajan's set, Hendricks is almost a sex-kitten with her seductively golden tone, and one wonders how Calaf could ever have overlooked her. This is very different from the usual picture of a chaste slave-girl. Ricciarelli is a far more vulnerable figure than one expects of the icy princess, and the very fact that the part strains her beyond reasonable vocal limits adds to the dramatic point, even if it subtracts from the musical joys. By contrast, Plácido Domingo is vocally superb, a commanding prince; and the rest of the cast present star names even in small roles.

With Callas, the character seems so much more believably complex than with others, and this 1957 recording is one of her most thrillingly magnetic performances on disc. Schwarzkopf provides a comparably characterful and distinctive portrait as Liù, far more than a Puccinian 'little woman', sweet and wilting. Eugenio Fernandi sounds relatively uncharacterful as Calaf, but his timbre is pleasing enough. By contrast, Serafin's masterly conducting exactly matches the characterfulness of Callas and Schwarzkopf, with colour, atmosphere and dramatic point all commandingly presented. With such a vivid performance, the 1957 mono sound is much more expansive in the new transfer.

The Regis set includes Callas's 1954 recordings of Signore ascolta and Tu che di gel sei cinta as a bonus. The Regis transfer is acceptable, but the spectacular choruses are not sharply focused.

Turandot (complete; sung in English)

🔑  Chan. 3086 (2). Eaglen, O'Neill, Plazas, Bayley, Gedda, George Mitchell Ch., Philh. O., Parry

The glory of the Chandos set of Turandot is not just the spectacular, wide-ranging sound, bringing out details never heard before, but the singing of Jane Eaglen in the title-role and here the voice is recorded with a satisfying firmness and precision apt for the icy princess. The total absence of strain, even in the most taxing passages above the stave, and the magnetic sense of purpose reflect Eaglen's experience singing this role at Covent Garden (in Italian), while the gentler moments point forward to the resolution when, against all the odds, the icy princess is made to melt in the face of love, normally an unconvincing transformation (as Puccini himself evidently felt), but here in total conviction. As Calaf Dennis O'Neill (who also appeared with Eaglen at Covent Garden) is strong and positive, even if the voice is no longer fresh and shows signs of strain. Mary Plazas is a charming, tender Liù and Clive Bayley a superb Timur, while Nicolai Gedda, sounding aptly old, takes on the cameo role of the ancient emperor. David Parry, as in his previous recordings for this Opera in English series, brings out the red-blooded thrust of the score, with the orchestral detail revealed as never before.

Turandot (highlights)

Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 458 202-2 (from above complete recording, with Sutherland, Pavarotti; cond. Mehta)

A generous and shrewdly chosen 70-minute collection of excerpts from the glorious full-priced Decca set of Turandot. Nessun dorma, with Pavarotti at his finest, is here given a closing cadence for neatness. The vintage Decca sound is outstandingly full and vivid. The reissue in Decca's Opera Gala series is neatly packaged in a slipcase and includes a full translation.

Le Villi (complete)

🔑  Naïve V4958. Diener, Machado, Tézier, David, French R. PO, Guidarini

Puccini wrote his first opera, Le Villi, using a story similar to that of Adam's ballet, Giselle: the faithless lover finally destroyed by the ghostly spirit of the beloved who has died of a broken heart. This French Radio recording scores impressively over Maazel's deleted Sony version in the refinement of the sound, which in turn brings out the subtleties of the fine singing from all the principals. The new set has a woman, Sylvie David, lighter and more conversational. Marco Guidarini proves a very convincing Puccinian, bringing out the dramatic bite of the orchestral showpieces, as well as moulding the big melodies affectionately. Equally Ludovic Tézier is clear and direct as Anna's father Guglielmo.

COLLECTIONS

(i) Crisantemi; Minuets 1–3; Quartet in A min.: Allegro moderato; Scherzo in A min.; (ii) Foglio d'album; Piccolo tango; (iii; ii) Songs: Avanti Urania; E l'uccellino; Inno a Diana; Menti all'avviso; Morire!; Salve regina; Sole e amore; Storiella d'amore; Terra e mare

 Etcetera KTC 1050. (i) Raphael Qt; (ii) Crone; (iii) Alexander

It is fascinating to find among early, rather untypical songs like Storiella d'amore and Menti all'avviso a charming little song, Sole e amore, written jokingly for a journal, Paganini, in 1888, which provided, bar for bar, the main idea of the Act III quartet in La Bohème of eight years later. The two piano pieces are simple album-leaves; among the six quartet pieces, Crisantemi is already well known; the rest are student pieces, including a delightful fragment of a Scherzo. Performances are good, though Roberta Alexander's soprano is not ideally Italianate. The recorded sound is vivid and immediate against a lively hall ambience.

Scenes and Arias from: La Bohème; Madama Butterfly; Tosca; It Trittico; Turandot

Ⓝ Ⓑ * Decca 2-CD (ADD/DDD) 478 0368 (2). Freni, Pavarotti; with Ludwig, Milnes, VPO; or BPO, Karajan; Met. Op. O, Levine

A splendid collection centring on the partnership of Freni and Pavarotti (with Karajan and Levine) in the key Puccini roles, although Freni takes the part of Liù in Turandot, singing only one excerpt. Nevertheless with 152 minutes of excerpts this is a very impressive anthology.

Arias: La Bohème: Quando m'en vo' soletta; Gianni Schicchi: O mio babbino caro; Madama Butterfly: Un bel dì; Manon Lescaut: In quelle trine morbide; La Rondine: Chi il bel sogno di Doretta; Ora dolci e divine; Tosca: Vissi d'arte; Le Villi: Se come voi piccina

🔑 Ⓜ  Sony (ADD) SMK 60975. Te Kanawa, LPO, Pritchard, or LSO, Maazel – VERDI: Arias.  (with MOZART: Don Giovanni: Ah! fuggi il traditor; In quali eccessi ... Mi tradì; HUMPERDINCK: Der kleine Sandmann bin ich; DURUFLÉ: Requiem: Pie Jesu ***)

In a recital recorded in 1981 the creamy beauty of Kiri Te Kanawa's voice is ideally suited to these seven lyrical Puccini arias including the little waltz-like song from Le Villi. The other excerpt from this opera comes from the complete set made around the same time. Throughout, expressive sweetness is more remarkable than characterization, but in such music it is difficult to complain. Kiri was also in top form in her 1978 assumption of the role of Elvira in Mozart's Don Giovanni (again with Maazel), and the delightful Sandman aria from Hänsel und Gretel and Duruflé's beautiful, serene Pie Jesu again show the voice at its most appealing.

Arias: (i) La Bohème: Sì mi chiamano Mimì; Donde lieta uscì; Gianni Schicchi: O mio babbino caro; Madama Butterfly: Un bel dì; Con onor muore; Manon Lescaut: In quelle trine morbide; Sola perduta; Suor Angelica: Senza mamma; Turandot: Signore ascolta!; In questa reggia; Tu che del sei cinta. Duets: (ii; iii) La Bohème: O soave fanciulla; (ii; iv) Madama Butterfly: Vogliateme bene; (ii; v) Tosca: Non la sospiri. Aria: Vissi d'arte

🔑 Ⓜ () EMI mono/stereo 5 62794-2. Callas; with (i) Philh. O, Serafin; (ii) La Scala, Milan O; (iii) Votto; with Di Stefano; (iv) cond. Karajan, with Gedda; (v) De Sabata; with Di Stefano

The first 11 items here formed Callas's first EMI recital, recorded in mono in Watford Town Hall in September 1954. She was vocally at her peak. Even when her concept of a Puccinian 'little woman' has eyes controversially flashing and fierce, the results are unforgettable, never for a moment relaxing on the easy course, always finding new revelation, whether as Turandot or Liù, as Manon, Mimì or Butterfly. The other items, mostly duets, come from her complete sets, including her famous and indispensable portrayal of Tosca, conducted by Victor de Sabata. The transfers are excellent, well balanced but with the voice always vividly projected. (The solo items are also available well transferred on Regis RRC 1234.)

Arias: Madama Butterfly: Un bel dì; Tu? tu? piccolo Iddio! (Death of Butterfly); La Rondine: Che il bel sogno di Doretta; Tosca: Vissi d'arte; Turandot: Signore ascolta; Tu che di gel sei cinta

Ⓜ (*) RCA (ADD) SACD 82876 61395-2. Price, Rome Op. O, De Fabritiis or Basile – VERDI: Arias ***

There is some glorious singing in this recital from the beginning of the 1960s. Perhaps Leontyne Price does not always get right inside each heroine at this stage in her career, but Un bel dì is thrilling, with a sharp contrast of tone between the incisiveness of the opening and the delicacy of Chi sarà, chi sarà. In Vissi d'arte she forces a little too hard so that her vibrato becomes a wobble, but the two Turandot arias are very beautiful. Most welcome of all is Magda's aria from La Rondine, sweet, charming and lyrical. The recording was always very good indeed, and it sounds even more vivid in this SACD transfer.

PUCCINI, Giacomo Sr (1712–81)

Messa di Requiem; Overtures: Lucio Giunio Bruto; Marzio Coriolano

(BB)  Arte Nova 74321 98497-2. Morgan, Kenny, Cornwell, Thomas, Kantorei Saarlouis, Ens. UnaVolta, Fontaine

The celebrated Giacomo Puccini was the last in a line of composers, starting with another Giacomo, born in 1712, his great-great-grandfather. As this fine setting of the Requiem demonstrates, he was a notable figure in 18th-century Italian music, one who (like his descendant) was not afraid to cherry-pick his ideas. Here his elaborate contrapuntal writing for double choir harks back to an earlier generation, with clashing discords based on suspensions, such as one finds in Purcell's choral music, and chromatic sequences refreshing to the modern ear, all set against elegant baroque solos, well sung by the stylish quartet of British-based soloists. The two overtures, too, written for the secular oratorios celebrating the city of Lucca's annual elections, are lively and refreshing, with vigorous performances, cleanly recorded.

PURCELL, Henry (1659–95)

'England, my England' (film by Tony Palmer)

Ⓝ  Isolde Films TP DVD 151. Callow, Ball, Redgrave, Shrapnel, Graham, Varcoe, Dawson, Argenta, Monteverdi Ch., E. Bar. Sol., Gardiner

When little is known about the life of Henry Purcell except the date of his death and burial in Westminster Abbey, Tony Palmer has created a fantasy not just about the period but about its many great figures, from Milton and Locke to Pepys, Newton and Wren. The Great Plague and the Fire of London figure prominently, but over everything is the figure of Simon Callow, not just as Charles II but as himself, both tackling Shaw's play, In Good King Charles's Golden Days, at the Royal Court Theatre and quoting the jaundiced comments of John Osborne, co-author of the script, likening the 1680s to the 1880s. Michael Ball plays the part of the composer himself.

The musical side is splendidly presented, with John Eliot Gardiner directing his Monteverdi Choir and English Baroque Soloists and with a starry line-up of soloists. The result is a kaleidoscope of impressions, carefully put together, which add up to a most moving whole. The film ends with the finale of Benjamin Britten's Variations and Fugue on a Theme of Purcell, The Young Person's Guide, reflecting Palmer's own career. Not surprisingly, the film, first shown on Christmas Day 1995 on Channel 4, became an instant prizewinner.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Fantasias 1–3 in 3 Parts; 4–12 in 4 Parts; in 5 Parts in F 'upon one note'; in 6 Parts in G min. (In nomine); in 7 Parts in G min. (In nomine)

(BB) (*) Virgin 2x1 4 82097-2 (2). L. Bar. – CORELLI: Ciacona etc. **(*)

The Purcell Fantasias are among the most searching and profound works in all music and the London Baroque do them fair justice. They are a very accomplished group and their intonation and blend are impeccable. The resonance of the recording, made in London's Temple Church in 1983, may trouble some collectors, but we did not find the halo round the aural image unpleasing. At the same time, it is possible to feel that in music so highly charged with feeling and so richly imbued with melancholy, the constraints exercised by these artists result in playing that at times is close to understatement.

Sonatas of 3 Parts: 1–12; 4 Parts: 1–10; Chacony; 3 Pavans; 3 Parts on a Ground

Ⓝ  Chan. 0572/3. Purcell Qt

Sonatas of 3 Parts, 1–12

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Decca O/L 478 0027. Beznosiuk, Podger, Coin, Hogwood

10 Sonatas of Four Parts, 1–10

Ⓝ  Linn CKD 332. Retrospect Trio, Halls

In these Sonatas Purcell turns to a new, concerted style which had been developed in Italy. Interspersed among the Sonatas are three earlier and highly chromatic Pavans and the famous Chacony in G minor. The Purcell Quartet give a first-class account of themselves: their playing is authoritative and idiomatic, and the artists are firmly focused in a warm but not excessively reverberant acoustic.

The reissued Oiseau-Lyre recording includes all the three-part works on a single, mid-priced CD, and again the performances are of the highest standard and very well recorded.

The Retrospect Trio under Matthew Halls (successors to the King's Consort) in general give lively and resilient performances of the Four-Part Sonatas, very well recorded. The snag is that Halls falls seriously short over the greatest of all these sonatas, No. 6 in G minor, a massive Chaconne movement lasting a full seven minutes. Halls fails to keep up the momentum, and the result stagnates before the end, with no sense of climax, such as it must have. A pity.

KEYBOARD MUSIC

Harpsichord Suites 1–4, Z.660/663 (with alternative Preludes for Suites 1 & 4); Suites 5–8, Z.666/669; Transcriptions: A New Ground in E min., ZT.682; Theatre Music: Abdelazar: Round O, Z.684; Bonduca: Overture in C, Z.574/1; The Fairy Queen: Overture in D, ZT.692; King Arthur: Overture in D min., Z.628/2; Timon of Athens: Chaconne in G min., ZT.680; The Virtuous Wife: Overture in gamut flat, ZT.693

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553982. Charlston (harpsichord)

This is both an enjoyable and a valuable collection, which not only includes the eight Harpsichord Suites deriving from Purcell's Choice Collection of Lessons for the Harpsichord but also some of the transcriptions of popular pieces from the theatre music. The Suites are usually in four short movements, featuring a Prelude, Almand, Corant and Sarabande or Hornpipe. The Transcriptions were thought to have been made by others, but modern scholarship suggests that they were possibly made by the composer himself, and each is used as a closing encore for one of the Suites, including the piece from Abdelazar made famous by Britten. Terence Charlston, who is thoroughly musical and consistently spontaneous, gives first-class performances, with apt tempi. He uses a modern harpsichord made by Bruce Kennedy in 1993: it seems ideal for the scale of the music and is perfectly recorded in a warm but not too resonant acoustic. Highly recommended.

VOCAL MUSIC

Anthems & Services, Vols 1–11 (complete)

🔑 Ⓜ  Hyp. CDS 44141/51 (11). Soloists, King's Cons., King

Anthems & Services, Vol. 1 ( Hyp. CDA 66585.); Anthems & Services, Vol. 2 ( Hyp. CDA 66609.); Anthems & Services, Vol. 3 ( Hyp. CDA 66623.); Anthems & Services, Vol. 4 ( Hyp. CDA 66644.); Anthems & Services, Vol. 5 ( Hyp. CDA 66656.); Anthems & Services, Vol. 6 ( Hyp. CDA 66663.); Anthems & Services, Vol. 7 ( Hyp. CDA 66677.); Anthems & Services, Vol. 8 ( Hyp. CDA 66686.); Anthems & Services, Vol. 9 ( Hyp. CDA 66693.); Anthems & Services, Vol. 10 ( Hyp. CDA 66707.); Anthems & Services, Vol. 11 ( Hyp. CDA 66716.)

The different categories of work here, Services, Verse Anthems, Motets (or Full Anthems) and devotional songs, cover the widest range of style and expression, with Robert King's own helpful and scholarly notes setting each one in context. Generally the most adventurous in style are the Full Anthems, with elaborate counterpoint often bringing amazingly advanced harmonic progressions. Yet the Verse Anthems too include some which similarly demonstrate Purcell's extraordinary imagination in contrapuntal writing. So though Volume 6 is confined to Verse Anthems and devotional songs, they too offer passages of chromatic writing which defy the idea of these categories as plain and straightforward. As the title suggests, the devotional song, Plung'd in the Confines of Despair, is a particularly fine example. Although all the earlier volumes are full of good things, Volume 7 is the one to recommend first to anyone simply wanting to sample Purcell's church music. Not only does it contain the Music for the Funeral of Queen Mary in 1695, with drum processionals, the solemn March and Canzona for Brass and Funeral Sentences, it has the B flat Morning Service, two settings of the Coronation anthem, I Was Glad (one of them previously unrecorded), a magnificent Full Anthem, three Verse Anthems and two splendid devotional songs. Volume 8, too, is full of fine music. The opening Verse Anthem, In Thee, O Lord, Do I Put my Trust, opens with a very striking, slightly melancholy Sinfonia, with a six-note figure rising up from a ground bass, which sets the expressive mood. The closing anthem, so appropriate from an island composer, They that Go Down to the Sea in Ships, is characteristically diverse, with Purcell helping the Lord 'maketh the storm to cease' and at the end providing a joyful chorus of praise. King's notes and documentation closely identify each item, adding to one's illumination.

There are plenty of key items in the final three volumes including (in Volume 9), In Guilty Night, the dialogue cantata Saul and the Witch of Endor, with Susan Gritton, Rogers Covey-Crump and Michael George. An outstanding series, full of treasures, with King varying the scale of forces he uses for each item. Often he uses one voice per part, but he regularly expands the ensemble with the King's Consort Choir or turns to the full New College Choir, which includes trebles. Those who want to dive in at the deep end should invest in the complete set, with all eleven CDs neatly packaged in cardboard sleeves in a box with a booklet containing excellent extended documentation and full texts taken from the individual discs, which are, of course, all available separately.

Anthems: Blow up the trumpet in Zion; My heart is inditing; O God, Thou art my God; O God, Thou has cast me out; Remember not, Lord, our offences; Rejoice in the Lord alway. Chaconne in G min. for 2 Violins & Continuo

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex (ADD) 2564 60821-2. Bowman, Rogers, Van Egmond, King's College, Cambridge, Ch., Leonhardt Consort, Leonhardt

An attractive collection from the late 1960s, which happily blends scholarship and spontaneity. The instrumental ensemble uses period instruments and playing style, and the character of the sound is very distinctive. Not all the anthems have instrumental accompaniments – Purcell sometimes uses the organ, at others bass continuo – but they are all very well sung, with the characteristic King's penchant for tonal breadth and beauty. Excellent recording.

Anthems: Man that is born of woman; O God, thou has cast us out; Lord, how long wilt thou be angry?; O God, thou art my God; O Lord God of hosts; Remember not, Lord, our offences; Thou knowest, Lord, the secrets of our hearts. Verse Anthems: My beloved spake; My heart is inditing; O sing unto the Lord; Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem; They that go down to the sea in ships; Morning Service in B flat: Benedicite omnia opera; Cantate Domino; Deus miscreatur; Magnificat; Nunc dimittis; Evening service in G min.: Magnificat; Nunc dimittis; Latin Psalm: Jehovah, quam multi sunt hostes mei; Te Deum & Jubilate in D.

🔑 Ⓑ  DG Double (ADD) 459 487-2 (2). Thomas, Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford, Ch., E. Concert, Preston

Recorded in the Henry Wood Hall in 1980, this admirable collection of Purcell's church music is self-recommending. Apart from David Thomas's fine contribution (in the verse anthems) the soloists come from the choir, and very good they are too, especially the trebles. The performances are full of character, vigorous, yet with the widest range of colour and feeling, well projected in a recording which is both spacious and detailed. The sound is excellent in its current transfer, and as a DG Archiv Double this is even more attractive.

Odes & Welcome Songs Vols. 1–8 (complete)

🔑 * Hyp. CDS 44031/8.

Odes & Welcome Songs, Vol. 1 ( Hyp. CDA 66314.); Odes & Welcome Songs, Vol. 2 ( Hyp. CDA 66349.); Odes & Welcome Songs, Vol. 3 ( Hyp. CDA 66412.); Odes & Welcome Songs, Vol. 4 ( Hyp. CDA 66456.); Odes & Welcome Songs, Vol. 5 ( Hyp. CDA 66476.); Odes & Welcome Songs, Vol. 6 ( Hyp. CDA 66494.); Odes & Welcome Songs, Vol. 7 ( Hyp. CDA 66587.); Odes & Welcome Songs, Vol. 8 ( Hyp. CDA 66598.)

Just what a wealth of inspiration Purcell brought to the occasional music he wrote for his royal and noble masters comes out again and again in Robert King's splendid collection of the odes and welcome songs. It is sad that for three centuries this fine music has been largely buried, with just a few of the odes achieving popularity. In those, King's performances do not always outshine the finest of previous versions, but with an outstanding team of soloists as well as his King's Consort the performances achieve a consistently high standard, with nothing falling seriously short. Being able to hear previously unrecorded rarities alongside the well-known works sets Purcell's achievement vividly in context, helped by informative notes in each volume, written by King himself. Volume 1 includes the shorter of the two St Cecilia Odes and immediately – among the fine team of soloists – it is a delight to hear such superb artists as the counter-tenors James Bowman and Michael Chance in duet. Volume 3 with the 1693 Birthday Ode and Volume 7 with the fascinating Yorkshire Feast Song are two more CDs that would make good samplers. First-rate sound throughout.

Gardiner Purcell Edition

(i) Disc 1: Come, Ye Sons of Art Away; Funeral Music for Queen Mary (1695). (ii) Disc 2: Ode on St Cecilia's Day (Hail! Bright Cecilia). (iii) Disc 3: The Indian Queen (incidental music). (iv) Disc 4: The Tempest (incidental music)

🔑 Ⓜ  Erato 5046 68281-2 (4). (i) Lott, Brett, Williams, Allen, Equale Brass Ens.; (ii) Gordon, Elliott; (ii; iii) Stafford; (ii; iii; iv) Jennifer Smith, Varcoe, Elwes, Thomas; (iii) Fisher, Hill; (iii; iv) Hardy; (iv) Hall, Earle; (i–iv) Monteverdi Ch. & O, Gardiner

Originally issued to commemorate the tercentenary of Purcell's death, Gardiner's distinguished early series of Erato recordings from the 1970s and 1980s now reappears as a four-disc set, each disc packaged separately in its jewel-case (the choral works with texts) and presented together in a slipcase. The individual CDs are not now available separately.

Gardiner's characteristic vigour and alertness in Purcell come out superbly in the delightful record of the 1692 St Cecilia Ode – not as well known as some of the other odes he wrote, but a masterpiece. Soloists and chorus are outstanding.

The Indian Queen is fully cast and uses an authentic accompanying baroque instrumental group. The choral singing is especially fine, with the close of the work movingly expressive. John Eliot Gardiner's choice of tempi is apt and the soloists are all good, although the men are more strongly characterful than the ladies; nevertheless the lyrical music comes off well. Highlights are available on a budget Apex CD (2564 61501-2).

Whether or not Purcell wrote this music for The Tempest (the scholarly arguments are still unresolved), Gardiner demonstrates how delightful it is, a masterly collection, in performances both polished and stylish and with excellent solo and choral singing. At least the overture is clearly Purcell's, and that sets a pattern for a very varied collection of numbers, including three da capo arias and a full-length masque celebrating Neptune for Act V. Throughout, the recordings are full and atmospheric; the words are beautifully clear, and the transfer to CD is admirably natural.

Pinnock Purcell Collection

(i) Ode for the Birthday of Queen Mary (1694): Come, Ye Sons of Art Away; Ode for St Cecilia's Day: Welcome to All the Pleasures; Of Old when Heroes Thought it Base (The Yorkshire Feast Song); (ii) Dido and Aeneas (complete); (iii) Dioclesian (masque); (iv) King Arthur (complete); (v) Timon of Athens (masque)

Ⓑ  DG 474 672-2 (5). (i) J. Smith, Chance, Wilson, Richardson, Mark Ainsley, George; (ii) Von Otter, Dawson, Varcoe, Rogers; (iii) Monoyios, Agnew, Edgar-Wilson, Gadd, Birchall, Wallington, Foster; (iii; iv) Argenta, Bannatyne-Scott; (iv) Perillo, Gooding, MacDougall, Tucker, Finley; E. Concert & Ch., Pinnock

Pinnock's is a somewhat arbitrary collection, but the standard of performance and recording is very high and this set represents excellent value. He directs exuberant performances of Purcell's two most celebrated odes; the weight and brightness of the choral sound go with infectiously lifted rhythms, making the music dance. The soloists are all outstanding, with the counter-tenor duetting of Michael Chance and Timothy Wilson in Sound the Trumpet delectably pointed. The coupling, the neglected Yorkshire Feast Song, is full of wonderful inspirations, like the tenor and counter-tenor duet, And Now When the Renown'd Nassau – a reference to the new king, William III.

The performance of Dido and Aeneas is more controversial, but though the reading is not as inspired as many that Pinnock has given us, the scale is attractive. Both Anne Sofie von Otter and Lynne Dawson have voices that are at once warm and aptly pure for authentic performance. Von Otter as Dido, both fresh and mature-sounding, sings her two big arias with a combination of weight, gravity and expressive warmth which is yet completely in scale. The final lament, while faster than in traditional performances, still conveys the full tragic intensity of this epic in microcosm. Much more questionable is the casting on the male side, and that includes a tenor taking the role of the Sorceress. Nigel Rogers, not in his sweetest voice, takes that role as well as that of the Sailor. Confusingly, almost immediately after the Sailor's jolly song at the start of Act III, Rogers reappears as the Sorceress in a quite different mood, making much too quick a change. Stephen Varcoe is a rather unheroic-sounding Aeneas, but the chorus of the English Concert produces fresh, alert singing. Instead of a repetition of the final chorus, Pinnock opts for an instrumental reprise to provide an epilogue.

Dioclesian and Timon of Athens, both sets of theatre music including masques, were recorded in tandem. Pinnock presents both works on a slightly larger (but not inflated) scale and often adopts broader speeds, which allow him to spring rhythms the more infectiously, more clearly introducing an element of sparkle and humour. He includes the extra song in Act III of Dioclesian, 'When I First Saw', and certainly here the effervescence of Purcell's inspiration is consistently compelling.

King Arthur follows on after Dido and Aeneas, opening with the Chaconne and making a break between CDs at the end of Act I. Linda Perillo makes a charming Philidel; Brian Bannatyne-Scott and Nancy Argenta are equally memorable, and the chorus and orchestra sing and play throughout with consistent vitality.

Odes for the Birthday of Queen Mary (1692 & 1694); Music for the Funeral of Queen Mary (1695); Funeral Anthem; Funeral Sentences; Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem

🔑  EMI 3 44438-2. Soloists, King's College, Cambridge, Ch., AAM, Cleobury

Purcell composed some of his very finest vocal works for these royal celebrations, and the joyful Odes, Come ye sons of Art and Love's Godess sure, are among them. By contrast, the Funeral Music is infinitely touching in a quite different way. The performances here are authentic, superbly sung and played, full of life, and very well recorded. A disc to treasure.

Ode for Queen Mary's birthday; Come, ye sons of Art away; Funeral Music for Queen Mary (1695)

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex 0927 48593-2. Soloists, Monteverdi Ch. & O, Equale Brass Ens., Gardiner

Come, ye Sons of Art is splendidly paired here with the unforgettable funeral music he wrote on the death of the same monarch. With the Monteverdi Choir at its most incisive and understanding the performances are exemplary, and the recording, though balanced in favour of the instruments, is clear and refined. Among the soloists Thomas Allen is outstanding, while the two counter-tenors give a charming performance of the duet, Sound the trumpet. The Funeral Music includes the well-known Solemn March for trumpets and drums, a Canzona and simple anthem given at the funeral, and two of Purcell's most magnificent anthems setting the Funeral Sentences. Recording made in 1976 in Rosslyn Hill

Chapel, London. These works now come, coupled very economically together, on an Apex disc.

Funeral Music for Queen Mary (with (i) Queen's epicedium); March & Canzona on the Death of Queen Mary. Funeral sentences: Man that is born of a woman; In the midst of life are we in death; Thou knowest, Lord, the secrets of our hearts. Anthems: Hear my prayer; Jehovah quam multi sunt. (ii) 3 (Organ) Voluntaries: in D min.; in G; in C

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.553129. Oxford Camerata, Summerly; with (i) Lane; (ii) Cummings

On the Naxos CD this glorious, darkly intense funeral music is given an outstandingly fresh and clear rendition, vividly recorded, matching even the finest rival versions. The sharpness of focus in the sound means that Purcell's adventurous harmonies with their clashing intervals are given extra dramatic bite in these dedicated performances, marked by fresh, clear soprano tone in place of boy trebles. The choice of extra items – full anthems with their inspired counterpoint rather than verse anthems – is first rate. Aptly, the extended solo song for soprano (with simple organ accompaniment), The Queen's epicedium, is also included with the funeral music, sung with boyish tone by Carys-Ann Lane.

The Complete Secular Solo Songs

Volumes 1–3 (complete)

🔑 Ⓜ  Hyp. CDS 44161/3 (3). Bonney, Gritton, Bowman, Covey-Crump, Daniels, George, King's Consort, King

Originally issued on three separate CDs, this boxed collection brings obvious advantages, not least in the alphabetical index provided of the 87 songs. It is good, for example, to be able instantly to compare the three different settings of Music for a while, each on a different disc. The second and best-known version is a revision of the first (both for tenor, elegantly sung here by Rogers Covey-Crump), whereas the third is quite different, a free-ranging arioso setting of the same text by Henry Heveningham, taking the first line from Shakespeare's Twelfth Night. Barbara Bonney sings it exquisitely, and all the soloists here are excellent, with Robert King with his Consort, notably on bass viols and theorbo, providing most sympathetic accompaniment. Not included are Purcell's bawdy songs and catches, usually for multiple voices.

Airs & Duets

🔑 ✿  Lyrichord LEMS 8024. Dooley, Crook, Instrumental Ens., Brewer (harpsichord)

Jeffrey Dooley (counter-tenor), a pupil and protégé of the late Alfred Deller, has a truly beautiful voice and takes naturally to this repertoire. Among his solo items Be welcome, then, great sir and the Divine Hymn (Lord, what is man) are quite ravishing, while Hark! the ech'ing air is delectably sprightly. Particularly engaging is One charming night from The Fairy Queen, with a pair of recorders. The tenor Howard Crook also has a disarmingly personable vocal line, and his solos, including Beauty, thou scene of love and the sombre Here let my life, are hardly less memorable, with the famous If music be the food of love splendidly sung. But it is when these two voices join together in duet that one's senses are truly ravished, from the opening Let the fifes and the clarions and the similarly light-hearted Sacharissa's grown old to Many, many such days (with its bassoon obbligato), and not forgetting Sound the trumpet. The celebration of the queen, Hail, gracious Gloriana, hail!, makes a well-chosen finale. The simple instrumental accompaniments are managed most stylishly, and this concert cannot be too highly recommended.

Songs Duets for Counter-tenor

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 66253. Bowman, Chance, King's Cons., King – BLOW: Ode, etc. ***

A sparkling collection of solos and duets which show both the composer and these fine artists in inspirational form. The performances are joyous, witty and ravishing in their Purcellian melancholy, with often subtle response to word meanings, and King's accompaniments have plenty of character in their own right. Excellent recording.

Songs, Dialogues Theatre Music

🔑 (BB) * Hyp. Helios CDH 55065. Kirkby, Thomas, Rooley

This nicely planned Hyperion collection has one solo apiece for each of the singers, but otherwise consists of duets, five of them from dramatic works. These near-ideal performances, beautifully sung and sensitively accompanied on the lute, make a delightful record, helped by excellent sound.

Other Collections

Songs: An Evening Hymn; The bashful Thames; The Blessed Virgin's Expostulation; Fairest isle; The fatal hour; Epithalamion (Thrice happy lovers); From silent shades; I attempt from Love's sickness to fly in vain; If love's a sweet passion; If music be the food of love; Man is for the woman made; Music for a while; Now the night is chas'd away; Oh! fair Cedaria; O solitude; The Plaint; Sweeter than roses; They tell us that you mighty powers above; When first Amintas sued for a kiss

🔑 ✿ * BIS SACD 1536. Sampson, Cummings, Kenny, Lasla, Ens.

This disc (entitled 'Victorious Love') is arguably the finest collection of Purcell songs in the catalogue. Moreover, the layout of the recital could hardly be better managed: every song is set off by what has come before and what follows. The opening sequence shows this readily: the atmospheric Sweeter than roses is followed by The fatal hour, then the lively When first Amintas sued for a kiss and the very touching The Plaint. Other highlights are Man is for the woman made, Music for a while (of course) and, later, Fairest isle and the peaceful O solitude. The disc ends with An Evening Hymn, gloriously sung, and one wants to go back and start all over again! Splendid accompaniments from the varied instrumental team led by Laurence Cummings (harpsichord and spinet), beautifully recorded and (if you have SACD facilities) the most judicious use of Surround Sound, to give the voice added presence within a gently glowing acoustic.

(i) Abdelazar: Suite; (i; ii) Cibell for Trumpet & Strings; (i) Dioclesian: Dances from the Masque; Overtures: in D min.; G min.; (i; ii) Sonata for Trumpet & Strings; (i) Staircase Overture; Suite in G, Z.770; Timon of Athens: Curtain Tune. Keyboard works: (iii) New Irish Tune; New Scotch Tune; Sefauchi's Farewell; Suite 6 in D. Songs: (iv; i) Hark How All Things; If Love's Sweet Passion; (iv; iii) If Music Be the Food of Love; Lord What is Man (Divine Hymn); (iv; i) See, Even Night Herself is Here; Thus the Ever Grateful Spring

🔑 * Chan. 0571. (i) Purcell Qt; (ii) Bennett; (iii) Woolley; (iv) Bott

Catherine Bott opens this 72-minute concert with a glorious account of one of Purcell's most famous Shakespearean settings, most artfully decorated: If Music Be the Food of Love; if anything, the later song, See, Even Night Herself is Here, is even more ravishing, given an ethereal introduction by the string group. The instrumental items are most rewarding, notably the attractive unpublished suite of dances in G, while the three overtures are full of plangent character. Robert Woolley's harpsichord contribution is most infectious (the New Irish Tune, incidentally, is Lilliburlero) and he is beautifully recorded, the harpsichord set back in an intimate acoustic and perfectly in scale. There are few better Purcell anthologies than this, and overall the CD gives an ideal introduction to the music of one of the very greatest English composers. The Chandos recording is first class, well up to the standards of the house.

STAGE WORKS AND THEATRE MUSIC

Dido and Aeneas (complete; DVD version)

Ⓝ  NVC Arts DVD BBC 30 51442 882223. Ewing, Evans, Daymond, Burgess, McDougall, Coll. Mus. 90, Hickox (Photography: Joss Barratt)

Purcell's great opera makes its DVD début in this satisfying BBC performance, filmed in believable sets and traditional-style costumes in 1995 at the Hampton Court Palace. Maria Ewing proves a highly dramatic Dido and sings her closing lament very movingly. Karl Daymond makes a good foil as Aeneas and Rebecca Evans is a touchingly sympathetic Belinda. The witches don't overdo their sorcery and Jamie McDougall calls the mariners back to their ship resonantly while they are still enjoying the erotic favours of the women they are now to leave behind. An excellent response from chorus and orchestra, with sympathetic and lively direction from Hickox.

Dido and Aeneas (complete; CD version)

🔑 ❀ Ⓜ * Decca (ADD) 466 387-2. Baker, Herincx, Clark, Sinclair, St Anthony Singers, ECO, Lewis

Ⓝ * Chan. 0757. Connolly, Finley, Crowe, Bardon, Ainsley, Purefoy, OAE, Kenny, Devine

* Erato 4509-98477-2. Gens, Berg, Marin-Degor, Brua, Fouchécourt, Les Arts Florissants, Christie

(BB)  Teldec 4509 91191-2. D. Jones, Harvey, Dean; Bickley, Murgatroyd, St James's Singers & Bar. Players, Bolton

 Chan. 0586. Ewing, Daymond, MacDougall, Evans, Burgess, Bowman, Coll. Mus. 90, Hickox

 Ph. 416 299-2. Norman, McLaughlin, Kern, Allen, Power, ECO and Ch., Leppard

Ⓜ () EMI mono 5 09690-2. Flagstad, Schwarzkopf, Hemsley, Mermaid Theatre Singers & O, Geraint Jones (with earlier (1948) recording of Dido's Lament)

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.111264. Flagstad, Schwarzkopf, Hemsley, Mermaid Theatre Singers & O, Geraint Jones (with 1948 Lament, and arias by Bach and Handel)

Janet Baker's 1962 recording of Dido is a truly great performance. The radiant beauty of the voice is obvious enough, but the opening phrase of When I Am Laid in Earth and its repeat a few bars later is a model of graduated mezza voce. Then with the words 'Remember Me!', delivered in a monotone, she subdues the natural vibrato to produce a white tone of hushed, aching intensity. Anthony Lewis and the ECO (Thurston Dart a model continuo player) produce the crispest and lightest of playing, which never sounds rushed. Herincx is a rather gruff Aeneas, but the only serious blemish is Monica Sinclair's Sorceress. She overcharacterizes in a way that is quite out of keeping with the rest of the production. Like most vintage Oiseau-Lyre recordings, this was beautifully engineered, and it is a welcome reissue on the Decca Legends label.

The outstanding mezzo Sarah Connolly is central to the success of this fine new Chandos version of Purcell's operatic masterpiece, with the period instrumentalists of the OAE accompanying, led by the violinist Margaret Faultless and with Elizabeth Kenny and Steven Devine directing. Connolly's characterization is deeply moving, with fine tonal contrasts in Dido's Lament. Gerald Finley too makes the most of the limited role of Aeneas with highly expressive singing. One young singer to note is Lucy Crowe as Belinda, with John Mark Ainsley as the Sailor, making up a cast with no weak link. First-rate recording, finely balanced to an apt scale.

On Erato the scale is intimate, with one instrument per part, and one voice per part in choruses, yet Christie cunningly varies the pace to intensify the drama. Though speeds are generally fast, he points an extreme contrast in Dido's two big arias, giving them full expressiveness at measured speeds. In the final exchanges between Dido and Aeneas the hastening speed of the recitative directly reflects the mounting tensions. What then sets this above other period performances is the tragic depth conveyed by Veronique Gens in Dido's great Lament, taken very slowly, with the voice drained and agonized in a way that Janet Baker supremely achieved. The young Canadian baritone, Nathan Berg, dark and heroic of tone, is outstanding as Aeneas.

Ivor Bolton and the St James's Singers and Players present another period performance, intimately scaled, which avoids the snags of earlier versions, with Della Jones

as Dido giving one of her finest recorded performances yet. She has a weightier mezzo than her rivals in other period performances, yet her Dido's lament is the more moving when she is restrained over expressive gestures, keeping a tender simplicity. There is no weak link, with Peter Harvey as Aeneas, Susan Bickley as a clear-toned Sorceress, Donna Dean as a characterful Belinda, and Andrew Murgatroyd as the Sailor, a tenor who plays no stylistic tricks. Setting the seal on the performance's success, the choir is among the freshest and liveliest, and the use of the guitar continuo, as well as brief guitar interludes (suggested by the original libretto), enhances the happy intimacy of the presentation. Moreover, this reissue is very reasonably priced.

Richard Hickox's version was linked to a striking television presentation revolving round the magnetically characterful portrayal of the central role by Maria Ewing. In the event her performance, as recorded, is both distinctive and stylish. Combined with Hickox's lively direction, unmarred by intrusive reallocation of voices, it makes an impressive version, with Karl Daymond making Aeneas a more complex character than usual, with Rebecca Evans a radiant Belinda, matching Ewing in emotional intensity, and with Sally Burgess a characterful, unexaggerated Sorceress. Add the excellent contributions of James Bowman and Jamie MacDougall, and it makes a strong contender, certainly for admirers of Maria Ewing.

The classic (1952) EMI recording now arrives as one of EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century', given a new transfer which, while not bringing stereo, gives a clear and refined yet full sound to voices and orchestra alike, and EMI have added as a bonus Flagstad's earlier (1948) recording of Dido's Lament. The recording also emerges with striking freshness in Mark Obert-Thorn's new Naxos transfer, if not sounding quite as fine as in the latest EMI remastering. Flagstad's magnificent portrayal of Dido ranks alongside that of Janet Baker, and she scales her voice down superbly in her noble reading which brings beautiful shading and masterly control of breath and tone, so that the famous Lament touches the listener deeply. Schwarzkopf is brightly characterful as Belinda, and though Thomas Hemsley is not ideally sweet-toned as Aeneas, he sings very intelligently. For a bonus we are offered three extra items from Flagstad: her earlier (1948) recording of Dido's Lament, Handel's Ombra mai fu and Erbarme dich from the St Matthew Passion. This must be recommended alongside the EMI version, for it is more than worth its modest cost.

Authenticists should keep away, but the security and dark intensity of Jessye Norman's singing make for a memorable performance, heightened in the recitatives by the equally commanding singing of Thomas Allen as Aeneas. The range of expression is very wide – with Norman producing an agonized whisper in the recitative just before Dido's Lament. Marie McLaughlin is a pure-toned Belinda, Patrick Power a heady-toned Sailor, singing his song in a West Country accent, while Patricia Kern's performance as the Sorceress uses conventionally sinister expression. Leppard's direction is relatively plain and direct, with some slow speeds for choruses. Excellent recording.

(i) Dido and Aeneas (complete); A Midsummer Night's Dream: Suite. Chaconne

 Lyrichord LEMS 8057. Baird, Bentch, Lauren Brown, Ama Deus Bar. Ens., Radu

Julianne Baird's voice is just right for Dido and she sings movingly, with fine support from the chorus. Her supporting cast is excellent. Timothy Bentch is an appealingly warm Aeneas, Andrea Lauren Brown a fresh-voiced, pert Belinda, Tatyana Rashkovsky a vivid Witch (though with a wide vibrato) and Dennis Kalup a personably nautical Sailor. The Ama Deus Baroque Ensemble is here a string quintet plus continuo, so the whole performance is in scale, and they accompany very stylishly. This is not a first choice, but it is a considerable one and the bonus is a generous suite from A Midsummer Night's Dream (9 movements) plus the famous Chaconne, taken briskly to make a suitable close after the Hornpipe and Dance of the Fairies. Good, well-balanced recording.

(i) Dido and Aeneas (arr. Britten/I. Holst); (ii) The Fairy Queen (adapted Britten)

Ⓑ  Double Decca (ADD) 468 561-2 (2). (i) Baker, Pears, Burrowes, Reynolds, Lott, Palmer, Hodgson, Tear, L. Op. Ch., Aldeburgh Fest. Strings, Bedford; (ii) Vyvyan, Bowman, Pears, Wells, Partridge, Shirley-Quirk, Brannigan, Amb. Op. Ch., ECO, Britten, Ledger (harpsichord)

Dame Janet Baker's 1975 portrait of Dido is even richer than before, with more daring tonal colouring, and challengingly slow tempi for the two big arias. Many will prefer the heartfelt spontaneity of her youthful performance under Anthony Lewis, but the richer, more modern Kingsway Hall recording adds to the vividness of the experience. With Norma Burrowes a touchingly youthful Belinda, with Peter Pears using Lieder style in the unexpected role (for him) of Aeneas, with Anna Reynolds an admirable Sorceress, there is hardly a weak link.

Britten's edition of The Fairy Queen grouped Purcell's music into four sections, Oberon's Birthday, Night and Silence, The Sweet Passion and Epithalamium. This version is beautifully conveyed in the playing, the singing and the recording. Philip Ledger's imaginative harpsichord continuo is placed too far to one side, but otherwise the sound can hardly be faulted. The cast is consistently satisfying, with Peter Pears and Jennifer Vyvyan surviving from an earlier 'complete' mono recording directed by Anthony Lewis. At Double Decca price this is well worth exploring.

Dioclesian; Timon of Athens (masque)

 Chan. 0569/70. Pierard, Bowman, Ainsley, George, Coll. Mus. 90, Hickox

Dioclesian; Timon of Athens (masques only)

 Chan. 0568. (as above)

Richard Hickox on Chandos offers the apt coupling of Dioclesian and Timon of Athens, both sets of theatre music involving masques. Hickox takes a light view, at times detached, often adopting fast speeds and using on balance a consistent team of soloists, including in smaller roles such outstanding younger singers as Ian Bostridge and Nathan Berg. On the other hand, he does not include the overture to Timon. The single Chandos CD contains the masque music only.

Dioclesian: Overture excerpts

🔑 Ⓜ  DHM/BMG 82876 60157-2. Argenta, Chance, Freiburg Bar. O, Von der Goltz – HANDEL: Concerto grosso, Op. 6/6 etc. ***

Those not wanting the entire masque shold be well satisfied with this overture and set of songs and dances, presented with great zest by the superb Freiburg Baroque Orchestra, with excellent soloists in Michael Chance and Nancy Argenta. The Chaconne is beautfully played and the Second Music, which ends the selection, is particularly lively. Excellent couplings and first-class recording make this a highly recommendable reissue.

The Fairy Queen (complete; DVD version)

 Arthaus DVD 100 200. Kenny, Randle, Rice, Van Allan, ENO Ch. & O, Kok (Dir: David Pountney)

Recorded live at the Coliseum in London in 1995, this DVD ENO production of The Fairy Queen, conducted by Nicholas Kok, turns an entertainment which can, under modern conditions, seem cumbersome into a sparkling fantasy, thanks to the brilliant stage direction of David Pountney and choreography of Quinny Sacks. The sequence of masques is treated as a series of circus turns, and thanks also to the fantastic costumes of Dunya Ramicova the atmosphere of the circus is never far away, helping to hold together an episodic sequence of scenes, originally designed to back up a garbled version of Shakespeare's A Midsummer Night's Dream.

The result is as much a surreal ballet as an opera, with Nicholas Kok drawing stylish playing from the ENO Orchestra, echoing period practice, using a realization prepared by Clifford Bartlett. So the scene of the Drunken Poet proves genuinely funny, with Jonathan Best (identified only in the final credits on film) doing a jolly imitation of a 1950s poet with scruffy sports jacket and pullover.

By contrast Titania – Yvonne Kenny at her finest – and Oberon – the exotic Thomas Randle – stand out the more sharply as otherworldly figures thanks to their glamorous costumes. More equivocal is the presentation of Puck by Simon Rice, lively as he is. A fun entertainment, as unstuffy a presentation of Purcell's problematic masterpiece as could be, vividly filmed and recorded.

The Fairy Queen (complete; CD versions)

🔑 Ⓜ * DG Al Fresco 477 6733 (2). Harrhy, J. Smith, Nelson, Priday, Penrose, Stafford, Evans, Hill, Varcoe, Thomas, Monteverdi Ch., E. Bar. Sol., Gardiner

 HM HMC 901308/9. Argenta, Dawson, Daniels, Loonen, Correas, Les Arts Florissants, Christie

(BB)  Naxos 8.550660-1 (2). Atherton, Amps, Davidson & Soloists, Scholars Bar. Ens., Van Asch

Gardiner's CD performance is a delight from beginning to end, for, though authenticity and completeness reign, scholarship is worn lightly and the result is consistently exhilarating, with no longueurs whatever. The fresh-toned soloists are first rate, while Gardiner's regular choir and orchestra excel themselves, with Purcell's sense of fantasy brought out in each succeeding number. Beautifully clear and well-balanced recording. Reissued at mid-price on DG's Al Fresco label.

William Christie uses a far bigger team of both singers and instrumentalists than Gardiner, allowing a wider range of colours. The bite of the performance is increased by the relative dryness of the recorded sound. Among Christie's soloists, Nancy Argenta and Lynne Dawson are outstanding, and the whole team is a strong one. The number of singers in solo roles allows them to be used together as chorus too – an authentic 17th-century practice. This makes a vigorous and refreshing alternative to the fine Gardiner set; but the Harmonia Mundi booklet is inadequate.

For Naxos at bargain price the Scholars Baroque Ensemble offer an outstanding version, stylishly presented with a refreshing vigour in its scholarly approach. The recording too is exceptionally bright and immediate, regularly giving the illusion of a dramatic entertainment on stage. Logically this version, unlike previous ones, presents the purely instrumental numbers designed as interludes for A Midsummer Night's Dream as an appendix. The humour of the scene of the Drunken Poet is touched on delightfully without exaggeration, thanks to David van Asch, as is the Dialogue between Corydon and Mopsa, though the countertenor, Angus Davidson, has a flutter in the voice that the recording exaggerates. Outstanding among the sopranos are Diane Atherton, singing most beautifully in the Night solo of Act II, and Kym Amps, not only bright and agile in Hark! The Ech'ing Air but making the plaint, O Ever Let Me Weep, of Act V into the emotional high-point of the whole performance. Instrumental playing on period instruments is first rate, and the chorus sings consistently with bright, incisive attack.

The Indian Queen (complete; with Daniel Purcell (c. 1661–1717): The Masque of Hymen)

Ⓜ  Decca 475 052-2. Kirkby, Bott, Ainsley, D. Thomas, Finley, Williams, AAM Ch. & O, Hogwood

Hogwood's recording of Purcell's fourth and last semi-opera, left incomplete at his death, was the first to include the Wedding cantata which the composer's brother, Daniel, wrote to round off the entertainment. It makes an attractive if inconsistent addition to a score which contains vintage Purcell inspirations, notably the solo with chorus, All Dismal Sounds, which was the last part of the work completed by Purcell himself. The elaborate chromatics in that confirm the continuing vigour of Purcell's genius to the end. With John Mark Ainsley, Emma Kirkby and Catherine Bott all making outstanding solo contributions, and with clean-cut period playing from the orchestra, this performance on a relatively grand scale is consistently convincing, by turns lively and moving.

King Arthur (complete)

🔑 * Erato 4509 98535-2 (2). Gens, McFadden, Padmore, Best, Salomaa, Les Arts Florissants, Christie

Ⓜ  Erato 4509 96552-2 (2). J. Smith, Fischer, Priday, Ross, Stafford, Elliot, Varcoe, Monteverdi Ch., E. Bar. Sol., Gardiner

Christie brings out the jollity behind much of the piece. Even the pomposo manner of some of the Act Tunes (or interludes) has fun in it, with the panoply of the ceremonial music swaggering along genially. Few will resist the jollity of Your Hay it is Mow'd when the chorus even includes 'gentlemen of the orchestra' in the last verse. Christie's soloists are generally warmer and weightier than Pinnock's, notably Véronique Gens as Venus, sustaining Christie's exceptionally slow speed for Fairest Isle. Otherwise speeds are generally on the fast side, with Shepherd, Shepherd, Cease Decoying deliciously light and brisk. The vigour of Purcell's inspiration in this semi-opera has never been more winningly conveyed in a period performance on disc.

Gardiner's solutions to the textual problems carry complete conviction, as for example his placing of the superb Chaconne in F at the end instead of the start. Solo singing for the most part is excellent, with Stephen Varcoe outstanding among the men. Fairest Isle is treated very gently, with Gill Ross, boyish of tone, reserved just for that number. Throughout, the chorus is characteristically fresh and vigorous, and the instrumentalists beautifully marry authentic technique to pure, unabrasive sounds.

Theatre Music (collection)

Disc 1: Abdelazar: Overture & Suite; Distressed Innocence: Overture & Suite; The Gordian Knot Untied: Overture & Suite; The Married Beau: Overture & Suite; Sir Anthony Love: Overture & Suite

Disc 2: Bonduca: Overture & Suite; Circe: Suite; The Old Bachelor: Overture & Suite; The Virtuous Wife: Overture & Suite

Disc 3: Amphitryon: Overture & Suite; Overture in G min.; Don Quixote: Suite

Disc 4: Overture in G min; The Double Dealer: Overture & Suite; Henry II, King of England: In Vain, 'Gainst Love, in Vain I Strove; The Richmond Heiress: Behold the Man; The Rival Sisters: Overture; 3 Songs; Tyrannic Love: Hark my Damilcar! (duet); Ah! How Sweet it is to Love; Theodosius (excerpts)

Disc 5: Overture in D min; The Wives' Excuse (excerpts and other excerpts)

Disc 6: Chacony; Pavans 1-5; Trio Sonata for Violin, Viola de Gamba & Organ (and other extracts)

Ⓑ  Decca 475 529-2 (6). Kirkby, Nelson, Lane, Roberts, Lloyd, Bowman, Hill, Covey-Crump, Elliott, Byers, Bamber, Pike, Thomas, Keyte, Shaw, George, Taverner Ch., AAM, Hogwood

Most of the music Purcell wrote for the theatre is relatively little heard and much of the music comes up with striking freshness in these performances using authentic instruments. As well as the charming dances and more ambitious overtures, as the series proceeds we are offered more extended scenas with soloists and chorus, of which the nine excerpts from Theodosius, an early score (1680), are a particularly entertaining example. Before that, on Disc 3 we have already had the highly inventive Overture and Incidental Music for Don Quixote, with much enchanting singing from both the soprano soloists, Emma Kirkby and Judith Nelson. Disc 4 also includes a delightful duet from The Richmond Heiress, representing a flirtation in music. There are other attractive duets elsewhere, for instance the nautical Blow, Blow, Boreas, Blow from Sir Barnaby Whigg, which could fit admirably into HMS Pinafore (Rogers Covey-Crump and David Thomas) and the jovial As Soon as the Chaos from The Marriage-hater Match'd. In Ah Me! to Many Deaths from Regulus, Judith Nelson is at her most eloquent while, earlier on Disc 5, she sings charmingly the familiar Nymphs and Shepherds, which comes from The Libertine, a particularly fine score with imaginative use of the brass. The equally famous Music for a While, beautifully sung by James Bowman, derives from Oedipus. The last disc also includes a splendidly boisterous Quartet from The Canterbury Guests. The collection is appropriately rounded off by members of the Academy giving first-class performances of some of Purcell's instrumental music, ending with the famous Chacony. The discs are re-released at bargain price, but the set is let down by the absence of texts.

Theatre Music, Vol. 1: from Amphitryon or The Two Sosias; Circe; The Gordian Knot Unty'd; Sir Barnaby Whigg: Blow, Boreas, Blow

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.570149. Soloists, Aradia Ens., Mallon

Naxos are now beginning their own series of collections of Purcell's theatre music – instrumental pieces, songs and choruses that would either have been incorporated into the action of a play or performed as preludes or interludes. The exception here is the jolly sea-song from Sir Barnaby Whigg for tenor and bass, the only single piece in the score! We are comparatively familiar with The Gordian Knot Unty'd, and the excerpts here are the highlight of the disc, but the suites from Amphitryon (25 minutes) and Circe (13 minutes) are little known, and are most welcome. The featured soloists are excellent, and so is the playing of the Aradia Ensemble under Kevin Mallon.

QUILTER, Roger (1877–1953)

A Children's Overture; Country Pieces; 3 English Dances; As You Like It: Suite; The Rake: Suite; Where the Rainbow Ends: Suite

(*) Marco 8.223444. Slovak RSO (Bratislava), Leaper

Adrian Leaper plays the enchanting Children's Overture with the lightest touch, and the transparency of the recording ensures that all the woodwind detail comes through nicely, even if his performance could ideally have had a shade more momentum. One might also have wished for a bigger band with a more opulent string sheen, but the texture here well suits the suites of incidental music, an agreeable mixture of the styles of Edward German (especially the Country Dance from As You Like It), Eric Coates and sub-Elgar of the Nursery Suites. All this nicely scored and amiably tuneful music is freshly and spontaneously presented and the recording is nicely resonant.

RACHMANINOV, Sergei
(1873–1943)

'The Harvest of Sorrow': Portrait of the composer by Tony Palmer, with commentary spoken by Sir John Gielgud

 Warner DVD 2564-69883 (Producer Mike Bluett)

The Mariinsky Orchestra under Valery Gergiev play excerpts from two of the operas, Aleko and The Miserly Knight, along with the First Symphony and Isle of the Dead. Splendid though they are, it is the archival material of Rachmaninov in the 1930s in his home in Switzerland that makes this an indispensable acquisition, as is Mikhail Pletnev playing some of the Corelli Variations on Rachmaninov's own piano at Senar, his Swiss villa. Eminently dispensable is the pedestrian, charactererless playing of the glamorous-looking Valentina Igoshina in three of the best-known preludes. Rachmaninov's grandson Alexander is a memorable and dignified participant, who brings the composer closer to us. The overall effect is moving.

Caprice bohémien, Op. 12; The Isle of the Dead, Op. 29; Prince Rostislav; The Rock, Op. 7; Scherzo in D min.

 Chan. 10104. Russian State SO, Polyansky

The tone-poem, Prince Rostislav, is a rarity. The Scherzo is Rachmaninov's earliest orchestral score, dating from 1888, when he was 15, while The Isle of the Dead is one of his greatest. In the last Polyansky is certainly competitive and has this music in his blood. The recording is perhaps a bit too reverberant, but no reader wanting this repertoire should be put off, for the performances are all vivid.

Piano Concertos: (i; ii) _1 in F sharp min., Op. 1;_ (i; iii) _2 in C min., Op. 18_ (2 versions); (i; ii) _3 in D min., Op. 30; 4 in G min., Op. 40;_ (i; iii) _Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini, Op. 43;_ (iv) _Isle of the Dead, Op. 29; Symphony 3 in A min., Op. 44; Vocalise, Op. 34/14;_ (v) piano (4 hands) _Polka Italienne;_ (solo piano) _Barcarolle, Op. 10/2; Daisies_ (song transcription); _Etudes-tableaux, Op. 33/2 & 7; Op. 39/6; Humoresque, Op. 10/3; Lilacs_ (song transcription; 2 versions); _Mélodie, Op. 3/3; Moment musical, Op. 16/2; Oriental Sketch; Polichinelle, Op. 3/4; Polka de W. R._ (3 versions); _Preludes: in C sharp min., Op. 3/2_ (3 versions); _in G min.; in G flat, Op. 23/5 & 10; in E, G, F min., F, G sharp, Op. 32/3, 5–7, 12; Serenade, Op. 3/5_ (2 versions)

Other Performances: (vi) BEETHOVEN: Violin Sonata 8, Op. 30/3. SCHUBERT: Violin Sonata in A, D.574. GRIEG: Violin Sonata, Op. 45. BACH: Partita 4, BWV 828: Sarabande. BEETHOVEN: 32 Variations in C min. BORODIN: Scherzo in A flat. CHOPIN: Ballade 3; Mazurkas, Op. 63/3; Op. 68/2; Nocturnes, Op. 9/2; Op. 15/2; Scherzo 3; Sonata 2 (Funeral March); Waltzes, Op. 18; Op. 34/3; Op. 42; Op. 64/1 (2 versions); Op. 64/2; Op. 64/3 (2 versions); Op. 60/2; Op. 70/1; in E min., Op. posth.; Ballade 3. DAQUIN: Le coucou. DEBUSSY: Children's Corner: Dr Gradus ad Parnassam; Golliwog's Cakewalk. DOHNÁNYI: Etude, Op. 28/6. GLUCK: Orfeo ed Euridice: Mélodie. GRIEG: Lyric Pieces: Waltz; Elfin Dance. HANDEL: Suite 5: Air & Variations (Harmonious Blacksmith). HENSELT: Etude (Si oiseau étais), Op. 2/6. LISZT: Concert Paraphrases: Chopin: Polish Songs (Return home; The maiden's wish); Schubert: Das Wandern; Serenade; Concert Study: Gnomenreigen; Hungarian Rhapsody 3. MENDELSSOHN: Song without Words: Spinning Song, Op. 67 (2 versions); Etudes, 104b/2–3. MOSZKOWSKI: Etude (La jongleuse), Op. 52/4. MOZART: Sonata in A, K.331: Theme and Variations; Rondo alla Turca. PADEREWSKI: Minuet, Op. 14/1. SAINT-SAËNS: Le Cygne (arr. Siloti). D. SCARLATTI: Pastorale (arr. Tausig). SCRIABIN: Prelude, Op. 11/8. SCHUBERT: Impromptu in A flat, Op. 90/4. SCHUMANN: Carnaval, Op. 9; Der Kontrabandiste (arr. Tausig). JOHANN STRAUSS JR: One Lives but Once (arr. Tausig). TCHAIKOVSKY: Humoresque, Op. 10/2; The Seasons: November: Troika (2 versions); Waltz, Op. 40/8. Piano Transcriptions: BACH (Violin) Partita 3, BWV 1003: Preludio; Gavotte & Gigue. BEETHOVEN: Ruins of Athens: Turkish March. BIZET: L'Arlésienne: Minuet. KREISLER: Liebesfreud (3 versions). MENDELSSOHN: A Midsummer Night's Dream: Scherzo. MUSSORGSKY: Gopak. RIMSKY-KORSAKOV: Flight of the Bumblebee. SCHUBERT: Wohin? TCHAIKOVSKY: Lullaby, Op. 16/1. (viii) TRAD.: Powder and Paint

🔑 ✿ Ⓑ * RCA mono 82876 67892-2 (10). Composer; (i) with Phd. O; (ii) Ormandy; (iii) Stokowski; (iv) cond. composer; with (v) Natalie Rachmaninov; (vi) Kreisler; (vii) Nadejda Plevotskaya

This reissued RCA collection originally appeared for the 50th anniversary of the composer's death, and it encompasses all the recordings Rachmaninov made from 1919, the time he arrived in America, until 1942, the year before his death. These include all four of his Piano Concertos (3 irritatingly cut) as well as the Paganini Rhapsody, the Third Symphony and the tone-poem, The Isle of the Dead (also with cuts). The recordings were of high quality, the piano tone is firm and the orchestral sound full, if acoustically dry. You will not be disappointed with Stokowski's Philadelphia strings in the famous 18th variation of the Rhapsody. The Symphony too, unsurpassed as a performance, sounds splendid, the Philadelphia strings again covering themselves with glory.

When one turns to the solo performances, the acoustic recordings made between 1920 and 1925 are on balance the most cherishable of all, with the sound again astonishingly full and the readings sparkling and vivid. That is true even of the 1924 recording of Piano Concerto 2, here for the very first time issued complete. As in the classic electrical recording of five years later, he is partnered by Stokowski and the Philadelphia Orchestra, but the earlier one had a more volatile quality, with the fingerwork remarkably clear.

Interpreting Chopin, Rachmaninov was also at his freshest and most imaginative in the early recordings, yet many of the items here bear witness to the claim often made that he was the greatest Golden Age pianist of all. The delicacy of his playing in Daquin's little piece, Le coucou, shows how he was able to scale down his block-busting virtuosity, and though in Beethoven's 32 Variations in C minor he omitted half a dozen variations so as to fit the piece on two 78 sides, it is full of flair.

There is magic too in the collaboration with Fritz Kreisler, not just in Beethoven, but also in the Grieg and Schumann Sonatas, and in the private recordings, when he accompanies a gypsy singer in a traditional Russian song or plays a piano duet, the Polka Italienne, with his wife Natalie. Transfers are commendably clean and truthful, and the ten discs come in a box with good documentation.

Piano Concertos 1–4

🔑 Ⓑ * Double Decca (ADD) 444 839-2 (2). Ashkenazy, LSO, Previn

(BB)  EMI 5 73765-2 (3). Rudy, St Petersburg PO, Jansons – TCHAIKOVSKY: Piano Concerto 1 ***

Piano Concertos (i) 1 in F sharp min.; (ii) 2 in C min.; (iii) 3 in D min.; (i) 4 in G min.; (ii) Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini, Op. 43

🔑 (*) Hyp. CDA 67501/2 (2). Hough, Dallas SO, Litton (Concertos 2 and 3 are available separately on CDA 67649)

Ⓜ  Chan. 7114 (2) Wild, RPO, Horenstein

(i) Piano Concertos 1–4; Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini; Variations on a Theme of Chopin; Variations on a theme of Corelli

🔑 ✿ Ⓑ * Warner 2564 63675-2 (3) Lugansky (i) with CBSO, Oramo

It is not easy to think of any recent CDs of these marvellous concertos that surpass these by Nicolai Lugansky except those by Stephen Hough. Lugansky's account of the First is the finest since Pletnev's Virgin CD from the early 1990s, and the Third is even more impressive than his earlier version, coupled with the Fourth (Vanguard 99091). The Second, too, ranks alongside Ashkenazy's outstanding version. The Variations are hardly less impressive. A superb bargain set.

The Double Decca set of the four Concertos is admirable, fully capturing the Kingsway Hall ambient warmth yet not lacking brilliance and clarity, and with the Third Concerto better focused than when it first appeared on LP. The vintage 1972 performances, with their understanding partnership between Ashkenazy and Previn, have achieved classic status. The Second Concerto's slow movement is particularly beautiful; it is almost matched by the close of the first movement of the Third and the restrained passion of the opening of the following Adagio. The individuality and imagination of the solo playing throughout, combined with the poetic feeling of Previn's accompaniments and the ever-persuasive response of the LSO, provide special rewards. An outstanding bargain in every way.

Recorded live in Dallas, Stephen Hough's prize-winning Rachmaninov concertos set offers magnetic performances that reflect the thoughtfulness and care with which this masterly pianist approaches even the most frequently performed works. So the opening of the Second Concerto, taken much faster than usual but at a very steady pace, is quite different from most interpretations, firmly based on indications in the score rather than performing tradition, and that is typical of Hough's refreshing approach to each of these works. With Andrew Litton equally a devotee of the composer, these are unique readings, marred only slightly by rather clangorous piano-tone and orchestral textures that are far less detailed than in many rival versions.

Mikhail Rudy and the St Petersburg Philharmonic under Mariss Jansons consistently demonstrate that poetry and refinement can offer exceptionally rewarding results in works which emerge here as far more than conventional warhorses. There is plenty to admire and relish. The results are fresh and unhackneyed from first to last, with Rudy's light, clean articulation adding sparkle. Not that he lacks weight, and the strong support of Jansons and the St Petersburg Philharmonic intensifies the idiomatic warmth, with mystery alongside passion in Rachmaninov's writing. This account of the Fourth Concerto is especially valuable in offering the original, uncut version of the finale, as well as the usual revised text.

The Earl Wild set with Horenstein was recorded at the Kingsway Hall in 1965. They worked marvellously together, with Horenstein producing an unexpected degree of romantic ardour from the orchestra. Earl Wild's technique is prodigious and sometimes (as in the first movement of the Fourth Concerto) he almost lets it run away with him. In terms of bravura, the Third Concerto is in the Horowitz class. However, he makes the three cuts Rachmaninov sanctioned, one in the second movement and two in the third, a total of 55 bars. All in all, this is a first-class and very rewarding set, and the sumptuousness of the sound belies the age of the recording.

(i) Piano Concertos 1–4; Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini, Op. 43; (ii) (Music for 2 pianos): Suites 1–2, Opp. 5 & 17; Russian Rhapsody; Symphonic Dances, Op. 45. Solo piano: Etudes-tableaux, Opp. 33 & 39; 24 Preludes (complete); Piano Sonata 2 in B flat min., Op. 36; Variations on a Theme by Corelli, Op. 42

🔑 Ⓑ  Decca (ADD/DDD) 455 234-2 (6). Ashkenazy; (i) LSO, Previn; (ii) with Previn (piano)

(i) Piano Concertos 1–4; Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini; Piano Sonata 2 in B flat, Op. 36; Variations on a Theme of Corelli, Op. 42

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca Trio (ADD) 473 251-2 (3). Ashkenazy, (i) with LSO, Previn

All these performances are very distinguished indeed. The vintage Decca recordings (made over a decade and a half between 1971 and 1986, mostly in the Kingsway Hall, but also at Walthamstow and All Saints', Petersham) are fully worthy of the quality of the music-making. Ashkenazy's readings, with Previn an admirable partner (whether conducting or at the keyboard), are unsurpassed on CD, except by the composer's own historic versions.

Piano Concertos 1 in F sharp, Op. 1; 2 in C min., Op. 16

🔑 * DG 459 6432. Zimerman, Boston SO, Ozawa

Ⓜ * EMI 518184-2. Andsnes, BPO, Pappano

Krystian Zimerman is an aristocrat among aristocrats of the piano and his playing is never less than awesome. Of course, like everything Zimerman does, they are touched by distinction, but for all the admiration they inspire, there is just a trace of self-possession about them: one would welcome greater emotional abandon. But this is playing at an exalted level and many readers may not respond in this way – and most critics we have read certainly have not. Good orchestral support from Ozawa and the Boston Orchestra, and very vivid and present recording.

Commanding and sensitive accounts of both concertos which find the great Norwegian pianist at his subtle best. Pappano and the Berlin Philharmonic have plenty of fire. Very good sound, too. A bargain.

Piano Concertos (i) 1; (ii; iii) 2; (ii; iv) Rhapsody on a Theme of Paginini

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.110676. Moiseiwitsch; with (i) Philh. O, Sargent; (ii) RLPO; cond. (iii) Goehr; or (iv) Cameron

Rachmaninov used to say that his friend Moiseiwitsch was an even finer interpreter of some of his works than himself, and from this vintage collection one can understand why. Moiseiwitsch recorded 2 in 1937 for HMV on four budget-label 78s, undercutting the composer's classic version by half in price, yet the performance is if anything more electrifying. The sound is limited, with the piano close, but in Ward Marston's masterly transfer one quickly forgets the limitations, as one does in the other pre-war recording of the Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini, a sparkling performance, again urgent in its expression, with the celebrated eighteenth variation all the warmer for going at a flowing speed. The rarity is the post-war, 1948 account of 1, in which the sound is full and clear with Moiseiwitsch still at the peak of his form, both passionate and sparkling, powerful and poetic.

Piano Concertos 1; 3

Ⓝ  RCA 7279722. Douglas, Russian State SO, Svetlanov

These are fine performances. Barry Douglas elicits an impressive amount of detail in these scores; he never hurries and his articulation is stupendous. He is helped by first-rate support from both the conductor and orchestra – and by the RCA engineers with the bright and clear, but vivid sound. These are undoubtedly exciting, fresh performances, almost – but not quite – an absolute top recommendation.

Piano Concertos 1; 4 in G min.; Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.550809. Glemser, Polish Nat. RSO, Wit

Bernd Glemser has a boldly impetuous way with Rachmaninov and, with excellent support from the Polish National Radio Orchestra under Antoni Wit, he generates plenty of excitement and expressive fervour in all three works here. Glemser is by no means unimaginative or wanting in poetic feeling, and he gives a very enjoyable account of the more elusive Fourth Concerto.

Piano Concerto 2 in C min., Op. 18

🔑 * Häns. CD 98.932. Ohlsson, ASMF, Marriner – TCHAIKOVSKY: Piano Concerto 1 ***

Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 447 4202. S. Richter, Warsaw PO, Wislocki – TCHAIKOVSKY: Piano Concerto 1 ()

Ohlsson and Marriner combine to give a satisfyingly romantic account of this favourite concerto. The climax of the first movement is broad and very powerful, and the finale, while not lacking brilliance, makes the very most of Rachmaninov's great secondary melody with a gorgeously expansive final presentation. The Adagio is equally persuasive with the reprise tenderly beautiful, rapt in its gentle concentration. The recording is full-bodied and natural and is admirably balanced. If you want a modern, digital recording of this coupling, this Hänssler CD is hard to beat.

With Richter the long opening melody of the first movement is taken abnormally slowly, and it is only the sense of mastery that he conveys in every note which prevents one from complaining. The slow movement too is spacious – with complete justification this time – and the opening of the finale lets the floodgates open the other way, for Richter chooses a hair-raisingly fast Allegro, so this is a reading of vivid contrasts. The sound is very good.

Piano Concertos (i) 2; (ii) 3 (transfers use alternative takes)

🔑 () Biddulph mono LHW 036. (i) Composer, Phd. O, Stokowski; (ii) Horowitz, LSO, Coates

Two classics of the Rachmaninov discography: the 1929 account of the C minor Concerto the composer recorded with the Philadelphia Orchestra, coupled with the first (and in some ways most exciting) of Horowitz's recordings of the Third, made in London the following year with Albert Coates conducting. An electrifying performance. The Biddulph transfers made by Mark Obert Thorn are first-rate and in the C minor, use is made of alternative takes made at the original sessions. An invaluable supplement to RCA's Complete Rachmaninov Edition.

(i) Piano Concerto 2; (ii) Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.550117. Jandó, Budapest SO, Lehel

(i) Piano Concerto 2 in C min., Op. 18; (ii) Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini, Op. 43; Prelude in C sharp min., Op. 3/2

ⒷⒷ () Naxos mono 8.110692. Kapell, Robin Hood Dell O, Philadelphia; (i) Steinberg or (ii) Reiner

Jandó has the full measure of the ebb and flow of Rachmaninov's musical thinking, and the slow movement is romantically expansive and the finale has plenty of dash and ripe, lyrical feeling. The Rhapsody is as good as almost any around. The digital recording is satisfyingly balanced, with a bold piano image and a full, resonant orchestral tapestry.

Kapell's are exceptionally urgent readings, notably in 2, where the first movement gets you off to an electrifying start, pressing on at a far faster speed than usual. Yet there is nothing perfunctory about Kapell's fast speeds, just a demonstration of mastery, both in the Concerto and in the Variations. The Ward Marston transfers are vivid and full, both in the Concerto (1950) and in the Rhapsody (1951). The Prelude, recorded in 1945, is dimmer.

(i) Piano Concertos 2–3; Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini. Preludes: in C sharp min., Op. 3/2; in B flat & G min., Op. 23/2 & 5; in B min. & D flat, Op. 32/10 & 13; Etudes-tableaux, Op. 39/1, 2 & 5

🔑 Ⓑ  Double Decca (ADD) 436 386-2 (2). Ashkenazy, (i) LSO, Previn

This pair of Decca CDs includes outstanding performances of Rachmaninov's three greatest concertante works for piano and orchestra, plus five favourite Preludes and three of the Op. 39 Etudes-tableaux. This is very highly recommendable.

Piano Concerto 3 in D min., Op. 30

🔑 * Ph. 446 673-2. Argerich, Berlin RSO, Chailly – TCHAIKOVSKY: Piano Concerto 1 ****

🔑 Ⓜ (*) RCA SACD (ADD) 82876 67894-2. Van Cliburn, Chicago SO, Hendl – PROKOFIEV: Piano Concerto 3 **(*)

🔑 ⒷⒷ () Naxos mono 8.110696. Horowitz, LSO, Coates – Recital: CHOPIN, DEBUSSY, LISZT, SCARLATTI

🔑 Ⓑ (*) RCA mono 82876 56052-2 (2). Horowitz, RCA Victor SO, Reiner – TCHAIKOVSKY: Piano Concerto 1; Recital: 'Legendary Recordings' ()

🔑 ⒷⒷ () Naxos mono 8.110787. Horowitz, RCA Victor SO, Reiner – BEETHOVEN: Piano Concerto 5 ()

Ⓜ * EMI (ADD) 3 45819-2. Gilels, Paris Conservatoire O, Cluytens – SAINT-SAËNS: Piano Concerto 2; SHOSTAKOVICH: Preludes & Fugues ***

(i) Piano Concerto 3; Elegy, Op. 3/1; Polichinelle; Preludes: in C sharp min., Op. 3/2; in B flat; G min.; E flat, Op. 23/2, 5 & 6; in G; G sharp min., Op. 32/5 & 12

🔑 ✿ * Elan CD 82412. Rodriguez; (i) with Lake Forest SO, McRae

(i) Piano Concerto 3; Piano Sonata 2, Op. 36

Ⓜ  RCA (ADD) 82876 59411-2. Horowitz; (i) NYPO, Ormandy

(i) Piano Concerto 3; (ii) Suite for 2 Pianos 2, Op. 17

Ⓜ  Ph. 464 7322. Argerich; (i) Berlin RSO, Chailly; (ii) Freire

Santiago Rodriguez is Cuban by birth but like Bolet has made his home in the United States. There is no doubt from the opening bars of the Third Concerto that he is a Rachmaninov interpreter of outstanding calibre, whose playing withstands the most exalted comparisons. Indeed, as one plays this disc, one's thoughts turn only to the greatest exponents of this repertoire – Horowitz, Rachmaninov himself and William Kapell. Rodriguez, too, has dazzling virtuosity at his command and also fine musicianship and a rare keyboard authority. He plays the first-movement cadenza (and how!) that Rachmaninov himself favoured rather than the alternative one that came into fashion with Vladimir Ashkenazy. The eight remaining pieces are of the same exalted standard. A most exciting issue.

There are few finer examples of live recording than Martha Argerich's electrifying performance of Rachmaninov's Third Concerto, recorded in Berlin in 1982. Her volatility and dash are entirely at one with the romantic spirit of this music, and her interpretation is so commanding that individual eccentricities seem a natural part of the musical flow. Moreover she plays with great tenderness (well supported by Chailly) in the Adagio and the lyrical theme of the finale. The overall sound-picture satisfyingly demonstrates the skill of the Philips engineering team.

Those not wanting the coupling with Tchaikovsky will find the performance of the Second Suite for two pianos equally exciting. Argerich and Nelson Freire give it a dazzling virtuoso account, rushing the waltzes off their feet (the movement is marked presto but they play it prestissimo). They are as fresh, idiomatic and thoughtful as their Decca rivals (Ashkenazy and Previn – see below) and their performance is thoroughly exhilarating and well recorded too.

The first of the three commercial recordings Horowitz made with Albert Coates of the D minor Concerto comes from 1929 (the others were with Fritz Reiner in 1951 and Ormandy in 1978), and for many collectors it is the finest. (Actually, one is tempted to say that of whichever was the last one you have heard.) However, it is still tremendously impressive and sounds better than ever in this new transfer.

Horowitz's 1951 RCA account with Reiner now reappears, coupled with his earlier (1941) version of the Tchaikovsky First Concerto with Toscanini. The Rachmaninov performance is full of poetry yet, like the Tchaikovsky, it is electrifying in its excitement. In spite of its dated sound its magic comes over, and it is to be preferred to his later performance with Ormandy. The recital added to make a two-disc bargain double is assembled from various individual mono records mainly from the same era, but with a few items from the 1970s and 1980s.

Gilels's 1955 performance of the Third Concerto (miraculously recorded in very satisfactory stereo) can readily be placed alongside Horowitz. Like Horowitz, Gilels plays the simpler first cadenza, yet he still dazzles the ear with his virtuosity, as he does in the thrilling finale, where the climax (with Cluytens moved to an unexpected degree of passion) is overwhelmingly intense. Truly a great performance, and a very acceptable and certainly vivid transfer to CD.

In this remarkable 1958 live Carnegie Hall recording, which is new to CD, Van Cliburn gives one of the very finest accounts of the D minor Concerto on record, and it has much in common with Horowitz's classic 1941 mono version with Reiner. There is the same balance between delicate lyricism and power, the slow movement is ravishingly played, and the peroration has never sounded more exciting in its growth and full flowering at the climax. Alas, the recording leaves much to be desired. The balance is dry and close and the piano fortissimos unflattering.

On Naxos comes the second account Horowitz made of the D minor Concerto and, like its coupling, it remains one of the classics of the gramophone. Horowitz was unrivalled in this concerto. It is among the most classical of readings and Reiner is a totally like-minded partner. Good new transfers.

In 1978 Horowitz re-recorded the D minor Piano Concerto in stereo with Ormandy and the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, this time at a live concert in Carnegie Hall, but certain portions of the work were remade following the concert. The result is that the sound is not completely stable; at times it seems to recede. The Sonata comes from two live recitals in 1980 and is also pretty electrifying.

(i) Piano Concerto 3 in D min; (ii) The Isle of the Dead; Symphonic Dances; (iii) Symphony 2 in E min.

Ⓝ Ⓑ  EMI 2-CD 2 37616-2. (i) Andsnes, Oslo PO, Berglund; (ii) LSO, Previn; (iii) St Petersburg PO, Jansons

Leif Ove Andsnes offers cultivated playing in the D minor Concerto, bringing finesse and a refined musicianship to the work, and Berglund is very supportive. Previn's accounts of The Isle of the Dead and the Symphonic Dances with the LSO have stood the test of time and are still among the strongest and most atmospheric versions. Jansons's 1993 account of the E minor Symphony is also both exciting and lyrically gripping. Altogether a rewarding compilation, all very well recorded.

Piano Concerto 4 in G min., Op. 40

🔑 ❁ Ⓜ * EMI (ADD) 5 67238-2. Michelangeli, Philh. O, Gracis – RAVEL: Piano Concerto in G **** ❁

There are few records in the catalogue more worthy of being described as a 'Great Recording of the Century' than Michelangeli's superb coupling of Rachmaninov and Ravel. It has been with us for more than four decades and time has not diminished its unique appeal from the commanding opening onwards. The current remastering has been expertly managed and at mid-price it should be included in even the most modest collection.

The Isle of the Dead, Op. 29

 BBC 4226-2. USSR State SO, Svetlanov – SHOSTAKOVICH: Symphony 5 ***

Ⓝ ((*)) Australian Decca Eloquence mono 480 0044 (2). Paris Conservatoire O, Ansermet – SIBELIUS: Symphonies 2 & 4 **(*)

The great Russian conductor made an impressive recording of Rachmaninov's masterpiece for Melodiya in the 1960s, but the present mesmeric and powerful account comes from 1968, the year when Svetlanov brought his orchestra to the Proms. It comes with a similarly high-powered account of the Shostakovich Fifth Symphony.

Rachmaninov's masterful The Isle of the Dead is used as a rather curious coupling for Sibelius. This mono account, with the Paris Conservatoire Orchestra, is full of personality and character, the mono sound warm and detailed so that it almost gives the effect of being a stereo recording.

The Isle of the Dead, Op. 29; Symphonic Dances, Op. 45

🔑 Ⓜ  Decca 430 733-2. Concg. O, Ashkenazy

Ashkenazy's is a superb coupling, rich and powerful in playing and interpretation, The Isle of the Dead relentless in its ominous build-up, while the Symphonic Dances have extra darkness and intensity too. The splendid digital recording highlights both the passion and the fine precision of the playing.

Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini (DVD version)

() EMI mono DVD DVB 3 101989. Janis, O Philharmonique de l'ORTF, Froment – PROKOFIEV: Piano Concerto 3 ()

From Byron Janis, we hear and see (in black and white) playing of a very special order, and not just virtuosity either (although there is plenty of that). But Janis and Froment between them reveal much detail that often passes by unnoticed, and they do not fall short in the passionate 18th variation either. The snag is that the string-tone is thin and meagre: it is curious to watch a large orchestra produce tone which is entirely lacking in voluptuousness. But the recording of the piano is fully acceptable.

Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini (CD versions)

🔑 Ⓜ  RCA (ADD) 09026 68886-2. Rubinstein, Chicago SO, Reiner – CHOPIN: Andante spianato & Grand polonaise; FALLA: Nights in the Gardens of Spain ***

Rubinstein's playing is dazzling and it continually delights with its poetic sensibility and flair. Reiner is with him in every bar, orchestral detail persuasively delineated, and the warm Chicago acoustic ensures a glorious blossoming of string-tone at the Eighteenth. The recording, with the piano forward but not unattractively so, sounds little short of ideal in Richard Mohr's otherwise splendid new remastering.

Symphonic Dances, Op. 45

 Warner 2564 62050-2. St Petersburg PO, Temirkanov – MUSSORGSKY: Songs & Dances of Death ***

Temirkanov is at his best in front of an audience, and he characterizes the Symphonic Dances colourfully and idiomatically, securing fine playing from his St Petersburg Orchestra, especially in the engaging central waltz. The three-part third dance is less easily held together, but if he does not quite manage the forward impetus of Jurowski (see above), he explores the music's detail and has the closing pages firmly in his grip. The live recording, balanced by Mike Hatch, is excellent.

SYMPHONIES

Symphonies 1–3

🔑 Ⓜ  Virgin 5 62037-2 (2). RPO, Litton

🔑 Ⓜ  Double Decca 448 116-2 (2). Concg. O, Ashkenazy

Symphonies (i) 1; (ii) 2–3

Ⓝ  Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 480 0824 (2). Weller, with (i) SRO; (ii) LPO

Symphonies 1–3; Caprice bohémien, Op. 12; Isle of the Dead, Op. 29; Scherzo in D min.; The Rock, Op. 7

* Warner 5101 12235-2 (3). Russian Federation SO, Svetlanov

Symphonies 1–3; Isle of the Dead; Scherzo in D min.; Vocalise

Ⓑ  EMI 5 00885-2 (3). St Petersburg PO, Jansons

Symphonies 1–3; The Isle of the Dead, Op. 29; Symphonic Dances, Op. 45; Vocalise, Op. 34/14; Aleko: Intermezzo & Women's Dance

Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 7 64530-2 (3). LSO, Previn

Symphonies 1–3; The Isle of the Dead; Symphonic Dances; (i) The Bells, Op. 35

🔑 Ⓑ  Decca 455 798-2 (3). Concg. O, Ashkenazy; (i) with Troitskaya, Karczykowski; Concg. Ch.

Symphonies 1–3; Vocalise, Op. 34/14

🔑 (BB) * Sony SB2K 63257 (2). Phd. O, Ormandy

Ormandy pioneered the recording of the three Rachmaninov symphonies in stereo, and in many ways his performances remain unsurpassed. Certainly they have never sounded as good as they do in these splendid new transfers. The Second Symphony has great intensity of feeling and passion. The First Symphony was the work's first stereo version, an exceptionally strong performance it is too. Ormandy's thrustful view of the outer movements is supported by superbly committed Philadelphia playing, with the orchestra on top form. The balance has woodwind solos spotlighted, but the spacious acoustic of Philadelphia Town Hall provides the necessary ambient warmth. In some ways the Third Symphony is even more distinguished and now that the artificial brilliance of the old LP has been tamed one can at last appreciate the body of tone this great orchestra commanded in its heyday. The playing itself is marvellous, and this warmth of feeling carries over into the touchingly shaped Vocalise which acts as a final encore.

Svetlanov's celebrated recordings of the Rachmaninov Symphonies with the USSR State Symphony Orchestra were one of the triumphs of the HMV Melodiya catalogue in the days of LP. This new survey, made during the course of a week in October 1995 at the Moscow Radio studios, has every bit as much sweep and passion as the earlier discs and it benefits from better sound.

Jansons and the St Petersburg musicians give a totally committed and finely shaped account of the First Symphony, and the performance of the Second is equally strong, with climaxes thrust home powerfully. In Russian fashion the clarinet in the slow movement sounds like an organ stop, but this exciting reading still stands among the best modern versions. Jansons's account of the Third is arguably the finest of the three, and with a highly atmospheric Isle of the Dead, a masterly set of the Symphonic Dances, and the Vocalise beautifully done, this is a highly recommendable set, as all the recordings offer first-class recorded sound.

Andrew Litton's mid-priced box is highly competitive. In 1, Litton is most persuasive in his free use of rubato and his performance combines power and ripeness of romantic feeling with tenderness, bringing out the refinement of Rachmaninov's scoring. In the Second Symphony he readily sustains the observance of the exposition repeat in the first movement, making it a very long movement indeed at just over 23 minutes. But the moments of special magic are those where, as in his lightly pointed account of the Scherzo or, most of all, the lovely clarinet melody of the slow movement, subtlety of expression gives Rachmaninov's romanticism an extra poignancy. In the Third Symphony, the gentleness of his treatment of the great second subject melody means that the transparent beauty of Rachmaninov's scoring is brought out luminously, and though the opening of the finale may not sound urgent enough, it is crisply pointed and leads on to a superbly brisk, tense conclusion.

The Ashkenazy digital set of the three symphonies now comes either as a Double Decca or in a bargain box of three discs, one symphony to each CD and coupled respectively with The Isle of the Dead, Symphonic Dances and the dramatic cantata, The Bells, outstanding in every way. The performances of the symphonies, passionate and volatile, are intensely Russian; the only possible reservation concerns the slow movement of the Second, where the clarinet solo is less ripe than in some versions. Elsewhere there is drama, energy and drive, balanced by much delicacy of feeling, while the Concertgebouw strings produce great ardour for Rachmaninov's long-breathed melodies. The vivid Decca sound within the glowing Concertgebouw ambience is ideal for the music.

Weller's Rachmaninov symphony cycle is hugely underrated. Splendidly recorded, it is undoubtedly one of the best of the stereo era. In the First Symphony, Weller has a fine feeling for the music's atmosphere (both inner movements show this readily). The Second Symphony is perhaps more restrained than in Previn's classic account, but is genuinely symphonic in stature, with a dreamy poetic quality in the slow movement. In the Third, although there may be some slight sacrifice of detail to atmosphere, the beautiful sound the orchestra consistently yields deserves this kind of richness and sense of space. The reading is essentially a lyrical one, showing great delicacy of feeling, notably in the preparation of the first movement's memorable second subject, but also in the sense of stillness that pervades the opening of the Adagio to make an absolute contrast with the scherzando middle section. The finale too responds to such spacious treatment, though its basic tempo has no lack of urgency. The playing of the LPO in Symphonies 2 and 3 is even finer than that of the SRO (1) but the sound is consistently brilliant throughout.

Previn's LSO set at mid-price offers some alternative couplings. His 1973 account of the Second Symphony – a passionately committed performance, with a glorious response from the LSO strings – has been remastered for CD again, with great improvement in the body of the string timbre. 1 is a forthright, clean-cut performance, beautifully played and very well recorded. Previn's account of the Third is outstanding: the LSO's playing again has enormous bravura and ardour, and the performances of the two shorter works have plenty of atmosphere and grip.

Symphony 1

 BBCL 4233. BBC SO, Rozhdestvensky (with RIMSKY-KORSAKOV: Russian Easter Festival Overture ) – PROKOFIEV: Ode to the End of the War ***

Symphony 1; 5 Etudes-tableaux (orch. Respighi)

 Chan. 9822. Russian State SO, Polyansky

Symphony 1; Symphony in D min. (Youth) 1891; The Isle of the Dead

Ⓝ (*) Chan. 10475. BBC PO, Noseda

Symphony 1; The Isle of the Dead

🔑 ✿ * DG 463 075-2. Russian Nat. O, Pletnev

In the First Symphony Mikhail Pletnev produces a range of sonority and clarity of articulation that we recognize from his keyboard playing, and there is poetic vision alongside a splendid command of architecture. The symphony is quite outstanding in his hands and so is The Isle of the Dead which has the sense of inevitability and forward movement that recall Rachmaninov himself, Koussevitzky and Reiner.

Rozhdestvensky's well-paced and expertly prepared account of the First dates from a 1979 Prom, during his period with the BBC Symphony Orchestra. They respond well to him, both here and in the Rimsky Overture from the same season. Very good sound, and the Prokofiev rarity from the 1978 Festival Hall season makes an attractive bonus.

Good playing and particularly good recording make Polyansky's Chandos CD a competitive issue. A worthwhile addition to the catalogue, particularly in view of the Respighi transcription of the Etudes-tableaux.

Noseda brings a superbly controlled account of Rachmaninov's First Symphony, with a particularly beautiful account of the slow movement, the highlight. If it doesn't quite have the character and adrenalin of the finest versions on CD (notably Ashkenazy and Pletnev), it is still very fine indeed. The Isle of the Dead is similarly beautifully played and moulded, if again lacking the white-hot intensity which the finest accounts offer. The inclusion of the enjoyably concise 'Youth' Symphony makes a good bonus.

Symphony 2 E min.; (i) The Bells; Symphonic Dances (DVD versions)

(*) Arthaus DVD 101439 (2). (i) Pavlovskaya, Akimov, Vaneev, Legis Artis Ch., Cologne R. Ch.; Cologne RSO, Bychkov

These are performances of stature that can be recommended with great enthusiasm. The playing of the Cologne Radio Orchestra is of high quality and worthy of the most exalted comparisons. The performances come with documentaries by Enrique Sánchez Lansch which are less satisfying; they comprise bits of the rehearsals, some background material about Rachmaninov's life, with interesting footage intercut by interviews with members of the orchestra mostly saying how young they were when they joined and how old their colleagues seemed, and now they are not so young – and other rather obvious remarks. Anyway, the set is mandatory viewing for the sake of these impressive performances.

Symphony 2 in E min., Op. 27 (CD version)

🔑 (BB)  Regis RRC 1210. LSO, Rozhdestvensky

Symphony 2; The Rock (CD version)

(*) DG 439 8882. Russian Nat. O, Pletnev

Symphony 2; (i) Vocalise (CD version)

 Channel Classics SACD CCS SA 21698. Budapest Festival O, Fischer

Rozhdestvensky gives a very Tchaikovskian reading of Rachmaninov's E minor Symphony. There is plenty of vitality but, with the big string melodies blossoming voluptuously, the slow movement, after a beguiling opening clarinet solo from Andrew Marriner, has a climax of spacious intensity, its power almost overwhelming. The finale is flamboyantly broadened at the end, and the feeling of apotheosis is very much in the Tchaikovsky mould. With the LSO responding superbly, this is a most satisfying account, and the richness, brilliance and weight of the recording add to the compulsion of the music-making.

A red-blooded account of the Second Symphony from Iván Fischer and the fine Budapest Festival Orchestra has much to commend it. It has splendid breadth and sweep, and Fischer generates admirable excitement. While it does not necessarily displace the finest alternatives, it may well be considered alongside them.

Pletnev brings a fresh mind to this symphony, with his approach very much controlled, giving a strong sense of onward current and producing none of the heart-on-sleeve emotion in the slow movement. The clarity and lightness of articulation that distinguish his piano playing seem to be in ample evidence and, throughout the work, feeling is held in perfect control. It is a performance of quality, though the recording, while good, could be cleaner-detailed in the lower end of the range. Ensemble is endangered by some frenetically fast speeds – as in the finale. The Rock makes a generous coupling.

Symphony 3; Symphony in D min. (Youth); Vocalise

 BIS CD 1299. RSNO, Arwel Hughes

Symphony 3; Symphonic Dances

Ⓜ  Chan. 10234X. LSO, Järvi

(i) Symphony 3; (i–iii) Spring (cantata), Op. 20; (iii) 3 Unaccompanied Choruses

🔑  Chan. 9802. (i) Russian State SO; (ii) Martyrosyan; (iii) Russian State Symphonic Capella; Polyansky

A splendid, very Russian account of the Third Symphony from Polyansky, volatile but convincingly so, with some glorious playing from the strings, especially in the lovely, nostalgic secondary theme of the first movement which is so very Slavic in feeling. The choral works too are superbly done, with the widest range of dynamic in the masterly unaccompanied choruses, while Tigram Martyrosyan is a richly resonant bass soloist in the cantata.

Järvi in his weighty, purposeful way misses some of the subtleties of this symphony (although not the Symphonic Dances), but with superb playing from the LSO – linking back to André Previn's unsurpassed reading with them – the intensity is magnetic. The Dances too are superbly done, with the changes of tempo and mood in the third section both subtle and passionate. Outstanding recording too.

Owain Arwel Hughes draws from the Scottish National Orchestra a very well-played account of the Third, brilliantly recorded with textures exceptionally clear. Speeds are on the broad side in a reading less red-bloodedly emotional than most, with the BIS sound again slightly distanced. The degree of restraint brings advantages. That is especially so in the central Adagio, where the lovely horn solo at the start and the sweet solo violin entry at a full pianissimo have a tenderness that is most moving.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Cello Sonata in G min., Op. 19

Ⓜ  Somm SOMMCD 026. Walton, Owen – CHOPIN: Cello Sonata ***

Ⓑ  EMI (ADD) 5 74333-2 (2). P. Tortelier, Ciccolini – CHOPIN; FAURÉ; MENDELSSOHN: Cello Sonatas ***

Cello Sonata in G min.; Lied; Melody on a Theme by Rachmaninov (arr. Altschuler/Hayroudinoff); 2 Pieces, Op. 2; Prelude, Op. 23/10; Vocalise

(*) Chan. 10095. Ivashkin, Hayroudinoff

Cello Sonata in G min.; Lied (Romance) in F min.; Mélodie in D; 2 Pieces, Op. 2; Romance in F, Op. 4/3; Vocalise

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.550987. Grebanier, Guggenheim

Cello Sonata in G min.; 2 Pieces, Op. 2; Vocalise, Op. 34/14

(BB)  Virgin 2x1 4 82067-2 (2). Mørk, Thibaudet – MIASKOVSKY; PROKOFIEV; SHOSTAKOVICH: Cello Sonatas; STRAVINSKY: Suite Italienne ***

Cello Sonata in G min.; 5 Pieces for Cello & Piano: Oriental Dance, Op. 2/2; Prelude, Op. 2/1; Romance; Vocalise, Op. 34/14 (with ALTSCHULER: Mélodie)

🔑 (BB) * Double Decca 473 807-2 (2). Harrell, Ashkenazy – PROKOFIEV: Cello Sonata; SHOSTAKOVICH: Cello Sonata, etc. ***

Lynn Harrell and Vladimir Ashkenazy give an impassioned, full-throated account of the glorious Cello Sonata and they capture its melancholy perfectly. They are very well attuned to its sensibility and to the affecting drama of the smaller pieces. The Decca recording is in the high traditions of the house; the balance and perspective are completely natural.

Michael Grebanier too gives it a powerful, richly expressive reading, with Janet Guggenheim an incisive partner, very clearly focused if not always as warm. The slow movement is most moving, the headlong finale thrilling in its clarity. The shorter pieces make up an excellent bargain disc to match rivals at premium price.

A first-class account from Jamie Walton and Charles Owen – warm, passionate and refined, with fine lyrical impetus in the finale. A good recording balance too, although the otherwise attractive acoustic does not offer the clearest separation.

The gifted Norwegian cellist Truls Mørk plays with a restrained eloquence that is totally compelling. The demanding (and commanding) piano part is given with authority and conviction by Thibaudet, and they handle the companion pieces excellently. This set is a remarkable bargain.

Alexander Ivashkin and Rustem Hayroudinoff give us the complete works for cello and piano, though it is only the Sonata that really counts. The Two Pieces of Op. 2 (a Prelude and Danse orientale) are very appealing, as is the slightly earlier Lied, written when Rachmaninov was seventeen. But the remainder are arrangements. Ivashkin produces a beautifully burnished, lustrous tone, and the playing of this duo is highly cultured. One would at times welcome more abandon in the second movement. It is all thoroughly enjoyable and well (if forwardly) recorded.

Trio élégiaque 1 in G min., Op. 8

🔑  BIS CD 1302. Kempf Trio – TCHAIKOVSKY: Piano Trio ***

Rachmaninov's first Trio élégiaque, Op. 8, was written in 1892. Its mood is tinged with melancholy throughout, surging to moments of ardour less extrovert than with Tchaikovsky, but with a characteristic Rachmaninovian ebb and flow of feeling, which is captured most spontaneously by these players. Kempf and his colleagues are by no means second best and are very well recorded.

Trios élégiaques 1 in G min., Op. 8; 2 in D min., Op. 9

 Tavros EPT 4516. Koo, Sakharova, Arnadóttir

The Trios are both imbued with lyrical fervour and draw from the rich vein of melancholy so characteristic of Rachmaninov. Korean pianist Yung Wook Koo, Russian violinist Julia Sakharova, with the warm-toned Icelandic cellist, Margrét Arnadóttir, make a fine team and give performances that are as passionate as they are lyrically spontaneous. The recording is vividly up front but the performances are so committedly vivid and alive that this début CD must be welcomed with enthusiasm. (The disc is available from Tavros Records, 1187 Coast Village Road, 1-288, Santa Barbara, California 93108, USA. Fax: 00-1-805-969-5749. E-mail: info@tavrosrecords.com)

Trios élégiaques 1 & 2, Opp. 8–9; 2 Pieces for Cello & Piano, Op. 2; 2 Pieces for Violin & Piano, Op. 6.

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 67178. Moscow Rachmaninov Trio

Apart from two incomplete string quartets and the Cello Sonata, Op. 19, the four works here comprise Rachmaninov's complete chamber output. The Moscow Rachmaninov Trio (Viktor Yampolsky, Mikhail Tsinman and Natalia Savinova) are superb artists and play this music with feeling and sensitivity.

PIANO MUSIC

Piano duet

Music for 2 Pianos: Suites 1 & 2, Opp. 5 & 17; Symphonic Dances, Op. 43

(BB)  Naxos 8.557062. Roscoe & Donohoe

First-class playing from Martin Roscoe and Peter Donohoe in all three works.

Music for 2 pianos: (i) Suites 1–2, Opp. 5 & 17; Symphonic Dances, Op. 45; Russian Rhapsody. For solo piano: Etudes-tableaux, Op. 33; Variations on a Theme by Corelli, Op. 42

🔑 Ⓑ * Double Decca (ADD) 444 845-2 (2). Ashkenazy, (i) with Previn

The colour and flair of Rachmaninov's writing in the two Suites (as inspired and tuneful as his concertos) are captured with wonderful imagination on Double Decca. The two-piano version of the Symphonic Dances is masterly and dazzling, and they are hardly less persuasive in the early Russian Rhapsody. Ashkenazy's superb solo performances of the Etudes-tableaux and the Corelli Variations (a rarity and a very fine work) cap the appeal of this bargain. The recording throughout is superb, with a natural presence and a most attractive ambience.

Suite 2, Op. 17

Ⓜ  Ph. 475 8520. Argerich & Freire – LUTOSŁAWSKI: Paganini Variations; RAVEL: La valse ***

Argerich and Freire give a dazzling, virtuoso account of the Second Suite, rushing the waltzes off their feet (the movement is marked presto but they play it prestissimo). They are as fresh, idiomatic and thoughtful as their Decca rivals and their performance is thoroughly exhilarating.

Solo piano music

Andante ma non troppo in D min.; Canon in E min.; Fragments (1917); Fughetta; Lento in D min. (Song Without Words; 1866–7); Moment musical, Op. 16/2 (rev. version, 1940); Morceau de fantaisie in G min.; Oriental Sketch (1917); Prelude in F (1891); Variations on a Theme of Chopin, Op. 22

(BB)  Naxos 8.554426. Biret

Idil Biret's Rachmaninov recital here brings a powerful yet poetic reading of the Chopin Variations, one of Rachmaninov's finest piano works, coupled with miniatures and rarities including many rare early pieces. Excellent sound to bring out the subtleties of Biret's tonal shading.

Etudes-tableaux, Opp. 33 & 39; Fragments; Fughetta in F; Mélodie in E; Moments musicaux; Morceaux de fantaisie; Morceaux de salon; 3 Nocturnes; Oriental sketch; 4 Pieces; Piece in D min.; 25 Preludes (complete); Sonatas 1–3 (including original & revised versions of 2); Song Without Words; Transcriptions (complete); Variations: On a Theme of Chopin; On a Theme of Corelli

🔑 Ⓜ  Hyp. DDD/ADD CDS 44041/8 (8). Shelley

Hyperion have collected Howard Shelley's exemplary survey of Rachmaninov into a mid-price, eight-CD set, and very good it is, too. Shelley can hold his own against most rivals not only in terms of poetic feeling but in keyboard authority and virtuosity. Some of these discs are all available seperately.

Etudes-tableaux, Opp. 33 & 39

 Chan. 10391. Hayroudinoff

Rustem Hayroudinoff adds to the series of superb recordings he has made for Chandos with this outstanding disc of the two sets of Rachmaninov's Etudes-Tableaux. In magnetic playing his feeling for rubato is faultless, and his observance of the composer's dynamic indications, often very dramatic, is meticulous. First-rate sound.

Etudes-tableaux, Opp. 33 & 39; 6 Preludes, Op. 23/1–2, 4–5, 7–8; 7 Preludes, Op. 32/1–2, 6–7, 9–10, 12

🔑 (BB)  Regis (DDD/ADD) RRC 1022. Richter

Although he played them in public, Sviatoslav Richter did not record all the Preludes, only the ones he liked best. Those here were recorded in 1971 but the Etudes-tableaux are later digital recordings. The playing is of a rare order of mastery and leaves strong and powerful resonances. Richter's conception goes far beyond the abundant virtuosity this music calls for and the characterization is very strong and searching. The sound quality is less than ideal, a bit hard and two-dimensional, but fully acceptable when the playing is so riveting. This reissue (of the original Olympia CD) is unique and not to be missed.

Moments musicaux, Op. 16; Preludes, Op. 3/2; Op. 23/1–10

🔑  Erato 8573 85770-2. Lugansky

Nikolai Lugansky belongs to the same generation as Andsnes and Kissin, and those who acquired his Chopin Etudes on Erato will know that he is an artist of impeccable technique and taste. As impressive an account of this repertoire as we have had since Ashkenazy and Shelley, and warmly recommended.

Morceaux de fantaisie, Op. 3; Sonata 2 in B flat min., Op. 36 (revised, 1931 version); Variations on a Theme of Corelli, Op. 42

 Danacord DACOCD 525. Marshev

Oleg Marshev possesses the grand manner, and has won golden opinions for his Russian repertoire. Listening to his Rachmaninov, one can see why, for, apart from flawless technical address and sensitivity, he has an innate feeling for this repertoire. His account of all three pieces belongs up there with the finest. The dryish recording, if not ideal, is perfectly serviceable and should not deter readers from investigating some superbly idiomatic Rachmaninov playing.

Morceaux de fantaisie, Op. 3; Sonata 2 in B flat min., Op. 36; Variations on a Theme of Chopin, Op. 22

🔑 ✿ * Elan 82248. Rodriguez

Préludes, Op. 32/1–13; Sonata 1 in D min., Op. 28

🔑 ✿ * Elan 82244. Rodriguez

This is some Rachmaninov playing! Santiago Rodriguez is the real thing. For a moment one imagines that Rachmaninov himself is at the keyboard. Rodriguez has something of Pletnev about him: wonderful authority and immaculate technical control, tremendous electricity as well as great poetic feeling. Outstanding in every way.

24 Preludes (complete)

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca (ADD) 475 8238. Ashkenazy

24 Preludes, Op. 23/1–10; Op. 32/1–13; in D min. Mélodie; 6 Moments musicaux, Op. 16; Morceaux de fantaisie, Op. 3; Oriental Sketch; Song Transcriptions: Daisies; Lilacs

Ⓑ  Virgin 2x1 5 61624 (2). Alexeev

There is superb flair and panache about Ashkenazy's playing and his poetic feeling is second to none. For its Originals reissue the whole set has been accommodated on a single mid-priced CD playing for just over 80 minutes, and as such sweeps the board, for the new transfer offers a most realistic piano image.

Dmitri Alexeev's 1989 two-CD set of the Preludes and various other works brings us formidable and powerful pianism. His mastery is evident throughout, and although there are occasions, such as in the B minor Prelude, Op. 32, No. 10, where one misses the depth and poetic feeling of some rivals, the recital is a satisfying one and value for money.

Piano Sonatas 1 in D min., Op. 28; 2 in B flat min., Op. 36 (revised 1931)

🔑  Hyp. (ADD) CDA 66047. Shelley

Piano Sonata 2 in B flat min., Op. 36 (original version); Fragments in A flat; Fughetta in F; Gavotte in D; Mélodie in E; Morceau de fantaisie in G min.; Nocturnes 1–3; Oriental Sketch in B flat; Piece in D min.; 4 Pieces; Prelude in E flat min.; Romance in F sharp min.; Song Without Words in D min.

🔑  Hyp. (ADD) CDA 66198. Shelley

Piano Sonata 2, Op. 36 (original version); Etudes-tableaux, Op. 39; (trans. of KREISLER: Liebesleid)

🔑 * BIS CD-1042. Kempf

Piano Sonata 2, Op. 36; Etudes-tableaux, Op. 39/2, 6 & 9; Fugue; Preludes, Op. 23/5; Op. 32/12; Suite D min.

Ⓝ  RCA 88697 15591-2. Denis Matsuev

Piano Sonata 2 in B flat min., Op. 36 (original version); Etudes-tableaux, Op. 33/1, 39/4; 7 Morceaux de fantaisie, Op. 3/3 & 5; Preludes, Op. 23/1 & 7; 32/2, 6, 9 & 10

🔑 Ⓜ * Ph. 475 7779. Zoltán Kocsis

Now reissued as one of Philips's Originals, this is one of the finest of all Rachmaninov recital discs. Be it in the smaller, reflective pieces or in the bigger-boned B flat minor Sonata, Zoltán Kocsis's piano speaks with totally idiomatic accents, effortless virtuosity and a keen poetic feeling. This is a most distinguished offering and it is once more recommended with enthusiasm. Excellent recording.

On CDA 66047, Howard Shelley offers the 1931 version of the B flat minor Sonata. He has plenty of sweep and grandeur and an appealing freshness, ardour and, when required, tenderness. He is accorded an excellent balance by the engineers.

Shelley then on CDA 66198 gives us the original version of Op. 36 and his performances here show unfailing sensitivity, intelligence and good taste. This is available special order in Hyperion's Archive Service.

Freddy Kempf has a real feeling for this composer, and the authority and technical prowess to go with it. He is also a narrative pianist – from the very beginning he has you in the palm of his hand. The Second Sonata in the original, 1913 version is as good as any now before the public, and the Etudes-tableaux come off equally well. Vivid, realistic piano sound.

A pianist in the grand tradition. Denis Matsuev has all the command and bravura this repertoire calls for. But the competition is strong and this collection would not be an obvious first choice.

Piano Sonata 2, Op. 36 (rev. 1931); Preludes, Op. 3/2; Op. 23/1–2, 4–5, 10; Op. 32/2, 12; Siren, Op. 21/5; Margaritiki, Op. 38/3. Transcriptions: Scherzo from 'A Midsummer Night's Dream' (MENDELSSOHN); Flight of the Bumblebee (RIMSKY-KORSAKOV); Lullaby (TCHAIKOVSKY)

🔑 ✿ * EMI 5 57943-2. Trpčeski

Simon Trpčeski's dazzling Rachmaninov recital reaffirms the arrival on the piano scene of a young keyboard master. His is an exciting talent, and this is wonderful Rachmaninov playing, expertly recorded in Potton Hall, Suffolk.

Recitals

A Window in Time: Barcarolle, Op.10/3; Elégie; Mélodie, Op. 3/3; Etudes-tableau, Op. 39/4 & 6; Humoresque, Op. 10/6; Polinchinelle; Polka de V. R.; Preludes, Op. 3/2 & 4; Op. 23/5; Lilacs.* Transcriptions: RIMSKY-KORSAKOV: Flight of the Bumblebee. KREISLER: Liebesfreud; Liebeslied. SCHUBERT: Wohin? BIZET: L'arlésienne: Minuet. MUSSORGSKY: Sorochinsky Fair: Hopak. TRAD.: *Star-Spangled Banner

🔑 ❁ * Telarc CD 80489. Rachmaninov

Wayne Stahnke has recreated these recordings made by Rachmaninov between 1919 and 1929, using Ampico music rolls, only he has used modern computer technology via a Bösendorfer piano, then re-recorded digitally. The realism and sense of the composer's presence is amazing. There is no problem here about catching the most varied and subtle rubato or variations of dynamic, and in a transcription like the Flight of the Bumblebee the bravura is electrifying. Lilacs is captivating in its nuances of colour and Bizet's Minuet delicately entrancing. The freedom of style in the two Kreisler transcriptions, and indeed the famous Prelude in C sharp minor, which opens the programme dramatically, is remarkable. Needless to say the sound of the piano itself is very real and three-dimensional. Even after reading these comments we guarantee a suprise when you hear the disc itself!

VOCAL MUSIC

Songs

 Chan. 9451. Rodgers, Popescu, Naoumenko, Leiferkus, Shelley

Fluent in Russian, Joan Rodgers with her richly expressive voice makes a perfect interpreter of Rachmaninov songs, ideally partnered by the pianist, Howard Shelley. This generous selection of those for soprano ranges through the whole of the composer's songwriting career up to his exile from Russia in 1917, when in rejection of his roots he stopped completely. Loveliest of the songs is the extended wordless Vocalise, here set against its neighbour in Op. 34, the dramatic song, Dissonance. Most distinctive are the six forward-looking songs, Op. 38, to words by symbolist poets.

The Bells, Op. 35

🔑 ❁  DG 471 029-2. Mescheriakov, Larin, Chernov, Moscow State Ch., Russian Nat. O, Pletnev – TANEYEV: John of Damascus ***

Ⓜ  Telarc CD 80363. Fleming, Dent, Ledbetter, Atlanta Ch. & SO, Shaw – ADAMS: Harmonium ***

From Pletnev comes a performance and recording that shows The Bells in an entirely new light. He has his finger on the composer's pulse and always has special insights to bring to his music. He goes beyond the music's vivid colours and lush sonorities, and without in any way indulging in over-characterization gets singing and playing of impressive quality, much subtlety and intensity. The recording is first class.

The late Robert Shaw conducts a colourfully expansive performance of Rachmaninov's cantata. All three soloists are impressive and if Renée Fleming, who sings beautifully, is not especially Slavonic, in the closing Lento lugubre the baritone, Victor Ledbetter, catches the darkly expressive mood admirably.

6 Choruses for Women's Voices, Op. 15

 Chan. 10311. Russian State Symphony Cappella & SO, Polyansky – SCRIABIN: Symphony 1 ***

The Choruses for children's or women's voices are as appealing as they are demanding, the most haunting being the Lermontov setting, The pine tree, and Dreaming waves, both of which cast a distinct spell. Collectors attracted to this CD need not hesitate.

Liturgy of St John Chrysostom, Op. 31

Ⓝ Ⓑ  Hyp. Helios CDH 55318. Corydon Singers, Best

Rachmaninov's Liturgy of St John Chrysostom, written in 1910, is an even fuller setting than Tchaikovsky's of 1878, and one can be in no doubt that the work's powerful expressive feeling has an underlying deep spirituality. The fine Hyperion account is immensely stimulating, and very well recorded and documented. However, the Corydons curiously omit the prayer dialogue which is the centrepiece of the Cherubic Hymn. If you have already succumbed to the Vespers, you won't be disappointed with St John Chrysostom Liturgy.

3 Russian Songs, Op. 41

 Warner 2564 61992-2. Latvian Ch., Nordic SO, Tali – SIBELIUS: The Wood-Nymph; TUUR: Zeitraum; Action, Passion, Illusion ***

These glorious songs were composed for Stokowski and the Philadelphia Orchestra, who gave the first performance in 1928. They are sung by these Baltic forces with feeling, though memories of Kondrashin's full-blooded, intoxicating account from the mid-1960s are not banished. But we are not spoilt for choice in this repertoire, and the enterprising coupling is well worth the money.

Vespers, Op. 37

🔑 ❁ Ⓜ  HM Chant du Monde RUS 788050. St Petersburg Capella, Chernuchenko

Ⓑ  Virgin 3 91375-2. Swedish R. Ch., Kaljuste

(*) Hyp. CDA 66460. Corydon Singers, Best

(*) EMI 5 56752-2. King's College Ch., Cleobury

Rachmaninov's Vespers – more correctly the 'All-night Vigil' – rank not only among his most soulful and intensely powerful music but are also the finest of all Russian choral works. The St Petersburg Capella offers singing of an extraordinarily rapt intensity. The dynamic range is enormous, the perfection of ensemble and blend and the sheer beauty of tone such as to exhaust superlatives. The recording does them justice and is made in a suitably atmospheric acoustic.

Under Tõnu Kaljuste the Swedish Radio Choir's account of the Vespers shows that they have lost nothing of their sensitivity and command of sonority. They can produce a wonderful range of colour, from the darkest to the most luminous. Their Russian sounds totally authentic too.

Though Matthew Best's British choir, the Corydon Singers, lacks the dark timbres associated with Russian choruses and though the result could be weightier and more biting, theirs is still a most beautiful performance, very well sung and recorded in an atmospheric, reverberant setting.

It also makes a moving experience having the Anglican tradition, as ideally represented by the choir of King's College, Cambridge, meeting the Russian Orthodox tradition. Against the warm acoustic of King's College Chapel, beauty and refinement are the keynotes.

OPERA

(i) Aleko; (ii) Francesca da Rimini; (iii) The Miserly Knight

🔑 Ⓑ  DG Trio 477 041-2 (3). Levitsky, Kotscherga, von Otter; (i; ii) Guleghina, Leiferkus; (ii; iii) Larin, Aleksashkin; (iii) Chernov, Caley, Gothenburg SO, Järvi

Aleko (based on Pushkin) is rather like a Russian-flavoured Cavalleria rusticana, with the hero murdering his unfaithful sweetheart and her lover, but musically it brings echoes of Borodin, notably in evocative choruses like Polovtsian dances. Distinctive Rachmaninov fingerprints are few, but the result is most attractive, particularly in a performance like this, ideally cast, with Sergei Leiferkus a commanding Aleko and Neeme Järvi a warmly persuasive conductor.

Francesca da Rimini is encumbered by an unsatisfactory libretto by Modest Tchaikovsky, but there is some glorious music and some fine singing from Maria Guleghina as Francesca and Sergei Leiferkus as Lanciotto Malatesta, the jealous husband. Sergei Larin makes a convincing Paolo, and the Gothenburg Orchestra and Chorus again respond magnificently to Neeme Järvi. The recording quality is quite outstanding.

The Miserly Knight, to a Pushkin text, contrasts the old knight, whose devotion to gold is total, and his son, who eyes his father's fortune enviously. The famous soliloquy, arguably Rachmaninov's finest dramatic scena, is powerfully done by Sergei Aleksashkin, who succeeds in winning us over to the Knight. Sergei Larin is hardly less convincing as his son, Albert. The outstanding recording and the fine orchestral playing make this a most desirable set, apart from the lack of texts and translations.

The Miserly Knight (DVD version)

🔑 ✿ * Opus Arte DVD OA 0919D. Leiferkus, Berkeley-Steele, Mikhailov, Voynarowsky, Schagidullin, LPO, Jurowski (Producer: Annabel Arden; V/D: James Whitbourn)

Visually this DVD of The Miserly Knight is sumptuous, musically it is superlative. Composed in 1906 for Chaliapin, this production has a magnificent successor in Sergei Leiferkus, who dominates the stage. Apart from his magnificent voice and compelling acting, he has tremendous presence. It is difficult to find any flaw with the other members of the cast either, and Vladimir Jurowksi gets a thoroughly idiomatic sonority from the London Philharmonic. The production is a fine one, and the camera direction is equally distinguished. There is an illustrated synopsis on the disc as well as interviews with those taking part in the production. Recommended with enthusiasm.

(i) Monna Vanna (incomplete opera: Act I, orch. Buketoff); (ii) Piano Concerto 4 (original version)

(*) Chan. 8987. (i) Milnes, McCoy, Walker, Karoustos, Thorsteinsson, Blythe; (ii) Black; Iceland SO, Buketoff

Monna Vanna is the fragment of an opera based on Maeterlinck. Igor Buketoff, who knew the composer, has rescued this Act I score and orchestrated it very sensitively to make an interesting curiosity. In its ripely romantic manner the writing has lyrical warmth and flows freely, thrusting home climactic moments. Buketoff's performance with the Iceland Symphony is warmly convincing, but the singing is flawed, with Sherrill Milnes, as Monna Vanna's jealous husband, standing out from an indifferent team, otherwise thin-toned and often wobbly. Buketoff's resurrection of the original score of the Fourth Piano Concerto is rather more expansive than the text we know. William Black is the powerful soloist, though the piano sound, unlike that of the orchestra, lacks weight.

RAMEAU, Jean Philippe

(1683–1764)

Anacréon: Suite; Daphnis et Eglé: Suite

(BB)  Naxos 8.553746. Capella Savaria, Térey-Smith

The Suite from Anacréon is essentially lighthearted music, particularly vivid in its scoring, piquantly using sopranino recorders, notably in the Premier et deuxième air vif, the infectious Premier et deuxième tambourin, but even more strikingly in the penultimate Bacchanales. The Suite from Daphnis et Eglé is much longer and more varied including a gracious Sarabande très tendre, a Gigue, a Gavotte, a touching Musette and a sprightly Contredanse très vive to end. The Capella Savaria, using period instruments with fair panache, play all this music with considerable finesse and much spirit, and they are very well recorded.

Les Boréades (suite of dances); Le Naissance d'Osiris: Suite

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553388. Capella Savaria, Térey-Smith

The two suites on the second disc from Capella Savaria are also inventive, but, with a few exceptions, the various dances and interludes are less ear-tickling than those on the companion CD. The playing is lively and robust, with plenty of colour (including the use of horns in Les Boréades).

Dardanus (orchestral suite); Platée (orchestral suite)

Ⓜ  RCA 74321 93580-2. Philh. Bar. O, McGegan

McGegan offers rather less music from Dardanus than Gardiner on his deleted Erato CD, but this makes room for the more extended suite from Platée, a 'ballet bouffon' dating from 1745, written as an entertainment at a royal wedding. McGegan and his period-instrument orchestra are if anything more crisply resilient than Gardiner and not a whit less graceful. The music for Platée has plenty of character and charm and, like Dardanus, ends with a memorable Chaconne for which – as it is interrupted in the ballet – McGegan provides a concert ending.

Dardanus: Suite; Les Indes galantes: Suite

ⒷⒷ  DHM/BMG 05472 77420-2. Coll. Aur.

Any abrasiveness here deriving from the use of original instruments is countered by the generous acoustics of the Cedernsaal in Schloss Kirchheim. But the playing has both life and elegance and the sound, though warm and full, is by no means bland: the flutes and oboes (and trumpets in Les Indes galantes) bring plenty of added colour. The selection from Les Indes galantes is shorter than that provided by McGegan, but many will welcome the coupling with Dardanus. At super-bargain price this is very recommendable.

Ballet music: Les Fêtes d'Hébé; Hippolyte et Aricie

🔑  Erato 3984 26129-2. Les Arts Florissants, Christie – M.-A. CHARPENTIER: La Descente d'Orphée aux Enfers, etc. ***

This is all delightfully fresh and inventive music and Rameau's scoring is ever-resourceful and as presented here constantly sparkling and ear-tickling. Most entertaining and beautifully recorded.

Hippolyte et Aricie (orchestral suites)

Ⓑ  DHM/BMG 74321 935542. La Petite Bande, Sigiswald Kuijken

All the orchestral music from Hippolyte et Aricie is here, with a long introductory Prologue and a section for each of the five Acts. The melodic invention is fresh and its orchestral presentation ingenious. Sigiswald Kuijken draws delightful results from his ensemble.

Les Indes galantes (orchestral suites)

Ⓑ  HM (ADD) HMA 1951130. Chapelle Royale O, Herreweghe

Besides the harpsichord arrangements listed below, Rameau also arranged his four 'concerts' of music from Les Indes galantes for orchestra. The result makes nearly three-quarters of an hour of agreeable listening, especially when played so elegantly – and painlessly – on original instruments, and very well recorded (in 1984) by Harmonia Mundi.

Naïs; Le Temple de la gloire (orchestral suites)

🔑 * HM HMU 907121. Philh. Bar. O, McGegan

There is much delightful music here and the playing by the Philharmonia Baroque Orchestra has ravishing finesse, showing original instruments at their most persuasively delicate, textures always transparent; the ear is continually beguiled by this warm and polished playing, beautifully recorded. A quite lovely disc.

Pygmalion (Acte de ballet); Le Temple de la Gloire (excerpts); Air gay. Grands Motets: Deus noster refugium; In convertendo, Dominus; Quam dilecta tabernacula

Ⓝ ⒷⒷ  Virgin 2CD 5 22027-2 (2). Soloists, including, Fouchécourt, Piau, Gens, Le Concert Spirituel, Niquet

Pygmalion falls in love with a female statue he has sculpted. The statue is then (by courtesy of Venus) brought to life by that very love – a moment of sheer orchestral magic in Rameau's delightful score. The Virgin version is robustly operatic, immediately obvious in the Overture, with its boldly repeated notes, superbly articulated which may (or may not) have been intended by Rameau to simulate the sculptor's chisel. Jean-Paul Fouchécourt gives a strong characterization of Pygmalion and, apart from Sandrine Piau as the statue, her two female colleagues are suitably histrionic. The excerpts from Le Temple de la Gloire are quite brief (about 8 minutes). For the reissue, the coupling is three of Rameau's most impressive Grands Motets, beautifully sung with refined accompaniments. Deus noster refugium is a colourful setting of Psalm 46 while Quam dilecta tabernacula opens with a particularly lovely soprano solo, pure yet sensuous, followed by an impressive fugue. In convertendo, Dominus is an even more complex setting of Psalm 126 with great variety between the movements and an interpolation from Psalm 69 as the fifth movement.

Une Symphonie imaginaire

 DG SACD 477 557-8; CD 474 514-2. Les Musiciens du Louvre, Minkowski

This 'imaginary' symphony is based on Rameau's theatre music; the result is a highly entertaining suite of dance movements, rather in the tradition of Beecham's Handel suites, but with somewhat more authentic orchestrations! Minkowski has selected some obvious highlights, including an orchestrated version of the famous La Poule , plus many of the dance numbers which we have enjoyed from complete opera recordings. No less impressive is the beauty of many of the slow numbers – the Air gracieux from La Naissance d'Osiris and the Air Tendre from Les Fêtes d'Hébé are hauntingly beautiful, Minkowski directs this delightful Rameau concoction with Gallic brilliance and elegance, all caught in exceptionally vivid sound.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Pièces de clavecin en concert 1–5

Ⓑ * HM Musique d'abord HMA 195 1418. Rousset, Terakado, Uemura

The instrumental Pièces de clavecin usually include a flute, but they are equally valid in the alternative format on Harmonia Mundi with baroque violin and viola da gamba. The playing is attractively spirited and rhythmically buoyant; the effect with period instruments brings a slightly abrasive edge at times, but not disagreeably so. The star here is Christophe Rousset, whose very imaginative contribution lights up this music-making. The recording is realistic and the balance excellent. At bargain price, well worth considering.

KEYBOARD MUSIC

Music for Harpsichord: Book I (1706); Pièces de clavecin (1724); Nouvelles Suites de pièces de clavecin (c. 1728); 5 Pièces (1741); La Dauphine (1747)

Ⓜ  CRD 35112 (2). Pinnock (harpsichord)

Trevor Pinnock chose a mellow instrument here, making his stylish, crisply rhythmic performances even more attractive. The second disc includes La Dauphine, the last keyboard piece which Rameau wrote, brilliantly performed. Pinnock is restrained in the matter of ornamentation, but his direct manner is both eloquent and stylish. The harpsichord is of the French type and is excellently recorded.

Pièces de clavecin, Book I: Suite in A min. (1706); Suites in E min.; D min. (1724, rev. 1731)

 Chan. 0659. Yates (harpsichord)

Sophie Yates gives us Book I complete and plays it very appealingly indeed. Her ornamentation has flair and she is especially winning in the named pieces (notably the delightful Vénétienne in the A minor suite and the cascading La Joyeuse in the D minor). She uses a copy by Andrew Garlick of a 1749 Goujon harpsichord which has a most attractive palette, and she is very well recorded.

Pièces de clavecin: Suites in A min.; E min.; G min.

* Hyp. CDA 67597. Hewitt (piano)

Angela Hewitt here moves forward from Bach to Rameau and plays as engagingly and spontaneously as ever. Her performances are stylish but totally pianistic, and her full, rich palette of colour is made apparent by the warmth of the hall acoustic which some ears may resist as being a shade too opulent.

Pièces de clavecin: Suite in E min.; Nouvelles Suites de Pièces de clavecin (1738): Suite in A min.; La Poule; L'Enharmonique; L'Egyptienne

🔑 * Avie AV 2056. Trevor Pinnock (harpsichord)

Pinnock has already recorded three discs of Rameau's harpsichord suites for CRD. But this generous (80-minute) collection is played on a particularly attractive, authentic, two-manual instrument, built in Paris in 1764 and modified by Taskin 20 years later. Pinnock opens with a dazzling bravura piece called Les Cyclopes which gives the disc its title. The recital closes with the famous clucking La Poule and the hardly less characterful L'Enharmonique and L'Egyptienne, all from the Nouvelles Pièces. Altogether a most refreshing collection, and the recording gives the harpsichord splendid presence.

Suite de clavecin in E min. (1724)

(BB)  HM Solo HMS 926018. Christie (harpsichord)

Rameau's E minor Suite is one of his most inventive from the bursting birdsong of Le Rappel des oiseaux to the charming portrait of La Villageoise, while the penultimate movement, a tender Musette en rondeau, is splendidly contrasted with the rumbustious closing Tambourin. William Christie plays the whole suite with infectious spontaneity and in fine style, and his Goujon-Swanen harpsichord is vividly recorded.

In Convertendo (motet; DVD version) (with Pièces de clavecin en concert)

 Opus Arte DVD OA 0956D. Nicolas Rivenq, Sophie Daneman, Jeffrey Thompson, Olga Pitarch, Les Arts Florissants, William Christie

In Convertendo is an early motet, written in 1718 and a setting of Psalm CXXVI. Its finest numbers are the first, an eloquent counter-tenor solo, and the poignant chorus Neuntes et flebant, full of restrained emotion and arguably the finest movement in all Rameau's church music. Also included here are the Pièces de clavecin en concert: La Timide, La Pouplinière and La Rameau, as well as an illuminating documentary in which William Christie takes a leading part, together with John Eliot Gardiner and some distinguished French scholars, Sylvie Boissou and Andrei Serban. (The only tiresome device is the dramatic representation of Diderot and Rameau's nephew.) Strongly recommended.

OPERA-BALLET AND OPERA

Les Boréades (complete)

🔑 Ⓜ  Erato (ADD) 2292 45572-2 (3). Smith, Rodde, Langridge, Aler, Lafont, Monteverdi Ch., E. Bar. Sol. Gardiner

Though the story – involving the followers of Boreas, the storm god – is highly artificial, the music, involving many crisp and brief dances and arias, is as vital and alive as anything Rameau ever wrote. Gardiner here directs an electrifying performance with generally first-rate singing, except that Jennifer Smith's upper register, in the central role of Alphise, Queen of Baltria, is not sweet. Chorus and orchestra are outstanding and the recording excellent. The synopsis is not cued. However, the set is very welcome.

Castor et Pollux (complete)

🔑  HM HMC 901435/7. Crook, Corréas, Mellon, Gens, Schirrer, Brua, Piau, Les Arts Florissants Ch. & O, Christie

Christie's performance consistently benefits from the dramatic timing, not least in the fluently alert and idiomatic exchanges in recitative, as well as in the broad, expressive treatment of set numbers like Telaire's lament, Tristes apprets, beautifully sung by Agnès Mellon. With such fine sopranos as Véronique Gens and Sandrine Piau in relatively small roles, the cast has no weakness. Howard Crook has the clear tenor needed for the role of Castor (who appears very late in the drama), with Jérôme Corréas a stylish Pollux. The sound is fresh and immediate and has plenty of body, with military percussion beautifully caught.

Dardanus (complete)

Ⓜ (*) Erato (ADD) 4509 95312-2 (2). Gautier, Eda-Pierre, von

Stade, Devlin, Teucer, Soyer, van Dam, Paris Op. Ch. & O, Leppard

Though the French chorus and orchestra (using modern instruments) here fail to perform with quite the rhythmic resilience that Leppard usually achieves on record, the results are refreshing and illuminating, helped by generally fine solo singing and naturally balanced (if not brilliant) 1980 analogue recording, smoothly transferred to CD, with the choral sound quite vivid. José van Dam as Ismenor copes superbly with the high tessitura, and Christiane Eda-Pierre is a radiant Venus. Well documented and well worth exploring.

La Guirlande; Zéphyre

 Erato 8573 85774-2 (2). Daneman, Méchaly, Agnew, Bazola, Ockende, Decaudaveine, WDR Capella Coloniensis, Les Arts Florissants Ch. & O, Christie

La Guirlande appeared in 1751, but Zéphyre, telling the story of the Wind God, infatuated with the wood nymph Cloris, seems never to have been performed in Rameau's lifetime. Though it is more limited in scale, in having only soprano soloists, it is even more inventive musically, with a sequence of striking numbers, as when the goddess, Diana, briefly appears at the denouement, accompanied by braying horn-fanfares.

The duet which follows, with the voices of Zephyr and Cloris interweaving, is also one of the loveliest in this double bill. Not that La Guirlande is at all lacking in invention, with extended monologues and dialogues punctuated by brief set numbers not just for the soloists but for the chorus. In all this Christie and his team are at their most inspired, consistently fresh and lively; this is a delightful set, giving new perspectives on the composer.

Hippolyte et Aricie (complete)

🔑  Erato (ADD) 0630 15517-2 (3). Padmore, Panzarella, Hunt, Naouri, James, Les Arts Florissants, Christie

Christie bounces rhythms infectiously and allows himself flexible phrasing without undermining the classical purity of style. Though Anna-Maria Panzarella as Aricie is not golden in tone, she is fresh and bright, responding immediately to Christie's timing which consistently seems geared to stage presentation, with a conversational quality given to passages of recitative. Mark Padmore is an ardent Hippolyte and Lorraine Hunt a deeply tragic Phèdre, with Eirian James a warm Diana. The Erato sound is warm and immediate.

Les Indes Galantes (DVD version)

🔑 * Opus Arte DVD OA 0923 D (2). Panzarella, Agnew, Berg, Croft, Petibon, Les Arts Florissants Ch. & O, Christie (V/D: Thomas Grimm)

Described as an Opera-Ballet in four Acts, Les Indes Galantes was Rameau's biggest stage success in his own lifetime, and one can understand why from this spectacular production, with the sort of lavish effects and movement that would have delighted 18th-century audiences. Act II, set in Peru at the time of the Incas, brings the most striking spectacle with the eruption of a volcano – cue for the backcloth of Andean peaks to wobble and sway amid fiery lighting – for which Rameau devises vividly descriptive music. His inspiration is at white heat throughout, with William Christie and a large and stylish team of singers and players revelling in each number. Outstanding among the soloists are Nathan Berg as Huascar (crushed by a boulder from the sky after his Act II aria), Anna Maria Panzarella as Emilie and Paul Agnew as Valere, with Joao Fernandez memorably in drag as Bellone. Extras include a feature about Rameau with Christie, Serban and the choreographer, Bianca Li, among those interviewed.

Zoroastre (complete; DVD Version)

 Opus Arte DVD OA04230 (2). Dahlin, Alexiev, Bundgaard, Panzarella, Drottningholm Court Ch. & O, Les Talens Lyriques, Rousset (Director: Pierre Audi)

After so many opera productions updated to modern dress, it is refreshing to have a thoroughly traditional production, set in the beautifully restored Drottningholm Court Theatre. First heard in 1749 and drastically reviewed in 1756, Zoroastre, like The Magic Flute, presents the conflict of good and evil, with good represented by Zoroastre and evil by Abramante and Amelite. Casting in this production is first rate, with clean, firm voices the rule and with the dances, so important in Rameau operas, perfectly integrated. Christophe Rousset is the stylish conductor. A first-class set in every way.

Zoroastre (complete; CD version)

🔑  Erato 0927 43182-2 (3). Padmore, Berg, Mechaly, Panzarella, Les Arts Florissants, Christie

Zoroastre is described as one of the composer's most uncompromising music-dramas. Although the central character is the ancient Persian philosopher and founder of the Magian religion, the themes are the very human ones of love, jealousy and vengeance. Christie directs a lively, beautifully paced performance, helped by a first-rate team of soloists. Standing out is Mark Padmore in the title-role, with his natural high tenor totally unstrained and perfectly contrasted with the darkly sinister Abramante of Nathan Berg. Gaelle Mechaly is ideally bright and agile as Amelite, and although Anna Maria Panzarella too often characterizes the malicious Erinice by attacking notes from below, her voice, too, is bright and agile. The third disc gives as a supplement the eight dances and one Ariette omitted in the main performance. First-rate sound.

RAMIREZ, Ariel (born 1921)

Missa Criolla; Navidad Nuestra; Missa Luba

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.557542. Rheams, Melendez, Sacin, Talamante, Washington Choral Arts Soc. Chamber Ch. & Ens., Holt (with Father Guido HAAZEN: Missa Luba)

The Missa Criolla draws on Argentinian folk tunes and idioms, but in most respects is wholly original. The Mass is written for tenor celebrant, chorus, percussion, Andean instruments, including a notched flute or quena, a charango (small guitar), double bass and percussion, with a pair of tom-toms in the Credo. This is genuine crossover music of real quality.

The Navidad Nuestra ('Our Nativity') is a Creole tableau in six episodes (with a Spanish text by Félix Luna), telling the Christian Nativity story from the annunciation to the birth of Jesus, the venue relocated to northern Argentina, and ending with the family's flight. Ramirez again bases his music on dances and songs from the Argentinian folk tradition, this time even more unashamedly popular: the second part of the work, La Peregrinación ('The Pilgrimage'), has become famous on the hit parade.

The music of the Missa Luba comes from the Belgian Congo, and was arranged by a missionary, Father Guido Haazen, from the improvisations of the local singers and musicians, so the accompaniment consists entirely of local percussion sounds which create the rhythmic framework for the poplar melodies.

RATHAUS, Karol (1895–1954)

Symphonies 1; 2, Op. 7; 3, Op. 50

 CPO 777 031-2. Brandenburgisches Staats O, Frankfurt, Yinon

The Polish-born Karol Rathaus enjoyed a short-lived success in Germany during the 1920s. The First Symphony was included in Decca's 'Entartete Music' series and now comes with its two companions of 1933 and 1943 in dedicated performances by the Frankfurt orchestra. Rathaus remained something of a name in the immediate post-war years but he was rarely played or recorded. Like Ernst Toch, he ended his days revered as a distinguished teacher rather than as an eminent composer. The idiom is far from 'atonal' as the anti-Semitic 1930s press had maintained: there are hints of his teacher Schreker and of Mahler, but the overall impression is of a highly gifted and inventive composer unafraid of dissonance but working well within the discipline of classical tonality. Music very much of its time, like a Teutonic Honegger, perhaps, whose argument carries you along with conviction. It is powerful and often disturbing music, which is well worth investigating, particularly in these dedicated performances. Good sound.

RAUTAVAARA, Einojuhani (born 1928)

Adagio Celeste (for string orchestra); Book of Visions; Symphony 1

🔑 * Ondine SACD ODE 1064-5. Belgian Nat. O, Franck

This is recorded in spacious four-channel SACD, which admirably suits Rautavaara's rich orchestral textures, and immediately so in the sumptuously powerful string cantilena which opens the First Symphony, written in two movements in 1955, but with a third added in 2003. Rautavaara acknowledged his debt to Shostakovich in this work, partly because of its string writing, but also because of the 'grotesque and ironic' Scherzo which closes the work.

The Adagio Celeste then follows. Inspired by a poem by Lassi Nummi which begins, 'Then, that night, when you want to love me in the deep of night, wake me', it makes an ecstatic interlude between the Symphony and the imaginatively scored four chapters of the Book of Visions, each telling a Tale: darkly of Night, feverishly of Fire, warmly and sensuously of Love, and dramatic and apprehensive in Fate. The performances throughout are superbly played by this fine orchestra and, whether using two or four speakers, the sound is richly opulent, and in the demonstration bracket for its superb recording of the strings.

Anadyomene (Adoration of Aphrodite); (i) Flute Concerto; Op. 63; (ii) On the Last Frontier

 Ondine ODE 921-2. Helsinki PO, Segerstam; with (i) Gallois; (ii) Finnish Philharmonic Ch.

Anadyomene or the Adoration of Aphrodite comes from 1969, and is highly atmospheric and compelling. The Flute Concerto, subtitled Dances with the Winds, employs bass flute, alto flute and piccolo. It is one of Rautavaara's most imaginative and resourceful scores, and its many hurdles are effortlessly cleared by the distinguished French soloist. On the Last Frontier, a fantasy for chorus and orchestra, is inspired by Edgar Allan Poe's description of Antarctica, at the end of The Narrative of Arthur Gordon Pym. Vaughan Williams occasionally comes to mind in its pages. All three pieces are expertly performed by these Helsinki forces under Leif Segerstam and superbly recorded.

Angels and Visitations; (i) Violin Concerto. Isle of Bliss

🔑 ❀ * Ondine ODE 881-2. (i) Oliveira; Helsinki PO, Segerstam

Rautavaara's wholly original Violin Concerto is hauntingly accessible and grips the listener completely. It moves from an ethereal opening cantilena, through a series of colourful events and experiences until, after a final burst of incandescent energy, it makes a sudden but positive homecoming. The lively opening of the Isle of Bliss is deceptive, for the music centres on a dreamy, sensual romanticism and creates a rich orchestral tapestry with a sense of yearning ecstasy, yet overall it has a surprisingly coherent orchestral structure. Angels and Visitations is close to the visions of William Blake and (as the composer tells us) brings a sense of 'holy dread'. The extraordinary opening evokes a rustling of angels' wings, which is then malignantly transformed, becoming a ferocious multitude of bumblebees. It is a passage of real imaginative power, in some ways comparable to the storm sequence in Sibelius's Tapiola. Elmar Oliveira is the inspired soloist in the Violin Concerto, floating his line magically and serenely in the opening Tranquillo and readily encompassing the work's adventurous shifts of colour and substance. Segerstam provides a shimmering backing and directs a committed and persuasively spontaneous orchestral response throughout all three works. The recording is superbly balanced, spacious and vivid in detail.

Angels and Visitations; Symphony 7 (Angel of Light)

(BB)  Naxos 8.555814. RSNO, Koivula

The Royal Scottish National Orchestra under Hannu Koivula are vividly recorded and have impressive body and refinement, and, while this does not displace the BIS version of Angels and Visitations, which offers two couplings, for those unwilling to make the outlay, this Naxos performance offers a very desirable three-star alternative, including a fine performance of the Seventh Symphony.

Cantus arcticus (Concerto for Birds & Orchestra), Op. 61; (i) Piano Concerto, Op. 45; Symphony 3, Op. 20

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.554147. (i) Mikkola; RSNO, Lintu

The Cantus arcticus (1972) uses taped Arctic bird-cries against an evocative orchestral background. The Third Symphony (1959–60) has genuine breadth and space. Rautavaara speaks of it as being 'freely constructed and emphatically tonal'. It has a strong feeling for nature. The later Piano Concerto 1 (1969) has a certain neo-romantic feel to it. Laura Mikkola is a fervent exponent of it, and the Royal Scottish National Orchestra under Hannu Lintu play with real commitment and are well recorded.

(i) Harp Concerto; Symphony 8

🔑 * Ondine ODE 978-2. (i) Nordmann; Helsinki PO, Segerstam

The Concerto (2001) is predominantly reflective and highly imaginative in its use of texture. In addition to the soloist, Rautavaara adds two harps in the orchestra in order, as he puts it, to create 'a really full and lush harp sound when needed'. The French soloist, Marielle Nordmann, a pupil of Lily Laskine, gives a performance of great distinction and subtlety of the Eighth Symphony. Rautavaara speaks of the musical growth of the Eighth Symphony as characterized by slow transformation, a strong narrative element and 'the generation of new, different aspects and perspectives from the same premises, the transformation of light and colour'. As always with this composer there is a strong feeling for nature. Perhaps the most haunting movement is the third, whose quiet radiance stays with the listener. Excellent playing from the Helsinki Philharmonic under Leif Segerstam and state-of-the-art recording.

Piano Concerto 3 (Gift of Dreams); Autumn Gardens

* Ondine ODE 950-2. Ashkenazy, Helsinki PO

The Third Piano Concerto is predominantly meditative and unconcerned with conventional bravura. It gets its subtitle from a Baudelaire setting, La Mort des pauvres, which Rautavaara made in the late 1970s and in which the words 'le don des rêves' appear. Autumn Gardens, from 1999, also has a dreamlike feel to it. The performances are exemplary and the recording is in the demonstration class. The disc also includes a conversation between Rautavaara and Vladimir Ashkenazy.

Symphonies 1–3

 Ondine ODE 740-2. Leipzig RSO, Pommer

Einojuhani Rautavaara is a symphonist to be reckoned with. Ideas never outstay their welcome and there is a sense of inevitability about their development. Those with a taste for Shostakovich or Simpson should find these pieces congenial. Good performances by the Leipzig Radio Orchestra under Max Pommer and very decent recorded sound too.

Symphony 6 (Vincentiana); (i) Cello Concerto, Op. 41

 Ondine ODE 819-2. (i) Ylönen; Helsinki PO, Pommer

The Sixth Symphony draws on material from the opera, Vincent (1985–7), based on the life of Van Gogh. There is, appropriately enough, no lack of colour, though the score tends to be both eclectic and amorphous. The orchestral scoring itself is quite sumptuous and there is no lack of incident. It comes with a much earlier and more cogently argued piece, the Cello Concerto of 1968, which is expertly played by Marko Ylönen. The recording is very impressive, well detailed and present, and is in the demonstration bracket.

Symphony 7 (Angel of Light); (i) Annunciations

 Ondine ODE 869-2. (i) Jussila; Helsinki PO, Segerstam

Symphony 7; Cantus arcticus; (i) Dances with the Winds (Concerto for Flutes & Orchestra)

🔑 * BIS CD 1038. (i) Alanko; Lahti SO, Vänskä

The Seventh Symphony is both powerful and atmospheric. There is a good deal of Sibelius in its first movement and there is a pervasive sense of nature. Rautavaara betrays some affinities with the minimalists but offers greater musical substance. Annunciations for organ, brass quintet, winds and percussion, written in 1976–7, strikes a more dissonant note but it is brilliant and well thought out. Kari Jussila is the virtuoso soloist, and the Helsinki orchestra under Segerstam are eminently well served by the Ondine engineers.

The BIS version of the Seventh Symphony is every bit as good as its Ondine competitor, both artistically and as a recording. The sound is pretty state-of-the-art, though its rival has the deeper perspective. But Vänskä's performance has impressive power and atmosphere; he keeps the music moving and casts the stronger spell. Both shorter pieces, the familiar Cantus arcticus and the Dances with the Winds, a concerto in which the solo flautist plays four members of the flute family, are from the 1970s, and these fine performances have appeared before in other couplings.

PIANO MUSIC

Etudes, Op. 42; Icons, Op. 6; Partita, Op. 34; Preludes, Op. 7; Piano Sonatas 1 (Christus und die Fischer), Op. 50; 2 (The Fire Sermon), Op. 64

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.554292. Mikkola

These admirably lucid performances by Laura Mikkola fill an important gap. The First Sonata (Christus und die Fischer) comes from 1969, the same year as the First Piano Concerto, which this artist has also recorded with such success, and the Second (1970) is also most convincingly done. She is given first-class recorded sound.

VOCAL MUSIC

Ave Maria; Magnificat; Canticum Mariae Virginis; Missa Duodecanonica

 Ondine ODE 935-2. Finnish R. Chamber Ch, Nuoranne

The Ave Maria (1957) for male voices and the Missa Duodecanonica (1963) for female voices are both serialist, albeit in much the same way as was Frank Martin at one time. The Magnificat of 1979, the first Finnish setting of the text, has dignity and eloquence. The singing of the Finnish Radio Chamber Choir under Timo Nuoranne has security of pitch, subtle colouring and purity of tone. Expert, well-balanced recording.

(i) Canción de nuestro tiempo; (ii) In the Shade of the Willow; (i; iii) True and False Unicorn

 Ondine ODE 1020-2. (i) Kortekangas, Rissanen, Salomaa; (ii) Huhta; Finnish R. Chamber Ch.; (iii) with SO, Nuoranne

The setting of James Broughton's True and False Unicorn is a 45-minute work, often inventive and imaginative, and nearly always compelling, though the Horn and Hounds section with its quotations including 'God save the Queen' does not really come off. However, the writing is always effective and the Holstian opening of Mon seul désir, the closing section of the piece, is rather haunting. The other two pieces are for voices alone and exhibit much command of vocal resource and colour. The Canción de nuestro tiempo, to three Lorca poems, is highly inventive, and the Aleksis Kivi settings, In the Shade of the Willow, prove admirable vehicles for the virtuosity of the Finnish Radio Chamber Choir and their soloists.

Hymnus; Independence Fanfare; Octet for Winds; Playgrounds for Angels; A Requiem in our Time, Op. 3; A Soldier's Mass; Tarantara

 Ondine ODE 957-2. Soloists, Finnish Brass Symphony, Lintu

A Requiem in our Time for brass and percussion put Rautavaara on the map. Rautavaara speaks of A Soldier's Mass (1968) as 'a companion work', although the forces involved are larger (it demands a full wind section) and the mood lighter. The Octet for Winds (1962) is mildly serial, but in no way inaccessible. Both the Requiem and the ingenious Playgrounds for Angels, the virtuoso piece written for the Philip Jones Brass Ensemble, are also available in a stunning BIS anthology by the German group, Brass Partout (BIS CD 1054) which is not easily eclipsed. The rest of the programme is not otherwise available: Hymnus, for trumpet and organ was written recently for the Wagner scholar and critic, Barry Millington; Tarantara is for solo trumpet and played brilliantly by Pasi Pirinen, as for that matter is the rest of the programme. The recording is of demonstration quality.

RAVEL, Maurice (1875–1937)

Alborada del gracioso; Une barque sur l'océan; Boléro; (i) Daphnis et Chloé (complete ballet); L'Eventail de Jeanne: Fanfare; (ii) Introduction & Allegro for Harp, Flute, Clarinet & String Orchestra; Ma Mère l'Oye (complete ballet); Menuet antique; Pavane pour une infante défunte; Shéhérazade: Ouverture de féerie; Le Tombeau de Couperin; Trio in A min. (orch. Tortelier); Tzigane (for violin and orchestra); La Valse; Valses nobles et sentimentales; Song-cycles: (iii) Don Quichotte à Dulcinée; (iv) Shéhérazade

Ⓜ (*) Chan. 10251X (4). Ulster O, Tortelier; with (i) Renaissance Singers, Belfast Philharmonic Soc.; (ii) Masters; (iii) Roberts; (iv) Finnie; (v) Tortelier (violin)

Tortelier's Daphnis et Chloé soon puts you under its spell: he conveys much of the sense of ecstasy and magic of this score and colours so richly hued and vivid that they belong to the world of the imagination rather than reality. Phrasing is sensitive, and there are some gorgeous sounds throughout.

Ma Mère l'Oye has a more balletic feel than usual, bringing out the affinities with Daphnis et Chloé. The exotic orchestration associated with Laideronnette, Empress of the Pagodas glitters vividly, while the lovely closing Jardin féerique, begins serenely before moving to a joyous climax. Tortelier's Rapsodie espagnole is not quite as gripping as some celebrated accounts, but it is highly atmospheric all the same.

Whether or not Ravel approved of full strings, the Introduction and Allegro loses some of its ethereal quality when given in this form, although the playing of the harpist, Rachel Masters, is impeccable. In Tortelier's own transcription of the Piano Trio although Tortelier's skill and musicianship are not in question, this transcription is not one to which many will want to return. Tortelier directs the Tzigane from the bow, as it were, and plays very well, and this and the performances of Le Tombeau de Couperin, La Valse and Valses nobles have plenty of appeal.

The Ouverture de féerie is impressive, as is Linda Finnie's account of the Shéhérazade song-cycle. No grumbles about Stephen Roberts's fine singing in the Don Quichotte songs, but overall this set has uneven appeal and will best suit those for whom outstanding recorded quality is paramount.

Alborada del gracioso; Une barque sur l'océan; Boléro; Daphnis et Chloé (Suite 2); L'Eventail de Jeanne: Fanfare; Menuet antique; Ma Mère l'Oye (complete); Pavane pour une enfante défunte; Rapsodie espagnole; Le Tombeau de Couperin; La Valse; Valses nobles et sentimentales

🔑 ✿ * Double Decca 460 214-2 (2). Montreal SO, Dutoit

Anyone beginning a Ravel collection, or coming fresh to most of this repertoire and willing to duplicate, will find this Double Decca unbeatable value, including as it does all the key orchestral works, though not the piano concertos. The orchestral playing is wonderfully sympathetic and the recording ideally combines atmospheric evocation with vividness. The balance is most musically judged and very realistic; indeed the sound remains in the demonstration class.

Alborada del gracioso; Une barque sur l'océan; Boléro; (i) Daphnis et Chloé (complete); Ma Mère

l'Oye (complete); Menuet antique; Ouverture de féerie; Pavane pour une infante défunte; Rapsodie espagnole; Le Tombeau de Couperin; La Valse; Valses nobles et sentimentales

🔑 Ⓑ * EMI (ADD) 5 00892-2 (3). O de Paris, Martinon; (i) with Paris Op. Ch.

Like his version of Daphnis et Chloé, Martinon's Ma Mère l'Oye is exquisite, among the finest ever put on record. Although the Valses nobles et sentimentales and La Valse do not eclipse the 1961 Cluytens versions (see below) and the present La Valse has a rather harsh climax, there is much ravishing delicacy of orchestral playing, notably in Le Tombeau de Couperin and the rare Ouverture de féerie (Shéhérazade). The sound is warm and luminously coloured and the refined virtuosity of the Orchestre de Paris is a constant source of delight. Excellent value.

(i) Alborada de gracioso; Boléro; (i–ii) Piano Concerto in G; (i–ii or iii) Piano Concerto for the left hand (2 versions); (i) Daphnis et Chloé (complete ballet); Fanfare pour 'L'Éventail de Jeanne'; Ma Mère l'Oye; also excerpt: (iv) Le jardin féerique; (i–ii) Miroirs: La vallée des cloches (orch. Grainger); La valse; (i; v) Shéhérazade (song cycle)

(BB)  EMI (ADD/DDD) 5 14565-2 (5). (i) CBSO; (ii) with Ousset; (iii) Gavrilov, LSO; (iv) BPO; (v) Ewing; all cond. Rattle – DEBUSSY: La Boîte à joujoux; Images; Jeux etc. ***

There are few collections which offer two different versions of the same work, but here there are two performances of the Left-hand Piano Concerto: a fine account by Cécile Ousset (with the CBSO) and a dazzling one from Gavrilov (with the LSO), playing with effortless virtuosity and, when required, great sensitivity. Ousset, although combining vigour with delicacy, is rather less memorable in the G major Concerto. The shorter orchestral works, however, are nearly all distinctive and the CBSO has the advantage of outstandingly spacious recording. Rattle captures the lambent allure of Percy Grainger's orchestration of the last of the Miroirs and gives an equally glowing account of Ma Mère l'Oye, with delicately refined textures and the more exotic detail glittering amid the orchestral warmth. The lovely finale is then heard again, magically played by the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra. La valse returns to the CBSO and sounds gorgeous too. At the beginning of the programme, Maria Ewing's Shéhérazade immediately follows Ravel's vivid Fanfare. The first song, Asie, is a performance of unbridled passion, matched in voluptuous intensity by Rattle and his players, so that L'indifférent ravishes in a more subtle manner, with the intensity simmering below the surface. But it is essentially a dramatic performance, and the shimmering Alborada del gracioso is well placed to follow on afterwards.

(i; ii) Alborado del gracioso; (i; iii) Boléro; (iv) Piano Concerto in G; (ii; v) Daphnis et Chloé: Suite No. 2; (vi) Ma Mère l'Oye: Suite; (ii; vii) Pavane pour une infante défunte; (vi) La Valse; (viii) Introduction and Allegro; (ix) Gaspard de la nuit; (x) Shéhérazade

Ⓝ (BB)  EMI (ADD) 237671-2 (2). (i) Karajan; (ii) O de Paris; (iii) BPO; (iv) Michelangeli, Philh. O, Gracis; (v) Munch; (vi) Toulouse O, Plasson; (vii) Martinon; (viii) Melos Ens.; (ix) Gavrilov; (x) Baker, New Philh. O, Barbirolli

Michelangeli's classic account of the Piano Concerto in G remains one of the top choices in this repertoire. The exquisite playing in the slow movement makes up for any deficiencies of dimensional balance. The Melos Ensemble give us a highly sensitive account of the Introduction and Allegro, almost as magical as their earlier Oiseau-Lyre version, while Janet Baker inspired Barbirolli to one of his most glowing performances in the atmospherically scored Shéhérazade. Few recordings have conveyed as much natural intensity as this, and the recording is warm to match. Munch is predictably impressive in the Daphnis Suite, and if Plasson's performances are not equally memorable, they are well played and idiomatic, while Gavrilov is on top form in Gaspard. Karajan's Alborada is a bit slow but full of atmosphere, and his Boléro is marvellously controlled and full of tension. Martinon's contribution of the Pavane pour une infante défunte is memorably poetic.

Alborada del gracioso; Boléro; Rapsodie espagnole; Le Tombeau de Couperin; La Valse

🔑 Ⓜ * EMI (ADD) 4 76859-2 [4 76860-2]. O de Paris (or, in Boléro, BPO), Karajan

🔑 (BB)  RCA 74321 68015-2. Dallas SO, Mata

These are superb performances. The Orchestre de Paris responds splendidly to the conductor's sensuous approach to these scores, and only the saxophone-like quality of the French horns gives cause for doubt. The dynamic range is extremely wide and the acoustic resonant. There is no doubt about the mastery of La Valse, which is extremely fine, or the Rapsodie espagnole, the best account since Reiner's. The Alborada is a bit too slow; doubtless the reverberant acoustic prompted this and also brought a degree of mistiness in pianissimo detail (noticeably at the opening of La Valse). But the overall focus is impressive, and the climaxes expand excitingly. Boléro is superbly done.

In the late 1970s Eduarda Mata helped to build the Dallas Orchestra into a splendid band, and their excellence and his stylish conducting (helped by the splendid acoustics of the Dallas auditorium) was demonstrated by a series of outstanding Ravel recordings made in the early 1980s. The Alborada flashes, the Rapsodie espagnole shimmers and there is a balmy underlying patina of sensuous colour. Mata and his players are at their most impressive in Le Tombeau de Couperin, which has pleasing elegance and finesse and the expansive climaxes of Boléro and La Valse are very compelling. The recording has the most spectacular dynamic range and at bargain price this collection is most recommendable, standing up well to all the competition.

(i) Alborado del gracioso; Boléro; Rapsodie espagnole; Le Tombeau de Couperin; (ii) Valses nobles et sentimentales

(BB) (*) Sony (ADD) SBK 48163. Phd; O, (i) Ormandy; (ii) Munch

Ormandy was a first-class Ravel conductor. These performances are eminently well worth the money at bargain price, even if the recording is not three-star by present-day standards.

Alborada del gracioso; (i) Daphnis et Chloé: Suites 1 & 2; Une barque sur l'océan; Menuet antique

((*)) Testament mono SBT 1238. French Nat. R. O, Cluytens; (i) with ch. – BIZET: La Jolie fille de Perth (*); ROUSSEL: Le Festin de l'araignée ***

Cluytens's recording of these Ravel pieces is thoroughly idiomatic even if his later stereo versions sound better and are arguably superior artistically. The earlier versions come from 1953 and the Daphnis suites are unusual for that period in including the chorus. Une barque sur l'océan sounds eminently fresh though the later Conservatoire Orchestra version has the benefit of stereo. The coupling brings Le Festin de l'araignée, a magical account of Roussel's inspired score which has never been surpassed.

Alborada del gracioso; Daphnis et Chloé: Suite 2

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * EMI 5 62746-2. Philh. O, Giulini – DEBUSSY: La Mer; Nocturnes. **** ✿

Giulini's 1959 accounts of these two key works are not only among the most polished Ravel performances on record, but they are also richly sensuous, with the most refined detail and an exquisite feeling for atmosphere. The Alborada has great rhythmic flair and the sumptuous Kingsway Hall recordings reveal remarkable inner clarity as well as giving the orchestra a glowing overall bloom, which the CD transfer captures perfectly. The Debussy couplings are no less distinguished.

Alborada del gracioso; Daphnis et Chloé; Ma Mère l'Oye: Suite; Pavane pour une infante défunte; Rapsodie espagnole; Le Tombeau de Couperin; Valses nobles et sentimentales

Ⓝ () Australian Decca Eloquence mono 442 8321 (2). SRO, Ansermet

Australian Decca have chosen to release Ansermet's much rarer mono recordings of Ravel's orchestral music which are, if anything, finer than the brilliantly recorded stereo remakes; for one thing, the orchestra is generally in better shape. The Rapsodie espagnole opens with haunting atmosphere as well as poetry, while, as ever, his rhythmic pulse brings out Ravel's subtle rhythmic fluctuations. The Alborada del gracioso is similarly possessed of much inner vitality, and if the following Pavane pour une infante défunte is perhaps a bit cool (there was some curious 'crackle' in our reproduction of this work, perhaps a faulty CD) the Valses nobles et sentimentales finds the conductor on top form, with a sensuous vitality which is commanding. The following Ma Mère l'Oye is given an enchanting performance, with the most shapely phrasing of the strings in the opening Prélude. Ansermet's account of the complete Daphnis et Chloé isn't quite in the Munch/Monteux league, but it is very good all the same. In the Bacchanale (Danse générale) there is a gripping tension and sensuality using a fairly slow and unyielding tempo. Ansermet never forgot that this music was written for dance. From the very opening he creates a superb atmosphere (even if the nasal quality of the oboe does occasionally jar in this work). This second CD is followed by a stylish account of Le Tombeau de Couperin – with Ansermet in his element.

Alborada del gracioso; Pavane pour une infante défunte; Rapsodie espagnole; Le Tombeau de Couperin; Valses nobles et sentimentales

(BB) (*) EMI Encore 5 85078-2. RPO, Previn

Opening with a provocatively languorous account of Valses nobles et sentimentales, lazy of tempo and affectionately indulgent, Previn's whole 1986 collection is imbued with sentient warmth. It even pervades Le Tombeau de Couperin, although, with some delectable oboe playing, this retains its neoclassical lightness of character. The Rapsodie espagnole is unashamedly sultry and the effect throughout is helped by the glowing EMI recording.

Alborada del gracioso; Pavane pour une infante défunte; Rapsodie espagnole; Valses nobles et sentimentales

🔑 ✿ Ⓑ * RCA 74321 88692-2 (2). Chicago SO, Reiner – DEBUSSY: Images: Ibéria. La Mer ✿ *; MUSSORGSKY: Pictures **(*)

These performances are in an altogether special class. In the Rapsodie espagnole the Prélude à la nuit is heavy with fragrance and atmosphere; never have the colours in the Féria glowed more luminously, while the Malagueña glitters with iridescence. In the years since it first appeared on LP, this is the recording we have turned to whenever we wanted to hear the work for pleasure. No one captures its sensuous atmosphere so completely as did Reiner, and the recorded sound, with its natural concert-hall balance, still sounds pretty amazing. The recording is improved in terms of clarity and definition, even if with the digital remastering the fortissimo upper range of the violins has become sharper and less natural in focus.

Boléro

Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 447 426-2. BPO, Karajan – DEBUSSY: La Mer; MUSSORGSKY: Pictures ***

Boléro; Daphnis et Chloé: Suite 2

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 477 716-1. BPO, Karajan – DEBUSSY: La Mer; Prélude ***

Karajan's 1964 Boléro is a hypnotically gripping performance, with the Berlin Philharmonic at the top of its form. The couplings on both discs show Karajan at his very finest.

(i) Boléro; (ii) Daphnis et Chloé Suites 1 & 2; Ma Mère l'Oye (complete)

Ⓝ  Pentatone PTC SACD 5186 167. (i) Rotterdam PO, De Waart; (ii) Concg. O, Haitink

Haitink's 1971 Ravel performances, with beautifully focused detail, make this CD a very attractive proposition. The performance of Ma Mère l'Oye is very special indeed, with wonderfully refined orchestral playing and a magical atmosphere. The Daphnis et Chloé Suites emerge here with greater sparkle than they did on LP and the Danse générale is very exciting indeed. De Waart's account of the Boléro is straightforward, somewhat unyielding, but not low in tension, and again very well recorded. The SACD sound simply amazes in its richness, warmth and detail.

Boléro; Daphnis et Chloé: Suite 2; Ma Mère l'Oye: suite; Pavane pour une infante défunte; La Valse

🔑 * Telarc CD 80601. Cincinnati SO, Järvi

An outstanding collection in every way, gloriously recorded in the rich ambience of Cincinnati's Music Hall. Paavo Järvi secures performances which are beautifully played, affectionately detailed, warmly sensuous and radiantly textured (especially Ma Mère l'Oye, which is more romantic than usual). The brightly paced Boléro and the expansive but equally magnetic La Valse both move to thrilling climaxes, the former with a characteristically spectacular bass drum. The wide dynamic range increases the drama of the interpretations – and indeed the spectacle of the demonstration-standard sound. Highly recommended.

(i) Boléro; Daphnis et Chloé: Suite 2; Ma Mère l'Oye: Suite; (ii) Rapsodie espagnole; La Valse

(*) Australian Decca Eloquence ADD 466 667-2. (i) LAPO, Mehta; (ii) LSO, Monteux

Mehta's Ravel is very high powered, but the visceral excitement he produces is most compelling. La Valse is full of tension, and the Daphnis Suite builds up to a splendid climax. Ma Mère l'Oye is brilliantly played too, although here the music's sense of gentle rapture is less fully realized. Not surprisingly, Boléro is a great success. Throughout, one marvels at the vivid Decca sound and the brilliance of the playing of the Los Angeles orchestra, and one feels that this period (late 1960s and 1970s) was Mehta's golden recording era. Monteux's LSO account of the Rapsodie espagnole is justly famous; it is a memorably glowing account, drenched in atmosphere, and, despite some tape hiss, it still sparkles.

Boléro; (i) Daphnis et Chloé: Suite 2; Ma Mère l'Oye (suite); Valses nobles et sentimentales

(BB) * Naxos 8.550173. (i) Slovak Philharmonic Ch.; Slovak RSO (Bratislava), Jean

The Slovak Radio Orchestra, which is a fine body and is superbly recorded, respond warmly to Kenneth Jean. At the price, this is very good value indeed; the Ma Mère l'Oye can hold its own alongside all but the most distinguished competition: indeed Les Entretiens de la belle et de la bête is as keenly characterized as Dutoit at mid-price, and Le Jardin féerique is enchanting.

Boléro; Daphnis et Chloé: Suite 2; Rapsodie espagnole

Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 67595-2. O de Paris, Munch – HONEGGER: Symphony 2 ***

Munch recorded these Ravel pieces in 1968, shortly before his death on tour with the newly founded Orchestre de Paris. They bear the hallmark of his personality, intensity of expression and wonderful finesse. Excellent sound.

Boléro; Ma Mère l'Oye; Rapsodie espagnole

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.110154. Boston SO, Koussevitzky – MUSSORGSKY: Pictures at an Exhibition ((*))

Koussevitzky's feeling for Ravel is second to none. There is a certain want of enchantment in the first two movements of Ma Mère l'Oye, but for the most part criticism is silenced.

Boléro; Rapsodie espagnole; La Valse

Ⓜ (*) RCA (ADD) SACD 82876 66374-2. Boston SO, Munch – DEBUSSY: Images ***

Munch's recordings originally appeared together on a single LP which was reviewed by us in the very first Stereo Record Guide in 1960. We found the sound in Boléro 'full-blooded yet well separated, the harp beautifully balanced in the opening music and the side-drum clear as a bell at the beginning and dominating the climax. The Boston trombone soloist does not slur his tune with glissandi (as on the recording which the composer himself supervises). Munch used the Rapsodie to show the orchestra's prowess in the many sparkling coloured effects it contains, with the percussion section marvellously captured and the string glissandi also. The Spanish condiment is not missing and the whole thing is highly entertaining.' We were much less happy with Munch's La Valse and thought it 'an unsubtle performance, for he presses the music to a frenzy in its final climax'.

Piano Concerto in G

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * EMI (ADD) 5 67238-2. Michelangeli, Philh. O, Gracis – RACHMANINOV: Piano Concerto 4. **** ✿

(*) Sup. SU 3714-2 031. Moravec, Prague Philh., Bělohlávek – BEETHOVEN: Piano Concerto 4; FRANCK: Symphonic Variations *

(*) DG 477 659-3. Yundi Li, BPO, Ozawa – PROKOFIEV: Piano Concerto 2 *

Michelangeli's slow movement is ravishing, and the sparkle of the outer movements is underpinned by a refined Ravelian sensitivity. The remastering of the early stereo master (1957) is wholly beneficial, the sound full yet remarkably transparent in revealing detail.

Playing of great delicacy and effortless virtuosity from Yundi Li. Ozawa gives sympathetic support.

The lightness and clarity typical of the veteran Czech pianist Ivan Moravec brings out the neoclassical element in the Ravel G major Concerto, with Bělohlávek colourfully touching in the jazz influences. The slow movement is at once poised, rapt and poetic, the more moving for the degree of understatement, and Moravec characteristically manages a velvety legato with only the lightest use of the pedal. In the extrovert finale Bělohlávek more than ever relishes the jazz element, while Moravec brings his usual clarity to the rushing figuration.

Piano Concerto in G; Piano Concerto in D for the Left Hand

(BB)  Warner Apex (ADD) 8573 89232-2. Queffélec, Strasbourg PO, Lombard – DEBUSSY: Fantaisie for Piano & Orchestra ***

 Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 476 235-2. de Larrocha, LPO, Foster – FAURÉ: Fantasie for Piano & Orchestra ; FRANCK: Symphonic Variations ***

(*) Chan. 8773. Lortie, LSO, Frühbeck de Burgos – FAURÉ: Ballade *

(i) Piano Concerto in G; Piano Concerto for the Left Hand; (ii) Tzigane

Ⓝ () Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 480 0070. SRO, Ansermet; with (i) Blancard; (ii) Ricci

(i; ii) Piano Concerto in G; Piano Concerto for the Left Hand; (ii) La Valse; (i) Valses nobles et sentimentales (for piano)

Ⓑ  CfP (ADD) 587 029-2. (i) Fowke; (ii) LPO, Baudo

(i; ii) Piano Concerto in G; (i; iii) Piano Concerto for the Left Hand; (ii) Valses nobles et sentimentales

🔑 ✿ * DG 449 213-2. (i) Zimerman; (ii) Cleveland O; (iii) LSO; Boulez

(i) Piano Concerto in G; Gaspard de la nuit

🔑 Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 447 438-2. Argerich; (i) BPO, Abbado – PROKOFIEV: Piano Concerto 3 ***

Zimerman's G major Concerto, the Valses nobles et sentimentales and the Left-hand Concerto are well nigh perfect in every respect. Boulez's account of the Valses nobles is quite wonderfully atmospheric, indeed magical, and in the concertos the delicacy and finesse of Krystian Zimerman's pianism is dazzling, his refinement of nuance and clarity of articulation a source of wonder. Beautifully balanced and finely detailed recording.

Argerich's half-tones and clear fingerwork give the G major Concerto unusual delicacy, but its urgent virility – with jazz an important element – comes over the more forcefully by contrast. The compromise between coolness and expressiveness in the slow Minuet of the middle movement is tantalizingly sensual. Her Gaspard de la nuit abounds in character and colour. The remastered recordings sound first class.

Anne Queffélec's accounts of both Ravel concertos are thoughtful and imaginative and often bringing an enticing languor, yet without loss of sparkle in the outer movements of the G major. She is a thorough musician with a considerable technique and no mean sense of poetry and her approach is refreshing. The excellent Strasbourg Orchestra under Alain Lombard give her admirable support, and the recording is well balanced in a warm acoustic.

The performances of both the Concertos by Philip Fowke with Baudo and the LPO are particularly attractive in the way they bring out the jazzy side of Ravel's inspiration with winning results. In the slow movement of the G major Concerto the Spanish overtones also come out strongly, and Fowke's solo playing in the Valses nobles et sentimentales is clean, bright and rhythmic in a muscular way, without ever becoming brutal or unfeeling; nor does he lack poetry. Baudo and the orchestra also give a strongly characterized reading of La Valse. Excellent 1988 recording – irresistible at bargain price.

Alicia de Larrocha's 1972 recordings of the Ravel piano concertos have been somewhat elusive on CD, making this Australian release very welcome indeed. The performances are excellent, with de Larrocha, in her distinctive way, finding plenty of colour and sparkle in these wonderful concertos; and she is very well supported by Lawrence Foster and the Decca recording. The couplings are excellent too.

Louis Lortie's account of the two Concertos on Chandos has the advantage of altogether outstanding recording. In the G major he is often highly personal without becoming unduly idiosyncratic, with a fastidious sense of colour at his command. In the Left-hand Concerto he really takes his time over the cadenzas and his agogic hesitations are sometimes over-indulgent. Immaculate playing as such, and superb recording.

In the darker Piano Concerto for the Left Hand, Ansermet commands an impressive grip on the movement's structure, allowing plenty of detail to emerge. But the piano sounds thin, even if it is quite well-balanced. Blancard was the first pianist to record this concerto (this was her second attempt) and though she is not the most inspired pianist on record, she is thoroughly inside the music. The quality at the opening of the G major concerto is initially disconcertingly dry and forward; but the performance makes one almost forget such limitations, with the slow movement richly poised and the finale with an enjoyable elegance. The soloist's articulation is impressively clear. Ricci's brilliantly played and recorded stereo version of the Tzigane is well known and always thoroughly enjoyable.

Daphnis et Chloé (ballet; complete)

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * RCA (ADD) SACD 82876 61388-2. New England Conservatory & Alumni Ch., Boston SO, Munch

Daphnis et Chloé (complete); Pavane pour une infante défunte; Rapsodie espagnole

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca 475 7525. LSO, Monteux

Charles Munch's Boston account is one of the great glories of the 1950s. The playing in all departments of the Boston Orchestra is simply electrifying. The sound here may not be as sumptuous as the Dutoit on Decca, but the richness of colour lies in the playing, and there is a heady sense of intoxication that at times sweeps you off your feet, and the integration of the chorus is impressively managed. Try the Danse de supplication de Chloé and the ensuing scene in which the pirates are put to flight, and you will get a good idea of how dazzling this is, with the ballet ending in tumultuous orchestral virtuosity. The SACD transfer offers a little more ambience than the CD and the effect is quite glorious.

Monteux conducted the first performance of Daphnis et Chloé in 1912 and it is a matter for gratitude that his poetic and subtly shaded reading should have been recorded in such astonishingly realistic sound which hardly sounds dated even now. It was made in the Kingsway Hall in 1959, with John Culshaw the producer. The Pavane and Rapsodie espagnole came two years later, in 1961, with Erik Smith in charge. The LSO again play superbly for Monteux and he achieves a balance and a contrast between a mood of quiet introspection for the opening of the Rapsodie and a vivid, flashing brilliance for the Féria. The Pavane is wonderfully poised, and is played most beautifully. An ideal choice for Decca's Originals label.

Daphnis et Chloë: Suite 2 (DVD version)

Ⓝ * Sony DVD 88697202449. BPO, Karajan – DEBUSSY: La mer; Prélude á l'après-midi d'un faune ****

A magical account of Daphnis. Perhaps Karajan's DG recording on LP during the mid-1960s was even more sumptuous, but this superbly controlled and beautifully recorded performance still captivates, and it is expertly directed for the cameras. It was recorded at the Philharmonie in 1987, two years before his death.

Daphnis et Chloé: Suite 2 (CD version)

(*) BBC (ADD) BBCL 4039-2. Philh. O, Boult – BIZET: Jeux d'enfants; SCHUBERT: Symphony 8 (Unfinished); SIBELIUS: Symphony 7 **(*)

RL recalls hearing Sir Adrian conduct Daphnis in the early 1950s and being astonished by his slow tempo in Lever du jour. He subsequently learnt that Boult had adopted Ravel's tempo, after Boult had heard the composer conduct the piece in the 1920s. It really feels too slow all the same, but his account has a finely controlled sensuousness that is very persuasive. Excellent sound.

Daphnis et Chloé: Suite 2; Pavane pour une infante défunte

🔑 Ⓜ  Häns. CD 93013. Stuttgart SW RSO, Prêtre – BIZET: Symphony in C ***

() Testament mono SBT 1017. Philh. O, Cantelli – CASELLA: Paganiniana; DUKAS: L'Apprenti sorcier; FALLA: Three-Cornered Hat ()

Prêtre shapes the opening of Daybreak with an ecstatic richness of line, the Stuttgart strings gloriously expansive. There is some radiant woodwind playing too in the Pantomime and the principal flute of this fine orchestra plays his famous solo with scintillating brilliance leading on to a thrillingly zestful Danse générale. La Valse rises out of the mists and Prêtre's string phrasing is again passionately seductive, the final climax thrillingly impulsive yet still controlled. This is 'live' music-making at its finest, and the warm ambience of the digital recording is just right for it.

Cantelli's account of Daphnis was among his last – and finest – records. It sounds remarkably good in this splendid transfer and has classic status.

Daphnis et Chloé: Suite 2

 Sony 88869 7123632. Bav. RSO, Jansons – BARTÓK: Concerto for Orchestra; Miraculous Mandarin: Suite **(*)

The Bavarian Radio Orchestra is magnificent, with particularly lush string-tone. Collectors who recall Jansons's performance with the Oslo Philharmonic will know how seductive his Ravel is. This is among the best of the most recent Daphnises.

Daphnis et Chloé: Suite 2; Rapsodie espagnole

* DG 477 7175. NYPO, Maazel – STRAVINSKY: Chant du rossignol; Firebird Suite ***

Not only are these two of the finest recordings ever to be made in the Avery Fisher Hall, but Maazel's performances are full of life and spontaneity, and the NYPO plays superbly. The opening Daybreak from Daphnis is gloriously evoked, with lustrous string phrasing and with the birds twittering in the dawn light. The same exotic atmosphere permeates the Rapsodie espagnole, which is richly atmospheric throughout, with rhythms nudged seductively, and the finales of both works are thrillingly played.

Ma Mère l'Oye (suite)

Ⓑ (*) CfP 586 1752. LPO, Edwards (with DEBUSSY: Children's Corner: 3 Pieces) – BRITTEN: Young Person's Guide ; PROKOFIEV: Peter and the Wolf **(*)

Warm and beautiful playing from the LPO under Sian Edwards, but Ravel's magical score does not yield all its secrets here; its sense of gentle, innocent ecstasy is missing. But the recording is excellent.

Ma Mère l'Oye (suite; with narration)

(BB)  Naxos 8.554463. Morris (nar.), Slovak RSO, Jean – DUKAS: L'Apprenti sorcier; SAINT-SAËNS: Carnival of the Animals **(*)

Ma Mère l'Oye is exquisite music and it is most beautifully played by the Slovak Orchestra under Kenneth Jean. Johnny Morris provides a friendly spoken introduction for each fairy-tale number which has been admirably and concisely written by Keith and Anthony Anderson. To link them with Ravel's music is surely a marvellous way of familiarizing younger children with the music.

Ma Mère l'Oye: Suite; La Valse

 MDG SACD 9371099-2; CD 337 1099-2. Orchester der Beethovenhalle, Bonn, Soustrot – DEBUSSY: Le Martyre de Saint-Sébastien ***

Soustrot gives a simple, dedicated reading of Ma Mère l'Oye, with the tender delicacy of Ravel's score glowingly revealed by the warm sensitivity of the players. The opening of La Valse, too, has an almost ethereal quality, but there is no lack of drama later. Indeed, Soustrot's approach, with careful attention to detail, allows the dramatic elements of the score to emerge without the exaggerated point-making one sometimes encounters in this score. The recording is beautifully balanced, with the natural concert-hall acoustic combining clarity with a warm ambience. On SACD it sounds even more beautiful.

Menuet antique; Pavane pour une infante défunte; Le Tombeau de Couperin; (i) Shéhérazade

 DG 471 614-2. Cleveland O, Boulez; (i) with von Otter – DEBUSSY: Danses; Le Jet d'eau; 3 Ballades de François Villon ***

Even those who do not always admire Boulez tend to respond to his Ravel, and there is no reason not to do so in this well-planned release. The delicacy and elegance of Le Tombeau are well conveyed, and Anne Sofie von Otter gives a beautiful account of the magical Shéhérazade, one of the best to appear in recent years. The recorded sound and the balance are first class.

Rapsodie espagnole

*() BBCL (ADD) 4205-2. New Philh. O, Stokowski (with: KLEMPERER: Merry Waltz; NOVÁČEK: Perpetuum mobile) – BRAHMS: Symphony 4 *(); VAUGHAN WILLIAMS: Tallis Fantasia **(*)

Atmosphere is a vital ingredient in a performance of the Rapsodie espanole, and Stokowski provides it here in plenty. Despite the odd audience distraction, this is a compelling reading, with the pianissimos especially spine-tingling. Acceptable 1974 sound.

Tzigane (for violin and orchestra)

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 62599-2. Perlman, O de Paris, Martinon (with MASSENET: Thaïs: Méditation) – CHAUSSON: Poème; SAINT-SAËNS: Havanaise, etc. ***

Ⓜ  DG 447 445-2. Perlman, NYPO, Mehta – BERG; STRAVINSKY: Concertos ***

Perlman's classic (1974) account of Ravel's Tzigane for EMI is marvellously played; the added projection of the CD puts the soloist believably at the end of the living-room and the orchestral sound retains its atmosphere.

Perlman's later digital version is very fine and the recording is obviously modern. But the earlier, EMI performance has just that bit more charisma.

La valse; Valses nobles et sentimentales

Ⓝ () VAI mono DVD 4226. Chicago SO, Munch (with BERLIOZ: Royal Hunt and Storm; RAMEAU, arr. D'INDY: Dardanus suite; cond. Monteux: BEETHOVEN: Symphony 8; BERLIOZ: Carnaval romain; WAGNER: Die Meistersinger: Prelude to Act III)

The Valses nobles is arguably the finest account of the piece we have heard. The sound on this black-and-white telecast of 1963 is far from ideal, but the performance has immense charm and character. The Valses nobles is perfectly paced, much more relaxed than we hear nowadays and with plenty of time for the artists to breathe. This is a model of Ravel style and, watching Munch, one realizes how naturally his charm captivates his players. The DVD is self-recommending, as it includes some fine Berlioz from both Munch and Monteux (recorded in 1961) and a splendidly characteristic Beethoven Eighth from the latter.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Berceuse; Pièce en forme de habanera; Tzigane

 DG 445 880-2. Dumay, Pires – DEBUSSY; FRANCK: Violin Sonatas ***

Polished and elegant performances of these Ravel pieces. No complaints about the recording quality.

Introduction & Allegro for Harp, Flute, Clarinet & String Quartet

() Testament mono SBT 1053. Gleghorn, Lurie, Stockton, Hollywood Qt – CRESTON: Quartet; DEBUSSY: Danse sacrée, etc.; TURINA: La oración del torero; VILLA-LOBOS: Quartet 6 ()

(i) Introduction & Allegro; (ii) Pièce en forme de habanera

🔑 Ⓑ  Cala CACD 1018 (2). Campbell; (i) Bennett, Jones, Allegri Qt; (ii) York – POULENC: L'Invitation au château, etc. ***

The Cala performances are recommendable in their own right, but they come in a particularly valuable two-CD set for the price of one, which includes over two hours of music for wind instruments by Poulenc. It is sheer delight from start to finish and cannot be too strongly recommended.

The Hollywood Quartet's version of the Introduction and Allegro gives us an example of the exquisite flute playing of Arthur Gleghorn as well as the artistry of Mitchell Lurie and Ann Mason Stockton. A fine performance, sounding remarkably fresh for a 1951 recording.

Introduction & Allegro for Harp, Flute, Clarinet & String Quartet; String Quartet in G min.

🔑 Ⓑ * CfP (ADD) 3 82231-2. (i) Klinko, Soloists of Paris Bastille Op. O; (ii) Chilingirian Qt – DEBUSSY: String Quartet ****

Markus Klinko and his colleagues from the Orchestre de l'Opéra de Paris Bastille give one of the most satisfying accounts of Ravel's Introduction and Allegro to have appeared in recent years. It is beautifully played, finely balanced and is done with impeccable taste. In the String Quartet the Chilingirians have plenty of body and also the benefit of a warm acoustic. They give a thoroughly committed account, with well-judged tempi and very musical phrasing. The Scherzo is vital and spirited and there is no want of poetry in the slow movement. At bargain price this is very good value inded.

Piano Trio in A min.

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 67114. Florestan Trio – DEBUSSY; FAURÉ: Piano Trios ****

 HMC 1951967. Trio Wanderer – CHAUSSON: Trio ***

 Chan. 8458. Borodin Trio – DEBUSSY: Violin & Cello Sonatas ***

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550934. Joachim Trio – DEBUSSY: Piano Trio in G; SCHMITT: Piano Trio: Très lent **(*)

Led by the masterly pianist Susan Tomes, the Florestan Trio give an outstanding account of the Ravel masterpiece. They generally adopt speeds on the fast side, but with no feeling of haste, thanks to playing at once highly polished and flexibly expressive. The couplings are unique and apt, with each composer represented at a different period of his career. Vivid sound.

The Borodin Trio are excellently recorded and their playing has great warmth and is full of colour. Some may find them too hot-blooded by the side of the Florestan Trio.

The Naxos version by the Joachim Trio is worth any collector's notice. They play with sensitive musicianship and finesse. Their performance is imaginative and beautifully recorded.

Piano Trio in A min.; Violin Sonata in G; Violin Sonata posth.; Sonata for Violin & Cello

 Virgin 5 45492-2. R. & G. Capuçon, Braley

Both the Capuçon brothers, are first-rate players, and the pianist, too, is excellent – very sensitive in pianissimos, though once or twice a little too overpowering in louder passages. However, this does not detract from what are by any standards first-class readings, splendidly characterized and imaginative performances from all three artists, which can hold their own with any in the current catalogue. This is brilliantly thought out and executed playing, and readers wanting all these pieces, including the rare Sonata posthume, on one CD will not be disappointed.

Piano Trio in A min.; Sonata for Violin & Cello; (i) Chansons madécasses; 3 Poèmes de Stéphane Mallarmé (song-cycle)

(BB) (*) Virgin 2x1 5 61427-2 (2). Nash Ens. (members); (i) with Walker – DEBUSSY: Chamber music **

The Sonata for Violin and Cello is expertly played by Marcia Crayford and Christopher van Kampen – as good an account as any – and in the Piano Trio Ian Brown joins them in a performance of real stature and eloquence. In the Chansons madécasses and the exquisite Trois poèmes de Stéphane Mallarmé Sarah Walker is prima inter pares rather than a soloist, though she is not balanced as reticently by Andrew Keener's team as is Delphine Seyrig in the Debussy Chansons de Bilitis. This is a pity, but it is not an insuperable obstacle to an apt and inexpensive Ravel collection.

(i) Pièce en forme de habanera; (ii–iii) Violin Sonata; (iv; i) Violin Sonata (Posthume); (iv–v) Sonata for Violin & Cello; (ii–iii) Tzigane

(BB)  Praga (ADD) PR 54016. (i) Hála; (ii) Oistrakh; (iii) Bauer; (iv) Suk; (v) Navarra

The Sonata posthume, which Suk and Hála recorded in 1979 for Prague Radio, is a beguiling piece, and Suk fully conveys its charms. Oistrakh recorded the Violin Sonata with Frida Bauer a few years later. The Tzigane, recorded in 1957, still sounds wonderfully persuasive. The 1967 Sonata for Violin and Cello with Suk and Navarra is pretty magisterial. This is not generously represented in the catalogue, so it enhances the undoubted value of this competitively priced reissue.

String Quartet in F

* Sup. SU 3855-2. Panocha Qt – SUK: Quartet 1; etc. ****

🔑 Ⓑ * EMI Début 5 74020-2. Belcea Qt – DEBUSSY: String Quartet in G min; DUTILLEUX: Ainsi la nuit ***

 HM HMI 987072. Casals Qt – TOLDRA: Vistes al mar; TURINA: El Oracion del Torero ***

Ⓜ  Ph. 464 6992. Italian Qt – DEBUSSY: Quartet ***

(BB)  Naxos 8.554722. Ad Libitum Qt – FAURÉ: Quartet *** ✿

Ⓑ  Calliope (ADD) CAL 5893. Talich Qt – DEBUSSY: String Quartet **(*)

(*) ASV CDDCA 930. Lindsay Qt – DEBUSSY: String Quartet (*); STRAVINSKY: 3 Pieces *

((*)) BBC mono BBCL 4063-2. Borodin Qt – BORODIN: Quartet 2 ((*)); SHOSTAKOVICH: Quartet 8 **(*)

Ⓜ (*) EMI 5 67550-2. Alban Berg Qt – DEBUSSY: String Quartet (*); STRAVINSKY: Concertino; Double Canon; 3 Pieces ***

String Quartet in F; (i) Introduction & Allegro for Harp, Flute, Clarinet & String Quartet

(BB)  Naxos 8.550249. Kodály Qt; (i) with Maros, Gyöngyössy, Kovács – DEBUSSY: Quartet **(*)

There are many fine recordings of the Ravel Quartet, but the newest version from the Panocha Quartet is not only unsurpassed in terms of passion, subtlety and delicacy, as well as warmth of feeling, but it has an attractively unusual Suk coupling. It is outstandingly well recorded.

The Belcea Quartet sounds as if it is completely inside the music, but its responses are still fresh and felt keenly. As in the Debussy, it is scrupulous in detail and tempi could not be judged better. A performance of real finesse that can be recommended along with the best; at budget price it also enjoys a strong competitive edge.

Winner of the first prize in the 2000 London International Quartet Competition, the Cuarteto Casals here gives a sparkling account of the Ravel Quartet, covering a wide expressive range, from the bite of the Scherzo to the meditative depth of the slow movement. It is well coupled with two rarer quartet works from Spain.

For many years the Italian Quartet held pride of place in this coupling. Their playing is perfect in ensemble, attack and beauty of tone, and their performance remains highly recommendable, one of the most satisfying chamber-music records in the catalogue.

The ensemble and intonation of the Romanian Ad Libitum Quartet are perfect, and their tone is silken. They couple the quartet with the late E minor Quartet by Ravel's teacher, Gabriel Fauré, one of the most persuasive and most haunting accounts in the catalogue and given a Rosette by us. Their Ravel is also refined and sophisticated (some may find it just a shade over-characterized), but all the same, this is most distinguished playing and can be confidently recommended given the excellence of the recorded sound, which is natural and lifelike, and the appeal of the coupling.

The Talich recorded their Debussy–Ravel coupling in 1984, the Debussy in the studio and the Ravel at a public concert. It goes without saying that they are distinguished by refinement, perfect ensemble and warmth. The tempi are well judged, and the playing is completely free from idiosyncratic or egocentric touches. The recording is not in the first flight but is very acceptable.

The Kodály version can more than hold its own. Artistically and technically this is a satisfying performance which has the feel of real live music-making. The Introduction and Allegro is not as magical an account, but it is still thoroughly enjoyable.

A highly accomplished and finely etched performance from the Lindsays, who play with their usual aplomb and panache. There are splendid things here, notably the youthful fire of the opening movement and the vivid finale. They do not always match the poetic feeling and the douceur which some rivals find, but this is not a neglible account, and it is well recorded.

The sheer tonal finesse and subtlety of colouring that the Borodin Quartet bring to the score in their BBC version serve to make it a performance to remember. It is not quite as polished as their later studio version, but it is eminently fresh and the 1962 sound is well balanced.

Superb, indeed incomparable playing from the Alban Berg Quartet, and splendidly full and sonorous recording from the EMI engineers. Yet while this is marvellously polished and has such excellence in terms of ensemble and tonal blend, there is a want of spontaneity that ultimately weighs against it, so that one is unable to forget the physical aspects of the music-making and become totally absorbed in the music itself.

Violin Sonata in G

🔑  Erato 0630 15110-2. Repin, Berezovsky – MEDTNER: Sonata 3 (Sonata epica) ***

🔑  EMI 5 57679-2. Chang, Vogt – FRANCK; SAINT-SAENS: Violin Sonatas ***

Ⓜ  DG 477 544-8 (2). Mintz, Bronfman (with Recital of encores by ALBÉNIZ; COUPERIN; GLAZUNOV; GRANADOS; KREISLER; WEBER; WIENIAWSKI) – DEBUSSY; FAURÉ; FRANCK: Violin Sonatas ***

Vadim Repin and Boris Berezovsky on Erato offer an unusual coupling. These two artists command a wide range of colour and dynamics, infuse every phrase with life, and have the full measure of the 'Blues' movement. Repin plays the Guarneri with which Isaac Stern delighted us for almost half a century and it sounds magnificently responsive in his hands. Very good and completely natural recording.

Sarah Chang and Lars Vogt give a brilliant and finely characterized account of the Sonata and in particular its blue movement. This has strong claims on the allegiance of the collector and is a splendid bargain if the couplings are suitable. Good recorded sound, too.

Shlomo Mintz and Yefim Bronfman's account offers highly polished playing, even if it is perhaps not so completely inside Ravel's world in the slow movement. The glorious sounds both artists produce are a source of unfailing delight, and they are beautifully recorded. At mid-price and coupled with fine performances of three other French violin sonatas, plus an enticing programme of encores, this is very recommendable.

Violin Sonata (1897); Tzigane

🔑  Avie AV 2059. Graffin, Désert – DEBUSSY: Violin Sonata; Nocturne et Scherzo; ENESCU: Impressions d'enfance ***

Philippe Graffin and Claire Désert give an entirely delightful account of the early Sonata posthume, playing with much delicacy and subtlety to make it sound like mature Ravel. Their Tzigane, too, is played with refinement as well as sparkle: it has plenty of gypsy feeling but is not treated as just a virtuoso display piece.

Tzigane (for violin and piano)

(BB) () Dutton mono CDBP 9710. G. & J. Neveau – BRAHMS: Violin Concerto; 4 Pieces; SUK: Encores ***

Ginette Neveu's account of the Tzigane is full of gypsy temperament and fire, with some dazzling pyrotechnics at the close. She dominates the proceedings, although her brother, Jean, accompanies supportively. Also offered are some delectable encores including Chopin's Nocturne in C sharp minor, its cantilena sounding for all the world like a violin piece, and dazzling versions of Falla's Spanish Dance from La vida breve and Dinicu's gutsy Hora Staccato. The transfers of these 1946 Abbey Road sessions are vividly realistic.

PIANO MUSIC

Music for Piano Duet and Two Pianos

Boléro; Introduction & Allegro; Ma Mère l'Oye; Rapsodie espagnole; La Valse

🔑 ✿ * Chan. 8905. Lortie, Mercier

Louis Lortie's recital for piano (four hands and two pianos) with his Canadian partner, Hélène Mercier, is quite magical; these artists command an exceptionally wide range of colour and dynamic nuance. The acoustic is that of The Maltings, Snape, and the result is quite outstanding sonically: you feel that you have only to stretch out and you can touch the instruments. Ravel's transcriptions are stunningly effective in their hands, even, surprisingly, Boléro.

(i) Boléro; Ma Mère l'Oye (Suite); Menuet antique; Prélude; Pavane pour une infante défunte; Rapsodie espagnole

 KML 1111. Katia & Marielle Labèque (piano, 4 hands); (i) with Gustavo Gimeno (percussionist) (www.kmlrecordings.com)

This first disc from the Labèques on their new label proves to be a winner. The Rapsodie espagnole, which opens the recital, is richly evocative and the piano colouring of Ma Mère l'Oye is luminous. The transcribed Pavane, too, is most elegant. But the recital ends with a thrilling account of Boléro in which the duo are joined by Gustavo Gimeno playing various Basque percussion instruments. The recording is vividly real but rather too close, or this might have had four stars.

Entre cloches; (i) Frontispiece; Introduction and Allegro; Ma Mère l'Oye; Rapsodie espagnole; Shéhérazade: Ouverture de féerie; La Valse

Ⓜ  Somm SOMMCD 025. Micallef, Inanga; (i) with Sterling

The young, prize-winning duo of Micallef and Inanga are warmly responsive, naturally in sympathy with the idiom. Their subtle and persuasive use of rubato comes out very clearly, as in the Malagueña from Rapsodie espagnole, a piece written earlier than the other three movements. Frontispiece, written in 1918 as the introduction to a collection of war poems brings some extraordinary polytonal writing, totally un-Ravelian. The other major item, Shéhérazade, with hard keyboard textures, is less evocative than tough, sounding more modern than the orchestral version. Best of all is La Valse, a brilliant transcription already a favourite with two-piano duos.

La valse

Ⓜ  Ph. 475 8520. Argerich & Freire – LUTOSŁAWSKI: Paganini Variations; RACHMANINOV: Suite 2 ***

The transcription is Ravel's own and was first heard in this form played by the composer himself and Alfredo Casella in 1920. Brilliant, atmospheric playing and very good recording.

Solo piano music

A la manière de Borodine; A la manière de Chabrier; Gaspard de la nuit; Jeux d'eau; Menuet antique; Menuet sur le nom de Haydn; Miroirs; Pavane pour une infante défunte; Prélude; Sérénade grotesque; Sonatine; Le Tombeau de Couperin; Valses nobles et sentimentales

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 67341/2. Hewitt

🔑 (BB) * EMI Gemini (ADD) 5 86061-2 (2). Collard

🔑 * Decca 433 515-2 (2). Thibaudet

Ⓜ  Chan. 10142X (2). Lortie

Ⓜ  CRD CRD 3383/4 Crossley

(BB) (*) Virgin 5 62363-2 (4). Queffélec – SATIE: Collection ***

🔑 Ⓑ () EMI mono 5 74793-2 (2). Gieseking (without Sérénade grotesque)

Ravel's solo piano music has been well served in the last couple of decades but this newcomer from Hyperion is second to none and will now probably be a first choice for most collectors. We associate Angela Hewitt with Bach, but the clarity she brought to that repertoire serves to illuminate Ravel's textures without ever entailing any loss of atmosphere. Her performances are characteristically full of the searchingly imaginative approach she takes to everything she plays. The playing is impeccable, in both technique and taste. Altogether this is a fascinating new look at these inspired pieces, so perfect in their detail, and one continually has the sense of coming to this music afresh.

Jean-Philippe Collard is a stylist and a master, and Ravel playing doesn't come much better than this. What a beautiful sense of line he achieves in Ondine, the first of the Gaspard de la nuit, though it must be admitted that the right-hand ostinato is far from the pianopianissimo that Ravel marks. For the most part, however, this playing silences criticism. The recording, made in the Salle Wagram, is not wholly sympathetic: there is a glassy, shallow quality, particularly on the upper part of the spectrum.

Jean-Yves Thibaudet's collected Ravel is quite outstanding playing on all counts; Thibaudet exhibits flawless technique, perfect control, refinement of touch and exemplary taste. The recording is of real distinction too.

The fine Canadian pianist Louis Lortie made a strong impression with the two Ravel Concertos and with this survey of the piano music when it first appeared in the 1980s. The recordings, made at The Maltings, Snape, have great clarity and presence, and the performances have proved very persuasive over the years.

Paul Crossley's accounts of all these works are aristocratic, with an admirable feeling for tone-colour and line, and rarely mannered. His version of Le Tombeau de Couperin has a classical refinement and delicacy that is refreshing. The CRD recording is very good indeed.

No quarrels with Anne Queffélec's playing. There are some masterly and enjoyable interpretations here, but it is all far too closely observed, as if one were in the front row of the concert hall; as a result not all the atmosphere registers to full effect, once the dynamics rise above mf.

Gieseking's classic recordings were made in 1954, with Walter Legge and Geraint Jones acting as producers. Gieseking's special affinity for this repertoire shines through, and no one with a serious interest in the French master should neglect these readings. Here is a pianist with a limpid, translucent tone playing a piano with apparently no hammers.

A la manière de Borodine; A la manière de Chabrier; Menuet antique; Prélude; Le Tombeau de Couperin; Valses nobles et sentimentales

(*) Nim. (ADD) NI 5011. Perlemuter

Gaspard de la nuit; Jeux d'eau; Miroirs; Pavane

(*) Nim. (ADD) NI 5005. Perlemuter

Though Perlemuter's technical command is not as complete as it had been, he gives delightful, deeply sympathetic readings; the sense of spontaneity is a joy. There may be Ravel recordings which bring more dazzling virtuoso displays, but none more persuasive. Nimbus's ample room acoustic makes the result naturally atmospheric on CD.

Gaspard de la nuit

🔑 () BBC mono BBCL 4064-2. Michelangeli – BEETHOVEN: Sonatas 4 & 12; DEBUSSY: Hommage à Rameau ((*))

Michelangeli's Gaspard comes from a recital given in the Concert Hall of Broadcasting House in 1959, and those who were fortunate enough to be there were electrified by Michelangeli's playing. The mono sound is strikingly well transferred and infinitely better than earlier, unauthorized LP versions that have been in currency.

Miroirs

 Wigmore Hall Live WHL 018. Cooper (with DEBUSSY: La terrasse des audiences du clair de lune; MOZART: Sonata in A min., K.310) – BEETHOVEN: Sonata 28 ***

Given the quality of this recital, one wonders why Imogen Cooper has been so neglected by the record companies. It is good to have this Wigmore Hall recital which she gave in February 2007. Her account of the Miroirs is highly imaginative and expert and can hold its own among the finest available. The remainder of the programme is hardly less impressive, offering some highly distinguished and satisfying music-making.

Valses nobles et sentimentales (complete); Le Tombeau de Couperin; Forlane; Miroirs; La Vallée des cloches

🔑 Ⓑ  RCA 2CD (ADD) 74321 846062. Rubinstein – CHABRIER: Pièces Pittoresques: Scherzo-Valse; DEBUSSY: Estampes, etc.; FAURÉ: Nocturne 3; FRANCK: Symphonic Variations for Piano and Orchestra; Prélude choral et fugue; SAINT-SAËNS: Piano Concerto 2 ***

These pieces (including the Fauré and Chabrier) appear to derive from an LP called 'A French Programme' which appeared in mono in the mid-1960s, and later in stereo. The playing is eminently aristocratic, and the sound greatly improved in these new transfers. Rubinstein could be a magician in French music just as he was in Chopin.

VOCAL MUSIC

Chansons madécasses

🔑  EMI 5 56982-2. Karnéus, Pahud, Mørk, Kovacevich – DEBUSSY: Syrinx; Bilitis, etc.; PROKOFIEV: Flute Sonata, Op. 94 ***

This EMI version of Chansons madécasses is primarily a vehicle for the virtuosity – or rather artistry – of Emmanuel Pahud, for there is no egotism in his playing, the virtuosity is merely by the by. He and Kovacevich are joined by Katerina Karnéus and Truls Mørk. Great sensitivity, powerful atmosphere, lucidity of diction and clarity of texture. This is an outstanding recital.

Don Quichotte à Dulcinée (song-cycle)

🔑 () Testament mono SBT 1312. Souzay, Paris Conservatoire O, Lindenberg – CHAUSSON: Mélodies; DEBUSSY: Trois Ballades; DUPARC: 12 Songs ()

Souzay's 1951 record of Don Quichotte à Dulcinée with the Paris Conservatoire Orchestra is part of an outstanding recital. This recording, however, is just a bit too closely balanced: the orchestra is very much in the background. Nevertheless, this Testament reissue remains indispensable.

Histoires naturelles

🔑 () Testament mono SBT 1311. Souzay, Bonneau – FALLA: 7 canciones populares españolas; FAURÉ: Après un rêve, etc. *** ✿

Souzay made this record of the Histoires naturelles in 1951, only half a dozen years after his début in Paris, and it still remains arguably the finest recorded account of Ravel's imaginative cycle. Magnificently transferred, the sound belies its age and comes with some Fauré songs that are among the classics of the gramophone.

Shéhérazade (song-cycle)

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * Decca 475 7712. Crespin, SRO, Ansermet (with Recital of French Songs ()) – BERLIOZ: Nuits d'été ****

 Warner 2564 61938-2. Graham, BBC SO, Tortelier – CHAUSSON: Poème de l'amour et de la mer; DEBUSSY: Poèmes de Charles Baudelaire ***

Crespin is right inside these songs and Ravel's magically sensuous music emerges with striking spontaneity. She is superbly supported by Ansermet who, aided by the Decca engineers, weaves a fine tonal web round the voice. Her style has distinct echoes of the opera house; but the richness of the singer's tone does not detract from the delicate languor of The Enchanted Flute, in which the slave-girl listens to the distant sound of her lover's flute playing while her master sleeps. The new transfer of the 1963 recording adds to the allure of the remarkably rich and translucent Decca sound. The remastered reissue is now elevated to 'Originals' status and includes full documentation.

Susan Graham chooses wide contrasts for her performance of Ravel's inspired triptych, boldly operatic in line for Asie, tenderly languorous in the lovely La Flûte enchantée (with sensuous flute playing to match) and finding a delicate melancholy for L'Indifférent. Yan Pascal Tortelier's accompaniments are expressively ardent, and the recording is first class.

OPERA

L'Enfant et les sortilèges

🔑 ✿ (*) Testament mono SBT 1044. Sautereau, Vessières, Michel, Scharley, Le Marc'Hadour, Peyron, Angelici, French Nat. R. Ch. & O, Bour

There is a magic about this 1947 performance that completely captivates the listener. Each part, from Nadine Sautereau's Child, Yvon Le Marc'Hadour's Tom-Cat and Clock, and Solange Michel's touching Squirrel, to Denise Scharley as the Dragonfly and the Mother, could not be improved upon in character, subtlety and style. The singing and playing of the French Radio forces are vital and imaginative. Ravel's exquisite score is heard to best advantage in this extraordinary transfer with voices firm and immediate. With no stars but with no weak link, the singers make an outstanding team, helped by sound which, with background hiss eliminated, has astonishing presence. No other version casts quite such a strong spell.

(i) L'Enfant et les sortilèges; Ma Mère l'Oye (ballet; complete)

🔑  DG 457 589-2. (i) Stephen, Owens, Lascarro, Johnson, Soloists New L. Children's Ch., LSO Ch.; L. Symphony, Previn

Ⓝ  EMI 2 64197-2. BPO & Ch., Rattle, with (i) Kožená, Massis, Stutzman, Koch, van Dam, Le Roux, Fouchécourt, Erdman, Berlin R. Ch.

With opulent recording heightening the sumptuousness of Ravel's orchestration, and with Previn infectiously pointing rhythms at generally spacious speeds, this evocative one-acter could not be more persuasive, with the atmospheric magic beautifully captured. The apt and substantial fill-up, the complete Mother Goose ballet, also beautifully done, makes a welcome bonus.

EMI and Rattle offer a sumptuously recorded account of Ravel's masterpiece which boasts a distinguished cast and, of course, the wonderful sonority of the Berlin Philharmonic. Magdalena Kožená is strong and positive as the naughty child of the title, a superb actress as well as a glorious singer, and the other soloists are comparably well cast. One of the great advantages of this set is not only having the complete libretto (essential for full appreciation) but also the casting and the identification of each character. It is a magical score, as for that matter is the Mother Goose ballet. There is some expressive point-making that is a little exaggerated, but this is not too serious. As a final attraction, the design of the sleeve matches the music in its charm. However, in L'enfant, Previn's account and Maazel's DG version coupled with L'Heure espagnole remain the ones to have.

(i) L'Enfant et les sortilèges; (ii) L'Heure espagnole (both complete)

🔑 Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 449 769-2 (2). (i) Ogéas, Collard, Berbié, Sénéchal, Gilma, Herzog, Rehfuss, Maurane, RTF Ch. & Boys' Ch., RTF Nat. O; (ii) Berbié, Sénéchal, Giraudeau, Bacquier, van Dam, Paris Opera O; Maazel – RIMSKY-KORSAKOV: Capriccio espagnol; STRAVINSKY: Le Chant du rossignol. *** ✿

Maazel's recordings of Ravel's two one-act operas were made in the early 1960s and, though the solo voices in L'Enfant are balanced rather closely, the remastered sound in both operas is wonderfully vivid and atmospheric and each performance is splendidly stylish. The singing is delightful: neoclassical crispness of articulation goes with refined textures that convey the ripe humour of one piece, the tender poetry of the other. The inclusion of Maazel's superb early stereo accounts of Rimsky's Capriccio (with the Berlin Philharmonic) and Le Chant du rossignol glitteringly played by the Berlin Radio Orchestra, two classics of the gramophone, is particularly welcome.

(i; ii; iii) L'enfant et les sortilèges; (i; ii; iv) L'Heure espagnole; (i; ii;) 2 mélodies hébraïques; Shéhérazade; 3 poèmes de Stéphane Mallarmé; (v) Boléro; La Valse

Ⓝ (*) Australian Decca Eloquence 480 0124 (2). Ansermet, with (i) SRO; (ii) Danco; (iii) Cuénod; Lovano; Migliette; Bisel, Wend, Bobillier; (iv) Rehfuss, Hamel, Derenne, Vessieres; (v) Paris Conservatoire O

Australian Decca have coupled Ravel's two operas with a host of other rare Ansermet performances. L'enfant et les sortilèges along with L'Heure espagnole were among his pioneering early LPs, while L'enfant et les sortilèges was one of Decca's first stereo recordings (October 1954) and its vividness still amazes. The performance is idiomatic, with artists like Suzanne Danco and Hugues Cuénod full of character, and the fresh, bright singing of Flore Wend as the Child still captures the ear. Ansermet's orchestral detail is vivid. L'Heure espagnole was recorded a year earlier and the mono sound is obviously not so opulent. But the cast was quite a strong one, with Suzanne Danco as the provocative wife, with a slight flicker in the voice adding to its distinctively French timbre. Heinz Rehfuss sings with incisive clarity as the muleteer. Alas, the occasionally sour woodwinds and rather thin violins prevented these recordings from become top recommendations. Suzanne Danco's similarly idiomatic accounts of Ravel's Shéhérazade, Deux melodies hébraïques and Trois poèmes de Stéphane Mallarmé also project vividly. The finely etched orchestral writing is clearly brought out in the Trois poèmes de Stéphane Mallarmé. Ansermet's Paris recordings of Boléro (early stereo) and La Valse are not as exciting as his stereo, Suisse Romande accounts but viable enough.

RAWSTHORNE, Alan (1905–71)

(i) Concertante pastorale for Flute, Horn & Strings; Concerto for String Orchestra; Divertimento for Chamber Orchestra; Elegiac Rhapsody for String Orchestra; Light Music for Strings (based on Catalan tunes); (ii) Suite for Recorder & String Orchestra (orch. McCabe)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553567. Northern CO, Lloyd-Jones; with (i) Marshall, Goldberg; (ii) Turner

Though the melodic writing is rarely as memorable as that of, say, Walton, all the works here are beautifully crafted, not least the Concerto for String Orchestra, with two dark movements followed by lightness and open intervals. The Concertante is most evocative with beautiful solos for flute and horn. The neoclassical Recorder Suite has been deftly arranged by John McCabe from an original with piano. Finest of all is the Elegiac Rhapsody, written in memory of the poet Louis MacNeice, touching a deeper vein, erupting from lamentation into anger. Outstanding performances, vividly recorded.

(i) Cello Concerto; (ii) Oboe Concerto; Symphonic Studies

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.554763. RSNO, Lloyd-Jones; (i) with Baillie; (ii) Rancourt

The post-war Oboe Concerto is full of good things. Alexander Baillie gives a masterly account of the Cello Concerto, and Stéphane Rancourt is hardly less persuasive in its companion. First-class orchestral playing under David Lloyd-Jones and excellently balanced and vividly present recording. The Symphonic Studies is arguably Rawsthorne's masterpiece and one of the most ingenious works of its period. All Rawsthorne's music is crafted superbly and highly personal, so that the idiom is immediately recognizable as his.

Clarinet Concerto

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55069. King, Northwest CO of Seattle, Francis – COOKE: Concerto; JACOB: Mini-Concerto ***

Though the Clarinet Concerto is an early work of Rawsthorne's it already establishes the authentic flavour of his writing, the more obviously so in a performance as persuasive as this from soloist and orchestra alike. Excellent recording, and very good value.

Piano Concertos 1–2; (i) Double Piano Concerto

Ⓜ  Chan. 10339X. Tozer, LPO, Bamert; (i) with Cislowski

(i) Piano Concertos 1–2; Improvisations on a Theme of Constant Lambert

🔑 ⒷⒷ  Naxos 8.555959. Donohoe, Ulster O, Yuasa

(i) Piano Concertos 1–2; (ii) Overture Street Corner; Symphonic Studies

🔑 * Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 255. (i) Binns, LSO, Braithwaite; (ii) LPO, Pritchard

Both of Rawsthorne's concertos are among the most memorable written by British composers, providing a Prokofiev-like contrast between jagged figuration and lyrical warmth. Without losing the necssary edge in the writing, Malcolm Binns brings out the expressiveness of the music, particularly in the First Concerto with its hushed slow movement and interlude in the middle of the final Tarantella. There is plenty of vigour in both dance finales (the second has its quota of Latin American rhythms). The Street Corner Overture is one of Rawsthorne's once familiar shorter pieces, but it is not often heard now. The Symphonic Studies is by general consent Rawsthorne's most original and masterly composition and it well withstands the test of time. The LPO under John Pritchard plays with evident enjoyment, and the 1977 recording has a fine sense of space and splendid detail. An outstanding reissue in every way.

In the new Naxos recording Peter Donohoe's brilliant solo contribution has all the sparkle you could want. In the Second Concerto the opening surge of ardour, from soloist and orchestra alike, carries the music forward, while again there is some delightful woodwind detail. In the finale Rawsthorne almost immediately introduces his catchy main theme, which is in a two-four/three-eight metre, and the movement as a whole is played with gusto and wit, producing a blaze of virtuosity at the close. The orchestral Improvisations which come as a bonus, are based on a seven-note theme from Lambert's last ballet, Tiresias. They are widely varied and listener-friendly and easy to follow. With excellent recording, this can be strongly recommended on all counts.

Geoffrey Tozer also gives a good account of the concertos. The opening of 1 is a bit rushed; Tamara-Anna Cislowski is an excellent partner in the 1968 concerto. Matthias Bamert and the LPO are very supportive and the recording is in the best traditions of the house.

(i) Violin Concertos 1–2; Fantasy Overture: Cortèges

ⒷⒷ * Naxos 8.554240. (i) Hirsch; BBC Scottish SO, Friend

The Naxos recording brings the accomplished Rebecca Hirsch as soloist, with excellent orchestral support from the BBC Scottish Symphony under Lionel Friend. Her performances hold their own, and the value of the disc is enhanced by Rawsthorne's Cortèges. It is an imaginative and at times haunting piece, very well played and recorded here.

Cortèges (Fantasy Overture)

 Lyrita SRCD 318. RPO, Wordsworth (with PIERSON: Macbeth; MORGAN: Contrasts) – ARNOLD: Beckus the Dandipratt; CHAGRIN: Helter Skelter; WARLOCK: Serenade for Strings ***

Cortèges, one of Rawsthorne's finest works, is a duality of processions, the first bringing a noble Mahlerian Adagio, the second a brilliant rondo/tarantella, with the two themes combined together in a climactic tour de force, and the work ending wistfully and movingly. Barry Wordsworth's performance is very fine indeed, as is the Lyrita recording.

Divertimento for Chamber Orchestra

 Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 257. ECO, Del Mar – ARNOLD; L. BERKELEY; BRITTEN: Sinfoniettas; TIPPETT: Divertimento ***

Brief as Rawsthorne's Divertimento is, its spare textures and bony argument give it genuine seriousness, most attractively in the songfulness of the central lullaby movement. It is splendidly performed and recorded.

Film music: Burma Victory (suite); The Captive Heart (suite; both arr. Gerard Schurmann); The Cruel Sea: Main Titles & Nocturne; The Dancing Fleece: 3 Dances (both scores arr. & orch. Philip Lane); Lease of Life: Main Titles & Emergency; Saraband for Dead Lovers: Saraband & Carnival (both arr. Schurmann); Uncle Silas: Main Titles & Opening Scene; Valse Caprice; End Titles; West of Zanzibar: Main Titles; Where No Vultures Fly: Introduction; Main Titles & Opening Scene; Surveying the Game (all arr. & orch. Philip Lane)

 Chan. 9749. BBC PO, Gamba

Between 1937 and 1964 Rawsthorne wrote music for 27 British films. He was not a ready melodist like Malcolm Arnold, but he could write memorable paragraphs, imaginatively and powerfully scored. Gerard Schurmann had worked with the composer in preparing the original scores, and Philip Lane demonstrates his skills of reconstruction using the original soundtracks when the manuscripts are missing. The music is splendidly played and given Chandos's top-quality sound.

Coronation Overture; Madame Chrysanthème: Ballet Suite; Street Corner Overture; Theme, Variations & Finale; (i) Medieval Diptych for baritone & orchestra; (ii) Practical Cats: An entertainment for speaker and orchestra

Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7203. RLPO, Lloyd-Jones; with (i) Huw Williams; (ii) Callow

A superb modern collection of Alan Rawsthorne's most famous music. Both the Street Corner Overture and the Madame Chrysanthème ballet suite are given bright and breezy performances to match the tuneful nature of the music. The Coronation Overture (a première recording), though it has quite a brooding middle section, is essentially festive in spirit and is certainly enjoyable. The Theme, Variations and Finale – another première, dating from 1967 – is quite a knotty work, though the finale is rather more lyrical, and it ends in bright C major. The opening of the Medieval Diptych is powerfully brooding and atmospheric, and the atmosphere is maintained throughout the work's 14-minute duration. Jeremy Huw Williams, a light baritone, sings with evident conviction. Simon Callow adopts exactly the right tone in his narration for Practical Cats, one of the composer's most entertaining scores. Superb recording, and David Lloyd-Jones's direction cannot be faulted.

Practical Cats

Ⓑ (*) CfP (ADD) 3 82230-2. Robert Donat, Philh. O, composer – BRITTEN: The Young Person's Guide; PROKOFIEV: Peter and the Wolf **(*)

Rawsthorne's own 1957 recording of his setting of seven of T. S. Eliot's highly engaging poems is a valuable addition to the catalogue, especially as the reissue includes a note by the composer himself. One feels that these musical illustrations will interest older rather than younger children, and will certainly appeal to those who enjoy the original poems. Bright, clear recording.

Symphonies (i) 1; (ii) 2 (A Pastoral Symphony); (iii) 3

(BB)  Naxos 8.557480. (i) Ellett; Bournemouth SO, Lloyd-Jones

 Lyrita (ADD/DDD) SRCD 291. (i–ii) LPO; (i) Pritchard; (ii) Chadwell, cond. Braithwaite; (iii) BBC SO, Del Mar

The First Symphony (1950) is a haunting and powerfully wrought piece, which grows in stature on every hearing. The Second comes from 1959, and its finale includes a setting of Henry Howard, Earl of Surrey, in praise of summer, with a soprano soloist. Charlotte Ellett proves an excellent soloist. The impressive Third (1964) is well served here by David Lloyd-Jones and his Bournemouth forces. This conductor directs all three works with total conviction and real imagination. Powerful music then, splendidly played and vividly recorded, and all for a modest outlay. All three works receive fine performances on Lyrita but, they are displaced by the Naxos newcomer.

Clarinet Quartet

 Lyrita SRCD 256. King, Aeolian Qt (members) – BERKELEY: Sextet; Sonatina; BUSH: Concert Studies, etc. **(*)

 Redcliffe RR 010. Cox, Redcliffe Ens. – BLISS; ROUTH: Clarinet Quintets ***

Rawsthorne dispenses with the second violin and opts for the more compressed form of the clarinet quartet. This balances the ensemble clearly in favour of the wind instrument, but on Lyrita Thea King, one of the most sensitive of clarinettists, responds to the position of prominence with intensely imaginative playing, drawing out the lyricism which reveals Rawsthorne's deep understanding of the instrument.

Rawsthorne's Clarinet Quartet is more ambivalent in feeling than the Bliss Quintet, but its quirky opening movement is appealing and the darker Poco lento hardly less striking. With Nicholas Cox a most winning soloist, the performance here could hardly be improved upon, and the recording is first class. Choice between this and Thea King will depend on couplings.

String Quartets 1–3; Theme and Variations for 2 Violins

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.570136. Maggini Quartet

The Maggini continue their survey of British quartets. What links all these works is Rawsthorne's obsession with variation form, very clearly demonstrated in that early Duet. The First Quartet of 1939 similarly consists of a Theme and Variations, while the Second Quartet of 1954 concludes with a variation movement, and the Third Quartet of 1965 has a Chaconne as its darkest and most intense movement. Those last two works increasingly demonstrate the influence of Bartók without disturbing the distinctive clarity of Rawsthorne's musical idiom. Ideal performances, vividly recorded.

(ii) Violin Sonata; (iii) Theme & Variations for 2 Violins

 Metier MSV CD 92029. Skaerved; (i) Honma; (ii) Sohn – MCCABE: Maze Dances, etc. ***

Alan Rawsthorne's Theme and Variations for Two Violins, one of his earliest works, stands among the finest pieces ever written for this daunting medium, with the interplay between the two instruments bringing a kaleidoscopic sequence of ideas, sharply defined. The Violin Sonata of over 20 years later is tougher in its idiom with the four movements tautly argued within a compressed span, not a note wasted. Peter Sheppard Skaerved gives flawless performances, very well matched by Christine Sohn in the Variations and Tamami Honma in the Sonata. Clear, immediate sound.

READE, Paul (1943–97)

Hobson's Choice (ballet; complete; orchestrated by Lawrence Ashmore; devised and choreographed by David Bintley from the play by Harold Brighouse Dir: Tom Gutteridge)

🔑 ✿ * Arthaus DVD 100 442. Karen Donovan, Michael O'Hare, Desmond Kelly, Sandra Madgwick, Chenca Williams, Joseph Cipolla, Stephen Wicks; Birmingham Royal Ballet O, Wordsworth

David Bintley's ballet Hobson's Choice was created in 1989 for Sadler's Wells Royal Ballet in London, and it quickly became a box-office hit. However, it was first (at the turn of the century) a famous Lancashire play, then a book, and finally a film; and Bintley has obviously drawn on all three for his scenario for a story which popularized an old phrase in the English language.

The dancing itself is a delight, the choreography, like Paul Reade's brilliant and tuneful score, endlessly witty and inventive. Willie's engaging Dance with the Shoes at the end of Act I evokes Chaplin, and the solo Clog Dance which follows is a bravura highlight; and there is an ensemble clog encore in the park in Act II. With splendid sets and fine continuity, this is a wonderfully warm and repeatable entertainment, and the music, full of melody and attractive orchestral effects and cleverly drawing on popular folk themes, is a pleasure in itself, for the composer's ideas never flag. Surely Harold Brighouse would have been delighted with it.

REED, W. H. (1875–1942)

Andante con moto; Andante tranquillo; 2 Chinese Impressions; Fantaisie brillante; The Gentle Dove (Welsh Folksong); Lento and Prelude; Luddi Dance; On Waterford Quay (An Irish Impression); Punjabi Song; Reverie; Rhapsody for Viola and Piano; Rhapsody in E min. for Violin and Piano; Spanish Dance (Fragment); Toccata

Ⓜ Dutton CDLX 7135. Gibbs, Mei-Loc Wu

Reed was a great friend of Elgar as well as being his musical colleague and adviser. Many of these pieces are romantic vignettes, which have something in common with Kreisler's miniatures, if without being quite so sharply memorable. But they include a pair of more ambitious Rhapsodies and a lighthearted, dancing Andante tranquillo, all of which display an easy-going fluency and genuine musical craftsmanship. The more extended Fantaisie brillante, with its agreeable central Andante and virtuoso moto perpetuo finale, was dedicated to Reed's teacher, Emile Sauret.

The advocacy here of the sweet-toned Robert Gibbs, partnered by Mary Mei-Loc Wu (who is much more than an accompanist), is very persuasive throughout this programme. Excellent recording too, natural and very well balanced.

REGER, Max (1873–1916)

Ballet Suite, Op. 130; 4 Böcklin Tone-Pictures, Op. 128; Variations & Fugue on a Theme by Beethoven, Op. 86

 BIS CD 601. Norrköping SO, Segerstam

Segerstam gets a very good response from the Norrköping Orchestra and obviously cares for this music and makes the most of it without succumbing to the expressive exaggeration which spoils some of his other work. Both the Ballet Suite and the Beethoven Variations are well served, and very well recorded.

4 Böcklin Tone-Poems, Op. 128; Variations on a Theme by Hiller, Op. 100

🔑 * Chan. 8794. Concg. O, Järvi

Of the four Tone Poems on Chandos, textures in Der geigende Eremit ('Hermit playing the violin') are unexectedly transparent, and Im Spiel der Wellen has something of the sparkle of the Jeu de vagues movement of La Mer photographed in sepia; while the Isle of the Dead is a lovely and often very touching piece. The Hiller Variations are gloriously inventive. These works are beautifully recorded and Neeme Järvi's performances have the combination of sensitivity and virtuosity that this composer needs.

Symphonic Prologue to a Tragedy; Variations & Fugue on a Theme of Mozart

 BIS CD 771. Norrköping SO, Segerstam

Segerstam's obvious dedication to the spirit and the letter of these scores rises to their challenge admirably. The BIS recording is of demonstration standard.

Variations & Fugue on a Theme of Beethoven, Op. 86

Ⓜ Chan. 7080 (2). LPO, Järvi – BRUCKNER: Symphony 8 **(*)

Terminally ill, in his last years Reger concentrated on composition, here orchestrating eight of the 12 variations of a work he originally scored for two pianos. The result is a brilliant, sharply characterized piece with obvious echoes of Brahms, a fine companion for Reger's two better-known sets of variations on themes of Mozart and Hiller, and an attractive coupling for Järvi's warm-hearted reading of the Bruckner, now at mid-price. Rich 1986 Chandos sound.

CHAMBER MUSIC

(i) Cello Sonatas 1, Op. 5; 2, Op. 28; 3, Op. 78; 4, Op. 116; 3 (Unaccompanied) Cello Suites, Op. 131c

Ⓜ Hyp. CDA 67581 (2). Gerhardt; (i) with Becker

Reger's first two Cello Sonatas are warmly Brahmsian, while having ample vitality. In the last two Sonatas (from 1904 and 1910) Reger has found a style of his own and 3 has the composer's trademark, a set of variations. The Cello Suites have an obvious allegiance to Bach; although they are not just a collection of baroque dances. The performances are excellent, vibrant, with plenty of bravura from the pianist, Markus Becker, and with a warmly persuasive style from the cellist, Alban Gerhardt. Good, but not quite state-of-the-art recording.

(i) Clarinet Quintet in A, Op. 146; String Quartets in G min. & A, Op. 54/1–2; D min., Op. 74; E flat, Op. 109; F sharp min., Op. 121

🔑 Ⓜ DG Trio 477 5518 (3). Drolc Qt; (i) with Leister

As these fine Quartets show, the melodic invention is more often than not distinguished and there is much that is both individual and beautiful. A good place to start is the Op. 109 Quartet, which is full of wonderful ideas. The Clarinet Quintet is one of his finest works and Karl Leister plays it with his usual artistry and eloquence. A real bargain.

(i) Clarinet Quintet in A, Op. 146; String Quartet in E flat, Op. 109

 Nim. NI 5644. (i) Leister; Vogler Qt

Karl Leister's artistry and eloquence are very persuasive, as indeed are those of the wonderful Vogler Quartet. The Nimbus engineers place us rather too close to the artists and we would welcome rather more space round the sound, but there is no doubt that these are very distinguished performances that call for a strong recommendation.

Piano Trios in B min., Op. 2; E minor, Op. 102

 MDG 303 0751-2. Trio Parnassus

The B minor Trio is for piano, violin and viola and is very derivative. There are faint hints of things to come, but for the most part Brahms is the pervasive influence. The E minor Trio is another matter: there are some striking harmonic sleights of hand and a reminder of the first of the Böcklin Portraits, which bear a slightly later opus number. Fine performances, very well recorded too, and well worth taking the trouble to hear.

Violin Sonata 8 in E min., Op. 122; Suite, Op. 103a

 CPO 777 296. Wallin, Pöntinen

Critics at the time complained that the melodic invention was not strong enough to sustain its length, but this performance from Ulf Wallin and Roland Pöntinen makes out the best possible case for it. Many will find it overlong, but admirers of the composer will find many rewards. In the earlier Suite the artistry of these players is again much in evidence and the German Radio engineers produce an exemplary balance.

ORGAN WORKS

Aus tiefer Not schrei ich zu dir, Op. 67/3; Intermezzo in F min., Op. 129/7; Introduction & Passacaglia in D min., Op. posth.; Prelude in D min., Op. 65/7

 Chan. 9097. Kee – HINDEMITH: Organ Sonatas ***

The Müller organ of St Bavo in Haarlem seems ideally suited to this repertoire, as is the slightly reverberant acoustic which rather softens the textures and contours of the Hindemith. Piet Kee plays with his customary authority and distinction. A rewarding and satisfying issue.

Chorale fantasia on Straff mich nicht in deinem Zorn, Op. 40/2; Chorale Preludes, Op. 67/4, 13, 28, 40, 48; Introduction, Passacaglia & Fugue in E min., Op. 127

🔑  Hyp. CDA 66223. Barber (Klais organ of Limburg Cathedral)

The Introduction, Passacaglia and Fugue is bold in conception and vision and is played superbly on this excellently engineered Hyperion disc by Graham Barber. The five Chorale Preludes give him an admirable opportunity to show the variety and richness of tone-colours of this instrument.

PIANO MUSIC

5 Humoresques, Op. 20; Improvisations, Op. 18; In der nacht; Träume am Kamin, Op. 143

(BB)  Naxos 8.553331. Pawlik

Markus Pawlik is a most musical and sensitive player who captures the intimacy of the Träume am Kamin to perfection. They are predominantly poetic and gentle pieces, but elsewhere in the Humoresques he shows formidable virtuosity. Very acceptable sound – and those with a taste for music off the beaten track will find this well rewards the modest outlay.

5 Humoresques; Variations & Fugue on a Theme of Johann Sebastian Bach, Op. 81; Variations & Fugue on a Theme of Georg Philipp Telemann, Op. 134

🔑 ✿ * Hyp. CDA 66996. Hamelin

Variations & Fugue on a Theme of Bach, Op. 81

Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 2564 61762-2. Schiff (piano) – HANDEL: Keyboard Suite in B flat (HWV 434); BRAHMS: Variations & Fugue on a Theme of Handel ***

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550469. Harden – SCHUMANN: Humoreske **(*)

Like Brahms, Reger was one of the greatest masters of the variation form. The Bach and Telemann sets are generally acknowledged to be among his finest keyboard works, and Marc-André Hamelin's playing has enormous eloquence and imagination as well as a wide range both of dynamics and tonal colour. This has an elegance and refinement that never calls attention to itself. Superbly natural recorded sound too.

Wolf Harden's account of the Reger Variations and Fugue on a Theme of Bach, Op. 81, is also very fine. The piano sounds much drier here than in the Schumann coupling. Yet the compelling quality of his playing is in no doubt.

Schiff's performance is splendidly equal to all Reger's demands, yet it never overwhelms the listener with rhetoric, and the linked Brahms and Handel couplings make this live recital, excellently recorded in the Concertgebouw in 1994, very recommendable.

VOCAL MUSIC

3 geistliche Gesänge, Op. 110; 3 Gesänge, Op. 39

 Chan. 9298. Danish Nat. R. Ch., Parkman

Stefan Parkman and the Danish National Radio Choir are the most persuasive advocates of Reger's a cappella music. The chromaticism and dense polyphony hold no fears for them and their finely blended tone is in itself a source of pleasure. The Op. 110 Motets can be heavy-going but not in these clearly delineated and eloquent performances. Those who are intimidated by Reger's reputation should try this excellently recorded disc.

REICH, Steve (born 1936)

'Works': Disc 1: It's gonna Rain (1965); Come out (1966); Piano Phase: (i) Double Edge (1967); (ii) 4 Organs (1970)

Disc 2: Drumming (1971)

Disc 3: (iii) Clapping Music (1972); Music for Mallet Instruments, Voices and Organ (1973); (iv) 6 Marimbas (1973–86)

Disc 4: Music for 18 Musicians (1976)

Disc 5: (v) 8 Lines (Octet) (1976); (vi) Tehillim for Voices and Ensemble (1981)

Disc 6: (vii) The Desert Music (1984)

Disc 7: (viii) New York Counterpoint; (ix) Sextet (1985); (x; xi) The 4 Sections: Strings (with Winds and Brass); Percussion; Winds and Brass (with Strings); Full Orchestra (1987)

Disc 8: (xi) 3 Movements (1986); (xii) Electric Counterpoint (1987); (xiii) Different Trains (1988)

Disc 9: (xiv; xv; xvi) The Cave (excerpts) (1993)

Disc 10: (xv; xvii) City Life; (xviii) Nagoya Marimbas (1994); (xv; xvi; xix) Proverb (1995)

🔑 Ⓜ * Nonesuch 7559 79451-2 (10). Steve Reich & his musicians; with (i) Nurit Tiles & Edmund Niman (pianos); (ii) Michael Gordon, Lisa Moore, Mark Stewart, Evan Ziporyn; James Preiss (percussion); (iii) Russell Hartenberger & composer; (iv) Marimba Quartet; (v) Ens., cond. Bradley Lubman; (vi) Schoenberg Ens., Hague Percussion Group, Reinbert de Leeuw; (vii) Members of Brooklyn Philharmonic & Chorus, Tilson-Thomas; (viii) Evan Ziporyn (clarinets); (ix) Nexus; (x) Edward Niemann & Nuril Tillis (pianos); (xi) Percussion Soloists, LSO, Tilson Thomas; (xii) Paul Metheny (guitar); (xiii) Kronos Quartet; (xiv) Rowe, Beckenstein, Bassi, Mundau; (xv) Steve Reich Ens.; (xvi) cond. Paul Hillier; (xvii) cond. Bradley Lubman; (xviii) Bob Becker, James Preiss; (xix) Theatre of Voices

This invaluable Nonesuch 10-disc anthology traces the steady development of Reich's writing over three decades, beginning with the pure rhythm of the spoken voice alone, with the seemingly interminable repeated word-phrases, 'It's gonna rain' and 'Come out', which by an electronic phasing process overlap and echo ('It's gonna/it's gonna, rain rain'). This led him logically to musical equivalents, a repeated four-note Piano Phase and a single chord, reiterated continually on Four Organs. Clapping Music speaks for itself, while Drumming, Reich's best-known piece, which involves tuned drums, is here heard in a revised version, lasting just under an hour. The Six Marimbas follow a similar pattern of repetition. Music for 18 Musicians and Tehillim mark a further exploration, with an extension of the key rhythmic pattern, and with voices adding depth of colour to the latter piece.

Scored for just clarinets, New York Counterpoint (one of the composer's most genial later works) is in three sections, of which the finale is a piquantly witty jazz riff. But Reich returns to tuned percussion in the Sextet, extending its dimensions to five movements, with even more complex variation of timbres and rhythms.

But is is with Desert Music that we experience a marked expansion of the composer's minimalist horizons. It is set to a philosophical text by William Carlos Williams, and voices are now a major part of the texture; moreover, rhythms change between the three movements, harmonies are flexible, and there is a strong melodic element: the result is intriguing and attractive.

In Three Movements and Four Sections (1986/7) Reich turns to the resources of a full orchestra (though still, for the most part, used sectionally) and the second of the three movements develops a motif very like a folk tune, which is taken on into the finale.

Different Trains brings an excursion into descriptive evocation, opening with an obvious pulsing railway rhythm. Intoned dialogue forms a backing to the variety of imagery from the Kronos Quartet who, in the second movement (Europe during the war), even provide an impressive simulation of an air-raid siren.

The Cave is a unique kind of opera/oratorio, and easily Reich's most ambitious achievement. With the narrative based on Genesis, it tells the story of Abraham, God's refusal of the sacrificial offering of Isaac, and the equally dramatic rescue in the desert of Ishmail, Abraham's other son, born to him by his slave, Hagar. The Cave was the family burial place. The narrative is given a political significance by being laced with questions and comments from a cast of Israeli, Palestinian and American interviewees who, through their genealogy, feel themselves linked to these distant events.

The final disc sums up Reich's achievement, first with his vivid picture of City Life in New York, then with a nostalgic look back to his beloved marimbas, and finally the lovely Proverb, a floating vocal melisma. Beautifully sung by the Theatre of Voices, this somehow takes Reich into the mainstream of late-20th-century music, the world of Arvo Pärt and John Tavener.

(i; ii) City Life; (i; iii) 8 Lines for Octet; (iv) New York Counterpoint (for clarinets); (v) Violin Phase

🔑  RCA 74321 66459-2. (i) Ens. Modern; (ii) Rundel; or (iii) Lubman; (iv) Diry; (v) Mistry

For his portrait of City Life Steve Reich took his tape recorder out on the streets of New York to record its background noises, from subway trains, alarm systems set off in parked cars, human heartbeats and various spoken street dialogues.

New York Counterpoint is scored for nine B flat clarinets and three bass clarinets, in which the soloist himself plays, using his own pre-recordings of the other 11 parts gently throbbing and with see-saw figurations. Violin Phase also brings four separate, amalgamated parts played by a single fiddler in the same way, and is even more naggingly repetitive.

The original version of Eight Lines, the most celebrated piece here, was scored for two pianists, string quartet and two woodwind players (who had to switch quickly between a variety of instruments). The revised version still uses the eight lines of the title, but now the strings underpin the counterpoint, in which the harmonic changes are as minimal as the ideas. The performances are expert.

(i) Daniel Variations; (ii) Variations for Vibes, Piano & Strings

Ⓝ  Nonesuch 7559 79949-4. (i) Los Angeles Master Chorale, Gershon; (ii) L. Sinf., Pierson

With these works, following in the footsteps of John Adams, Steve Reich is moving further away from his basic, bare-faced minimalism. Inspired by the murder of an American reporter in 2002, the Daniel Variations combine biblical quotations with secular comments. The Variations for Piano, Vibes, Piano and Strings is in three sections and is genially full of spontaneous vitality, drawing on canonic interplay to move contrapuntally to a telling apotheosis. Impressive!

(i) Different Trains; (ii) Piano Phase

🔑 * Black Box BBM 1007. (i) Duke Qt; (ii) Russo, Mellits – MELLITS: String Quartet 2 ***

This is the most successful performance of Different Trains so far put on disc. The American train sequence is particularly haunting, with the spoken voices atmospherically interpolated; but throughout all three movements the train rhythms are insistently evocative. Piano Phase is minimalism pure and simple: over 19 minutes very little happens, while one waits for the basic remorseless rhythmic pattern to get out of phase. It is hypnotically played and the Black Box recording is first class in both works. A key Reich CD, and the coupling shows his influence on another talented composer.

Different Trains; Duet; Triple Quartet

 Signum SIGCD 004. Smith Qt; composer

Different Trains is in three sections, evoking (but not describing) three different railway networks and their sounds – America before the war, Europe during the war, and After the war. The train rhythms and siren sounds are created by a string quartet, over which are superimposed speaking voices constantly repeating phrases.

Duet and the three-movement Triple Quartet use quartet sonorities alone, but they expand the sounds available by using pre-recorded tapes so that three and sometimes four groups can be heard playing together. The haunting central movement of the Triple Quartet is lyrical, even elegiac; the outer movements are abrasive and incisive. The effect in these performances is both spontaneous and original.

Drumming (original version)

Ⓑ  DG (ADD) 474 323-2 (2). composer and musicians

Written between 1970 and 1971, Drumming was one of Reich's key early works, firmly establishing the basic style of minimalism. This four-part work, played without a break, in this intance lasts for about an hour and a half and features only one basic rhythmic pattern throughout.

For the aficionado, the result induces an increasing musical hypnosis; for the uninitiated, nothing very important appears to change. The present performance under the composer's direction was faithfully recorded in 1974 and is seemingly spontaneous.

Drumming (new version)

 Cantaloupe CA 21026. So Percussion

This version of Drumming by So Percussion (with Rebecca Armstrong and Jay Clayton, vocals and whistling, and Eric Lesser, piccolo) lasts 73 minutes and is certainly hypnotic, but we would not like to say that it is more or less effective than the performance under the composer.

8 Lines

🔑 Ⓜ * Virgin 3 63308-2. LCO, Warren-Green – ADAMS: Shaker Loops  ✿; GLASS: Company, etc. ; HEATH: Frontier ***

Steve Reich's 8 Lines is minimalism in its most basic form, and, although the writing is full of good-humoured vitality, the listener without a score could be forgiven for sometimes thinking that the music was on an endless loop. The performance is expert.

(i) Eight Lines; (ii) Four Organs; (iii) New York Counterpoint; (iv) Vermont Counterpoint

Ⓝ Ⓜ  EMI 2 06624-2. (i) Solisti New York; (ii) Tilson Thomas; (iii) Damiens; (iv) Wilson – GLASS: Company; Façades ***

Vermont Counterpoint is aurally fascinating, with its flute-dominated textures – Random Wilson here soloist as well as musical director – and the longer Eight Lines is also ingeniously scored. But this is minimalist music with a vengeance, with the textural alterations relatively significant over a fairly long time-span. New York Counterpoint brings Alain Damiens's clarinet multiplied by the use of tape. However, the harmony of Four Organs does not change throughout; instead there is a lengthening of the opening chord. The performances are all admirable and the hypnotic effect of much of this music is undeniable.

Music for 18 Musicians

🔑 * RCA 09026 68672-2. Ens. Modern

Dating from 1974–6, Music for 18 Musicians derives from and returns to a pulsing 11-chord cyclic 'theme', framing 12 connected sections, which have comparatively simple additional material superimposed upon them, as the music proceeds. As the recording is cued into 14 separate tracks, the listener can readily isolate the changes within the basic structure. This is a hypnotic performance of a key work in Reich's continuing odyssey in musical minimalism.

(i) Music for Mallet Instruments, Voices and Organ; (ii) Variations for Winds Strings and Keyboards; (iii) 6 Pianos

🔑 Ⓜ * DG 471 591-2. (i) Instrumental & Vocal Ens., directed composer; (ii) San Francisco SO, de Waart; (iii) Chambers, Preiss, Hartenberger, Becker, Velez, composer

Easily the most attractive work here is the Variations, which was commissioned by the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra but is underpinned by the keyboard instruments (two pianos and three electric organs). The orchestral strings are used to double the harmony played by the organs, and the more active keyboard music is doubled by the woodwind. Only the brass act independently in the first and third of the work's three sections. Much more happens here than is usual with this composer, for that ostinato theme has a constantly varying chaconne bass, except that, as the composer suggests, the 'bass is in the middle register'. For the patient listener this work is well worth exploring.

Music for Mallet Instruments, Voices and Organ (1973) deals with two simultaneous, interrelated rhythmic processes, which purposely get out of sync (or 'phase' as the composer describes the process). Six Pianos opens with three of the six players sharing the same eight-beat rhythmic pattern, but with different notes for each pianist. The others then join in, again to produce a complicated rhythmic texture as the instruments get out of phase, substituting rests for notes. Both these works bring the seemingly endless repetitions for which Reich is famous, but the performance here cannot be faulted, neither can the recording, and there is excellent documentation.

Tehillim

🔑 * ECM 827 411-2. composer & musicians, Manahan

Steve Reich is listed among the percussion players in Tehillim, with George Manahan conducting. The central focus, in this Hebrew setting of Psalms 19 and 18 (in that order), is on the vocal ensemble of four voices. The result – with clapping and drumming punctuating the singing – has an element of charm rare in minimalist music. With jazzy syncopations and Cuban rhythms, the first of the two movements sounds like Bernstein's Chichester Psalms caught in a groove. The second starts slowly but speeds up for the verses of praise to the Lord and the final Hallelujahs. Clear, forward, analogue recording.

Variations for Wind, Strings & Keyboards

Ⓜ  Ph. 475 7551. San Francisco SO, Edo de Waart – ADAMS: Shaker Loops ***

The Variations, written for the San Francisco orchestra in 1980, marked a new departure in Reich's writing, using a large orchestra instead of a small chamber scale. The repetitions and ostinatos which gradually get out of phase (like Drumming) are used most skilfully to produce a kind of hypnotic poetry, soothing rather than compelling.

REICHA, Antonín (1770–1836)

(i) Sinfonia concertante in G for Flute, Violin & Orchestra; Symphony in E flat, Op. 41; Overture in D

 MDG 335 0661-2. (i) Bieler, Gérard; Wuppertal SO, Gülke

The first movement of Reicha's Sinfonia concertante brings engaging textures but is otherwise relatively conventional. The galant Andante, however, brings a charming little violin melody over a tick-tock flute accompaniment; later the two instruments change roles. The Overture in D minor is, remarkably, in 5/8 time and its nagging ostinato main theme is at first quite catching. The snag is that, despite its variety of colour, it is a shade over-long. The Symphony is a different matter. Its main Allegro is very confidently constructed. The Andante un poco adagio doesn't disappoint, while in the lively finale the composer keeps a card or two up his sleeve until the very end. A real discovery, which invites repeated hearings. The orchestra is a fine ensemble and, with two first-class soloists here, offers a rewarding collection, well recorded.

Flute Quartets 1 in E min.; 2 in A; 3 in D, Op. 98/1–3

🔑  MDG 311 0630-2. Hünteler, R. & J. Küssmaul, Dietiens

In the opening Quartet, a particularly fine piece, one thinks often of Mozart, and Reicha's invention is seldom inferior. The piquant opening of the Second Quartet has a charming insouciance, and in the Third Quartet the quaint little tune, marching along slowly and elegantly is again Bohemian in spirit. Throughout all three works the solo flute part demands, and receives, the utmost virtuosity from its performer, here Konrad Hünteler, who either dominates or blends with his colleagues, all excellent players. The vivid recording completes the listener's pleasure.

Oboe Quintet in F, Op. 107

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55015. Francis, Allegri Qt – CRUSELL: Divertimento (with R. KREUTZER: Grand Quintet) **(*)

Antonín Reicha's F major Quintet is unmemorable but always amiable. The present performance is of high quality and very well recorded.

Wind Quintets: in F (1811); in E flat; in B flat, Op. 88/2 & 5; in D; in A, Op. 91/3 & 5

🔑 Ⓑ * Hyp. Dyad CDD 22006 (2). Academia Wind Quintet of Prague

Czech wind-playing in Czech wind music has a deservedly high entertainment rating, and the present performances are no exception. The music itself has great charm and geniality; it is ingenuous yet cultivated, with some delightful, smiling writing for the bassoon. The players are clearly enjoying themselves, yet they play and blend expertly. The sound too is admirable.

Wind Quintets in B flat, Op. 88/5; C, Op. 99/1

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8 554227. Michael Thompson Wind Quintet

The Michael Thompson Wind Quintet give expert accounts of these attractive pieces. Their playing is very fresh and alive, and Reicha can be both rewarding and interesting – it is finely wrought and pleasing. Very good sound.

Wind Quintets in C & A min., Op. 91/1–2 (Crystal CD 264)

Wind Quintets in A & C min., Op. 91/5–6 (Crystal CD 266)

Wind Quintets in E flat & E min., Op. 100/3 & 4

 Crystal CD 271. Westwood Wind Quintet

The American Westwood Quintet are an excellent group and are recording all Reicha's Woodwind Quintets. Their performances so far of these works, all considerable pieces, are excellent and well recorded. This is music of much facility and charm.

REINECKE, Carl (1824–1910)

Harp Concerto in E min., Op. 182

🔑 Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 463 648-2. Zöller, Zabaleta, BPO, Märzendorfer – MOZART: Flute & Harp Concerto in C, K. 299 ; RODRIGO: Concierto serenata *** ❀

This is an attractive work, Zabaleta's performance is an outstanding one, and it is truthfully recorded. If the couplings are suitable this is a highly recommendable disc.

Symphonies 2 in C min., Op. 134; 3 in G min., Op. 227

🔑 * Chan. 9893. Tasmanian SO, Shelley

Few forgotten 19th-century composers so richly deserve revival as Carl Reinecke, in his time a leading teacher as well as a successful composer. Almost 10 years older than his friend Brahms, he lived on until 1910, prolific into his eighties. His style is conservative but never bland, like a cross between Mendelssohn and Brahms, with memorable themes strongly developed, and with refined orchestration regularly revealing his Brahmsian love of the horn and oboe. You could hardly find more persuasive advocates than Howard Shelley and the brilliant Tasmanian Symphony Orchestra, vividly recorded.

Flute Sonata (Undine), Op. 167

Ⓜ  RCA (ADD) 09026 61615-2. Galway, Argerich – FRANCK; PROKOFIEV: Sonatas ***

Some of Reinecke's invention here is quite striking (as in the Sonata's first movement). His writing, which has sudden florid bursts, makes an engaging vehicle for an artist of Galway's calibre, and this makes a fine bonus for the coupling of two masterly works by Prokofiev and Franck.

String Trio in C min., Op. 249

 MDG 634 0841-2. Belcanto Strings – FUCHS: Trio in A, Op. 94 ***

This C minor Trio comes from around 1898 and is conservative in style, finely crafted and cultured music, superbly played and recorded.

REIZENSTEIN, Franz (1911–68)

Piano Music: Impromptu Op. 14; Legend, Op. 24; Scherzo fantastique. Op. 26; Scherzo in A, Op. 21; Sonata, Op. 19

Ⓝ Ⓜ . Lyrita mono REAM 2105. composer – BOWEN: 10 Preludes, Op. 102, etc. ()

This is a real rarity. Reizenstein has fallen completely out of the repertoire and we cannot recall seeing any of his works billed in the concert hall or on BBC Radio 3 since the 1950s. Like his contemporary, Arnold Cooke, he never completely escaped from the influence of Hindemith, with whom they both studied. But his finest music such as Voices of Night has real substance and vision. He was obviously a formidable pianist, judging from the playing here in 1958, and the music itself is of unfailing interest.

RESPIGHI, Ottorino (1879–1936)

Adagio con variazioni (for cello & orchestra)

Ⓜ  Sup. (ADD) SU 3667-2. Navarra, Czech PO, Ančerl – BLOCH: Schelomo; SCHUMANN: Cello Concerto **(*)

Respighi's short but charming set of variations shows the composer on top form. It is an Italianate equivalent of Tchaikovsky's Rococo Variations and has a burst of almost Russian romantic expressiveness to make a sunset-like ending. Navarra plays it very beautifully, and both his timbre and the orchestra are greatly enhanced by the current remastering.

(i) Adagio con variazioni (for cello & orchestra); The Birds; 3 Botticelli Pictures; (ii) Il tramonto

🔑  Chan. 8913. (i) Wallfisch; (ii) Finnie; Bournemouth Sinf., Vásáry

Raphael Wallfisch is very persuasive in Respighi's Adagio. The Birds brings lovely playing and the luminous recording gives much pleasure. The lambent Italianate evocation of the Three Botticelli Pictures is also aurally bewitching. But what caps the success of this Chandos Respighi anthology is Linda Finnie's ravishing account of Il tramonto. Again very responsive orchestral playing and the recording is in the demonstration class throughout this CD.

(i) Ancient Airs and Dances: Suites 1–3; The Birds (Gli Uccelli): Suite; (ii) Feste Romane; The Pines of Rome

🔑 Ⓑ * Artemis Vanguard ATM-CD 1227 (2). (i) Australian CO, Lyndon-Gee; (ii) Baltimore SO, Comissiona

Ancient Airs & Dances: Suites 1–3; 3 Botticelli Pictures (Trittico botticelliano)

 Telarc CD 80309. Lausanne CO, López-Cobos

Christopher Lyndon-Gee's performance of The Birds is a complete delight, opening and closing vigorously, yet providing the most refined portraits of the dove, nightingale and cuckoo, with particularly lovely oboe playing in The Dove. The opening of the first suite of Ancient Airs and Dances has a comparable grace and delicacy of feeling; throughout, Lyndon-Gee's response to Respighi's imaginative orchestration is wonderfully fresh, with the oboe (again) and bassoon distinguishing themselves among the many fine wind solos. The strings produce lovely, translucent textures at the beginning of the Third Suite; yet, when a robust approach is called for, the players respond admirably. The digital recording, made at the ABC Studios at Chatsworth, Sydney, is first class.

Feste Romane and The Pines of Rome were recorded a decade earlier in Washington DC's National Presbyterian Church and they take full advantage of the building's expansive acoustics. The splendid Baltimore Orchestra plays superbly and Comissiona generates plenty of adrenalin in the Epiphany finale of The Pines and in the spectacle of the Roman legions marching down the Appian Way. The only snag is that The Pines has been assembled in the wrong order, with the finale second and the opening number third! However, one can easily reprogramme to have the movements in the correct order, and the descriptive notes make it plain which is which.

Opening brightly and comparatively robustly, the Lausanne performance of the Ancient Airs yet has both warmth and finesse. The rhythmic pulse is lively without being heavy, and there is much engaging woodwind detail; at the graceful beginning of the Third Suite textures are agreeably light and transparent. The Telarc recording is first rate and even more impressive in the Botticelli Pictures, with La primavera burgeoning with the extravagantly exotic spring blossoming, and The Birth of Venus rapt in its radiantly expansive ecstasy.

Ancient Airs & Dances: Suite 3 for Strings; The Fountains of Rome; The Pines of Rome

🔑 Ⓜ * DG (ADD) 449 724-2. BPO, Karajan (with BOCCHERINI: Quintettino; ALBINONI: Adagio in G min. (arr. Giazotto) ***)

In the symphonic poems Karajan is in his element, and the playing of the Berlin Philharmonic is wonderfully refined as well as exciting. The opening of the Ancient Airs brings ravishing tone from the strings, and they sound even more lavish in Giazotto's famous arrangement of Albinoni's Adagio, while Boccherini's Quintettino makes an engaging additional lollipop.

Le astuzie di Colombina; La pentola magica; Sèvres de la vieille France

 Marco 8.223346. Slovak RSO (Bratislava), Adriano

Sèvres de la vieille France is based on 17th- and 18th-century airs, scored with great elegance and charm; La pentola magica makes use of Russian models. Le astuzie di Colombina, described as a 'Scherzo Veneziano', uses popular Venetian melodies among other things. The scores contain some winning and delightful numbers. Decent performances and good recording.

Ballata delle Gnomidi; (i) Concerto gregoriano; Poema autunnale

🔑  Chan. 9232. (i) Mordkovitch; BBC PO, Downes

The Concerto gregoriano is a meditative, lyrical outpouring making free use of Gregorian modes. Apart from some moments of brilliant display, the slightly later Poema autunnale for violin and orchestra is also predominantly lyrical and has moments of a Delius-like mysticism. Lydia Mordkovitch gives most affecting accounts of both pieces and is very well supported by Downes and the BBC Philharmonic. The Ballata delle Gnomidi (1920) finds Respighi in his most exotic Roman Trilogy mode: it is a dazzling exercise in colour and orchestration.

Belfagor Overture; 3 Corali; (i) Fantasia slava for Piano & Orchestra; Toccata for Piano & Orchestra

 Chan. 9311. (i) Tozer; BBC PO, Downes

The best thing here is the Toccata for Piano and Orchestra. It is better argued and structured, more inventive and novel, as well as more musically rewarding, than either of the piano concertos, and Tozer plays it with considerable bravura and panache and the BBC Philharmonic under Sir Edward Downes are admirably supportive. The Fantasia slava is shorter and less interesting, and the same goes for the three chorale arrangements. The Belfagor is a re-composition based on themes from his opera, and not the curtain-raiser heard in the theatre. Excellent in every way, and with recording of first-class quality.

Belkis, Queen of Sheba: Suite; Metamorphosen Modi XII

🔑 * Chan. 8405. Philh. O, Simon

The ballet-suite Belkis, Queen of Sheba, is a score that set the pattern for later Hollywood biblical film music; but Metamorphosen is a taut and sympathetic set of variations. It has been ingeniously based on a medieval theme, and though a group of cadenza variations relaxes the tension of argument in the middle, the brilliance and variety of the writing have much in common with Elgar's Enigma. Superb playing from the Philharmonia, treated to one of the finest recordings that even Chandos has produced, outstanding in every way.

(i) The Birds (Gli uccelli); 3 Botticelli Pictures; (ii) Feste Romane; The Fountains of Rome; The Pines of Rome; (iii) La sensitiva; (iv) Il tramonto

Ⓝ Ⓑ  EMI 2 37676-2 (2). (i) ASMF, Marriner; (ii) Phd. O, Muti; (iii) J. Baker, City of L. Sinf., Hickox; (iv) Rice, Santa Cecilia Acc. O, Pappano

Some excellent performances here. Muti gives warmly red-blooded performances of Respighi's Roman trilogy, captivatingly Italianate in their inflections. With brilliant playing from the Philadelphia Orchestra and warmly atmospheric recording, they sound far better than the quality EMI engineers generally produced in Philadelphia, and they are exceptional for their strength of characterization. They are preceded on CD 1 by an excellent account of the composer's glorious Il tramonto ('the Sunset'), very well performed by Pappano, even if Christine Rice is perhaps a shade too closely miked and has less warmth than Janet Baker on the companion disc. The setting of Shelley's poem, La sensitiva (in Italian translation), is a most beautiful piece which Janet Baker and Richard Hickox treat to a glowing recording. The vocal line, mainly declamatory, is sweetly sympathetic and the orchestration is both rich and subtle. Marriner offers delightful performances of The Birds and is beautifully recorded. The Three Botticelli Pictures are less well known, but they are delicately scored and, with presentation of this standard, they are certainly enjoyable.

The Birds (Gli uccelli); Church Windows (Vetrate di chiesa)

(BB) (*) Sony (ADD) SBK 60311. Phd. O, Ormandy – SCARLATTI: The Good-Humoured Ladies **(*)

In Church Windows the picture of the baby Jesus in The Flight into Egypt has a Latin intensity of feeling which suits Ormandy and the rich-textured Philadelphia sound, while the following evocation of St Michael, sword in hand, is spectacularly painted with broad strokes of the orchestral brush. The finale, a papal blessing scene, is on the largest scale. Ormandy rises to the occasion and the spectacular recording is a match for the Philadelphia big guns – although subtlety is not the keynote here and the listener is all but overwhelmed. The Birds is slighter, but the playing is full of charm, especially the delicate tracery of the final cuckoo evocation.

3 Botticelli Pictures

 Decca Australian Eloquence (ADD) 476 9766. L. Chamber Ch., Argo CO, Heltay – ROTA: Concerto for Strings ; PIZZETTI: Concerto de l'estate; La Pisanella: Suite **(*)

The Three Botticelli Pictures are delicate and affecting, fastidiously scored, showing the composer's great skill in the handling of pastel colours. These excellent (Argo) recordings from 1978 have stood the test of time and find themselves on a disc of rare Pizzetti and a short and pleasing Rota work. Good, warm transfers.

Brazilian Impressions; Church Windows (Vetrate di chiesa)

 Chan. 8317. Philh. O, Simon

Geoffrey Simon is sympathetic and he secures very fine playing from the Philharmonia. On CD, the wide dynamic range and a striking depth of perspective create the most spectacular effects.

Brazilian Impressions; Church Windows; Rossiniana

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.557711. Buffalo PO, Falletta

Brazilian Impressions stemmed from a visit that the composer himself made to Brazil. But the longest and most ambitious of the three works here is Church Windows, with suitable paintings chosen to go with each piece – The Flight into Egypt for the gentle opening movement, St Michael the Archangel for the vigorous second, The Matins of St Clare for the third, and St Gregory the Great for the grandest of the four, rounding off the work with a glorious display, like a papal coronation in sound. This Naxos issue now upstages the Chandos disc above, which does not include Rossiniana of 1925, which was Respighi's attempt to follow up the enormous success of La Boutique fantasque, this time using some of Rossini's trifling piano pieces, Les Riens; but, colourful as these pieces are, they hardly rival those in the earlier suite. The Buffalo Philharmonic under its music director, JoAnn Falletta, is treated to warm and spectacular recording, apt for such exotic pieces.

Burlesca; 5 Études-Tableaux (Rachmaninov, orch. Respighi); Preludio, Corale e Fuga; Rossiniana

🔑 * Chan. 10388. BBC PO, Noseda

Not for nothing was Respighi a pupil of Rimsky-Korsakov, for the orchestration is of remarkable brilliance and subtlety. This splendid disc offers two important examples of his arrangements, not just the score he concocted from Rossinian fragments but, most impressive of all, the total re-creation of five of Rachmaninov's Etudes-Tableaux, turning them into totally new works, at times barely recognizable against the piano originals. Of the Rachmaninov arrangements there can be no reservations whatever, leaving one open-mouthed at Respighi's ingenuity and imagination. The other two works date from much earlier, with the Burlesca ripe with horn-writing, and the Prelude, Chorale and Fugue even more remarkable. Performances of all four works are outstanding, with the Chandos sound bringing out the full richness of Respighi's writing.

Piano Concerto in A min.; Fantasia slava; Toccata for Piano & Orchestra

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553207. Scherbakov, Slovak RSO (Bratislava), Griffiths

Concerto in modo misolidio; (i) Concerto a cinque

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553366. Scherbakov, Slovak RSO, Griffiths; (i) Capella Istropolitana, Danel

The first Naxos CD misses out the Concerto in modo misolidio and includes instead the much finer if rather extended Toccata and the concise and rather engaging Fantasia slava. The Russian pianist, Konstantin Scherbakov, is a persuasive and at times dazzlingly brilliant soloist and he is accompanied persuasively by the Slovak Radio Symphony Orchestra (Bratislava) under Howard Griffiths. The recording is excellent and this disc is well worth its modest cost.

Scherbakov's account of the Concerto in modo misolidio is superior in every way (except recorded quality) to Tozer's on Chandos – and a third of the price. The Concerto a cinque makes a delightful and inventive makeweight.

Feste romane; The Fountains of Rome; The Pines of Rome (symphonic poems)

🔑 Ⓜ * RCA 82876 60869-2. Santa Cecilia Ac., Gatti

(BB) (*) Sony (ADD) SBK 48267. Phd. O, Ormandy

Feste Romane; The Fountains of Rome; The Pines of Rome; (i) Il Tramonto

🔑 * EMI 394429-2. Santa Cecilia Ac. O, Pappano; (i) with Christine Rice

The Fountains of Rome

() Testament mono SBT 1108. St Cecilia Ac., Rome, O, de Sabata – DEBUSSY: La Mer; Jeux; Nuages; Fêtes ()

The Fountains of Rome; The Pines of Rome

🔑 ❀ Ⓜ * RCA (ADD) 09026 61401-2. Chicago SO, Reiner – MUSSORGSKY: Pictures at an Exhibition *** ❀

🔑 Ⓜ * RCA (ADD) SACD 82876 71614-2. Chicago SO, Reiner – DEBUSSY: La Mer ****

The Pines of Rome

 BBC (ADD) BBCL 1007-2. Bournemouth SO, Silvestri – TCHAIKOVSKY: Manfred Symphony **(*)

What more appropriate orchestra to record the three Roman colour-scapes of Respighi than Rome's greatest orchestra, the Accademia di Santa Cecilia, under its music director, Antonio Pappano. As in Italian opera, Pappano has a natural feeling for flexible phrasing without exaggeration, while the fine EMI recording offers clean separation and a wide dynamic range to match even the brilliant RCA versions of Reiner and Gatti. It adds to the attractions of the disc that as a bonus Pappano offers the lovely setting of Shelley in translation for mezzo and strings, Il Tramonto ('The Sunset'), beautifully sung with clear, firm tone by Christine Rice.

Reiner's legendary recordings of The Pines and Fountains of Rome were made in Symphony Hall, Chicago, on 24 October 1959, and the extraordinarily atmospheric performances have never been surpassed since for their sultry Italian warmth. Yet the turning on of the Triton fountain brings an unforced cascade of orchestral brilliance. Reiner's classic recording has now been given RCA's SACD facelift and sounds more vividly brilliant than ever. It is presumably still to remain available, alternatively coupled with Mussorgsky's Pictures at an Exhibition, but Reiner's account of La Mer on the present disc is also pretty riveting.

Daniele Gatti brings something special to all three works: a rapt intensity and an extraordinary feeling for atmosphere and a total dedication to Respighi's glowing, richly coloured scoring that is completely involving. The Santa Cecilia Orchestra plays wonderfully for him, and the RCA recording challenges the very best of the competition and is very well detailed.

Ormandy's Sony Feste romane has great electricity and enormous surface excitement, and it is a pity that the sound-quality is fiercely brilliant. In the other two works the effect is more opulent, and the Philadelphia playing is fabulous, while the recording has come up astonishingly well. This is still a very exciting example of the Ormandy/Philadelphia regime at its most spectacularly compelling.

Victor de Sabata's 1947 account of The Fountains of Rome was the earliest post-war set and superseded Albert Coates's early 1930s version with the LSO, also on HMV. It is a magical performance with many touches that, though different from Reiner, are of comparable subtlety and atmosphere.

The Fountains of Rome; The Pines of Rome; Metamorphosen modi XII: Theme & Variations for Orchestra

* Telarc CD 80505. Cincinnati SO, López-Cobos

This impressive Telarc disc springs a surprise in making a new pairing with the Theme and Variations for Orchestra. This suffers from the somewhat ungainly title of Metamorphosen modi XII, but it is a marvellously inventive and resourceful score. Expert and sympathetic playing by the excellent Cincinnati Orchestra under Jesús López-Cobos and (not unexpectedly from Telarc) altogether excellent recording which is spectacular, but also both natural in perspective and impressively detailed, with splendid range.

La Pentola Mafixa; (i) Aretusa; La Sensitiva

 CPO 777 071-2. O of Teatro Massimo, Palermo; (i) with Pinti

The ballet La Pentola Mafixa does for Russian composers (Arensky, Gretchaninov, Rebikov and Anton Rubinstein) what Rossiniana did for Rossini. La Sensitiva is a setting of Shelley and a beautiful piece. Less familiar is Aretusa, another Shelley setting, in which Damiana Pinti is again the engaging soloist. The more one investigates him, the more interesting and rewarding Respighi becomes.

La Pentola magica (ballet); arr. of BACH: Prelude and Fugue in D; ROSSINI: La Boutique fantasque ***

🔑 * Chan. 10081. BBC PO, Noseda

Ottorino Respighi's sparkling arrangements of Rossini's late inspirations, the 'Sins of Old Age', which make up the ballet La Boutique fantasque, have long been popular, here inspiring an exhilarating performance from Gianandrea Noseda and the BBC Philharmonic, richly recorded. La Pentola magica ('The Magic Pot'), is a ballet score which remained unpublished until after the composer's death, drawing on rare Russian sources in a gentle sequence of ten brief movements, again beautifully orchestrated. The Prelude and Fugue in D, the most spectacular item, is an exuberant realization of Bach's organ original, which, far from imitating the organ, pulls out all the orchestral stops in a resounding display.

Rossiniana (arr. Respighi)

(*) Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 476 2724. SRO, Ansermet – OFFENBACH: Gaîté parisienne; GOUNOD: Faust: ballet music *

It is perhaps curious that this work is usually catalogued under Respighi, whereas La boutique fantasque, which Respighi also based on Rossini's music, is more often found under Rossini. Ansermet's performances are the very opposite of the Solti items on this CD, and it is the delicate colour and balance of these scores (rather than immaculate orchestral playing) that Ansermet fans will most admire. The final Tarantella is especially enjoyable here. Vintage Decca sound.

Sinfonia drammatica

 Chan. 9213. BBC PO, Downes

Respighi's Sinfonia drammatica (1914) is a work of ambitious proportions: epic in scale, it lasts just over an hour, the first movement alone taking 25 minutes. Yet it proves rich in incident and lavish in its orchestral colours and virtuosity; even if it is not organic in conception or symphonic in the classical sense, it is an immensely worthwhile addition to the catalogue. If you enjoy the Alpine Symphony, you should try this. An excellent performance and outstanding recording.

CHAMBER MUSIC

String Quartet in D; Quartetto dorico; (i) Il tramonto (The Sunset)

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * Van. 99216. Brodsky Qt; (i) with von Otter

Ⓝ  BISCD1454. New Hellenic Qt, (i) with Doufexis

Il tramonto, a setting of Shelley, is relatively familiar: a number of great singers have recorded it. Anne Sofie von Otter is a match for any of them. However, the little-known early Quartet in D major and the Quartetto dorico are quite a find. Respighi was in his late twenties when he wrote the D major. There is the occasional whiff of Brahms and even Debussy and at the beginning of the slow movement a fleeting suggestion of late Strauss, and there are moments of serene beauty throughout. The Quartetto dorico, which is hardly less rewarding, comes from the 1920s, when Respighi was at the height of his enthusiasm for Gregorian melody. Sensitive playing, finely blended tone and a magisterial authority distinguish the playing, and the recording team deserve congratulations on its truthfully balanced and natural sound.

The New Hellenic is reputedly the finest quartet in Greece, and their accounts of these two Respighi rarities are certainly accomplished. Il tramonto ('The Sunset'), a setting of Shelley, is more familiar in its orchestral form but Stella Doufexis blends in with the more intimate texture to good effect. The recording is in the high standards of the house.

PIANO MUSIC

Ancient Airs & Dances; 6 Pieces; 3 Preludi sopra melodie gregoriane; Sonata in F min.

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553704. Scherbakov

Respighi followed his famous orchestral set of Antiche danze ed arie (transcriptions from lute tablature), with some for the piano. He also transcribed others: the first by the Genovese, Simone Molinaro, Balletto detto il Conte Orlando bears a strong resemblance to the first movement of The Birds, as does the Gagliarda by Vincenzo Galileo (father of the famous scientist). Of the other pieces, the Notturno from the Six Pieces has a distinctly Rachmaninovian feel. The F minor Sonata (1897–8) is a rarity. Konstantin Scherbakov is a pianist of quality, combining the highest musicianship with sensitivity and refinement. He is excellently recorded too.

VOCAL MUSIC

La sensitiva

🔑 (BB) * Virgin 2x1 5 61469-2 (2). J. Baker, City of L. Sinf., Hickox – BERLIOZ: Les Nuits d'été, etc.; BRAHMS: Alto Rhapsody, etc.; MENDELSSOHN: Infelice, etc. ***

Tautly structured over its span of more than half an hour, Respighi's setting of Shelley's poem, The Sensitive Plant (in Italian translation), is a most beautiful piece which Janet Baker and Richard Hickox treat to a glowing first recording.

Il tramonto

🔑  Hyp. CDA 66290. Madalin, ECO, Bonavera – MARTUCCI: Le canzone dei ricordi; Notturno ***

Respighi's Il tramonto (The Sunset) is a glorious work which at times calls to mind the world of late Strauss. A most lovely record. Recommended with all possible enthusiasm.

REVUELTAS, Silvestre
(1899–1940)

La Coronela* (ballet; orch. Moncada; arr. Limantour); La noche de los Mayas (arr. Limantour); *Sensemayá

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.555917. Aguascalientes SO, Mexico, Barrios

The Mexican composer and violinist Silvestre Revueltas is essentially remembered for his colourful tone-poems, which are strongly influenced by Mexican folk music. His music is approachable: rhythmic, vibrant, even gaudily orchestrated, often with strong elements of popular Hispanic–American cultures in scores which also have strands of Stravinsky, Prokofiev and Chavez. Vibrant recording to match the performances.

REZNIČEK, Emil von
(1860–1945)

Raskolnikov (Phantasy Overture); (i) Schlemihl (A Symphonic Life Story)

 CPO 999 795-2. WDR SO, Cologne, Jurowski; (i) with Yamamasu

It is good to have more music from the composer of the brilliant Donna Diana Overture, and it is immediately striking to hear the Richard Strauss parallels in Schlemihl, A Symphonic Life Story, first performed in 1912. It is loosely autobiographical, and the sleeve-note writer at one point suggests it might be entitled 'Not a Hero's Life'. It makes for very enjoyable listening, especially Rezniček's gift for bright orchestrations. This committed performance makes a fair case for this work, though Nobuaki Yamamasu is a little unsteady in his short solo. The 22-minute Raskolnikov Overture (1932) is, once again, very much in the vein of Richard Strauss (if without the genius), and has some fine passages in it, but in its meandering way it does not always sustain interest. Good recording.

Der Sieger* (symphonic poem)

 CPO 999898-2. Koepp, West German RSO and Ch. of Cologne, Jurowski

First heard in December 1913, Der Sieger ('The Victor') is a massive symphonic poem in three movements, involving an enormous orchestra with quadruple woodwind, as well as chorus and soloist. In its own right it stands as a formidable work, rich in ideas, closely argued, with orchestral effects brilliantly handled to have maximum impact, a point superbly realized by Jurowski's performance with the Cologne Radio Orchestra. Though it was praised at the time, it was a work which failed to stay even in the German repertory in the post-war period of economy in music. This disc, spectacularly recorded, fills an important gap.

OPERA

Donna Diana* (complete)

🔑  CPO 999 991-2 (2). Uhl, Sadnik, Wittlieb, Pauly, Schluter, Wittges Kiel Op. Ch. and O, Windfuhr

This live recording of a comic opera known till now only from its sparkling overture fills an intriguing gap. The overture is one of the most scintillating in the whole repertory, and the rest of the piece is written just as skilfully, with many ensembles in compound time, inevitably echoing the music we know. The story involves a lovesick prince, Don Cesar, who despairs when his beloved princess, Donna Diana, daughter of the ruling Count of Barcelona, remains cold, repelling all suitors. Needless to say, after many complications, Cesar finally wins Diana's love, with two other pairs also happily coupled. The score moves swiftly, with few set numbers of any length, and arias are generally avoided in favour of duets and ensembles. This recording from the Kiel Opera brings lively performances from everyone, with the tenor Roman Sadnik excellent as Don Cesar. The casting of Manuela Uhl in the title-role is more problematic, when in Act I the beat in her rich soprano is very obtrusive. Happily, in Acts II and III the voice comes into firm focus with clarity, power and warmth, with exposed top notes satisfyingly steady, and subtle shading of pianissimos. Warm, atmospheric recording.

RHEINBERGER, Joseph
(1839–1901)

Organ Concerto 1 in F, Op. 137

 Telarc CD 80136. Murray, RPO, Ling – DUPRE: Symphony ***

Rheinberger's Concerto is well made, its invention is attractive and it has suitable moments of spectacle that render it admirable for a coupling with the Dupré Symphony, with its use of the massive Albert Hall organ. The performance here is first rate. A fine demonstration disc.

Organ Music (complete) including Sonatas 1–20; 12 Characteristic Pieces (Meditations), Op. 167; Monologue (12 Pieces), Op. 152; 12 Organ Pieces, Op. 174; Trios Opp. 49 & 189; & miscellaneous works

 MDG 317 891 (Vol. 1); 317 892 (Vol. 2); 317 893 (Vol. 3); 317 894 (Vol. 4); 317 895 (Vol. 5); 317 896 (Vol. 6); 317 897 (Vol. 7); 317 898 (Vol. 8); 317 899 (Vol. 9); 317 900 (Vol. 10); 317 901 (Vol. 11); 317 902 (Vol. 12). Innig (Kuhn organs at Stadkirche, St Anton, Zürich; Neumünster, Zürich; St Johann Schaffhausen; & in Winterthur & Zürich's new Cathedral organ)

Organ Sonatas 1–13; 10 Trios, Op. 49; 5 Trios, Op. 189/1–5; 7 Trios, Op. 189/6–12

BB (*) Naxos 8.554212 (Sonatas 1–4); 8.554213 (Sonatas 5–7); 8.554549 (Sonatas 8–9 & Trios, Op. 49); 8.554809 (Sonatas 10–11 & Trios, Op. 189/1–5); 8.557184 (Sonatas 12–13 & Trios, Op. 189/6–12). Rübsam (organ of Fulda Cathedral, Germany)

Rheinberger's 20 Organ Sonatas, in as many keys, are the province of the organ fraternity rather than the general collector. But this excellent Naxos survey on a fine organ persuasively shows the variety of their invention. Most have a Fugue but also include movements described as Prelude, Canzona, Fantasia, Intermezzo, Pastoral, Toccata, even Marcia religiosa, while other Sonatas are simple three-movement works, Allegro–Andante–Finale, with the first movement often having a free sonata-form structure and with thematic motives common to more than one movement. The Trios are brief, single-movement pieces, occasionally in ternary form, sometimes using canonic devices, and always exploiting the full possibilities of organ registration.

Wolfgang Rübsam's credentials have been established by his Bach recordings, and his survey has so far reached Volume 13, maintaining a high standard of performance and recording on a suitable organ throughout. However, this music is for organ aficionados; other listeners may find much of it rather heavy going!

Rudolf Innig's survey is complete. He uses state-of-the-art organs, notably the instrument at St Anton, Zürich, originally built in 1914, and all restored by the Kuhn Organ Building Company to a standard, which in his view 'represents in authentic manner the late romantic sound ideal of the organ music of the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries'. His performances are remarkable in their power and colour. Their authority is unassailable and represents a remarkable overall achievement, for the MDG recording is also outstanding in its realism.

6 Pieces for Violin & Organ, Op. 150; (i) Suite for Organ, Violin & Cello, Op. 149

BB  Hyp. Helios CDH 55211. Barritt; (i) Lester; Herrick (organ of All Saints, Kingston-upon-Thames)

6 Pieces for Violin & Organ, Op. 150; Suite for Violin & Organ, Op. 166

BB  Naxos 8.557383. Most, Zeiner (organ of St David's Church, Copenhagen)

Paul Barritt, Richard Lester and Christopher Herrick make a good case for these slight but charming pieces. Not great music perhaps, but showing Rheinberger at his most winning, tuneful and diverting, and very well and affectionately played, with the recording excellently balanced to give an intimate chamber-music feeling.

The alternative Naxos partnership of Line Most and Marie Zeiner chooses the four-movement Suite for Violin and Organ for their coupling, which is equally agreeable. They seek a rather larger scale, with a more resonant Danish organ. Yet again the balance is adroitly managed and the performances are just as persuasive as those on Hyperion.

Masses: in E flat (Cantus missae), Op. 109; in G min., for Female Voices & Organ, Op. 187; in F for Male Voices & Organ, Op. 190; Hymn: Tribulationes. Motets: Anima nostra; Laudate Dominum; Meditabor

(*) Paraclete Press Gloria Dei Cantores GDCD 108. Gloria Dei Cantores, Patterson

Having given us a stimulating collection of the music of William Mathias, the Cape Cod-based choir Gloria Dei Cantores turn their attention to Rheinberger, best known for his oratorio, The Star of Bethlehem. But he composed his first Latin Mass in 1847, when he was just eight years old.

The finest work here is the E flat Cantus missae for double chorus, dating from 1878. It is eloquently performed, with the sequence of Credo, Sanctus Bendictus and Agnus Dei inspiring the singers to considerable expressive fervour. Among the motets the Offertory for Lent in D minor, Meditabor, is the most appealing.

The divided choirs seem slightly less confident, although the men are on the whole impressive in the F major Mass, with the rather sombre Credo the highlight. The women, however, have occasional moments of insecurity in the G minor work (dedicated to Brahms) although they still convey its linear beauty. Excellent recording (made in 1994) and an enterprising programme that deserves support. (Your supplier can obtain the disc via: www.paraclete-press.com.)

RICHTER, Franz Xaver
(1709–89)

12 Grandes Symphonies: Set 1/1–6; Set 2/ 7–12

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.557818 (Set 1); 8. 570597 (Set 2). Helsinki Bar. O, Häkkinen

Franz Xaver Richter was one of the leading composers of the Mannheim School, the group who in the first half of the 18th century developed the (then new) form of the symphony. The two sets each of 6 Grandes Symphonies were published separately, the second group in Paris in 1744. The principal characteristics of these works include a driving intensity in outer movements, while slow movements are rich in harmonic interest and texture. Richter's ideas are imaginative and these works all make enjoyably spontaneous listening. The performances by the youthful Helsinki Baroque Orchestra under their conductor Aapo Häkkinen are both spirited and expressive, and the use of period instruments does not prevent the central Andantes of these (usually three-movement) works from being warmly expressive. They are excellently recorded.

Symphonies 29 in G min. (with fugue); 43 in F min.; 52 in D; 53 in D (Trumpet Symphony)

🔑  Chan. 10386. LMP, Bamert

The vigour and colour of the writing in the five symphonies chosen here is consistently winning, starting brilliantly on this disc with the so-called Trumpet Symphony. Also impressive is Symphony 29 with its powerful fugal writing. Richter is consistently inventive, not least in the three symphonies in minor keys, with the central slow movements staying in the minor, and with the F minor, 43, ending not with a dashing Allegro or Presto but with a minuet, predicting the future. Excellent, lively performances from the London Mozart Players, beautifully recorded.

RIDOUT, Alan (1934–96)

(i; ii) Cello Concerto 1 for Cello, Strings and Percussion; (i; iii) 2: Concerto for Cello and Voices; (i; ii) 3: The Prisoner (for cello solo & 8 cellos); (iv) The Emperor and the Bird of Paradise

🔑  Black Box BBM 1037. (i) Leclerk; (ii) ECO, Barlow; (iii) Laudibus; (iv) Lumley, Edmund-Davies

Alan Ridout is another fine English composer whose concert music has fallen by the wayside, unheard during the last few decades. The First Cello Concerto is a work of distinction, richly lyrical and valedictory in feeling, especially in the third and final movements; the latter is very movingly played here. The Second Concerto for Cello and Voices is another valedictory work in three movements (Threnody, Estampie and a touching Sarabande) associated in the composer's mind with Hiroshima (which he recalls hearing about as a 10-year-old). Some may feel that the use of voices instead of an orchestra gives a gimmicky feel to the piece, but Ridout's sincerity is in no doubt, and the work certainly communicates readily again, ending nobly and in tranquil mood. In the Third Concerto the setting of a solo cello against 'an orchestra of cellos' provides a depth and darkness of texture that is used to mirror Ridout's conception of the stress suffered by a political prisoner. But the music reflects also the suffering and final release of Christ: 'The captive world awakened and found the prisoner loose, the jailer bound.' The performances are persuasively dedicated. Just occasionally the intonation of the solo cellist, Gérard Leclerk, is a little insecure in its highest range, but he plays with such warmth of lyrical feeling and finds such bravura for the scherzando passages, that this seems a minor flaw.

As a gentle postscript, the tale of The Emperor and the Bird of Paradise, told simply by Joanna Lumley, is also about a caged prisoner being freed. As the narrator clearly recognizes, the piece has much in common with Peter and the Wolf, but here the flute obbligato, which serves for the acompaniment, is simple and unpretentious. It is very well played by Paul Edmund-Davies.

RIES, Ferdinand (1784–1838)

Piano Concerto, Op. 132; Grand Variations on 'Rule Britannia', Op. 116; Introduction et Variations Brillantes, Op. 170

Ⓝ (BB) * Naxos 8.570440. Hinterhuber, RLPO, Grodd

These three works are associated with Ferdinand Ries's successful period of living in England, from 1813 until the early 1820s. Beethoven's influence in this 35-minute piano concerto is obvious and it is a thoroughly entertaining work, subtitled as his 'Farewell to England'. Written in 1823, it is very much in the same vein as Hummel's concertos of the period: very tuneful, with melodic classicism tempered with more dramatic overtones. The finale is a toe-tapping delight. It would be wonderful to hear such music in the concert hall, but we suspect that all we shall ever get is this recording, which luckily is first rate. The Grand Variations on 'Rule Britannia' is an absolute hoot, with its bold introduction leading up to its famous theme, which is treated to some brilliant variations. The Introduction et Variations Brillantes is a similarly brilliant treatment of 'Soldier, soldier, will you marry me?' Sparkling performances to match the music, and the recording is first-rate.

RIGEL, Henri-Joseph (1741–99)

Symphonies 4, 7, 8, 10 & 14

Ⓝ  Berlin Classics 0016432BC. Concerto Köln

Henri-Joseph Rigel, born in Germany, made his career in Paris, becoming a key figure at the French court, and later, after the Revolution, in the newly formed Academy of Music. He has been almost totally forgotten, so this disc, as is claimed, rescues him from oblivion. Rightly so, when his writing is always lively, notably in the vigorous outer movements of these three-movement symphonies, products of his early career. Happily, he survived the Revolution among such figures as Méhul, writing works apt for the time like his Hymn to Liberty, written three years before his death in 1799. The performances by Concerto Köln are superb, lively and understanding and very well recorded.

RIHM, Wolfgang (born 1952)

Gesungene Zeit (Time Chant)

 DG 437 093-2. Mutter, Chicago SO, Levine – BERG: Violin Concerto ***

Under the title Gesungene Zeit ('Time Chant'), Rihm has written what in effect is an extended lyrical meditation for the soloist, heightened and illustrated by the orchestra in the most discreet way. As in the Berg, Mutter is inspired, playing with an inner hush that only rarely marks her recordings.

RILEY, Terry (born 1935)

The Heavenly Ladder, Book 7; The Walrus in memoriam

🔑 Ⓜ  Telarc CD 80513. Cheng-Cochran – ADAMS: China Gates; Phrygian Gates ***

The five pieces which make up The Heavenly Ladder were written in 1994 and represent the composer's move away from an aleatory improvisational style into written 'paper music'. The jazz element remains and is never more effectively interpolated than in the third piece, the polyphonic Ragtempus fugatum. Venus in '94 is a bizarre waltz-scherzo and the Fandango on the Heavenly Ladder (the most extended movement) intriguingly combines melancholy with energy. Its three themes are then gently re-explored in the closing Simone's Lullaby, a set of variations marked pianissimo throughout, and dedicated to the composer's newly arrived granddaughter. The Walrus in memoriam is a witty ragtime encore piece ending more reflectively, as it is intended as a memorial to John Lennon. The performances here are persuasive: Gloria Cheng-Cochran is very sensitive to the composer's eclectic but very personal pianistic excursions, and with the stimulating Adams couplings (dating from the late 1970s) this is an important issue for those interested in the way mimimalism is developing.

In C

 Ars Nova 8.226049. Copenhagen, Percurama Percussion Ens., Hillier

Terry Riley's In C brings a repeated 'C' as a hypnotic basis for various instrumental permutations. In this new version (which surely has an Adams influence) vocal contributions are added with colouristic advantage, swelling out to form various climaxes. This extension is clearly intended by the composer to increase the music's appeal, and the performance is authentic. But many may feel that the original version is more potent.

RIMSKY-KORSAKOV, Nikolay (1844–1908)

Capriccio espagnol, Op. 34

🔑 Ⓜ * RCA (ADD) 09026 63302-2. RCA Victor SO, Kondrashin – KABALEVSKY: The Comedians Suite; KHACHATURIAN: Masquerade Suite; TCHAIKOVSKY: Capriccio italien **** ✿

🔑 Ⓜ  DG (IMS) (ADD) 449 769-2 (2). BPO, Maazel – RAVEL: L'Heure espagnole; L'Enfant et les sortilèges ; STRAVINSKY: Le Chant du rossignol *** ✿

Kondrashin's 1958 performance is among the finest ever recorded, ranking alongside Maazel's famous Berlin Philharmonic account, but with the advantage of slightly more sumptuous string textures. Like the coupled Tchaikovsky Capriccio it has great flair and excitement, with glittering colour and detail in the variations and the Scena e canto gitana. The orchestral zest is exhilarating, yet there is warmth too and the resonant recording still sounds very good indeed.

Maazel's 1960 recording of the Capriccio espagnol is memorable in every way, and remains one of his finest recorded performances. With gorgeous string and horn playing and a debonair, relaxed virtuosity in the Scena e canto gitano, leading to remarkable bravura in the closing sequence, every note in place, this is unforgettable.

Capriccio espagnol; Christmas Eve: Suite. Dubinushka; May Night: Overture. Russian Easter Festival Overture; Sadko; The Snow Maiden: Suite. Symphony 2 (Antar); The Tale of Tsar Saltan: Suite

Ⓝ ✿  Australian Decca Eloquence stereo/mono 480 0827 (2). SRO, Ansermet

This two-CD Rimsky-Korsakov set surely shows Ansermet at his very finest. The opening of the Christmas Eve Suite has a chilled, icy, magical atmosphere, and this colourful tone-poem builds up to a magnificent polonaise – an adrenalin-inducing moment – where Ansermet's rhythmic bite is at its best. The Snow Maiden Suite is similarly colourful, with Ansermet bringing out all the brilliance of the woodwind and percussion in particular. Neither the Russian Easter Festival Overture nor Capriccio espagnol performances are as inspired as this, though the rhythmic point in Capriccio espagnol (the only mono recording on this CD) is unfailingly enjoyable. The opening of Dubinushka is delightfully and jauntily pointed, with the bass drum (as always from this source, beautifully captured) adding to the piquant effect. Sadko has marvellous atmosphere and intensity – as well as drama – and there is plenty of felicitous music, as well as playing, in this score. May Night, with its vibrant strings, comes off well, as does all the brilliance in the Tale of Tsar Saltan Suite – again, the sparkle of the recording amazes. Even if Ansermet's bee in the Flight of the Bumblebee is a rather leisurely creature, it is invested with plenty of buzz from all departments of the orchestra. The longest work in this collection is the still rare Antar which Ansermet helped to pioneer on LP – he recorded its first stereo release in astonishingly early stereo, dating from June 1954, yet sounding amazingly full, if not as expansive as the later, stereo recordings on this CD.

Capriccio espagnol; Legend, Op. 29; Neapolitan Song; Overtures: Ivan the Terrible: The Tsar's Bride; The Maid of Pskov; Sinfonietta on Russian Themes

* Chan. 10424. BBC PO, Sinaisky

A first-class new collection with some unfamiliar items, but plenty of fine Rimskyan invention. The Overtures are brightly hued and vivacious, with strong Russian themes. The Sinfonietta has a set of variations for its slow movement, but is missing its finale (which the composer abandoned) yet is just as vividly scored. The programme of the Legend is unclear, but it is in four parts, with moments of melodrama and much of the exotic colouring of Scheherazade, if not quite as inspired. The Neapolitan Song is a fun piece, a brilliant tarantella variant of Denza's Funiculi, funicula. The best-known work, the Capriccio espagnol, is comparatively relaxed, with Sinaisky and the BBC Philharmonic Orchestra revelling in its kaleidoscopic Mediterranean colours. It certainly glitters, especially the exhilarating closing Fandango. Top-quality Chandos recording makes this a very enticing disc.

Christmas Eve: Suite; Le Coq d'or: Suite; Legend of the Invisible City of Kitezh: Suite; May Night: Overture; Mlada: Suite; The Snow Maiden: Suite; The Tale of Tsar Saltan: 3 Musical Pictures; The Flight of the Bumblebee

🔑 Ⓜ  Chan. 10369X (2). SNO, Järvi

Originally on three full-priced discs, this selection is now offered on a pair of mid-priced CDs, a remarkable saving. Neeme Järvi draws the most seductive response from the SNO; he continually creates orchestral textures which are diaphanously sinuous. Yet the moments when the brass blazes or the horns ring out sumptuously are caught just as strikingly, and the listener is assured that here is music which survives repetition very well.

Christmas Eve: Suite; Le Coq d'or: Suite; The Tale of Tsar Saltan: Suite; Flight of the Bumblebee

🔑  ASV CDDCA 772. Armenian PO, Tjeknavorian

Tjeknavorian and his fine Armenian Orchestra are completely at home in Rimsky's sinuous orientalism, with its glittering, iridescent wind-colouring. The racy vigour and sparkle of the playing brings a jet-setting bumblebee and the carolling horns and bold brass add to the vividness.

Christmas Eve: Suite; Overture on Russian Themes, Op. 28; Pan Voyevoda: Suite; The Snow Maiden: Suite; The Tsar's Bride: Overture

🔑 * BIS CD 1577. Malaysian PO, Bakels

A superb collection even more seductive than Järvi's compilation, above, and including several novelties. The Tsar's Bride Overture ought to be better known, while the Pan Voyevoda Suite is very rare and yet also includes some of Rimsky's most colourful ideas. The more familar Christmas Eve Suite (a favourite of Ansermet's) opens with a glowing horn solo, and the three central dances of the stars and comets are played with much delicacy, while the following Polonaise has splendid rhythmic lift. The Overture on Russian Themes is also most imaginatively presented. Here and in The Snow Maiden Suite Rimsky's orchestral palette glitters and glows iridescently, the Dance of the Birds is delightful, and the famous closing Dance of the Clowns has real rhythmic panache. The BIS recording is very much in the demonstration bracket.

Christmas Eve: Polonaise; Mlada: Procession of the Nobles; Snow Maiden: Dance of the Tumblers; Tsar Saltan: Farewell of the Tsar

Ⓑ  Sony (ADD) 517482-2. Phd., Ormandy – TCHAIKOVSKY: Nutcracker Suite **

These four Rimsky lollipops are marvellously played and brightly recorded, with exhilarating brass in the closing excerpt from Tsar Saltan.

Concert Fantasy on Russian Themes for Violin & Orchestra in B min., Op. 33

(*) Globe GLO 5174. Lubotsky, Estonian Nat. SO, Volmer – ARENSKY; TCHAIKOVSKY: Violin Concertos **(*)

The Concert Fantasy in B minor on Two Russian Themes is a slight but colourful piece, and it is persuasively performed here. It makes an admirable fill-up to Arensky's endearing Violin Concerto and the Tchaikovksy which inspired it. Good orchestral playing under Arvo Volmer and naturally balanced sound.

Piano Concerto in C sharp min., Op. 30

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.557794. Liù, RPO, Yablonsky – KABALEVSKY: Piano Concerto 3, etc. ***

 Hyp. CDA 66640. Binns, E. N. Philh. O, Lloyd-Jones – BALAKIREV: Concertos 1–2 ***

Rimsky-Korsakov's Piano Concerto is surprisingly under-represented on CD and is almost totally unknown in the concert hall, no doubt because of its short duration (just over 14 minutes here). Yet it is a thoroughly entertaining piece, with its appealing Russian folk-song motive, and all the colour for which the composer is famous. This inexpensive but excellent Naxos performance and recording makes a welcome addition to the catalogue.

Malcolm Binns also proves a sensitive and intelligent exponent in the Rimsky-Korsakov Concerto, which comes aptly coupled with Balakirev's two essays in the form. The Northern Philharmonia under David Lloyd-Jones give excellent support and the Hyperion recording is first class.

Le Coq d'or: Suite

() BBC Legends mono BBCL 4084-2. RPO, Beecham – BALAKIREV: Symphony 1; BORODIN: Polovtsian Dances ()

This live broadcast performance has all the swagger and panache that one would expect of Beecham in this music, compensating for the lack of stereo. A welcome fill-up for the outstanding account of the Balakirev Symphony 1.

Le Coq d'or; The Maid of Pskov; Pan Voyevoda: suites

🔑 ✿ * Kontrapunct 32247. Odense SO, Serov

Serov is complete master of the repertoire, and the playing of the Odense Orchestra is glorious, the glowing woodwind palette matched by the most seductive and transparent string textures. Serov's performance of Le Coq d'or is every bit as fine as Maazel's, and the recording here is even more luxuriant. In The Maid of Pskov suite The Tsar Hunting in the Wood and Tempest has much of the imaginative pictorial evocation and imagery of Berlioz's Royal Hunt and Storm. Again it is superbly presented, as is the hardly less attractive Pan Voyevoda which opens with a pastoral evocation rather like Wagner's Forest Murmurs, and includes three brilliantly scored Russian Dances.

(i) Le Coq d'or: Suite; (ii) Scheherazade (Symphonic Suite), Op. 35

Ⓝ (*()) Australian Decca Eloquence mono/stereo 480 0081. Ansermet, with (i) SRO; (ii) Paris Conservatoire O

For Scheherazade Australian Decca have used Ansermet's rare 1954 performance with the Paris Conservatoire Orchestra. This is generally more lively than his later, albeit more brilliantly recorded, version with the Suisse Romande Orchestra, and jolly good it is too. It offers more subtlety than you might expect, with Richard Osborne noting (of the third movement) in his 1979 BBC Radio 3 Building a Library survey of this work, that Ansermet observed 'repeated arpeggios on wind and strings which should be nothing more than delicate veils of sound, like the quiet murmurings of an Aeolian harp caressed by a summer's breeze'. With the exception of slight tubbiness in the bass, the sound is astonishingly good, and many will appreciate the distinctive 'French' timbres of the orchestra. It is coupled with the (new to CD) mono version of Le Coq d'or Suite. Here the effect is rather shrill, but not unbearably so. Ansermet, typically, brings out all the music's colour, with the opening hauntingly mysterious and the Marriage Feast and Lamentable End of King Dodan excitingly done, with Ansermet's strong rhythmic grip keeping the tension racked up.

Scheherazade (ballet; complete; with choreography by Michael Fokine and costumes and sets adapted from the original Ballets Russes production by Anatoly and Anna Nezhny; DVD version)

🔑 ✿ * Decca DVD 079 322-9. Ilze Liepa, Andris Liepa, Victor Yeremenko, Bolshoi State Academic Theatre O, Chistiakov (Dir.: Andris Liepa) – STRAVINSKY: Petrushka; The Firebird ****

This indispensable DVD offers recreations of three key Diaghilev productions from the peak era of the Ballets Russes, with choreography, décor and costumes as near as possible to the original staging. In its day Scheherazade (with the heroine renamed Zabeida) was something of a coup de théâtre, because its climax was a bacchanalian orgy, with Zabeida and her Golden Slave lover caught in flagrante delicto by the sudden return of her master, Sultan Shakhriar, from a supposed hunting expedition.

All this happens to edited sections of the first movement of Rimsky's suite. Then the slow movement is played in its entirety for the vividly sensuous pas de deux of Zabeida and her lover, which becomes increasingly erotic. With the opening of the finale the whole company has joined them, and the dancing becomes riotously orgiastic. Zabeida and her lover become more and more abandoned. The Sultan and his friend have no doubt as to what is going on, and with their armed entourage they promptly slaughter all the slaves. But Zabeida steals his knife and stabs herself to death. The Shah is left devastated as Rimsky's closing bars act as a threnody rather than the peaceful, much happier ending the composer intended. But what makes this melodramatic ballet so enjoyable is the luxurious décor and costumes, and the excitement and overt eroticism of the dancing itself. The Bolshoi State Academic Theatre Orchestra plays voluptuously and excitingly throughout under Andrey Chistiakov and the recording is vividly wide-ranging and full-blooded, if not entirely refined. Moreover, this DVD also includes The Firebird and Petrushka.

Scheherazade, Op. 35 (DVD version)

Ⓝ * Medici Arts DVD 2072276. Phd. O, Ormandy (with GLINKA: Ruslan and Ludmilla Overture; HANDEL: Concerto in D, HWV 335a; WOLF-FERRARI: Il segreto di Susanna Overture; R. STRAUSS: Der Rosenkavalier suite)

Now here is something rather special. Eugene Ormandy recorded at the Academy of Music, Philadelphia, in 1977–8. This great American partnership, stretching over many years, produced a unique sonority, flair and virtuosity. Just listen to the gorgeous lower strings in the second subject of the Ruslan and Ludmilla Overture. But the most cherishable piece is a performance of Scheherazade which is perfect in every way, with a superb violin soloist in Norman Carol. There is some wonderfully beautiful string-playing too in the Rosenkavalier Suite, although the closing climax is less than refined (not the orchestra's fault but the arrangement), and the old-fashioned account of the Handel Concerto, rich-textured and with unashamedly dignified tempi, is a joy. The visual side of things is as expertly managed as the sound. Not to be missed.

Scheherazade (symphonic suite), Op. 35 (CD versions)

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * RCA SACD 82876 66377-2. Chicago SO, Reiner – STRAVINSKY: Song of the Nightingale ***

🔑 * Ph. SACD 470 618-2; CD 470 840-2. Kirov O, Gergiev – BORODIN: In the Steppes of Central Asia; BALAKIREV: Islamey ***

🔑 Ⓜ * EMI 5 66983-2. RPO, Beecham (with BORODIN: Polovtsian Dances ****)

🔑 Ⓜ  Cala (ADD) CACD 0536. LSO, Stokowski (with rehearsal sequence) – TCHAIKOVSKY: Marche slave **(*)

 DG 437 818-2. O de l'Opéra Bastille, Chung – STRAVINSKY: Firebird Suite ***

(i) Scheherazade; (ii) Capriccio espagnol, Op. 34.

🔑  Telarc CD 80208. LSO, Mackerras

(i–ii) Scheherazade; (iii–iv) Capriccio espagnol; (i; iv) Russian Easter Festival Overture, Op. 36

🔑 Ⓜ  Ph. (ADD) 442 643-2. (i) Concg. O; (ii) Kondrashin; (iii) LSO; (iv) Markevitch

(i) Scheherazade; (ii) Fairy Tale (Skazka)

(BB) () Dutton mono CDBP 9712. (i) Paris Conservatoire O, Ansermet; (ii) Philh. O, Lambert (with BORODIN: Polovtsian Dances arr. Rimsky-Korsakov ())

Scheherazade; Fairy Tale (Skazka), Op. 29; Sadko, Op. 5; Song of India, from Sadko (arr. Tjeknavorian)

 ASV CDDCA 771. Armenian PO, Tjeknavorian

Scheherazade; Mlada: Procession of the Nobles

 BBC (ADD) BBCL 4121-2. Georgiadis, LSO, Svetlanov – SCRIABIN: Poème de l'extase ***

Scheherazade; Russian Easter Festival Overture; The Maid of Pskov: Hunt and Storm

Ⓜ () Biddulph mono WHL 010. Phd. O, Stokowski

Scheherazade; Tsar Saltan: Orchestral Suite

(BB)  Naxos 8.550726. Philh. O, Bátiz

Reiner's magnificent (1956) Scheherazade stands out among the many superb RCA recordings made in Chicago in the 1950s. In the new SACD transfer the feeling of sitting in the concert hall is uncannily real, and the recording itself has extraordinary lustre. Reiner's first movement opens richly and dramatically and has a strong forward impulse. Sidney Harth, the orchestral leader, naturally balanced, plays most seductively. Reiner's affectionate individual touches in the gloriously played slow movement have much in common with Beecham's version and they sound similarly spontaneous. The finale, brilliant and exciting, was recorded in a single take and has a climax of resounding power and amplitude, and the acoustics throughout provide the orchestra with plenty of body and arresting brass sonorities. The new Stravinsky coupling also shows the conductor and his orchestra at their finest, and this is a disc that should find a place in every collection.

Gergiev's Kirov performance is the most exciting, most red-blooded account of Rimsky-Korsakov's orchestral warhorse in many years, electrifying from beginning to end, with sound of a fullness and brilliance never before heard in Russian recordings. The two shorter pieces, the atmospheric Borodin tone poem and Lyapounov's brilliant orchestration of Balakirev's virtuoso piano piece, Islamey, are welcome makeweights.

Mackerras's reading combines gripping drama with romantic ardour, subtlety of colour with voluptuousness; he is helped by a wonderfully beguiling portrait of Scheherazade herself, provided by his orchestral leader, in this case Kees Hulsmann. Mackerras then delivers a thrilling bravura account of Capriccio espagnol, lushly opulent in the variations, glittering in the exotic Scena e canto gitano, and carrying all before it in the impetus of the closing Fandango asturiano. Telarc's digital recording is very much in the demonstration class.

Kondrashin's version of Scheherazade with the Concertgebouw Orchestra has the advantage of splendidly glowing (1980) analogue recorded sound. Markevitch gives an excellent account of the Russian Easter Festival Overture with the same orchestra; the Capriccio espagnol, too, is brilliantly played by the LSO, and in both the sound also has considerable allure, with the present CD transfer much more vivid than the original LP.

Beecham's 1957 Scheherazade is a performance of extraordinary drama and charisma. Alongside the violin contribution of Stephen Staryk, all the solo playing has great distinction; in the second movement Beecham gives the woodwind complete metrical freedom. The sumptuousness and glamour of the slow movement are very apparent and the finale has an explosive excitement, rising to an electrifying climax. This could well be first choice for some collectors, although the fortissimo massed strings in the first movement are on the thin side and show the age of the recording.

The BBC disc brings a welcome reminder of the highly charged and intense playing that Svetlanov could achieve in the concert hall. These pieces find the LSO responding with enthusiasm and virtuosity to his direction.

On his visits to England in the 1960s, Leopold Stokowski was still at the height of his powers, and the result is even more thrillingly high-powered than the multiple versions he had already put on disc and the one which (11 years later) he was to make for RCA. This Cala version comes with fascinating couplings: the thrilling live performance of Tchaikovsky's Marche slave that Stokowski conducted as an encore at his ninetieth birthday concert in London, with a spoken introduction by himself, and, fascinatingly, four substantial clips from the rehearsals the conductor took in the Phase Four sessions on Scheherazade.

On ASV a refreshing and totally gripping Scheherazade from Eastern Russia. Tjeknavorian shows great imaginative flair in the two shorter folk tales and also offers his own gently luscious arrangement of the Chant hindue, which caresses the ear beguilingly. The brilliant recording has great vividness and projection, but relatively little sumptuousness.

There is a certain freshness about the Paris account under Myung-Whun Chung; nothing is routine and the playing has a certain enthusiasm. Very fast and effective tempo in the finale. The sound has warmth and perspective, though the timpani resonate perhaps a bit too much. All the same, a very enjoyable newcomer.

Bátiz's reputation for spontaneity in the recording studio is demonstrated at its most telling. His performance is impulsive, full of momentum and seductively volatile. The colourful Tsar Saltan Suite is comparably dramatic and vivid. In short, with first-class recording, both clear in detail and full-bodied, at super-bargain price this is hard to beat.

The collection of Leopold Stokowski's recordings of Rimsky-Korsakov on Biddulph centres on the first of his five versions of Scheherazade. Made in 1927, it is wilder and more passionate than later ones; fascinatingly, an alternative version of the first movement, never issued before, is included as a supplement. Equally impressive is Stokowski's intense, volatile account of the Russian Easter Festival Overture, dating from 1929, while the Hunt and Storm sequence from the The Maid of Pskov comes from ten years later. The Biddulph transfers are excellent, with plenty of body.

Ansermet's 1948 recording with its lighter manner has an attractively balletic quality, building up gradually rather than packing a punch. The usual reservations need mentioning about the playing of the Paris orchestra – with brass vibrato and a sugary solo violin among them. As transferred, this is not one of the most vivid of early Decca mono ffrr recordings. The rarity, Skazka, conducted by Constant Lambert, is taken from a 1946 EMI recording, with Gregor Fitelberg's reading of the Polovtsian Dances a welcome bonus.

Symphonies 1, Op. 1; 2 (Antar), Op. 9; 3, Op. 32; Capriccio espagnol; Russian Easter Festival Overture

Ⓜ  DG 459 512-2 (2). Gothenburg SO, Järvi

Symphonies 1 in E min., Op. 1; 2 (Antar), Op. 9; 3 in C, Op. 32; Capriccio espagnol, Op. 36; (i) Piano Concerto in C sharp min., Op. 30; Russian Easter Festival Overture, Op. 36; Sadko, Op. 5

Ⓜ (*) Chan. 6613 (2). (i) Tozer; Bergen PO, Kitaienko

Whatever Rimsky-Korsakov's symphonies may lack in symphonic coherence they make up for in colour and charm. Antar is not quite as strong as some of its protagonists would have us believe, but it should surely have a stronger presence in the concert and recorded repertoire than it has. The performances under Neeme Järvi have considerable merit and the Gothenburg Orchestra is excellently recorded; moreover, the addition of the Capriccio and Russian Easter Festival Overture make the DG set a very attractive proposition. A clear first choice.

Kitaienko draws very good playing from the Bergen Philharmonic throughout and the first two symphonies are generally successful. In the Third Symphony the lustrous colours of the secondary material glow appealingly, but the Scherzo lacks sparkle. He gets very lively results in the Capriccio espagnol, but Sadko takes a while to warm up, although it has a spectacular close. With Tozer at the keyboard he shares a warmly lyrical view of the Piano Concerto but, partly because of the resonant sound, the finale again lacks something in sparkle, and Malcolm Binns on Hyperion (see above) is preferable.

Symphonies: 1, Op. 1; 3, Op. 32; Fantasia on Serbian Themes

🔑  BIS CD 1477. Malaysian PO, Bakels

Here, in the two less well-known symphonies of Rimsky-Korsakov, Bakels offers performances of admirable point and refinement, particularly in the strings, with the slow movement of 3, for example, tender in its delicate phrasing, and with the 5/4 rhythms of the Scherzo delectably pointed. The Fantasia on Serbian Themes makes an attractive supplement. Clear, well-balanced recording, with air round the sound.

Symphony 2 (Antar); Russian Easter Festival Overture

🔑 (BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55137. Philh. O, Svetlanov

It goes without saying that the Philharmonia Orchestra under Svetlanov produce an excellent account of Rimsky-Korsakov's colourful score and there is no want of atmosphere or spirit in their playing. Moreover, they are given excellent recorded sound by the Hyperion team.

Piano & Wind Quintet in B flat

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55173. Capricorn – GLINKA: Grand Sextet in E flat ***

 CRD (ADD) 3409. Brown, Nash Ens. – ARENSKY: Piano Trio 1 ***

Capricorn's sparkling account of Rimsky's youthful Quintet for piano, flute, clarinet, horn and bassoon is all the more welcome at budget price, particularly as it is very well recorded.

The Nash Ensemble also give a spirited and delightful account of it on CRD that can be warmly recommended for its dash and sparkle and full, naturally balanced sound.

OPERA

The Legend of the Invisible City of Kitezh (complete; CD version)

 Ph. 462 225-2 (2). Gorchakova, Galuzin, Putilin, Ohotnikov, Marusin, Minjilkiev, Ognovienko, Kirov Opera Ch. & O, Gergiev

Recorded live at the Mariinsky Theatre in St Peterburg, this long fairy-tale piece (lasting almost three hours) relies above all on the cadences of Russian folk song. As usual with Russian folk-tales the plot brings a curious mixture of jollity and bitterness. Though the Prince dies in battle in the middle of Act III – illustrated in an interlude – he is resurrected in Act IV, when the disappearing City of Kitezh is magically transformed into Paradise, with hero and heroine united in life after death. What adds spice to the plot is the equivocal character of the drunkard, Grishka, comic only in part, who initially is prompted to attack Fevroniya, but who later is befriended by her. Galina Gorchakova sings powerfully as Fevroniya and Yuri Marusin is a strong, idiomatic Prince, whose distinctive tenor is well contrasted with that of Vladimir Galuzin as an incisive Grishka, characterizing splendidly. Despite moments of strain, the rest of the Kirov cast make an excellent team. Live recording inevitably brings intrusive stage noises and odd balances, but this is another warmly recommendable set in Gergiev's excellent Philips series.

Mlada (complete; DVD version)

🔑 * Teldec DVD 6 & 4509-92052-3. Nina Ananiashvili (dancer), Oleg Kulko, Maria Gavrilova, Gleb Nikolsky. Galina Borisova, Mikhail Maslov, Lyudmila Nam, Olga Velichko, Vladimir Kudriashov, Bolshoi Ballet, Bolshoi Ch. & O, Lazarev (Stage/Video Director: Boris Pokrovsky)

Mlada is a curious hybrid, half choral ballet and half opera with dancing. The score is full of colour, and so is this Bolshoi production, expertly directed by Boris Pokrovsky. It is best known to most music lovers for the Procession of the Nobles. The scoring is lavish even by Rimsky's own standards: the wind, brass and percussion are all expanded, and there are three harps and an organ. On stage there is a stage band in Act III which includes two pan-pipes (ancient Slavonic instruments) and eight lyres. The plot is flimsy, but it was the elaborate scoring which held up the production. A wonderful performance from Nina Ananiashvili, dancing the role of Princess Mlada, and impressive singing from the imposing cast. A highly enjoyable rarity which we can strongly recommend.

The Tsar's Bride (complete; CD version)

🔑 * Ph. 462 618-2 (2). Bezzuenkov, Shaguch, Hvorostovsky, Alexashkin, Akimov, Borodina, Kirov Ch. & O, Gergiev

Gergiev firmly establishes The Tsar's Bride as a most richly enjoyable opera, full of outstanding set numbers, such as the banqueting song in the party scene of Act I, which uses the Tsar's Hymn in opulent counterpoint. The story itself, set at the time of Ivan the Terrible, is a curious mixture of darkness and light, of fairy-tale fantasy and melodramatic realism. Jealousy is the dominant emotion, when the sinister adventurer, Gryaznoy, and the scheming Lyubasha take priority over even the hero and heroine. In the casting here, that priority is a great source of strength, when Dmitri Hvorostovsky as Gryaznoy and Olga Borodina as Lyubasha give superb performances, not just singing with rich, firm tone but characterizing powerfully. Marina Shaguch is fresh and clear as Marfa the heroine, if edgy under pressure, and Evgeny Akimov with his typically Slavonic tenor sings idiomatically if with forced tone. In Act IV, with the plot turning sour, Rimsky is prompted to round the work off with a sequence of remarkable numbers, including a splendid quintet with chorus, when Gryaznoy stabs Lyubasha to death, and a mad-scene for Marfa. A rich offering, strongly recommended.

ROBINSON, Thomas
(fl. 1589–1609)

Lute pieces: Bonny Sweet Boy; A Galliard; A Gigue; Go from My Window; A Toy. Lute duets: (i) A Fantasy for 2 Lutes; Pazzamezzo Galliard; A Plaine Song for 2 Lutes; The Queen's Goodnight; A Toy for 2 Lutes; 20 Ways upon the Bells

(BB)  Naxos 8.553974. Wilson (lute); (i) with Rumsey – HOLBORNE: Lute Pieces **(*)

Thomas Robinson taught the future Queen Anne in Denmark before she married King James. He liked to write and play duets with his pupils and the 'Goodnight' here is obviously addressed to her. All the duets here are delightful, particularly Twenty Ways upon the Bells with its two players ingeniously ringing the changes. The solo pieces, too, are full of character, notably the melancholy solo Toy, worthy of Dowland. But Robinson has a personality in his own right and it is good to have his music rediscovered. Christopher Wilson and his pupil Shirley Rumsey play everything intimately and spontaneously, readily conveying their pleasure in the music. They are truthfully recorded (not too close) in a pleasant acoustic.

ROCHBERG, George
(1918–2005)

Symphony 5; Black Sounds; Transcendental Variations

🔑 ✿ (BB) * Naxos 8.559115. Saarbrücken RSO, Lyndon-Gee

George Rochberg was born in New Jersey, became an accomplished pianist and worked his way through college playing in jazz bands. After the war he studied at the Curtis Institute in Philadelphia, and, like many of his generation, he began composing as a serialist, eventually returning to tonality.

His magnificent Fifth Symphony (1984–5) is expressive yet never indulgent; passionate yet stringently argued. Opening boldly and assertively, it is continuous and in seven major sections. The music is both hard-driven and evocatively lyrical while the otherworldly finale brings a dreamily withdrawn cello solo, until in the closing section reality takes over.

The formidable Black Sounds (1965) is based on an earlier composition, Apocalyptica, for large wind ensemble, piano and percussion, whose score is headed by a Shakespeare quotation, calling up the tempest from King Lear. Stark and emotionally spare, it makes a powerful statement about human violence. After the climax, the epilogue closes the work gently in muted cries of anguish.

But it is with the masterly Transcendental Variations for string orchestra that the newcomer to Rochberg's music should begin any exploration. Written in 1975, it was the composer's first work to embrace tonality without reserve, and it is derived from his Third String Quartet, written three years earlier.

All three performances here are marvellously played by the Saarbrücken Radio Orchestra under Christopher Lyndon-Gee, who seems to find a total affinity with the composer. The recording is first class, too, and this is a record not to be missed by anyone who cares about real 20th-century music.

RODGERS, Richard (1902–79)

Ballet Scores: Ghost Town; On Your Toes: La Princess Zenobia; Slaughter on Tenth Avenue

 TER CDTER 1114. O, Mauceri

Richard Rodgers often wrote quite extensive ballets for his Broadway output, the best known being Slaughter on Tenth Avenue, first heard in the 1936 musical On Your Toes, which also presented La Princess Zenobia for the first time. However, Ghost Town, an American folk ballet about the Gold Rush, was commissioned by the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo in 1939 and produced at the Metropolitan Opera that year. All three ballets have their fair share of good tunes – Slaughter on Tenth Avenue, easily the best of them, has three superb melodies (among Rodgers's finest) – and there is no doubting that the colourful orchestrations of Hans Spialek go a large way towards making these scores as sparkling as they are. The performances under John Mauceri are first rate, as is the vivid and bright recording, which admirably catches the Hollywoodesque orchestrations. The fine orchestra is presumably a pick-up ensemble as, curiously, it is not credited with a name.

Carousel (film musical)

🔑  EMI (ADD) 5 27352-2. Film soundtrack recording with MacRae, Jones, Mitchell, Ruick, Turner, Rounseville, Christie, 20th Century Fox Ch. & O, Newman

The King and I (film musical)

🔑  EMI (ADD) 5 27351-2. Film soundtrack recording with Nixon/Kerr, Brynner, Gordon/Moreno, Saunders, Fuentes/Rivas, 20th Century Fox Ch. & O, Newman

Oklahoma! (film musical)

🔑  EMI (ADD) 5 27350-2. Film soundtrack recording with MacRae, Jones, Greenwood, Grahame, Nelson, Steiger, 20th Century Fox Ch. & O, Newman

In these days when so many composers of so-called 'serious' music and opera seem unwilling, or unable, to write hummable melodies, it seems worth while to celebrate again the achievement of three great Rodgers and Hammerstein musicals of the 1940s and early 1950s. The sheer tunefulness of the music is of the kind which, once lodged in the memory, is impossible to erase. And Richard Rodgers had the good fortune to collaborate with a librettist who showed not only a natural feeling for a melodic line, but also an inspired ear for the vernacular. The Rodgers and Hammerstein love songs communicate directly and universally.

In short, these are masterly scores, with masterly lyrics and, as the recent outstanding National Theatre revival of Oklahoma! demonstrated, this is a work of classic stature, with much greater depth of characterization than had been hitherto realized.

The dubbing of Deborah Kerr's songs in The King and I by the sweet-voiced Marni Nixon, and Tuptim's 'We kiss in the shadow' by the sultry Leonora Gordon (originally undisclosed), is now part of the current documentation, although Rita Moreno herself narrates the highly dramatic ballet sequence, The Small House of Uncle Tom. In Carousel and Oklahoma! Gordon MacRae and Shirley Jones make a delightfully fresh-voiced pair of lovers, and the smaller parts are all full of character. Much that was previously omitted has now been restored, including items which did not appear in the final edited films. This means that there is a good deal of repetition and reprises. Never mind, these three discs are very enjoyable, and you may even find yourself humming along. The documentation is excellent.

'Rodgers & Hammerstein Songs' from: Allegro; Carousel; The King and I; Me and Juliet; Oklahoma!; The Sound of Music; South Pacific; State Fair

 DG 449 163-2. Terfel, Opera North Ch., E. N. Philh., Daniel

Bryn Terfel masterfully embraces the Broadway idiom, projecting his magnetic personality in the widest range of songs, using a remarkable range of tone, from a whispered head voice (as he does magically at the end of 'Some enchanted evening') to a tough, almost gravelly fortissimo at climaxes, from the biting toughness of 'Nothing like a dame' or Billy Bigelow's big soliloquy in Carousel (using a very convincing American accent) to the warmth of 'If I loved you' and 'You'll never walk alone' (with chorus). Specially welcome are the rarities, including one number from Me and Juliet and four from the stylized and underprized Allegro, including the powerfully emotional 'Come home'. With excellent sound and fine playing from Opera North forces under Paul Daniel, this is a wide-ranging survey.

RODRIGO, Joaquín (1901–99)

Orchestral Works, Vol. 1: Soleriana (ballet, arr. from Soler's keyboard music); 5 Piezas infantiles; Zarabanda lejana y Vallancico

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.555844. Asturias SO, Valdés

Rodrigo's delightfully imagined 18th-century picture of Spain is the essence of Soleriana, which is based on the keyboard works of Antonio Soler and consists of eight dances, lasting some 40 minutes in all. The Pastoral has a lovely melancholy beauty, though most of the movements are relatively lively and portray a picturesque, rococo image of the local scene in music, which displays both charm and piquancy. The Zarabanda lejana ('Distant Sarabande') is a haunting work, its two movements displaying some lovely string-writing, and the highly engaging Cinco piezas infantiles are characteristically brightly coloured. The performances are good; the massed strings sound a bit thin above the stave, but the overall sound-picture is very acceptable.

Orchestral Works, Vol. 2: (i) Concierto Andaluz for 4 Guitars and Orchestra; (ii) Concierto de Aranjuez; Fantasía para un gentilhombre

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.555841. Asturias SO, Valdés; with (i) EntreQuatre Guitar Qt; (ii) Gallén

The popular Concierto de Aranjuez and Fantasia para un gentilhombre are given very decent performances, but they lack the last ounce of polish and, in terms of recording and performance, cannot match the very best versions, such as Bonell–Dutoit on Decca. The Concierto Andaluz, with its Tempo di boléro opening movement and use of Andalusian folk tunes, makes an enjoyable companion-piece.

Orchestral Works, Vol. 3: (i) Concerto in modo galante (for cello & orchestra); Concierto como un divertimento (for cello & orchestra); (ii) Concierto de estío (for violin & orchestra); Cançoneta (for violin & string orchestra)

(BB)  Naxos 8.555840. Castile and León SO, Darman; with (i) Polo; (ii) Ovrutsky

Volume 3 plunges into rarer Rodrigo: in the jolly Concerto in modo galante, written in 1949 for cellist Cassadó, Rodrigo's easy-going manner has an 18th-century Spanish spirit. The Concierto como un divertimento, written in 1981, is another agreeable cello concerto, peppered with all sorts of Spanishry. Rodrigo looked to Vivaldi (in structural form, at least) in his Concierto de estío for violin and orchestra: the two lively outer movements are separated by an especially attractive central Siciliana adagio. The Cançoneta for Violin and String Orchestra is short and pleasurable.

Orchestral Works, Vol. 4: (i) Concierto para piano y orquesta (rev. Achúcarro); Homenaje a la tempranica; Juglares; Música para un jardín; Preludio para un poema a la Alhambra

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.557101. Castile and León SO, Darman; (i) with Ferrandiz

Starting dramatically, the Concierto para piano y orquesta soon enters familiar Rodrigo territory, with some attractive episodes, but not really having enough inspired music to sustain its 30 minutes. The Música para un jardín, written in 1935, depicts the growth of a garden throughout the year. It's a slight work, with one or two nice touches, but hardly another Nights in the Gardens of Spain. More successful and more deeply reminiscent of Falla is the Preludio para un poema a la Alhambra, a mini tone-poem: 'At twilight, the guitar sighs, and beyond, almost within the Alhambra, rings out the rhythms which drive the dance.' It was first performed in 1930. Similarly, the Homenaje a la tempranica and Juglares find the composer at his best in short, undemanding movements. Lively performances and good sound.

Orchestral Works, Vol. 5: Concierto Madrigal; Concierto para una fiesta

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.555842. Gallén, Clerch, Asturias SO, Valdés

The Concierto Madrigal, a suite of movements with the common link of the Renaissance madrigal O felici ocche, is one of the composer's finest compositions, with a real piquancy. It has been recorded several times of course, and this performance is a good, warmly relaxed one, though other versions, such as the Yepes on DG, are livelier, with more character and flair. The Concierto para una fiesta has a slow movement not unlike that of the Concierto de Aranjuez, if not so inspired. The outer movements are predictably tuneful and undemanding. The orchestral playing and the recordings are both up to standard.

Other Recordings

(i; iv) Concierto Andaluz (for 4 guitars); (ii; iv) Concierto de Aranjuez (for guitar); (ii–iv) Concierto madrigal (for 2 guitars); (ii; iv) Concierto para una fiesta; Fantasia para un gentilhombre; Sones en la Giralda; (v) Concierto serenata (for harp)

🔑 Ⓑ * Ph. Duo (ADD) 462 296-2 (2). (i) Los Romeros; (ii) P. Romero; (iii) A. Romero; (iv) ASMF, Marriner; (v) Michel, Monte Carlo Op. O, Almeida

This Duo includes all Rodrigo's splendid concertante guitar works, plus the Concierto serenata for harp and orchestra, a delectable and unaccountably neglected work in which Catherine Michel is a seductive soloist, neatly accompanied by Almeida. La Giralda, the ancient tower of Seville Cathedral, obviously stimulated Rodrigo's imagination so that the first of its two sections is eerily atmospheric; then the clouds clear away and the finale sparkles with the flamenco dance rhythms of the Sevillanas. Pepe Romero and Marriner show an immediate response to its evocation and spirit, and the result is memorable, helped by the first-class recording which pertains throughout these two generously filled CDs.

Concierto de Aranjuez (for guitar & orchestra)

🔑 * Warner 2564 60296-2. Isbin, NYPO, Serebrier – PONCE: Concierto del sur; VILLA-LOBOS: Guitar Concerto ***

 Guild GMCD 7176. Jiménez, Bournemouth Sinf., Frazor – ANGULO: Guitar Concerto 2 (El Alevín); VILLA-LOBOS: Guitar Concerto ***

(BB)  Naxos 8.550729. Kraft, N. CO, Ward – CASTELNUOVO-TEDESCO: Concerto ; VILLA-LOBOS: Concerto **(*)

(i) Concierto de Aranjuez (for guitar); (ii) Concierto de estio (for violin); (iii) Concierto en modo galante (for cello); (iv) Concierto heroico (for piano); (v) Concierto pastoral (for flute); (vi) Concierto serenata (for harp); Zarabanda lejana y villancico

Ⓝ Ⓑ (*) EMI 5099923768123 (2). (i) Moreno; (ii) Ara; (iii) Cohen; (iv) Osorio; (v) Hansen; (vi) Allen; LSO or RPO, Batiz

(i) Concierto de Aranjuez; (ii) Fantasia para un gentilhombre

🔑 Ⓑ * Decca 448 243-2. Bonell, Montreal SO, Dutoit – ALBÉNIZ: Rapsodia española; TURINA: Rapsodia sinfónica ***

(BB)  Virgin 2x1 5 61627-2 (2). Isbin, Lausanne CO, Foster – SCHWANTER: From Afar (fantasy) ; Recital: 'Latin Romances' ***

(BB) (*) Sony (ADD) SBK 61716. Williams; (i) Philadelphia O, Ormandy; (ii) ECO, Groves – DODGSON: Concerto, etc **(*)

(i) Concierto de Aranjuez; (ii) Fantasia para un gentilhombre; En los trigales; Invocation & Dance (Hommage à Manuel de Falla); 3 Piezas españolas

🔑 Ⓜ * RCA 82876 60870-2. Bream; (i) COE, Gardiner; (ii) RCA Victor CO, Brouwer

The Bonell/Dutoit Concierto was originally paired with the Fantasia para un gentilhombre. In the Fantasia, the balance between warmly gracious lyricism and sprightly rhythmic resilience is most engaging. The generous coupling on Decca's Eclipse bargain label is well worth considering, as the Albéniz and Turina concertante works for piano are also given dazzling, sultry performances by de Larrocha and Frühbeck de Burgos.

Sharon Isbin is an ideal exponent of this concerto. A quite exceptional guitarist, she has the gift of creating a musing, improvisatory feeling which is seemingly totally spontaneous and is heard at its most magical in the famous slow movement. In a chamber-styled performance Serebrier accompanies with comparable delicacy, ensuring that the orchestral detail is vividly realized, but always in scale with the soloist. Yet the climax is full of yearning passion. The recording is outstanding and perfectly balanced.

The differences between Bream's two earlier RCA readings of the Concierto, the first (analogue) with Colin Davis in 1963 (now deleted), the second (digital) with Gardiner in 1982, are almost too subtle to analyse and perhaps depend as much on the personalities of the two conductors as on that of the soloist. The Gardiner version has a little extra dash and, for those who prefer an all-Rodrigo programme, this could be a good choice and the famous Adagio is played in a very free, improvisatory way, with some highly atmospheric wind solos in the orchestra. In the Fantasia para un gentilhombre Leo Brouwer, himself a guitarist, brings plenty of orchestral vitality to the later sections of the score. The Tres piezas españolas add to the value of the disc, and both this and the Homage to Falla show Bream at his most inspirationally spontaneous.

Sharon Isbin's alternative recording of Rodrigo's two most popular works with the Lausanne Chamber Orchestra under Lawrence Foster received the imprimatur of the composer before he died, and justly so. They are both played with flair and the orchestral detail could not be more vivid, while the famous slow movement of the Concierto is most atmospherically done. The recording is in the demonstration bracket. The snag is that the Schwanter coupling is a good deal less tangible. However her recording of the Concierto with Serebrier has no such problem.

Rafael Jiménez and the Bournemouth Sinfonietta under Terence Frazor make a fine partnership. The slow movement brings an appealing, ruminative intimacy to contrast with its bold, passionate climax, and the finale also has a neat delicacy of touch from the soloist, with buoyant rhythmic pointing from the orchestra. The recording is very good too.

Norbert Kraft is a soloist of personality and he receives spirited, sensitive accompaniments from the Northern Chamber Orchestra under Nicholas Ward. Indeed the work sounds remarkably fresh using a smaller-sized orchestral group. The recording is very well balanced, with the guitar given a most convincing relationship with the orchestra and the sound itself vividly realistic.

With Ormandy providing a rich orchestral tapestry Williams's earlier version is a distinctly romantic reading of the Concierto. If the later recording (currently withdrawn) is maturer and has greater subtlety of detail, this performance, taken a little bit faster, remains fresh and enjoyable. Groves and the ECO take over for the Fantasia, and once again, the interpretation is a shade brisker than the later, digital version.

The group of EMI recordings are from the early 1980s and are of very good quality, although the early digital technique often brings an overlit sound to the treble. The Summer Concerto for violin ('conceived in the manner of Vivaldi') was the composer's own favourite and Augustin Leo Ara catches its neo-classical vitality admirably. The Cello Concerto is given a masterly performance by Robert Cohen; the Concierto serenata (for harp) has both piquancy and charm. Nancy Allen consistently beguiles the ear with her gentleness. The spiky opening of the Concierto pastoral is far from pastoral in feeling, but the composer's fragmented melodies soon insinuate themselves into the consciousness. The Piano Concerto has a bolder programmatic content, with the four movements written 'under the sign of the Sword, the Spur, the Cross and the Laurel'. Alfonso Moreno's account of the Concierto de Aranjuez, though bright and sympathetic, is in no way outstanding. The Zarabanda lejana was Rodrigo's first work for guitar, the villancico was added later to combine elegiac and dancing sections. Altogether a rewarding if lightweight collection, all vividly presented.

Concierto pastoral

🔑 * BIS-SACD 1559. Bezaly, São Paulo SO, Neschling (with BORNE: Carmen Fantasy) – IBERT: Flute Concerto ***

Rodrigo's Concierto pastoral is undeservedly less well known than his other works for guitar, yet its delicately textured opening captivates with its chirping until a simple, more dominating, lyrical theme arrives. The Andante's haunting minor-key song without words has a distinctly Spanish tinge: the flute ruminates gently, leading to an extended solo cadenza to introduce the delighful return of the decorated main theme. The catchy rhythmic ostinato of the rondo finale then rollicks effervescently, but once again there is a pastoral lyrical core. Throughout, Bezaly catches the work's beguiling charm and Neschling supports her admirably, as does the splendid BIS recording. A most winning disc in every way.

Concierto serenata (for harp & orchestra)

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * DG (ADD) 463 648-2. Zöller, Zabaleta, BPO, Märzendorfer – MOZART: Flute & Harp Concerto in C, K.299; REINECKE: Harp Concerto ***

We have always had a special regard for Zabaleta's pioneering version of Rodrigo's Concierto serenata, which has an unforgettable piquancy and charm both in its invention and in its felicity of scoring. The performance has great virtuosity and flair, and our Rosette is carried over from the original LP. It is excellently recorded, with the delicate yet colourful orchestral palette tickling the ear in charming contrast to the beautifully-focused timbre of the harp.

Soleriana (ballet, arr. from Soler's keyboard music); 5 Piezas infantiles; Zarabanda lejana y villancico

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.555844. Asturias SO, Valdés

Valdés includes Rodrigo's delightful 18th-century picture of Spain in his ballet Soleriana. The Pastoral has a lovely melancholy beauty, though most of the movements are relatively lively and well portray a picturesque, rococo image of 18th-century Spain in music of great charm and piquancy. The Zarabanda lejana ('Distant Sarabande') is a haunting work, its two movements displaying some lovely string writing, and the highly engaging Cinco piezas infantiles are characteristically brightly coloured. The performances are good, if perhaps not quite so imaginative as Bátiz on EMI (see above), who also benefited from more vivid sound. Here, the massed strings sound a bit thin above the stave (especially noticeable in the Zarabanda lejana), but the overall sound-picture is very acceptable, and this disc is well worth its modest price.

SOLO GUITAR MUSIC

Bajando de la Meseta; Elegio de la guitarra; En los trigales; En tierras de Jerez; Invocaciòn y danza (Homenaje a Manuel de Falla); Junto al Generalife; 3 Piezas españolas

🔑 * MDG 305 0834-2. Bungarten

Frank Bungarten, born in Cologne in 1958, was awarded the first prize at the International Guitar Competition in Granada when Segovia was president of the jury, so his credentials for this repertoire are impeccable. His brusque chords at the opening Fandango of the Three Spanish Pieces contrast with a thoughtful account of the noble central Passacaglia, and in En tierras de Jerez and the atmospheric Bajando de la Meseta his playing is masterly. The Junto al Generalife, the Homenaje a Manuel de Falla and the deliciously nuanced Zarabanda lejana are most all highly evocative. He is given a fine, natural presence here, and this collection will be hard to beat.

(i) Fandango del ventorrillo (arr. Pepe Romero); Tonadilla (for 2 guitars); Por los campos de España; 3 Piezas españolas; Sonata giocosa

(BB)  Naxos 8.570286. Jouve; (i) with Perroy (guitars)

The best-known work here is the Tres piezas españolas, of which the closing Zapateado is the most familiar. The young French guitarist Jérémy Jouve plays it brilliantly, although he is not a show-off artist, preferring musical values, which he displays in the sensitive account of the Andante moderato slow movement of the Sonata giocosa, yet finding plenty of life and sparkle in the outer movements, especially the boisterous finale. He is at his finest in Por los campos de España ('In the Spanish Countryside'), a group of five miniature pictures, which he plays very evocatively. The duet works are also very well played, but are not as individual as the solo pieces.

PIANO MUSIC

Music for 2 pianos: (i) 5 Piezas infantiles (piano, 4 hands): Atardecer; Gran marcha de los subsecretarios; Sonatina para dos Muñecas. Solo piano: Air de ballet sur le nom d'une jeune fille; Album de Cecilia; A l'ombre de Torre Bermeja; Bagatela; Berceuse d'automne; Berceuse de printemps; Danza de la Amapola; 3 Danzas de España; 4 Estampas andaluzas; 3 Evocaciones; Pastorale; 4 Piezas (Caleseras: Homenaje a Chueca; Fandango del Ventorrillo; Plegaria de la Infanta de Castilla; Danza Valenciana); Preludio de Añoranza; Preludio al gallo mañanero; Serenata española; Sonada de adiós (Hommage à Paul Dukas); 5 Sonatas de Castilla, con toccata a modo de Pregón: 1–2 in F sharp min.; 3 in D; 4 in B min. (como un tiento); 5 in A. Suite: Zarabanda lejana

🔑 ✿ * Bridge BCD 9027 A/B. Allen; (i) with Nel

Air de ballet sur le nom d'une jeune fille; Album de Cecilia; A l'ombre de Torre Bermeja; Bagatela; 2 Berceuses; Canción y danza; Danza de la Amapola; 3 Danzas de España; 4 Estampas Andaluzas; 3 Evocaciones; Pastoral; 4 Piezas; 5 Piezas del sieglo XVI; Preludio de Añoranza; Preludio al gallo mañanero; Serenata española; Sonata de adiós (Homage to Paul Dukas); 5 Sonatas de Castilla con Toccata a modo de Pregón; Suite; Zarabanda Lejana

🔑  Sony S2K 89828 (2). Marianovich

Rodrigo's keyboard music is all but unknown and, as this first-class and comprehensive survey shows, for all its eclecticism it is well worth exploring. In his earliest piano work, the Suite of 1923, with its sprightly Prelude, cool Sicilienne and Satie-ish Minuet, the link with the French idiom is obvious, while the glittering brilliance of the Preludio al gallo mañanero is unmistakably Debussian. The Cinco sonatas de Castilla look back further in time and draw continually on the keyboard writing of Scarlatti. But they are spiced with piquant dissonances which the Italian composer would have disowned. The Serenata española marks Rodrigo's positive adoption of an overtly Andalusian style, while the Cuatro piezas and the Cuatro estampas andaluzas are as sharply Spanish in character as any of the similarly picaresque miniatures of Granados or Albéniz. The darker side of Rodrigo's nature, sometimes brooding, sometimes nostalgic, is at its most expressive in the nocturne, Atardecer, an ambitious piece for two players; but it also colours some of the miniatures, not least the austere yet deeply felt Plegaria de la Infanta de Castilla from the Cuatro piezas. The recording is uncommonly real and has great presence. In the duo works Gregory Allen is admirably partnered by Anton Nel.

Sara Marianovich knew Rodrigo personally and played for him, learning a great deal, so that her performances received his imprimatur. The music is attractively arranged, as far as possible in order of composition, and ends nostalgically with Rodrigo's last piano work, the Preludio de Añoranza of 1987. But besides her ready bravura and feeling for the Spanish as well as the French pianistic palette, Sara Marianovich is also at her finest in the simpler pieces, the charming early Suite, the Pastoral (a captivating siciliana), the pair of Berceuses, the touching 'Adios' to Paul Dukas, the children's album, written for the composer's daughter, Cecilia, and the Five Pieces from the Sixteenth Century – transcriptions of Spanish renaissance miniatures. Also included is an impressive first recording of the rare Canción y danza of 1925 which opens musingly, but slowly becomes more passionate. This does not appear in the coverage of this repertoire by Gregory Allen. However, joined by Anton Nel, he does include the repertoire for two pianos, which the Sony set omits. So that probably remains a primary choice. But Sara Marianovich's playing is so compellingly persuasive that her new set must also receive the strongest possible advocacy. She is vividly and truthfully recorded, and this highly rewarding music is undeservedly neglected.

Air de ballet sur le nom d'une jeune fille; A l'ombre de Torre Bermeja; Bagatella; 2 Berceuses; 4 Estampas andaluzas; Fantasía que contrahace la harpa de Ludovico; Pastorale; 4 Piezas; Préludio de añoranza; Serenata española; Sonata de adiós; Zarabanda lejana; 5 Piezas del siglo XVI

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.557272. Pizarro

For most collectors, this excellent single-CD budget-priced collection from the highly sympathetic Artur Pizarro will prove an admirable introduction to Rodrigo's piano music. From the brilliant opening A l'ombre de Torre Bermeja onwards he brings out the music's ready associations with the guitar. Pizarro plays spontaneously and perceptively and proves very much at home in this repertoire; he is vividly recorded, and there is an excellent commentary on the music by Graham Wade.

Album de Cecilia; Cancion y danza; Danza de la amapola; 3 Danzas de España; 3 Evocations; Prelude of the Dawn Cockerel; Sonatas de Castilla with Toccata in the Style of a Proclamation; Suite for Piano

(BB) * Naxos 8.557923. Pizarro

Opening with the engaging Dance of the Poppy, Artur Pizarro continues his survey of Rodrigo's sadly underrated piano music; he shows a natural feeling for the instrument which is so full of diversity and listener appeal. There is so much to savour here. The recording is first class and this is highly recommended alongside its companion. If you dip into either of them you will surely want to continue listening.

ROOTHAM, Cyril (1875–1938)

Symphony 1

 Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 269. Philh. O, Braithwaite – BANTOCK: Overture to a Greek Tragedy; Oedipus at Colonus; HOLBROOKE: The Birds of Rhiannon ***

Cyril Rootham, who was born in Bristol, spent the bulk of his life at Cambridge, where his pupils included Arthur Bliss. The first of his two symphonies was composed in 1932 and leaves no doubt as to his expertise and powers of craftsmanship. Rootham was a dedicated and serious musician, though it must be said that his is not a distinctive voice in English music. His orchestration is very fine, and it is reproduced here in sound of quite remarkable realism. Readers might investigate this CD for themselves, for there is much to admire, both here and in the couplings, even if few would claim that the symphony is a powerfully original work.

RORE, Cipriano da (c. 1515–65)

Missa Praeter rerum seriem. Motets: Ave regina; Descendit in hortum meum; Infelix ego; Parce mihi

🔑  Gimell CDGIM 029. Tallis Scholars, Phillips (with JOSQUIN DESPREZ: Motet: Praeter rerum seriem ***)

Cipriano da Rore was Josquin's successor at the Italian Court of the Este at Ferrara. His Missa Praeter rerum seriem is appropriately preceded by the richly textured six-part Josquin motet based on the same melodic sequence. Rore's piece was intended as a tribute to his illustrious predecessor and is a worthy accolade, lyrically powerful, contrapuntally fascinating, spiritually serene and beautifully sung by these highly experienced singers, whose director knows just how to pace and inflect its linear detail and shape its overall structure. The four motets are hardly less impressive, and Gimell's recording, as ever, is virtually flawless.

ROREM, Ned (born 1923)

(i) Flute Concerto; (ii) Violin Concerto; Pilgrims

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.559278. (i) Khaner; (ii) Quint; RLPO, Serebrier

Each of the two Concertos is programmatic, the work for flute offering a series of vignettes with often virtuosic embroidery. It is superbly played by Jeffrey Khaner. The arresting opening drum-command introduces the haunting five-note motif on which the six movements all draw. So the work is almost a set of variations, ending with a catchy False Waltz and on to the refined mood of the closing Résumé and Prayer. The result is highly imaginative and full of variety, if perhaps a little over-extended.

The Violin Concerto opens dramatically and ardently and is a true interplay between soloist and accompaniment, its second movement an unlikely Toccata-Chaconne built over a jagged timpani rhythm. But the heart of the work is lyrically heart-warming in its gentle beauty, first a simple Romance without Words, followed by the serene Midnight, 'a microsonic variation'. Philippe Quint is a deeply responsive soloist, playing with silvery timbre: the composer could not have asked for better, and throughout Serebrier directs the accompanying RLPO most sympathetically. First-class recording.

(i) Double Concerto for Violin & Cello; After Reading Shakespeare

(BB)  Naxos 8.559316. Robinson; (i) with Laredo, IRIS CO, Stern

Ned Rorem's Concerto for Violin and Cello has a sobriquet for each of its attractively diverse movements. After the introductory, slightly pungent 'Morning', 'Looking' centres on the solo violin alternating with the brass. 'Conversation at Midnight', the centrepiece, frames a concertante dialogue plus a string chorale with a livelier central section, and the finale takes off brilliantly and briefly into 'Flight'. The nine sections of After Reading Shakespeare for solo cello are indeed Shakespearean, all named after famous characters in the Bard's plays. Lear is perhaps the most important, as he gets two sections, while Iago and Othello have to share, if not in the most friendly fashion. It's all very ingenious and very well played, but not as memorable as the concerto.

Songs

 Erato 8573 80222-2. Graham, Martineau

Ned Rorem spent many of his formative years in Paris during the 1950s, when he came to know Poulenc and Auric, but he never lost the American flavour that makes his style so distinctive. This recital, encompassing settings of English, American and French verse, gives a good idea of his melodic resource and feeling for words. His songs, such as the Santa Fé series and the setting of Tennyson's Now sleeps the crimson petal, bear witness to a rich imagination and a marvellous feel for both the voice and the piano. Susan Graham does them all proud, and Malcolm Martineau gives impeccable support.

ROSE, Pierre (1774–1830)

Violin Concertos 7 in A min., Op. 9; 10 in B min., Op. 19; 13 in F sharp min., Op. posth.

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.570469. Eichhorn, SW German R. O, Kaiserslautern, Pasquet

Virtually unknown today, except by students of his instrument, Pierre Rose was a famous violinist in early 19th-century Paris, though his concertos, despite the advocacy of Paganini (in 7), have fallen from the repertoire. The three on this CD are all agreeably tuneful works – and even if they are not strikingly distinctive, they offer plenty of rewards, notably in their enjoyably bubbling finales. First rate performances.

ROSSETER, Philip (1567–1623)

Lute Pieces: Almayne; Fantasia; Galliard; 3rd Galliard for the Countess of Sussex; Pavin; Pavin by Rosseter; Prelude. Lute Songs: And would you see my Mistress' face; If she forsake me; Kind in unkindness; No grave for woe; Reprove not love; Shall I come if I swim?; Sweet come again; Though far from joy; What heart's content; What then is love but mourning?; When Laura smiles; Whether men do laugh or weep

(*) Avie AV 2074. Gilchrist, Wadsworth (lute)

James Gilchrist has just the right warm vocal timbre for these songs and he sings them eloquently, and Matthew Wadsworth plays the lute pieces as interludes. They are beautifully recorded and the opening Sweet come again is quite lovely. But this is a collection to dip into rather than to play all at once, for Rosseter's songs (and, to a lesser extent, his instrumental writing) bring a pervading melancholy, so that one is very glad to welcome lively numbers like When Laura smiles or If she forsake me.

ROSSINI, Gioachino (1792–1868)

La Boutique fantasque (ballet; complete; arr. Respighi)

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ (*) Somm mono SOMMCD 027. LSO, Ansermet – STRAVINSKY: Petrushka. ()

🔑 * Chan. 10081. BBC PO, Noseda – RESPIGHI: La Pentola magica, etc. ***

Ansermet's classic 'complete' version (there are some fairly minor cuts) of La Boutique fantasque was outstanding among early LPs. It was recorded in the Kingsway Hall in 1950, which lends its ambient richness to the proceedings, and was one of the rare occasions on which Ansermet conducted the LSO. They play wonderfully for him, especially the woodwind, and in particular the distinguished principal oboe, whose phrasing and tone are exquisite. The whole orchestra are clearly on their toes and the exhilarating can-can and brilliantly executed finale have tremendous vivacity. But the disc is especially famous for its magical opening which has an extraordinary aura, with the gentle pizzicatos of the lower strings answered by glowing horn chords. Fortunately, David Henning's digital remastering miraculously reflects the outstanding quality of those early Decca LXTs. As it now stands the sound has fine range and bloom, almost like stereo at times. This is one of Ansermet's finest ballet records, if not the finest of all. What a pity he made so few recordings with the London orchestra.

Noseda's sparkling account of the famous Rossini/Respighi ballet is complete and is splendidly recorded. It is discussed under Respighi above, where it is combined with other spectacular Respighi arrangements.

La Boutique fantasque (extended suite)

🔑 Ⓜ * RCA (ADD) SACD 82876 66419-2. Boston Pops O, Fiedler – OFFENBACH: Gaîté parisienne **** ✿

Ⓜ (*) Chan. 6503. SNO, Gibson – DUKAS: L'Apprenti sorcier; SAINT-SAËNS: Danse macabre **(*)

Fiedler offers nearly half an hour of the ballet, not missing out much of importance. The performance sparkles, the playing has warmth and finesse and the Boston acoustics add the necessary atmosphere at the magically evocative opening. Mark Donahue's remastering of this 1956 recording for SACD leaves little to be desired and the coupling is indispensable.

Gibson's version of the suite is strikingly atmospheric. Helped by the glowing acoustics of Glasgow's City Hall, the opening has much evocation. The orchestra is on its toes and plays with warmth and zest, and the 1973 recording has transferred vividly to CD.

Introduction, Theme & Variations in C min. (for clarinet & orchestra)

 ASV CDDCA 559. Johnson, ECO, Groves – CRUSELL: Concerto 2  ✿; BAERMANN: Adagio ; WEBER: Concertino ***

Introduction, Theme & Variations in B flat; Variations in C (for clarinet & orchestra)

 Sup. SU 3554-2. Peterkova, Prague Philh., Bělohlávek – BRUCH: Double Concerto; MENDELSSOHN: 2 Concert Pieces ***

The Czech clarinettist Ludmila Peterkova is an artist who is not only warmly expressive, but sparkles in everything she plays, bringing out the pure fun of the two sets of Rossini variations, warmly accompanied by Bělohlávek and the Prague Philharmonia. A delightful fill-up for an outstanding disc of rare clarinet pieces.

As in all her recordings, Emma Johnson's lilting timbre and sensitive control of dynamic bring imaginative light and shade to the melodic line. Brilliance for its own sake is not the keynote, but her relaxed pacing is made to sound exactly right. Vivid recording.

String Sonatas 1–6 (complete)

⊶ (BB) * Double Decca (ADD) 443 838-2 (2). ASMF, Marriner (with CHERUBINI: Etude 2 for French Horn & Strings (with Tuckwell); BELLINI: Oboe Concerto in E flat (with Lord) ) – DONIZETTI: String Quartet ***

String Sonatas 4–6; (i) Variations in C (for violin & small orchestra)

 ASV (ADD) CDDCA 767. Serenata of L. (members)

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55200. OAE (members): Wallfisch, Marcus, Tunnicliffe, Nwanoku

We have a very soft spot for the sparkle, elegance and wit of these ASMF performances of the Rossini String Sonatas, amazingly accomplished products for a 12-year-old. Marriner offers them on full orchestral strings but with such finesse and precision of ensemble that the result is all gain. The 1966 recording still sounds remarkably full and natural, and the current CD transfer adds to the feeling of presence. The new Double Decca format has other music added. Apart from the Donizetti Quartet, which has an appropriately Rossinian flavour, the two minor concertante works are well worth having, with both Barry Tuckwell (in what is in essence a three-movement horn concertino) and Roger Lord in excellent form.

The Serenata of London, working as a string quartet, and a comparably sized group from the Orchestra of the Age of Enlightenment, playing period instruments, each manage to include all six of the String Sonatas on one CD. As might be expected, the Serenata, playing modern instruments and led by the easily brilliant Barry Wilde, give the warmer, more sunny bouquet to Rossini's string textures; their competitors, led by the dazzling Elizabeth Wallfisch, offer a slightly drier vintage, though their approach is by no means unsmiling. On both discs the recording is truthful and naturally balanced. However, the OAE members' performance now reissued on Helios has a distinct price advantage.

PIANO MUSIC

Péchés de vieillesse, Volume VI: Album pour les enfants dégourdis

Ⓝ  Chan. 10520. Sollini

These delightful pieces, written when Rossini was long retired from opera, are what he described as an 'Album for Bright Young People', his so-called Sins of Old Age. Rossini is here writing very much with his tongue in his cheek, pointing each idea with wit, beautifully caught by the pianist, Marco Sollini, pointing each phrase to bring out the humour and sparkle. That he uses a slightly twangy fortepiano adds to the charm, bringing a decorative quality to the music. The most striking of this group of 12 is the longest, 'Un petit train de plaisir comico-imitatif' a programme piece representing a train journey. This is complete with the engine's whistle and surging ideas in waltz-time, which sadly ends on the second journey in a train crash, soon rectified. Other pieces have ironic funeral marches, which no one can take seriously, with the final piece a haunting Polka Mazurka. First-rate sound.

Péchés de vieillesse (Sins of Old Age), Volume VII: Album de chaumière (The Cottage Album; complete); Volume IX (excerpts)

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.570590/1. Marangoni (piano)

Rossini retired (absolutely) from composing operas at the age of 37 and spent his final years in writing numerous piano pieces (not always so short – several here are over ten minutes in length). He called them Péchés de vieillesse ('Sins of Old Age') and arranged them in 14 volumes. Each of the pieces has a neat sobriquet; one of the most charming here is the Petite polka chinoise; others are Une pensée à Florence and the well-named Petite valse de boudoir. Many start with a bold, commanding introduction and then lapse into a simple melody. Une Cauchemar is like an impromptu, while Gymnastique d'écartement certainly requires delicate exertion from its performer, and Un réveil en sursant is crisp and pointed. There is even a fugue (Prélude fugassé). Although lightweight, Rossini displays a continuing fund of invention, and these pieces are well worth exploring. Alessandro Marangoni plays them persuasively, although he might at times display just a little lighter touch; but the piano (although truthfully recorded) is closely balanced, and that does not help him.

VOCAL MUSIC

Messa di gloria

🔑 Ⓜ * Ph. 475 7781. Jo, Murray, Giménez, Araiza, Ramey, Ch. & ASMF, Marriner

This is a surprisingly neglected work, considering its excellence. Rossini's Messa di gloria is in nine movements, offering appropriately ambitious but never heavy settings of the Kyrie, deeply expressive, and a jauntily operatic Gloria, products of Rossini's first full maturity at a time (1820) when he was otherwise totally occupied with writing operas. There are links between the tenor duet which starts the Christe (beautifully sung by Giménez and Araiza) and Mathilde's aria in William Tell, but the delight is that so much unknown Rossini contains so much new to charm us, including the beautiful Gratias, with its obbligato cor anglais. Marriner's account replaces Handt's earlier version, good though that was, for he has a starry team of soloists, Sumi Jo notably fresh-voiced and Giménez equally memorable. The St Martin's Chorus predictably matches the ASMF in excellence, rising exultantly to the closing contrapuntal Cum sancto spirito, which incidentally may not have been wholly Rossini's work. First-class recording.

Missa di Milano; Petite messe solennelle (1867 orchestral version)

🔑 Ⓑ  Ph. Duo 475 230-2 (2). Mentzer, Giménez, Bostridge, Alaimo, Ch. & ASMF, Marriner

This reissued 1995 recording of Rossini's Missa di Milano is a real find. It is not really a complete Mass but the assembly of a Kyrie, Gloria and Credo probably composed independently before 1808. They are three separate manuscripts held in the Milan Conservatory (hence the title) but they fit together convincingly. They are well sprinkled with the musical fingerprints of the youthful, zestful Rossini, notably the crescendo in the Gloria in excelsis Deo, the nimble Laudamus, the lighthearted Domine Deus, and the Qui tollis with violin obbligato, very well sung here by Susanne Mentzer. The closing repeated Amen has an irresistible exuberance. The performance could hardly be better, full of jubilation, with the chorus singing lustily and the excellent soloists, including an early recorded contribution by Ian Bostridge, whose vocal personality comes over more robustly than we expect now.

Comparable praise applies to Marriner's account of the orchestral version of the Petite messe solennelle, which may not be as winningly coloured as the original score for two pianos and harmonium, but is very enjoyable in its own right. Marriner strikes a happy balance between the swingingly exuberant Cum sancto spiritus, and the more serious mood of the closing Agnus Dei – beautifully sung here. Excellent recording makes this a reissue to cherish.

Petite messe solennelle

Ⓜ (*) Decca 444 134-2 (2). Dessì, Scalchi, Sabbatini, Pertusi, Bologna Teatro Comunale Ch. & O, Chailly

Chailly chooses Rossini's orchestral version (made in 1867), although Rossini himself preferred his original, as do we. Nevertheless, with a fine solo team, Daniella Dessì and Gloria Scalchi both singing beautifully (and ravishing in their Qui tollis duet), and with the bass rising to the occasion in the Quoniam tu solus sanctus, this is a very considerable account. The Bologna Chorus are not helped by a somewhat backward balance which, within the warmly resonant acoustic, does not provide an ideal sharpness of focus. But they sing with much ardour, especially in the Gloria and Credo, and Chailly ensures that the Et resurrexit caps the performance ebulliently. Apart from the choral balance (and that is not a real problem when the performers are so committed), the recording is glowing and vivid.

Soirées musicales (excerpts); La partenza; La pesca; La promessa; La regatta veneziana

🔑  BBC (ADD) BBCB 8001-2. Harper, Baker, Britten – BRAHMS: Liebeslieder Waltzes, Op. 52; TCHAIKOVSKY: 4 Duets ***

Both the tongue-in-cheek humour and the outright fun (as in the gondolier race of La regatta veneziana) are vividly caught in this BBC recording from the 1971 Aldeburgh Festival. Heather Harper and Janet Baker match beautifully, while remaining characterfully distinct, yet Britten at the piano remains master of ceremonies in family music-making idealized.

Stabat Mater

🔑 ✿ * Chan. 8780. Field, D. Jones, A. Davies, Earle, L. Symphony Ch., City of L. Sinfonia, Hickox

Richard Hickox rightly presents Rossini's Stabat Mater warmly and with gutsy strength. All four soloists here are first rate, not Italianate of tone but full and warm, and the London Symphony Chorus sings with fine attack as well as producing the most refined pianissimos in the unaccompanied quartet, here as usual given to the full chorus rather than to the soloists. Full-bodied and atmospheric sound.

OVERTURES

Overtures: Armida; Il barbiere di Siviglia; Bianca e Faliero; La cambiale di matrimonio; La Cenerentola; Demetrio e Poblibio; Edipo a Colono; Edoardo e Cristina; (i) Ermione; La gazza ladra; L'inganno felice; L'Italiana in Algeri; Maometto II; Otello; (ii) Ricciardo e Zoraide; La scala di seta; Semiramide; Le siège de Corinthe; Il Signor Bruschino; Tancredi; Il Turco in Italia; Torvaldo e Dorliska; Il viaggio a Reims; William Tell; Sinfonia al Conventello; Sinfonia di Bologna

🔑 Ⓜ * Ph. Trio (ADD) 473 967-2 (3). ASMF, Marriner; (i) with Amb. S.

Marriner's reissued Trio spans all Rossini's overtures, but one must remember that the early Neapolitan operas, with the exception of Ricciardo e Zoraide and Ermione, make do with a simple Prelude, leading into the opening chorus. Ricciardo e Zoraide, however, is an extended piece (12 minutes 25 seconds), with the choral entry indicating that the introduction is at an end. Maometto II is on a comparable scale, while the more succinct Armida is an example of Rossini's picturesque evocation, almost like a miniature tone-poem. Twenty-four overtures plus two sinfonias make a delightful package in such sparkling performances, which eruditely use original orchestrations. Full, bright and atmospheric recording, spaciously reverberant, with no artificial brilliance.

Overtures: Il barbiere di Siviglia; La cambiale di matrimonio; La Cenerentola; La gazza ladra; L'Italiana in Algeri; La scala di seta; Semiramide; Il Turco in Italia; William Tell

Ⓜ  Classic fM 75605 57031-2. Sinfonia Varsovia, Menuhin

Menuhin and his Polish group, the Sinfonia Varsovia, present a stylishly enjoyable collection of nine favourite Rossini overtures. There is a nice balance between wit and finesse, geniality and grace. Tempi are often brisk, but when there is a surge of vivacity there is no loss of poise. The wind solos are elegantly done and the string phrasing combines neatness with graceful warmth. Above all there is spontaneity here, and even at times a Beechamesque twinkle. The recording, made in the No. 1 Studio of Polish Radio in Warsaw, is full and resonant but not excessively so.

Overtures: Il barbiere di Siviglia; La cambiale di matrimonio; La gazza ladra; L'Italiana in Algeri; Otello; La scala di seta; Semiramide; Le Siège de Corinthe; Il signor Bruschino; Tancredi; Torvaldo e Dorliska; Il Turco in Italia; Il viaggio a Reims; William Tell

Ⓑ  Double Decca 443 850-2 (2). Nat. PO, Chailly

In 1981 Chailly and the National Philharmonic made the first compact disc of Rossini overtures and these performances are here combined with their further compilation, recorded in 1984, to make a desirable bargain double. At times on the first disc there is a degree of digital edge on tuttis, but the bustle from the cellos is particularly engaging. The solo playing is fully worthy of such clear presentation demonstrating that this is an orchestra of London's finest musicians. Under Chailly the spirit of the music-making conveys spontaneous enjoyment too. Incidentally, Il viaggio a Reims had no overture at its first performance, but one was cobbled together later, drawing on the ballet music from Le Siège de Corinthe. The other novelties, Otello – played with great dash – and Torvaldo e Dorliska, with its witty interchanges between woodwind and strings, are among the highlights, and overall the performances are undoubtedly as infectious as they are stylish.

Overtures: Il barbiere di Siviglia; La Cenerentola; La gazza ladra; La scala di seta; Il Signor Bruschino; William Tell

🔑 Ⓜ  RCA (ADD) 82876 65844-2. Chicago SO, Reiner

Reiner's classic collection from 1958 here emerges as sparkling and vivacious as ever. A fine set of performances, with La Cenerentola in particular offering superb orchestral bravura. The recording has good range, and the acoustic of the Chicago Hall casts a pleasing bloom. Everything sounds fresh, and after lovely, refined cello playing at the opening of William Tell, the blaze of brass tone announcing the galop reminds us that the Chicago Orchestra was always famous in this department.

Overtures: Il Barbiere di Siviglia; La Cenerentola; L'Italiana in Algeri; La scala di seta; Semiramide; Il Signor Bruschino; The Thieving Magpie; William Tell

Ⓝ Ⓑ  CfP 2 28281-2. Philh. O, Giulini

Giulini's performances combine refinement of detail with sophisticated Philharmonia playing from this orchestra's peak period during the early 1960s. La scala di seta has an almost ridiculously fast introduction, but William Tell has a natural flair. The recording is of EMI's best quality from this period.

Overtures: Il barbiere di Siviglia; La gazza ladra; L'Italiana in Algeri; La scala di seta; Semiramide; William Tell

Ⓑ (*) DG (ADD) 415 377-2. BPO, Karajan

Karajan's virtuoso performances are polished like fine silver. The main Allegro of La scala di seta abandons all decorum when played as fast as this, and elsewhere bravura often takes precedence over poise. However, with the Berlin Philharmonic on sparkling form, there is wit as well as excitement; but the remastering casts very bright lighting on the upper range, which makes sonic brilliance approach aggressiveness in some climaxes.

Overtures: Elisabetta, Regina d'Inghilterra; La scala di seta; Semiramide; Tancredi; Il Turco in Italia; William Tell

🔑 (BB)  RCA 74321 68012-2. LSO, Abbado – VERDI: Overtures ***

The Overture Elisabetta, Regina d'Inghilterra is in fact our familiar friend, The Barber of Seville Overture, and is listed as such on this reissued CD. But there is a subtle change here which surely implies the use of the proper title – a triplet in the first theme of the Allegro which is repeated each time the theme reappears. This adds a touch of novelty to these zestful performances from Abbado, with exhilaratingly fast tempi, the LSO players kept constantly on their toes and obviously enjoying themselves. The exuberance comes to the fore especially in Tancredi – there is even a brief clarinet glissando – heard in a revised version by Philip Gosset. But some might feel that La scala di seta would be more effective if a fraction more relaxed and poised. William Tell opens with elegant cellos, then offers an unashamedly over-the-top storm sequence and a final galop taken at breakneck speed. The remastered recording is vividly bright, but it matches Abbado's approach and has plenty of supporting weight and a concert hall ambience.

Overtures: La gazza ladra; L'Italiana in Algeri; Semiramide; Il Signor Bruschino; William Tell

 BBC (ADD) BBCL 4159-2 (2). Philh. O, Giulini – DVOŘÁK: Symphony 8 ((*)); BRUCKNER: Symphony 8 ***

A sparkling bonus from Giulini for impressive performances of Dvořák's and Bruckner's Eighth Symphonies.

Semiramide: Overture

() Testament mono SBT 1015. BBC SO, Toscanini – BRAHMS: Symphony 2 (); MENDELSSOHN: Midsummer Night's Dream (excerpt) ()

Toscanini's famous concerts with the BBC Symphony Orchestra were obviously very special. This overture from a 1935 concert has one on the edge of one's seat. Quite electrifying. The sound calls for tolerance – but what playing!

OPERA

Adelaide di Borgogna (complete; CD version)

🔑  Opera Rara ORC32 (2). Cullogh, Larmore, Ford, Scottish CO & Ch., Carella

Unlike most Opera Rara recordings of operatic rarities, this one was recorded live at the Edinburgh Festival in 2005. It was the last session supervised by the indefatigable founder of the label, Patric Schmid, and proves a triumphant success, with one superb number after another. It delves into an obscure tale from German history, when the Emperor Otto (a castrato role, here superbly sung by Jennifer Larmore) rescued a damsel in distress (Majella Cullogh in the title-role). Both of them negotiate florid arias of formidable difficulty, as well as the many tautly written ensemble numbers. The tenor Bruce Ford is also impressive as Adelberto, the bad guy in the story, and the opera is sparklingly directed by Carella.

Il barbiere di Siviglia (complete; DVD version)

Ⓝ 🔑 * Warner NVC Arts DVD 4509 99223-2. Ewing, Rawnsley, Cosotti, Desderi, Furlanetto, Glyndebourne Ch., LPO, Cambreling (Producer: John Cox; V/D: Dave Heather)

(*) Arthaus DVD 100 090. Bartoli, Quilico, Kuebler, Feller, Lloyd, Cologne City Op. Ch., Stuttgart RSO, Ferro. (Dir: Michael Hampe.)

This is the finest recording of Il barbiere since the famous Callas/Gobbi and Bartoli/Nucci sets on CD; moreover it has the inestimable advantage of video, which greatly enhances the humour. Maria Ewing is an absolutely delightful Rosina, matching her prettiness with coquettish charm and superb vocal bravura. John Rawnsley's ebulliently self-assured Figaro dominates the proceedings as he should, and Max-René Cosotti's golden-toned Almaviva completes the vocal cast with distinction, although as Basilio Ferruccio Furlanetto's La calunnia is also a joy. Claudio Desderi is an old hand at opera buffa, and his Bartolo is as vocally fluent as his demeanour is amusingly angry. All told, a marvellous cast, superb singing and sparklingly stylish orchestral playing under Cambreling make this 1981 Glyndebourne recording a set to treasure.

Recorded live at the Schwetzingen Festival in a very pretty theatre in 1988, this Arthaus DVD version of Il barbiere centres around the superb performances of the two principals, Cecilia Bartoli, already dominant, with voice and technique fully developed even before she became a superstar, and Gino Quilico as Figaro, wonderfully winning in his acting with voice magnificently firm.

David Kuebler with his rather gritty tenor is far from winning as the Count, Robert Lloyd is an imposing Basilio and Carlos Feller a characterful Bartolo. Gabriele Ferro springs the rhythms persuasively, and Michael Hampe's production works well using realistic sets by Ezio Frigerio and costumes by Mauro Pagano. Excellent, cleanly separated sound.

(i) Il barbiere di Siviglia; (ii) La Cenerentola; (iii) Le Comte Ory (DVD versions; complete)

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Warner NVC Arts DVD 50-51442-7848-2-4 (3). Glyndebourne productions, LPO, with (i) Ewing, Rawnsley, Cosotti; cond. Cambreling; (ii) Kuhlmann, Dale, Desderi, Rinaldo; cond. Renzetti; (iii) Laho, Woodman, Tézier, Massis; cond. A. Davis

This is another outstanding triptych: three of Rossini's finest operas in excellent Glyndebourne performances – a true bargain; although the documentation is relatively sparse, it is more than adequate.

Il barbiere di Siviglia (complete; CD versions)

🔑 * Decca 425 520-2 (3). Bartoli, Nucci, Matteuzzi, Fissore, Burchuladze, Ch. & O of Teatro Comunale di Bologna, Patanè

🔑 Ⓜ * EMI 3 92046-2 (2). Callas, Gobbi, Alva, Ollendorff, Philh. Ch. & O, Galliera

🔑 (BB)  Warner 9031 74885-2 (2). Hagegård, Larmore, Giménez, Corbelli, Ramey, Lausanne CO, López-Cobos

Ⓜ * EMI 5 67762-2 (2). de los Angeles, Alva, Cava, Wallace, Bruscantini, Glyndebourne Festival Ch., RPO, Gui

() Testament mono SBT 2166 (2). de los Angeles, Monti, Bechi, Rossi-Lemeni, Milan Ch. & SO, Serafin

(BB)  Naxos 8.660027/29 (3) Ganassi, Serville, Vargas, Romero, De Grandis, Hungaria R. Ch., Failoni CO, Budapest, Humburg

On CD, Cecilia Bartoli's rich, vibrant voice not only copes brilliantly with the technical demands but she also gives a winningly provocative characterization. Like the conductor, Bartoli is wonderful at bringing out the fun. So is Leo Nucci, and he gives a beautifully rounded portrait of the wily barber. Burchuladze, unidiomatic next to the others, still gives a monumentally lugubrious portrait of Basilio, and the Bartolo of Enrico Fissore is outstanding, with the patter song wonderfully articulated at Patanè's sensible speed. The snag is that this Decca set is on three CDs; other recommended versions manage with two.

Gobbi and Callas were here at their most inspired and, with the recording quality nicely refurbished, the EMI is an outstanding set, not absolutely complete in its text, but so crisp and sparkling it can be confidently recommended. Callas remains supreme as a minx-like Rosina, summing up the character superbly in Una voce poco fa. The early stereo sound comes up very acceptably in this fine new transfer, clarified, fuller and more atmospheric, presenting a uniquely characterful performance with new freshness and immediacy.

López-Cobos directs a scintillating performance, helped by brilliant esnsembles, generally taken at high speed, with rhythms sprung delectably. Though Håkan Hagegård is a dry-toned Figaro, the recording sets him in a helpful ambience, which equally helps to enhance the comic atmosphere, with the interplay of characters well managed. There are few more stylish Rossini tenors today than Raúl Giménez, and though his voice is not as youthful as some, his musical imagination goes with fine flexibility and point. As for Jennifer Larmore, she is is an enchanting Rosina, both firm and rich of tone. Crisply consistent, this makes a strong contender among modern digital versions, even next to the delectable Decca set featuring Cecilia Bartoli. An excellent collection of highlights is available on a budget Apex disc, playing for 76 minutes (2564 61502-2).

Gui's 1962 Glydebourne production has been remastered for EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century', and the bloom on voices and orchestra is even more apparent. The charm of de los Angeles's Rosina matches the unforced geniality of the production as a whole, strongly cast and easy to enjoy. Good documentation too. Not perhaps a first choice against competition but a good mid-priced recommendation.

The Testament issue, superbly transferred, brings out of EMI's archive the long-buried set which Victoria de los Angeles recorded with Serafin in mono in 1952, when her voice was at its fullest and most golden. Though the orchestral playing is often rough, and Serafin is relaxed rather than sparkling, the performance of de los Angeles could not be more seductive. Not as light as her later account with Gui in stereo, this is even sunnier and more glowing. Gino Bechi is a strong if gruff Figaro, Nicola Monti a heady-toned Almaviva and Nicola Rossi-Lemeni a characterful Basilio.

Though the cast is not as starry as with most full-price rivals, the Naxos set makes a first-rate bargain. The singing is hardly less stylish, with Sonia Ganassi a rich-toned Rosina, controlling vibrato well, and with Ramon Vargas an agile and attractively youthful-sounding Almaviva. Roberto Serville as Figaro conveys the fun of the role brilliantly. The buffo characters are strongly cast too, with Basilio's La calunnia (Franco de Grandis) delightfully enlivened by comments from Bartolo (Angelo Romero), both very much involved in their roles. Will Humburg's often brisk speeds, with crisp recitative matched by dazzling ensembles, never prevent the music (and the singers) from breathing.

The Barber of Seville (in English)

Ⓜ (*) Chan. 3025 (2). Jones, Ford, Opie, Rose, Shore, ENO Ch. & O, Bellini

Chandos here offers at mid-price this Barber in English, using the bright translation of Amanda and Anthony Holden. Strongly cast, it is a genial performance, very well played and recorded. The only reservation is over the relaxed conducting of Gabriele Bellini which lacks dramatic bite. Compensating for that, the principal singers not only characterize vividly but together form a lively ensemble. Alan Opie is a strong, positive Figaro, while Della Jones as Rosina both exploits her rich mezzo tones and brings sparkle to the coloratura. It is good too to have so accomplished a Rossini tenor as Bruce Ford singing Almaviva. Peter Rose as Basilio and Andrew Shore as Dr Bartolo, both young-sounding for these roles, are fresh and firm too. Excellent documentation includes a full English libretto.

La Cenerentola (DVD versions)

🔑 * Decca DVD 071 444-9. Bartoli, Dara, Giménez, Corbelli, Pertusi, Houston Grand Op. Ch. & Symphony, Campanella. (V/D: Brian Large.)

 Arthaus DVD 100 214. Murray, Berry, Araiza, Quilico, Schöne, V. State Op. Ch., VPO, Chailly. (Dir: Michael Hampe. V/D: Claus Viller.)

Ⓝ (*) Warner NVC Arts DVD 5050467-0940-2-4. Kuhlmann, Dale, Desderi, Rinaldi, Taddei, Zannini, Kennedy, Glyndebourne Ch., LPO, Renzetti

Few Rossini operas have such fizz as Decca's Houston Opera production of La Cenerentola, a part Cecilia Bartoli was born to play. The rest of the cast is the same as the CD set, except that Raúl Giménez takes the part of Don Ramiro. Bruno Campanella conducts very spiritedly. Visually the production could not be more winning, and the camera placing is a great credit to Brian Large.

Riccardo Chailly (who directed the Decca CDs) conducts the alternative version, which comes from the 1982 Salzburg Festival, and had the Bartoli set not been available it would have been a very strong recommendation, for Ann Murray is delightful in the principal role and the rest of the cast is excellent. If in Act I Don Magnifico's castle looks run down and needing a coat of paint, the glamour of the palace more than compensates. The recording is bright and sparking but has plenty of bloom and the camerawork is always well managed. Most enjoyable, with a dazzling Non più mesta and a particularly infectious finale. But Chailly is at his finest throughout and so are the chorus and orchestra.

Rossini's La Cenerentola is quite long at 151 minutes, and the plot is simpler than the story we are used to, with no glass slippers (a bracelet belonging to Cinderella substitutes) and Alidoro, the Prince's philosopher/tutor (given excellent presence here by Roderick Kennedy), substitutes for a fairy godmother. The ugly sisters remain to torment the heroine until the prince finally finds her at the end, and the wedding banquet is spiced by her famous Non più mesta. The Glyndebourne version has a pleasing Cinderella in Kathleen Kuhlmann, who sings well, although she is no Bartoli, and one of her two ugly sisters is prettier than she is (though not nicer!). Her Prince (Laurence Dale) isn't very dashing, and Alidoro has more presence. Both Alberto Rinaldi as Dandini and (especially) the veteran Claudio Desderi, as her father, Don Magnifico, are strongly characterized. The many buffo ensembles go well enough and are enjoyably sung, with spirit and remarkable diction, but one feels that the conductor Donato Renzetti could have achieved rather more sparkle overall.

La Cenerentola (CD versions)

🔑 * Decca 436 902-2 (2). Bartoli, Matteuzzi, Corbelli, Dara, Costa, Banditelli, Pertusi, Ch. & O of Teatro Comunale di Bologna Ch. & O, Chailly

🔑 Ⓜ * Teldec 4509 94553-2 (2). Larmore, Giménez, Quilico, Corbelli, Scarabelli, ROHCG Ch. & O, Rizzi

Ⓑ  DG Double (ADD) 477 5659 (2). Berganza, Alva, Montarsolo, Capecchi, Scottish Op., Ch., LSO, Abbado

On the Decca CDs Cecilia Bartoli again makes an inspired Cenerentola. Her tone-colours are not just more sensuous than those of her rivals: her imagination and feeling for detail add enormously to her vivid characterization, culminating in a stunning account of the final rondo, Non più mesta. William Matteuzzi is an engaging prince, sweeter of tone and more stylish than his direct rivals, while the contrasting of the bass and baritone roles is ideal between Alessandro Corbelli as Dandini, Michele Pertusi as the tutor, Alidoro, and Enzo Dara as Don Magnifico. Few Rossini opera-sets have such fizz as this, and the recording is one of Decca's most vivid.

In Carlo Rizzi's mid-priced Teldec version, Jennifer Larmore makes an enchanting heroine, with her creamily beautiful mezzo both tenderly expressive in cantilena and flawlessly controlled through the most elaborate coloratura passages. This is a more smiling character, not least in the final exuberant rondo, Non più mesta, which sparkles deliciously, more relaxed than with Bartoli. As Ramiro, Raúl Giménez sings with a commanding sense of style, less youthful but more assured than his rival, while Alessandro Corbelli is far more aptly cast here as Don Magnifico than as Dandini in the Decca set. Here the Dandini of Gino Quilico is youthful and debonair, and Alastair Miles is a magnificent Alidoro. Though the Covent Garden forces cannot quite match the close-knit Bologna team in underlining the comedy as in a live performance, as directed by Carlo Rizzi they are consistently more refined, with more light and shade, bringing out the musical sparkle all the more. Excellent, well-balanced sound. A generous highlights disc (75 minutes) is available on a budget Apex CD (2564 61503-2).

Abbado's 1971 DG set lacks the extrovert bravura and sparkle of an ideal performance. The atmosphere in places is almost of a concert performance, helped by fine analogue recording. Berganza, agile in the coloratura, seems too mature, even matronly, for the fairy-tale role of Cinderella. Alva sings well enough but is somewhat self-conscious in the florid writing. Abbado, although hardly witty in his direction, inspires delicate playing throughout. The CD transfer is admirably fresh. The reissue includes a track-by-track synopsis.

Le Comte Ory (complete; DVD version)

🔑 * Warner DVD 0630 18646-2. Laho, Massis, Montague, Shaulis, Tezier, Robbins, Glyndebourne Ch., LPO, A. Davis (V/D: Brian Large)

Le Comte Ory, written for Paris in 1828, was Rossini's very last comic opera, and one which prompted a classic Glyndebourne production in 1997 by Jerome Savary. With colourful sets and costumes by Ezio Toffolutti, the fun is just as exuberant. That is so both in Act I, when the predatory Count Ory disguises himself as a hermit, intent on waylaying the Countess Adele in her castle while her brother is away at the Crusades, and in Act II when Ory and his followers disguise themselves as nuns and inveigle their way into the castle. Their drinking chorus – punctuated by pretended devotions when approached by strangers – is a delight, and the comic bed-scene when Ory thinks he is fondling the Countess when in fact it is the page, Isolier, is brilliantly handled. The cast, led by Marc Laho as Ory, Annick Massis as the Countess and Diana Montague as Isolier, has no weak link, with ensembles delectably timed and pointed by the conductor, Andrew Davis.

Le Comte Ory (CD version)

🔑 * DG 477 5020 (2). Flórez, Miles, Bonfadelli, Todorovitch, De Liso, Pratico, Prague Ch., Bologna Theatre O, López-Cobos

This is one of the most delectable of all Rossini's comic operas, an essay in French that set a new pattern for the composer. Jesus López-Cobos, the most skilled of Rossini conductors, even matches in rhythmic lift and comic timing the magic example of Vittorio Gui in the classic Glyndebourne recording of the 1950s. The big ensemble that ends Act I is taken even faster than with Gui, yet it is just as effervescent. The presence of an audience plainly helps, and the performance gains enormously too from the brilliant characterization of the central character of the predatory Count himself by Juan Diego Flórez, tackling the most formidable florid passages with ease and imagination. As the object of his desires, the Countess Adele, whose husband is away at the crusades, Stefania Bonfadelli sings with equal fluency, a coloratura soprano with a mezzo-ish tinge in the lower register who can reach a top E flat with ease. Alastair Miles as the Count's tutor sings strongly, making him rather a severe character, with Marina De Liso light and sparkling as the page, Isolier. The closely focused recording is full and firm, if not always kind to the orchestra, with the voices very well caught, and vociferous applause at the end of each Act adding to the sense of presence.

La donna del lago (complete; DVD version)

🔑 (*) Opus Arte DVD OA LS 3009 D. Anderson, Blake, Merritt, La Scala Ch. & O, Muti (Dir: Werner Herzog; V/D: Ilio Catani)

La donna del lago (The Lady of the Lake) with lavish sets by Maurizio Balo, evocative and realistic, it establishes the period atmosphere well; but it is Muti's evident enthusiasm for the piece in his taut and exciting conducting that above all brings out the drama of conflict in 16th-century Scotland, with the melancholy Elena, the heroine, caught between rival forces. June Anderson in that role sings very reliably, but it is hardly a characterful performance, and it is left to the two principal tenors, both with an impressive upper range so necessary in Rossini, to make the most striking vocal contributions, Rockwell Blake as Giacomo V (James V) of Scotland and Chris Merritt as Rodrigo di Dhu. Though Merritt has the weightier voice, he produces astounding top notes out of the blue, while Blake with sweeter tone is amazingly agile, relishing the most taxing divisions. The others make a strong, consistent team. A complete libretto is provided and a good synopsis of the plot, but no information on the opera's history.

La donna del lago (complete; CD version)

(BB)  Naxos 8.660235/6. Ganassi, Pizzolato, Mironov, Bothmer, Gierlach, Prague Chamber Ch., Tübingen Festival Band, SWR R. O, Kaiserslautern, Zedda

Until Pollini's Sony set returns, this new Naxos live recording reigns supreme for this opera, freely adapted from Scott's novel The Lady of the Lake, and even if it were not in the budget range it would still be fully competitive. Zedda conducts with élan and his young cast make a splendid team. Sonia Ganassi is excellent in the title-role of Elena, and the pair of tenors, Maxim Mironov as Uberto and Ferdinand von Bothmer as Rodrigo, are both most convincing. The duet between Uberto and Elena in Act I, Quali accenti! . . . Ma son sorpreso is one of the opera's highlights; later, the duets between Elena and Malcolm (Marianna Pizzolato) are equally telling, as is Pizzolato's spectacular earlier aria (Mura felici). The chorus and orchestra are first class, and there is some spectacular horn playing in the opera's opening scene. The set comes with a good synopsis and is far preferable to Muti's reissued Philips version (473 307-20), where the ensemble of chorus and orchestra, so successful with Zedda, is rough, and the principals coarse by comparison. The Naxos set is enjoyable on all counts, not least the excellent recording.

Elisabetta, Regina d'Inghilterra (complete; CD version)

🔑  Opera Rara ORC 22 (3). Larmore, Ford, Cullagh, LPO, Carella

Elisabetta d'Inghilterra, produced in 1815, like Walter Scott's novel, Kenilworth, of five years later, deals with the love of Queen Elizabeth for Leicester, but with the added gloss that Mary Queen of Scots had given birth during her captivity to two unacknowledged children by the Duke of Norfolk, one of whom married Leicester. The overture is the one that Rossini re-used in the Barber of Seville, and Elisabetta's first aria brings material later developed in the Barber as Rosina's Una voce poco fa. What matters is the vigour of the writing and many marvellous ensembles, beautifully performed on Opera Rara by a strong cast led by Jennifer Larmore, Bruce Ford and Majella Cullagh, with Giuliano Carella the idiomatic conductor. This can be strongly recommended.

L'equivoco stravagante (complete)

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.660087/8 (2). Petrova, Felice, Vinco, Schmunck, Minarelli, Santamaria, Czech Chamber Ch. & Chamber Soloists, Zedda

L'equivoco stravagante ('The Bizarre Deception'), is one of Rossini's earliest operas, written when he was only 19. Already the Rossini fingerprints are firmly in place, with the music regularly sparkling from the Overture, with its brilliant horn triplets, onwards. The story of this dramma giocoso involves a scheming servant, Frontino, who deceives the stupid suitor, Buralichio, into believing that the girl he is wooing, the heroine, Ernestina, is in fact male and whose nouveau riche father, Gamberotto, has had 'him' castrated so that he could become a high-earning opera-singer. The complications are many, until Ernestina is safely united with Ermanno, the impecunious tutor whom she loves. After three performances in 1811 the piece was banned for being too licentious. Rossini cut his losses, using material from it in his subsequent operas. It makes an attractive rarity, generally well sung and very well conducted in this live recording by the Rossini scholar Alberto Zedda – if unhelpfully punctuated by tepid applause.

Ermione (complete; DVD version)

🔑  Warner DVD 0630 1012-2. Antonacci, Montague, Ford, Lopez-Janez, Austin Kelly, Howell, Glyndebourne Ch., LPO, A. Davis (Dir: Graham Vick; V/D: Humphrey Burton)

Recorded live in the new Glyndebourne Opera House in 1995, the Warner disc updates the action – in a plot based on Racine's tragedy, Andromaque – to the early 20th century, with colourful military uniforms to the fore. Fascinatingly, the set represents sections of an 18th-century theatre with its galleries and boxes, a device that works flexibly enough. As usual in an opera seria of Rossini, the mixture of jolly music may seem incongruous, bringing unexpected lurches of mood, but it is always lively and it offers the three principal tenors some spectacular vocal challenges. Bruce Ford as Oreste sings powerfully, producing penetrating top notes out of the blue, while Jorge Lopez-Janez as Pyrrhus sings more gently and with a sweeter tone, also coping well with the high tessitura. Oddly, this adaptation of Andromaque slants the story away from her – superbly played here by Diana Montague – towards Ermione, whose Act II aria provides an emotional high point in the piece. Excellent contributions too from the third tenor, Paul Austin Kelly, as Pilade and from Gwynne Howell as Phoenix. Andrew Davis, Glyndebourne music director at the time, draws fresh, incisive performances from chorus and orchestra. As so often with Warner DVDs, there is no booklet, only a synopsis and a list of chapters – a pity when such a rarity really requires some background information.

La gazza ladra (complete; DVD version)

🔑 * Arthaus DVD 102 203. Feller, Condo, Kuebler, Contrabus, Cologne Op. Ch., Gürzenich O, Cologne, Bartoletti (TV Dir: José Montes-Baquer)

Recorded live at the Cologne Opera in 1987, this sparkling performance is a winner. One forgets the improbabilities of the plot, so agreeably enjoyable is the performance, with Contrabus as a charming Ninetta; and her suitor, Giannetto, sung by David Kuebler, is ardent but tender when he needs to be. All the roles are done with character and obvious enjoyment, including the ensembles and choruses. The orchestra is lively and alert, with Rossini's tuneful invention a constant source of delight. The production is the crowning glory of this performance, with beautiful sets and costumes, all brightly and sympathetically lit; this lesser-known Rossini opera is well worth watching.

The Thieving Magpie (complete; in English)

🔑 Ⓜ  Chan. 3097 (2). Cullagh, Banks, Bickley, White, Smythe, Purves, Geoffrey Mitchell Ch., Philh. O, Parry

David Parry draws sparkling performances from his excellent cast of singers, as well as from the Philharmonia Orchestra. Using a lively translation by Jeremy Sams, the performance makes light of the improbabilities of the plot, which has its unpleasantly dark element when the heroine is threatened with death after being accused of stealing one of her mistress's silver spoons. The culprit is of course the magpie of the opera's title, and all turns out well in the end. The set gains enormously from having been made in the wake of a stage production at Garsington Manor in 2002, also conducted by Parry. As he points out in a note, the full score is unmanageably long, which has entailed some cutting. As Parry claims, the arias that are dramatically less essential tend to be those least interesting musically. As it is, the piece moves swiftly along, with the Irish soprano Majella Cullagh as the heroine, Ninetta, and Christopher Purves as the Mayor, her employer, outstanding both musically and dramatically with cleanly focused singing. It helps no doubt that they both took part in the Garsington production, but the others are first rate too, with the tenor Barry Banks as the hero, Giannetto, Susan Bickley as the Mayor's wife Lucia, Russell Smythe as Ninetta's father and John Graham-Hall as the pedlar, Isacco. Full, well-balanced sound, recorded in the Blackheath Concert Halls.

Guglielmo Tell (complete; CD version in Italian)

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca (ADD) 475 7723 (4). Pavarotti, Freni, Milnes, Ghiaurov, Amb. Op. Ch., Nat. PO, Chailly

This now arrives at last at mid-price as one of Decca's Originals, with Milnes a heroic Tell, and, although Pavarotti has his moments of coarseness, he sings the role of Arnoldo glowingly. Mirella Freni as the heroine, Matilde, provides strength as well as sweetness, and Chailly controls this massive opera puposefully, with the many ensembles particularly impressive, especially when the Decca analogue recording is so fine.

Guillaume Tell (William Tell; in French)

🔑 Ⓜ * EMI (ADD) 7 69951-2 (4). Bacquier, Caballé, Gedda, Mesplé, Amb. Op. Ch., RPO, Gardelli

The interest of the 1973 EMI set is that it is sung in the original French. Gardelli proves an imaginative Rossini interpreter, allying his formidable team to vigorous and sensitive performances. Bacquier makes an impressive Tell, developing the character as the story progresses; Gedda is a model of taste, and Montserrat Caballé copes ravishingly with the coloratura problems of Mathilde's role. While Chailly's full-price Decca set puts forward a strong case for using Italian with its open vowels, this remains a fully worthwhile alternative, with excellent CD sound. Indeed the current remastering is first class in every way and the choral passages, incisively sung, are among the most impressive; moreover the set now comes with full translation.

L'Italiana in Algeri (complete; DVD versions)

🔑 * DG DVD 073 4261. Horne, Montarsolo, Ahlstedt, Merritt, Kesling, Milas, Met. Op. Ch. & O, Levine (V/D: Brian Large)

(*) TDK DVD DVWW-OPITAL. Larmore, Alaimo, Fischer, Trullu, Smith, Ford, Op. Nat. de Paris, Campanella (Dir: Andrei Serban; V/D: André Flédérick)

Marilyn Horne is the great star focus of the 1986 production from the Met. She had a great affinity with the role of Isabella: 'I don't know where she leaves off and I begin: the character comes too easily to me,' she comments. She is predictably brilliant in the coloratura passages, with her commanding presence not getting in the way of a sense of fun. Her lover, Lindoro, is more than capably sung by Douglas Ahlstedt, though his tone is not consistently beautiful (some high-lying passages are a bit strained). Mustafà, sung by the veteran, Paolo Montarsolo, has a bit of wobble in his voice, but he has the relish of an old pro who knows his role inside out. His wife Elvira is charmingly sung by Myra Merritt. All the various comic roles are well done, especially with such seasoned singers as Spiro Milas in the role of Haly, the captain of the Algerian pirates. The production by Jean-Pierre Ponnelle is brightly attractive, and the direction is at the service of the performance. Levine conducts with characteristic energy, though his style is more suited to Verdi than to the charm of Rossini. The bonuses include an interview with Marilyn Horne, talking about Rossini, plus a couple of extra arias from Samson et Dalila and The Ghosts of Versailles.

The TDK version, with its stylized modern production, initially takes a bit of getting used to, especially with the opening chorus of the eunuchs in rather grotesque costumes. However, the production grows on you, and it is not without its clever touches. The performance is excellent from the word go, with Campanella finding Rossini's sparkle more readily than Levine's super-charged Verdi-esque conducting. Bruce Ford is superb in the role of Lindoro, coping with all his vocal fireworks evenly and smoothly. Simone Alaimo as Mustafà offers a lively and stylish reading, working wonderfully well with Ford in the first Act I duet. Jennifer Larmore is a bright and forthright Isabella, singing with remarkable precision and energy. Mustafà's long-suffering wife Elvira, sung by Jeannette Fischer, has bags of character and is very enjoyable to watch; the whole cast works well as a team. Good sound and excellent picture quality.

L'Italiana in Algeri (complete; CD versions)

🔑 * Teldec 0630 17130-2 (2). Larmore, Giménez, Del Carlo, Corbelli, Grand Theatre Ch., Lausanne CO, López-Cobos

🔑 ❁ * DG (ADD) 427 331-2 (2). Baltsa, Raimondi, Dara, Lopardo, V. State Op. Konzertvereinigung, VPO, Abbado

Ⓜ  Erato 2292 45404-2 (2). Horne, Palacio, Ramey, Trimarchi, Battle, Zaccaria, Prague Ch., I Sol. Ven., Scimone

Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 475 8275 (2). Berganza, Alva, Corena, Panerai, Maggio Musicale Fiorentino Ch. & O, Varviso

The Teldec recording offers a near-ideal account, superbly sung, sparklingly conducted and brilliantly recorded. Jennifer Larmore in the title-role is both youthfully seductive and ripely characterful, with her firm, fresh voice beautifully caught, at once easily flexible on top and rich in the chest register. Her big Rondo in Act II is one of the high spots of the set, stylishly ornamented. Raúl Giménez as Lindoro makes a perfect counterpart, establishing his comparable brilliance in his elaborate Act I aria and investing everything he sings with character and a sense of fun, not just singing the notes. He is wonderfully fluent in the brilliant patter duet with Mustafa, Bey of Algiers, characterfully sung by John Del Carlo. Alexander Corbelli too makes the most of the humour in the role of the put-upon servant, Taddeo. In a fascinating appendix, Giménez also sings Lindoro's alternative aria in Act II with its clarinet obbligato. A clear first choice among CD versions.

Abbado's brilliant version was recorded in conjunction with a new staging by the Vienna State Opera, with timing and pointing all geared for wit on stage to make this one of the most captivating of all recordings of the opera. Agnes Baltsa is a real fire-eater in the title-role, and Ruggero Raimondi with his massively sepulchral bass gives weight to his part without undermining the comedy. The American tenor, Frank Lopardo, proves the most stylish Rossinian, singing with heady clarity in superbly articulated divisions, while both buffo baritones are excellent too. This uses the authentic score, published by the Fondazione Rossini in Pesaro.

Scimone's highly enjoyable version is beautifully played and recorded with as stylish a team of soloists as one can expect nowadays. The text is complete and alternative versions of certain arias are given as an appendix. Marilyn Horne makes a dazzling, positive Isabella, and Samuel Ramey is splendidly firm as Mustafa. Domenico Trimarchi is a delightful Taddeo and Ernesto Palacio an agile Lindoro, not coarse, though the recording does not always catch his tenor timbre well. Nevertheless the sound is generally very good indeed.

Under Varviso the opera has Rossinian sparkle in abundance and the music blossoms readily. Teresa Berganza makes an enchanting Italian Girl and the three principal men are all characterful. The recording is vintage Decca, vividly remastered, and adds greatly to the sparkle of the whole proceedings. The reissue includes a libretto with translation, and this makes a fine bargain, even if many will still opt for the later and more complete Scimone version.

The Italian Girl in Algiers (Highlights; in English)

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Chan. 3160. Larmore, Tynan, Miles, Opie, Banks, Philh., Cohen

The Opera in English series promoted by Sir Peter Moores is now offering recordings of generous highlights, such as this selection from Rossini's The Italian Girl in Algiers in a translation by David Parry (who, for once, is not the conductor here, handing over to the capable Brad Cohen). The highlights centre round the outstanding American mezzo, Jennifer Larmore, who gives a wonderful performance, with every note of the elaborate coloratura cleanly in place and with no suspicion of any unwanted aspiration. Her final display aria, backed up by the Geoffrey Mitchell Choir, crowns a superb performance. The rest of the cast is comparably strong, with Alastair Miles an aptly comic Mustafa, capturing the humour as well as singing flawlessly, again with no aspiration on coloratura. Alan Opie is also a masterly comic actor in the role of Taddeo, Isabella's companion, with Barry Banks as Lindoro, Mustafa's favourite slave.

Maometto II (complete)

Ⓑ  Ph. Trio 475 5092-2 (3). Anderson, Zimmermann, Palacio, Ramey, Dale, Amb. Op. Ch., Philh. O, Scimone

Claudio Scimone's account of Maometto II has Samuel Ramey magnificently focusing the whole story in his portrait of the Muslim invader in love with the heroine. The other singing is less sharply characterized but is generally stylish, with Margarita Zimmermann in the travesti role of Calbo and June Anderson singing sweetly as Anna. Laurence Dale is excellent in two smaller roles, while Ernesto Palacio mars some fresh-toned singing with his intrusive aitches. Excellently recorded, this is well worth exploring at bargain price, even though only a synopsis is included.

Matilde de Shabran (complete; CD version)

(*) Decca 475 7688 (3). Massis, Flórez, Halevy, de Simone, Bonfatti, Cucci (fortepiano), Prague Ch., Galicia SO, Frizza

Matilde de Shabran was the penultimate opera that Rossini wrote for Italy, before taking up residence in Paris. It was written for the Roman Carnival of 1821, with some of the numbers provided by Pacini. By the time Rossini had prepared the score for performance in Naples that autumn, he replaced the Pacini items with his own work. The result is a strong, characterful opera, with impressive ensembles, that yet lacks the really striking melodies which make Rossini's masterpieces so memorable. Nevertheless it is most welcome on disc in a lively performance with the masterly Juan Diego Flórez in the principal tenor role of Corradino Cuor de ferro (Ironheart), free and flexible. In the title-role, Annick Massis is less even in her production, but with a strong supporting cast it makes an excellent issue, filling in an important gap in the Rossini repertory.

Mosè in Egitto (complete; CD version)

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Ph. (ADD) 478 0149 (2). Raimondi, Nimsgern, Anderson, Palacio, Gal, Lewis, Fischella, Amb. Op. Ch., Philh. O, Scimone

(BB)  Naxos 8.660220/1. Regazzo, Amou, Gierlach, Bevacqua, Adami, Trucco, San Pietro Conservatory Ch., Wildbad Wind Band, Württemberg PO, Fogliani

Scimone on Philips justifies his claim that the 1819 version is dramatically more effective than either the earlier Italian one or the later Paris one. Rossini's score brings much fine music, and among the soloists Raimondi relishes not only the solemn moments like the great invocation in Act I and the soaring prayer of Act III, but also the rage aria in Act II, almost like Handel updated, if with disconcerting foretastes of Dr Malatesta in Donizetti's Don Pasquale. The writing for the soprano and tenor lovers (the latter the son of Pharaoh and in effect the villain of the piece) is relatively conventional, though the military flavour of their Act I cabaletta is refreshingly different. Ernesto Palacio and June Anderson make a strong pair, and the mezzo, Zehava Gal, is another welcome singer as Pharaoh's wife. Siegmund Nimsgern makes a fine Pharaoh, Salvatore Fischella an adequate Arone (Aaron). The well-balanced recording emerges most vividly.

Antonio Fogliani's new Naxos version, recorded live during the 'Rossini in Wildbad' Festival offers genuine competition to Scimone's fine Philips set. Lorenzo Regazzo's Mosè may not quite match Raimondi's account in richness of sonority, but he rises to his big moments and the closing Prayer sequence is splendidly sung. Akie Amou (as Elcia) also rises to the occasion in her big aria at the end of Act I, and even more so in Porgi la destra amata at the close of Act II. The tenor Filippo Adami is an ardent Osiride, even if sometimes showing strain in his upper range. The rest of the cast are sound, but what make this set so enjoyable is the fine singing of the grouped soloists in the various ensembles and the chorus in the big scenes, which are tinglingly directed by Fogliani. The recording is clear and full-bodied and, as usual with Naxos, the set comes with a good synopsis, and this is well worth its modest cost.

Otello (complete)

🔑  Opera Rara ORC 18 (3). Ford, Futral, Matteuzzi, D'Arcangelo, Lopera, Philh. O, Parry

🔑 Ⓑ  Ph. Duo (ADD) 475 448-2 (2). Carreras, von Stade, Condò, Pastine, Fisichella, Ramey, Amb. S., Philh. O, López-Cobos

Justifiably overshadowed by Verdi's masterpiece, this early opera of Rossini, written in 1816 for Naples, is a piece very much of its time. Rossini is inspired by a serious subject to produce a striking series of arias and ensembles, which culminate in what was then a revolutionary course in Italian opera, a tragic ending. Significantly, later, in 1820 and pressured by the authorities, Rossini provided a happy ending, when Otello is finally convinced of Desdemona's innocence. That alternative close is the first of three important appendices included in this very well-documented Opera Rara set. Where the previous Philips recording, more starrily cast, provided a badly cut text on two CDs merely, this one stretches to three very well-filled discs.

It is a credit to Opera Rara that three formidable Rossini tenors are here involved, not just Bruce Ford in the title role, strong and stylish if a little gritty as recorded, but also Juan José Lopera, impressive as Iago, and, singing even more sweetly, William Matteuzzi as Rodrigo, here given a relatively big role. Elizabeth Futral is a strong, dramatic heroine, rising superbly to the challenge of the final Act, which, coming closer to Shakespeare, brings the most memorable music, including a lovely Willow Song. Enkeljda Shkosa sings most beautifully as Emilia, as she does too in the alternative Malibran version of the Act II duet, in which she sings Otello, transformed into a breeches-role. David Parry excels himself in drawing powerful, sensitive playing from the Philharmonia, dramatically paced, with some outstanding solo work from the wind. Vivid, well-balanced sound.

It is some tribute to the Philips performance, superbly recorded and brightly and stylishly conducted by López-Cobos, that the line-up of tenors is turned into an asset, with three nicely contrasted soloists. Carreras here is at his finest – most affecting in his recitative before the murder, while Fisichella copes splendidly with the high tessitura of Rodrigo's role, and Pastine has a distinct timbre to identify him as the villain. Frederica von Stade pours forth a glorious flow of beautiful tone, well matched by Nucci Condò as Emilia. Samuel Ramey is excellent too in the bass role of Elmiro. It makes an undoubted bargain at its new price; its cost, alas, precluding the possibility of including text and translation.

La scala di seta (complete)

🔑  Claves 50-9219/20. Corbelli, Ringholz, Vargas, De Carolis, Provvisionato, Massa, ECO, Viotti

The Overture is among the best known of all that Rossini wrote, and here Viotti establishes his individuality with an unusually expansive slow introduction leading to a brisk and well-sprung Allegro, scintillatingly played by the ECO. The cast here is strong vocally, with Teresa Ringholz delightful as the heroine, Giulia, warm and agile, shading her voice seductively. She and the buffo, sung by Alessandro Corbelli, have the biggest share of the solo work, and he is also first rate. The tenor Ramon Vargas sings without strain – rare in this series – and the mezzo, Francesca Provvisionato, sings vivaciously as the heroine's cousin, with a little aria in military rhythm a special delight. Warm sound with good bloom on the voices.

Semiramide (complete, but with traditional cuts; DVD version)

🔑 * Arthaus DVD 100 222 (2). Anderson, Horne, Olsen, Ramey, Met. Op. O and Ch., Conlon. (Dir: John Copley; TV Dir: Brian Large.)

Grand opera presented unapologetically on a monumental scale in traditional style typifies this 1990 production of Semiramide at the Met in New York. The casting is very strong, centring as much around the commanding Arsace of Marilyn Horne as the powerful but less characterful June Anderson in the title role, both of them wonderfully agile in coloratura. Yet on DVD, with Brian Large as video director, it is the fine production of John Copley, using very grand sets by John Conklin and sumptuous costumes by Michael Stennett, that stands out. The tenor, Stanford Olsen, is impressive as Idreno, and Samuel Ramey is handsome of voice and presence as Assur, setting the seal on this supremely confident presentation of a difficult opera, purposefully conducted by James Conlon.

Semiramide (complete; CD version)

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca (ADD) 475 7918-2 (3). Sutherland, Horne, Rouleau, Malas, Serge, Amb. Op. Ch., LSO, Bonynge

Rossini concentrates on the love of Queen Semiramide for

Prince Arsace (a mezzo-soprano), and musically the result is a series of fine duets, superbly performed here by Sutherland and Horne (in the mid-1960s when they were both at the top of their form). In Sutherland's interpretation, Semiramide is not so much a Lady Macbeth as a passionate, sympathetic woman and, with dramatic music predominating over languorous cantilena, one has her best, bright manner. Horne is well contrasted, direct and masculine in style, and Spiro Malas makes a firm, clear contribution in a minor role. Rouleau and Serge are variable but more than adequate, and Bonynge keeps the whole opera together with his alert, rhythmic control of tension and pacing. A full libretto is included.

Il Signor Bruschino (complete; CD versions)

🔑 Ⓜ * DG 477 5668. Battle, Ramey, Lopardo, Desderi, Larmore, ECO, Ion Marin

(BB)  Naxos 8.660128. Codeluppi, Leoni, Rossi, Giorgelè, Marani, Giangaspero, Barbolini, Martino, I Virtuosi Italiani, Desderi

You could hardly devise a starrier cast for this 'comic farce in one act' than that assembled by DG, with even the tiny role of the maid, Marianna, taken by Jennifer Lamore. Ion Marin springs rhythms very persuasively, with the first Cavatina of Gaudenzio, the tutor, so delectably pointed in the introduction that one registers the character even before Samuel Ramey enters. Kathleen Battle makes a provocative heroine, and the tenor Frank Lopardo sings sweetly and freshly as Sofia's lover, Florville. He is delightfully agile in the platter duet with Filiberto, the innkeeper, taken by Michele Pertusi. Excellent, well-balanced sound. The single disc come with a particularly well-produced cued synopsis.

As this lively alternative Naxos account demonstrates, vigorously conducted by the former baritone Claudio Desderi, Rossini's style was already fully developed in such characteristic numbers as the patter-duet between the hero, Florville, and the guardian of his beloved, Gaudenzio. The involved plot is typical of the genre, with the Naxos booklet providing a detailed synopsis as well as a full libretto in Italian. The singing is stylish, led by Alessandro Codeluppi as Florville, and with Elena Rossi as the heroine, Sofia, bright and agile if rather unvaried in tone. An outstanding bargain.

Tancredi (complete; DVD version)

🔑 * TDK DVD DVWW OPTANC. Barcellons, Takova, Giménez, Spotti, Maggio Musicale Fiorentino, Frizza (V/D: Andrea Bevilacqua)

Tancredi (1813) was Rossini's first mature opera, and it secured his popularity at home and abroad as the leading composer of Italian opera. Recordings have already revealed it to be a score of some power, but now we have a superb performance on DVD. The cast is terrific, with Raúl Giménez (tenor) coping with Rossini's florid and high flying writing, and Marco Spotti's bass, firm and rich. The women are equally impressive: Darina Takova (soprano) is agile and she gets round her fiendishly difficult writing with aplomb. She is sweetly affecting in her yearning numbers and looks marvellous on the stage. Daniela Barcellons, in the trouser role of Tancredi, is very fine indeed, providing appropriate contrast to Takova. Riccardo Frizza's conducting is ideal and he maintains the forward impulse of the rather complicated story with both musical spontaneity and theatrical drama. One's admiration for this Rossini opera is enhanced too: apart from the impressive arias and duets, the exciting rum-ti-tum choruses and grand finales are irresistible: no wonder he became so popular! The (alas!) sad ending is touchingly and exquisitely done. The production, by Pier Luigi Pizzi, is unfussy and effective, with the greys and blacks of the stylish set sympathetically lit to provide an excellent backdrop to the drama. Simple costumes but, again, very effective. The production works for the opera, the music and the singers. Decent sound. Thoroughly recommended.

Tancredi (complete; CD versions)

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.660037/8. Podles, Jo, Olsen, Spagnoli, Di Micco, Lendi, Capella Brugensis, Brugense Coll. Instrumentale, Zedda

Ⓜ  Warner Fonit (ADD) 5050466-1814-2-8 (3). Cossotto, Cuberli, Hollweg, Ghiuselev, WDR Ch. Cologne, Cappella Coloniensis of WDR, Ferro

Tancredi, which was based on Tasso's epic poem Gerusalemme Liberata and was first heard in 1813, is most widely remembered for its overture, but this excellent Naxos set makes a strong case for the piece. It completely displaces the previous versions from Sony and RCA, and the eminent Rossini scholar and conductor, Alberto Zedda, proves a far more resilient, generally brisker and lighter Rossini interpreter than his predecessors. Sumi Jo is superb as the heroine, Amenaide, in dazzlingly clear coloratura, as well as imaginative pointing of phrase, rhythm and words. The mezzo, Ewa Podles, is less characterful, yet the voice is firm and rich as well as flexible; but it is the tenor, Stanford Olsen, previously heard as Belmonte on John Eliot Gardiner's recording of Entführung, who offers some of the freshest, most stylish and sweetly tuned singing from a Rossini tenor in recent years. The recording is a little lacking in body, but that partly reflects the use of a small orchestra, and the voices come over well. An Italian libretto is provided but no translation. Instead, a helpful synopsis is geared to the different tracks on the discs; had there been a libretto, this could well have received a Rosette.

The (1979) Warner Fonit version is a formidable competitor for the excellent Naxos set, generally using weightier voices and with an excellent orchestra of period instruments, whereas on Naxos there are modern instruments played in period style. Fiorenza Cossotto sings powerfully in the breeches role of Tancredi, and Lella Cuberli, then at her peak, is a most winning Amenaide, full and pure of tone as well as wonderfully agile. Werner Hollweg's headily light tenor is very apt for the role of Argirio, and Nicola Ghiuselev is a weighty Orbazzano. Though not digital, the recording is full and well balanced, with the scholar Gabriele Ferro drawing fresh, stylish playing from his period orchestra. As on Naxos, an Italian libretto is provided but no translation; unlike Naxos, there is no English synopsis. The three-disc format contrasts with the two of Naxos, but that brings only one break in Act II instead of two.

Torvaldo e Dorliska (Dramma semiserio; complete; DVD version)

 Dynamic DVD 33 528 (2). Takova, Pertusi, Meli, Pratico, Fischer, Alberghini, Prague Chamber Ch., Bolzano e Trento Haydn O, Pérez

This rare opera in an excellent live recording from the 2006 Rossini Opera Festival in Pesaro is quite a find. Torvaldo e Dorliska can be placed somewhere between a dramma serioso and the usual opera buffa for which Rossini was celebrated. It has a potentially serious plot, with shades of both Fidelio and Tosca, and the German name for this kind of stage work was Rettungsstück ('Rescue opera'). The tormented villain, the Duke of Ordow, intends to seduce Dorliska, the young wife of the hero, Torvaldo, after having her husband assassinated, while Dorliska, first trusting the Duke, seeks refuge in his castle. However, what makes the piece naturally Rossinian is that the key figure in the plot, the castle warden Giorgio, is a buffo (who sings most resonantly here), helped by his mezzo sister, Carlotta. Rescue in the nick of time comes from the summoned Governor and his armed men who, together with the revolting peasants, make a spectacular closing scene, retrieving Torvaldo from his cage cell and replacing him with the Duke!

Darina Takova and Francesco Meli make an appealing pair of loving spouses, and the villain, Michele Pertusi, is sufficiently grim and sinister to be convincing, even though Giorgio (Bruno Pratico) defies him splendidly in a buffo style which one can't take quite seriously. Excellent singing from all concerned, especially in the lively ensembles, and traditional costumes and sets – rather dark, to make clear this is a serious drama. Victor Pérez directs the music vibrantly and makes the most of the bravura sparkle too, and altogether this is most enjoyable.

Il Turco in Italia (complete; CD versions)

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca 475 8249 (2). Sumi Jo, Alaimo, Fissore, Giménez, Mentzler, Corbelli, Bronder, Amb. Op. Ch., ASMF, Marriner

🔑 * Decca 458 924-2 (2). Bartoli, Corbelli, Pertusi, Vargas, Ch. & O. of La Scala, Milan, Chailly

🔑 ❀ Ⓜ () EMI mono 3 58662-2 (2). Rossi-Lemeni, Callas, Gedda, Stabile, Ch. & O of La Scala, Milan, Gavazzeni

On Decca, Sumi Jo as Fiorilla, the sharp-tongued heroine, unhappily married to old Don Geronio, is no fire-eater, as Callas was in her vintage recording, but she sparkles delightfully, a most believable young wife. What seals the success of the Philips version is the playing of the St Martin's Academy under Sir Neville Marriner, consistently crisp and light, wittily bringing out the light and shade in Rossini's score and offering a full text. The big snag with the old Callas set was that it was severely cut by half an hour and more of music. As for the rest of the Philips cast, Simone Alaimo as the visiting Turkish Prince Selim, may lack sardonic weight, but it is a fine voice; and the buffo role of Geronio finds Enrico Fissore agile and characterful in his patter numbers. Raúl Giménez is the stylish tenor in the relatively small role of Narciso, which happily acquires an extra aria. Altogether most recommendable and welcome back as one of Decca's 'Originals'.

Chailly's Decca version centres round the brilliantly characterful singing of Cecilia Bartoli as a fire-eating Fiorilla. The tessitura is high for a mezzo, but she copes with sparkling confidence. Chailly paces the many ensembles most effectively, with a first-rate team of soloists to back up Bartoli, agile and sparkling.

Callas was at her peak when she recorded this rare Rossini opera in the mid-1950s. As ever, there are lumpy moments vocally, but she gives a sharply characterful performance as the capricious Fiorilla, married to an elderly, jealous husband and bored with it. Nicola Rossi-Lemeni as the Turk of the title is characterful too, but the voice is ill-focused, and it is left to Nicolai Gedda as the young lover and Franco Calabrese as the jealous husband to match Callas in stylishness. It is good too to have the veteran Mariano Stabile singing the role of the poet in search of a plot. Walter Legge's production has plainly added to the sparkle. It is a vintage Callas reissue, her first uniquely cherishable essay in operatic comedy.

Il viaggio a Reims (complete; DVD version)

🔑 * Opus Arte DVD OA 0967 D. Belyaeva, Ouspenki, Shtoda, Tsanga, Mariinsky Theatre Academy, Mariinsky Theatre O, Gergiev (Dir: Alain Maratrat; V/D: Vincent Bataillon)

In a co-production with the Théâtre Châtelet in Paris, the singing team and orchestra from the Mariinsky Theatre in St Petersburg offer a sparkling account of Rossini's festival opera under their director, Valery Gergiev. Originally written for a one-off celebration, Il Viaggio a Reims was almost entirely forgotten until recent years; it proves to be a delight from beginning to end, with a feast of fine numbers. Some of these were quickly used by Rossini in one of his earliest Paris operas, Le Comte Ory, but there is much more besides. Maratrat's production updates the action to the 1930s, with the men in the cast wearing trilbies. That includes Gergiev himself, who conducts his orchestra on stage. With such a well-coordinated team it is hard to pick out individual stars among the young singers, but Vladislav Ouspenski as Baron von Trombonon, Anastasi Belyaeva as Madame Cortese, Daniil Shtoda as Count Libenskof and Edouard Tsanga as Lord Sindey all give memorable performances.

Il viaggio a Reims (complete; CD version)

Ⓝ 🔑 ❀ Ⓜ * DG 477 7435 (2). Ricciarelli, Terrani, Cuberli, Gasdia, Araiza, Giménez, Nucci, Raimondi, Ramey, Dara, Prague Philh. Ch., COE, Abbado

This DG set is one of the most sparkling and totally successful live opera recordings available, with Claudio Abbado in particular freer and more spontaneous-sounding than he generally is on disc, relishing the sparkle of the comedy, and the line-up of soloists here could hardly be more impressive, with no weak link. Apart from the established stars the set introduces two formidable newcomers in principal roles, Cecilia Gasdia as a self-important poetess and, even finer, Lella Cuberli as a young fashion-crazed widow. Abbado's brilliance and sympathy draw the musical threads compellingly together with the help of superb, totally committed playing from the young members of the Chamber Orchestra of Europe.

Zelmira (complete)

(*) Opera Rara ORC 27 (3). Futral, Ford, Custer, Siragusa, Scottish Ch. & CO, Benini

Zelmira was recorded live at a concert performance given at the Edinburgh Festival in 2003. Maurizio Benini directs a lively, well-sprung performance, and the singing is consistently stylish and often brilliant. The wild applause for the astonishing Act I aria of Ilo, Zelmira's returning husband, and of the comparably challenging Act II aria of Zelmira's handmaid, Emma, is well deserved, for Antonino Siragusa as Ilo has both flexibility and an astonishing upper range, and Manuela Custer as Emma has fine vocal control, with crisp ornamentation and flawless trills. So too has the excellent Elizabeth Futral in the title-role, while Bruce Ford as the usurping Antenore, with a baritonal quality in his tenor tone, is well contrasted with the higher, lighter Ilo of Siragusa. The set takes up three discs, but it brings a full text.

COLLECTIONS

Arias from: Armida; L'assedio di Corinto; La donna del lago; Otello; Stabat Mater; Tancredi

🔑 Ⓜ  RCA (ADD) 82876 62309-2 (2). Caballé, RCA Italiana Op. Ch. & O, Cillario – DONIZETTI; VERDI: Arias ***

Originally entitled 'Rossini Rarities', much of the music here, taken from a 1967 LP, is not over-familiar even today. It does, however, show Caballé displaying some of her finest qualities; indeed, there is tonal beauty and brilliance in equal measure. If the Italian orchestra is not the most refined in the world, Cillario achieves lively results, and the sound is suitably theatrical. The recording has transferred well to CD – full and vivid – and texts and translations are included.

'Rossini Gala', arias from: Armida; Aureliano in Palmira; Bianca e Falliero; Elisabetta, Regina d'Inghilterra; Mosè in Egitto; Semiramide; Vallace; Zelmira

🔑  Opera Rara ORR 211. Miricioiu, Ford, Magee, Banks, ASMF, Parry

Nelly Miricioiu, Romanian-born and British-based, is a soprano who deserves to be recorded far more. This wide-ranging, imaginatively devised recital of rare Rossini arias admirably fills a gap with Miricioiu strongly supported by a range of singers, including the Rossini tenors Bruce Ford and Barry Banks. Miricioiu's is a warm, characterful voice, which she uses with a fine feeling for dramatic point, bringing to life even the most conventional of operatic numbers. She also has the merit, very necessary in Rossini, of coloratura flexibility, which she relishes brilliantly in the cabalettas to arias. Strong support from David Parry and the Academy, with full, brilliant recording.

'Serious Rossini', excerpts from: Armida; Mosé in Egitto; Otello; Ricciardo e Zoraide; Ugo Re d'Italia

🔑  Opera Rara ORR 218 Ford, Miricioiu, Matteuzzi, Kelly, Soloists, Geoffrey Mitchell Ch., Phil. O or ASMF, Parry

Here is a further glorious recital of Rossini excerpts, this time centring on the excellent tenor Bruce Ford, but including many memorable ensemble items. All are vividly projected by this outstanding cast of singers. Highlights include the duet of Agorante and Ricciardo (William Matteuzzi) in Ricciardo e Zoraide, and the quintet from the finale of Act I. The trio In quale aspetto imbello (from Armida) and the quartet Mi manca la voce (from Mosè in Egitto) also stand out, as does the supremely dramatic finale of Otello, where Bruce Ford is powerfully partnered by Nelly Miricioiu. David Parry keeps the tension high and the chorus and orchestra give admirable support. The recording is splendidly vivid.

Arias from: Il barbiere di Siviglia; La Cenerentola; La donna del lago; La gazza ladra; L'Italiana in Algeri; Otello; Semiramide; Zelmira

 Decca 470 024-2. Flórez, Verdi O Sinfonica di Milano, Chailly

Even in a generation that has thrown up some remarkable Rossini tenors, the Peruvian, Juan Diego Flórez, stands out with his clean-cut, wonderfully flexible voice, with not a suspicion of an intrusive aitch in the extraordinarily elaborate divisions of these challenging arias and with top Cs thrown off with consistent ease. The authority is never in doubt, and it is good to have such brilliant performances mainly of little-known arias, yet one hopes that Flórez will develop a gentler touch in hushed passages, with half-tones and a diamond bright timbre regularly dominating. Yet there are few recent discs of Rossini's tenor arias that begin to match this in excitement, with Chailly and the Milan Orchestra the most understanding partners. Full, clear sound.

Arias from: Il barbiere di Siviglia; La Cenerentola; La donna del lago; L'Italiana in Algeri; Maometto II; Semiramide; Tancredi

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.553543. Podles, Hungarian State Op. Ch. & O, Morandi

The Hungarian mezzo, Ewa Podles, earlier the star singer in the complete set of Rossini's Tancredi on Naxos, is here even more impressive in one of the finest Rossini recitals in years. Hers is a rich and even voice which is not only weighty throughout its range but is also extraordinarily agile, dazzling in the elaborate divisions in all these coloratura numbers. She may find it hard to convey the fun and sparkle in Rossini, but the bright-eyed intensity provides fair compensation even with Cinderella or Rosina, and the cabaletta of Cinderella's final aria is breathtaking in its bravura at a formidably fast tempo. By contrast, this great voice is an ideal vehicle for the opera seria arias here, with the male characters very well characterized. First-rate accompaniment too.

Arias: La Cenerentola: Non più mesta; La donna del lago: Mura felici ... Elena! O tu, che chiamo; L'Italiana in Algeri: Cruda sorte! Amor tiranno! Pronti abbiamo ... Pensa all patria. Otello: Deh! calma, o ciel; La Pietra del Paragone: Se l'Italie contrade ... Se per voi lo care io torno; Tancredi: Di tanti palpiti; Stabat Mater: Fac ut portem

🔑  Decca 425 430-2. Bartoli, A. Schoenberg Ch., V. Volksoper O, Patanè

Cecilia Bartoli's first recital of Rossini showpieces brings a formidable demonstration not only of Bartoli's remarkable voice but of her personality and artistry, bringing natural warmth and imagination to each item without ever quite making you smile with delight. Yet there are not many Rossini recitals of any vintage to match this. Vocally, the one controversial point to note is the way that Bartoli articulates her coloratura with a half-aspirate, closer to the Supervia 'rattle' than anything else, but rather obtrusive. Accompaniments are exemplary, and Decca provided the luxury of a chorus in some of the items, with hints of staging. Full, vivid recording. Recommended.

'Rossini Heroines', arias from: La donna del lago; Elisabetta, Regina d'Inghilterra; Maometto II; Le nozze di Teti e Peleo; Semiramide; Zelmira

🔑  Decca 436 075-2. Bartoli, Ch. & O of Teatro la Fenice, Marin

Cecilia Bartoli follows up the success of her earlier Rossini recital-disc with this second brilliant collection of arias, mostly rarities. The tangy, distinctive timbre of her mezzo goes with a magnetic projection of personality to bring to life even formal passage-work, with all the elaborate coloratura bright and sparkling. The rarest item of all is an aria for the goddess Ceres from the classically based entertainment, Le nozze di Teti e Peleo, making a splendid showpiece. The collection is crowned by a formidably high-powered reading of Bel raggio from Semiramide, with Bartoli excitingly braving every danger.

ROTA, Nino (1911–79)

(i) Castel del Monte (ballad for horn & orchestra); (ii) Bassoon Concerto; (iii) Harp Concerto; (iv) Trombone Concerto

🔑 * Chan. 9954 (i) Corti; (ii) Carlini; (iii) Prandina; (iv) A. Conti; I Virtuosi Italiani, M. Conti

This is a delightful disc in every way, a collection of three concertos and one concertante work for horn demonstrating the unforced mastery of Rota, a composer remembered almost entirely for his film scores. Both in the Harp Concerto of 1947 and the three other works from much later in his career the outer movements regularly display a sparkle more often associated with French composers of the inter-war period, with chattering ostinato rhythms supporting jaunty melodies, and slow movements striking deeper, darker moods. In each Rota gives important solos to rival instruments, varying textures. This is fun music in the best sense, regularly concealing the ingenuity of the writing in the overall light-heartedness. The Trombone Concerto – the only one of the four works to have been recorded before – has exuberant outer movements framing a much longer Lento movement with a powerful climax. The Bassoon Concerto is the most original in structure, while the Ballad for Horn and Orchestra, Castel del Monte (a title taken from a medieval castle built by the Emperor Frederick II) builds up passionately over sharply contrasted sections. With brilliant playing from all the Italian soloists as well as the orchestra this is a celebratory disc to parade the gifts of a long-neglected but warmly approachable composer, helped by full, well-balanced sound.

ROUSE, Christopher (born 1949)

(i) Clarinet Concerto. Iscariot (for Chamber Orchestra); Symphony 1

Ⓝ  BISCD 1386. (i) Fröst; R. Stockholm PO, Gilbert

Christopher Rouse made his name by writing successful concertos for flute and clarinet. Alas, the Clarinet Concerto, brilliantly played by Martin Fröst, is less memorable, except as a non-friendly experience. Almost incredibly fragmented, with its composition accompanied by the composer's dice throwing to determine the music's course, it is not a work to endear itself to the lover of an instrument which Mozart made his own. Iscariot, inspired by the Bible betrayer, promises more, opening (and closing) with a bang, followed by drenchingly intense writing for strings, then delicate scoring for celesta and ruminative writing for woodwind. The climax brings a cacophonous percussion break, no doubt symbolizing the treachery, but there is a positive ending based on the chorale Es ist genug. The First Symphony also has a 'programme', only heroic in the sense that its struggle against adversity would inevitably end in failure and oblivion. The composer draws on a theme from the Adagio of Bruckner's Seventh Symphony played by the deep brass, which is much corrupted in the course of the work's single slow movement, while the hero's defeat is represented by a triple-note rhythmic ostinato. The work ends in elegiac darkness. It is rather remarkable and very atmospheric, and both here and in Iscariot the conductor and his orchestra sustain the pianissimo tension of the string playing with remarkable concentration. Fine, truthful, atmospheric BIS recording.

(i) Flute Concerto; Phaeton; Symphony 2

🔑 * Telarc CD 80452. (i) Wincenc; Houston SO, Eschenbach

The remarkable five-movement Flute Concerto, commissioned by the present soloist, followed two years after Rouse's Trombone Concerto. The beautiful first and last movements, with their serene, soaring solo line, are connected thematically, and share the Gaelic title Anhran ('Song'). They frame two faster, much more dissonant and rhythmically unpredictable movements. The kernel of the work is the gripping central Elegia, written in response to the terrible murder of the two-year-old James Bulger by two ten-year-old schoolboys. Rouse introduces a rich, Bach-like chorale, which moves with a wake-like solemnity towards a central explosion of passionate despair. Throughout, the solo writing demands great bravura and intense emotional commitment from the flautist, which is certainly forthcoming here.

The Second Symphony is a three-part structure, with the outer movements again using identical material to frame the anguished central slow movement. In the composer's words that forms a 'prism' through which the mercurial opening material is 'refracted' to yield the angry, tempestuous finale. The desperately grieving Adagio is another threnody for a personal friend and colleague, Stephen Albert, killed in a car accident in 1992. Phaeton is a savage, explosive early work (1986), which could hardly be more different from the tone poem of Saint-Saëns. Helios's sun chariot, immediately out of his son's control, charges its way across the heavens with horns roistering, and is very quickly blown out of the sky by Zeus's thunderbolt. Performances here are excellent, very well played and recorded, and the Flute Concerto is unforgettable.

(i) Violin Concerto; (ii) Der Gerettete Alberich (Fantasy for Solo Percussion and Orchestra); Rapture

(*) Ondine ODE 1016-2. (i) Lin; (ii) Glennie; Helsinki PO, Segerstam

If not offering the visual spectacle of James MacMillan's Veni, veni, Emmanuel, and not to be taken too seriously, Rouse eagerly laminates Glennie's virtuosity into a spectacular biographical backcloth, with Alberich portrayed as a tragic figure in the central 'tableau' and a frenzied finale suggesting his physical and mental collapse, which unleashes a wild virtuoso percussion cadenza-break. Rapture begins in a glow of pastoral euphoria, but the mood becomes increasingly ecstatic, with a gradual increase of tempo used to create another big climax. Rouse's ambitious Violin Concerto, which comes last on the disc, then immediately confronts the listener with the diminutive solo voice of the violin singing a gentle barcarolle, but soon enveloped in a hugely dramatic, very loud, percussion-laced orchestral tutti. This contrast is the more disconcerting as Cho-Liang Lin's solo timbre as recorded here is so small, though his playing is tonally exquisite. The Toccata second movement is a Rondo demanding great solo bravura (and orchestral virtuosity too). Here the scoring is more economical, but the orchestral outbursts, boldly rhythmic, regularly return and, after a brief return to the elegiac mood of the barcarolle, it is the orchestra which has the last word. The performances are obviously expert and powerfully dedicated, and the recording is wide-ranging and spacious, but this is not a collection for aural fainthearts.

ROUSSEAU, Jean-Jacques (1712–78)

Le Devin du village (complete)

🔑 Ⓑ  EMI 5 75266-2 (2). Micheau, Gedda, Roux, Ch. Raymond St-Paul, Louis de Froment CO, Froment – GRÍTRY: Richard Coeur-de-Lion **(*)

The one-act Intermezzo, Le Devin du village (The Village Soothsayer), is Rousseau's most celebrated musical work, written in 1752, an unpretentious piece in what he conceived as the Italian style of the day, which he vigorously supported against the French, even though he here uses a French text. Starting with an overture in the Italian style, fast-slow-fast, it is charming in a plain and straightforward style, hardly original, and the baldness of the writing is rather underlined in this performance with continuo in bare chords. The 25 sections, mostly very short indeed, last well under an hour, offering a simple story of the soothsayer reconciling the estranged lovers, for a price. All three soloists are first rate, with Micheau at her most seductive, and the young Gedda heady-toned. This now returns to the EMI label coupled with Grétry but with no texts provided.

ROUSSEL, Albert (1869–1937)

Aeneas; Bacchus et Ariane, Op. 43: Suites 1 & 2

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * Erato (ADD) 2564 60576-2. ORTF Nat. O, Martinon

Erato have at long last released Martinon's classic 1969 version of Bacchus et Ariane (1930) on CD. It's a thrilling performance, and comparing it to Dutoit's version on the same label, one finds the latter sounding tame by comparison. Martinon's energy and drive do not smudge the Roussel dense orchestration, and there is both inner life and outer drive here, and the quiet passages are held with both tension and atmosphere. Splendid remastered sound, too, much better than it ever was on LP. The coupling of Aeneas – a much rarer work – is equally compelling and undeniably powerful. It is full of Roussel's characteristic rich textures and orchestrations, with the chorus playing an important role. There is no lack of vigorous imagination, both rhythmically and harmonically, during its 40 minutes, ending with a triumphant hymn 'to his glory and the glory of Rome'. The only reservation is that Aeneas has only one cue.

Bacchus et Ariane (ballet; complete), Op. 43; Le Festin de l'araignée (The Spider's Feast), Op. 17

🔑 ✿ * Chan. 9494. BBC PO, Tortelier

Tortelier offers the best Bacchus et Ariane yet – and what a marvellously inventive and resourceful score it is. The BBC Philharmonic play with tremendous zest and give a sensitive and atmospheric account of Le Festin de l'araignée. They offer us the complete banquet, not just the chosen dishes on the set menu! Splendid recording and performances of rewarding and colourful music that deserve to be more widely heard.

(i) Bacchus et Ariane (ballet; complete); Le Festin de l'araignée, Op. 17; (ii) Sinfonietta; Symphonies: (iii) 2; (ii) 3–4

(BB)  EMI Gemini (DDD/ADD) 3714872 (2). (i) O Nat. de Fr., Prêtre; (ii) Paris Conservatoire O, Cluytens; (iii) Colonne O, Dervaux

The exhilarating 1931 score for Bacchus et Ariane teems with life and is full of rhythmic vitality, even if it has perhaps less poetic feeling than Le Festin de l'araignée. Prêtre obtains an excellent response from the Orchestre National de France in both scores and, while the recording is a shade too reverberant at times, no detail is masked. The performances of the symphonies are slightly more uneven. 2 is given a persuasive enough performance by the Colonne Orchestra under Pierre Dervaux, but Cluytens has a splendid grasp of the energy and character of 3 and 4. They are recorded in too reverberant an acoustic, but detail again emerges clearly.

Le Festin de l'araignée (The Spider's Feast), Op. 17

🔑  Testament (ADD) SBT 1238. Paris Conservatoire O, Cluytens – BIZET: La Jolie Fille de Perth; RAVEL: Daphnis, etc. **(*)

Cluytens's 1963 recording of Le Festin de l'araignée remains in a class of its own: it has never been surpassed. There is tremendous atmosphere and delicacy of feeling. The recording was made in the rather reverberant Salle Wagram, but every strand is beautifully transparent and the orchestral texture expertly balanced with a lifelike perspective. This magical score strikes a strong spell, and this is one of Cluytens's finest recordings.

Suite in F, Op. 33

Ⓜ  Mercury (ADD) 434 303-2. Detroit SO, Paray – CHABRIER: Bourée fantasque, etc. ***

The Mercury recording dates from 1957. With Paray on top form, the music generates plenty of adrenalin, with the closing Gigue especially lively and exciting. The new transfer brings the benefit of greater warmth, and undoubtedly the sound overall is enhanced.

Symphonies 1 (Le Poème de la forêt); 4, Op. 35

(*) Ondine ODE 1092-2. O de Paris, Eschenbach

Christoph Eschenbach's CD is extremely well played and recorded. But there is just a hint of the earth-bound about the works. Other accounts have greater lightness and animation, as well as sheer excitement in the vigorous passages (especially in the marvellous Fourth Symphony). The notes are all here, but not quite all the spirit.

Symphony 2 in B flat, Op. 23; Le Festin de l'araignée, Op. 17

🔑 Ⓜ  Erato (ADD) 2564 60577-2. ORTF Nat. O, Martinon

Martinon fully captures the brooding atmosphere of the slow sections of Roussel's Second Symphony, and from the opening bars the listener's attention is caught. This is one of the finest accounts available, with the richness of the score fully realized and an inner vitality ensuring total conviction. The lighter score to the magical Le Festin de l'araignée provides the perfect contrast, and it receives a similarly superb performance, with all the subtleties and nuances vividly caught. The remastered sound is very good for its date (1969).

Symphony 2 in B flat, Op. 23; Bacchus et Ariane: Suites 1 & 2, Op. 43

 Ondine ODE1065-2. O de Paris, Eschenbach

Christoph Eschenbach's new record with the Orchestre de Paris is another welcome addition to the Roussel discography and, in addition to the symphony, also brings well-prepared and vital accounts of the Bacchus et Ariane ballet. Not only does Eschenbach show obvious sympathy with this repertoire, but he gets absolutely first-class recorded sound, too. The Second Symphony is a powerful score and we must hope that this recording will make many new friends for it.

Symphony 2; Pour une fête de printemps; Suite in F

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.570529. RSNO, Denève

Stéphane Denève, Music Director of the Royal Scottish National Orchestra, draws strong contrasts between the three movements, returning at the end to the introspective mood of the beginning. The plaintive feeling of the opening of the similarly arch-structured Pour une fête de printemps is well caught, and the work's climax makes a pungent centrepiece before once again the composer returns to more peaceful nostalgia. The Suite is much more extrovert, its opening rumbustious, the central Sarabande bitter-sweet, and final Gigue again pungently boisterous. The RSNO play as if they have really lived with these scores, and the Naxos recording is excellent. A good disc for those new to the composer to find their way into his plangent harmonic world.

Symphony 3 in G min., Op. 42; Bacchus et Ariane (ballet; complete)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.570245. RSNO, Denève

Stéphane Denève's performances are lively and invigorating, with all the sensuous elements brought out fully in the ballet as well as its rhythmic drive. The dense textures of Roussel's scores can be tricky to capture on CD, but the recordings offers excellent detail within a warm and nicely reverberant acoustic. Listening again to the masterful Third Symphony, one wonders why it is so scandalously neglected in the concert hall.

Symphony 3, Op. 42; Le Festin de l'araignée (ballet; complete), Op. 17

Ⓝ  Ondine ODE 1107-2. O de Paris, Eschenbach

What Christoph Eschenbach's performances lack in sheer guts, they make up for in meticulous attention to detail, first-class orchestral playing and superb modern sound, pinpointing the strands in Roussel's often thick textures. The Third Symphony is a powerful, exciting work, and this performance has its full measure. Le Festin de l'araignée is beautifully performed, and its leisurely tempi give it an especially haunting beauty.

Symphonies 3 in G min.; 4 in A

Ⓜ (*) Warner Elatus 0927 46730-2. LOP, Munch

Another Erato disc from the LP era that makes a most welcome return to the catalogue, here on CD for the first time. Munch's coupling with the Lamoureux Orchestra dates from 1965 and had the benefit of infinitely better orchestral playing and greater commitment than its earlier Decca rival (Ansermet and the SRO, made in the earliest days of stereo). These are invigorating performances, well worth the money, and although the recording is not as rich or as refined as the finest modern discs, it is perfectly acceptable at mid-price.

Symphonies 3; 4 in A, Op. 53; Bacchus et Ariane: Suite 2; Sinfonietta for String Orchestra, Op. 52

Ⓜ (*) Chan. 10217X. Detroit SO, Järvi

Neeme Järvi's account of the Third Symphony has an engaging vitality and character, and the playing of the Detroit Orchestra is highly responsive. In the slow movement he indulges in a rather steep accelerando after the fugal section. Likewise his finale feels too fast. But it is a committed performance. Some may find the acoustic a shade too resonant, but the overall balance is very natural and pleasing and this is certainly very recommendable, given the superior sound and Järvi's obvious enthusiasm for this repertoire.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Le Marchand de sable qui passe (Incidental music): Suite, Op. 13; Divertissement for Piano Quintet, Op. 6; Sérénade for Flute, Harp, & String Trio; Trio for Flute, Viola & Cello, Op. 40; Impromptu for Harp, Op. 21; Duo for Bassoon & Double-Bass

🔑 ✿ * Praga PRD 350018. Czech Nonet, with Englichová (harp), Wiesner (piano)

This is an enchanting disc, revealing another side to Roussel in the elegance and refinement of his writing for small instrumental groups. The incidental music for Le Marchand de sable qui passe, scored for string quintet, harp, flute, clarinet and horn, is hauntingly atmospheric, recalling Ravel's Introduction and allegro. Although the textures and colouring are quite individual, the ethereal melody of the Scène finale has a magic comparable with the closing scene of Ravel's Ma Mère l'Oye. The piquant Sérénade and Flute Trio are hardly less delicate in feeling; both have subtly restless slow movements, the latter closing with whimsically capricious high spirits. The Duo for Bassoon and Double-Bass (written for Serge Koussevitzky) brings an interlude of bucolic humour, and the miniature Divertissement for piano quintet is also capriciously light-hearted and worthy of Jean Françaix, although still Rousselian. The performances have an Elysian charm and sophistication of feeling and are beautifully recorded.

ROUTH, Francis (born 1927)

Clarinet Quintet

 Redcliffe RR 010. Redcliffe Ens. – BLISS: Clarinet Quintet; RAWSTHORNE: Clarinet Quartet ***

Routh's Quintet was written for Nicholas Cox, who plays it with great skill and understanding. Its variety of mood makes up for the melodic fragmentation, and its invention is lively throughout. Excellent recording.

ROWLEY, Alec (1892–1958)

Piano Concerto in D, Op. 49 (for strings & percussion)

(BB)  Naxos 8.557290. Donohoe, Northern Sinfonia – DARNTON; GERHARD; FERGUSON: Piano Concertos ***

Alec Rowley, best known for his educational music, also wrote more ambitious works, including this miniature Concerto for Piano, Strings and Optional Percussion. The writing is fluent and attractive, with sharp harmonies and cluster chords and a fanfare motif in the first movement, leading to open-air freshness in the slow movement and a jocular, easy-going finale. The addition of percussion adds piquancy to the writing. A welcome and rare addition to Peter Donohoe's imaginatively conceived collection of British piano concertos, brilliantly played and recorded.

ROYER, Joseph-Nicolas-Pancrace (c. 1705–55)

Pièces de clavecin

🔑 Ⓑ  HM Musique d'abord HMA 1951037. Christie (harpsichord)

Royer's Pièces de clavecin, his only collection to appear in print, had their origins in his stage works but, unlike Rameau, who transcribed instrumental pieces for the keyboard, Royer drew on arias and choral pieces as well. William Christie's Harmonia Mundi recording, made in the 1980s, is very fine and, at bargain price, deserves an enthusiastic recommendation.

RÓZSA, Miklós (1907–94)

(i) Cello Concerto, Op. 32; (ii) Violin Concerto, Op. 24; (i; ii) Theme & Variations for Violin, Cello & Orchestra, Op. 29a

🔑  Telarc CD 80518. Atlanta SO, Levi; with (i) Harrell; (ii) McDuffie

These are splendid new recordings of Rózsa's highly romantic Violin and Cello Concertos, plus an enjoyable set of Variations in which both soloists join. The performances are superb and the recording is warm and detailed. Recommendable in every way.

Film scores: (i) Ben Hur; (ii) Quo Vadis (extended excerpts)

🔑 Ⓜ  Dutton (ADD) CDLK 4332 (2). (i) Nat. PO; (ii) RPO; composer

Rósza's scores for both Ben Hur and Quo Vadis are a potent mixture of orchestral spectacle and choral kitsch. In Ben Hur there is an appealing lyrical theme for the love story, an exciting sequence for the galley slaves rowing into battle, and a stirring Parade for the famous chariot race. Towards the end, the religiosity, with its lavish panoply of chorus and orchestra, overwhelms the listener in an ocean of sumptuous vulgarity. Quo Vadis is no less full-blooded in its go-for-it, pumped-up exotica, and again the dramatic sequences are tempered by more gentle passages, such as the attractive Marcus and Lygia music. Both these scores were recorded by Decca in the late 1970s and the multi-channelled Phase Four recording techniques work well with this music. The British orchestras play with total enthusiasm and these outrageous scores emerge freshly in Dutton's new transfer.

Hungarian Serenade; 3 Hungarian Sketches; Overture to a Symphony Concert; Tripartita

Ⓝ * Chan. 10488. BBC PO, Gamba

Rózsa wrote a substantial amount of orchestral music, most of which is unrelated to his film scores. His style remained as appealing in his orchestral writing, however, and this disc begins appropriately with his entertaining Overture to a Symphony Concert. It is an imaginative, optimistic piece, with the composer's Hungarian roots emerging in this work conceived during the hopeful days of the abortive 1956 Hungarian revolution, when the composer was living in exile. The Hungarian Serenade is a delightfully tuneful and light work, piquant in its orchestral and harmonic colourings. Tripartita shows the composer experimenting with a more gritty style in 1971/2, with its finale reminiscent of Walton; it is nevertheless exciting and accessible music. The earlier 3 Hungarian Sketches comprise three descriptive movements which are vibrant with local colour and melody. Rumon Gamba and the BBC Philharmonic play all this music with brilliance and the Chandos sound is quite superlative.

(i) String Quartets 1, Op. 22; 2, Op. 38; (ii) Sonata for 2 Violins, Op. 15a

 ASV CDDCA 1105. (i) Flesch Qt; (ii) Ibbotson, Gibbs

The First String Quartet was written in the late 1940s and revised and shortened in 1950. It is dedicated to Peter Ustinov, who was playing Nero in the film Quo Vadis for which Rósza composed the score. It is a rewarding score, finely wrought and civilized, which improves as you get to know it better. There are reminders of Rózsa's kinship with Bartók and with Debussy in the slow movement. The Second Quartet is much later, completed in 1981, again the product of a cultured musical mind. Perhaps not as distinctively individual as, say, the Kodály Second Quartet but again eminently well worth getting to know. The Sonata for Two Violins is an early piece from 1933, which Rósza overhauled in 1973 and which the leader and violist of the Flesch play with spirit. Altogether an interesting and worthwhile issue, very well played and well if perhaps forwardly recorded.

RUBBRA, Edmund (1901–86)

(i) Viola Concerto, Op 75; Meditations on a Byzantine Hymn

 Hyp. CDA 67587. Power; (i) with BBC Scottish SO, Volkov – WALTON: Viola Concerto ***

The two Rubbra items make an unusual but attractive coupling for the Walton. The Viola Concerto was commissioned by William Primrose. Though the melodic material cannot compare with Walton's in memorability, it suits the ideas, with a similar reliance on warm lyricism. Lawrence Power again gives a magisterial performance which has both eloquence and virtuosity, again brilliantly supported by Ilan Volkov and the BBC Scottish Orchestra. The Meditations on a Byzantine Hymn, here given its first recording in the version for unaccompanied viola solo, make an apt extra, particularly when the finale of the Concerto is similarly based on Rubbra's distinctive brand of sectional writing which he dubbed 'Meditations'. In this, related sections merge and match but do not actually quote one another.

(i) Violin Concerto, Op. 103; Improvisation for Violin & Orchestra, Op. 89; Improvisations on virginal pieces by Giles Farnaby, Op. 50

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.557591. (i) Osostowicz; Ulster O, Yuasa

The Improvisation for Violin and Orchestra (1956), commissioned by the Louisville Orchestra, no doubt stimulated Rubbra's interest in the idea of a full-blown concerto. It unfolds with a seeming inevitability and naturalness and, above all, an eloquence which speaks directly to the listener. Krysia Osostowicz and the Ulster Orchestra really get to its heart. Her noble account of the Violin Concerto is hardly less persuasive. And the satisfaction this concerto gives resides primarily in the subtlety with which its lines evolve and grow. Osostowicz engages with the score at the deepest level. Some music lovers are worried by Rubbra's opaque orchestral textures, but in Takuo Yuasa's hands they are sensitively laid out and the reading finely paced. The Farnaby Improvisations, at one time a regular feature of BBC programmes, has never sounded better. As always with Rubbra, there is little surface glamour but great musical substance.

(i) Sinfonia concertante, Op. 38; A Tribute, Op. 56; (ii) The Morning Watch; (iii) Ode to the Queen, Op. 55

🔑 * Chan. 9966. BBC Nat. O of Wales, Hickox; with (i) Shelley; (ii) BBC Nat. Ch. of Wales; (iii) Bickley

The form in which we know the Sinfonia concertante is the revision Rubbra made in the 1940s. Its beautiful opening almost anticipates the Piano Concerto in G major, but it is the searching and thoughtful finale, a prelude and fugue, which makes the strongest impression. Howard Shelley is a superb advocate and it is difficult to imagine a better performance. The Morning Watch is Rubbra at his most inspired. The text comes from the seventeenth-century metaphysical poet Henry Vaughan, and the music matches its profundity and eloquence.

The Tribute is to Vaughan Williams, and the Ode to the Queen was commissioned by the BBC to celebrate the Coronation of the present Queen and is Rubbra's only song-cycle with full orchestra.

Symphonies 1–8 (Hommage à Teilhard de Chardin); (i) 9 (Sinfonia Sacra); 10–11

🔑 * Chan. 9944 (5). BBC Nat. O of Wales, Hickox; (i) with Dawson, D. Jones, Roberts, BBC Nat. Ch. of Wales

As can be seen, Chandos have collected all 11 Rubbra Symphonies in a box of five CDs offered for the price of four, which can be strongly recommended to those collectors who have not already begun investing in the individual records.

Symphony 1, Op. 44; (i) Sinfonia concertante for Piano & Orchestra, Op. 38; A Tribute, Op. 56

 Chan. 9538. BBC Nat. O of Wales, Hickox; (i) with Shelley

The first movement of the symphony is fiercely turbulent; a French dance tune, a Perigourdine, forms the basis of the middle movement, but the pensive, inward-looking finale, which is as long as the first two movements put together, is the most powerful and haunting of the three. The Sinfonia concertante is no less symphonic in character and substance. The opening Fantasia begins with a reflective Lento passage which anticipates the tranquillity of the G major Piano Concerto, though it is the final Prelude and Fugue, composed in memory of his teacher, Gustav Holst, which lingers longest in the memory. Howard Shelley is an inspired soloist and the sometimes thick textures of the symphony sound remarkably lucid in Richard Hickox's hands. The BBC National Orchestra of Wales play splendidly and the Chandos sound is in the best traditions of the house.

Symphonies 2 in D, Op. 45; 6, Op. 80

 Chan. 9481. BBC Nat. O of Wales, Hickox

Richard Hickox and his fine players do make the score of the Second Symphony more lucid than Handley's Lyrita recording from the 1970s. The performance is meticulously prepared and yet flows effortlessly, and the slow movement speaks with great eloquence. The heart of the Sixth Symphony is the serene Canto movement which is not dissimilar in character to the Missa in honorem Sancti Dominici. It is arguably the finest of the cycle after 9, and Hickox and his fine players do it proud. So, too, do the Chandos engineers.

Symphonies (i) 2 in D, Op. 45; (ii) 7 in C, Op. 88; (i) Festival Overture, Op. 62

 Lyrita SRCD 235. (i) New Philh. O, Handley; (ii) LPO, Boult

Good performances from Handley of both the symphony and the overture, which bears an adjacent opus number to the Fifth. The Seventh Symphony is also a very considerable piece. The first movement brings a cogent argument based on a simple four-note motif, and the second a rhythmic Scherzo that leads to a more lyrical, noble climax. Boult's performance is outstandingly successful and the 1970 recording, like that of the Second (made eight years later), is up to the high standards of realism one expects from this label. A thoroughly worthwhile and generous coupling (78 minutes).

Symphonies 3, Op. 49; 4, Op. 53; Resurgam Overture, Op. 149; A Tribute, Op. 56

 Lyrita SRCD 202. Philh. O, Del Mar

The opening of the Fourth Symphony is of quite exceptional beauty and has a serenity and quietude; there is a consistent elevation of feeling and continuity of musical thought. Rubbra's music is steeped in English polyphony and it could not come from any time other than our own. Unquestionably both symphonies have a nobility and spirituality that is rare in any age. The fine Resurgam Overture is a late work.

Symphonies 3; 7 in C, Op. 88

🔑 ✿ * Chan. 9634. BBC Nat. O of Wales, Hickox

The Third Symphony (1939) has a pastoral character and a certain Sibelian feel to it (woodwind in thirds), though Rubbra is always himself. In the final movement there is even a hint of Elgar in the fourth variation. Hickox's is a more eloquent and ultimately more convincing account than the older Philharmonia version under Norman Del Mar on Lyrita.

The Seventh Symphony (1956) receives a performance of real power from Hickox and his Welsh orchestra. This is music that speaks of deep and serious things and its opening paragraphs are among the most inspired that Rubbra ever penned. Noble performances and excellent recorded sound.

Symphonies 4; 10 (Sinfonia da camera), Op. 145; 11, Op. 153

 Chan. 9401. BBC Nat. O of Wales, Hickox

Richard Hickox offers a particularly imaginative account of the Eleventh Symphony in one movement (1979). Like so much of Rubbra's music, it has an organic continuity and inner logic that are immediately striking, and in common with the Tenth Symphony, also in one movement, its textures are spare and limpid. Hickox's account of the Fourth Symphony is totally convincing. The Chandos recording is excellent in every respect, with plenty of warmth and transparency of detail.

Symphony 5 in B flat, Op. 63

Ⓜ (*) Chan. 6576. Melbourne SO, Schönzeler – BLISS: Checkmate ; TIPPETT: Little Music **(*)

Symphonies 5; 8 (Hommage à Teilhard de Chardin), Op. 132; (i) Ode to the Queen, Op. 83

🔑  Chan. 9714. BBC Nat. O of Wales, Hickox; (i) with Bickley

Richard Hickox's reading of the Fifth Symphony is easily the finest and most penetrating; the slow movement has depth and, thanks to a magnificent recording, a greater clarity than either of its predecessors. Tempi are unerringly judged and he brings great breadth and gravitas to the very opening of the work. He gives, too, a more intense account of the Eighth (Hommage à Teilhard de Chardin) than we have had before. Ode to the Queen, is a setting of three poems, variously by Richard Crashaw, Sir William d'Avenant and Thomas Campion, for mezzo-soprano and full orchestra and is strong in inspiration. Excellent performances and outstanding recorded sound from the Chandos/BBC team.

Although the Melbourne orchestra is not in the very top division, they play this music for all they are worth, and the strings have a genuine intensity and lyrical fervour that compensate for the opaque effect of the octave doublings. Altogether, though, this is an imposing performance which reflects credit on all concerned. The recording is well balanced and lifelike; but the ear perceives that the upper range is rather restricted.

(i) Symphonies 6, Op. 80; 8 (Hommage à Teilhard de Chardin), Op. 132; (ii) Soliloquy for Cello & Orchestra, Op. 57

* Lyrita SRCD 234. (i) Philh. O, Del Mar; (ii) de Saram, LSO, Handley

The Sixth is one of the most admired of Rubbra's symphonies and its slow movement is arguably the most beautiful single movement in all of Rubbra's output. The Eighth pays tribute to Teilhard de Chardin, a Jesuit and palaeontologist (1881–1955) who fell out with the Church over his approach to evolution. It has something of the mystical intensity that finds its most visionary outlet in the Ninth Symphony. In Norman Del Mar's hands Rubbra's music speaks here with directness and without artifice; the Philharmonia play marvellously and the composer's sound-world is very well served by the recording balance. The Soliloquy has been described by Ronald Stevenson as 'a saraband, symphonically developed in flexible tempo . . . a meditation with flashes of interior drama', and its grave beauty exerts a strong appeal. Rohan de Saram plays with a restrained eloquence that is impressive and he has excellent support from the LSO under Vernon Handley.

(i) Symphony 9 (Sinfonia sacra), Op. 140; The Morning Watch for Chorus & Orchestra, Op. 55

🔑 ✿ * Chan. 9441. (i) Dawson, Jones, Roberts; BBC Nat. Ch. & O of Wales, Hickox

The Ninth Symphony, arguably Rubbra's greatest work, is an unqualified masterpiece. Subtitled The Resurrection, it was inspired by a painting of Donato Bramante and has something of the character of the Passion, which the three soloists relate in moving fashion. The Morning Watch, a setting of Henry Vaughan for chorus and orchestra, which was originally to have formed part of a choral fifth symphony, is another score of great nobility, which has taken even longer (half a century) to be recorded. Both works are superbly served here by all these fine musicians, and the Chandos recording is no less magnificent.

Symphony 10 (Sinfonia da camera), Op. 145; Improvisations on Virginal Pieces by Giles Farnaby, Op. 50; A Tribute to Vaughan Williams on his 70th Birthday (Introduction & Danza alla fuga), Op. 56

Ⓜ  Chan. 6599. Bournemouth Sinf., Schönzeler

Rubbra's Tenth Symphony is a short, one-movement work, whose opening has a Sibelian seriousness and a strong atmosphere that grip one immediately. Schönzeler is scrupulously attentive to dynamic nuance and internal balance, while keeping a firm grip on the architecture as a whole. The 1977 recording has been impressively remastered. It has a warm acoustic and reproduces natural, well-placed orchestral tone. The upper range is crisply defined. The Farnaby Variations is a pre-war work whose charm Schönzeler uncovers effectively, revealing its textures to best advantage. Loth to Depart, the best-known movement, has gentleness and vision in this performance. Strongly recommended. Even though this CD plays for only 40 minutes, it remains indispensable.

CHAMBER MUSIC

The Buddha (incidental music; suite, arr. Croft); Duo for Cor Anglais & Piano, Op. 156; Meditazioni sopra 'coeurs désolés', Op. 67b; Phantasy for 2 Violins & Piano; Oboe Sonata in C, Op. 100; Piano Trios 1, Op. 68 (one movement); 2, Op. 138

Ⓜ  Dutton Lab. CDLX 7106. Endymion Ens. (members)

Rubbra had a lifelong interest in the East, and his incidental music for Clifford Bax's radio play on the life of the Buddha makes a strong impression. The Duo for Cor Anglais and Piano is a late work, written in 1980 after the Eleventh Symphony, with a deeply felt, elegiac and valedictory character. The Meditazioni sopra 'coeurs désolés' (1949), originally for recorder and harpsichord, is a set of variations on Josquin's chanson. The wonderful Oboe Sonata, written in 1958 for Evelyn Rothwell (Lady Barbirolli), is the best known of the seven pieces on this disc, and Melinda Maxwell and Michael Dussek successfully capture its nobility of spirit. The Phantasy for Two Violins and Piano (1927) was Rubbra's first published work and is finely wrought in every way. The First Piano Trio was written in 1950 and has the quiet seriousness of late Fauré and the same naturalness of speech; there is no trace of rhetoric or expressive emphasis, qualities which hold true of this dignified and selfless performance. 2 was composed 20 years later and is sparer than its predecessor. A thoroughly recommendable anthology, admirably recorded.

(i) Cello Sonata in G min.; String Quartets 1 in F min., Op. 35; 3, Op. 112; Improvisation for Unaccompanied Cello

🔑  Dutton CDLX 7123. Dante Qt (members); with (i) Dussek

String Quartets 2 in E flat, Op. 73; 4, Op. 150; (i) Lyric Movement for String Quartet and Piano, Op. 24; Meditations on a Byzantime Hymn 'O Quando in Cruce', Op. 117a

🔑  Dutton CDLX 7114. Dante Qt; with (i) Dussek

The G minor Cello Sonata of 1946 is one of Rubbra's finest chamber works, and it is beautifully played here, but it is the inclusion of the four String Quartets that is particularly valuable. The first version of the F minor Quartet comes from 1933, before the First Symphony, while the Fourth dates from 1977. The First pays homage to Vaughan Williams, 'whose persistent interest' in the original 1933 version led to a complete revision of the piece in 1946, while the Fourth is dedicated to Robert Simpson. There is a nobility and breadth of line that make these pieces resonate in the memory. The Third, written in 1963, moves with a tremendous sense of purpose and expressive substance, as does the elegiac Fourth. Dutton deserves many congratulations in making them available in such excellent performances together with other chamber pieces, some of which, such as Lyric Movement for Piano Quintet and the Meditations on a Byzantine Hymn for two violas, will be new to most collectors. Recommended with enthusiasm.

Oboe Sonata in C, Op. 100

(BB)  Hyp Helios CDH 55008. Francis, Dickinson – BOUGHTON: Pastoral; HARTY: 3 Pieces; HOWELLS: Sonata ***

Rubbra's Oboe Sonata in C, Op. 100 has a songful, rhapsodic opening movement, which leads naturally into the soulful central Elegie; the fluent finale is a rondo with a semi-oriented melodic line. The performance here is of quality, but these artists are not helped by the forward balance and the background resonance. It is important not to have the volume level set too high.

(i) Violin Sonatas 1, Op. 11; 2, Op. 31; 3, Op. 133; 4 Pieces, Op. 29; Variations on a Phrygian Theme for Solo Violin, Op. 105

🔑 Ⓜ  Dutton Lab. CDLX 7101. Osostowicz; (i) with Dussek

The Second Violin Sonata, with Albert Sammons and Gerald Moore, was the first Rubbra work to reach the gramophone. Krysia Osostowicz and Michael Dussek are worth waiting for, since not only the recording but also, surprisingly, the performance eclipses its distinguished predecessors. The First Sonata, Op. 11, from the 1920s, is heavily indebted to Debussy and Rubbra's teacher, Gustav Holst. The Third is a sinewy work from 1963, formidably argued and finely laid out for the medium. The Op. 29 Pieces are really teaching material, as is the set of Variations for violin alone.

PIANO MUSIC

Fantasy Fugue, Op. 161; Fukagawa (Deep River); Introduction & Fugue, Op. 19; Introduction, Aria & Fugue, Op. 104; Invention on the Name of Haydn, Op. 160; Nemo Fugue; Prelude & Fugue on a Theme of Cyril Scott, Op. 69; 8 Preludes, Op. 131; 4 Studies, Op. 139; (i) 9 Teaching Pieces, Op. 74

Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7112. M. Dussek; (i) with R. Dussek

Considering that he was an outstanding pianist, Rubbra wrote relatively little for his instrument. Apart from the seraphic Piano Concerto in G major, of which we badly need a new recording, and the Sinfonia concertante the present disc contains the lot. Although all these pieces do exist in various other versions, Michael Dussek's fine survey is undoubtedly the one to have. Artistic matters apart, it also has the benefit of vivid and truthful recorded sound.

VOCAL MUSIC

(i) Advent Cantata: Natum Maria Virgine, Op. 136; Inscape, Op. 122; (i) 4 Mediaeval Latin Lyrics, Op. 32; Song of the Soul, Op. 78; Veni, creator spiritus, Op. 130

🔑 ✿ * Chan. 9847. ASMF Ch., City of L. Sinf., Hickox; (i) with Varcoe

Having put us in their debt with their survey of the symphonies, Richard Hickox and Chandos now turn to the choral music. Three of the pieces here are first recordings. Natum Maria Virgine comes from the late 1960s when Rubbra was working on the Sinfonia sacra. As with all his vocal music it is beautifully crafted, its polyphony growing effortlessly and inevitably. Song of the Soul comes from 1951, the year of the Second String Quartet, and has dipped under the horizon as far as both concert and recorded performances are concerned, as has the Veni, creator spiritus, another late and inspiring piece. The Four Mediæval Latin Lyrics with Stephen Varcoe and Hickox are equally fine. The Abelard setting, the fourth of the Mediævel Latin Lyrics, sounds particularly beautiful. Inscape, which is set to the words of Gerard Manley Hopkins, has a quiet eloquence and depth that puts it among Rubbra's most memorable works in any genre. Hickox has real feeling for the mystical side of Rubbra and conveys his elevation of feeling. The recording has amplitude yet clarity and is expertly and naturally balanced. A very special disc.

The Beatitudes, Op. 109; 4 Carols; Lauda Sion, Op. 110; 5 Madrigals, Op. 51; 2 Madrigals, Op. 52; Mass in Honour of St Teresa of Avila; Missa a 3 voci, Op. 98; 5 Motets, Op. 37

 ASV CDDCA 1093. Voces Sacrae, Martin

This CD is devoted to Rubbra's a cappella music and ranges from the early Motets of 1934, settings of Herrick, Donne and Vaughan, through to his last Mass, the Mass in Honour of St Teresa of Avila, which was composed in 1981, five years before his death. It also includes the spare and austere Missa a 3 voci from the early 1960s; both these Masses have a sense of the eternal verities. The most important work here is the Mass in Honour of St Teresa of Avila, a work of haunting beauty and directness. The Lauda Sion (1960) is another work that leaves one feeling cleansed. Judy Martin and Voces Sacrae give sympathetic and idiomatic accounts of all these pieces, and the sound is natural and present.

Songs: (i; ii) A Hymn to the Virgin; The Jade Mountain; Jesukin; Mystery; Orpheus with his Lute; Rosa mundi. Instrumental pieces: (ii; iii) Discourse, Op. 127; (iii) Fukagawa; Improvisation, Op. 124; (ii) Harp pieces: Pezzo ostinato, Op. 102; Transformations, Op. 141

 ASV CDDCA 1036. (i) Chadwell; (ii) Perrett; (iii) Gill (with L. BERKELEY: Nocturne for Harp; HOWELLS: Prelude ***)

The CD reflects Rubbra's lifelong interest in the Orient from the early Fukagawa (1929), an arrangement of a Japanese melody, to The Jade Mountain songs (1962). The two pieces for harp, the Pezzo ostinato and the Transformations, both reflect the fascination that Indian music exercised. They are both impressive – indeed, exalted is the word that springs to mind. Some of the very early pieces reflect the spell cast by Holst and Cyril Scott but the bulk of the music here finds him at his most individual. Tracy Chadwell sings ethereally though there is perhaps a little too much echo round her voice, but the harp pieces are both exquisitely played and could hardly be more authoritative. A most rewarding and recommendable issue.

Magnificat & Nunc Dimittis, Op. 65; Missa Cantuariensis, Op. 59; Missa in honorem Sancti Dominici; Tenebrae Motets, Op. 72: Nocturns 1–3;* (i) (Organ) *Meditation, Op. 79; Prelude & Fugue, Op. 69

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.555255. Ch. of St John's College, Cambridge, Robinson; (i) Houssart

The present inexpensive recording by Christopher Robinson and the Choir of St John's College, Cambridge, makes an excellent entry point into Rubbra's sacred music. The Missa Cantuariensis was composed for Canterbury Cathedral, whereas the Missa in honorem Sancti Dominici (1948) was written for the Catholic Rite. Both are crafted beautifully and elevated in feeling. The first Nocturn (which comprises three motets) of the Tenebrae was written in 1951, and a further two Nocturns followed ten years later. They are anguished and eloquent expressions of faith. This deeply satisfying recording is completed by the Meditation for organ, which was written for James Dalton, and Bernard Rose's transcription of the Prelude and Fugue on a Theme of Cyril Scott, a seventieth-birthday tribute to Rubbra's first teacher. The performances are quite outstanding and well recorded.

(i) Magnificat & Nunc Dimittis in A flat, Op. 65; Missa in honorem Sancti Dominici, Op. 66; 3 Hymn Tunes, Op. 114; 3 Motets, Op. 78

 ASV CDDCA 881. Ch. of Gonville & Caius College, Cambridge, Webber; (i) Phillips (organ) – HADLEY: Lenten cantata, etc. ***

The most important work here is the Missa in honorem Sancti Dominici (1948), written at about the time of the Fifth Symphony and one of the most beautiful of 20th-century a cappella choral pieces written in this or any other country. None of the other works on the disc is its equal. The performance by the Choir of Gonville & Caius College, Cambridge, under Geoffrey Webber is dedicated and sensitive. Excellent balance, though the organ is obtrusive, particularly so in the first of the Op. 78 Motets.

RUBINSTEIN, Anton (1829–94)

Piano Sonatas 1 in E min., Op. 12; 2 in C min., Op. 20; 3 in F, Op. 41; 4 in A min., Op. 100

🔑 Ⓑ  Hyp. Dyad CCD 22007 (2). Howard

Leslie Howard proves highly persuasive in all four works. The 1981 recordings sound excellent, and this set is more enticing as a Dyad, with two discs offered for the price of one. Returning to these works, one is surprised to find how enjoyable the music is, with some good lyrical ideas, phrased romantically, to balance the arrestingly flamboyant rhetoric which Leslie Howard obviously relishes.

RUTTER, John (born 1945)

(i; ii) Suite antique (for flute and orchestra); (iii) 5 Childhood Lyrics (for unaccompanied choir); (ii; iii) Fancies; When Icicles Hang (for choir and orchestra)

 Coll. COLCD 117. (i) Dobing, Marshall; (ii) City of L. Sinfonia; (iii) Soloists, Cambridge Singers; Composer

This whole collection is imbued with Rutter's easy melodic style and the touches of offbeat rhythm which he uses to give a lift to his lively settings. The Antique Suite (for flute, harpsichord and strings) opens with a serene Prelude, but includes a typically catchy Ostinato, a gay Waltz and a chirpy closing Rondeau. Fancies has a delightful Urchins' Dance, after the fairy style of Mendelssohn, and its Riddle Song has a most appealing lyrical melody. But the mood darkens for the closing Bellman's Song. Among the Childhood Lyrics, the settings of Edward Lear's Owl and the Pussy-cat and Sing a Song of Sixpence are particularly endearing.

The evocative When Icicles Hang brings characteristically winning scoring for the orchestral woodwind (Rutter loves flutes) and another fine melody in Blow, Blow Thou Winter Wind. The work ends happily in folksy style. Splendid performances throughout. Rutter is currently the most performed (by amateur choirs) of any living English composer, and no wonder. The performances here are excellent and so is the recording.

Christmas carols: Angels' Carol; Candelight Carol; Carol of the Children; Christmas Lullaby; Donkey Carol; Dormi Jesu; Jesus Child; Love Came Down at Christmas; Mary's Lullaby; Nativity Carol; Sans Day Carol; Second Amen; Shepherd's Pipe Carol; Star Carol; There is a Flower; The Very Best Time of Year; What Sweeter Music; Wild Wood Carol.
Arrangements: Angel Tidings; Away in a Manger; I Wonder as I Wander; Silent Night

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 67245. Polyphony, City of L. Sinfonia, Layton

John Rutter's delightful carols will always be especially remembered. 'They were my calling cards,' he says. 'You have to remember that the Christmas carol is one of the very few musical forms which allows classically trained musicians to feel it's permissible to write tunes!' And, as is shown again and again here, Rutter never had difficulty in coming up with a memorable melodic line, whether it be the Shepherd's Pipe Carol, with its characteristic flute writing, which opens the programme, or the deliciously perky Donkey Carol, with its catchy 5/8 syncopated rhythm, which closes it.

The 22 carols included here were composed in a steady stream over a period of three decades, with the charming Dormi Jesu dating from as recently as 1999. Rutter's writing is notable not only for its tunefulness and winning use of choral textures, but also for his always engaging orchestrations.

(i; ii) The Falcon; (ii) 2 Festival Anthems: O praise the Lord in Heaven; Behold, the Tabernacle of God; (ii; iii) Magnificat

 Coll. COLCD 114. (i) St Paul's Cathedral Choristers; (ii) Cambridge Singers, City of L. Sinfonia; (iii) with Forbes; all cond. composer

The Falcon was Rutter's first large-scale choral work. Its inspiration was a medieval poem, which is linked to the Crucifixion story, but the core of the piece is the mystical central Lento. The Magnificat has the usual Rutter stylistic touches, with a syncopated treatment of the opening Magnificat anima mea, and a joyous closing Gloria Patri. The two anthems are characteristically expansive and resplendent with brass. Fine performances and recording in the best Collegium tradition.

Gloria; Magnificat; Psalm 150

🔑 * EMI 5 57952-2. Treble soloists from the Choirs of King's College & Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge, CBSO, composer; T. Winpenny or A. Grote (organ)

John Rutter's choral music is the most widely performed of any contemporary English composer, not only in England and the Commonweath, but in North America too; listening to the Gloria, one can understand why. With its Waltonesque opening and thrilling use of the brass, it communicates immdiately and directly; the central section is touchingly elegiac, and the closing Amens are exultant. It makes you feel good.

In the Magnificat setting, Rutter characteristically uses a recognizable four-note motif to fit the word itself, and the lovely second movement, Of a Rose, a lovely rose, is memorable enough to be extracted for separate performance. Some might feel that, for a Magnificat, the setting is a little soft-centred, as both the Misericordia and the Esurientes are gently lyrical, each featuring a diminutive solo treble, but the closing Gloria Patri is triumphant.

The closing Psalm 150, where the words actually invite an instrumental response, brings sounding brass, organ, full choir and percussion, and again it is spectacular, with the Laudate Dominum giving contrast by using a distanced group of singers. But the closing Alleluia . . . Amen is Rutter at his most extravagantly exuberant. The performances here are quite splendid in every respect, with the King's acoustic adding a glowing aura to the music-making.

(i) Mass of the Children; A Clare Benediction; I will sing with the Spirit; Look at the World; To Every thing there is a Season; Wings of the Morning; A cappella settings: Come down O Love Divine; I my Best Beloved's Am; Musica Dei dominum

 Coll. CSCD 129. (i) Lunn, Williams, Cantatas Youth Ch., Cambridge Singers, City of L. Sinfonia, composer

John Rutter's Mass of the Children has a characteristic simplicity of style and it immediately establishes his identity with the easily flexible musical phrase he has devised for the repetitions of the words 'Kyrie eleison'. The light-hearted Gloria similarly is well conceived for a work designed for children's participation alongside adults, and in the finale, in which each soloist interpolates a sung medieval prayer, children and adults again join together for the Dona nobis pacem. It is a work of genuine charm, yet not lacking substance, designed for wide popularity.

The other songs all have the immediacy of melodic flow and skilful orchestral colour we expect from Rutter's carols. The three a cappella items also show the composer at his most rewarding, notably the lovely Musica Dei Dominum with its flute obbligato and Come down O Love Divine for double choir, a richly harmonized setting of 15th-century English text. Not surprisingly, performances are of the highest quality and the recording is finely balanced in a warm acoustic.

(i–iv; vii) Mass of the Children; (ii; v) Shadows (Song-cycle with Guitar); (iii; v; vi) Wedding Canticle

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.557922. (i) Gruffydd-Jones; (ii) Huw Williams; (iii) Clare College, Cambridge, Ch.; (iv) Farnham Youth Ch., Clare Chamber Ens.; (v) French (guitar); (vi) Pailthorpe (flute); (vii) McVinnie (organ), T. Brown

The brief Wedding Canticle is written serenely for mixed choir, flute and guitar, and is directly and beautifully presented here as a closing bonus. But it did not seem an ideal choice to include on this CD Rutter's song-cycle, Shadows, which apparently attempts to recreate the tradition of the melancholy lute songs of the Elizabethan era. They are sung simply and often mournfully by Jeremy Huw Williams, accompanied most delicately by Stewart French on the guitar. But it is the lively songs, like Gather ye rosebuds and In a goodly night, which come off best.

3 Musical Fables: (i) Brother Heinrich's Christmas; (ii) The Reluctant Dragon; The Wind in the Willows

(*) Coll. COLCD 115; City of L. Sinfonia; with (i) Kay, Cambridge Singers, composer; (ii) R. Baker, King's Singers, Hickox

Brother Heinrich's Christmas is a musical narrative with choir, telling the story of how one of the most famous of all carols was introduced late at night by the angels to Brother Heinrich, just in time for it to be included in the monks' Christmas Day service. It is all highly ingenuous but engagingly presented, and should appeal to young listeners who have enjoyed Howard Blake's The Snowman. The settings of the two famous Kenneth Grahame stories are no less tunefully communicative and include simulations of pop music of the 1940s (among other derivations), notably a Rodgers-style ballad which sentimentalizes the end of The Wind in the Willows episode, after Toad's escape from prison. All the music is expertly sung and played and blends well with the warmly involving narrative, splendidly done by Richard Baker.

Gloria; As the Bridegroom to His Chosen; Clare Benediction; Come Down, O Love Divine; Go Forth into this World; I My Best-beloved's Am; Lord Make Me an Instrument of Thy Peace; Psalmfest: I Will Lift Up Mine Eyes; The Lord is My Light and My Salvation; Praise the Lord O My Soul; Te Deum; To Everything There Is a Season

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 67259. Polyphony, Wallace Collection, City of L. Sinfonia, Layton

Framed by superb accounts of the Gloria and Te Deum, each with a magnificent brass contribution from the Wallace Collection, and given demonstration-standard sound quality, this is one of the most attractive Rutter collections yet. Brass is used again to introduce the first of the three psalm settings taken from the nine-movement, Psalmfest, followed by I Will Lift Up My Eyes introduced serenely by woodwind, which has much in common with Vaughan Williams's Serenade to Music. The third, The Lord is My Light and My Salvation, opens with a clarinet solo and has one of Rutter's most beguiling melodies. But everywhere here there is melody. Polyphony sing rapturously, with lovely blended tone, and the warmly persuasive accompaniments are ideally balanced within a pleasingly resonant but not blurring acoustic.

(i–iv) Requiem. Anthems: (i; iv) Arise, shine; (i) Come Down, O Love Divine; (ii; v) Musica Dei dominum; (i; iv) 2 Blessings for Choir & Organ. Organ Pieces: (iv) Toccata in 7; (iv; vi) Variations on an Easter Theme for Organ Duet

🔑 ✿ (BB) * Naxos 8.557130. (i) Clare College, Cambridge, Ch.; (ii) L. Sinfonia; (iii) with Thomas; (iv) Rimmer (organ); (v) Jones; all cond. Brown; (vi) with Collon

(i) Requiem; (ii) Magnificat

Ⓜ  Coll. CSCD 504. (i) Ashton, Dean; (ii) Forbes; Cambridge Singers, City of L. Sinfonia, composer

(i) Requiem; Cantata Domino; (ii) Cantus; Hymn to the Creator of light; Veni sancte spiritus; What Sweeter Music; (ii) Te Deum

 EMI 5 56605-2. King's College, Cambridge, Ch., Cleobury; with (i) Saklatvala, Harries, City of L. Sinfonia; (ii) The Wallace Collection

(i) Requiem; Cantata Domino; Choral Fanfare; Draw on Sweet Night; (ii) Gaelic Blessing; God Be In My Head; Hymn to the Creator of Light; My True Love Hath My Heart; (ii) The Lord Bless You and Keep You; Open Thou Mine Eyes; A Prayer for Saint Patrick

 Hyp. CDA 66947. Polyphony, Layton; with (i) Manion; (ii) Bournemouth Sinf.

John Rutter's melodic gift, so well illustrated in his carols, is used in the simplest and most direct way to create a small-scale Requiem that is as beautiful and satisfying in its English way as the works of Fauré and Duruflé. The penultimate movement, a ripe setting of The Lord is my Shepherd with a lovely oboe obbligato, sounds almost like an anglicized Song of the Auvergne.

The newest Naxos recording of the Requiem tends to trump all previous versions, even the composer's own very fine account. Recorded in the expansive acoustic of Douai Abbey, Berkshire, it is very beautifully sung indeed, joyful in the Sanctus and darkly dramatic in the Agnus Dei with its steady drum beat. Elin Manahan Thomas is an ideal soloist singing the Pie Jesu with touching simplicity, and rising up celestially in the Lux aeterna. Christopher Hooker's oboe obbligato in The Lord is my Shepherd is comparably sensitive. The extra items are equally successful. The Two Blessings, with their easy melodic flow, are rather like Rutter's carols, and the pair of thematically linked organ voluntaries, the first immediately rhythmically catchy, the duet Variations, sonorous and unpredictable, round off the programme most satisfyingly. Both are very well played, indeed, and the recording is first class.

On Collegium Caroline Ashton's performance of the delightful Pie Jesu is wonderfully warm and spontaneous, most beautifully recorded on CD, with the equally glorious Magnificat setting (see above) making a superb bonus on this mid-priced reissue.

Both the EMI and Hyperion recordings are of high quality and both bring first-class digital sound. On EMI there is something special about hearing this music within the King's acoustic, and using boy trebles in the choir as well as for the two solos. At times there is an ethereal resonance here, although climaxes emerge strongly.

Polyphony uses women's voices (as does Rutter himself) in a choir of 25 voices. The balance is slightly more forward, and the result brings a radiant richness of sound which is hardly less enjoyable. Both Polyphony and King's complete their programmes with some of Rutter's shorter choral works.

COLLECTION

'The Gift of Music', Sacred: All things bright and beautiful; Be Thou my vision; A Clare Benediction; For the beauty of the earth; Hymn to the Creator of Light; Look at the world; The Lord bless you and keep you; Lord, make me an instrument of Thy Peace; Magnificat; Of a Rose, a lovely Rose; Requiem: Pie Jesu; Sanctus. arr. Rutter: Spiritual: (i) Deep River. Shaker Song: Lord of the Dance. TRAD.: Gaelic Blessing. Secular: (ii) The Gift of Music; Mary's Lullaby. Arrangements: Golden slumbers; I know where I'm going; The keel row; O waly waly; Sans Day Carol; Willow Song

🔑 Ⓜ * Universal 476 3068. Cambridge Singers, City of L. Sinfonia (or BBC Concert O), composer; (ii) with Melanie Marshall

Universal have had the bright idea of asking Rutter to choose an anthology of some of the many original compositions and arrangements which he has recorded on his own Collegium label with the excellent Clare College Choir. The result is a generous, 78-minute cornucopia of musical delights, opening with a happy Look at the world and going on immediately to Of a rose, a lovely rose, which is the second movement of his Magnificat, and the characteristic flowing melody of For the beauty of the earth, liltingly decorated with Rutter's familiar flute cascades. But then comes the masterly Hymn to the Creator of Light, with its thrilling dissonances, which out-Taveners Tavener. There are some attractive arrangements included, too, from the Shaker song, The Lord of the Dance, to a group of English folksongs, including O waly waly (very different from Britten's setting), The keel row and the haunting I know where I'm going. Finally there are two of Rutter's delectable carols (his speciality): the traditional Cornish Sans Day (with more decorative flutes) and Rutter's own enchantingly simple Mary's Lullaby. Superb singing and first-class recording.

RYBA, Jakob Jan (1765–1815)

Czech Christmas Mass; Missa pastoralis

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.554428. Soloists, Czech Madrigalists Ch. & O, Thuri

The Czech composer, Jakob Jan Ryba, contemporary with Mozart, wrote these Christmas Masses – one long, one short – as seasonal cantatas. With only token references to the liturgy, obvious enough in the Gloria, they relate the story of the shepherds visiting the baby Jesus to the various sections of the Mass. Understandably, with their simple folk-like tunes and harmonies, they have long been part of traditional Czech celebrations at Christmas, and they here receive winningly fresh and direct performances, atmospherically recorded.

SÆVERUD, Harald (1897–1992)

Symphony 6 (Sinfonia dolorosa), Op. 19; Galdreslåtten, Op. 20; Kjæmpevise-slåtten, Op. 22; Peer Gynt Suites 1 & 2

* BIS CD 762. Stavanger SO, Dmitriev

The Sixth Symphony (Sinfonia dolorosa) is a short but intense piece from the war years, dedicated to a close friend who perished in the resistance, and the Kjæmpevise-slåtten ('Ballad of Revolt') comes from the same years. It is an inspiriting work, an outraged, combative reaction to the sight of the Nazi occupation barracks near his Bergen home. The Peer Gynt music, written for a post-war production of Ibsen's play, could not be further removed from Grieg's celebrated score. It is earthy and rambunctious and makes Grieg sound positively genteel. So, too, does the delightful, inventive and wholly original Galdreslåtten. Eminently satisfactory performances from the Stavanger Orchestra under Alexander Dmitriev, brought vividly to life by the BIS recording team.

Symphony 7 (Salme), Op. 27; (i) Bassoon Concerto, Op. 44; Lucretia (suite), Op. 10

* BIS CD 822 (i) Rønnes; Stavanger SO, Dmitriev

The one-movement Seventh (1945) is a deeply felt work, a hymn of thanksgiving for peace. The Lucretia Suite derives from the incidental music Sæverud wrote in 1936 for André Obey's play. Much of it is highly imaginative (the evocation of night in the fourth movement, for example), and the charming middle movement, Lucretia Sleeping. The Bassoon Concerto (1965) was revised towards the end of his long life in collaboration with Robert Rønnes, the soloist here. Absolutely first-class performances and recordings.

Symphony 8 (Minnesota), Op. 40; (i) Cello Concerto, Op. 7

* BIS CD 972. (i) Mørk; Stavanger SO, Ruud

The Eighth Symphony is full of imaginative things, particularly the mysterious opening pages, and the invention often takes you by surprise. Its four movements all have their rewards though the whole is ultimately less than the sum of its parts. Nevertheless, this is a world well worth exploring and to which you will want to return. In the concerto Truls Mørk is masterly and plays with a glorious tone, and the Stavanger Orchestra does well throughout. The recording is superb.

The Cello Concerto was first performed in April 1999 and although Sæverud had intended to revise it he never got round to finishing it. The present score has been prepared by Robert Rønnes. Although Sæverud writes gratefully for the cello, the invention is less memorable or imaginative than in the Lucretia or Peer Gynt suites.

Symphony 9, Op. 45; (i) Piano Concerto, Op. 31; Fanfare & Hymn, Op. 48

* BIS CD 962. Stavanger SO, Dmitriev (i) with Ogawa

Alexander Dmitriev and the Stavanger Orchestra are very persuasive in the Ninth Symphony. There is a strong sense of the Norwegian landscape here and the BIS recording conveys it all with striking clarity and presence. The Piano Concerto of 1950 is a delightful piece, full of quirky, robust humour. It is a work that haunts and fascinates, and the farmyard noises of the finale together with the strongly atmospheric slow movement linger in the memory. Norika Ogawa is an alert, sensitive player who has the measure of this piece, and Alexander Dmitriev and the Stavanger Orchestra are eminently supportive. The short Fanfare and Hymn was commissioned by the City of Bergen to celebrate its 900th anniversary. The sound is in the demonstration bracket.

SAINT-SAËNS, Camille
(1835–1921)

Carnival of the Animals (with narration)

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.554463. Morris (nar.), Slovak RSO, Lenárd – DUKAS: L'Apprenti sorcier (*); RAVEL: Ma Mère l'Oye ***

This Naxos collection is clearly aimed at younger children, and many adults could find Johnny Morris's very personal (and often eccentric) descriptions and rhymes, which adorn this performance, too much to take. But the playing of the Slovak Orchestra, with a persuasively spontaneous contribution from the two anonymous pianists, is most attractive.

(i) Carnival of the Animals; (ii) Le Cygne; Piano Concertos; (iii) 2; (iv) 4 in C min., Op. 44; (v) Violin Concerto 3; (vi) Danse macabre; (v) Introduction & rondo capriccioso; (vii) Symphony 3 in C min. (Organ)

(B) (*) Ph. Duo (ADD) 442 608-2 (2). (i) Villa, Jennings, Pittsburgh SO, Previn; (ii) Gendron, Gallion; (iii)

Davidovich, Concg. O, Järvi; (iv) Campanella, Monte Carlo Op. O, Ceccato; (v) Szeryng, Monte Carlo Op. O, Remoortel; (vi) Concg. O, Haitink; (vii) Chorzempa, Rotterdam PO, de Waart

Notable here is Previn's 1980 Carnival of the Animals, as fine as almost any available. (Philips have also included a second performance of Le Cygne by the inestimable Maurice Gendron.) Bella Davidovich gives a most sympathetic account of the G minor Piano Concerto and draws pleasing tone-quality from the instrument. She has the advantage of excellent orchestral support from the Concertgebouw Orchestra, who also give a lively account of the Danse macabre under Haitink. In the C minor Concerto (which is analogue) the effect is harder, partly because Michele Campanella is a more boldly extrovert soloist; but this account has undoubted vitality and no lack of espressivo. Henryk Szeryng gives clean, immaculate performances of the B minor Violin Concerto and the Introduction and Rondo capriccioso. Edo de Waart's 1976 recording of the Organ Symphony is not among the most exciting versions available but it is certainly enjoyable.

Cello Concertos 1 in A min., Op. 33; 2 in D min., Op. 119; Allegro appassionato in B min., Op. 43; Suite in D min., Op. 16; Carnival of the Animals: The Swan (orch. Vidal)

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553039. Kliegel, Bournemouth Sinf., Monnard

Maria Kliegel proves a most sympathetic soloist, technically immaculate, undeterred even by the relatively ungrateful writing for the cello in the Second Concerto, so much less striking a work than 1. It is good to have the early Suite, a colourful collection of genre pieces, and the dashing Allegro appassionato, both originally with piano accompaniment and here arranged by the composer himself.

Cello Concertos (i; ii) 1, Op. 33; (i; iii) 2, Op. 119; Piano Concertos (iv; v; vi;) 1 in D, Op. 17; (iv; v; vii) 2 in G min., Op. 22; (iv; v; viii) 3 in E flat, Op. 29; (iv; v; vi) 4 in C min., Op. 44; (iv; v; vii) 5 in F, Op. 103; Violin Concertos; (v; ix; x) 1 in A, Op. 20; (ix; xi; xii) 3 in B min., Op. 61; (v; ix; vii) Havanaise; Introduction et Rondo capriccioso; (v; xiii) Carnival of the Animals; (v; vi) Danse macabre; La Jeunesse d'Hercule; Marche héroïque; Phaéton; Le Rouet d'Omphale; (v; x; xiv) Symphony 3 (Organ) in C min., Op. 78

🔑 Ⓑ * Decca (ADD/DDD) 475 465-2 (5). (i) Harrell; (ii) Cleveland O, Marriner; (iii) German RSO, Chailly; (iv) Rogé; (v) Dutoit; (vi) Philh. O; (vii) RPO; (viii) LPO; (ix) Kyung Wha Chung; (x) Montreal SO; (xi) LSO; (xii) Foster; (xiii) L. Sinf.; (xiv) Hurford

Exceptional value here, with quantity and quality, and with myriad orchestras involved to make this a Saint-Saëns feast. Pascal Rogé brings delicacy, virtuosity and sparkle to the Piano Concertos. Chung presents the short First Violin Concerto delightfully and gets similarly admirable accompaniments from Dutoit. She gives a passionate account of the B minor Concerto, so intense that even a sceptical listener will find it hard not to be convinced that this is a great work, with excellent support from Foster. Both the Havanaise and Introduction and Rondo capriccioso have beauty and bravura in plenty, and they come up as fresh as paint. Harrell's account of the First Cello Concerto is an extrovert reading, and one which makes light of any idea that this composer always worked on a small scale. The Second Cello Concerto is beautifully played and recorded: at its close, Harrell refines his timbre to an exquisite half-tone and the effect is ravishing, with a gently muted horn decoration. In Dutoit's collection of tone-poems, the works are beautifully played and recorded, with the 1979 Kingway Hall sound giving it all an appropriate atmosphere. The Organ Symphony was one of the first demonstration digital recordings (1982).

(i) Cello Concertos 1; 2; (ii) Cello Sonata 1; Le Cygne

🔑  Quartz QTZ 2039. Walton; with (i) Philh. O, Briger; (ii) Grimwood

Shrewdly, the talented young British cellist, Jamie Walton, offers a coupling of Saint-Saëns cello works that is near ideal. It says much for Walton that in every way his readings stand the closest comparison with those of Isserlis (see below), both in expressive imagination and in virtuosity. Helped by rather fuller recording, the Walton performances are even a shade warmer than those of Isserlis, notably in slow movements, and though the cello is balanced well forward the playing of the Philharmonia under Alex Briger has an impact to enhance Walton's playing, as at the sharply rhythmic opening of Concerto 2. The disc also reminds us of the comparable power of the First Cello Sonata from the striking, vigorous opening onwards, in every way a work of comparable stature. Daniel Grimwood proves an excellent partner for Walton.

Cello Concerto 1 in A min., Op. 33 (DVD version)

 EMI DVD 3 58232-9. Rostropovich, LPO, Giulini (Dir: Suvi Raj Grubb; V/D: Hugo Käch) – DVOŘÁK: Cello Concerto 1 **(*)

Rostropovich's 1977 DVD serves as a pairing for an intensely involving account of the Dvořák concerto. It is a reading of considerable rhetorical intensity, as is shown by the very opening flourish, but it also has warmth (and moments of great delicacy too). The performance, which is warmly and atmospherically recorded in the Henry Wood Hall, is also available as one of EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century' (5 67593-2). The video, well directed by Hugo Käch, exploits the handsome background of the Henry Wood Hall. Full sound, if on the dry side.

Cello Concerto 1 in A min., Op. 33 (CD Versions)

🔑 * EMI 5 56126-2. Han-Na Chang, LSO, Rostropovich – BRUCH: Kol Nidrei *; FAURÉ: Elégie *; TCHAIKOVSKY Rococo Variations **** ✿

 Teldec 8573-85340-2. du Pré, Phd. O, Barenboim – DVOŘÁK: Cello Concerto ***

 ASV CDDCA 867. Rolland, BBC PO, Varga – LALO: Cello Concerto in D min.; MASSENET: Fantaisie ***

Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 457 761-2. Fournier, LOP, Martinon – BLOCH: Schelomo; BRUCH: Kol Nidrei; LALO: Cello Concerto ***

() BBC mono BBCL 4198-2. Rostropovich, LSO, Rozhdestvensky – ELGAR: Cello Concerto; HAYDN: Cello Concerto in C ()

(i) Cello Concerto 1, Op. 33; (ii) The Swan; (iii) Allegro appassionato, Op. 43; Cello Sonata 1, Op. 32; Chant saphique, Op. 91; Gavotte, Op. posth.; Romances 1 in F, Op. 36; 2 in D, Op. 51; (iv) Prière (for cello & organ)

🔑 * RCA 09026 61678-2. Isserlis; (i) LSO, Tilson-Thomas; (ii) Tilson-Thomas, Moore; (iii) Devoyon; (iv) Grier

Steven Isserlis's account of the Cello Concerto in A minor is among the best on record. Of particular interest too is the Cello Sonata 1 in C minor, composed in the same year, in which he is accompanied with elegance and finesse by Pascal Devoyon. Isserlis himself plays with the musicianship and virtuosity one has come to expect from him. Most of the remaining pieces are both worthwhile and entertaining, particularly the Allegro appassionato. The Prière, Op. 159, for cello and organ, is a small but affecting addition to the Saint-Saëns discography. The recorded sound is very good indeed.

The Saint-Saëns, recorded live in Philadelphia in 1971, makes a good coupling for du Pré's warmly expressive account of the Dvořák with Celibidache. Though this came right at the end of du Pré's playing career, before the onset of multiple sclerosis, the performance is typically magnetic in its high-powered intensity, full of manic energy, faster and wilder than her studio account, if not quite so cleanly recorded.

Sophie Rolland takes its technical hurdles in her effortless stride and is very well supported by the BBC Philharmonic under Gilbert Varga. The excellence of the BBC/ASV recording makes for a strong recommendation.

Fournier brings his customary nobility to the concerto, and is well supported by Martinon, who provides stylish support with the Lamoureux Orchestra. The recording from 1960 has never sounded better than on this new DG Originals transfer, and the collection is excellent in every way.

This 1965 BBC Legends account of the Saint-Saëns First Concerto brings a passionate performance from Rostropovich, powerful and incisive, one of the epic series he performed in a live sequence at that time. It comes in a generous and revealing package with the Elgar and Haydn Concerto in C. Mono recording only, but very acceptable.

(i) Cello Concerto 1; (ii) Piano Concerto 2; (iii) Violin Concerto 3

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * Sony SMK 89873. (i) Ma, O Nat. de France, Maazel; (ii) Licad, LPO, Previn; (iii) Lin, Philh. O, Tilson-Thomas

Three outstanding performances from the early 1980s are admirably linked together in this highly desirable CBS mid-price reissue. Yo-Yo Ma's performance of the Cello Concerto is distinguished by fine sensitivity and beautiful tone, while Cécile Licad and the LPO under Previn turn in an eminently satisfactory reading of the G minor Piano Concerto that has the requisite delicacy in the Scherzo and seriousness elsewhere. Cho-Liang Lin's account of the B minor Violin Concerto with the Philharmonia Orchestra and Michael Tilson-Thomas is exhilarating and thrilling.

Piano Concertos 1 in D, Op. 17; 2 in G min., Op. 22; 3 in E flat, Op. 29; 4 in C min., Op. 44; 5 in F (Egyptian), Op. 103

Ⓑ  Double Decca (ADD) 443 865-2 (2). Rogé, Philh. O, RPO or LPO, Dutoit

Piano Concertos 1–5; Africa Fantaisie, Op. 89; Wedding-Cake Caprice-valse, Op. 76 (both for piano and orchestra)

🔑 ✿ * Hyp. CDA 67331/2 (2). Hough, CBSO, Oramo (with Allegro appassionato; Rapsodie d'Auvergne)

Ⓑ  EMI Gemini 5 86245-2 (2). Collard, RPO, Previn

Marvellous performances from Stephen Hough, full of joy, vigour and sparkle, with Oramo and the CBSO accompanying spiritedly and with the lightest touch. The recording is in the demonstration bracket, and this Hyperion set includes no fewer than four encores. An easy first choice.

Pascal Rogé brings delicacy, virtuosity and sparkle to the piano part and he receives expert support from the various London orchestras under Dutoit. Altogether delicious playing and excellent piano-sound from Decca, who secure a most realistic balance. A fine bargain alternative to Hough.

As always with Collard there is splendid character and a dazzling technique. He brings panache and virtuosity to these concertos, as well as impressive poetic feeling. At one point in the Fifth (Egyptian) Concerto Collard exploits Saint-Saëns's genius in manipulating the piano to suggest Eastern sonorities and makes his instrument sound exactly like an Arab qunan or zither. Throughout, Previn and the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra are sensitive accompanists. The digital sound is very good too, but there is a distinct touch of hardness on top.

(ii) Piano Concertos 1 in D, Op. 17; 2 in G min., Op. 22; (i) Orchestral Suite in D, Op. 49

 BIS CD 1040. (i) Tapiola Sinf., Kantorow; (ii) with Ogawa

BIS couples the First and Second Piano Concertos, which are played with great charm and grace by Norika Ogawa and the Tapiola Sinfonietta under Jean-Jacques Kantorow. As a makeweight it has added the Suite in D major, Op. 49, which was originally conceived for the harmonium and later arranged for orchestra. It is all attractive and engaging and excellently recorded too.

Piano Concerto 2 in G min., Op. 22

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 3 45819-2. Gilels, Paris Conservatoire O, Cluytens – RACHMANINOV: Piano Concerto 3; SHOSTAKOVICH: Preludes & Fugues ***

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.110683. Moiseiwitsch, LPO, Cameron – GRIEG: Piano Concerto (); LISZT: Fantasia on Hungarian Folk Themes ()

With Gilels, Saint-Saëns's most popular piano concerto becomes a bigger, more commanding work than usual. The opening movement is remarkably serious, with genuine depth of feeling to balance the sparkling Scherzo and even more dazzling finale. Cluytens is a splendid partner, investing the orchestral accompaniment with both gravitas and bravura as needed, and the 1954 recording sounds remarkably good in its new transfer.

On Naxos, a neat-fingered and characterful account of this popular concerto and a welcome reminder of Moiseiwitsch's art. Good transfer.

Piano Concertos 2 in G min.; 5 in F (Egyptian)

* Decca 475 8764. Thibaudet, SRO, Dutoit – FRANCK: Variations symphoniques ****

Once the G minor Concerto was a regular part of the concert repertoire, but now – like so much of Saint-Saëns's output – it seldom turns up. Thibaudet plays both concertos with a great sense of style and much charm, and Dutoit and the Geneva orchestra give him excellent support. The recording is very fine indeed. Recommended.

Violin Concertos 1–3

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 67074. Graffin, BBC Scottish SO, Brabbins

Violin Concertos (i) 1; (ii) 3; (iii) Havanaise; Introduction & rondo capriccioso

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca (ADD) 460 008-2. Chung; (i) Montreal SO, Dutoit; (ii) LSO, Lawrence Foster; (iii) RPO, Dutoit

Violin Concerto 1; Havanaise in E, Op. 83; Introduction & rondo capriccioso, Op. 28; Morceau de concert, Op. 62; Romance in C, Op. 48; Sarabande, Op. 93/1

* BIS CD 860. Kantorow, Tapiola Sinf.

Though Saint-Saëns's Third Concerto is relatively well known, with its charming central Andantino set between two bravura movements, and the First Concerto, in a single movement, has not been neglected either, the Second Concerto is the earliest and longest, yet arguably the most memorable – full of the youthful exuberance of a 23-year-old. The French violinist Philippe Graffin, with rich, firm tone, gives performances full of temperament, warmly supported by Martyn Brabbins and the BBC Scottish Symphony Orchestra, and the recording cannot be faulted.

Kyung Wha Chung presents Saint-Saëns's First Violin Concerto delightfully and receives admirable support from Dutoit. She gives a passionate account of the B minor Concerto, so intense that even a sceptical listener will find it hard not to be convinced that this is a great work. Such music needs this kind of advocacy, and Miss Chung is splendidly backed up by the LSO under Lawrence Foster.

It is a pleasure also to welcome this fine BIS collection which brings the short and early First Violin Concerto with such rightly popular display pieces as the Introduction and Rondo capriccioso and the Havanaise. Everything is expertly played and Kantorow has the right blend of panache and spontaneity. First-class sound, as one expects from this source.

Violin Concerto 3 in B min., Op. 61

 Australian Ph. Eloquence (ADD) 442 8561. Grumiaux, LOP, Rosenthal – VIEUXTEMPS: Violin Concertos 4 & 5 ***

Stylish and warm playing from Arthur Grumiaux, with equally stylish playing from the Paris Lamoureux Orchestra in this attractive reissue. The distinctive sound of the orchestra gives the performances a theatrical edge, by no means unattractive. Decent 1963 sound.

Violin Concerto 3 in B min., Op. 61; Caprice andalous in G, Op. 122; Introduction & rondo capriccioso in A min., Op. 28; Morceau de concert in G, Op. 62

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550752. Kang, Polish Nat. RSO, Wit

Dong-Suk Kang brings out the delicate lyricism in Saint-Saëns's most popular violin concerto. The coupling of concertante works brings similar charm, and it is good to have the rarer Caprice andalous included, a 10-minute piece with many typical Saint-Saëns felicities.

(i; ii) Violin Concerto 3, Op. 61; Caprice andalous; Caprice d'après l'Etude en form de valse; (ii) Le déluge: Introduction; (iii; ii) Allegro appassionato; Wedding Cake Caprice

🔑 * BIS CD 1470. (i) Kantorow; (ii) Tapiola Sinf., Bakels; (iii) Kärkkaïnen

The Third Concerto represents Saint-Saëns at his most endearing, and the soaring lyricism of the first movement is perfectly caught by Kantorow, who then phrases the delightful siciliana Andantino to perfection, with the orchestral woodwind joining him with exquisite sensitivity. The introduction of the finale is crisply articulated, and Kantorow bounces off into the main theme with great élan. Throughout the disc there is a true partnership between each soloist with Kees Bakels and the Tapiola Sinfonietta, and with first-class BIS sound and a most convincing balance this collection is very recommendable indeed, and certainly a first choice among current recordings of the B minor Violin Concerto.

Danse macabre, Op. 40; (i) Havanaise; Introduction & rondo capriccioso; La Jeunesse d'Hercule, Op. 50; Marche héroïque, Op. 34; Phaéton, Op. 39; Le Rouet d'Omphale, Op. 31

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca (ADD) 425 021-2. (i) Kyung Wha Chung, RPO; Philh. O; Dutoit

The symphonic poems are beautifully played, and the 1979 Kingsway Hall recording lends the appropriate atmosphere. Decca have now added Kyung Wha Chung's equally charismatic and individual 1977 accounts of what are perhaps the two most inspired short display-pieces for violin and orchestra in the repertoire.

Havanaise, Op. 83

🔑 Ⓜ () RCA mono 09026 61753-2. Heifetz, RCA Victor

SO, Steinberg – CHAUSSON: Poème (*); LALO: Symphonie espagnole ((*)); SARASATE: Zigeunerweisen ()

(*) EMI 5 55026-2. Chang, Phd. O, Sawallisch – PAGANINI: Violin Concerto 1 **(*)

The Heifetz performances have quite extraordinary panache: his bowing in the coda of the Havanaise is utterly captivating. Indeed, this dazzling playing is unsurpassed on record and the 1951 mono recording, if closely balanced, is very faithful. Even if you have these works in more modern versions, this marvellous disc should not be passed by.

Although she misses some of the sultry seductiveness in the Havanaise, the twelve-year-old Sarah Chang still captures the gleaming Spanish sunshine. She is well supported by Sawallisch but is not flattered by the close recording-balance.

Havanaise, Op. 83; Introduction & Rondo Capriccioso, Op. 28

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 62599-2. Perlman, O de Paris, Martinon (with MASSENET: Thaïs: Méditation) – CHAUSSON: Poème; RAVEL: Tzigane ***

Ⓜ (*) Warner Elatus 2564 60013-2. Vengerov, Israel PO, Mehta – PAGANINI: Violin Concerto 1 (*); WAXMAN: Carmen Fantasy ***

Perlman plays these Saint-Saëns warhorses with special panache. The digital remastering brings Perlman's gorgeous fiddling right into the room, at the expense of a touch of aggressiveness when the orchestra lets rip, but the concert-hall ambience prevents this from being a problem.

Maxim Vengerov really show his mettle in these Saint-Saëns morceaux de concert. He plays with much finesse and dazzles with his easy fireworks, the Havanaise in particular producing ravishing tone, yet no over-indulgence. Mehta stands back and gives his young soloist his head.

Henry VIII (ballet music)

(BB)  Naxos 8.553338/9. Razumovsky Sinfonia, Mogrelia – DELIBES: Sylvia ***

This ballet-divertissement, described as a 'fête populaire', comes in Act II of the opera, and in the outer movements Saint-Saëns wittily introduces first a Scottish reel then an Irish jig with Gallic insouciance. But all six numbers, which are enjoyably tuneful, unashamedly incorporate a great many airs from both countries, and Mogrelia presents them affectionately and vividly. With excellent recording, this is a genuine bonus to a pleasing account of Delibes's Sylvia.

Le rouet d'Omphale

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 3 79986-2. RPO Beecham – BIZET: Carmen Suite 1, etc.; CHABRIER: España, etc.; FAURÉ: Dolly ***

The delicacy of string textures and wind playing (notably the flute) is utterly beguiling in Beecham's unsurpassed version of Le rouet d'Omphale, with its exquisite closing section, part of an unmissable concert of French lollipops.

Suite algérienne, Op. 60

 Talent SACD DOM 2929 106. Nice PO, Guidarini (with G. CHARPENTIER: Impressions d'Italie ) – MASSENET: Scènes alsaciennes ***

This is part of an attractive triptych of modestly impressionistic pictorial writing, of which the Italian Impressions of Gustave Charpentier are the most poetically evocative. Massenet's Scènes alsaciennes are full of charm, and Saint-Saëns's picture postcards are both colourful and tuneful. Rêverie du soir is a delicate highlight, but the trump card is the closing Marche militaire français which in its central trio has one of the catchiest tunes the composer ever wrote, bouncing along irresistibly. Splendid playing and fine recording.

Symphonies: in A; in F (Urbs Roma); Symphonies 1–3

Ⓑ  EMI (ADD) 5 85186-2 (2). French Nat. RO, Martinon (with Gavoty, organ of the Église Saint-Louis des Invalides in 3)

The A and F major works were totally unknown and unpublished at the time of their recording and have never been dignified with numbers. Yet the A major, written when the composer was only 15, is a delight and may reasonably be compared with Bizet's youthful work in the same genre. More obviously mature, the Urbs Roma Symphony is perhaps a shade more self-conscious, and more ambitious too, showing striking imagination in such movements as the darkly vigorous Scherzo and the variation movement at the end.

The first of the numbered symphonies is a well-fashioned and genial piece, again much indebted to Mendelssohn and Schumann, but with much delightfully fresh invention. The Second is full of excellent ideas. Martinon directs splendid performances of the whole set, well prepared and lively. The account of the Third ranks with the best: freshly spontaneous in the opening movement, and the threads knitted powerfully together at the end of the finale. Here the recording could do with rather more sumptuousness. Elsewhere the quality is bright and fresh, with no lack of body.

Symphony in F (Urbs Roma); Symphony 2 in A min., Op. 55; (i) Africa (for Piano & Orchestra), Op. 89

 BIS CD 790. (i) Mikkola; Tapiola Sinfonietta, Kantorow

The F major 'Urbs Roma' Symphony and the delightful Second Symphony in A minor are played with great spirit and zest by the Tapiola Sinfonietta and Jean-Jacques Kantorow. If the coupling is suitable, these intelligent and well-recorded performances can be recommended.

Symphony 2; Phaéton, Op. 39; Suite algérienne, Op. 60

 ASV CDDCA 599. LSO, Butt

Symphonies 2; (i) 3 in C min., Op. 78

 Chan. 8822. Ulster O, Tortelier; (i) with Weir

If you want the Second Symphony, it is particularly well played by the LSO under Yondani Butt, with the freshness of a major orchestra discovering something unfamiliar and enjoying themselves.

Yan Pascal Tortelier's performance of the Second is also very attractive and very well recorded; but Butt's account of this work has greater freshness, and the slightly less reverberant ASV recording contributes to this. If, however, your main interest lies with the Third Symphony, this extra resonance proves no disadvantage and the Tortelier version is a 'best buy', both for the appeal of the performance overall and for the state-of-the-art Chandos recording.

Symphony 3 in C min., Op. 78

* Ondine ODE 1094-5. Latry, Phd. O, Eschenbach – POULENC: Organ Concerto; BARBER: Toccata Festiva ***

 DG 419 6172. Preston, BPO, Levine – DUKAS: L'Apprenti sorcier ***

Ⓜ  Decca 475 7728. (i) Hurford, Montreal SO, Dutoit (with POULENC: Organ Concerto ())

(i) Symphony 3; (ii; iv) Carnival of the Animals; (iii; iv) Danse macabre

(BB) (*) Regis RRC 1262. (i) Rawsthorne, RLPO, Tjeknavorian; (ii) Salvador (Sr & Jr), Mexico City PO; (iii) Mexico State SO; (iv) Bátiz

(i) Symphony 3; (ii) Danse macabre; Le Déluge: Prelude, Op. 48; Samson et Dalila: Bacchanale

Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 474 612-2. (i) Litaize, Chicago SO; (ii) O de Paris., Barenboim

A brilliantly virtuoso live performance from Eschenbach, with dazzling playing from Olivier Latry. Equally impressive is the superb playing of the Philadelphia Orchestra, with the strings wonderfully warm and glowing, coping with the often fast tempi set by Eschenbach. The couplings are equally spectacular.

With the Berlin Philharmonic in cracking form, Levine's is a grippingly dramatic reading, full of imaginative detail. The great thrust of the performance does not stem from fast pacing: rather it is the result of incisive articulation, while the clarity of the digital recording allows the pianistic detail to register crisply. The thunderous organ entry in the finale makes a magnificent effect, and the tension is held at white heat throughout the movement.

Tjeknavorian's recording of the Symphony made in Liverpool Cathedral is perhaps the most sumptuous and spectacular so far, with an overwhelming climax at the close of the finale, organ pedals effectively underpinning the spacious orchestral tutti. The Carnival of the Animals (with a robust father-and-son pianistic partnership) and Danse macabre have plenty of geniality under Bátiz but the playing of the Mexican Orchestra is less strong on finesse.

Dutoit brings to the symphony his usual gifts of freshness and a natural sympathy for Saint-Saëns's attractive score. There is a ready spontaneity here. The recording is very bright, with luminous strings given a thrilling brillance above the stave, perhaps a shade too much at times, but there is a balancing weight, and the reading effectively combines lyricism with passion.

Barenboim's inspirational 1976 performance of the Symphony glows with warmth and vitality from beginning to end. However, although the remastering has brought an excitingly vivid impact, especially in the finale of the Symphony, the effect is not entirely advantageous. While detail is sharper, the massed violins sound thinner and less natural at fortissimo level.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Bassoon Sonata, Op. 168; Clarinet Sonata, Op. 167; Caprice on Danish & Russian Airs for Flute, Oboe, Clarinet & Piano, Op. 79; Feuillet d'album, Op. 81 (arr. Taffanel); Oboe Sonata, Op. 166; Odelette for Flute & Piano, Op. 162; Romance in D flat for Flute & Piano, Op. 37; Tarantelle for Flute, Clarinet & Piano, Op. 6

🔑 Ⓑ  Cala CACD 1017 (2). Bennett, Daniel, Campbell, Gough & Ens. – DEBUSSY: Chamber Music ***

The Sonatas for Clarinet, for Oboe and for Bassoon are elegantly finished but surprising pieces, with an unaccustomed depth of feeling. The Caprice is a diverting kind of pot-pourri, inspired by the composer's visit to Russia in 1876. Paul Taffanel's arrangement of the Feuillet d'album, Op. 81, for flute, oboe and two each of clarinets, bassoons and horns, is a first recording and, like almost everything on this record, refreshing and elegant. That goes for the performances too, which are well recorded, though the piano is occasionally overpowering. Strongly recommended – and outstanding value.

Cello Sonatas 1 in C min., Op. 32; 2 in F, Op. 123; Le Cygne (trans. Godowski)

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67095. Lidström, Forsberg

Written 30 years apart, the two Cello Sonatas have an abundant and fluent invention, and are captivating when played with such fervour and polish. These artists radiate total conviction and a life-enhancing vitality and sensitivity.

Clarinet Sonata, Op. 167

 EMI 3 79787-2. Meyer, Maisenberg – MILHAUD: Scaramouche; DEVIENNE; POULENC: Sonatas ***

Sabine Meyer and Oleg Maisenberg open this diverting collection of French sonatas with Saint-Saëns, as melodically appealing as ever, but more thoughtfully nostalgic in mood than usual – perhaps because it is a late work, written in the composer's last year – until the sparkling closing Molto allegro, when the playing really takes off. Excellent recording, and the Milhaud and Poulenc works are even more entertaining.

Piano Quartet in B flat, Op. 41

Ⓜ  Virgin 4 82061-2 (2). Kandinsky Qt – CASTILLON; CHAUSSON; LEKEU: Piano Quartets ***

The B flat major Piano Quartet comes from 1875, and is a masterly piece. There is a Mendelssohnian feel to it in places, and the score is characterized by lucidity of texture and the grace and fluency of the writing. Good playing and recording, and thoroughly rewarding couplings.

Piano Trio 1 in F, Op. 18

(*) Ara. Z 6643. Golub-Kaplan-Carr Trio – DEBUSSY; FAURÉ: Trios *

Piano Trios 1 in F, Op. 18; 2 in E min., Op. 92

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 67538. Florestan Trio

(BB)  Naxos 8.550935. Joachim Trio

These are such captivating performances on Hyperion that they must take preference even over those listed below. They radiate a vital intelligence that shows both scores to best effect. All three players are superb, and Susan Tomes's pianism is particularly rewarding and virtuosic. The recording serves them excellently.

No quarrels with the playing of the Joachim Trio (Rebecca Hirsch, Caroline Dearnley and John Lenehan). The pianist in particular has elegance and charm. This is delightful and inventive music, well recorded – and well worth the money.

David Golub, Mark Kaplan and Colin Carr also give a very good account of themselves in the Piano Trio in F major. They are intelligent and imaginative. The piano dominates in the right way, and David Golub makes a particularly strong and vital impression. They are very well recorded too.

(i) String Quartets 1 in E min., Op. 112; 2 in G, Op. 153; (ii) Violin Sonatas 1 in D min., Op. 75; 2 in E flat, Op. 102; Berceuse, Op. 38; Elégies Op. 143 & 160; Romance, Op. 37

(BB) (*) Warner Apex 2564 61426-2 (2). (i) Viotti Qt; (ii) Charlier, Hubeau

Saint-Saëns was 64 years old when he wrote the First Quartet, and 84 when he composed its successor! Although neither finds him at his most inspired, a lifetime's experience and an effortless mastery are evident. As a glance at the opus numbers will show, the two Violin Sonatas are relatively late, the First coming from 1885 and the Second a decade later. Nevertheless, they are fresh and inventive and full of the composer's usual charm and fluency. Olivier Charlier makes a persuasive case for them.

Violin Sonata 1 in D min., Op. 75

Ⓝ 🔑 (BB)  EMI Encore 208122-2. Chang, Vogt – FRANCK: Violin Sonata; RAVEL: Violin Sonata ***

Ⓝ  Chan. 10510. Rimonda, Canziana – MASSENET: Méditation from 'Thaïs'; DANCLA: Petite Ecole de la mélodie, Op. 123 ***

 New Note Quartz QTZ 2002. Liebeck, Apekisheva – CHAUSSON: Poème; PROKOFIEV; YSAŸE: Violin Sonatas ***

 Essex (ADD) CDS 6044. Accardo, Canio – CHAUSSON: Concert ***

Sarah Chang and Lars Vogt make a winning partnership and give an infectiously vivacious account of this engaging sonata. Together with the Franck and the Ravel G major Sonata it makes for a strong contender in each work. Good recorded sound too.

The Saint-Saëns D minor Sonata, the finer of the two he wrote, is also given a winning performance on Chandos, with the characteristic structure of four movements in pairs cleanly brought out and the contrasts well established. At just under an hour of music this may not be a generous disc but it is an exceptionally attractive one.

Jack Liebeck and Katya Apekisheva find all Saint-Saëns's wistful charm, especially in the Adagio, while the Scherzo has the lightest rhythmic touch and the exhilarating finale is busy as a bee. The sound is good, although the violin's upper range can sometimes seem a little undernourished.

The performance of the D minor Sonata by Accardo and Canio is also marvellously played, selfless and dedicated. The recording too is very good, and this can be recommended strongly, if the coupling is suitable.

Violin Sonatas 1 in D min., Op. 75; 2 in E flat, Op. 102; Berceuse in B flat, Op. 38; Elégie, Op. 143; Triptyque, Op. 136

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 67100. Graffin, Devoyon

Violin Sonatas 1; 2 in E flat, Op. 102; Berceuse, Op. 38; Introduction & rondo capriccioso, Op. 28 (arr. Bizet)

(*) ASV CDDCA 892. Xue Wei, Lenehan

Of Saint-Saëns's two Violin Sonatas the second is especially appealing with its simple Andante and closing Allegro grazioso, in which Xue Wei seems thoroughly at home. He is also delightfully nimble in the Scherzo (as is his fine partner, John Lenehan) and he manages the moto perpetuo finale of the First Sonata with equal facility. Before that comes the lovely Berceuse, which shows Xue Wei's tone at its most appealing, but in the opening Introduction and Rondo capriccioso, played with real sparkle, the close microphones are unflattering to the violin's upper range.

However Hyperion score over its competitors, not only in the up-to-date and beautifully balanced recorded sound but also artistically. Pascal Devoyon is the most imaginative pianist and like his Korean colleague Philippe Graffin has both style and charm. This is an enjoyable disc in every way and more generous than the ASV collection.

ORGAN MUSIC

Bénédiction nuptial, Op. 9; Cyprès et Lauriers, Op. 156; Élévation, ou Communion, Op. 13; Fantaisies 1–3; 7 Improvisations; Marche religieuse, Op. 107; Offertoire in E; O salutaris hostia; 9 Pièces for Organ or Harmonium; Prédication aux oiseaux; Préludes in C, C min. & F; 6 Préludes & Fugues, Opp. 99 & 109; 3 Rhapsodies (on Breton folksongs), Op. 7; Thème, Variations et Choral de Dies irae

 Arte Nova 74321 35088-2 (4). Bleichen (organ of Church of St Johann, Schaffhausen)

We already have an outstanding SACD of some of Saint-Saëns's organ music on Capriccio, but if you want everything he wrote, then this Arte Nova set will do nicely. Stefan Bleichen has a fine organ at his disposal and he plays this music, all of it attractive and much admired in its day, very persuasively. The Preludes and Fugues are very diverse, and the Theme, Variations et Choral de Dies irae, which the composer never finished, is worthy of Liszt; and it is Liszt's music which inspired the Prédication aux oiseaux de St François d'Assise. Fine recording, but not as spectacular as the Capriccio disc.

Organ music: Bénédiction nuptiale, Op. 9; Cyprès; Fantaisie, Op. 101; Fantaisie (1857); Marche religieuse; Préludes et Fugues, Op. 99/1–3

Ⓝ  Hyp. CDA 7713. Smith

Saint-Saëns's organ music is very tuneful and attractive. This disc begins with one of the more flamboyant Préludes et Fugues and ends with the very appealing Fantaisie of 1857. There is much to delight the ear here and much writing of great charm. The Bénédiction nuptiale is particularly touching. In fact, much of this repertoire is more intimate than extrovert, with the composer impressing more by his rich harmonies, such as in the rather haunting Cyprès, than by showy writing. The closely miked organ of La Madeleine, Paris, is richly detailed and warm-sounding, and the performances by Andrew-John Smith are excellent.

Bénédiction nuptiale, Op. 9; Elévation ou Communion; Fantaisies: in E flat; in D, Op. 101; 2 Improvisations, Op. 150/1 & 7; Prélude & Fugue in E flat, Op. 99/3

🔑 ❁ * Capriccio Surround Sound SACD 71 046. Dorfmüller (Doms Klais organ, Altenburg Cathedral)

In spite of the celebrated Third Symphony, one does not think of Saint-Saëns first and foremost as a composer of organ music; yet in 1853 he became the resident at the church at Sainte-Merry (an appropriate name) and four years later was appointed to play the Cavaillé-Coll instrument at Sainte-Madeleine, where he continued until 1877. This CD offers a representative survey of his organ music, and very enjoyable it is. Joachim Dorfmüller is completely at one with the composer, and his performances on this ideal organ are spontaneous and totally involving, especially when the surround sound gives the listener the impression of sitting in the cathedral itself.

VOCAL MUSIC

Choral songs: Calme des nuits; Des pas dans l'allée; Les Fleurs et les arbres

🔑  Ph. 438 149-2. Monteverdi Ch., ORR, Gardiner – FAURÉ: Requiem; DEBUSSY; RAVEL: Choral Works ***

Three charming examples of Saint-Saëns's skill and finesse in drawing inspiration from early sources in a way remarkable at the time he was writing. Gardiner and his team give ideal performances, adding to the valuable list of rarities that he provides as coupling for the Fauré Requiem.

Mass, Op. 4

(BB)  Warner Apex 8573 89235-2. Lausanne Vocal Ens., Corboz; Alain; Fuchs (organ) – GOUNOD: Mass Chorale ***

The Op. 4 Mass of Saint-Saens, like its Gounod coupling, is an early work (1855) but although it still draws on the alternation tradition of the French organ mass, the addition of soloists and orchestral accompaniment makes for a more modern larger-scale work, with only the organ preserving the plainsong tradition. Here the Mass is performed with the orchestral music transcribed for a second organ by Léon Rogues, which is less than ideal. Nevertheless this is generally a fine performance. Even if the soloists are not as impressive as the chorus, the choral alternation with the main organ (magnificently played by Marie-Claire Alain) in the Sanctus is very impressive, while the O Salutaris brings a memorable floating choral line against a gently pointed organ accompaniment, leading to a romantically seraphic Agnus Dei. At its modest cost this disc is well worth having.

OPERA

Hélène (opera; complete); Nuit persane, Op. 26 bis

Ⓝ  Melba MR 301114-2. Illing, Davislim, McKendree-Wright, Mouellic (narrator), Belle Epoque Ch. & O, Victoria, Tourniaire (Melba, PO Box 415, Elwood, Victoria, Australia 3184; www.melbafoundation.org)

Saint-Saëns's one-act opera Hélène is based on the story of Helen of Troy. The composer wrote it with Nellie Melba in mind, so the name of the recording company is apt. The plot centres on the love between the heroine and Paris, which does not please Menelaus, her husband, a bit. Just the same, the pair of lovers set off for Troy as the opera closes. The work is modestly tuneful, well worth hearing, and felicitously conducted by Guillaume Tourniaire, with the Melba substitute Rosmunde Illing singing, if not voluptuously, clearly and brightly; but she is upstaged by the ardent Paris, tenor Steve Davislim. It is he who sings the bonus song-cycle, Nuit persane, in duet with the mezzo, Zan McKendree-Wright, which is introduced by the narrator, Amanda Mouellic. Altogether a novelty worth exploring, as it is excellently recorded and lavishly packaged.

Samson et Dalila (opera; complete; DVD version)

🔑 * Arthaus DVD 100 202. Domingo, Verrett, Wolfgang Brendel, San Francisco Opera Ch. & O, Rudel. (Dir: Nicolas Joel; V/D: Kirk Browning.)

Recorded in 1981 at the San Francisco Opera House, this DVD of Saint-Saëns's biblical opera offers a heavily traditional production with realistic sets and costumes like those in a Hollywood epic. Sporting a vast bouffant wig like a tea-cosy (ripe for Dalila's shears in Act II), Plácido Domingo is in magnificent, heroic voice, with Shirley Verrett also at her peak as Dalila, at once seductive and sinister. Other principals are first-rate too, and the chorus, so vital in this opera, sings with incandescent tone in a riproaring performance under Julius Rudel, culminating in a spectacular presentation of the fall of the Temple of Dagon. Most enjoyable.

Samson et Dalila (opera; complete; CD versions)

🔑 * EMI 5 09185-2 (2). Domingo, Meier, Fondary, Courtis, L'Opéra-Bastille Ch. & O, Myung-Whun Chung

Ⓜ (*) DG (ADD) 477 560-2 (2). Obraztsova, Domingo, Bruson, Lloyd, Thau, Ch. & O de Paris, Barenboim

Ⓜ (*) Ph. 475 8706 (2). Carreras, Baltsa, Estes, Burchuladze, Bav. R. CH. & RSO, C. Davis

In the EMI CD set, Domingo with Chung gives a deeper, more thoughtful performance than on DG, broader, with greater repose and a sense of power in reserve. When the big melody appears in Dalila's seduction aria, Mon cœur s'ouvre, Chung's idiomatic conducting encourages a tender restraint, where others produce a full-throated roar. Meier may not have an ideally sensuous voice for the role, with some unwanted harshness in her expressive account of Dalila's first monologue, but her feeling for words is strong and the characterization vivid. Generally Chung's speeds are on the fast side, yet the performance does not lack weight, with some first-rate singing in the incidental roles from Alain Fondary, Samuel Ramey and Jean-Philippe Courtis. Apart from backwardly placed choral sound, the recording is warm and well focused.

Barenboim proves as passionately dedicated an interpreter of Saint-Saëns here as he did in the Third Symphony, sweeping away any Victorian cobwebs. It is important, too, that the choral passages, so vital in this work, be sung with this sort of freshness, and Domingo has rarely sounded happier in French music, the bite as well as the heroic richness of the voice well caught. Renato Bruson and Robert Lloyd are both admirable too; sadly, however, the key role of Dalila is given an unpersuasive, unsensuous performance by Obraztsova, with her vibrato often verging on a wobble. The recording is as ripe as the music deserves.

When the role of Samson is not one naturally suited to Carreras, it is amazing how strong and effective his performance is, even if top notes under stress grow uneven. Even the very strain seems to add to the intensity of communication, above all the great aria in the last Act, when Samson, blinded, is turning the mill. Unevenness of production is more serious, with Agnes Baltsa as Dalila. The microphone often brings out her vibrato, turning it into a judder, hers is hardly the seductive portrait required in this role, and it is a shortcoming that, like the rest of the cast, she is not a native French-speaker. Both Burchuladze as the Old Hebrew and Simon Estes as Abimelech equally seem intent on misusing once fine voices, but Jonathan Summers as the High Priest of Dagon is far more persuasive.

SAINT-COLOMBE
(died c. 1700)

Concerts à deux violes, Volume IV (Rougeville): Concerts 51–67

🔑 * ATMA ACD2 2278 (2). Napper & Little

In spite of the film mentioned below, Saint-Colombe's life is shrouded in mystery. The latest research suggests that he was born in about 1630, and that he lived in Paris as a famous virtuoso and teacher; but nothing is certain about his last years. Undoubtedly his music was very influential indeed. The manuscript of the 67 Concerts à deux violes was discovered at the end of the 1960s. Each of the four volumes is given the title of the first piece, in this instance Rougeville, which is the longest of the concerts here and is in the form of a very free chaconne, sometimes with the two soloists echoing each other. All the pieces are titled, often wittily. However, much of the music is sober and solemn and quite seriously expressive. Susie Napper and Margaret Little give really excellent performances, and they are well recorded. But be warned: two bass viols playing togther creates a limited tonal range and is an acquired taste; not everyone will find this repertoire easy listening.

Concerts for 2 Bass Violas da gamba: III (Le Tendre); VIII (La Conférence); XLII (Dalain); LI (La Rougeville); LXVII (Le Figure)

(*) Naïve Astrée ES 9933. Savall, W. Kuijken

Le Retour; Tombeau 'les regrets'

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.550750. Spectre de la Rose – MARAIS: Tombeau pour M. de Saint-Colombe etc. ***

The success of the film (Tous les matins du monde) about this reclusive composer and his relationship with his pupil, Marin Marais, has led to the soundtrack becoming a bestseller. However, this enterprising and inexpensive Naxos recital includes the 'hits' from the film. The two Saint-Colombe works included are austerely but certainly touchingly played by a fresh-sounding 'authentic' group led by Alison Crum (viola da gamba) and Marie Knight (baroque violin). The Naxos recording is vivid, but its forward balance means that for a realistic effect a modest setting of the volume control should be chosen.

Saint-Colombe's music is certainly austere and uncompromising, but if you want to hear it without frills then the combination of Jordi Savall and Wieland Kuijken is as authentic and responsive as you will get, and they are recorded vividly.

SALIERI, Antonio (1750–1825)

Overtures: Angiolina, ossia Il matrimonio per sussurro; Cublai, gran kan de'Tartari; Falstaff, ossia Le tre burle; La locandiera. Sinfonia Il giorno onomastico; Sinfonia Veneziana; 26 Variations on La follia di Spagna

🔑 * Chan. 9877. LMP, Bamert

The music here brings a profusion of ear-tickling ideas and the secondary themes for his concise and lively overtures are most engaging. Tuttis, with trumpets, are invariably bright and rather grand, but the lighter scoring shows a nice feeling for woodwind colour and there is much elegant phrasing for the violins. Perhaps the most striking work is the kaleidoscopic set of 26 Variations on 'La follia' which occupies eighteen minutes, continually changing colour and mood, often dramatically, sometimes bizarrely, but usually entertainingly (although there is an element of repetition). The London Mozart Players play all this music most winningly, with vigour, polish and charm and the Chandos recording is state of the art.

Double Concerto in C for Flute & Oboe

🔑  Chan. 9051. Milan, Theodore, City of L. Sinf., Hickox – MOZART: Flute & Harp Concerto; Oboe Concerto ***

Salieri's innocently insubstantial Double concerto is quite transformed by the charisma and sheer style of the solo playing from Susan Milan and David Theodore. The exquisite playing of Theodore in the simple melody of the Largo and the perfect blending of the two soloists turn it into a really memorable slow movement, and the flute and oboe chase each other round engagingly in their winning decorations of the nicely poised Minuet finale. Hickox's accompaniment is both polished and genial, and the recording casts a pleasing glow over the whole proceedings.

Fortepiano Concertos: in B flat and C

🔑 Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 0927 49556-2. Staier, Concerto Köln – STEFFAN: Fortepiano Concerto ***

These two attractive works show Salieri as quite a dab hand at a keyboard concerto, with a distinct personality of his own. Overall the performances could hardly be more persuasive, with the bold, slightly abrasive tuttis from the Concerto Köln adding to the strength of characterization. The recording is first class.

Falstaff, or The 3 Tricks (complete)

 Chan. 9613 (2). Franceschetto, Myeounghee, De Filippo, Chialli, Luis Ciuffo, Bettoschi, Valli, Milan Madrigalists & Guido Cantelli, O, Veronesi

Like Verdi, Salieri and his librettist ignore the Falstaff of the histories. They tell the story within the framework of the conventional two-act opera of the period with crisp and brief numbers leading to extended finales. Though Fenton and Anne (Nannetta) are omitted, Mistress Page (here renamed Slender) is given her husband. Though it never comes near to matching Mozart, it is all great fun, particularly in performances as fresh and lively as these.

'Arie di bravura' from: Cublai gran Khan del Tartari; L'Europa riconosciuta; La finta scena; Der Rauchfangekehrer; Semiramide

 Virgin 3 95250-2. Damrau, Le Cercle de l'Harmonie, Rhorer (with RIGHINI: Arias) – MOZART: Arias ***

Diana Damrau planned her début recital to juxtapose arias of Mozart alongside those of Salieri, and the result is fascinating; while confirming that Mozart was by far the greater composer, Salieri's own musical skills are well demonstrated. He is very dependent on brilliant, ear-catching coloratura, which Damrau despatches with thrilling ease. And what are especially striking here are Salieri's orchestral introductions for the arias from Semiramide, and L'Europa riconosciuta, which feature seductive orchestral woodwind writing in the first, and an engaging oboe solo to introduce the second. Throughout, the orchestral playing is excellent and gives admirable support to Damrau's constant spectacular bursts of virtuoso fioritura and her sensitive lyrical singing. A memorable disc.

SALLINEN, Aulis (born 1935)

(i; ii) Cello Concerto, Op. 44; (iii) Chamber Music I, Op. 38; (i; iii) Chamber Music III, Op. 58; (iii) Some Aspects of Peltoniemi Hintrik's Funeral March; (iv) Sunrise Serenade (for 2 trumpets and chamber orchestra), Op. 63; (ii) Shadows, Op. 52; Symphonies 4, Op. 49; 5 (Washington Mosaics), Op. 57

Ⓑ  Finlandia 4509 99966-2 (2). (i) Noras; (ii) Helsinki PO, or (iii) Finland Sinfonietta, Kamu; (iv) Harjanne, Välimäki, Avanti CO

This Finlandia Double brings an extensive survey of Sallinen's music and provides an inexpensive entry into the composer's world. Apart from the symphonies, the Cello Concerto of 1976 is the most commanding piece here. Sallinen's ideas resonate in the mind. Artos Noras has its measure and plays with masterly eloquence. The performances, under Okko Kamu, are very impressive and the recording quite exemplary. Overall, excellent value.

(i) Symphonies 1, 3; (ii) Chorali; (iii) Cadenze for Solo Violin; (iv) Elegy for Sebastian Knight; (v) String Quartet 3

 BIS (ADD) CD 41. (i) Finnish RSO, Kamu; (ii) Helsinki PO, Berglund; (iii) Paavo Pohjola; (iv) Frans Helmerson; (v) Voces Intimae Qt

The First Symphony, in one movement, is diatonic and full of atmosphere, as indeed is the Third, a powerful, imaginative piece which appears to be haunted by the sounds and smells of nature. The performances under Okko Kamu are excellent. The recordings are from the 1970s and are all very well balanced. Highly recommended.

Symphonies 2 (Symphonic Dialogue for Solo Percussion Player & Orchestra), Op. 29; 6 (From a New Zealand Diary), Op. 65; Sunrise Serenade, Op. 63

 BIS CD 511. Malmö SO, Okko Kamu

The Second Symphony, like the First, is a one-movement affair lasting a quarter of an hour. Its sub-title, Symphonic Dialogue for Solo Percussion Player and Orchestra, gives an accurate idea of its character, pitting the fine soloist, Gerd Mortensen, against the remaining orchestral forces. The main work is the ambitious Sixth Symphony. Like the Third Symphony, it is powerfully evocative of natural landscape; indeed, it is one of the strongest and most imaginative of all Sallinen's symphonies. Okko Kamu gets very responsive playing from the Malmö Symphony Orchestra in both symphonies and in the slight but effective Sunrise Serenade. The recording is excellent.

Symphonies 4, Op. 49; 5 (Washington Mosaics), Op. 57; Shadows (Prelude for Orchestra), Op. 52

 BIS CD 607. Malmö SO, James DePreist

Suffice it to say that these performances by the Malmö Symphony Orchestra under James DePreist are every bit as good as the Helsinki rivals listed above; if anything, the recording has more impressive range and definition.

Kullervo (opera)

 Ondine ODE 780-3T. Hynninen, Sallinen, Jakobsson, Silvasti, Vihavainen, Finnish Nat. Op. Ch. & O, Söderblom

Although the theme will be familiar from Sibelius's early symphony of the same name, Sallinen has based his Kullervo on the play by Aleksis Kivi and he wrote the libretto himself. The plot emerges from a mixture of narration, in which the chorus plays a central role, and dreams. The opera is a compelling musical drama. There is impressive variety of pace and atmosphere, and the black voices of the Finnish Opera Chorus resonate in the memory. So, too, do the impressive performances of Jorma Hynninen as Kullervo and Anna-Lisa Jakobsson as the smith's young wife and, indeed, the remainder of the cast and the Finnish National Opera Orchestra under Ulf Söderblom. While Kullervo may not be a great opera, it is gripping and effective musical theatre, and the Ondine recording has excellent presence and detail.

SAMMARTINI, Giovanni

(1700/1–75)

Aventura in D, JC 14; Overturas in C min., JC 9; F, JC 33, 36 & 37; Sinfonias in D, JC 15; G, JC 39; Sonatas in C, JC 7; in A, JC 65; Del Sigr. Baptista St Martino a 4 Stromenti

 Dynamic CDS 460. Milan Classica CO, Gini

Sammartini composed at a time when the sinfonia was in a state of flux in Italy. He wrote some 20 three-movement works, calling them by different names, although the Sinfonia in G, JC 39, had an additional Minuet with variations. They are scored for strings except for the Overtura a 6 in F, JC 33, which includes a couple of braying horns in the outer movements. The allegros are in baroque style, slow movements are gently elegant or nostalgic (as in the Sinfonia in D, JC 15), occasionally quite touching, as is the Largo of the Sonata in A, JC 65. They are essentially slight but certainly enjoyable when played as stylishly and affectionately as they are here. The recording is excellent too, in a pleasing acoustic, and the disc's presentation is handsome with good notes.

SARASATE, Pablo (1844–1908)

Carmen Fantasy, Op. 25; Introduction et Tarantelle, Op. 43; Zigeunerweisen

🔑 Ⓜ * EMI (ADD/DDD) 5 62594-2. Perlman, Abbey Road Ens., Foster – PAGANINI: Violin Concerto 1 ****

Perlman's Carmen Fantasy makes a dazzling encore for his unsurpassed account of the Paganini Concerto, and for this reissue in the 'Perlman Edition' EMI have added more dazzling accounts of two other showpieces, the Introduction et Tarantelle and Zigeunerweisen, recorded digitally in 1995, in which Perlman's tone is even more luscious.

Carmen Fantasy, Op. 25

 Claudio CB 5256-2. Jin, LSO, Wordsworth – LALO: Symphonie espagnole; PROKOFIEV: Solo Violin Sonata.  (with KROLL: Banjo and Fiddle, orch. Bradbury; TARREGA: Recuerdos de la Alhambra, arr. Ricci **(*))

Min Jin does not quite have Perlman's flamboyant panache in Sarasate's brilliant arrangement of Bizet, but her airily fragile approach is equally spontaneous and refreshingly different. Against a strong backing from Barry Wordsworth and the LSO, the solo playing is still dazzling, but never uses effect for its own sake. Very good recording, much more naturally balanced than Perlman.

Carmen Fantasy, Op. 25; Zigeunerweisen, Op. 20

 Ph. 464 531-2. Suwanai, Budapest Fest O, Iván Fischer – DVOŘÁK: Violin Concerto; Masurek ***

Suwanai's virtuoso flair comes out not just in bold bravura playing, but in the daring range of dynamic, with Suwanai communing with herself in extreme, hushed pianissimos. An unexpected if attractive coupling for the Dvořák concerto, very well recorded.

Zigeunerweisen, Op. 20

🔑  DG 431 815-2. Shaham, LSO, Foster – WIENIAWSKI: Violin Concertos 1 & 2, etc. ***

🔑 Ⓜ () RCA mono 09026 61753-2. Heifetz, RCA Victor SO, Steinberg – CHAUSSON: Poème (*); LALO: Symphony espagnole ((*)); SAINT-SAËNS: Havanaise, etc. ()

Ⓜ () EMI mono 7 64251-2. Heifetz, LPO, Barbirolli – SAINT-SAËNS: Havanaise, etc.; VIEUXTEMPS: Concerto 4; WIENIAWSKI: Concerto 2 ()

Gil Shaham plays Sarasate's sultry and dashing gypsy confection with rich timbre, languorous ardour and a dazzling display of fireworks at the close.

What can one say about the Heifetz performances except that they are unsurpassed: they are dazzling in the fireworks and with the most luscious tone and sophisticated colouring in the lyrical melody. The recording is dry but faithful. This is a marvellous disc.

Navarra (for violin and piano)

 Warner 0927 45664-2. Hanslip, Ovrutsky – BRUCH: Violin Concertos 1 & 3 ***

The Sarasate showpiece with its jaunty Spanish dance-rhythms makes a sparkling extra on Chloë Hanslip's fine recording of the Bruch Violin Concertos 1 and 3. Here she is sensitively accompanied by Mikhail Ovrutsky.

SARUM CHANT

Missa in gallicantu; Hymns: A solis ortus cardine; Christe Redemptor omnium; Salvator mundi; Domine; Veni Redemptor omnium

 Gimell CDGIM 017. Tallis Scholars, Phillips

Filling in our knowledge of early church music, the Tallis Scholars under Peter Phillips here present a whole disc of chant according to the Salisbury rite – in other words Sarum Chant – which, rather than the regular Gregorian style, was what churchgoers of the Tudor period and earlier in England heard at their devotions. The greater part of the record is given over to the setting of the First Mass of Christmas, intriguingly entitled Missa in gallicantu or Mass at Cock-Crow. Though this is simply monophonic (the men's voices alone are used), it is surprising what antiphonal variety there is. The record is completed with four hymns from the Divine Offices of Christmas Day. The record is warmly atmospheric in the characteristic Gimell manner.

SATIE, Erik (1866–1925)

Gymnopédies 1 & 3 (orch. Debussy); Relâche (ballet); Parade (ballet); Gnossienne 3 (orch. Poulenc); La belle excentrique; 5 Grimaces pour le songe d'une nuit d'été (orch. Milhaud)

(BB) (*) EMI Encore 3 41444-2. Toulouse Capitole O, Plasson

Plasson gets sensitive and lively performances from the Toulouse orchestra, though in Parade they do not have quite the same circus spirit and abandon as did the LSO for Dorati in the 1960s. However, few collectors will quarrel with these performances at this modest cost, and the music has much gamin-like charm. Moreover, this is better than many recent recordings from the Salle-aux-Grains in Toulouse; detail is more transparent and the textures somewhat better observed.

PIANO MUSIC

Piano, 4 Hands: (i) La Belle excentrique; 3 Morceaux en forme de poire. Solo piano: Avant-dernières pensées; Caresse; Chapitres tournés en tous sens; Croquis et agaceries d'un gros bonhomme en bois; Danse de travers; Descriptions automatiques; Embryons desséchés; 6 Gnossiennes; 3 Gymnopédies; Heures séculaires et instantanées; Je te veux; 2 Oeuvres de jeunesse: Valse ballet; Fantaisie valse. Passacaille; Les pantins dansant; Le Piccadilly (Marche); Première Pensée Rose + Croix; Petite ouverture à danser; Pièces froides I: Airs à faire fuir; II: Danse de travers. Poudre d'or; Prélude de la porte héroïque du ciel; Prélude et tapisserie; Sonatine bureaucratique; 3 Valses distinguées du précieux dégoûté

Ⓝ 🔑 (BB)  Virgin 5 22050-2 (2). Queffélec; (i) with Collard

Although we think Pascal Rogé is very special in this repertoire, Anne Queffélec has strong claims too. She can be quirky, as in the opening Croquis et agaceries d'un gros bonhomme en bois or, more particularly, the satirical Valse ballet. In the Trois morceaux en forme de poire and the lively La Belle excentrique she is partnered by the late lamented Catherine Collard, and how brilliantly they end the first CD with that final quartet of sparkling vignettes, opening with the dazzling Grande ritournelle and ending with the irrepressible Can-can 'grand-mondain'.

The second disc includes the celebrated Gnossiennes and Gymnopédies, beautifully evoked, and fills out the collection to make it one of the most comprehensive in the catalogue. Throughout, her playing has much subtlety and character, and the music is dispatched with great character and style. Nor does she possess less charm than Pascal Rogé. The piano sound is excellent: it is firm, clean and fresh, with a splendid tonal bloom. This is very recommendable.

Piano, 4 hands: (i) La Belle excentrique; 3 Morceaux en forme de poire. Solo piano: Descriptions automatiques; Embryons desséchés; 3 Gnossiennes; 3 Gymnopédies; 2 Valses

Ⓑ  Virgin 3 63296-2. Queffélec; (i) with Collard

This bargain reissue also includes solo items from the earlier recital above, dating from 1988, notably the celebrated Gymnopédies and Gnossiennes. All the music here is dispatched with great character and style, and these artists are exceptionally well served by the engineers.

Music for Piano, 4 hands: (i) La Belle excentrique; 3 Morceaux en forme de poire. Solo piano: Avant-dernières pensées; Embryons desséchés; 6 Gnossiennes; Croquis et agaceries d'un gros bonhomme en bois; 3 Gymnopédies; 5 Nocturnes; Sonatine bureaucratique; Véritables préludes flasques (pour un chien)

Ⓜ  EMI 5 67239-2. Ciccolini; (i) with Tacchino

Aldo Ciccolini recorded this selection during the 1980s and he is completely in sympathy with their style. He is totally inside this music and makes the most of its (not particularly wide) contrasts of mood and atmosphere. The recorded sound, harder in outline and not as rich as afforded to Pascal Rogé in his complete survey on Decca, is still very good. And some may feel that the slight edge given to the sharply articulated pieces (the Embryons desséchés and the Sonatine bureaucratique for instance) adds to their witty vitality. Gabriel Tacchino joins his colleague for the four-handed pieces. In many ways this is one of the most distinctive Satie collections in the catalogue.

Avant-dernières pensées; Chapitres tournés en tous sens; Gnossiennes 1–5; 5 Grimaces; 3 Gymnopédies; Je te veux (Valse); Nocturnes 1, 3 & 5; Passacaglia; Pièces froides (Airs à faire fuir 1–3); Le piège de Méduse; Ragtime Parade; Rêverie du pauvre; Sonatine bureaucratique; Sports et divertissements; Valse-ballet

🔑 (BB)  Regis (ADD) RRC 1327. McCabe

This attractive and generous (77 minutes) anthology draws on a pair of Saga records which have been much praised by us over the years. John McCabe has the full measure of Satie's understated melancholy and lyrical nostalgia, and he also has insights of his own to offer. His style might be described as gently cool: the three Gymnopédies, for instance, are played a little slower than usual, and the Gnossiennes are very delicately evoked. His programme ranges from the simple, almost Chopinesque Valse-ballet, Satie's first published piano piece, to the three Nocturnes of 1919–20, which are exquisitely played. The Ragtime Parade is a transcription from his ballet

Parade, in which his collaborators were none other than Diaghilev, Massine and Picasso, but its style is not unlike Gottschalk. The intelligent planning of this recital and the penetrating response of the pianism place this inexpensive CD among the most desirable Satie collections, and the recording, though not vividly present like the Virgin Queffélec recital, is natural and intimate, within a highly appropriate ambience.

Chapitres tournés en tous sens; Croquis et agaceries d'un gros bonhomme en bois; Le Fils des étoiles; Gymnopédies; Je te veux (valse); Prélude et tapisserie; Le Piccadilly; Pièces froides; Le Piège de Méduse; Poudre d'or; Sonatine bureaucratique; Sports et divertissements; Véritables préludes flasques (pour un chien); Vexations

Ⓜ * RCA 09026 63976-2. Dickinson

Peter Dickinson has made Satie's music a centrepoint of his repertoire, and his thoughtful approach to this highly rewarding music is all his own, often more withdrawn than usual. By his side Ciccolini sounds almost brittle. The Trois Gymnopédies, taken very slowly, have a grave dignity, and Dickinson finds a captivating delicacy of feeling for the Chapitres tournés en tous sens. The Sonatine bureaucratique is playful rather than ironic, its Andante most delicate, while the Pièces froides have a distinct air of nostalgia.

Piccadilly is as perky as ever, and the charming rhythmic diversity of the dance vignettes which make up Le Piège de Méduse is matched by the Sports et divertissements, which have a much wider range of character and feeling here than in most performances. Throughout, Dickinson's variety of articulation and colour is fully at the service of the composer, and he departs in an air of mystery with his gentle account of the enigmatic Vexations. The recording is very real indeed.

Embryons desséchés; 6 Gnossiennes; 3 Gymnopédies; Heures séculaires et instantanées; Nocturnes 1–5; Sonatine bureaucratique; Sports et divertissements

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55176. Seow

The Singapore-born pianist Yitkin Seow is a good stylist; his approach is fresh and his playing crisp and marked by consistent beauty of sound. His playing has a quiet reticence that is well suited to this repertoire. The recording is eminently truthful.

Embryons desséchés; 6 Gnossiennes; 3 Gymnopédies; Je te veux; Nocturne 4; Le Piccadilly; 4 Préludes flasques; Prélude et tapisserie; Sonatine bureaucratique; Vieux sequins et vieilles cuirasses

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca 475 7527. Rogé

Pascal Rogé gave Satie his compact disc debut with this fine recital which is splendidly caught by the microphones. So this is a perfect candidate for Decca's series of Originals. Rogé has a real feeling for this repertoire and he conveys its bitter-sweet quality and its grave melancholy as well as he does its lighter qualities. He produces, as usual, consistent beauty of tone, and this is well projected by the recording.

SAUER, Emil von (1862–1942)

Piano Concerto 1 in E min.

🔑  Hyp. CDA 66790. Hough, CBSO, Foster – SCHARWENKA: Piano Concerto 4 ***

As a greatly admired virtuoso, Emil von Sauer was an able exponent of the Scharwenka concerto; and his own work, although lighter in feeling, makes comparable demands on the dexterity of the soloist. Its delightful melodic vein and style have much in common with Saint-Saëns. Stephen Hough sparkles his way through its glittering upper tessitura. Altogether this makes a perfect foil for the more ambitious concerto with which it is paired. Splendid recording, with a nice sense of scale.

SAUGUET, Henri (1901–89)

Mélodie concertante for Cello & Orchestra

 Russian Disc (ADD) RDCD 11108. Rostropovich, USSR SO, composer – BRITTEN: Cello Symphony **(*)

Sauguet belongs at the heart of the Gallic tradition, and the opening of his Mélodie concertante has a dream-like pastoral. Its source of inspiration was an old, persistent memory of a young cellist from Bordeaux. It is an extended improvisation, based on a haunting, introspective theme heard at the beginning of the piece. The performance is, of course, authoritative in every way, and the 1964 analogue recording sounds every bit as good as it did in its fine LP format.

SCARLATTI, Alessandro (1660–1725)

(i) Cello Sonata 2 in C min.; (ii) Toccata in A; (iii) La concettione della Beata Vergine (Oratorio); Euridice dall'Inferno (Cantata)

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.570950. (i), Sills, Savino; (ii) Dirst; (iii) Givens, Ars Lyrica, Houston

A well-planned collection showing all sides of Scarlatti's output, with the Cello Sonata persuasively played on a baroque instrument and featured with the inventive harpsichord Toccata as an interlude between the solo cantata, Euridice in the Underworld and the more substantial (31-minute) oratorio celebrating the conception of the Virgin Mary. All this music is highly expressive and the members of Ars Lyrica respond admirably, with the pure-toned soprano Melissa Givens standing out from the other soloists. Excellent recording and full translations add to the listener's pleasure.

Sonatas for Recorder, 2 Violins & Continuo in A min. & F. Cantatas: Bella Dama di nome Santa; Perchè tacete, regolati concenti?

(*) MDG 309 0632-2. Wessel, Musica Alta Ripa (with FRANCESCO SCARLATTI: Cantata in un'ostante) – DOMENICO SCARLATTI: Cantata: Doppo lungo servire **(*)

A well-planned record in that it not only includes music by

Domenico Scarlatti, but also a charming pastoral cantata by Alessandro's brother, Francesco. The works by Alessandro include a pair of lively Trio Sonatas and two Cantatas, each with an instrumental obbligato to tickle the ear; Bella Dama uses a flute and Perchè tacete a solo violin. Musica Alta Ripa's instrumental contribution is first class, and Kai Wessel sings with espressivo and style. The only possible reservation is that his male alto timbre, which is slightly 'hooty', may not appeal to all listeners.

Cantatas

(i; ii) Cantatas: Correa nel seno amato; Già lusingato appieno; (ii) Variations on 'La Follia'

🔑 (BB) * Hyp. Helios CDH 55233. (i; ii) Dawson, Purcell Qt; (ii) Woolley (harpsichord)

A delightful juxtaposition of two pastoral cantatas, the first picturing the traditional lovelorn shepherd, the second telling of an English hero who is about to cross the sea to claim his throne and must leave behind him his much loved queenly wife and son. Both are ravishingly sung by Lynne Dawson and tastefully accompanied by the Purcell Quartet while, in between, Robert Woolley, as an interlude, winningly plays an inventive set of Variations on the famous 'La Follia'. Splendid recording and full texts and translations. Not to be missed.

Cantata per la Notte di Natale: Abramo, il tuo sembiante (Christmas Eve cantata)

🔑 * Naïve OP 30-156. Bertini, Fedi, Cavina, Naglia, Foresti, Concerto Italiano, Alessandrini – CORELLI: Christmas concerto grosso in G min., Op. 6/8 ***

This delightful semi-operatic cantata presents the Nativity through the eyes of five figures from the Old Testament, Abraham (bass), Ezekiel (soprano), Isaiah (tenor), Jeremiah (alto) and Daniel (soprano), who are all together in Limbo, where they await the Messiah. There is splendid music for all the soloists, and especially the excellent male alto, Claudio Cavina, who, as Jeremiah, foresees and laments the coming suffering and death of Christ. The whole performance bursts with life under Rinaldo Alessandrini, and makes a fine entertainment, touching, but never solemn. Corelli's most famous concerto grosso, with its Pastorale closing movement, is used as a vivacious introduction. The recording sparkles and this is very highly recommended.

Motets: Domine, refugium factus es nobis; O magnum mysterium

Ⓑ  Double Decca (ADD) 443 868-2 (2). Schütz Ch. of L., Roger Norrington – BONONCINI: Stabat Mater ; PERGOLESI: Magnificat in C; Stabat Mater (*); DOMENICO SCARLATTI: Stabat Mater; CALDARA: Crucifixus; LOTTI: Crucifixus ***

These two motets are fine pieces that show how enduring the Palestrina tradition was in 17th-century Italy. They are noble in conception and are beautifully performed here and, given first-class sound, make a fine bonus for this enterprising Double Decca collection of Italian baroque choral music.

La Giuditta (Oratorio)

Ⓝ  Dynamic CDS 596. Landy, Pichon, Ghazarossian, Nice Bar. Ens., Bezzina

It appears that Scarlatti twice set the story of Judith from Bethulia (which is under siege by the Assyrians) and Holofernes, their leader, who is hoping to seduce her. The version which has survived and which is recorded here is known as the 'Cambridge' Giuditta, as its manuscript is held in the Rowe Music Library of King's College. There is no chorus, and three soloists carry the oratorio between them, Giuditta (soprano), Holofernes (tenor) and the Nurse (contralto) who has some of the finest music, including the sleep aria in Part II, Dormi o fulmine di guerra. The score consists of short recitatives and compressed arias and a few duets, which to some extent limits its lyrical expansiveness. The climax, when the Nurse sings the inebriated Holofernes to sleep so that Judith can take his sword and successfully cut off his head, lacks the kind of melodramatic drama one would expect. Even so, the scene works well lyrically, and the close of the oratorio, when Judith bravely returns to her people with Holofernes's head held high (!) is accompanied with her longest aria. La Giuditta is a fascinating discovery, and it is impressively performed here, with the essential full translation provided.

Oratorio per la Santissima Trinità

🔑 * Virgin 5 45666-2. Invernizzi, Gens, Genaux, Agnew, Abbondanza, Europa Galante Ens., Biondi

When, in 1715 in Naples, Alessandro Scarlatti wrote this, one of the last of his 40 oratorios, his music was coming to be regarded as out of date. It did not help that, unlike most of his religious oratorios, based on biblical sources, the subject was undramatic, a theological discussion on the doctrine of the Trinity, personalized in the allegorical figures of Faith, Divine Love, Theology, Time and Infidelity, that last improbably a tenor role, excellently taken here by Paul Agnew. What this fresh account of the oratorio under Fabio Biondi demonstrates throughout is the liveliness of Scarlatti's inspiration. The 49 sections last a little over an hour, with brief recitatives punctuating dozens of tiny arias and duets, almost all brisk. Outstanding in a first-rate team of soloists is the ravishing Véronique Gens as Divine Love.

(i) Salve Regina; (i; ii) Stabat Mater; (iii) Motet: Quae est ista

(*) Virgin 5 45366-2. (i) Lesne; (ii) Piau; (i–iii) Novelli; Il Seminario Musicale

Gérard Lesne is heard at his finest in Scarlatti's eloquent A minor setting (one of five) of the Salve Regina, expressive and dramatic by turns. But when he joins with Sandrine Piau for the Stabat Mater the combination of voices is characterful in its contrast rather than a vocal symbiosis. Sandrine Piau's singing is pure, and tenderly touching, Lesne is more dramatic and brings a wider range of vocal colour, but his contribution is less moving. The two singers are successfully joined by the tenor Jean-François Novelli for the attractive closing motet, Quae est ista, which is widely varied in style; but again it is the soprano who stands out. Il Seminario give pleasing authentic support and this is a stimulating collection, but collectors primarily interested in the Stabat Mater will find that the performance by Gemma Bertagnolli and Sara Mingardo with the Concerto Italiano remains unsurpassed (see below).

Stabat Mater

🔑 Ⓑ * Naïve OPS 30406. Bertagnolli, Mingardo, Concerto Italiano, Alessandrini – PERGOLESI: Stabat Mater *** ❀

If somewhat less theatrical than Pergolesi's setting, Scarlatti's music brings continual bursts of vitality to contrast with the rich flowing polyphonic lines when the soprano and alto voices are combined. There are memorably expressive solos for both singers and, as in the companion work, they combine touchingly for the work's closing benediction before the tension lifts at the coda. Once again both the radiant soprano, Gemma Bertagnolli, and the dark-voiced contralto, Sara Mingardo, rise fully to the challenge of this remarkable music, and Alessandrini's instrumental support could not be more persuasive or authentic.

SCARLATTI, Domenico

(1685–1757)

The Good-humoured Ladies (ballet suite; arr. Tommasini)

() Testament mono SBT 1309. Paris Conservatoire O, Désormière (with IPPOLITOV-IVANOV: Caucasian Sketches, Op. 10; TCHAIKOVSKY: Sleeping Beauty: Suite ())

(BB) (*) Sony (ADD) SBK 60311. Cleveland O, Lane – RESPIGHI: The Birds; Church Windows **(*)

The Good-humoured Ladies was a Diaghilev commission which enjoyed much success in its day; it draws on Scarlatti in much the same way as Stravinsky drew on Pergolesi in Pulchinella. Tommasini scores with great wit and Roger Désormière directs with unerring style and character. This 1951 performance, originally coupled with Les biches, is unlikely to be surpassed except in recording quality. It was produced (like the rest of the programme) by John Culshaw, and readers should snap it up.

Scarlatti's music in Tommasini's witty arrangement chatters along very like a group of dear old ladies gossiping over tea. Louis Lane directs freshly an enjoyable account of this delightfully light-hearted music, so wittily scored. The Clevelanders respond with style and delicacy, and the 1970 Severance Hall recording is warm and pleasing, even if ideally it could be a little more transparent. However, the so-called 'Cats' Fugue' is neatly and clearly articulated, and Lane scores a bonus point by including the Overture.

Keyboard Sonatas (complete)

Vol. 1. Venice I & II (1752): Essercizi per gravicembalo, Kk.1–30: Sonatas Kk.49; 98; 99; 129; 148–201 (Nim. 1725 (6))

Vol. 2. Venice III & IV (1753): Sonatas Kk.206–95 (Nim. 1726 (6))

Vol. 3. Venice VI–VIII (1753–4): Sonatas Kk.296–355; 358–87 (Nim. 1727 (6))

Vol. 4. Venice IX–XI (1754–6): Sonatas Kk.388–451; 454–6; 388–451; 454–83 (Nim. 1728 (6))

Vol. 5. Venice XII–XIII (1756–7) Sonatas Kk.484–543. (i) Continuo Sonatas, Kk.78; 81; 88–91 (with treble or descant recorders) (with HANDEL: Sonata in F, HWV 405. A. SCARLATTI: Sinfonia in C min. (both for treble recorders)) (Nim. 1729 (5))

Vol. 6. Venice XIV (1742): Sonatas Kk.3; 10–12; 17; 31; 36–38; 43–77; 79–80; 82–87; 92–93. Venice XV (1749): Kk.96; 98–138 (Nim. 1730 (6))

Vol. 7. Appendices & Diversities: 23 Sonatas from existing and unpublished manuscripts, including Kk.95; 97; 141–6; Other Sources: Roseingrave: Kk.31–42. Parma: Kk.202–3; 204a & b; 205; 356–7; 544–5. Münster: Kk.452/3 (Nim. 1731 (3) with Richard Lester (harpsichord or organ); and Lester and N. Evans (recorders))

48 'Favourite' Sonatas (selected from above)

(BB) * Nim. 5822/3. Lester

Richard Lester's coverage of the complete Scarlatti keyboard sonatas is very impressive indeed; it has the great advantage both of economy and of being made available in seven separate boxes, so that the collector can dip into the collection and make a survey a box at a time. Lester's credentials are impeccable but, more importantly, he is obviously very enthusiastic about this repertoire and his spontaneous playing conveys that dedication. His style is admirably flexible and altogether most winning. He uses three different harpsichords (copies of an impressive Portuguese instrument by José Jochim Antones, an English two-manual harpsichord, and a Ruckers single-manual instrument). The fortepiano is a copy of a 1795 instrument by Anton Walter.

The six Continuo Sonatas are not written for specific instruments and Lester has chosen to feature a pair of recorders, well played by Elizabeth Lester and Nerys Evans, and they throw in two of contemporary works by Handel and Alessandro Scarlatti for good measure. But this choice of instruments represents a slight miscalculation, for the result is somewhat bland, and it would have been wiser to use string instruments in some of the sonatas to offer more variety of timbre. In that way the Scott Ross Erato set scores. However, the Nimbus recording is of the highest quality, beautifully focused within an attractive acoustic – not too resonant. This set is well documented and can be highly recommended. At the very least, readers are urged to try the two-CD sampler, which opens with some brilliant displays of sparkling solo virtuosity.

Keyboard Sonatas (complete), plus Sonatas for Violin & Continuo; Violin and Oboe

(BB)  Erato 2564 62092-2 (34). Scott Ross (harpsichord & organ), Huggett, Coin, Henry, Vallon

The outstanding integral recording of Scarlatti's 555 Keyboard Sonatas (originally issued for the composer's tercentenary) has reappeared, complete with the accompanying 200-page book at less than half the original price. They include works for violin and continuo, and for the unlikely combination of violin and oboe in unison. Scott Ross at the keyboard (harpsichord and organ) is joined by Monica Huggett, Christophe Coin and others and this excellently recorded set provides an endless source of interest and satisfaction.

Keyboard Sonatas, Kk.1; 20; 98; 159; 450; 487 (DVD version)

🔑  DG DVD 073 4045. Pogorelich (piano) (Director: Humphrey Burton) – BACH: English Suites 2 & 3 (*); BEETHOVEN: Piano Sonata 11 **(*)

Ivo Pogorelich is at his most dazzling in these brilliant accounts of a well-chosen clutch of sonatas, crisply articulated on the piano. His tempi are brisk but never sound hurried. This is not the only way to play Scarlatti, but it is certainly involving, especially the well-known C major piece, Kk.159, which ends the recital infectiously. The camera watches his hands as well as taking overall shots, and the changes are not distracting. Good, clean, bright sound.

Keyboard Sonatas, Kk.1; 9; 14; 27; 38; 103; 114; 141; 208; 213; 296–9; 380; 490–92; 555

(M) (*) Warner Elatus 2564 60030-2. Ross (harpsichord)

This is a well-chosen selection from Scott Ross's complete coverage of the keyboard sonatas, made in 1984–5. He plays freshly, perhaps a little didactically at times, but always very musically, and he is very well recorded. The harpsichord is not named.

Keyboard Sonatas, Kk.1; 3; 8–9; 11; 17; 24–5; 27; 29; 87; 96; 113; 141; 146; 173; 213–14; 247; 259; 268; 283–4; 380; 386–7; 404; 443; 519–20; 523

🔑 * Virgin 5 61961-2 (2). Pletnev (piano)

This carefully chosen selection of some of Scarlatti's finest and most adventurous sonatas, stretches over two CDs, giving the fullest opportunity to demonstrate the extraordinary range of this music in a recital-length programme playing for 140 minutes. In the opening D major Sonata, Kk.443, Pletnev establishes a firm pianistic approach, yet the staccato articulation reminds us that the world of the harpsichord is not so far away. However, in the G major Sonata, Kk.283, and in the following Kk.284 his fuller piano sonority transforms the effect of the writing. The second CD opens with the almost orchestral Kk.96 in D, with its resonant horn calls, and later the lovely, flowing C minor Sonata and the even more expressive Kk.11 in F sharp minor bring a reflective poetic feeling, which could not have been matched in colour by the plucked instrument. The performances throughout are in the very front rank.

Keyboard Sonatas, Kk.1; 8–9; 11; 13; 20; 87; 98; 119; 135; 159; 380; 450; 487 & 529

🔑 * DG 435 855-2. Pogorelich (piano)

Pogorelich plays with captivating simplicity and convinces the listener that this is music which sounds far more enjoyable on the piano than on the harpsichord. His dazzling execution, using the lightest touch, consistently enchants the ear with its subtle tonal colouring, and the music emerges ever sparkling and fresh. The hour-long programme is admirably chosen to provide maximum variety.

Keyboard Sonatas, Kk.9; 13 & 430

(M) (*) Sony (ADD) SMK 87753. Gould (piano) – BACH: Aria variata; C. P. E. BACH: Sonata **(*)

Glenn Gould's precise articulation suits Scarlatti and these three varied Sonatas are full of life. Good, clear (if rather dry) recording to match.

Keyboard Sonatas, Kk.9; 27; 33; 69; 87; 96; 159; 193; 247; 427; 492; 531; Fugue in G min.; Kk.30

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex (ADD) 0927 44353-2. Queffélec (piano)

Anne Queffélec employs a modern Steinway with great character and aplomb. She immediately captures the listener in the dashing opening of the D major Sonata, Kk.96, with its lively fanfares and, in the gentler B minor, Kk.27, her rippling passage-work is Bach-like in its simplicity. She alternates reflective works with those sonatas calling for sparkling bravura and her choice is unerringly effective: the recital closes with the Fugue, which unfolds with calm inevitability. The 1970 recording is first class; the piano is naturally focused and has plenty of space without any resonant blurring.

Keyboard Sonatas; Kk. 11; 27; 159 & 322 (DVD Version)

🔑  Opus Arte DVD OA 0939D. Michelangeli – BEETHOVEN: Piano Sonatas 3 & 32; GALUPPI: Sonata ***

Recorded at a recital in Turin in 1962, these are a model of delicacy and refinement. Michelangeli always played Scarlatti with a special distinction that only Horowitz, Queffélec and Pletnev have matched in recent times. Very good sound.

Keyboard Sonatas, Kk. 20; 24; 27; 30; 87; 197; 365; 426; 427; 429; 435; 448; 455; 466; 487; 492; 545; in G min.

🔑 * BIS-CD 1508. Sudbin (piano)

Yevgeny Sudbin finds, besides much to charm the ear, an infinite expressive depth in many of the minor key works, which are played here with appealing expressive freedom. (Sample Kk.87 or Kk.197 in B minor or the delicacy of Kk.466 in F minor.) From the very opening B flat major work we are aware that this is a modern piano, but how well it suits these innovative and infinitely diverse Sonatas. There is sparkle and brilliance here too, and Sudbin can be both strong and delectably light-fingered. He is splendidly recorded, and this can be placed among the finest and most generous of recent single-disc Scarlatti collections (76 minutes).

Keyboard Sonatas: Kk.20; 32; 39; 79; 109; 124–5; 128; 342; 381; 394; 425; 454; 470; 491; 495; 547; 551

🔑 (BB) * EMI Encore 5 74968-2. Tipo (piano)

Maria Tipo's 18 Scarlatti Sonatas first appeared in 1989 and sound every bit as good now as they did then. Tipo has not gained the wider recognition for which her artistry entitles her, but this recital shows her in the best possible light. Her range of keyboard colour is wide and her sense of dynamic contrast strong, but she never uses them simply to make effect. This record is an unmissable bargain.

Keyboard Sonatas, Kk.25; 33; 39; 52; 54; 96; 146; 162; 197–8; 201; 260; 303; 319; 466; 474; 481; 491; 525; 547

Ⓑ (*) Sony (ADD) 517487-2. Horowitz (piano)

Provided you are prepared to accept sometimes less than flattering and often rather dry recorded sound, this is marvellous playing, which sweeps away any purist notions about Scarlatti having to be played on the harpsichord. The 20 sonatas were chosen by Horowitz after he had recorded nearly twice as many throughout 1964.

Keyboard Sonatas, Kk.32; 64; 69; 87; 133; 146; 160; 198; 208; 213; 380; 429; 466; 481; 511; 517; Toccata in D min.

Ⓑ (*) Cal. CAL 6670. Södergren (piano)

Inger Södergren gives an appealing recital of 16 well-contrasted Sonatas plus a brilliant account of the highly individual Toccata in D minor. Some might feel that her gentle, almost wistful treatment of the lyrical sonatas errs towards being too romantic, but her keen sensitivity and crisp articulation in the lively pieces are unimpeachable, and she is very well recorded.

Keyboard Sonatas, Kk.46; 87; 99; 124; 201; 204a; 490–2; 513; 520–1

Ⓜ  CRD (ADD) CRD 3368. Pinnock (harpsichord)

No need to say much about this: the playing is first rate and the recording outstanding in its presence and clarity. There are few better harpsichord anthologies of Scarlatti in the catalogue, although the measure is not particularly generous.

Keyboard Sonatas: Kk. 64; 87; 96; 108; 118–19; 132–3; 141; 175; 198; 202–3; 213–14; 263–4; 277–8; 420–1; 454–5; 460–1; 490–2; 501–2; 516–19

🔑 Ⓑ * DHM 82876 67375-2 (2). Staier (harpsichord)

We welcomed Andreas Staier's Haydn sonata collection with much enthusiasm. He seems equally at home with the music of Scarlatti, and he characterizes each of these Sonatas vividly and with real imagination. This pair of CDs (originally published in 1991/2) may well have been planned to be part of an integral collection which was never completed. In any event the choice of repertoire is fruitful; playing (and recording) of this quality has no need to fear even the most exalted competition. A strongly recommended reissue.

Keyboard Sonatas, Kk.159; 175; 208; 213; 322 & 380 (arr. for guitar)

(BB)  Sony (ADD) SBK 62425. Williams (guitar) – GIULIANI: Variations on a Theme by Handel; PAGANINI: Caprice; Grand Sonata; VILLA-LOBOS: 5 Preludes ***

Guitar arrangements of Scarlatti Sonatas have their charms when played by an artist as imaginative as John Williams. He manages by percussive plucking to sound at times almost like a harpsichord, while his gentle playing is always beguiling, especially in the delightful D major Sonata, Kk.159. The recording is faithful, somewhat close and larger than life, but never unacceptably so. This diverse and well-planned recital (76 minutes) is very enjoyable indeed.

VOCAL MUSIC

Cantatas: Che vidi, oh Ciel, che vidi; O qual mecco Nice; Pur nel sonno almen tal'ora. Sinfonia

(*) Astrée Naïve E 8673. Gerstenberger, Musique des Lumières, Frisch

Although these cantatas were written for the castrato voice, they suit a high soprano very well. Each is quite extended, but it is Pur nel sonno almen tal'ora ('Even in slumber, the lady of my heart appears to comfort me in my sorrow') with its flute obbligato which is especially delightful. The other two works are more theatrical, and Cyrille Gerstenberger sings them vividly, with plenty of temperament. However, Scarlatti's writing is often richly expressive too and her cantabile line is always affecting. The accompaniments, on period instruments, are at times curiously abrasive. Full texts and translations are provided.

Cantata: Doppo lungo servire

(*) MDG 309 0632-2. Wessel, Musica Alta Ripa (with FRANCESCO SCARLATTI: Cantata in un'ostante) – ALESSANDRO SCARLATTI: Sonatas & Cantatas **(*)

Scarlatti's pastoral cantata is about the troubles of Filenus, who cannot persuade the fickle Phyllis to respond to his advances, and it ends with his melancholy siciliana. It is very well performed, but not all will take to Kai Wessel's male alto timbre. The documentation is first class.

Salve Regina

🔑 * Analekta FL 2 3171. Lemieux, Tafelmusik, Lamon (with AVISON: Concerto grossi after Scarlatti 7) – VIVALDI: Stabat Mater, etc. ***

Domenico Scarlatti's beautiful setting of the Salve Regina is gloriously sung here and is paired with an equally fine performance of Vivaldi's Stabat Mater, plus some attractive Vivaldi string concertos to make up a balanced concert. The inclusion of one of Avison's concertos transcribed from Scarlatti sonatas seems rather appropriate.

Stabat Mater

Ⓑ  Double Decca (ADD) 443 868-2 (2). Schütz Ch. of L., Norrington – BONONCINI: Stabat Mater ; PERGOLESI: Magnificat in C; Stabat Mater (*); A. SCARLATTI: Domine, refugium factus es nobis; O magnum mysterium; CALDARA: Crucifixus; LOTTI: Crucifixus ***

Norrington's performance is admirable, though not always impeccable in matters of tonal balance; and the recording is very good. Overall this well-designed Double Decca set combines three fine Stabat Mater settings with other comparable baroque choral music, all well performed and impressively recorded.

Stabat Mater; Cibavit nos Dominus; Magnificat; Missa breve (La Stella); Te Deum

Ⓑ  Naxos 8.570382. Immortal Bach Ens., Schuldt-Jensen

Stabat Mater; Laetatus sum (Psalm 121); Magnificat; Te Deum; Miserere in E min.

Ⓝ Ⓑ  EMI Encore 2 35735-2. King's College, Cambridge, Ch., Cleobury

Stabat Mater; Miserere; Salve Regina; Te Deum Laudamus; Organ Sonatas, Kk.87 & Kk 417

 Ricercar RIC 258. Vox Luminus

Both the Naxos and Ricercar performances feature less than a dozen singers, accompanied by a continuo including a chamber organ, which on the Ricercar disc plays two of the composer's keyboard Sonatas as a bonus, and very well too. The Immortal Bach Ensemble sing warmly and sensitively, and offer equally fine accounts of the enterprising bonuses. However, the Dutch Vox Luminus, who appear to sing without a conductor, are finer still, richly expressive, sonorous, and very touching in the four-part Miserere and two-part Salve Regina.

On EMI, King's College Choir also offer a fine representative collection of Scarlatti's church music, freshly and atmospherically performed in the reverberant acoustic of King's Chapel. The most ambitious piece here is the Stabat Mater, described as being in ten parts (though the full ten are reserved for special moments); and the work which most impressively demonstrates Scarlatti's skill with polyphony is the Magnificat in four parts, with its superb climax in the Gloria. The other works are also given dedicated performances and are all very well recorded.

SCHARWENKA, Franz Xaver (1850–1924)

Piano Concertos 2 in C min., Op. 56; 3 in C sharp min., Op. 80

 Hyp. CDA 67365. Tanyel, Hanover R. Philharmonie des NDR, Strugala

These two Concertos bristle with technical challenges of which Seta Tanyel makes light. She is fully equal to their technical demands and takes them comfortably in her stride. The Second Concerto comes from 1880, and the debt to both Chopin and Hummel can be clearly discerned. He gave the first performance of the Third in Berlin in 1899 to much acclaim – understandably so, given the quality of the central Adagio. Tanyel not only copes with the virtuoso demands of Scharwenka's writing but is a very musical player. Excellent support from Tadeusz Strugala and the Hanover Radio Orchestra, and a first-class (1996) recording.

Piano Concerto 4 in F min., Op. 82

🔑  Hyp. CDA 66790. Hough, CBSO, Foster – SAUER: Piano Concerto 1 ***

Scharwenka wrote four piano concertos; this, his finest, was very famous in its time. It is ambitiously flamboyant and on the largest scale. Its invention, which manages a potent mix of bravura and lyricism, readily holds the attention, with plenty of interest in the bold orchestral tuttis. The second-movement Allegretto has much charm and is very deftly scored; a full flood of romanticism blossoms in the Lento slow movement. The stormy con fuoco finale combines a touch of wit and more robust geniality with glittering brilliance and power; and all four movements make prodigious technical and artistic demands on the soloist, to which Stephen Hough rises with great technical aplomb and consistent panache; he also plays with fine poetic sensibility. He is given vigorously committed support by Lawrence Foster and the CBSO and a first-class Hyperion recording.

SCHIERBECK, Poul (1888–1949)

The Chinese Flute, Op. 10

((*)) Bluebell mono ABCD 075. Nilsson, Swedish Radio O, Mann – BARTÓK: Bluebeard's Castle ((*))

The Chinese Flute, Op. 10; Queen Dagmar; The Tinder-Box, Op. 61

🔑  dacapo 224104. Dam-Jensen, Dolberg, Larsen, Van Hal, Dreyer, Odense SO, Bellincampi

Schierbeck belongs to the generation midway between Nielsen and Vagn Holmboe. Until recently he was unrepresented in the catalogue, now no fewer than three versions of his charming songs The Chinese Flute, to poems by Hans Bethge, which inspired many composers, not least Mahler in Das Lied, are available and the present issue also brings the cantata Dronning Dagmar ('Queen Dagmar'). The melodrama Fyrtøjet ('The Tinder-Box'), based on Hans Andersen, is both inventive and imaginative. This is an excellent introduction to a gifted minor master. Inger Dam-Jensen is excellent in the Bethge settings, and the orchestral playing and recording are first class.

Nilsson's first recording was in 1946 of an aria from Berwald's Estrella di Soria, and this recording of The Chinese Flute comes from a Swedish Radio broadcast two years later. What a voice! It comes with a haunting but unaccountably cut Bluebeard's Castle under Fricsay.

SCHMIDT, Franz (1874–1939)

Symphonies 1–4

🔑 Ⓜ * Chan. 9568 (4). Detroit SO, Järvi

Chandos have now boxed their individual releases of the symphonies into a four-CD set, discarding the fill-ups. The First Symphony was composed during Schmidt's early to mid-20s and, as one might expect, is derivative, even if his orchestration is masterly. Right from the start, one is left in no doubt that Schmidt is a born symphonic composer with a real feeling for the long-breathed line and the natural growth flow of ideas. He began work on the Second Symphony on leaving the Vienna Philharmonic in 1911 and finished two years later. The Third (1927–8) is a richly imaginative score in the romantic tradition, though it yields pride of place among the symphonies to the elegiac, valedictory Fourth (1933–4), whose nobility and depth of feeling shine through every bar. The Detroit Symphony Orchestra under Neeme Järvi play with a freshness and enthusiasm that is totally persuasive. They almost sound Viennese and the recordings are very good indeed.

Clarinet Quintet 2 in A (for clarinet, piano & strings)

🔑  Marco 8.223414. Jánoska, Mucha, Lakatos, Slávik, Ruso

The Quintet in A major for Clarinet, Piano and Strings is unusual: it begins like some mysterious other-worldly scherzo which immediately introduces a pastoral idea of beguiling charm. The second movement is a piano piece in ternary form; there is a longish Scherzo, full of fantasy and wit, and there is an affecting trio, tinged with the melancholy of late Brahms. The fourth movement sets out as if it, too, is going to be a long, meditative piano piece, but its nobility and depth almost put one in mind of the Elgar Quintet. The fifth is a set of variations on a theme of Josef Labor, and is sometimes played on its own. The recording has freshness and bloom, though it could benefit from a bigger recording venue. This is a glorious work.

Piano Quintet in G (arr. Wührer)

 Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 476 2455. Mrasek, VPO Qt – BRUCKNER: String Quartet in F ***

Franz Schmidt's Piano Quintet in G is rewarding music, full of unexpected touches; it is also possessed of genuine nobility, as one would expect from the composer of the Fourth Symphony. The performance is elegant and beautifully recorded in the Sofiensaal in 1974.

Das Buch mit sieben Siegeln (The Book with 7 Seals)

🔑 * Chan. SACD CHSA 5061 (2). Chum, Holl, Trattnigg, Breedt, Schukoff, Hemm, Wiener Singverein, Tonkünstler-Orchester Niederösterreich, K. Järvi

(BB)  EMI Gemini 5 85782-2 (2). Oelze, Kallisch, Andersen, Odinius, Pape, Reiter, Bav. R. Ch. & SO, Welser-Möst; Winklhofer (organ)

The latest recording of Franz Schmidt's masterpiece is recorded in the Vienna Musikverein and is a live performance. The tenor Johannes Chum is a fine St John and Robert Holl a no less impressive Voice of the Lord. Although memories of Mitropoulos's account with Anton Dermota and Fritz Wunderlich are not wholly eclipsed, this newcomer, recorded in 2005, must claim pride of place, not only for the excellence of the recorded sound, but for the fervour and dedication of the performance.

This EMI bargain version of Schmidt's Book with Seven Seals was recorded live in the Herculessaal in 1997 and is played by the magnificent Bavarian Radio Orchestra with the Bavarian Radio Chorus under Franz Welser-Möst, who shows great sympathy for the score. The soloists are excellent. However, no texts are included.

SCHMITT, Florent (1870–1958)

Symphony 2, Op. 137; La Danse d'Abisag, Op. 75; (i) Habeyssée (suite for violin and orchestra), Op. 110; Rêves, Op. 65

 Marco 8.223689. (i) Segerstam; Rheinland-Pfalz PO, Segerstam

La Danse d'Abisag, like the much earlier Tragédie de Salomé, has a biblical theme: unlike Salome, Abisag, despite her erotic dancing, fails to arouse the ageing monarch (King David). Symphony 2 was no mean achievement for a composer in his 88th year! In terms of orchestral expertise and flair, it is second to none, and the opulence of its palette and its imaginative vitality are remarkable. Rêves is an early piece, inspired by a poem by Léon-Paul Fargue and appropriately atmospheric; and Habeyssée, said to be inspired by an Islamic legend, is a three-movement suite for violin and orchestra. This is a rewarding issue which offers some good playing from the Rheinland-Pfalz Orchestra under Segerstam, who excels in this repertoire. Good recording too.

La tragédie de Salomé (ballet; Suite); (i) Psalm 47, Op. 38

(BB)  Warner Apex 2564 62764-2. (i) Sweet, Fr. R. Ch.; Gill, Fr. R. Philh. O, Janowski

Schmitt's setting of Psalm 47 dates from his last year as a Prix de Rome scholar at the Villa Medici, and is a stirring and imposing piece which contrasts two aspects of the great books of exaltation and jubilation: the tenderness and voluptuousness of the Song of Songs. Good performances from the Orchestre Philharmonique de Radio France under Marek Janowski. Eminently recommendable – save for Sharon Sweet's wide and ugly vibrato.

Piano trio: Très lent

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550934. Joachim Trio – DEBUSSY; RAVEL: Piano Trios **(*)

This three-minute fragment, about which the notes are uninformative, is rather haunting and, like the rest of the programme, beautifully played and recorded.

SCHNITTKE, Alfred (1934–98)

Viola Concerto (DVD version)

 TDK DVD DV-VPOVG. Bashmet, VPO, Gergiev (includes Bashmet talking about Schnittke; Gergiev talking on Prokofiev and Stravinsky). Director and VD: Brian Large – PROKOFIEV: Symphony 1 (Classical), Op. 25; STRAVINSKY: Firebird Complete Ballet ***

Schnittke's Viola Concerto is made up of two Largos surrounding a fast, often violent, central movement, the mood swinging between a pensive brooding and frenetic activity. It is certainly written well for the viola, and Yuri Bashmet plays it with great intensity and dedication. Whether one warms to the music or not, it communicates very directly here to the viewer/listener. The orchestral tuttis are sometimes wildly explosive, and Gergiev's face registers their demonic force as he directs the orchestra with enormous conviction. The documentary is a considerable bonus, but it is for the fine performance of The Firebird that most collectors will seek out this DVD.

Violin Concertos 1–2

 BIS CD 487. Lubotsky, Malmö SO, Klas

The First Violin Concerto inhabits a post-romantic era. Its lyricism is profoundly at variance with its successor of 1966, commissioned by Mark Lubotsky, the soloist on this record. Here the central concept is what Schnittke calls 'a certain drama of tone colours', and there is no doubt that much of it is vividly imagined and strongly individual. The double-bass is assigned a special role of a caricatured 'anti-soloist'. There is recourse to the once fashionable aleatoric technique, but this is all within carefully controlled parameters. The Malmö Orchestra under Eri Klas play with evident feeling in both works and are very well recorded. This is an altogether highly satisfactory coupling.

(i) Gogol Suite (compiled Rozhdestvensky); Labyrinths

 BIS CD 557. Malmö SO, Markiz; (i) with Kontra

There is a surrealistic quality to the Gogol Suite reminiscent of Gogol's own words quoted in Jürgen Köchel's note: 'The world hears my laughter; my tears it does not see nor recognize.' Labyrinths is a ballet score composed in 1971, thin in development and musical ideas but sufficiently strong in atmosphere to survive the transition from stage to concert hall. The Malmö Orchestra under Lev Markiz play very well and the recording is in the demonstration class.

Symphony 1

 Chan. 9417. Russian State SO, Rozhdestvensky

Schnittke's First Symphony is a huge radical canvas lasting some 68 minutes. It is essentially a musical gesture, a tirade rather than a symphony of protest and anger which sounds pretty thin now. Rozhdestvensky's performance is committed, and the recording, made at a public performance in the Moscow Conservatoire in 1988, is well detailed. There is more rhetoric than substance here. The three stars are allotted for the performance and recording; for the composition the stars can be aleatoric!

(i) Symphony 4; (ii) 3 Sacred Hymns

 Chan. 9463. (i) Zdorov, Pianov; (i–ii) Russian State Symphonic Cappella; (i) Russian State SO; Polyansky

The Fourth Symphony draws on Christian (Catholic, Lutheran and Russian Orthodox) and Jewish chant and is avowedly religious in programme, reflecting episodes in the life of the Virgin Mary. It is scored for two singers, one a counter-tenor, chorus and orchestra; it also makes inventive and colourful use of keyboard sonorities. Both the performance and the recording are of high quality, but the piece seems too concerned with gesture and is essentially empty of musical substance. The Three Sacred Hymns for a cappella choir from 1983 are both eloquent and beautiful.

Symphony 8; The Census List: Suite

🔑 * Chan. 9885. Russian State SO, Polyansky; with (i) Butenin (nar.)

Symphony 8; (i) Concerto Grosso 6

 Chan. 9359. Stockholm RSO, G. Rozhdestvensky, with (i) S. Rozhdestvensky; Postnikova

Symphony 8 is one of the most moving of Schnittke's later works. In it he develops a sparer style, often angular but warmly lyrical, reflecting his inspiration over a five-movement structure in the sections of the Mass. Earlier works were similarly inspired from spiritual sources, but this most clearly of all, with a rising scale figure a symbolic element. Polyansky directs a warmly expressive performance, opulently recorded, with the generous coupling providing a delightful contrast. The incidental music to a play drawn from Gogol, The Census List, dates from 1978; it is pastiche writing designed as a cheeky thrust at Soviet authority, with witty parodies over the eight movements. The fifth involves a narrator, Lev Butenin, reciting a satirical poem about Ferdinand VIII.

Rozhdestvensky and the Stockholm Orchestra give a powerful, warmly committed performance, if not quite so sharply focused as Polyansky's, also on Chandos. The fill-up is less generous but arguably more apt: written in 1993 for the Rozhdestvensky family in Schnittke's neo-classical manner, it is much drier than the Symphony and again is very well played by the dedicatees.

Cello Sonata

 BIS CD 336. Thedéen, Pöntinen – STRAVINSKY: Suite italienne; SHOSTAKOVICH: Sonata ***

The Cello Sonata is a powerfully expressive piece, its avant-garde surface enshrining a neo-romantic soul. Torleif Thedéen is a refined and intelligent player who gives a thoroughly committed account of this piece with his countryman, Roland Pöntinen.

Piano Quintet

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.554830-2. Berman, Vermeer Qt – SHOSTAKOVICH: Piano Quintet ***

 ECM 461 815-2. Lubimov, Keller Qt – SHOSTAKOVICH: String Quartet 15 ***

Like the Shostakovich Piano Quintet, with which it is aptly coupled, the Schnittke Piano Quintet of 1972–5 is one of the composer's most poignant and haunting works. Dedicated to the memory of his mother, and darkly elegiac, it was finished in the year of Shostakovich's death. Its mood of gloom, unrelieved except for a painfully plaintive waltz in the second of the five movements, inspires Berman and the Vermeers to a performance as powerfully concentrated as that of the Shostakovich; if the CBC studios in Toronto do not always flatter their tone, this a real bargain.

The anguished Piano Quintet is also deeply felt and powerful in the hands of Lubimov and the Keller Quartet. Good recording too.

Piano Trio

🔑  Nim. NI 5572. V. Piano Trio – SHOSTAKOVICH: Trios, Opp. 8 & 67 ***

Schnittke's Piano Trio has its origins in a string trio written in 1985. In 1987 it was transcribed as the Trio Sonata for Chamber Orchestra and then in 1992 put into its present form. The Vienna Piano Trio give as convincing a performance as you are ever likely to hear, and they certainly get superb recorded sound.

Prelude in Memoriam Shostakovich (for 2 solo violins)

 Chan. 8988. Mordkovitch, Young – PROKOFIEV; SHOSTAKOVICH: Violin Sonatas ***

The Schnittke Prelude for two solo violins is the shortest of the works on Lydia Mordkovitch's excellent disc of Soviet violin music, but it is among the most moving in its intense, elegiac way. She is well matched by her partner, Emma Young.

Violin Sonata 1; Sonata in the Olden Style

 Chan. 8343. Dubinsky, Edlina – SHOSTAKOVICH: Violin Sonata ***

Schnittke's First Sonata is a well-argued piece that seems to unify his awareness of the post-serial musical world with the tradition of Shostakovich. On this version it is linked with a pastiche of less interest, dating from 1977. Excellent playing from both artists, and very good recording too.

Piano Sonata

🔑  Chan. 8962. Berman – STRAVINSKY: Serenade, etc. ***

Berman gives as persuasive an account of Schnittke's Piano Sonata as it is possible to imagine. He is very well recorded, too, and the three Stravinsky pieces with which it comes are also given with great pianistic elegance.

SCHOECK, Othmar (1886–1957)

(i) Concerto for cello & strings, Op. 62. Cello Sonata; Six Song transcriptions

Ⓝ 🔑  BIS-CD-1597. Poltéra, Drake, (i) with Malmö SO, Ollila

Although best known for his songs, some 300 in number, plus the remarkable cycle, Lebendigbegraben, and several operas, the Swiss composer Othmar Schoeck composed concertos for violin, horn, and in the last decade of his life, the Cello Concerto, which Pierre Fournier premièred in 1948. This has a strong vein of melancholy and a poignant eloquence redolent of the previous century. It is a work characterized by great lyrical intensity and depth of feeling, beautifully conveyed here by his countryman, Christian Poltéra, with the Swedish Malmö Orchestra. Poltéra also gives us the three-movement Cello Sonata which the composer left incomplete on his death. Deeply satisfying music, impeccably played and equally impeccably recorded.

Elegie (song cycle), Op. 36

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * CPO 999 472-2. Schmidt, Winterthur Music Collegium, Albert

The Elegie, Op. 36, has been described as 'a narrative of a dying love' and to some extent charts the turbulent course of the composer's affair with the pianist Mary de Senger. The cycle comprises twenty-four short but concentrated settings of poems by Lenau and Eichendorff, and is for baritone and a small instrumental ensemble, used with great subtlety and resource. The songs are powerfully evocative and beautifully fashioned; each one immediately establishes its own atmosphere within a bar or two, and draws the listener completely into its world. Almost any would serve as an example but particularly potent is the third, Stille Sicherheit, which is extraordinarily concentrated in feeling, or the wonderfully haunting Vesper, with its tolling bells and almost tangible half lights. This is deeply felt music with a wonderful sense of line, and Andreas Schmidt sings with tremendous conviction. Werner Andreas Albert gets very sensitive and supportive playing from the Winterthur ensemble and the CPO recording is first class.

OPERA

Venus (complete)

 MGB Musikszene Schweiz CD 6112 (2). Lang, Popp, O'Neal, Fassbaender, Skovhus, Alföldi, Heidelberg Kammer Ch., Basle Boys' Ch., Swiss Youth PO, Venzago

Venus is based on a libretto by Schoeck's school-friend, Armin Rüeger, and comes from Ovid, though Rüeger sets the action in a country castle in the south of France. Venzago's conducting radiates total dedication, and so does the playing of the young Swiss Orchestra. The opening scene almost prompts one's thoughts to turn to the Strauss of Ariadne, but as the opera unfolds Venzago's view of the work as partly 'an enormous orchestral poem (exposition, development, Scherzo and recapitulation) with obbligato voices' seems more and more valid. The sheer quality of the invention is notable and many of the ideas, particularly the Venus motive, have great tenderness and delicacy. Good and atmospheric recording.

SCHOENBERG, Arnold
(1874–1951)

Chamber Symphonies: (i; ii) 1, Op. 9; (ii) 2, Op. 38; (iii) 5 Orchestral Pieces, Op. 16; Variations for Orchestra, Op. 31; (iv) Verklaerte Nacht, Op. 4; (v) Ewartung

Ⓝ Ⓑ  EMI 2 CD 2 06785-2 (2). (i) Birmingham Contemporary Music Group, Rattle; (ii) ECO, Tate; (iii; v) CBSO, Rattle; (iv) Artemis Qt (augmented); (v) Bryn-Julson

In Chamber Symphony 1 Rattle, with fifteen players from the Birmingham Contemporary Music Group, springs rhythms infectiously, yet relaxedly bringing out the thrust of the argument. The playing may not be as bitingly crisp as in some rival versions, but there is no question of missing the heart behind the composer's severe intellectual writing, which is given far more character than usual, thanks to both conductor and players. Jeffrey Tate's approach to 2 is persuasive in his own way, presenting the music with heartfelt warmth, while the rich ECO ensemble, well presented in radiant EMI sound, gives it the necessary weight combined with ample clarity of detail. In the Five Orchestral Pieces Rattle is again at his finest, bringing out the music's red-blooded strength, neither too austere nor too plushy, helped by sound of demonstration standard. By contrast, he is daringly expansive in the Variations of 1928, even more so than Karajan on his classic recording with the Berlin Philharmonic. The Birmingham players may not always be as refined as the Berliners, but they play with even greater emotional thrust and with a keener sense of mystery, while heightened dynamic contrasts add to the dramatic bite. Equally, in Schoenberg's taxing atonal vocal lines, Phyllis Bryn-Julson sings with a clarity and definition to coax the ear instead of assaulting it, giving a more vulnerable portrait than usual, tender and compelling. The chamber performance of Verklaerte Nacht by the augmented Artemis Quartet is equally telling in its passionate feeling and powerful atmosphere.

Chamber Symphonies 1–2, Opp. 9 & 38; Verklaerte Nacht, Op. 4

🔑 Ⓑ * Warner Apex 0927 44399-2. COE, Holliger

Schoenberg's Chamber Symphonies are superbly performed by the COE, played with both warmth and thrust, with complex textual problems masterfully solved. Verklaerte Nacht in its orchestral version receives one of its most passionate performances on disc, reflecting 'the glow of inmost warmth' in the Richard Dehmel poem which inspired it. This new coupling makes an excellent bargain on the Apex label, and the sound is first-rate.

(i) Chamber Symphony 1; (ii) Verklaerte Nacht; (i–iii) Gurrelider

🔑 Ⓑ * Double Decca 473 728-2 (2). (i) Concg. O; (ii) Berlin RSO; (iii) Jerusalem, Dunn, Fassbaender, Brecht, Haage, Hotter, St Hedwig's Cathedral Ch., Berlin, Düsseldorf State Musikverein; all cond. Chailly

Chailly's magnificent (1985) recording of Schoenberg's massive Gurrelieder is among the finest of modern versions and, if that weren't enough, for this Double Decca reissue the considerable bonus of Verklaerte Nacht and Chamber Symphony 1 have been added. If these performances are not in the same league as the Gurrelieder, they are still very worthwhile. The Berlin recording of Gurrelieder is full and rich, well detailed and balanced, and conveys a natural dramatic tension not easy to find in studio conditions. Siegfried Jerusalem as Waldemar is not only warmer and firmer of tone than most of his rivals but more imaginative too. Susan Dunn makes a sweet, touchingly vulnerable Tove, while Brigitte Fassbaender gives darkly baleful intensity to the message of the Wood-dove. Hans Hotter is a characterful Speaker in the final section. The impact of the performance is the more telling with sound both atmospheric and immediate, bringing a fine sense of presence, not least in the final choral outburst. Texts and translations are included, and this is an undoubted bargain.

(i) Piano concerto, Op. 42; Pieces, Op. 11 & 19

🔑 * Ph. 468 033-2. Uchida; (i) Cleveland O, Boulez – BERG: Piano Sonata; WEBERN: Variations ***

Mitsuko Uchida is logically coupled, and she and Boulez and the Cleveland Orchestra give us a keenly articulate account of the Piano Concerto that may well reach home to a wider audience than before. There is both delicacy and lyrical feeling. She is also very persuasive in the Opp. 11 and 19 Klavierstücke. The Philips recording has both clarity and warmth. Those who have not responded even to the Brendel account should try this beautifully recorded piece.

Concerto for String Quartet & Orchestra after Handel's Concerto Grosso, Op. 6/7

Ⓑ  Warner Apex 7559 79675-2. American Qt., NYCO, Schwarz – R. STRAUSS: Divertimento (after Couperin) ***

 Ara. Z 6723. San Francisco Ballet O, Lark Qt, Le Roux – HANDEL: Concerto grosso in B flat, Op. 6/7; ELGAR: Introduction & Allegro for Strings; SPOHR: Concerto for String Quartet & Orchestra ***

Schoenberg virtually recomposed Handel's Op. 6/7 for string quartet and orchestra, offering a rich spicing of dissonance. The result, inflated to nearly twice the size of the original, is at times grotesque, but always aurally fascinating and entertaining. The performance by the excellent American Quartet with the New York Chamber Orchestra under Gerard Schwarz is spirited and given bright, lively sound. The coupling too is particularly desirable, and the price will surely tempt the collector to explore this excellent CD.

The San Francisco performance also has plenty of edge, vitality and colour and it was a bright idea to include Handel's original (in a performance for full modern strings) so the listener can switch back and forth between the two utterly different sound-worlds.

Pelleas und Melisande; Verklaerte Nacht

🔑 Ⓜ * DG 457 721-2. BPO, Karajan

The Straussian opulence of Schoenberg's early symphonic poem has never been as ravishingly presented as by Karajan and the Berlin Philharmonic in this splendidly recorded version. The gorgeous tapestry of sound is both rich and full of refinement and detail, while the thrust of argument is powerfully conveyed. These are superb performances which present the emotional element at full power but give unequalled precision and refinement. They make an ideal candidate for separate reissue in DG's series of Originals.

5 Orchestral Pieces (DVD version)

 Ideale-Audience DVD 3. Netherlands R. PO, Gielen – STRAVINSKY: 'The Final Chorale' – a documentary about the Symphony of Wind Instruments ***

This is a most illuminating feature by Frank Scheffer that follows the genesis and musical development of the Five Orchestral Pieces of Schoenberg. Michael Gielen rehearses and performs this revolutionary piece, and there are contributions from Carl Schorske and Charles Rosen, as well as some archival footage. A fascinating study (available from www.ideale-audience.dot.com.) that will deepen your understanding of this strange and disturbing music.

(i) Suite in G for String Orchestra; (ii) String Quartet 2, Op. 10; (iii) 6 a cappella Mixed Choruses

(BB)  Naxos 8.557521. (i) Twentieth Century Classics Ens.; (ii) Fred Sherry Qt, with Welch-Babbage; (iii) Simon Joly Singers; Craft

Schoenberg famously said that there is plenty of music still to be written in C major, and here in his six a cappella Choruses he deliberately relaxes in setting 16th-century German folksongs, harmonizing them in his own distinctive way. Three were written in 1948, not long before he died, following up the three he had composed 20 years earlier, all superbly sung here by the Simon Joly Singers. The String Quartet 2 is distinctive in having a vocal part in the last two of the four movements, with Jennifer Welch-Babbage ideally cast, her fresh, clear soprano as precise as any instrument. The texts of the poems by Stefan George are provided, as are the words for the six a cappella Choruses. The Suite in G of 1934, less demanding, makes an apt coupling. The vocal pieces were recorded in London, the instrumental in New York, both in superb sound.

Variations for Orchestra, Op. 31

🔑 (M) * DG (ADD) 457 760-2. BPO, Karajan – BERG: Lyric Suite, etc.; WEBERN: Passacaglia ***

Karajan's version of the Variations is altogether magical and very much in a class of its own. There is a tremendous intensity and variety of tone and colour: the palette that the strings of the Berlin Philharmonic have at their command is altogether extraordinarily wide-ranging.

Verklaerte Nacht

(BB) * Virgin 2x1 4 82112-2 (2). Sinfonia Varsovia, Y. Menuhin – MOZART: Divertimento 1, etc.; WAGNER: Siegfried Idyll; WOLF: Italian Serenade ****

* Chan. 9616. Norwegian CO, I. Brown – SCHUBERT: String Quartet 14 (Death and the Maiden), arr. Mahler **(*)

In a passionately volatile performance Menuhin encompasses the changing moods of Schoenberg's masterpiece with wonderful spontaneity and ardour. The fourth section, Sehr breit und langsam, is particularly eloquent, but the closing Sehr ruhig is also deeply felt, with superbly responsive playing from members of the Sinfonia Varsovia, and the work closes in a mood of gently sensuous nostalgia. Textures are rich yet they never clot, a tribute to the unnamed Virgin balance engineer.

An eloquent and impressive Verklaerte Nacht from the splendid Norwegian Chamber Orchestra and Iona Brown. It comes with Mahler's transcription of Death and the Maiden, made when opportunities to hear Schubert's masterpiece were rare. Those who want to hear it need have no doubts as to the excellence of the playing or of the Chandos recording.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Chamber Symphony 1 (arr. Webern for piano quintet); (i) Concerto for String Quartet and Orchestra (after Handel's Concerto grosso, Op. 6/7); (ii) Ode to Napoleon, Op. 41; Phantasy for Violin and Piano, Op. 47; String Quartet in D; String Quartets 1–4; String Trio, Op. 45; Wind Quintet, Op. 26; 6 Little Piano Pieces, Op. 19 (both arr. Guittart for strings); Verklaerte Nacht

 Chan. 9939 (5). Schoenberg Qt with Narucki, Grotenhuis; (i) Arnhem PO, Benzi; (ii) Grandage

This ambitious five-disc set brilliantly brings together all of Schoenberg's chamber music for strings, including several arrangements. What is so persuasive is the expressive warmth of the Schoenberg Quartet. Even when the atonal Schoenberg is at his most abrasively intellectual, as in the String Trio of 1946, one is made to appreciate that this is music with an emotional core. So it is, too, in the four String Quartets, which form a central core to the collection, a splendid cycle stretching from the post-romantic 1 of 1904–5 through the mould-breaking 2 of 1907–8 with its evocative use of a soprano soloist in the third and fourth movements to the severity of 3 and 4, both commissioned by Mrs Sprague Coolidge, a great musical patron. The portrait of the composer is made all the more persuasive by having such a wide range of works including not just the early Verklaerte Nacht, wonderfully evocative, but the unnumbered string quartet of 1897. It is good, too, to find him relaxing in the Concerto for String Quartet and Orchestra of 1933, which he freely transcribed from Handel's Concerto grosso Op. 6, No. 7, which he wrote in France as a relaxation immediately after fleeing from Germany in 1933. One also welcomes the inclusion of the Napoleon Buonaparte Ode in its version for reciter and piano quintet. The recordings made in Holland are first-rate, warm and atmospheric.

(i) Chamber Symphony 2, Op. 38; (ii) Wind Quintet, Op. 26; (i; iii) Die glückliche Hand, Op. 18

(BB)  Naxos 8.557526. (i) Philh. O, Craft; (ii) New York Woodwind Quintet; (iii) with Beesley, Simon Joly Ch.

Robert Craft continues his excellent and dedicated series of key 20th-century works with this expertly played and sung Schoenberg collection. The complex second movement of the Second Chamber Symphony is vital, richly textured and carefully balanced. The weird Die glückliche Hand is dramatic and hauntingly atmospheric. It is well sung by Mark Beesley, while the chorus are extraordinarily vivid, and the Philharmonia Orchestra give a virtuoso account of the orchestral score, held in a firm grip by Craft. The Wind Quintet, dating from 1923/4, requires even more virtuosity, and it is only recently that it has been found possible to play the work up to tempo (the first performance by members of the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra in 1924 took an hour against the present 38 minutes). The New York Woodwind Quintet take it in their stride. Although at first hearing it does not sound it, the work is written traditionally, the first movement in sonata form with a repeated exposition, followed by a witty Scherzo, melancholy Adagio, and Rondo finale. The recording throughout is very clear and well balanced, and there are (very necessary) excellent notes by Robert Craft himself.

String Trio, Op. 45

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67429. Leopold String Trio – DOHNÁNYI: Serenade in C; MARTINŮ: Trio 2 ***

Many critics have hailed the String Trio as Schoenberg's masterpiece. It is certainly one of his most intensely felt works, composed in the wake of a severe heart attack and the experience of being snatched back from the grave. The dreadful breathlessness of an asthmatic attack, the stopping of his heart, the injection into the heart itself that saved him, even the personalities of his nurses are said to be recorded in this music. (Calum MacDonald reproduces his masterly account of the piece in the excellent note.) The Leopold Trio play the work with consummate mastery and are superbly recorded. If you want this piece, you can't really do better than this.

String Quartets 1 in D min., Op. 7; (i) 2 in F sharp min., Op. 10. 3, Op. 30; 4, Op. 37

() Archiphon ARC mono 103/4. Kolisch Qt; (i) with Gifford

String Quartet (1897); String Quartet 1, Op. 7

* MDG 307 0919-2. Leipzig Qt

String Quartets Nos. (i) 2, Op. 10; 4, Op. 37

* MDG 307 0935-2. (i) Oelze; Leipzig Qt

No quartet has ever been more closely associated with these pieces than the Kolisch, and the present recordings were made at the turn of 1936–7. It is well worth putting up with surface noise for the sake of real music-making. Indeed, given phrasing of this quality there is more to the rigorously disciplined Third and Fourth Quartets than most later ensembles have found; and never have the two earlier Quartets sounded so eloquent. The set contains a short speech of thanks by Schoenberg.

MDG and the Leipzig Quartet do go in for extravagant layout. Their Schoenberg runs to three CDs – 3 is coupled with Verklaerte Nacht on a third disc which we have not heard. It is difficult to fault them in the two early quartets or for that matter in the Second, Op. 10, in which Christiane Oelze sings beautifully. They phrase with great naturalness, their ensemble is perfect and they have great warmth, richness and tonal beauty, though nothing is overstated or projected. If any ensemble or recording could win doubting listeners over to this repertoire, this is it. The recording balance is perfect.

Verklaerte Nacht, Op. 4 (string sextet version)

() Testament mono SBT 1031. Hollywood Qt, with Dinkin, Reher – SCHUBERT: String Quintet () ✿

 Hyp. CDA 66425. Raphael Ens. – KORNGOLD: Sextet ***

 Nim. NI 5614. Brandis Qt, with Küssner, Schwalke – R. STRAUSS: Metamorphosen; Capriccio: Prelude ***

The 1950 Hollywood account was the first version of Verklaerte Nacht in its original sextet form ever to appear on records, and arguably it remains unsurpassed and possibly unequalled. This almost flawless performance enjoyed the imprimatur of Schoenberg himself, who supplied the sleeve-note for it (reproduced in the excellent booklet), the only time he ever did so. The sound is remarkably good and very musical. Recommended with enthusiasm.

For those wanting a modern, digital version, the Raphael Ensemble have the advantage of very good recorded sound and give a fine account of Schoenberg's score. They also have the advantage of a rarity in their coupling, the youthful Sextet of Korngold.

The Brandis Quartet with two colleagues from the Berlin Philharmonic are in excellent form. They possess an unforced eloquence and expressive beauty that is impressive. The Nimbus recording is well balanced and very lifelike and can be recommended alongside the Raphael version.

Piano music: 3 Pieces, Op. 11; 6 Little Pieces, Op. 19; 5 Pieces, Op. 23; 2 Pieces, Op. 33a & b; Suite, Op. 25

(BB)  Naxos 8.553870. Hill – BERG: Piano Sonata; WEBERN: Variations, Op. 27 ***

Peter Hill may not challenge Pollini's magisterial survey of the Schoenberg canon (DG 423 249-2) but his is highly intelligent, thoughtful playing, acutely sensitive to dynamic and tonal shading. In some ways he is more persuasive than Pollini in that one feels more completely drawn into this musical world. In any event, given the low price tag and the high quality of the recorded sound, this is self-recommending.

VOCAL MUSIC

Gurrelieder – see also under Chamber Symphony 1

🔑 * EMI 5 57303-2 (2). Mattila, von Otter, Moser, Langridge, Quasthoff, Berlin R. Ch., Leipzig R. Ch., Ernest Senff Ch., BPO, Rattle

 Teldec 4509-98424-2 (2). Moser, Voigt, Larmore, Weikl, Riegel, Brandauer, Saxon State Op. Ch., Dresden, Leipzig R. Ch., Prague Male Ch., Dresden State O, Sinopoli

(BB)  Naxos 8.557518/9. O'Mara, Diener, Lane, Wilson-

Johnson, Hill, Haefliger (speaker), Simon Joly Ch., Philh. O, Craft

Ⓜ  Ph. 475 7782 (2). McCracken, Norman, Troyanos, Tanglewood Festival Ch., Boston SO, Ozawa

Drawn from live performances given in the Philharmonie in Berlin in September 2001, Rattle's version of Schoenberg's opulent score is the most refined yet in its beauty, warmly spontaneous from first to last, sweeping you away with its richness and magnetism up to the final choral climax. The soloists and massed choruses are all first-rate, with Karita Mattila as Tove consistently warm and tenderly responsive, opposite Thomas Moser in the key role of Waldemar, here more firmly focused than usual, stronger than on Sinopoli's Teldec version. As in Abbado's Vienna version on DG, Philip Langridge is outstanding as Klaus-Narr, and though Anne Sofie von Otter sings with grainy tone in the Song of the Wood Dove, her performance is both dramatic and moving, while Thomas Quasthoff is superb both as the Woodsman (Bauer) and in the difficult role of the Speaker in the melodrama of the final section, sounding younger and fresher than immediate rivals.

In his highly compelling live recording, Sinopoli conducts a most sensuous reading of Gurrelieder, bringing out all its high romantic voluptuousness. Speeds are spacious, thanks in part to his expressive freedom, and anyone who has ever thought of Schoenberg as cold should certainly hear this, magnetic from first to last, helped by rich, immediate sound. The soloists are excellent, even if Thomas Moser as Waldemar is gritty at times in a Wagnerian way.

Craft directs a performance which brings out the work's warmly romantic qualities rather than its foretastes of later Schoenberg. He is helped by an outstanding team of soloists, headed by the clear, strong tenor, Stephen O'Mara, as Waldemar and the radiant, fresh Natalie Diener as Tove, with Jennifer Lane firm and cleanly focused in the Song of the Woodbird. David Wilson-Johnson as the Peasant and Martyn Hill as Klaus-Narr both characterize well, and the veteran tenor, now retired from singing, Ernst Haefliger, copes with the sing-speech of the Speaker's role in a high-pitched way that Schoenberg himself evidently wanted. The Philharmonia plays with passionate conviction throughout, with textures consistently refined, and the Simon Joly Chorale provides a glorious choral conclusion.

Ozawa's gloriously opulent live performance of Gurrelieder, with a ravishing contribution from Jessye Norman, which won the Gramophone Choral Award in 1979, now returns to the catalogue as one of Philips's Originals, with text and translation included.

Die Jakobsleiter; Friede auf Erden, Op. 13 (Instrumental Prelude & a cappella Choral Postlude)

* HM SACD 801821. Henschel, Kammer, Meier, Kaufmann, Rügamer, Azesberger, Volle, Johnson, Berlin R. Ch., Berlin SO, Nagano

Like the later opera, Moses und Aron, this oratorio, Jacob's Ladder, another work devoted to the composer's thoughts on God, remained unfinished at his death, closing on the sound of the Soul (a soprano) and heavenly woman's voices. The baritone, Dietrich Henschel, is superb in the central role of Gabriel, with the Berlin Radio Choir bringing out the warmth as well as the power of the choral writing. It remains an enigmatic work, inspired as it was, not just by the Bible, but by the philosophy of Swedenborg and by Balzac's novel, Seraphita. Friede auf Erden, 'Joy on Earth', provides a prelude in its orchestral form (sounding surprisingly consonant) and a postlude in the original a cappella choral version. Brilliant performances and exceptionally full and vivid recording.

Pierrot lunaire, Op. 21

🔑 Ⓜ * Chan. 6534. Manning, Nash Ens., Rattle – WEBERN: Concerto ***

(i) Pierrot lunaire; Herzgewächse, Op. 20; (ii) Ode to Napoleon Buonaparte

 DG 457 630-2. (i) Schäfer; (ii) Pittman-Jennings; Soloists of Ensemble InterContemporain, Boulez

Jane Manning is outstanding among singers who have tackled this most taxing of works, steering a masterful course between the twin perils of, on the one hand, actually singing and, on the other, simply speaking; her sing-speech brings out the element of irony and darkly pointed wit that is essential. Rattle draws strong, committed performances from the members of the Nash Ensemble and, apart from some intermittently odd balances, the sound is excellent.

For Pierrot lunaire, Boulez imaginatively chooses a sweet-toned soprano and the result is the more revealing, in an element of beauty and mystery usually missing while the dramatic point of this cabaret-like sequence is never underplayed. Balance is excellent, with the Ensemble InterContemporain playing with warmth and brilliance, as they do in the brief Herzgewächse (Schäfer again radiant) and in the Ode to Napoleon. David Pittman-Jennings takes an idiosyncratic view of the narration, reciting in a stylized way as though English is a foreign language, but it is good to have this neglected work so well played and recorded.

OPERA

Moses und Aron (complete; DVD version)

(*) Arthaus DVD 101 259. Grundheber, T. Moser, Slovak Philh. Ch., V. State Op. Ch. & O, Gatti (Dir: Reto Nickler; V/D: Claus Viller)

Recorded at the Vienna State Opera in 2006, the Arthaus version of Schoenberg's powerful masterpiece offers a production by Reto Nickler which seeks to relate the plight of Moses and the Jews enslaved in Egypt with the period of the Holocaust under the Nazis. The costumes are uniformly drab with each of the large chorus carrying suitcases, like refugees herded into concentration camps. Though there are some good individual contributions, the success of the whole performance rests on the contrast between the gruff and rugged Moses of Franz Grundheber, powerful in his rendering of sing-speech, and the Aron of Thomas Moser in vocal lines that are surprisingly clear and mellifluous, making a striking contrast. The vital element of the choral writing is vividly brought out by Daniele Gatti, and though the updating brings some oddities of production the result is most moving. Grundheber is superb above all in the tragic final lines of Act II, establishing it as a satisfying conclusion even in the absence of the projected third act. Details of that are offered as an extra on the DVD.

Moses and Aaron (CD version)

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca 475 8678 (2). Mazura, Langridge, Bonney, Haugland, Chicago SO & Ch., Solti

Solti gives Schoenberg's masterly score a dynamism and warmth which sets it firmly – if perhaps surprisingly – in the grand romantic tradition, yet finds an element of fantasy and, in places – as in the Golden Calf episode – a sparkle such as you would never expect from Schoenberg. The Moses of Franz Mazura may not be as specific in his sing-speech as was Gunter Reich in the two previous versions – far less sing than speech – but the characterization of an Old Testament patriarch is the more convincing. As Aaron, Philip Langridge is lighter and more lyrical, as well as more accurate, than his predecessor with Boulez, Richard Cassily. Aage Haugland with his firm, dark bass makes his mark in the small role of the Priest; Barbara Bonney too is excellent as the Young Girl. Above all, the brilliant singing of the Chicago Symphony Chorus matches the playing of the orchestra in virtuosity. More than ever the question mark concluding Act II makes a pointful close, with no feeling of a work unfinished. The brilliant recording emerges with its focus as sharp as ever on the Originals reissue.

SCHREKER, Franz (1878–1934)

Ekkehard (Symphonic Overture), Op. 12; Fantastic Overture, Op. 15; Interlude from Der Schatzgräber; Nächtstuck (from Der ferne Klang); Prelude to a Drama; Valse lente

🔑  Chan. 9797. BBC PO, Sinaisky

This sequence of six pieces presents a good cross-section of his output, demonstrating Schreker's development from the Symphonic Overture, Ekkehard, and the charmingly unpretentious Valse lente, to the later works, which remain sumptuously late-romantic but which were regarded as daringly modern by early audiences. Both the Nachtstück from Der ferne Klang (1909) and the Prelude to a Drama (1913) – the drama in question being the opera Die Gezeichneten – are powerfully imaginative. Perhaps the most seductive piece is the Valse lente. Schreker had a wonderful sense of fantasy, a feeling for colour, and impressive mastery of the orchestra. The textures are lush and overheated. Sinaisky draws seductively beautiful playing from the BBC Philharmonic, heightened by gloriously rich Chandos sound, and the whole disc serves to advance Schreker's cause.

Prelude to a Grand Opera; Prelude to Das Spielwerk; Romantic Suite, Op. 14; (i) 5 Gesäng

* Chan. 9951 (i) Katarina Karnéus; BBC PO, Sinaisky

The Romantic Suite comes from 1903, when Schreker was in his mid-twenties, though its third movement began life independently as an Intermezzo for Strings a year earlier. It is a rather beautiful piece as, for that matter, is the opening Idylle, written at much the same time as he was making the first sketches for Der ferne Klang. There is a lot of Strauss here and in the mercurial Scherzo, Reger – the latter is a highly inventive movement. Only the finale, Tanz, is routine. The Five Songs, imaginatively sung by the Swedish mezzo, Katarina Karnéus, have plenty of atmosphere and mystery, and are well worth getting to know. The disc covers the whole of Schreker's career: the Prelude to Das Spielwerk is a wartime piece while the Vorspiel zu einer grosen Oper comes from the last months of his life. It is darker than his earlier pieces but despite its expert orchestration remains somewhat overblown. The playing of the BBC Philharmonic under Sinaisky is superb and the recording is in the demonstration class. Intelligent liner notes.

Der ferne Klang (opera; complete)

(BB)  Naxos 8.660074/5 (2). Grigorescu, Harper, Haller, Hagen Op. Ch. & PO, Halász

Der ferne Klang's central character is an ambitious young dramatist, Fritz, who pursues his creative ambitions and his search for Der ferne Klang ('the distant sound') at the expense of his love for Grete, whom he abandons and who turns to prostitution. Schreker scores with chamber-like delicacy and has a Puccini-like finesse in the handling of colour, and great imagination in his handling of harmonic resource. The score is quite gripping, its sound world at times astringent in its harmonies, at others lush and intoxicating. Good soloists, though it is a pity that the voices are rather prominently balanced in this 1989 recording and that the subtlety of Schreker's lavish scoring is not always heard to best advantage. Strongly recommended.

Die Gezeichneten (opera; complete; DVD version)

 EuroArts DVD 20555298. Brubaker, Schwanewilms, Volle, Hale, Schöne, V. Statsopernchor, Deutsches SO, Berlin, Nagano (Producer: Nikolaus Lehnhoff)

Die Gezeichneten ('The Branded' or 'The Marked One') now enters the DVD market in the Salzburg Festival production of 2005. The New York Times hailed it as the 'rediscovery of the year' and the score's riches will delight those coming to it anew. It is sumptuously orchestrated: its colours and textures intoxicated its first audiences and still dazzle today. Best summed up as a blend of post-Salomé luxuriance and exoticism with a pretty heady mixture of Scriabin, Szymanowski, Korngold and Puccini, it was Schreker's fourth and arguably most powerful opera, and it enjoyed immediate success when it first appeared in 1918. The cast is very good, though Robert Brubaker's Alviano does not displace memories of Kenneth Riegel in the 1984 Salzburg set under Gerd Albrecht. But there is a fine sense of dramatic momentum and sensitive orchestral playing under Kent Nagano, who generates a strong sense of atmosphere. Nikolaus Lehnhoff translates this extraordinary work into a compelling and effective stage experience.

Der Schatzgräber (opera; complete)

(*) Cap. 60010-2 (2). Protschka, Schnaut, Stamm, Haage, Hamburg State O, Albrecht

The attractions of Schreker's sweet-sour treatment of a curious morality fairy story are fairly well conveyed in this first recording, made live at the Hamburg State Opera in 1989. Josef Protschka sings powerfully as Elis, hardly ever overstrenuous, but Gabriele Schnaut finds it hard to scale down her very bright and powerful soprano and seems happiest when she is scything your ears with loud and often unsteady top notes; yet she is certainly dramatic in this equivocal role. Outstanding among the others is Peter Haage as the court jester. Der Schatzgräber may be hokum, but it is enjoyable hokum, and, with Albrecht drawing committed performances from the whole company, this well-made recording is most welcome.

SCHUBERT, Franz (1797–1828)

ORCHESTRAL MUSIC

Concerto Movement for Violin and Orchestra in D, D.345

(M)  CRD (ADD) CRD 3369. Thomas, Bournemouth SO – BEETHOVEN: Romances 1–2; MENDELSSOHN: Violin Concerto ***

Schubert's Konzertstück is slight, but Ronald Thomas's refreshing playing and direction make it well worth having on disc, along with the excellent Beethoven and Mendelssohn. The recording is first class.

Overtures: Fierrabras; Overture in D; Overture in E min., D.648; Overtures in the Italian Style in D, D.590 & D.591. Rosamunde; Die Verschworenen; Die Zwillingsbrüder

(N) (BB) (*) Naxos 8.570329. Prague Sinf., Benda

Schubert's early Rossiniesque overtures are delightfully tuneful and enjoyable, as is the more dramatic and rarely heard Overture in E minor. The opera overtures – even the rare ones such as Die Verschworenen ('The Conspirators') – offer much delightful colour and invention and make one wonder at their neglect. The most famous work here, the Rosamunde Overture, is sympathetically played, even if the performance, as in the other overtures, lacks the last ounce of character. Good playing and decent recording throughout.

Rondo in A for Violin & Strings, D.438

 EMI 7 49663-2. Kennedy, ECO, Tate – BRUCH; MENDELSSOHN: Concertos ***

The ideas in Schubert's Rondo flow very sweetly with Kennedy, making this an attractive bonus to the usual Bruch–Mendelssohn coupling.

Symphonies 1–6; 8–9

(B) * RCA 82876 60392-2 (4). Dresden State O, Davis

(BB) * Warner Apex 2564 60532-2 (5). Sinfonia Varsovia, Y. Menuhin (disc 5 includes conversation in German: Menuhin/Jurgen Seeger)

(BB) (*) Brilliant 99587 (4). Hanover Band, Goodman

(B) (*) DG (ADD) 471 307-2 (4). BPO, Boehm

Symphonies 1–6; 8 (Unfinished); 9 (Great); 2 Overtures in the Italian Style

(B) (*) Warner 2564 62323-2 (4). Concg. O, Harnoncourt

Sir Colin Davis's Dresden cycle (on four bargain discs), despite observing all repeats, makes a glowing tribute that regularly reveals Davis drawing magnetic and intense playing from the Dresden Orchestra, with the polish of the ensemble adding to the impact, never making the results sound self-conscious. This is a most distinguished cycle, helped by glowing sound.

Menuhin's more recent (1997) IMG set of the Schubert Symphonies, now reissued on Apex, offers performances electrically tense, generally at brisk speeds, with an easy feeling for Schubertian lyricism, helped by alert, warmly responsive playing from this leading Polish chamber orchestra and full, immediate recording. The disappointment is that the supplementary conversation is in German only.

Boehm does not smile as often as Schubert's music demands – especially by the side of Beecham in 3 and 5 – but he is always sympathetic. Certainly the Berlin wind are a joy to listen to, and it is only in the early symphonies that he does not quite capture the youthful sparkle of these delightful scores. Boehm's warmly graceful account of 5 and the glowing performance of 6, coupled together, show Boehm at his best, taking an easy-going view, with relaxed tempi that never grow heavy. Boehm capped his series with an outstanding account of the Unfinished Symphony and one of the finest of all recorded performances of the Great C major, to make an excellent coupling.

Harnoncourt takes a relatively severe view and, significantly, he is at his finest in the darkness of the Tragic Symphony. There is little of Schubertian charm here, with his eccentrically slow tempo for the finale of 6 in its lumbering gait missing the pure sunlight of the piece which Beecham displayed so well. Harnoncourt's preference for short phrasing also tends to make slow movements less songful, though equally it adds to the bite and intensity of other movements, notably Scherzos with their sharp cross-rhythyms. However, there is a lighter touch in the Italian Overtures and even moments of charm, with the introductions (especially the quote from Rosamunde) affectionately done. Harnoncourt has used specially prepared texts.

Goodman draws lively, beautifully sprung performances from the players of the Hanover Band. For anyone wanting an inexpensive set of period performances of these symphonies, they can be warmly recommended with the reservation that the (originally Nimbus) sound balance is very reverberant. However, this Brilliant reissue is in the lowest possible price range, although documentation is non-existent.

Symphonies 1–3; 4 (Tragic); 5–7; 8 (Unfinished); 9 (Great); 10 in D, D.936a; Symphonic Fragments: in D, D.615 and D.708a (completed & orch. Newbold)

Ⓑ  Ph. 470 886-2 (6). ASMF, Marriner

Marriner's excellent set gathers together not only the eight symphonies of the regular canon, but two more symphonies now 'realized', thanks to the work of Brian Newbold of Hull University. For full measure, half a dozen fragments of other symphonic movements are included, orchestrated by Professor Newbold. The set brings sparkling examples of the Academy's work at its finest, while the bigger challenges of the Unfinished (here completed with Schubert's Scherzo filled out and the Rosamunde B minor Entr'acte used as finale) and the Great C major are splendidly taken. These are fresh, direct readings, making up in rhythmic vitality for any lack of weight. The recordings, all digital, present consistent refinement and undistractingly good balance. Now reissued as a bargain box, this set is well worth any collector's attention.

Symphonies 1–4; Rosamunde: Ballet music 1 & 2

(BB) (*) EMI Gemini (ADD) 5 86064-2 (2). BPO, Karajan (with WEBER: Der Freischütz Overture ())

Symphonies 5–6; 8 (Unfinished); 9 (Great); Rosamunde: Overture

(BB) (*) EMI Gemini (ADD) 5 86067-2 (2). BPO, Karajan

Karajan presents a most polished and beautiful set of Schubert symphonies, reissued on a pair of Gemini CD doubles at budget price. The point and elegance of the Berliners' playing in the early symphonies is most persuasive, yet the results are never mannered. The Unfinished, dating from 1975, brings characteristic Berlin refinement. The first movement is the original first take restored; there were technical problems with it and so Karajan re-recorded the movement a month later. Those problems have now been solved by the current re-mix, with excellent results. The Great C major (1977) is also compelling. The overtures and ballet music make a fine bonus (the Weber, notable for its dramatic opening, is digital).

EMI Collector's Edition

Symphonies 1–6; 8–9; 2 Overtures: Alfonso and Estrella; In the Italian Style, D.590/1; Die Zwillingsbrüder (Munich Festival O, Yehudi Menuhin). Chamber Music: Arpeggione Sonata for Viola & Piano (Caussé, Duchable); Flute Quartet (arr. of Matiegka's Notturno) (Debost, Ghiglia, Pasquier, Boulfli); Introduction, Theme & Variations for flute & piano on 'Trockne Blumen' from 'Die schöne Müllerin' (Rampal, Veyron-Lacroix); Octet, D.803 (Melos Ens.). Piano Quintet (Trout) (Pludermacher, French String Trio, with Cazauran); Piano Trios 1–2; Sonata (Duo) for Violin & Piano, D.574; Notturno, D.897; Sonatensatz, D.28 (Collard, Dumay, Lodéon). Adagio and Rondo concertante for Piano, Violin & Strings, D.487 (with Domus); Fantasy, D.934; Rondo brillant, D.895; Sonatinas 1–3 (all for Violin & Piano) (all with Hoelscher, Engel); String Quartets, D.94; D 804; D. 810 (Death and the Maiden); D.887 (Hungarian Quartet). String Quartets, D.87; D.94; D.112; D.173; D.353; Quartettsatz (Heutling Qt). String Quintet in C, D.956 (Hungarian Qt, with Varga). Music for piano 4 hands: Divertissement à la hongroise; Fantasy in F min., Rondo in A; Variations on an Original Theme (Février & Tacchino). Allegro in A min. (Lebensstürme); Divertissement à la française in E min.; Grand Duo Sonata, in C; 6 Grandes marches; Grande marche funèbre; Grande marche héroïque in A min.; Kindermarsch in G; Marches caractéristiques; Marches militaires (Eschenbach & Frantz). Solo piano music: Albumblatt (Rudy); Allegretto in C min., D.915; Cotillon in E flat; 12 Deutsche Ländler; Galop in G; 2 Ecossaises (Katsaris); Fantasia in C (Wanderer) (Rudy); 8 Impromptus, D.899 & D.935 (Ciccolini); 13 Lieder (Concert paraphrases, arr Liszt) (Setrak, piano). 6 Moments Musicaux (Naoumoff); Piano Sonatas: 4 in A min., D.537; 14 in A min., D.784; 2 Scherzos, D.593 (Rudy); Sonatas: 13 in A, D.664; 21 in B flat, D.960 (Ciccolini); 7 in E flat, D.568; 9 in B flat, D.575; 16 in A min., D.845; 17 in D, D.850; 18 in G, D.894; 19 in C min., D.958; 20 in A, D.959 (Zacharias); 34 Valses sentimentales, D.779; 12 Waltzes, D.145; 20 Waltzes, D.146; 12 Gräzer Waltzes, D.924; Valses nobles, D.969 (Bordoni). Choral music: Deutsche Mass, D.872; Gesang der Geister über den Wassem; Nachtgesang im Walde (both for men's chorus) (St Hedwig's Cathedral Ch., BPO, Forster). Lazarus (Cantata), D.869; Magnificat in C, D.486; Masses: 1 in F, D.105; 4 in C, D.452; 5 in A flat, D.678; Missas brevis in G, D.167; in B flat, D.324; Stabat Mater in F, D.383 (Soloists, Bav. R. Ch. & O, Sawallisch); 6 in E flat, D.950 (Soloists, St Hedwig's Cathedral Ch., BPO, Leinsdorf); 7 Gesang (for male voices) (Hilliard Ens.); 7 Gesang (Laki, Stuttgart Chamber Ch., Bernius, with Rothkopf, piano); 26 Part songs for chorus (Soloists, Capella Bavariae, Sawallisch); Ständchen (Bav. State Op. Ch., Baumgart); Rosamunde: Incidental music (complete) (Rothenberger, Bav. R. Ch. & O, Hager). Auf der Strom (with Arom, horn); Der Hirt auf dem Felsen (with Lancelot, clarinet); Mitleiden; Viola (Retchitzka, Barbier); 5 Lieder (Fassbaender, Werba); 8 Lieder (Popp, Gage); 14 Lieder (J. Baker, Moore or Parsons); 14 Lieder (Fischer-Dieskau, Moore); 17 Lieder (Hendricks, Lupu). Song-cycles: Die schöne Müllerin; Schwanengesang (Bär, Parsons); Winterreise (Vickers, Parsons)

(BB) (*) EMI (ADD) 3 85853-2 (50)

Another extraordinary, super-bargain cornucopia from EMI. Menuhin's set of the Symphonies, Sawallisch's Mass recordings and Lazarus, and much other rare choral music, the Lieder recitals from Janet Baker, Fischer-Dieskau and Olaf Bär among others, are all first class, and most of the chamber music is eminently desirable. Indeed there is little here which is not of a fairly high standard, and the possibilities for exploration are endless. There are no texts or translations, and the booklet merely offers a list of titles and the artists concerned, but this is still remarkable value for money.

Symphonies 1 in D, D.82; 2 in B flat, D.125

Ⓑ (*) Naxos 8.553093. Failoni O of Budapest, Halász

Michael Halász and the Failoni Orchestra are affectionately easy-going rather than overtly dramatic, but they play both these works most winningly. The recording too is full and naturally balanced, although the resonance of the Italian Institute in Budapest makes the tuttis spread and lose some of the sharpness of focus.

Symphonies 1–2; 8 in B min. (Unfinished)

Ⓜ ((*)) Sony mono SMK 87876. RPO, Beecham

Beecham's versions of the first two Schubert Symphonies remain second to none, and the finale of the Second Symphony has rarely been given with greater vivacity or lightness of touch. However, the 1953 recording sounds less transparent and fresh than many LPs of the period. The Unfinished is quite special, however, and among the best things Sir Thomas did in the early 1950s.

Symphonies 1 in D, D.82; 4 in C min. (Tragic)

Ⓑ (*) Warner Apex 2564 60527-2. Sinfonia Varsovia, Y. Menuhin

Menuhin's First Symphony opens weightily (partly the effect of the resonant recording), but the Allegro, fast and resilient, is graceful as well as lively, and the Andante has characteristic warmth. As throughout the cycle, the Minuet is briskly characterful and the finale captivates with energetic lightness of articulation from the strings. The Tragic Symphony opens powerfully, yet again the main Allegro, like the finale, is resilient as well as boldly forward-looking, and the slow movement nobly expressive. The Trio of the Minuet is most engagingly done. The sound is full-bodied, with tuttis not completely transparent, but this is certainly very recommendable in the budget range.

Symphonies 2 in B flat; 6 in C

🔑 Ⓑ * Warner Apex 2564 60529-2. Sinfonia Varsovia, Y. Menuhin

Menuhin's coupling is outstanding in every way, with first-movement Allegros swiftly paced and fizzing with vitality. Both Andantes are beautifully played, each elegant and poised. With vigorous Scherzi (winning Trios) and jaunty finales, these performances are hard to beat, full of Schubertian character. The orchestral playing is first class, glowing and vivacious, and the recording is both full and transparent.

Symphonies 3 in D; 5 in B flat; 8 in B min. (Unfinished)

🔑 Ⓑ * Warner Apex 2564 60530-2. Sinfonia Varsovia, Y. Menuhin

A truly outstanding triptych from Menuhin at his most inspired. 3 is bold, strong and forward-looking. 5, too, has both strength and grace. The Unfinished then emerges as the most powerful, most romantic of the cycle, superb playing from the Sinfonia Varsovia and first-rate recording.

Symphonies 3; 4 (Tragic)

🔑 * DG 423 653-2. COE, Abbado

Crisp, fast and light, 3 is given a delectable performance by Abbado. In 4, the Tragic, Abbado makes the slow C minor introduction bitingly mysterious before a clean, elegant Allegro, and with this conductor the other movements are also elegant and polished as well as strong. Textually, 4 eliminates the extra bars in the slow movement, which had been inserted originally by Brahms. The slow movement is outstandingly beautiful, with the oboe solo – presumably COE's Douglas Boyd – most tenderly expressive.

Symphonies 3; 5; 6

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * EMI (ADD) 5 66984-2. RPO, Beecham

Beecham's are magical performances in which every phrase breathes. There is no substitute for imaginative phrasing and each line is shaped with affection and spirit. The Allegretto of the Third Symphony is an absolute delight. The delicacy of the opening of the Fifth is matched by the simple lyrical beauty of the Andante, while few conductors have been as persuasive as Beecham in the Sixth 'little' C major Symphony. The sound is generally faithful and spacious.

Symphonies 3 in D, D.200; 6 in C, D.589

🔑 Ⓑ  Naxos 8.553094. Failoni O of Budapest, Halász

These are delightful performances, fully capturing the innocent charm of these youthful symphonies. Michael Halász is most sensitive, and his style is Beechamesque in its affectionate elegance.

Symphony 4 in C min. (Tragic), D.417

🔑  BBC (ADD) BBCL 4093-2 (2). New Philh. O, Giulini – BEETHOVEN: Missa solemnis **(*)

Recorded at the Edinburgh Festival in 1968, Giulini's reading of Schubert's Tragic Symphony brings a bitingly intense reading, more than usually making this early work live up to its nickname. It makes an attractive fill-up to Giulini's monumental reading of Beethoven's Missa solemnis recorded earlier in that year.

Symphony 4 (Tragic); Grand Duo in C, D.812 (orch. Joachim)

Ⓑ (*) Naxos 8.553095. Failoni O of Budapest, Halász

Halász presents the Tragic Symphony sympathetically and, though this is not a strongly dramatic reading, the resonant acoustic adds a certain weight, and the Andante is warmly and expressively played. This inexpensive disc is valuable for its coupling, the orchestration of the large-scale Grand Duo for piano duet by Joachim. The work is convincingly played, with gravitas and freshness nicely balanced. The warm resonancy of the Budapest Italian Institute suits this work very well.

(i) Symphonies 4 in C min.; 5 in B flat; (ii) 8 in B min. (Unfinished); (i) 9 in C (Great); Rosamunde: Entr'acte 3 & ballet music, 1 & 2

Ⓑ  RCA (ADD/DDD) 74321 84607-2 (2). (i) N. German RSO, Wand; (ii) Chicago SO, Reiner

The freshness and robust, spirited vigour of Günter Wand's Schubert shines through all of his performances and cannot fail to give pleasure. The recordings are excellent (the Fourth is analogue; 5 and 9, plus the engaging Rosamunde excerpts, are digital). Reiner's Unfinished, however, dates from the early days of stereo but hardly betrays its age. The performance is atmospheric and dramatic, especially so in the impulsive first movement, the second is richly lyrical. Good value if the programme suits.

Symphony 5 in B flat, D.485

🔑 (BB)  DG (ADD) 447 433-2. VPO, Boehm – BEETHOVEN: Symphony 6 ***

(*) BBC (ADD) BBCL 4003-2. BBC SO, Kempe – BRAHMS: Symphony 4 **(*)

(BB) () Dutton Lab. mono CDK 1208. Concg. O, van Beinum (with BEETHOVEN: Creatures of Prometheus: Overture (LPO)) – BERLIOZ: Symphonie fantastique, Op. 14 ()

Boehm's VPO recording of the Fifth Symphony dates from the very end of his career. In his eighties he preferred a tauter, more incisive view than he had given in his 1967 Berlin performance, weightier, but still with a light rhythmic touch, while the slow movement is not lacking grace. The finale is strong and purposeful and this is Boehm at his finest, with superbly polished and responsive VPO playing in repertoire they know and love. The 1980 recording is full and warm, a live performance.

Kempe's Fifth Symphony comes as a makeweight to an excellent 1974 concert performance of the Brahms Fourth. The Schubert was recorded at a Promenade Concert three years earlier, and is a delight from start to finish. Very musicianly, enjoyable, natural and full of life. Very decent sound too.

From Eduard van Beinum and the Concertgebouw Orchestra come cultured playing and well-balanced sound. An enjoyable reminder of the fine results Eduard van Beinum achieved in Amsterdam.

Symphonies 5 in B flat; 6 in C

🔑 * DG 423 654-2. COE, Abbado

Abbado brings out the happy songfulness of the slow movements in these works, as well as the rhythmic resilience of the Allegros. As in 4, so also in 6 Abbado eliminates the extra bars added by Brahms in his original Schubert edition. Excellent recording, with fine bloom and good, natural contrasts.

Symphonies 5 in B flat; 8 (Unfinished)

🔑 Ⓜ  Sony 82876 78741-2. NYPO, Walter (with BEETHOVEN: Overture Leonora 3 ())

() BBC stereo/mono BBCL 4120-2. Hallé O, Barbirolli – MOZART: Symphony 40 ()

Bruno Walter brings special qualities of warmth and lyricism to the Unfinished. Affection, gentleness and humanity are the keynotes of this performance; while the first movement of the Fifth is a shade too measured, there is much loving attention to detail in the Andante. The recording remains fully acceptable, and the return of this famous (1961) coupling to the catalogue is most welcome.

Barbirolli conducts a light, beautifully sprung reading of the Fifth Symphony, well paced, leading up to an exhilarating account of the finale. There is no exposition repeat in the first movement, and in the Unfinished Barbirolli after a slow, deliberate first phrase offers a performance which combines warmly expressive phrasing and steady speeds, with magic in such passages as the big crescendo in the first-movement development.

Symphonies 5; 8 (Unfinished); 9 in C (Great)

🔑 Ⓑ * Double Decca 448 927-2 (2). VPO, Solti

Symphonies 5; 8 in B min. (completed by Brian Newbould); 9 in C (Great); Rosamunde (Ballet Music), D.797: 2 in G

Ⓑ  Virgin 2x1 5 61806-2 (2). OAE, Mackerras

This Double Decca coupling of three favourite Schubert Symphonies is one of the most attractive of all Solti's many reissues on the Decca label. There have been more charming versions of 5 but few that so beautifully combine freshness with refined polish. The Unfinished has Solti adopting measured speeds but with his refined manner keeping total concentration. The Great C major Symphony is an outstanding version, among the very finest, beautifully paced and sprung in all four movements, and superbly played. It has drama as well as lyrical feeling, but above all it has a natural sense of spontaneity and freshness. The recordings all confirm the Vienna Sofiensaal as an ideal recording location, and the glowing detail, especially in 9, is a source of consistent pleasure.

Mackerras was the first to use period instruments in Schubert's Ninth. The characterful rasp on the period brass instruments and the crisp attack of timpani are much more striking than any thinness of string-tone. It is a performance of outstanding freshness and resilience. The Fifth is not quite as magnetic as the Ninth, but still has comparable qualities. The special claim of this second disc is the inclusion of the Unfinished Symphony heard here as 'finished' by Brian Newbould. Mackerras opens in the mysterious depths with the darkest pianopianissimo, and the plangent period timbres bring a real sense of Sturm und Drang, with powerful contrasts and strong, forceful accents in the second movement. The recording is excellent throughout.

Symphony 8 in B min. (Unfinished), D.759 (CD versions)

(*) BBC (ADD) BBCL 4039-2. Philh. O, Boult – BIZET: Jeux d'enfants; RAVEL: Daphnis et Chloé: Suite 2; SIBELIUS: Symphony 7 **(*)

Ⓑ (*) DG (ADD/DDD) 477 5324. VPO, C. Kleiber – BRAHMS: Symphony 4; WAGNER: Tristan und Isolde: Act III: excerpts ***

Symphony 8 (Unfinished); Grand Duo (orch. Joachim)

* DG 423 655-2. COE, Abbado

Abbado's outstandingly refined and sensitive version comes with a valuable coupling. The second subject in the Unfinished brings some slightly obtrusive agogic hesitations at the beginning of each phrase; but with such responsive playing they quickly sound fresh and natural.

Showmanship and flamboyance were alien to Sir Adrian's personality, which is perhaps why he remains under-represented on CD and underrated by the wider public. This recording serves as a reminder of his stature and the quiet, natural dignity that informed his music-making. The Bizet, Schubert and Ravel come from a Promenade Concert in 1964 and the Sibelius from a Festival Hall concert given the preceding year. In the Unfinished there is the unforced eloquence that distinguished his famous Great C major.

Carlos Kleiber's account of the Unfinished was more compelling than the Third Symphony with which it was originally coupled; but here there is an unease in the first movement where first and second subjects are not fully coordinated, the contrasts sounding a little forced. Still, this is undoubtedly a performance of some stature which many will find compelling. The 1978 analogue recording brings out the brass well and is wide-ranging.

Symphony 8 (Unfinished); String Quartet in D min. (Death and the Maiden) (orch. Stein)

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.572051. Buffalo PO, Falletta

The arrangement of the Death and the Maiden Quartet for an expanded Schubertian orchestra by Andy Stein, well played as it is, simply doesn't work. The use of woodwind and four horns gives the music added colour, but robs it of its plangent bite, character, and intensity. Indeed it becomes an entirely different work – not the fault of the playing of the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra under JoAnne Falletta, who give an excellent account of themselves in the Unfinished Symphony.

'Ultimate Schubert': Disc 1: Symphony 8 (Unfinished) (Concg. O, Haitink). Rosamunde (Overture & Incidental Music) with Heynis, Netherlands R. Ch. Disc 2: Symphonies 5 & 9 (Great) (VPO, Kertesz). Disc 3: Piano Quintet in A (Trout) (Pressler); String Quartet 14 (Death and the Maiden) (Beaux Arts Trio augmented). Disc 4: String Quintet; Quartettsatz (Weller Qt, augmented). Disc 5: Piano Sonata 17 in D, D.850; Impromptus in G flat & A flat, D.899/3-4; Moments musicaux 1–6 (Curzon)

(BB)  Decca 475 8542 (5)

The only real (and surprising) disappointment here is Haitink's account of the Unfinished Symphony, which is disappointingly dull. Yet his Rosamunde ballet music shows him at his very finest, beautifully played, with a simple eloquence. The vocal items, with Aafjé Heynis in fine voice, are especially memorable. So too is Kertész's account of the Great C major Symphony, strong, flexible and direct, and still among the finest versions. The Beaux Arts performances of the Trout Quintet and the Death and the Maiden Quartet are well up to standard and self-recommending, but the Weller account of the String Quintet, although finely played, is a trifle sweet and suave. Needless to say, Clifford Curzon's performances are in every way outstanding; but one can only lament that space could not have been found for Schubert's last and greatest piano Sonata in B flat.

Symphonies: (i) 8 (Unfinished); (ii) 9 in C (Great) (DVD versions)

🔑 ✿ * TDK DVD DVWW-COWAND6. NDR SO, Wand (V/D: Hugo Käch)

Recorded live, Günter Wand's performances of the two greatest Schubert Symphonies have the same concentration and visionary atmosphere as his equally memorable Berlin Philharmonic CD of the Ninth. But to have his magically evocative and ravishingly played account of the Unfinished as well as the Great C major on a single DVD makes for an unforgettable listening and watching experience. The cameras continually and perceptively follow the performance detail, showing Wand as a direct, unostentatious conductor, often achieving remarkable results with the minimum of gesture. The interpretation of the Ninth, as on CD, solves the work's problems of tempo changes by achieving a warmly natural musical flow, expanding spontaneously to high drama at key moments. The sound in the Musik-und-Kongresshalle, Lübeck, is first class too, and this must be counted among the finest orchestral DVDs yet to appear.

Symphonies 8 (Unfinished); 9 in C (Great)

 RCA SACD (ADD) 88697 04603-2. Boston SO, Munch

 Telarc CD 80502. Sc CO, Mackerras

Ⓑ (*) Sony (ADD) SBK 48268. Cleveland O, Szell

Ⓑ  CfP (ADD) 574 8852. LPO, Pritchard

Ⓜ (*) EMI (ADD) 4 76895-2. BPO Karajan

Munch gives a magnificent performance of the Great C major Symphony. In sheer dramatic tension he even outshines Toscanini. This is very much the Toscanini approach – the introduction and Allegro of the first movement even faster than his – but one must emphasize that it is far from being an unsympathetic or rough-riding account of the kind we sometimes get from the other side of the Atlantic. The remastered 1958 recording still has plenty of edge, yet in the impressive new SACD transfer the sound is filled out by the warm resonance of the Boston acoustic. This is even more striking in the expansive lower strings at the opening of the Unfinished, recorded three years earlier. Here Munch's performance has a fine, lyrical impulse, with sensitive wind-playing in the second movement; but there is a certain heaviness in his approach which is quite different from his reading of the Ninth Symphony.

Szell's, too, is a splendid performance of the Unfinished. Phrasing and general discipline are immaculate, but Szell never lacks warmth here, and drama and beauty walk hand in hand in the second movement. Apart from the lack of a real pianissimo, the 1960 recording is very good for its time. The Ninth dates from the previous year. Szell's control of tempo in the first movement brings a convincing onward flow, and the performance is notable for the alertness and rhythmic energy of the playing, yet there is no lack of resilience in the Andante. In the brilliant finale few rivals can match the precision of the hectic triplet rhythms.

Pritchard's reading of the Unfinished is magnetic, unusually direct, even in the melting lyricism of the incomparable second subject. The Great C major is as vital as it is refreshing. Pritchard observed repeats more than anyone else on record. Only the exposition repeat in the finale is omitted. Both recordings have the advantage of a warm ambience (Watford Town Hall) and are naturally balanced.

Karajan's EMI Unfinished, which dates from 1975, finds Berlin refinement at its most ethereal. The performance has an other-worldly quality, rapt and concentrated. The Great C major is also compelling, but here some may find the reverberant acoustic gives the impression of too much weightiness.

Symphony 9 in C (Great), D.944 (DVD version)

 EuroArts DVD 2072168. Bav. RSO, Bernstein (with SCHUMANN: Manfred Overture (with VPO ***))

It is good to have Bernstein's fine (1987) recording of the Great C major on DVD, with the extra zest of live performance. He negotiates all the changes of pace and thrust to the manner born, and makes the work flow easily and spontaneously. The slow movement is played most beautifully. He then moves from the Munich Kongresssaal to the Musikvereinssaal for a similarly impressive account of Schumann's Manfred Overture with the VPO, a work not otherwise available on DVD. Recommended.

Symphony 9 in C (Great), D.944 (CD versions)

🔑 Ⓜ * RCA 82876 59425-2. BPO, Wand

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * Decca Legends (ADD) 460 311-2. VPO, Solti – WAGNER: Siegfried Idyll ****

🔑 (BB)  EMI Encore 5 09022-2. BPO, Tennstedt – MENDELSSOHN: Symphony 4 (Italian) **(*)

Ⓝ Ⓜ * Signum SIGCD 133. Philh. O, Mackerras

* EMI 2 28533-2. BPO, Rattle

Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 62791-2. LPO, Boult – BRAHMS: Alto Rhapsody; Academic Festival Overture ***

(BB)  Warner Apex 2564 60531-2. Sinfonia Varsovia, Y. Menuhin

Ⓜ  BBC Legends BBCL 4140. LPO, Giulini – BRITTEN: The Building of the House Overture; WEBER: Der Freischütz: Overture ***

(*) Tudor SACD Surround Sound 7144. Bamberg SO, Nott

Symphony 9 in C (Great); Rosamunde: Overture (Die Zauberharfe), D.644

 DG 423 656-2. COE, Abbado

 Häns. CD 93.044. Stuttgart RSO, Norrington

Günter Wand offers a visionary account of Schubert's Great C major Symphony, taken from superbly played, live, Berlin performances, glowingly recorded. Consistently he makes the playing sound spontaneous, even in the tricky problems of speed changes inherent in this work. In the manner of his generation, he does not observe exposition repeats in the outher movements or second-half repeats in the Scherzo, but this is a beautifully coordinated, strong and warm reading.

Solti's superb recording with the VPO (one of his finest records) is also available as part of a Double Decca, which includes 5 and 8 (see above). Decca have rightly chosen it for reissue in their Legends series, coupled with Wagner's Siegfried Idyll. Both performances have comparable distinction and show that Solti could relax in music which he loved without sacrificing concentration and drama.

Tennstedt's 1983 EMI recording ranks alongside those of both Wand and Solti, and some may find his account even more satisfying. It is an incandescent reading that brings home afresh how Schubert, even in this last and grandest of his symphonies is still youthfully energetic. With superb playing from the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra in sound of natural warmth, this is certainly among the very finest versions available.

Sir Charles Mackerras offers a strikingly vital account of the Great C major Symphony with the Philharmonia Orchestra, showing distinct influences of period-instrumental practice, absorbed but not too overwhelming. Light, clear textures, speeds brisk but not over-driven, detail clear, with the Philharmonia string-playing responsive and polished. Repeats are generous: both outer-movement expositions are repeated and the Scherzo moves from section to section with plenty of rhythmic lift. The tempo fluctuations in the first movement are seamlessly resolved and the warmly lyrical secondary theme in the slow movement is affectionately contrasted. The finale races forward with a strong, bold impetus to make a satisfying close, and the result overall is refreshingly vigorous and spontaneous. The recording, made in the Queen Elizabeth Hall, is perhaps a little dry but is admirably clear, not lacking weight or body, and this now replaces his earlier, Telarc version.

Though the COE is by definition an orchestra of chamber scale, the weight of Abbado's version, taken from his complete cycle, is ample, while allowing extra detail to be heard, thanks also to the orchestra's outstandingly crisp ensemble. Speeds are very well chosen, and the expressive detail is consistently made to sound natural. The Rosamunde (Zauberharfe) Overture makes a valuable and generous fill-up.

When Sir Simon Rattle over the years has regularly conducted orchestras of period instruments, it may come as a surprise that with his own Berlin Philharmonic he takes a relatively free and romantic view of this massive symphony, perhaps reflecting in part the fact that this is a live recording. His moulding of phrases too seems to reflect the older traditions of this great orchestra rather than those of his predecessor as music director, Herbert von Karajan. What emerges from this relatively relaxed approach is an extra sense of joy in Schubert's inspiration, with rhythms lifted infectiously. Not that the playing lacks bite or precision, far from it, with many counter-motifs brought out that are too often hidden by the main melodies. The recording also has an admirably wide range, down to magical pianissimos from the strings.

Older readers will welcome back to the catalogue this splendidly wise and magisterial account from the doyen of British conductors. There is not a whit of hyperbole; indeed, Sir Adrian's tendency to understate is evident in the slow movement, just as his feeling for the overall design is undiminished. The LPO respond with playing of high quality and the 1972 Kingsway Hall recording (like the Brahms coupling) is transferred admirably to CD.

In some ways Jonathan Nott's account of the Schubert Ninth has much in common with the Boult version. The Bamberg Symphony Orchestra play very enticingly, and create a warm, Schubertian atmosphere. Nott's reading, too, is relaxed, spontaneous in an unforced way, yet with the concentration maintained throughout. The surround sound (the first this work has received) is gloriously warm and yet vivid in detail.

Most listeners will surely do an aural double-take at the astonishing speed of the opening horn solo of Menuhin's highly individual and original interpretation. Yet the movement moves forward in a single thrust, gathering power, energy and momentum to its thrilling coda. The Andante con moto is also brisker than usual, but it comes naturally within Menuhin's conception, and the Scherzo rollicks forcefully and genially before the closing Allegro vivace sweeps all before it, the trombones helping to drive the music onwards. The sheer exuberance of this performance all but negates the idea of a work of 'heavenly' length and, with such vigour and zest, it is impossible to be bored for a moment, even if you resist the conception. Marvellous playing and splendid recording, leaving the listener on a high.

Roger Norrington's second recording of the Great C major Symphony was taken live by Stuttgart Radio engineers, with modern instruments using period techniques. The first two movements are marginally faster even than Norrington's earlier EMI recording with the London Classical Players. The interpretation is very similar, with rhythms lightly sprung. The Die Zauberharfe Overture (usually known as Rosamunde) makes a welcome extra, with a powerful introduction and a fast, light Allegro.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Arpeggione Sonata, D.821 (arr. for cello)

 Ph. 412 230-2. Maisky, Argerich – SCHUMANN: Fantasiestücke etc. ***

(BB)  Naxos 8.550654. Kliegel, Merscher – SCHUMANN: Adagio & Allegro, etc. ***

Ⓑ (*) Cal. (ADD) CAL 3614. Navarra, d'Arco – DVOŘÁK: Humoresque, etc.; SCHUMANN: Adagio & Allegro, etc. **(*)

Mischa Maisky and Martha Argerich make much more of the Arpeggione Sonata than any of their rivals. Their approach may be relaxed, but they bring much pleasure through their variety of colour and sensitivity. The Philips recording is in the very best traditions of the house.

At super-bargain price, Maria Kliegel and Kristin Merscher are highly competitive. The performances are well shaped and sensitive, though perhaps lacking the last ounce of character. All the same, neither the Schubert nor the Schumann coupling will disappoint at this price, given the general high standard of playing and recording.

A warm-hearted, rather old-fashioned performance from Navarra, rather discreetly accompanied by Annie d'Arco. The cello itself is richly caught, the piano truthful but a little backward.

Arpeggione Sonata; Cello Sonatinas 1–3, D.384–5 & D.408

 Channel Classics CCS 9696. Wispelwey, Giacometti

The highly musical Pieter Wispelwey has the full measure of Schubert's innocent lyricism, and the pianist's light touch in the finale is especially persuasive. Paolo Giacometti makes a most convincing case for the use of the fortepiano in Schubert, and the restored instrument has a remarkable range of colour. Pieter Wispelwey's tone, using gut strings, always sings and, even using a minimum of vibrato, he constantly cajoles the ear, while his phrasing has an appealing simplicity. Thus the three violin Sonatinas are made to sound convincing in these cello transcriptions, especially the G minor, D.408, in which the Andante and finale are endearing. The recording is forwardly but truthfully balanced. Recommended.

Arpeggione Sonata, D.821 (arr. in G min. for clarinet & piano)

 Chan. 8506. de Peyer, Pryor – SCHUMANN: Fantasiestücke; 3 Romances; WEBER: Silvana Variations ***

So persuasive is the performance of Gervase de Peyer and Gwenneth Pryor that the listener is all but persuaded that the work was actually written for this combination.

(i) Arpeggione Sonata; (ii) Duo in A, D. 574; Fantaisie in C, D. 943; Violin Sonatinas 1–3, D. 384-5 & D. 408

🔑 Ⓑ  Double Decca stereo/mono (ADD) 466 748-2 (2). (i) Gendron, Françaix; (ii) Goldberg, Lupu

Szymon Goldberg and Radu Lupu give us the complete violin and piano music (except for one small piece) in beautifully played and well-recorded performances, which have an unaffected Schubertian feeling. Indeed, Goldberg's account of the Fantasy is particularly intimate and appealing. The presence of Lupu ensures that these performances give pleasure, and his playing has a vitality and inner life that are undoubtedly rewarding. These recordings date from the end of the 1970s, but the Arpeggione Sonata, which has a comparable intimacy and Schubertian affinity, is hardly less appealing even though the recording is mono (but very truthful mono) and dates from 1954.

(i) Fantasy in C, D.934; (i; ii) Piano Trio 2 in E flat, D.929; (iii) String Quartets 8 in B flat, D.112 (Op. 168); 14 in D min. (Death and the Maiden), D.810; 15 in G, D.887 (Op. 161)

Ⓑ () HM Pearl mono GEMMCDS 9141 (2). (i) Adolf Busch, Serkin; (iii) with Hermann Busch; (iii) Busch Qt

Some have spoken of the Busch Quartet's Schubert as the greatest ever committed to disc. Certainly the G major Quartet has never had so searching and powerful a reading, and the early B flat Quartet, which used to be known as Op. 168, sounds every bit as captivating as one remembers it from the days of shellac. The E flat Trio and the C major Fantasy are also in the highest class, and the Pearl transfers are very good indeed. These two CDs, packed economically in one jewel-case, encompass three LPs and are really excellent value for money. A lovely set.

Octet in F, D.803

🔑 * Onyx ONYX4006. Mullova, Moraguèz, Postinghel, Cori, Chamorro, Krüger, M. Fischer-Dieskau, Stall

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * Decca (ADD) 466 580-2. Vienna Octet – SPOHR: Octet in E ***

(BB) * HM Classical Express HCX 3957049. Music from Aston Magna

 Chan. 8585. ASMF Chamber Ens.

 ASV CDDCA 694. Gaudier Ens.

(BB)  EMI Gemini (ADD) 3 50864-2 (2). Melos Ens. of L. – BEETHOVEN: Octet, etc.; MENDELSSOHN: Octet **

Octet in F, D. 803; Wind Octet, in F, D.72

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550389. Budapest Schubert Ens.

This newest version of the Octet from Onyx is not only the best since the celebrated 1957 Vienna Octet version on Decca, it actually surpasses it. These artists find a greater depth than their predecessors in a work that we all think we know well. There is not only grace, pathos and tenderness here, but also a thoughtful attention to details of phrasing and internal balance. Tempi are generally on the slow side, but the listener's attention is compelled throughout. Musically, a most satisfying and revealing account – and a moving one too. Very fine recording.

The Vienna Octet's 1958 recording of the Schubert Octet has stood the test of time. It has a magical glow with the group at its peak under the leadership of Willi Boskovsky. The horn has a Viennese fruitiness which helps to make the performance more authentic, and these fine players never put a foot wrong throughout. The recording only betrays its age in the upper registers, but is basically full and modern sounding. The delightful and unusual Spohr coupling makes this a fine addition to Decca's Legends series.

A wholly delightful account from the Aston Magna American group using period instruments with great finesse and affectionate warmth. Indeed, the music-making is pervaded with an American-styled geniality throughout, although the Allegro of the first movement, like the jocular finale, is agreebly brisk and vivacious. All the playing is very personable, but the star of the occasion is the clarinettist, Eric Hoeprich, whose timbre is utterly seductive. He uses a pair of instruments, including a C clarinet in the fourth movement Andante con variazioni. The recording is first class and this is a real bargain.

The Chandos version brings a performance just as delightful as the earlier one by the ASMF, less classical in style, a degree freer in expression, with Viennese overtones brought out in Schubert's sunny invention. It has the benefit of excellent modern digital sound, cleaner on detail than before.

The Gaudier Ensemble on ASV give an entirely winning account of the Octet, essentially spontaneous yet very relaxed and catching all the ingenuous Schubertian charm. Excellent sound, vivid yet well balanced within a pleasing acoustic which gives a feeling of intimacy. An ideal record for a warm summer evening.

Another very fine account comes from the Melos group. Although made in the late 1960s, this is still one of the best versions available, and is especially welcome at budget price. The playing is fresh and spontaneous, yet polished, with excellent ensemble. The recording is splendidly detailed and truthful. It is a pity that the couplings are not caught as sweetly by the engineers.

A vivacious enough account from the Schubert Ensemble on Naxos provides a more than viable super-bargain version, particularly as the bonus, a little Wind Octet in the same key, has a winning finale. Good playing and lively recording ensure that this disc gives much pleasure.

Octet; (i) Der Hirt aus dem Felsen

 Wigmore Live WH Live 0017. Michael Collins and Friends, (i) with Tynan, Martineau

This is an intensely enjoyable account of Schubert's Octet. It is a work lasting an hour, which with its many repeats can easily outstay its welcome despite the freshness of Schubert's invention. But here Michael Collins and a brilliant group of friends – not just from Britain but from Europe too – give a performance wonderfully resilient and imaginative. In the lovely song with clarinet obbligato, Der Hirt auf dem Felsen, 'The Shepherd on the Rock', Malcolm Martineau is the sensitive pianist accompanying the bright, fresh soprano, Alison Tynan. It would be hard to devise a more distinguished group, and that is reflected in the freshness and resilience of the playing.

Piano Quintet in A (Trout) (DVD version)

 Opus Arte DVD OA CN 0903. D. Barenboim, Perlman, Zukerman, du Pré, Mehta. 'The Trout': Documentary and performance; The Greatest Love and the Greatest Sorrow – Documentary (V/D: Christopher Nupen)

(i) Piano Quintet in A (Trout), D.667; Quartettsatz in C min., D.703 (DVD version)

🔑  Testament DVD SBDVD1001 (i) Clifford Curzon; Amadeus Qt – BRITTEN: String Quartet 2 ***

The performance telerecorded in Aldeburgh was part of a week-long celebration of Schubert and Britten staged in September 1977. It was recorded by a team that included John Culshaw, previously of Decca but by then Head of Music at BBC Television. It is superbly and simply directed, with totally unobtrusive camerawork and expertly balanced sound, with the legendary Jimmy Burnett in charge. Curzon is wonderfully natural yet patrician in the Trout Quintet and the playing throughout gives unalloyed pleasure.

Christopher Nupen, defying convention, in 1969 made his classic film, 'The Trout', combining documentary with musical performance. The performers, all emerging into international stardom, still in their twenties, provide an effervescent picture of musical preparation behind the scenes. Waiting for the performance at the newly opened Queen Elizabeth Hall in London, they simply have fun, with Jacqueline du Pré jazzing up the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto while pretending to be Pablo Casals, Zubin Mehta bowing Perlman's violin as he fingers the opening of that same work, and Perlman playing the Flight of the Bumblebee on the cello. Part of the challenge – realized in the exhilarating performance which follows – was that Pinchas Zukerman was playing the viola instead of the violin and the conductor, Zubin Mehta, was returning to his old instrument, the double-bass, just for the occasion, while another conductor, Lawrence Foster, turned the pages for Daniel Barenboim. Much more sombre, but moving too, is the other film on the disc, a survey of the remaining months of Schubert's short life after the death of Beethoven, when he wrote a sequence of supreme masterpieces.

Piano Quintet in A (Trout), D.667 (CD versions)

🔑 * EMI 5 57664-2. Adès, Belcea Qt. (members) with C. Long – ADÈS: Piano Quintet ***

🔑 * BBC (ADD) BBCL 4009-2 (2). Curzon, Amadeus Qt, Merret – BRAHMS: Piano Quintet in F min., Op. 34 ***

 Ph. 446 001-2. Brendel, Zehetmair, Zimmermann, Duven, Riegelbauer – MOZART: Piano Quartet 1 ***

Piano Quintet in A (Trout); Piano Trio 1 in B flat

 ASV Gold GLD 4000. W. Howard & Schubert Ens.

(i) Piano Quintet in A (Trout); (ii) String Quartet 14 (Death and the Maiden)

Ⓜ  DG Entrée 471 740-2. (i) Levine, Hetzel, Christ, Faust, Posch; (ii) Hagen Qt

Ⓜ (*) DG (ADD) 449 746-2. Amadeus Qt; with (i) Gilels, Zepperitz

(i) Piano Quintet in A (Trout); Moments musicaux, D.780

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca 458 608-2. Schiff; (i) Hagen Qt

András Schiff and the Hagen Quartet give a delectably fresh and youthful reading of the Trout Quintet, full of the joys of spring, but one which is also remarkable for hushed concentration, as in the exceptionally dark and intense account of the opening of the first movement. The Scherzo brings a light, quick and bouncing performance, and there is extra lightness too in the other middle movements. Alongside Brendel's (and Berezovsky's), this version observes the exposition repeat in the finale, and with such a joyful, brightly pointed performance one welcomes that. The Moments musicaux are also beautifully played and recorded, and make a considerable bonus.

The performance from Thomas Adès and the Belcea Quartet is in every way distinctive and, not surprisingly, full of fresh insights. Opening dramatically, tempi are brisk throughout, with the Scherzo making a vibrant centrepiece. The performance is generous on repeats and this brings its own sense of spaciousness. The recording was made at the Maltings so has the expected bloom.

Like the Brahms Quintet, with which it is coupled on a bonus disc, Curzon's live BBC recording of the Trout Quintet with the augmented Amadeus Quartet, made at the Royal Festival Hall in 1971, amply compensates in warmth and power for what it may lack in high studio polish, with all five artists at their most spontaneous. The Trout Variations may be on the slow side, but the rhythmic pointing is a delight. Good radio sound, smoother on top than Curzon's famous Decca version.

ASV's paired performances from the Schubert Ensemble are vibrant accounts, full of life but not lacking charm, with the excellent pianist, William Howard, dominating artistically (although the piano is not unnaturally balanced). Both accounts are seemingly spontaneous and if you want this coupling, the disc can receive a firm recommendation.

On a first-class DG Entrée reissue from the early 1990s James Levine leads a highly spontaneous performance of the Trout, full of vigour, but also striking for its delicacy of lyrical feeling in the delightful account of the famous theme and variations, which contrasts so well with the vibrant Scherzo and crisply animated finale. Excellent, modern recording, with the piano dominating in the right way. The Hagen Quartet then give a vital, well-shaped and sensitive account of Death and the Maiden, and produce consistent beauty of sound. They are fully alive to the darker side of the work, and even if they rather overdo the pianissimo markings, reducing them to the faintest whisper in the slow movement, this remains one of the best modern accounts of the work, and they are very well recorded.

The Brendel performance is superbly recorded, the imagery rich and tangible, especially the piano, with Thomas Zehetmair's violin sweetly caught and the string bass gently resounding at the bottom. It lacks something in traditional Viennese charm, but has a compensating warmth and weight and certainly plenty of natural impetus, with Brendel consistently persuasive.

In the 1975 DG recording of the Trout there is a masterly contribution from Gilels, and the Amadeus play with considerable freshness. The approach is very positive, not as sunny and spring-like as in some versions, but rewarding in its seriousness of purpose. The Amadeus's account of the Death and the Maiden Quartet was their first analogue recording of this work in 1959. The unanimity of ensemble is remarkable. The early DG stereo, too, is very good.

Piano Trio 1 in B flat (DVD version)

(*) EMI DVD 4904519. Y. & H. Menuhin, Gendron – BARTÓK: Contrasts, etc.; ENESCU: Sonata 3; FRANCK: Violin Sonata in A ()

Recorded in rather grainy black-and-white at the Bath Festival in 1964, this is still a rewarding account, thanks to the rapport between the players. It serves as a reminder not only of the two Menuhins but of the wonderful artistry of Maurice Gendron. For all the frailty of the sound, this is a thoroughly enjoyable experience.

Piano Trios 1 in B flat, D.898; 2 in E flat

🔑  Praga SACD PRD/DSD 250 201. Guarneri Trio, Prague

 Pentatone SACD PTC 5186050. Storioni Trio

Piano Trios 1–2; Adagio in E flat (Notturno) (for piano trio), D.897; Sonata in B flat (for piano trio), D.28

🔑  EMI 365476-2. Renaud & Gautier Capuçon, Braley

🔑 * MDG 342 1166-2 (Trio 1); 342 1167-2 (Trio 2; Notturno; Sonata). V. Piano Trio

 HMC 902002-03. Trio Wanderer

(i–iii) Piano Trios 1–2; Notturno in E flat, D.897; Sonata Movement, D.28; (i, ii) Grand Duo in A, D.574

(BB) (*) EMI Gemini 3 65295-2 (2). (i) Collard; (ii) Dumay; (iii) Lodéon

(i) Piano trios 1–2; Notturno, D.897; Sonata in B flat, D.28; (ii) String Trios: in B flat (in one movement), D.471; in B flat, D.581

Ⓜ  Ph. 475 7571 (2). Beaux Arts Trio

We are rather spoiled for choice in this repertoire, and readers can't go far wrong with any of the top recommendations currently in circulation. Among them this newcomer from Renaud and Gautier Capuçon, and Frank Braley, recorded in the autumn of 2006 at the Maison de la Culture in Grenoble, must be numbered. They offer warm and characterful readings of Schubert's four works for Piano Trio, not only the two big, numbered masterpieces, but also the early Sonata Movement and the Notturno. They are a vital and sensitive partnership. An issue to be warmly welcomed, even in a hotly competitive field, for its individual and spontaneous-sounding readings, very well recorded.

The set of the Piano Trios from the Vienna Piano Trio on MDG is outstanding in every way. Their playing is wonderfully fresh and spring-like, and the contribution of the pianist, Stefan Mendl, is ear-catchingly crisp. This is true chamber music-making by a beautifully matched team, dramatic and expressive by turns, with remarkable ongoing spontaneity, yet full of incidental subtleties. The recording is in the demonstration class, perfectly balanced. The two CDs are available separately; the first includes the alternative version of the finale, which Schubert composed first, as an appendix.

The much-praised Beaux Arts performances are an obvious choice for Philips's Originals label. The performances combine impeccable ensemble with simple dedication.

Czech musicians often display a special feeling for Schubert; the Guarneri players are no exception. They set off into the B flat Trio with an attractive jauntiness of spirit and then find a nice delicacy for the opening of the lovely Andante. After the jolly Scherzo there is a comparably lightness of touch for the finale. The E flat Trio has a similar vivacious impetus, and the Andante with its gentle bouncing underlay is delightfully done; and the same rhythmic lift brings added joy to the rondo finale. In short these are wholly delightful accounts, with a true Schubertian spirit. They are truthfully recorded, although, surprisingly for a SACD, the upper range is a little dry, which affects the violin timbre. But both the performances are memorable.

The young members of the Storioni Trio of Amsterdam, founded in 1995, here give exceptionally light and sparkling accounts of both of Schubert's Trios. The players take their name from the violin made in Cremona in 1794 by Laorentius Storioni, which is played by the violinist, Wouter Vossen. These two Trios may be among the deepest of Schubert's chamber works, but they are still well served by such an approach, giving the music light and air. Speeds tend to be on the fast side, except in the two slow movements, which are slowish and very steady. What is a delight in the B flat Trio, D.898, is the springing of rhythms, most strikingly in the finale with dotted rhythms exaggerated.

On Harmonia Mundi intelligent and vital accounts from the Trio Wanderer which benefit from recorded sound of great clarity and finesse.

Jean-Philippe Collard, Augustin Dumay and Frédéric Lodéon, all splendid performers in their own right, create a fully integrated ensemble that sounds as if the players enjoy chamber music at home. All these performances sparkle, and there is a true Schubertian spirit in the Grand Duo. The recordings were made in a concert-hall acoustic (the Salle Wagram, Paris), and the early digital sound is bright and clearly focused, if a touch dry.

Piano Trio 1 in B flat, D.898

(BB)  Warner Apex (ADD) 2564 60164-2. Suk Trio (with Notturno, D. 897)

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.110188. Thibaud, Casals, Cortot – BEETHOVEN: Variations on 'Ich bin der Schneider Kakadu'; HAYDN: Piano Trio 39 in G ()

The performances of the Suk Trio (Josef Suk and Joseph Chuchra, with Jan Panenka, piano) are appealingly warm and intimate, truly Schubertian; and the truthful 1970 recording ensures that this inexpensive disc will give much pleasure.

The Thibaud–Casals–Cortot partnership made their famous recording of the Schubert B flat Trio in 1926, and it was long one of the classics of the gramophone. It still has a rich humanity and warmth that explain its reputation. The Ward Marston transfer is very good indeed, even if the sound now seems very dated and two-dimensional.

Piano Trio 1 in B flat, D.898; Sonata in B flat (for piano trio), D.28; Notturno, D.897

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 67273. Florestan Trio

Piano Trio 2 in E flat, D.929 (includes both first and second versions of finale)

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 67347. Florestan Trio

The Florestan Trio are among the latest to tackle the Schubert Piano Trios and are among the finest on disc. This is highly musical playing, whose value is enhanced by the contributions of that fine pianist Susan Tomes. They have the benefit of excellent recording. As a bonus we are additionally offered Schubert's original finale of the Second Trio, nearly two minutes longer without the two cuts in the development made by the composer, totalling 98 bars.

Rondo in B min. (for violin & piano), D.895

Ⓑ  EMI Debut 5 74017-2 Batiashvili, Chernyavska – BACH: Partita 1; BRAHMS: Violin Sonata 1 in G

A pupil of Mark Lubotsky, the Georgian-born Elisabeth Batiashvili makes her EMI début with a mixed programme. She gives a vital and lyrical account of this Schubert piece and is expertly partnered by Milana Chernyavska.

String Quartets

String Quartets 1–15

 Cascavelle VEL 3115 (5). Quatuor Sine Nomine

String Quartets 1–15; Quartet Movement in C min., D.103

Ⓑ (*) DG (ADD) 463 151-2 (6). Melos Qt of Stuttgart

String Quartets 1; 13; Overture in B flat, D.470 (MDG 307 0602-2)

String Quartets 2; 11; Overture in C min. (for quintet), D.8; Fragment, D. 87a (MDG 307 0609-2)

String Quartets 3; 8; in B flat (fragment), D.470 (MDG 307 0606-5)

String Quartets 4; 5 (including 1st & 2nd versions of Allegro maestoso); 2 Ländler for 2 Violins in D, D.354 (MDG 307 0608-2)

String Quartets 6; 10; in C min. (fragment), D.103 (MDG 307 0605-5)

String Quartets 7; 9; Quartet movement in C min., D. 703 (MDG 307 0607-2)

String Quartet 14 (Death and the Maiden); Minuet, D.86; Minuets & German Dances, D.89 (MDG 307 0604-2)

String Quartet 15; Fragment, D.2c; String Trio, D.472

 MDG 307 0601-2. New Leipzig Qt

(i) String Quintet in C, D.956. Fragment, D.3; Overture, D.8a

 MDG 307 0603-2. (i) Sanderling; New Leipzig Qt

The New Leipzig Quartet offer an ideal approach. They have great sweetness of tone, yet they are not sugary; they give us a wide dynamic range without drawing attention to themselves, and they seem totally inside the Schubert tradition. They have much greater warmth than the Melos Quartet of Stuttgart on DG and are far removed from the overpowering jet-setting quartet-machines. Theirs is humane music-making which conveys some sense of period and naturalness of expression. The Quintet may not be as intense as some versions but it is still very rewarding. The recordings are very good and the set has the merit of including various less familiar fragments. A thoroughly musical and well-recorded series.

The Lausanne-based Quatuor Sine Nomine was founded in the mid-1970s and made their breakthrough at the Concours d'Evian in 1985. They recorded the present cycle between 1989 and 1994, though their records did not gain wide currency in Britain. It proves to be eminently serviceable and worthy of their mentors, the Melos Quartet of Stuttgart. They give sensitive and vital performances and, apart from 1, 2, 6 and 10 (which were recorded in Paris), have the benefit of the fine acoustic of the Salle de Chatoneyre, Corseaux in Switzerland.

The Melos Quartet give us an inexpensive survey. The early works have a disarming grace and innocence and some of their ideas are most touching (witness the Adagio introduction of 4 in C). The Melos Quartet give impressive, unmannered accounts of all these works, finding the drama as well as the music's inner tensions. They are, however, let down by the recording, which, although faithful, is rather too closely balanced. The remastering provides good presence, and conveys a wide dynamic range, but fortissimos can be a little fierce. Nevertheless, this well-documented set is value for money and worth considering when the full-priced competition costs more than twice as much.

String Quartets 1, D.18; 4, D.46; 8, D.112

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.555921. Kodály Qt

The Kodály Quartet are embarking with distinction on a complete Schubert cycle. Their playing has the same simplicity of style that they brought to early Haydn, yet the Schubertian colouring emerges immediately at the opening of the very First Quartet. This astonishingly confident work was written as early as 1810–11, yet it has a delightful, Ländler-like Minuet which calls for mutes, a graceful Andante and a busy, sparkling finale. 4, written two years later, opens with a grave echo of Mozart's Dissonance Quartet and has a delicate slow movement in siciliano rhythm, while the cheerful finale returns to the mood of a rustic Austrian dance. 8 has a G minor slow movement, again obviously influenced by Mozart, which lightens its mood later, but it never shakes off its seriousness entirely until the Haydnesque dancing Minuet and energetic finale. Altogether a splendid beginning, very naturally recorded.

String Quartets 3, D.36; 7, D.94; 9, D.173

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.550592. Kodály Qt

Schubert's Third Quartet was written in 1812–13. It is a cheerful work, with a dominating motif in the first movement to remind us of Haydn's Fifths Quartet. 7 in D major, written a year earlier, has a disarming opening movement, the effect astonishingly mature, and the Andante is comparably serene. The Kodály Quartet play this work marvellously and make it the highlight of the disc. 9 in G minor opens very positively, its argument both dramatic and serious, but the Andantino (though still Haydnesque) has a Schubertian theme. The Minuet then reminds us dramatically of the comparable movement in Mozart's Symphony 40, and the engaging finale echoes and quickens that same idea. Once again the playing is splendid, and the recording most naturally balanced throughout.

String Quartet 5, D.68; 12 (Quartettsatz); 5 Minuets & 6 Trios, D.89; Overture in C min. for String Quintet, D.8 (ed. Hess); String Trio (movement) in B flat, D.471

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.557126. Kodály Qt (augmented)

For the final volume in their splendid cycle, the Kodály Quartet open with the familiar Quartettsatz, then set off with spirit and élan into the engaging two-movement B flat Quartet, D.68 (written when Schubert was 16) and continue with various novelties, including an Overture for string quintet written two years before the early quartet. Playing and recording are well up to the high standard of this illustrious series.

String Quartet 8 in B flat, D.112

Ⓜ () EMI mono 5 65308-2 (4). Busch Qt (with MENDELSSOHN: Capriccio in E min.) – BEETHOVEN: String Quartets. *** ❀

The excellence and lightness of spirit the Busch communicate in this quartet is exhilarating.

String Quartets 8; 13 in A min., D.804

🔑 * ASV CDDCA 593. Lindsay Qt

In the glorious A minor the Lindsays lead the field. It would be difficult to fault their judgement in both these works on tempi and expression, and dynamics are always the result of keen musical thinking. Excellent recording.

String Quartets 10 (7); 13, D.804

🔑 ❀ * Astrée E 8580. Mosaïques Qt

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.550591. Kodály Qt

Ⓝ (BB)  EMI Encore 2 35738-2. Belcea Qt

Above all, these Mosaïques period-instrument performances, so notable for their points of closely observed detail, are highly spontaneous. The very opening of the E flat Quartet (published posthumously as 10) is warmly inviting, and the players have the full measure of the songful serenity of its lovely Adagio. The profundities of the A minor are fully understood by this highly sensitive group, and the recapitulation is particularly memorable. There is dramatic intensity as well as charm in the famous (Rosamunde) Andante, with the finale following gracefully: the delicacy of the shading of the playing here is a marvel. A superb disc, beautifully recorded.

What strikes one immediately at the opening of the Kodály's account of the great A minor Quartet, D.804, is the guileless simplicity of their approach. There is drama too, but the innocent, lyrical feeling persists, and it enhances the lovely Andante with its Rosamunde theme. The earlier E flat major Quartet is presented with comparable geniality and again the ensemble is immaculate, with some delightful interchanges in the vigorous finale with its wistful secondary theme. Once again excellent recording.

The Belcea made a strong impression with their début recordings of Debussy and Ravel, and they follow up here with another of the best Schubert quartet discs to have appeared recently. Tempi are expertly judged and they command both feeling and concentration. Competition is strong for this coupling, but at budget price this is very attractive.

String Quartets 10, D.87; 14 (Death and the Maiden)

🔑 Ⓜ * Cal. Approche CAL 5234. Talich Qt

The Talich Quartet do not wear their hearts on their sleeves: the intensity of their performance of Death and the Maiden comes from within. There is a profundity in the theme and variations of the Andante which, together with the richness of texture that they create, is wonderfully heart-warming. The performance of the earlier D major Quartet is hardly less fine: more volatile, with the spirited finale concluding the disc unforgettably. Superb recording; string quartet discs do not come any better than this.

String Quartet 12 (Quartettsatz), D.703

Ⓑ  EMI 3 66557-2. Formosa Qt – DEBUSSY: String Quartet; MOZART: String Quartet 14; WOLF: Italian Serenade ***

As a fill-up to their EMI Debut disc of Mozart and Debussy, the brilliant prize-winning Formosa Quartet give a brisk, fluent, finely shaded and intense reading of this tricky Quartet Movement, making one want to hear them in more Schubert.

String Quartets 12 (Quartettsatz); 13; 14 (Death and the Maiden); 15, D.887

🔑 Ⓑ  Ph. (ADD) Duo 446 163-2 (2). Italian Qt

String Quartets 12–15; (i) String Quintet in C, D.956

🔑 Ⓜ  Nim. NI 1770. Brandis Qt; (i) with Yang

Ⓑ (*) DG Trio 477 045-2 (3). Emerson Qt; with (i) Rostropovich

The Brandis Quartet, a fine Central European group, have warmth and they bring a natural eloquence to all these quartets, which are all the more potent for being free of interpretative point-making. In the great C major Quintet, with beautiful matching, they again convey spontaneous expressiveness, and they are not afraid to linger a little over the first movement's lovely second-subject melody. Their slow movement, played freely, has rapt tension but, again, also conveys warmth, rather an ethereal, withdrawn atmosphere which communicates in a quite individual way. They are very naturally recorded.

The Italian Quartet's 1965 coupling of the Quartettsatz and the Death and the Maiden Quartet was counted the finest available in its day. These players' understanding of Schubert is equally reflected in their performance of the A minor

Quartet, recorded a decade later. The familiar 'Rosamunde' slow movement is beautifully paced, with an impressive command of feeling. The 1976 sound, too, is first class. The G major Quartet is, if anything, even finer. And the recording is extremely vivid, making this one of the most thought-provoking accounts of the Quartet ever.

The Emersons certainly have an amazing technical address and are among the finest quartets playing now. Their attack and ensemble are impeccable; their tonal blend and finesse disarm criticism. Their approach is distinctly late twentieth-century Manhattan, rather than early nineteenth-century Europe with its gentler colours. Yet they spring from a different culture and have no want of intelligence and insight. There is tenderness at times and, in the C major Quintet with Rostropovich as second cello, an abundant eloquence. Good recording.

String Quartets 12 (Quartettsatz); 14 (Death and the Maiden)

🔑 * ASV CDDCA 560. Lindsay Qt

Ⓑ  Naxos 8.550590. Kodály Qt

The Lindsays' intense, volatile account of the Death and the Maiden Quartet is played with considerable metrical freedom and the widest range of dynamic, and the Quartettsatz, which acts as the usual filler, is unusually poetic and spontaneous in feeling. The recording is excellent.

The Kodály players are not renowned for wearing their hearts on their bow-arms, and their performance of the first movement of the Death and the Maiden, though not lacking in point and responsive intensity, is not as sharply extrovert in its associations with mortality as some. They find the heart of the work in the slow movement variations, which they open very intimately and they play with their usual humanity and feeling, if without quite the potency of the Lindsays. This is certainly a performance to live with, even if it does not dwell on the tragedy of Schubert's inspiration and the playing in the Quartettsatz, agitated and lilting by turns, is also very fine. The recording, which has a natural presence, is well up to the high standard of this fine series.

String Quartet 14 in D min. (Death and the Maiden) (DVD version)

 EMI DVD 0946 3 38446 9 2. Alban Berg Qt (with documentary by Bruno Monsaigeon)

A very well-thought-out reading of Death and the Maiden by the Alban Berg Quartet, recorded in 1995 in the Mozartsaal, Vienna, and played with their usual mastery. Bruno Monsaigeon's documentary is very largely a masterclass by the members of the quartet with the Artemis Quartet. The celebrated Lied on which the slow movement is based is sung by Julia Varady, with her husband, Dietrich Fischer-Dieskau, as pianist.

String Quartets 14 (Death and the Maiden); 15 in G

Ⓜ () EMI mono 3 61588-2. Busch Qt

The Busch Quartet's account is more than 50 years old, but it brings us closer to the heart of this music than almost any other. The slow movement of the Death and the Maiden Quartet is a revelation, and the same must be said of the G major, which has great depth and humanity. For its age, the sound is still amazing.

String Quartet 14 (Death and the Maiden) (arr. for string orchestra by Mahler)

(*) Chan. 9616. Norwegian CO, I. Brown – SCHOENBERG: Verklaerte Nacht **

Mahler made his transcription of Death and the Maiden when opportunities to hear Schubert's masterpiece were few and far between. In the days of its ready accessibility on records and in the concert hall, the idea of recording it seems a false reverence (just as recording piano-duet versions of Glazunov symphonies would be). Its character is naturally changed in the orchestral medium, but those who want this transcription will find the playing of the Norwegian Chamber Orchestra and the Chandos recording both first class.

String Quartet 15 in G, D.887

🔑 Ⓑ * Naxos 8.557125. Kodály Qt

Ⓜ ((*)) Orfeo mono C604031B. Hungarian Qt – BARTÓK: Quartet 5 ((*))

A truly outstanding performance of Schubert's last and probably greatest String Quartet from the Kodály group, who open dramatically and encompass all the work's magical changing moods with consistent concentration and deep feeling. Spontaneity informs every bar: the Andante has an unforgettable atmosphere of gentle melancholy, yet there is a joyful simplicity in the dancing finale, which is brilliantly played. Indeed, this is one of the group's very finest records, for the infectious German Dances make a most engaging bonus, the closing Laendler particularly winning. First-class recording.

This Orfeo performance comes from a concert given at the Salzburg Mozarteum in August 1961, some seven years before the Hungarian Quartet's commercial recording at the Salle Wagram. The live occasion prompts playing of tremendous intensity and heartfelt feeling. This has a higher emotional temperature than the latter; the mono sound is perfectly acceptable.

String Quintet in C, D.956 (DVD version)

🔑  Testament DVD SBDVD1002. Amadeus Qt, Pleeth – BRITTEN: String Quartet 3 ***

Many listeners find Norbert Brainin's sound a little over-sweet, but this performance is in many respects superior to the earlier commercial versions (and certainly to the DG set): the whole concert is rewarding to listen to and follow on screen. It comes with an authoritative version of Benjamin Britten's Third Quartet, composed for the Amadeus Quartet in the last months of his life. As with its companion, the camerawork is unobtrusive and never attracts attention to itself.

String Quintet in C, D.956

🔑 ❁ Ⓑ  Regis (ADD) RRC 1278. Aeolian Qt (with MOZART: Divertimento in D, K.136 ***)

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI 5 66890-2. Alban Berg Qt with Schiff

🔑 () Testament mono SBT 1031 Hollywood Qt, Reher – SCHOENBERG: Verklaerte Nacht. () ✿

Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 477 6357. Melos Qt, with Rostropovich

 Nim. NI 5313. Brandis Qt, Yang

 Channel Classics CCS 6794. Orpheus Qt, Wispelwey

() Biddulph mono LAB 093. Pro Arte Qt, Pini – BRAHMS: String Sextet 1. ()

String Quintet in C; String Quartet 14 (Death and the Maiden); Quartettsatz, D. 703

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * ASV CDDCS 243 (2). Lindsay Qt

String Quintet in C; String Trio in B flat, D.471

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55305. Raphael Ens.

String Quintet in C; String Trio in B flat, D.581

(BB)  Naxos 8.550388. Villa Musica Ens.

The Lindsay version gives the impression that one is eavesdropping on music-making in the intimacy of a private concert. They observe the first-movement exposition repeat and the effortlessness of their approach does not preclude intellectual strength. In the ethereal Adagio they effectively convey the sense of it appearing motionless, suspended, as it were, between reality and dream, yet at the same time they never allow it to become static. Their reading must rank at the top of the list; it is very well recorded. It now comes coupled at mid-price with an equally memorable version of the Death and the Maiden Quartet – a virtually unbeatable pairing, with the Quartettsatz thrown in for good measure.

The Aeolian Quartet also give an altogether outstanding performance that some may feel is even finer than the Lindsays' account. Even if the recording is not as modern, in its latest remastering it is crystal clear and has great presence. The playing is strong and virile, direct and with no mannerisms whatsoever. It might seem bald, were it not for the depth of concentration in every bar. The finale, for example, is fresh and rustic-sounding, not because of pointing of the rhythm, but because of the very simplicity of utterance. But the heart of the performance lies in the slow movement, where the Aeolians daringly adopt the slowest possible Adagio, and the result might have seemed static but for the 'inner' tension which holds one breathless through hushed pianissimos of the most intense beauty. The Mozart String Divertimento makes an engaging lightweight encore.

Few ensembles offer timbre as full-bodied or as richly burnished as that produced by the Alban Berg and Heinrich Schiff, whose recording has impressive sonority, although there is just a touch of digital fierceness on top. However, unlike the Lindsays, they do not observe the first movement exposition repeat.

The Hollywood Quartet's 1951 version of the Quintet with Kurt Reher as second cello stands apart. Over 50 years on, its qualities of freshness and poetry, as well as an impeccably confident technical address, still impress as deeply as ever. This is the product of consummate artistry and remains very special indeed.

Rostropovich plays as second cello in the Melos performance, and no doubt his influence from the centre of the string texture contributes to the eloquence of the famous Adagio which, like the performance as a whole, is strongly, even dramatically characterized. However in the opening and closing sections of the slow movement, the performance in the last analysis is less persuasive than the Lindsays' or Aeolian versions. The DG recording is live and immediate.

The Brandis Quartet with Wen-Sin Yang (cello) give a very satisfying account which is also available coupled with Quartets 12–15 (see above).

The Raphael Ensemble couple the great C major Quintet with the miniature String Trio, which is played most winningly. This is one of the most gripping versions available, and the recording is well up to Hyperion house standards. A real bargain.

The Villa Musica players tackle the great C major Quintet with a freshness and concentration that are consistently compelling, even if the finale is neat and clean rather than urgently dramatic. The little String Trio makes an attractive and generous fill-up, another assured and stylish performance. With clear, well-balanced recording this super-budget issue makes an outstanding bargain.

The Orpheus Quintet offer a performance of communicated warmth and feeling, both in the slow movement and in the remarkable Andante central section of the Scherzo. The playing is fresh and feels alive, and the recording has striking body and realism.

The Pro Arte Quartet's 1935 account of the Schubert Quintet, with Anthony Pini as second cello, dominated the pre-war catalogues. Its humanity and warmth still tell, particularly in the slow movement. It comes with a fine account of the Brahms B flat Sextet, made in the same year. Needless to say, some allowance has to be made for the recording, eminently well transferred though it is.

(i) String Quintet in C, D.956; (ii) Symphony 5 in B flat

Ⓜ () Sony 82876 78759-2. (i) Stern, Schneider, Katims, Casals, Tortelier; (ii) Prades Festival O, Casals

Everything Casals did on record was touched with distinction and although the recordings are dated, both these performances are very special.

(i) String Quintet in C; (ii) Lieder: An die Musik; An Sylvia; Ave Maria; Gretchen am Spinnrade; Heldenroslein; Auf dem Wasser zu singen; Die Forelle; Der Tod und das Mädchen

Ⓝ Ⓑ * CfP 2 28282-2 . (i) Chilingirian Qt; (ii) Janet Baker, Parsons or Moore (Ave Maria)

Vividly recorded in 1980, with clear placing of instruments in a smallish but not dry acoustic (in fact a chapel), the Chilingirians present a most compelling account, totally unmannered and direct in style but full of concentration and spontaneity. One has the consistent sense of live performance, and the great melody of the first movement's second subject emerges without any intrusive nudging or overexpressiveness. The slow movement too has natural intensity, though the closeness of the recording prevents one from registering a really soft pianissimo. Throughout, the string timbres and blending are most natural, so if you fancy the couplings of favourite Lieder, admirably sung by Janet Baker, this is a real bargain.

Violin Sonatinas 1–3, D.384–5 & D.408; Duo in A, D.574

🔑 Ⓜ  Explore (ADD) EXP 015. Schröder, Hogwood

The Explore reissue label offers the only available performances of the Duo and Sonatinas on period instruments, and it makes most rewarding listening, particularly in the sympathetic hands of these artists. Jaap Schröder uses a Stradivarius and Christopher Hogwood a piano from 1825 by Georg Hascha, which he plays with exemplary skill and artistry. If it does not produce the range of nuance and tonal subtlety of which the modern piano is capable, its lightness of colour has a special charm. Schröder also plays with characteristic authority and artistry, and both are very well recorded; indeed, the CD transfer is very fine and realistically balanced.

(Violin Sonatina) Duo in A, D.574; Fantasia in C, D.934; Rondo brillant, D.895

Ⓑ * EMI 3 63303-2. Renaud Capuçon, Ducros

The Duo and the Fantasia (plus the Rondo) are a decade apart. The Duo of 1817 has a charm, spontaneity and easy naturalness typical of early Schubert, the Fantasia (1827), one of the composer's very last works, was in Alfred Einstein's opinion 'a substitute for the violin concerto which Schubert never wrote'. Its centrepiece is an inspired set of variations of great variety and felicity. The Rondo brillant (1826) is a skilful, virtuosic piece of rather less interest. All three works are played splendidly here by Renaud Capuçon and Jérôme Ducros and they show the range of Schubert's invention to diverting effect without seeking profoundity. A thoroughly worthwhile reissue.

PIANO MUSIC

PIANO DUET

Piano music for 4 hands

Allegro in A min. (Lebensstürme), D.947; Divertissement à la française in E min., D.823; Divertissement à la hongroise in G min., D.818; Fantasia in F min., D.940; Grand duo in C, D.812; 4 Ländler, D.814

(BB)  EMI Gemini (ADD) 3 65326-2 (2). Eschenbach, Frantz

German Dance in G min., D.818; Grande marche funèbre, D.859; Grande marche héroïque, D.885; 6 Grandes marches et trios, D.819; Grand rondeau (allegretto quasi andantino), D.951; Kindermarsch in G min., D.928; 2 Ländler in E, D.618; 2 Marches caractéristiques, D.886; 2 Marches héroïques, D.602; 3 Marches militaires, D.733

(BB)  EMI Gemini (ADD) 3 65321-2 (2). Eschenbach, Frantz

Christoph Eschenbach and Justus Frantz made their extensive survey of Schubert's four-handed piano music in 1978 and 1979, and the Abbey Road recording was of high quality. The opening of the F minor Fantasia here may suggest that the performance is too reticent, but that is deceptive and this is as powerful a reading as any available with its rhythms well sprung; and the same comment applies to the Grand Duo, while the wide range of mood in the Lebensstürme is encompassed impressively. The delicate interplay between the two pianists is a constant delight, whether in the simple Ländler, the charming central Andantino varié of the Divertissement à la française or the cimbalom imitations in the companion Hungarian-style Divertissement, both extended three-movement works showing the composer at his most felicitously inventive and presented here joyfully.

Most remarkable of all are the Grande marche funèbre and the Grande marche héroïque. The closing Grand rondeau, most touchingly played, was written in June 1828, only five months before the composer's death at the age of thirty-one. Overall Eschenbach and Frantz score in sheer freshness, but the EMI sound at times has a bright edge.

Music for piano, 4 hands: Allegro in A min., D.947; Fantasy in F min., D.940; Marche caractéristique 1 in C, D.968b; Marche militaire 1 in D, D.733; Sonata in C (Grand Duo), D.812

🔑 * RCA 82876 69283-2 (2). Kissin, Levine

This set provides a record of the recital that Evgeny Kissin and James Levine gave in Carnegie Hall on 1 May 2005. Their programme draws on Schubert's work for piano, four hands, or, in the case of the Grand Duo, two keyboards. For the sake of both comfort and sonority, they use two pianos throughout. All this music comes from the late 1820s and it is difficult to find fault with this distinguished partnership, in terms of either spontaneity or sensitivity.

Allegro moderato & Andante, D.968; Fantasy in G min., D.9; 3 Marches militaires D.733; 4 Polonaises, D.599; Variations on 'Marie' by Hérold

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553441. Jandó, Kollar

This disc of some of Schubert's lesser works for piano duet begins most temptingly with the most famous of his Marches militaires, played by the Hungarian duo with crispness and vigour. Ranging from the very early Fantasy to the late Allegro & Andante, this well-recorded collection may be a little short on charm, but is winningly fresh throughout.

Duo, D.947; Fantasia in F min., D.940; 6 Polonaises, D.824; Variations on an Original Theme, D.813

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex (ADD) 0927 49812-2. Queffélec, Cooper

The playing of Anne Queffélec and Imogen Cooper is hardly less eloquent than any of their rivals', and they also offer a commanding account of the Fantasia in F minor. The slighter pieces also come off well: the Variations are beautifully played and have an engaging innocence, while the six Polonaises are also worth having on disc when played so brightly and spontaneously. The 1978 analogue recording is well balanced, clear and natural, the acoustic neither over-reverberant nor too confined.

Fantasia in F min., D.940

🔑 * Sony 517490-2. Perahia, Lupu – MOZART: Double Piano Sonata ****

 Chan. 9162. Lortie, Mercier – MOZART: Andante with Variations, etc. ***

Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 463 652-2. Emil & Elena Gilels – MOZART: Piano Concerto 27; Double Piano Concerto *** ✿

Recorded live at The Maltings, the performance of Lupu and Perahia is full of haunting poetry, with each of these highly individual artists challenging the other in imagination. Warmly atmospheric recording.

The Louis Lortie–Hélène Mercier partnership is as impressive here as it is elsewhere. The Schubert holds its own even against such illustrious competition as the Lupu–Perahia recording on Sony, also coupled with Mozart. Very good recording.

On DG an apt and finely played bonus for a treasurable Mozart coupling.

Fantasia in F min., D.940; German Dance & 2 Ländler, D.618; 3 Marches héroïques, D.602; Overture in F; Variations on an Original Theme, D.968a

(BB)  Naxos 8.554513. Jandó, Kollar

The Hungarian pianist Jenö Jandó with his colleague Zsuzsa Kollar gives a magnetic reading of what by any reckoning is the greatest of all piano duets, Schubert's haunting F minor Fantasia, with its inspired telescoping of a four-movement structure. With Jandó and partner, nothing distracts one from the beauty of Schubert's writing, and the lesser pieces, including the dramatic Overture in F and some delectable dances and marches, have comparable freshness, cleanly recorded.

Fantasia in F min.; Grand Duo; Variations, D.813

🔑 Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 466 822-2. Richter, Britten

As these electrically intense performances demonstrate, Richter and Britten favoured fast speeds, which yet allowed crisply sprung rhythms and warmly lyrical phrasing, with phenomenally crisp articulation from both players. The two major works were recorded in 1965 in Jubilee Hall, Aldeburgh, the Variations in the Parish Church a year earlier, both with clear, immediate stereo-sound balanced for radio by BBC engineers.

Grand Duo in C, D.812; 2 Grandes Marches, D.819/2–3; 4 Ländler, D.814; 8 Variations on an Original Theme, D.813

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.570354. Schiller, Humphreys

Excellent performances from the four-handed partnership of Allan Schiller and John Humphreys of some of the rarer of Schubert's pieces for piano, four hands, although the remarkable Grand Duo does not fit that description. They are most realistically recorded.

Solo piano music

Fantasia in C (Wanderer), D.760 (DVD version)

 EMI DVD (ADD) 4 901229. Katchen – BEETHOVEN: Piano Sonata 29 ***

Like his celebrated recording of the Ravel Left-hand Concerto, this was made in the shadows of the illness that claimed Katchen some months later. It is a poignant and impressive reading, and its appearance here is a cause for celebration for all his admirers.

Fantasia in C (Wanderer), D.760 (CD versions)

🔑 Ⓜ * EMI 5 66895-2. Richter – DVOŘÁK: Piano Concerto ****

Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 447 451-2. Pollini – SCHUMANN: Fantasia, Op. 17 ***

Richter's 1963 performance is masterly in every way. The piano timbre is real and the remastering for EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century' gives the pianist a compelling presence.

Pollini's account is outstanding and, though he is not ideally recorded and the piano timbre is shallow, the playing still shows remarkable insights. Moreover the Schumann coupling is equally fine.

Fantasia in C (Wanderer), D.760; Piano Sonata 21 in B flat, D.960; Impromptus D 899/3–4

✿ Ⓜ * RCA 09026 63054-2. Rubinstein

Rubinstein plays the Wanderer fantasia with sure magnificence. The extended structure needs a master to hold it together and, particularly in the variations section, Rubinstein is electrifying. He compels attention as though he is improvising the work himself, but even so avoids any sentimentality. The 1965 recording sounds surprisingly full, and it is even better in the two Impromptus, played with the most subtle shading of colour and delectable control of rubato, and in the superb account of the Sonata. Unaccountably, this has never been issued before, yet it shows Rubinstein as a magically persuasive Schubertian.

Impromptus 1–4, D. 899; 5–8, D.935

🔑 * Sony SK 94732. Perahia (with LISZT: Concert paraphrases of Schubert Lieder: Auf dem Wasser zu singen; Erlkönig; Ständchen – Leise flehen meine Lieder ())

Ⓜ  Decca 460 975-2. Lupu

Perahia's account of the Impromptus is very special indeed. Directness of utterance and purity of spirit are of the essence here, with articulation of sparkling clarity. The CBS recording is very good and truthful in timbre. Perahia's set of Impromptus remains at the top of the recommended list (see our main volume) and now has three Liszt/Schubert song transcriptions as a tempting bonus, played equally perceptively.

Lupu's Impromptus are of the same calibre as the Brendel

analogue versions (see below), and he is most beautifully recorded on CD. Indeed, in terms of natural sound this is a most believable image.

4 Impromptus 1–4, D.899; 5–8, D.935; Moments musicaux, D.780; Piano Sonatas 13 in A, D.664; 21 in B flat, D.960

🔑 Ⓜ * DG (ADD) 459 412-2 (2). Kempff

Kempff always had something special to say in Schubert. The Impromptus are beautifully done, especially the D.899 set, and in his hands the Moments musicaux range so much further than one expects. Kempff characteristically gives intimate performances. His Allegros are never very fast and the results sing in the most relaxed way. The B flat Sonata is the highlight of the collection, and it is a tribute to Kempff's artistry that, with the most relaxed tempi, he conveys such consistent, compulsive intensity. Rightly, Kempff repeats the first-movement exposition with the important nine bars of lead-back, and though the overall manner is less obviously dramatic than is common, the range of tone colour is magical, with sharp terracing of dynamics to plot the geography of each movement. Though very much a personal utterance, this interpretation is no less great for that. It belongs to a tradition of pianism that has almost disappeared, and we must be eternally grateful that its expression has been so glowingly captured on this reissue.

Impromptus 1–8; 3 Klavierstücke, D.946; 6 Moments musicaux, D.780

Ⓑ  Virgin 2x1 5 62233-2 (2). Tan (fortepiano) – BEETHOVEN: Allegretto, etc. ***

Melvyn Tan's playing is refreshingly unmannered and for the most part very persuasive: he is at pains to avoid any sentimentality, yet he succeeds in conveying the music's tenderness. He has the measure of the scale of the F minor Impromptu, D.935/1, and brings both dramatic fire and poetic feeling to it. In the Moments musicaux he has remarkable feeling for colour and never approaches the music with any excess of that judicious reverence which distinguishes some musicians using period instruments. His Schubert is consistently spirited and fresh and, throughout, this stimulating and lively playing casts new light on the composer. The recording is excellent.

Impromptus 1–8; 3 Klavierstücke, D.946; Moments musicaux 1–6, D.780; Allegretto in C min., D.915; 6 German Dances, D.820; Grazer Galopp, D.925; Hungarian Melody in B min., D.817; 12 Ländler, D.790

Ⓑ  Double Decca 458 139-2 (2). Schiff

Impromptus 1–8; 3 Klavierstücke (Impromptus), D.946; 6 Moments musicaux, D.780; 12 German Dances, D.790; 16 German Dances, D.783

🔑 ✿ Ⓑ * Ph. (ADD) Duo 456 061-2 (2). Brendel

Brendel's analogue set of the Impromptus is magical, and the Moments musicaux are among the most poetic in the catalogue. The Klavierstücke are searching, and in his hands the German Dances, although retaining their underlying charm, sound anything but trivial. The recordings offer Philips's very finest analogue quality.

András Schiff's playing is idiomatic, intelligent and humane, and the recording is more than acceptable. It is impossible to recommend his Impromptus in preference to those of Brendel, but no one will be disappointed with them. Schiff has the advantage of very natural digital recording, the effect lighter-textured than with Brendel.

Impromptus 1–8; Moments musicaux, D.780/3–6

(BB)  Regis (ADD) RRC 1019. Brendel

Brendel's playing has an unaffected simplicity that is utterly disarming, and the lightness of his articulation is a pleasure in itself. The fresh, natural eloquence is also very striking in the four favourite Moments musicaux, which are offered here as a bonus (the disc has a playing time of 71 minutes). The recording, too, is surprisingly good.

Impromptus 1–4, D.899; Piano Sonata 21 in B flat, D.960

 Cal. CAL 6689. Södergren

Inger Södergren's account of the first four Impromptus belongs in exalted company, and the B flat Sonata is hardly less fine. Her playing is marked throughout by sensitivity and a selfless and unostentatious dedication to Schubert. The recording is acceptable rather than outstanding.

3 Klavierstücke, D.946

Ⓜ () BBC mono BBCL 4125. Claudio Arrau – BRAHMS: Piano Concerto 2 ()

Arrau's magisterial artistry is captured here in the BBC's Maida Vale Studios in 1959. These are searching accounts, which should be eagerly snapped up by admirers of Arrau.

Moments musicaux 1–6, D.780; 3 Klavierstücke, D.946; Allegretto in C min., D.915

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550259. Jandó

Jandó is much better recorded here than he often has been. He proves a thoroughly sympathetic and sensitive Schubertian, but he is still too upfront. The opening of the Drei Klavierstücke is a shade too fast (Jandó does not completely convey its dark, disturbing overtones) but the middle section is beautifully judged. Thoughtful and intelligent music-making, acceptably recorded, and very good value for money.

Piano sonatas

Piano Sonatas 1 in E, D.157; 2 in C, D.279; 3 in E, D.459; 4 in A min., D.537; 5 in A flat, D.557; 6 in E min., D.566; 7 in E flat, D.568; 9 in B, D.575; 11 in F min., D.625; 12 in F min, D.625; 13 in A, D.664; 14 in A min., D.784; 15 in C, D.840 (Relique); 16 in A min., D.845; 17 in D, D.850; 18 in G, D.894; 19 in C min., D.958; 20 in A, D.959; 21 in B flat, D.960

Ⓑ * DG 463 766-2 (7). Kempff

Wilhelm Kempff's cycle was recorded over a four-year period

(1965–9) and has been much admired over the years. These are among the most consistently satisfying accounts of the Sonatas, with a wisdom that puts them in a category of their own. Indeed their insights are very special indeed. The recording has a touch of shallowness, but is generally excellent. All seven CDs are now available in a convenient, inexpensive bargain box, and represent exceptional value.

Piano Sonatas 14–21; German Dances; Impromptus; Moments musicaux; Wanderer fantasia

 Ph. 426 128-2 (7). Brendel

Piano Sonatas 16 in A min., D.845; 3 Impromptus, D.946

 Ph. 422 075-2. Brendel

Piano Sonatas 19 in C min., D.958; Moments musicaux 1–6, D.780

 Ph. 422 076-2. Brendel

Piano Sonatas 20 in A, D.959; Allegretto in C min., D.915; 16 German dances, D.783; Hungarian Melody in B min., D.817

(*) Ph. 422 229-2. Brendel

Piano Sonata 21 in B flat, D.960; Wanderer fantasia, D.760

 Ph. 422 062-2. Brendel

Brendel's later digital set is more intense than his earlier cycle of recordings for Philips, though there was a touching freshness in the earlier set, and he has the benefit of clean, well-focused sound. These are warm performances, strongly delineated and powerfully characterized, which occupy a commanding place in the catalogue. They are separately available, and all of them can be confidently recommended to Brendel's admirers.

'The Last Six Years, 1823–1828':* Vol. 1: Piano Sonatas 14 in A min., D.784; 18 in G, D.894; 12 German Dances (Ländler), D.790 (Priory/Ottavo OTR C68608)

Vol. 2: Piano Sonatas 15 in C, D.840; 20 in C, D.959; 11 Ecossaises, D.781 (Priory/Ottavo OTR C58714)

Vol. 3: Piano Sonata 16 in A min., D.845; 4 Impromptus, D.935 (Priory/Ottavo OTR C88817)

Vol. 4: Piano Sonata 17 in D, D.850; 6 Moments musicaux, D.780 (Priory/Ottavo OTR C128715)

Vol. 5: Piano Sonata 21 in B flat, D.960; Allegretto in C min., D.915; 3 Impromptus (Klavierstücke), D.946 (Priory/Ottavo OTR C88821)

Vol. 6: Piano Sonata 19 in C min., D. 958; 4 Impromptus, D.899 (Priory/Ottavo OTR C78923)

🔑 * Cooper

Imogen Cooper, in her outstanding set on the Dutch Ottavo label, has a true Schubertian sensibility; her feeling for this composer's special lyricism is second to none, yet her playing has both strength and a complete understanding of the music's architecture. The recordings were made in the Henry Wood Hall, London, over a period of three years, between June 1986 and July 1989, using a Steinway for the first three volumes and a fine-sounding Yamaha for the later records. The balance is admirable and the sound full, with a convincing natural resonance. The playing has the spontaneity of live music-making, and the warm colouring and fine shading of timbre are as pleasing to the ear as the many subtle nuances of phrasing, which are essentially based on a strong melodic line. With their fine, modern, digital recording these CDs will give much delight and refreshment.

Piano Sonatas 4, D.537; 7, D.568; 9, D.575; 13, D.664; 14, D.784; 15 (Relique), D.840; 16, D.845; 17, D.850; 18, D.894; 19, D.958; 20, D.959; 21, D. 960; German Dances, D.790 & 820; 8 Impromptus, D.899 & 935; 3 Klavierstücke, D.946; Moments musicaux, D.70

Ⓑ (*) Ph. 475 6282 (8). Uchida

Mitsuko Uchida began her Schubert survey in 1997 and continued until 2002, then leaving the cycle incomplete. As can be seen from the separate reviews below, she did not have quite the same degree of success here that she did with the sonatas of Mozart. This is distinctive playing, sensitive and eloquent; moreover the Philips recording is exceptionally truthful. Certain sonatas, the Relique for instance, are outstanding in every way and the great B flat Sonata, D. 960 shows her at her very finest. But at other times she does not always leave the composer to speak for himself and Schubert's special quality of innocence all but eludes her.

Piano Sonata 7 in E flat, D.568; Moments musicaux, D.780

 Ph. 470 164-2. Uchida

As piano playing this is consummate, though some may feel that she tends to beautify further what is already beautiful, and the innocence of Schubert succumbs to over-sophistication. The recording is wonderfully realistic, indeed state-of-the-art sound.

Piano Sonatas 9; 11; 13; Moment musical, D.780/1

 BBC (ADD) BBCL 4010-2. Richter

This disc comprises a Schubert recital Richter gave at the Royal Festival Hall in 1979, and the dryish sound is perfectly acceptable. As always, his playing is magisterial and eloquent. Thoroughly recommendable.

Piano Sonatas 9 in B, D.575; 18 in G, D.894; 20 in A, D.959; 21 in B flat, D.960

(*) Ph. 456 573-2 (2). Brendel

Though Brendel's approach to Schubert remains broadly the same as in his 1971 series of late sonatas and the more individual digital versions of the late 1980s, there is an extra magnetism in these live accounts of 2001, intensifying the depth of what he has to say. He is more freely expressive than before, with speeds more flexible, and with rhythms given an extra lift. At times he seems improvisational in his flights of fantasy, while the depth of concentration conveyed in pianissimos is consistently greater than in his studio performances.

Three of the four last and greatest Sonatas are included, with the early B major Sonata of 1817 as a supplement, a sonata not previously recorded by Brendel and one that, as he sees it, points forward to the late works. The opening of the great B flat Sonata is marred by intrusive coughing from a woman in the Festival Hall audience, but otherwise the sound is excellent, bright and full-toned, with acoustic differences between four different venues ironed out – the Alte Oper in Frankfurt, the Concertgebouw in Amsterdam, the Snape Maltings and the Royal Festival Hall.

Piano Sonatas 13, D.664; 21 in B flat

🔑  Decca 440 295-2. Lupu

Radu Lupu's is one of the most searching of all his Schubert recordings and finds this masterly pianist at his most eloquent and thoughtful.

Piano Sonatas 15 (Relique); 18, D.894

🔑 * Ph. 454 453-2. Uchida

The unfinished torso of the Relique Sonata is given an eloquent, inward-looking reading of great tonal beauty. The G major Sonata is masterly, combining careful thought with emotional depth. Another of the best Schubert sonata discs. The Philips recording is excellent in every way.

Piano Sonatas 15 in C, D.840; 19 in C min., D.958; 16 German Dances, D.783

Ⓝ (BB)  Regis Alto (ADD) ALC 1040. Brendel

This recording comes from the Vanguard Catalogue. Brendel was at his finest and most spontaneous in the 1960s. The C minor Sonata is particularly fine, with a thoughtful improvisatory feeling in the slow movement which is consistently illuminating. The two-movement C major Sonata also has a memorable Andante, and the German Dances are an endless delight. The recording is full and bold.

Piano Sonatas 15 in C (Relique), D.840; 21 in B flat, D.960

Ⓜ (*) Sony mono/stereo 512874-2. Serkin

Although he opens the B flat major Sonata persuasively, Rudolf Serkin's rugged, less lyrical manner in Schubert will not be to all tastes, but it is undeniably strong in impact. The slow movement is squarer and less flowing than usual, and the interpretation registers the mature, uncompromising response of an artist intent on reading his Schubert very directly, and less intent on beguiling his audience. But there is no question of the patrician character of both these readings. The two-movement C major Sonata was recorded (in mono) in 1955, 20 years before the B flat major, and with very much the same positive manner, although the Andante has an appealing simplicity. In both, the recording is close, strikingly present, but rather hard.

Piano Sonatas 16 in A min., D.845; 17 in D, D.850; 20 in A, D.959; 11 Ecossaises, D.781; 3 Klavierstücke, D.946

Ⓝ Ⓑ * Avie/BBC Radio 3 AV 2156 (2). Cooper

It looks as though Imogen Cooper is about to undertake a new survey of the Schubert Sonatas for Avie, taken from live broadcasts. She is a natural Schubertian, as you can discover by playing the delectably pointed finale of D.850. Her performances admirably combine style and spontaneity, and the recordings, made in the Queen Elizabeth Hall, London, have a natural balance and fine presence.

Sonatas 17 in D, D.850; 19 C min., D.858; 20 in A, D.959; 21 in B flat, D.960

🔑 Ⓑ * EMI Classics 5 16448-2 (2). Andsnes

In their first incarnation these magisterial accounts by Leif Ove Andsnes appeared in harness with Schubert songs with Ian Bostridge. It makes better sense to assemble them on two bargain-priced CDs, for they are superb readings, insightful and humane and they have the full measure of this extraordinary music. Not to be missed.

Piano Sonata 19; Moments musicaux, D.780

🔑 Ⓜ  Decca 417 785-2. Lupu

Lupu's performance has a simple eloquence that is most moving. His Moments musicaux are very fine indeed. The Decca recording is very natural and, at mid-price, this is extremely competitive.

Piano Sonata 19 in C min., D.958; (i) Gesänge des Harfners, D.478; Totengräbers Heimweh, D.842 (Fragments)

🔑 * EMI 3 84321-2. Andsnes; (i) with Bostridge

Leif Ove Andsnes follows his impressive account of the (see below) with the powerful C minor, of which he gives a penetrating and revealing account. It comes with the much earlier Gesänge des Harfners and a selection of songs and fragments both for voice and for piano solo, little jewels usually overlooked. There is a degree of freedom in his spontaneous-sounding readings, and he is well matched by the tenor, Ian Bostridge, in glowing voice. The three Harper songs, inspired by Goethe's Mignon, are a special delight.

Piano Sonatas 19–21; Allegretto in C min., D.915; 3 Klavierstücke, D.944

🔑 Ⓜ  DG 474 613-2 (2). Pollini

Piano Sonatas 19–21; 4 Impromptus, D.899/1–4

🔑 Ⓑ  Double Decca 475 184-2 (2). Schiff

Piano Sonatas 19–21; 3 Klavierstücke, D. 946/1–3

Ⓑ (*) Ph. Duo (ADD) 438 703-2 (2). Brendel

In his note András Schiff calls Schubert's last three Sonatas 'among the most sublime compositions written for the instrument' – and he plays them as if they are too. There is formidable competition, but admirers of the present fine artist can rest assured that the finesse and insight of his playing are undiminished. The bold drama of the C minor work is set in contrast with the more ruminative approach to the B flat Sonata. Excellent, truthful recording.

Brendel's analogue recording of the A major suffers from rather more agogic changes than is desirable. Some listeners may find these interferences with the flow of the musical argument a little too personal. The C minor Sonata is not free from this charge, but it remains an impressive performance. Brendel's account of the B flat Sonata is characteristically imposing and full of insight, as one would expect; moreover he is at his very finest in the Klavierstücke. This is eloquent and profoundly musical playing. Throughout, the recording is well up to Philips's high standard of realism.

In Pollini's hands the three last Sonatas emerge as strongly structured and powerful, yet he is far from unresponsive to the voices from the other world with which these pieces resonate. However with his perfect pianism he does not always convey a sense of human vulnerability, as have some of the greatest Schubert interpreters.

Sonata 20 in A, D.959

Ⓝ  BBC Legends (ADD) BBCL 4254-2. Cherkassky (with MENDELSSOHN: Andante & Rondo capriccioso) – SCHUMANN: Carnaval ***

When the textures of Schubert's piano writing are often thick, it is astonishing how Cherkassky in this live performance lightens the result and gives a revelatory transparency to the music. The tonal variety too in this recital, recorded at the Queen Elizabeth Hall in November 1970, is a model of its kind, with the poignancy of the minor-key variations of the slow movement movingly conveyed, and the free-flowing lyricism of the rest a regular delight. It would be hard to find a more sparkling account of the Rondo capriccioso than this, making this as light as Mendelssohn's Scherzo for the Midsummer Night's Dream music. It goes with equally inspired accounts of the Mendelssohn and Schumann items, the more compelling for being recorded in a live recital. Good sound.

Piano Sonata 20 in A, D.959; 4 Impromptus, D.935/1–4

Ⓜ (*) Sony (ADD) 512873-2. Serkin

A much-praised performance in its day (1966), Rudolf Serkin's account of Schubert's A major Sonata seems somewhat less sensitive than one remembers and expects from an artist of this stature, although it has some moments of appealing lyricism. His command of the structure of the work is impressive enough, but the fortissimos are rather hard (partly the fault of the recording) and one would have liked more finesse in the phrasing. The Impromptus, recorded 13 years later, are a different matter, undoubtedly distinguished, and the recording, if slightly dry, is truthful and sounds even better in its new transfer.

Piano Sonatas 20 in A, D.959; 21 in B flat, D.960

🔑 * HM HMC 901800. Lewis

Paul Lewis's performances of both these late masterpieces are completely individual and deeply felt, using the widest range of colour and dynamic and great variety of articulation. At one moment his playing is touchingly gentle, thoughtful and introspective, at others intensely dramatic; yet the result sounds totally spontaneous, as at a live recital. These are among the most stimulating and thoughtful Schubert performances of the last few years, and they are very well recorded. A disc to seek out, even if you already have this repertoire.

Piano Sonata 21 in B flat, D.960; Allegretto in C min., D.915; 6 Moments musicaux, D.780

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * EMI 5 03423-2. Kovacevich

Piano Sonata 21; 3 Klavierstücke, D.946

 Ph. 456 572-2. Uchida

Piano Sonata 21 in B flat, D.960; (i) Lieder: Abschied von der Erde; Viola; Der Winterabend

* EMI 5 57901-2. Andsnes; (i) with Bostridge

Stephen Kovacevich made a memorable recording of the great B flat major Sonata for Hyperion which (in our 1988 edition) we called 'one of the most eloquent accounts on record of this sublime sonata'. One could well say the same of the later (1994) EMI version though, if anything, it explores an even deeper vein of feeling than its predecessor. Indeed, it is a most searching and penetrating account of the work to have appeared in recent years and, given the excellence and truthfulness of the recording, must carry the strongest and most enthusiastic recommendation. For this reissue EMI have added the six Moments musicaux which he recorded six months later, also at Abbey Road, and which have comparable insights.

EMI continue their Schubert series combining the sonatas played by Leif Ove Andsnes with a few songs in which he accompanies Ian Bostridge. The Sonata is impressive in its range and depth of emotion and fine musical discipline. Richard Wigmore's excellent sleeve-note speaks of the ethereal tranquillity of the first two movements, and Andsnes conveys this with simplicity and artistry.

Mitsuko Uchida couples the last Sonata with the Drei Klavierstücke. Hers is a performance of considerable stature; she allows Schubert to speak for himself. There is a rapt concentration and an almost other-worldly quality about her playing that will repay the attentive listener. Some may feel that she lingers a little too long in the slow movement and allows the onward flow of the music to stagnate. In any event there is no doubt whatever as to the excellence of the Philips recording.

Complete Waltzes: 36 Dances (Erste Walzer), D.365; Scherzos, D.593; 12 Valses nobles, D.969; 34 Valses sentimentales, D.779; 2 Waltzes, D.980; 12 Waltzes, D.145; 12 (Graz) Waltzes, D.924; 20 Waltzes (Letzte Walzer); Waltzes with Trios in E flat, D.146; F, D.146

(BB)  EMI Gemini (ADD) 3 50894-2 (2). Bordoni

A first look at this two-disc Gemini set brings an astonished double-take, for it contains no fewer than 132 waltzes (or pieces in waltz format). How could such a collection hold the interest? But it does – partly because Schubert was a master of the form (very popular in his day), and partly because Paolo Bordoni is such a sympathetic exponent, and he is very well recorded. Of course we are not suggesting they should all be played at once, but in groups. That is what Schubert planned; if you heed our advice, you will find that they follow each other very pleasingly – then suddenly there is a Schubertian jewel.

VOCAL MUSIC

Dietrich Fischer-Dieskau: The EMI Recordings

The First Recital (1951): Der Atlas; Ihr Bild; Fischermädchen; Die Stadt; Am Meer; Der Doppelgänger; Erlkönig; Nacht und Träume; Du bist die Ruh; Ständchen

Vol. I (1955); Vol. II (1957); Vol. IIIa (1958); Vol. IIIb (1958)

(all with Gerald Moore)

Vol. IV (1959); Vol. V (1959); Vol. VIa (1959); Vol. VIb (1959)

(Vols. IV–VIb with Karl Engel)

Vol. VII (1962); Vol. VIII (1965); Vol. IX (1965)

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI mono/stereo 5 65670-2 (6). Fischer-Dieskau, Moore or Engel

This HMV set makes an admirable survey of Fischer-Dieskau's Schubert recordings for EMI over a decade and a half before he moved to Deutsche Grammophon to make the extensive survey listed below. It is particularly interesting to compare the earliest recordings (the first in mono), with the voice and manner still youthfully fresh, to the second generation, again with Gerald Moore but also with Karl Engel. The contrast is fascinating, with the voice still younger than on DG. The transfers are superbly managed and full translations are provided to make this an indispensable supplement to the DG sets.

DG Fischer-Dieskau Schubert Lieder Edition with Gerald Moore

Song-cycles: Die schöne Müllerin; Winterreise; Schwanengesang (complete) & 405 key Lieder

🔑 Ⓑ * DG 477 5765 (21). Fischer-Dieskau, Moore

Fischer-Dieskau's monumental survey of all the Schubert songs suitable for a man's voice (some of the longer ones excepted) was made over a relatively brief span, with the last 300 songs concentrated in a period of only two months in 1969; yet there is not a hint of routine. No fewer than 405 songs are included here, plus the three song-cycles, which were also new recordings, made in 1971/2. If anything, these performances – notably that of the darkest and greatest of the cycles, Winterreise – are even more searching than before, with Moore matching the concentration of the singer in some of the most remarkable playing that even he has put on record. As in the miscellaneous songs (which we do not have space to list), Fischer-Dieskau is in wonderfully fresh voice, and the transfers to CD have been managed very naturally. The documentation includes full texts and translations and an essay by André Tubeuf. The one serious omission is an alphabetical list of titles. This makes it unnecessarily hard to find a particular song – much the most likely way of using so compendious a collection.

Song Cycles: Die schöne Müllerin; Schwanengesang; Winterreise

Ⓝ 🔑 Ⓜ * DG (ADD) 477 7956 (3). Fischer-Dieskau, Moore

Fischer-Dieskau and Moore had each recorded these great cycles of Schubert several times already before they embarked on this set in 1971/2. It was no mere repeat of earlier triumphs. If anything, these performances – notably that of the darkest and greatest of the cycles, Winterreise – are even more searching than before, with Moore matching the hushed concentration of the singer in some of the most remarkable playing that even he had ever put on record. Fischer-Dieskau is in wonderfully fresh voice, and the transfers to CD have been managed very naturally.

The Graham Johnson Schubert Lieder Edition

🔑 Ⓑ * Hyp. CDS 44201/40 (40). 60 soloists, including Ian Bostridge singing Die schöne Müllerin and Matthias Goerne singing Winterreise

Hyperion's complete coverage of Schubert's Lieder is a monumental achievement. The individal discs are still all available separately but now come in a box presented in chronological order of composition. Three bonus CDs now complete the survey by adding 81 further songs by Schubert's friends and contemporaries. There is a handsome book, including complete texts and translations, which is also available separately (BKS 44201/40).

When it comes to background information, Graham Johnson's Schubert Lieder Edition for Hyperion using some of the greatest singers of the day is unmatchable. With each disc devoted to a group of songs on a particular theme, Johnson provides notes that add enormously to the enjoyment, heightening the experience of hearing even the most familiar songs.

Throughout the whole series Johnson in his inspired accompaniments consistently revels in Schubert's joyfully original piano writing, and his carefully detailed revelatory notes provide constant illumination. Few series of recordings so richly repay detailed study and all are a pleasure to return to, when the sound and balance too are consistently of such high quality. All collectors should dip into this remarkable anthology, and be encouraged to return again and again.

Miscellaneous vocal recitals

'A Schubert Evening'

🔑 ❀ (BB) * EMI Gemini (ADD) 5 86251-2 (2). Baker, with Moore or Parsons

This very generous collection combines a pair of recitals recorded by Dame Janet Baker at two different stages in her career, in 1970 and a decade later. The first collection ranges wide in an imaginative Liederabend of Schubert songs that includes a number of comparative rarities. They move from the delectably comic Epistel to the ominous darkness of Die junge Nonne. With Gerald Moore (who returned to the studio out of retirement especially for the occasion) still at his finest, this is a rarely satisfying collection. A very high proportion of favourite Schubert songs is included in the 1980 group. With a great singer treating each with loving, detailed care, the result is a charmer of a recital. The very first item, Dame Janet's strongly characterized reading of Die Forelle, makes it a fun song, and similarly Parsons's naughty, springing accompaniment to An Sylvia (echoed later by the singer) gives a twinkle to a song that can easily be treated too seriously. One also remembers the ravishing subito piano for the second stanza of An die Musik. The later recording is of fine EMI vintage and catches the more mature voice naturally and with rather more presence than a decade earlier. It is a pity that, because the set is so economically priced, there are no texts, but this remains an unmissable reissue.

Lieder, Vol. 1

🔑 Ⓜ * EMI 4 76851-2. Bostridge, Drake

Few discs of favourite Schubert songs match this for sheer beauty. Ian Bostridge here not only sings with ravishing tenor tone but, with German words heightened, offers fresh revelation in even the best-known songs, with Julius Drake matching him in insight.

Lieder, Vol. II: Goethe Lieder

🔑 Ⓜ * EMI 5 03424-2. Bostridge, Drake

This second volume of Schubert songs from Ian Bostridge and Julius Drake is divided neatly between songs to poems by Goethe and Mayerhofer, and miscellaneous songs, many less well known. In this wide-ranging selection Bostridge reveals his expanding mastery in the widest variety of expression, with the subtlest range of tone, and with a deliberate hardening of the characteristically sweet voice in some of the more dramatic songs, effectively so when the sense of strain adds to the intensity. In all this Drake is the perfect partner, ranging wide in his tonal palette too. Natural, beautifully balanced sound. Full texts and translations are included.

Lieder: An die Musik; An Sylvia; Auf dem Wasser zu singen; Ave Maria; Du bist die Ruh'; Die Forelle; Ganymed; Gretchen am Spinnrade; Heidenröslein; Im Frühling; Die junge Nonne; Litanei; Mignon und der Harfner; Der Musensohn; Nacht und Träume; Sei mir gegrüsst; Seligkeit

(BB)  Regis RRC 1052. Lott, Johnson

At budget price, Felicity Lott's collection brings an ideal choice of songs for the general collector. With Graham Johnson the most imaginative accompanist, even the best-known songs emerge fresh and new, and gentle songs like Litanei are raptly beautiful.

Lieder: (i) An die Musik; An Sylvia; Auf dem Wasser zu singen; Ganymed; Gretchen am Spinnrade; Im Frühling; Die junge Nonne; Das Lied im Grünen; Der Musensohn; Nachtviolen; Nähe des Geliebten; Wehmut; (ii) Der Einsame; Die Forelle; Heidenröslein; Der Jüngling an der Quelle; Liebe schwärmt auf allen Wegen; Liebhaber in allen Gestalten; Seligkeit; Litanei; Ungeduld; Die Vögel; (iii) An mein Klavier; Erlkönig

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ (*) EMI mono/stereo 5 62754-2 [5 62773-2]. Schwarzkopf; with (i) Fischer; (ii) Moore; (iii) Parsons

Elisabeth Schwarzkopf had her doubts about taking many of the Schubert songs into her repertoire, most of which she felt were more suitable for the male voice; but the present survey includes some of those for which she felt a strong personal identification, including Gretchen am Spinnrade and the passionate Die junge Nonne. The main group here is drawn from an Elysian selection she put on disc at the beginning of her recording career in partnership with Edwin Fischer, who was at the end of his. In spite of her reservations about lack of experience in this repertoire (in the early 1950s), she and Fischer create a magical partnership, full of intimate intercommunication, with even the simplest of songs inspiring intensely subtle expression from singer and pianist alike. Among the items accompanied by Gerald Moore, Die Vögel and Liebhaber in allen Gestalten date from 1948, Litanei and Ungeduld from 1954, and the others from 1965/6, including the two final songs accompanied by Geoffrey Parsons, of which Erlkönig was one of her favourites.

Lieder: (i) An die Musik; An Sylvia; Auf dem Wasser zu singen; Ganymed; Gretchen am Spinnrade; Im Frühling; Die junge Nonne; Das Lied im Grunen; Der Musensohn; Nachtviolen; Nähe des Geliebten; Wehmut; (ii) Litanei auf das Fest Allerseelen; Ungeduld

Ⓝ 🔑 (BB) (*) Naxos 8.111287. Schwarzkopf; (i) Fischer; (ii) Moore – BEETHOVEN: Ah perfido! ()

In 1952 Schwarzkopf, at the beginning of her recording career, and Edwin Fischer at the end of his made a magical partnership, with even the simplest of songs inspiring intensely subtle expression from singer and pianist alike. Though Fischer's playing is not immaculate, he left few records more endearing than this, and Schwarzkopf's colouring of word and tone is masterly. For this carefully remastered Naxos reissue, Mark Obert-Thorn has added two extra recordings, with Gerald Moore accompanying, made two years later, and an equally valuable Beethoven bonus.

Goethe Lieder

Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 457 747-2. Fischer-Dieskau, Demus or Moore

This reissued collection draws on three sets of recordings: Fischer-Dieskau's first stereo DG Goethe LP, recorded with Joerg Demus in 1960, and two subsequent groups with Gerald Moore dating from a decade later. Some of the very finest Goethe settings are here and Fischer-Dieskau is on top of his form, but the partnership with Demus is less than ideal. He proves a capable but not highly imaginative accompanist, although his artistry is not to be denied. But as for the singing, the spectrum of emotion takes on a new glow as each song begins. The two settings of Wandrers Nachtlied are particularly fine, as are the joyous Der Musensohn and the fiery An schwager Kronos. Needless to say the partnership with Gerald Moore is much more of a symbiosis, and these later performances are outstanding in every way. The recording, too, is warmer and has a more pleasing ambience. A treasurable disc, just the same.

Lieder

Ⓜ  CRD CRD 3464. Walker, Vignoles

Sarah Walker's début Lieder recital was made not long before she joined Graham Johnson for her contribution to Hyperion's Schubert Lieder Edition. Here she is accompanied by Roger Vignoles on a period piano of 1864. The attractive selection of songs, with many favourites, consistently draws warm, easily confident singing from her, full of charm, yet she is dramatic when required, as in Erlkönig. There she is not helped by the balance with the piano, which slightly favours the accompanist, masking the full intensity of her characterization, with power kept in reserve until the end. That contrasts beautifully with her easy-going lightness in such a song as Der Einsame and the poise of Nacht und Träume, with phrases sustained on a mere thread of sound. Despite the balance, words are clear thanks to the singer's fine diction and feeling for word-meaning. Roger Vignoles accompanies persuasively, full translations are included.

Lieder: (i) An die Freunde; Auf der Donau; Aus Heliopolis; Fischerweise; Freiwilliges Versinken; Gruppe aus dem Tartarus; (ii) Der Hirt auf dem Felsen; (i) Prometheus; Der Strom; Der Wanderer; Der Wanderer an den Mond

🔑 Ⓑ * BBC (ADD) BBCB 8011-2. (i) Fischer-Dieskau; (ii) Harper, King; Britten – WOLF: 3 Christmas Songs; 3 Michelangelo Lieder ***

Fischer-Dieskau has rarely if ever been more inspired in his recordings of Schubert than here, in live performances given with Britten at the Snape Maltings in 1972 – the last year Britten was able to take an active part in the Aldeburgh Festival. The great baritone, then at his peak, was plainly inspired by the quality of his accompanist's playing, and the selection of songs, well contrasted, brings together an attractive mixture of rare and well known. Similarly, in the Shepherd on the Rock, with Thea King producing honeyed tone in the clarinet obbligato, the magnetism is irresistible. The Wolf songs from Pears and Shirley-Quirk make an attractive bonus.

23 Favourite Lieder

Ⓜ  DG 477 6358-2. Terfel, Martineau

Bryn Terfel's DG disc of Schubert was one of his first recordings to confirm his exceptional gift of projecting his magnetic personality with keen intensity, in Lieder, not just in opera. Terfel emerges as a positive artist, giving strikingly individual and imaginative readings of these 23 favourite songs. As you immediately realize in three favourite songs, Heidenröslein, An Sylvia and Du bist die Ruh, Terfel is daring in confronting you face to face, very much as the young Fischer-Dieskau did, using the widest range of dynamic and tone. Full, firm sound.

Lieder

🔑 Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 449 747-2. Wunderlich, Giesen – BEETHOVEN: Lieder; SCHUMANN: Dichterliebe ***

Few tenors have matched the young Wunderlich in the freshness and golden bloom of the voice. The open manner could not be more appealing here in glowing performances, well coupled with other fine examples of this sadly short-lived artist's work.

Goethe Lieder

🔑 Ⓜ * DG Entrée (ADD) 474 173-2. Fischer-Dieskau, Moore

This superb collection makes the perfect entrée into the world of Schubertian song. Twenty-two items (67 minutes) with nine Goethe settings (including an unforgettable Erlkönig) and many lovely performances of top favourites: Lachen und Weinen, two different Serenades, The Trout and none more beautifully sung than Der Lindenbaum. The recordings come from 1969 and 1970 and throughout Gerald Moore is a superb partner. Texts and translations are included.

'Favourite Lieder'

🔑 Ⓑ  CfP 585 6182. Keenlyside, Martineau

The velvety beauty of Simon Keenlyside's cleanly focused baritone goes with fresh, thoughtful readings of 20 favourite songs, perfectly judged, with ever-sensitive accompaniment from Malcolm Martineau. Now at bargain price, this disc makes another outstanding Schubert Lieder recommendation, which includes one or two unusual songs among many favourites.

Lieder

🔑 Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 0927 46741-2. Bonney, Parsons; (i) with Kam

Barbara Bonney here is at her freshest, and who better to accompany her than Geoffrey Parsons? The generous programme (well over an hour) includes many firm favourites, and Bonney not only sings with much beauty of tone and a flowing Schubertian line but with keen concern for word-meanings. Songs like Die Forelle, Auf dem Wasser zu singen and the lovely So lasst mich scheinen sound especially fresh; and it is always good to have Der Hirt auf dem Felsen ('The shepherd on the rock') with its fluid obbligato clarinet (here the persuasive Sharon Kam). Spontaneous-sounding expressiveness in a natural partnership between fine artists.

Lieder

Ⓑ (*) CfP (ADD) 575 7732 (2). M. Price, Lockhart; (i) with Brymer – LISZT; TCHAIKOVSKY: Songs ; SCHUMANN: Frauenliebe und Leben **(*)

Dame Margaret Price was in fine voice when she made this record in 1971. Her singing of Schubert is full-throated in style, although she successfully fines down the tone for a song like Du bist die Ruh'. The opening recitative of Auf der Riesenkoppe takes us straight into the opera house; La pastorella (a charming song) reminds us of Rossini, and in The Shepherd on the rock the sheer breadth of the singing tends to dwarf even Jack Brymer's beguiling clarinet obbligato. James Lockhart accompanies most sensitively but, maybe because of the recording balance, like Brymer he tends to be dwarfed by the voice. No translations are provided, but the notes give a synopsis of each song. This now comes on a two-disc set, coupled with Schumann's Frauenliebe und Leben and two well-chosen groups of songs by Tchaikovsky and Liszt, recorded two years later.

Auf dem Strom

(BB)  Naxos 8.557471. Kuhmeier, Tomboeck, Inui – BEETHOVEN: Horn Sonata; BRAHMS: Horn Trio; SCHUMANN: Adagio and Allegro ***

The Schubert song, Auf dem Strom ('Upon the River'), with its horn obbligato is parallel with another late song, The Shepherd on the Rock, with its clarinet obbligato. The pure, fresh-toned soprano, Genia Kuhmeier, matches the ripe-toned horn-player, Wolfgang Tomboeck, in the warmth and imagination of her phrasing. A valuable supplement to the instrumental works illustrating the Vienna horn.

Lieder

🔑 Ⓜ * EMI (ADD) 5 62896-2. Ludwig, Parsons or Moore; (i) with de Peyer

Most of these songs, including some of Schubert's most justly popular, come from a 1959 recital with Geoffrey Parsons, who accompanies with great tact and sensitivity, although Gerald Moore takes his place sympathetically in Die Allmacht and Fischerweise. Christa Ludwig presents them with disarming dedication and to hear the hackneyed Ave Maria sung like this is to realize afresh the beauty which all too often is jellied over with sentiment. Gervase de Peyer provides an engaging clarinet obbligato in The Shepherd and the Rock and in Musensohn, most exuberant of Schubert songs, the bouncing jollity is unbounded.

Song cycles

Song cycles: Die schöne Müllerin; Schwanengesang; Winterreise

🔑 Ⓜ * DG (ADD) 437 235-2 (3). Fischer-Dieskau, Moore

🔑 Ⓑ * EMI 5 00934-2 (3). Bär, Parsons

Fischer-Dieskau and Moore had each recorded these great cycles of Schubert several times already before they embarked on this set in 1971–2 as part of DG's Schubert song series. It was no mere repeat of earlier triumphs. If anything, these performances – notably that of the darkest and greatest of the cycles, Winterreise – are even more searching than before, with Moore matching the hushed concentration of the singer in some of the most remarkable playing that even he has put on record. As in the extensive recitals listed above, Fischer-Dieskau is in wonderfully fresh voice.

Die schöne Müllerin was the first of the cycles Olaf Bär recorded, in 1986, in Dresden, with the voice fresher and more velvety than later. The tone is better suited to this young man's cycle, even more so when contrasted with Fischer-Dieskau's EMI version, especially when the digital recording is so flattering to Bär's warmly beautiful lyrical flow. In Winterreise, recorded two years later, once more with Geoffrey Parsons a masterful accompanist, Bär again finds a winning beauty of line and tone in singing that is deeply reflective and strongly dramatic. If without quite the power of Fischer-Dieskau, this is a truly memorable set, most welcome back to the catalogue (and a first choice for I.M.). At this price, even if you have other recordings of these cycles, Bär's is not to be missed. However, there are no texts and translations – a sad omission.

Die schöne Müllerin (complete; DVD version)

Ⓝ 🔑 * Medici Arts DVD 2057308 (with bonus: Schwanengesang; Liebesbotschaft; Aufenthalt; Die Taubenpost) DVD Producer: Wolf Seesemann (CD: Challenge Classics: CC 72292) Prégardien; Gees

 TDK DVD DV-CODSM. Fischer-Dieskau, Schiff (V/D: Fritz Jurmann)

Recorded in the Liederhalle, Mozartsaal, Stuttgart, in August 2008, Christoph Prégardien's memorable live performance of Die schöne Müllerin with Michael Gees has already achieved classic status. Prégardien's honey-toned tenor with its moments of darker baritonal colouring is ideal to express the sadness of this moving journey in song. As Prégardien himself comments, 'the youth never speaks to the girl, and never tells the woman he loves that he loves her', but Schubert 'was drawn to texts that tend in the direction of melancholy', which he expresses so exquisitely. Yet the performance is full of subtly graded variety of feeling and when there is a moment of illusory happiness, the ever-sensitive pianist also makes the very most of it. The extended closing lullaby has great pathos and simple beauty, and leaves the listener feeling sad but not dejected. But the partnership has chosen three encores from Schwanengesang, and the final cheerful Die Taubenpost sends us away lifted up. The recording is resonant but beautifully balanced and truthful. (There is a bonus talk by the singer on Schubert's setting of his text.)

Dietrich Fischer-Dieskau was filmed by Austrian Radio singing Die schöne Müllerin in 1991. He was 66, yet the voice is still in remarkable shape, and he compensates for any lack of bloom by dramatizing the cycle with facial expression and body language. With a superb partnership established with András Schiff, the performance has great concentration and spontaneity, leading invitably on to the closing three songs, which are most movingly sung. As a bonus there is a short portrait of the singer, filmed at the 1985 Schubertiade, in which we learn a great deal about him and his approach to interpretation.

Die schöne Müllerin (song-cycle), D.795 (see also above, under Graham Johnson Schubert Lieder Edition, Vol. 25)

🔑 * DG (ADD) 415 186-2. Fischer-Dieskau, Moore

Ⓑ  CfP (ADD) 586 1812 (2). Ian & Jennifer Partridge – SCHUMANN: Dichterliebe; Liederkreis ***

Fischer-Dieskau's classic 1972 version on DG remains among the very finest ever recorded, combining as it does his developed sense of drama and story-telling, his mature feeling for detail and yet spontaneity too, helped by the searching accompaniment of Gerald Moore. It is a performance with premonitions of Winterreise.

Ian Partridge's is an exceptionally fresh and urgent account. Rarely has the dynamic quality of the cycle been so effectively conveyed, rising to an emotional climax at the end of the first half with the song Mein', expressing the poet's ill-founded joy, welling up infectiously. Partridge's subtle and beautiful range of tone is a constant delight, and he is most imaginatively accompanied by his sister, Jennifer. An outstanding bargain coupling that should win many new friends for Lieder, although there are no texts and translations.

Schwanengesang, D.957

 Amphion/Priory (ADD) PHI CD157. Hemsley, Wilde

Schwanengesang, D.957; Lieder

🔑 Ⓜ () EMI mono 5 65196-2. Hotter, Moore

As in his darkly searching account of Winterreise, also recorded in mono with Gerald Moore in the 1950s, this Schubert collection coupling Schwanengesang with other favourite songs reveals Hotter at his peak. The voice as recorded may not always be beautiful, but the gravity and intensity of the singing reveal a master Lieder-singer, as commanding here as in his Wagner interpretations.

Thomas Hemsley spent much of his career in opera houses in Germany and made few commercial Lieder records. This Schwanengesang from 1976 derives from live performances with David Wilde and serves as a welcome reminder of the artistry of this master singer.

Winterreise (song-cycle), D.911 (DVD versions)

 Warner NVC Arts DVD 8573 83780-2. Bostridge, Drake. (Producer: Gordon Baskerville. V/D: David Alden.)

(*) Arthaus DVD 100 258. Hynninen, Gothoni. (V/D: Julie Didier.)

These two admirably sung DVD recordings of Schubert's Winterreise demonstrate only too well the difficulties of 'staging' an extended song-cycle, however imaginative the producer and director. Ian Bostridge's account of Winterreise, with a hardly less fine partner in Julius Drake, brings great imaginative detail. The performance also has an extraordinarily powerful atmosphere – it is imbued with an air of desolation which we can see in his gaunt face as well as hear in his voice. David Alden's setting is an empty room, within which Bostridge, in his dark coat, can freely move about. There are occasional bursts of visual histrionics, which not all will take to, but on the whole the production works well, and the performance itself is gripping throughout, especially as the recording is so vivid. An additional documentary, rather facetiously titled 'Over the Top with Franz', details the background to the recording and filming and the artistic conflicts generated.

Jorma Hynninen and Ralf Gothoni recorded their fine account of Winterreise in 1994 at the Särestöniemi Museum in Finnish Lapland. The artist Reidar Särestöniemi (1925–81) designed the building so that he could draw inspiration in both winter and summer from the beauties of the Finnish countryside. The performance takes place before a small audience, and apart from the two artists themselves, we see some of Särestöniemi's impressions of the Finnish landscape as well as nature itself. The visual side of the production is handled with both taste and imagination, and the musical balance is well focused and natural. Hynninen and his admirable partner convey the poignancy of this music to splendid effect, although some may well find that the pauses between each song could have been fractionally longer.

Winterreise (song-cycle), D.911 (CD versions)

🔑 * DG 415 187-2. Fischer-Dieskau, Moore

🔑 * Ph. 464 739-2. Fischer-Dieskau, Brendel

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 62784-2. Fischer-Dieskau, Moore

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * Decca (ADD) 466 382-2. Pears, Britten

* EMI 5 57790-2. Bostridge, Andsnes

Ⓜ () EMI mono 5 66985-2 [5 67002]. Hotter, Moore

In the early 1970s Dietrich Fischer-Dieskau's voice was still at its freshest, yet the singer had deepened and intensified his understanding of this greatest of song-cycles to a degree where his finely detailed and thoughtful interpretation sounded totally spontaneous, and this DG version is now freshened on CD. However on Philips, the collaboration of Fischer-Dieskau with one of today's great Schubert pianists, Alfred Brendel, brings endless illumination in the interplay and challenge between singer and pianist, magnetic from first to last. With incidental flaws, this may not be the definitive Fischer-Dieskau reading, but in many ways it is the deepest and most moving he has ever given.

For their reissue in the 'Great Artists of the Century' series EMI have chosen Dietrich Fischer-Dieskau's 1962 Winterreise, which combines direct power of expression with rich vocal power. A great performance which has the virtue of striking freshness from singer and pianist alike. The recording scarcely shows its age. A full text and translation are included.

What is so striking about Pears's performance is its intensity. One continually has the sense of a live occasion and, next to it, even Fischer-Dieskau's beautifully wrought singing sounds too easy. As for Britten, he recreates the music, sometimes with a fair freedom from Schubert's markings, but always with scrupulous concern for the overall musical shaping and sense of atmosphere. The sprung rhythm of Gefror'ne Tränen is magical in creating the impression of frozen teardrops falling, and almost every song brings similar magic. The recording and the CD transfer are exceptionally successful in bringing a sense of presence and realism.

In some ways Ian Bostridge's latest (2004) account of Winterreise does not quite match his earlier DVD account in conveying the full underlying desolation of Schubert's masterly cycle. Here Bostridge, though no less sensitive, is more direct, more positive in projection, less bleak in feeling. Yet even so, it is a highly involving performance and is continually lifted by Leif Ove Andsnes's imaginative and atmospheric accompaniments. The delightful lilt at the opening of Frülingstraume, the galloping Post, and the very touching presentation of Das Wirthaus are matched by the simplicity of the penultimate Die Nebensonnen, and the delicate portrayal of Der Leiermann, to which Bostridge responds so tenderly. The recording is beautifully balanced, and this remains an unforgettable performance.

Hans Hotter's 1954 mono recording of Winterreise brings an exceptionally dark, even sepulchral performance, lightened by the imagination of Gerald Moore's accompaniment. Hotter scales down his great Wagnerian baritone so that only occasionally is the tone gritty. His concern for detail brings many moments of illumination, but the lack of animation makes this an unrelievedly depressing view.

Church music

Auguste jam coelestium, D.488; 6 Antiphonen zu Palmsonntag, D.696; Deutsche Messe, D.872; Graduale in C, D.184; Hymnus an den heiligen Geist, D.964; Kyries: in D min., D.31; B flat, D.45; D min., D.49; F, D.66; Lazarus, D.689; Magnificat in D, D.486; Masses: 1 in F, D.105; 2 in G, D.167; 3 in B flat, D.324; 4 in C, D.452; 5 in A flat, D.678; 6 in E flat, D.950; Offertoriums: (Salve Regina) in F, D.223; (Salve Regina) in A, D.676; (Totus in corde) in C, D.136; (Tres sunt) in A min., D.181; in B flat, D.963; Psalms: 23, D.706; 92, D.953; Salve Reginas: in B flat, D.106, D.379 & D.386; in A, D.676; Stabat Maters: in G min., D.175; in F, D.383; Tantum ergos: in C, D.461; D.462; D.739 & D.811; in D, D.750; in E flat, D.962

🔑 (BB) * EMI (ADD/DDD) 5 86011-2 (7). Popp, Donath, Rüggerberg, Venuti, Hautermann, Falk, Fassbaender, Greindle-Rosner, Dallapozza, Araiza, Protschka, Tear, Lika, Fischer-Dieskau, Schreier, Capella Bavariae, Bav. R. Ch. & SO, Sawallisch

Sawallisch's highly distinguished survey of Schubert's church music – one of the most impressive gramophone achievements of this composer's music – was recorded in the late 1970s and early 1980s, and is now available in one bargain-box set for the first time. The performances of the Masses are warm and understanding, even if, in his masterpiece in this form, the Mass in E flat, the chorus isn't always flawless. The earlier Mass settings bring superb, lively inspiration, not to mention the separate Kyries and Salve Reginas. Much of this glorious music is rare, but little or none of it is inconsequential. Even some of the shortest items – such as the six tiny Antiphons, allegedly written in half an hour – have magic and originality in them. Plainer, but still glowing with Schubertian joy, is the so-called Deutsche Messe. The Magnificat, too, is a strongly characterized setting, and even the settings of St Thomas Aquinas's Tantum ergo have their charm. There are many other surprises. The lovely setting of the Offertorium in C (Totus in corde) is for soprano, clarinet and orchestra, with the vocal and instrumental lines intertwining delectably, while the no less appealing Auguste jam coelestium is a soprano–tenor duet. The Salve Regina in C, D.811, is written for four male voices, a cappella, and they again contribute to the performance of Psalm 23, where Sawallisch provides a piano accompaniment. Schubert left the religious drama Lazarus unfinished and, though no more dramatic than his operas, it contains much delightful music. Some of it is as touching as the finest Schubert, while other sections are little short of inspired; there are some thoroughly characteristic harmonic colourings and some powerful writing for trombones. With Robert Tear in the name-role, Helen Donath as Maria, Lucia Popp as Jemima, Maria Venuti as Martha, Joseph Protschka as Nathanael and Fischer-Dieskau as Simon, it is very strongly cast, and the performance is splendid; indeed, the singing throughout this set is outstanding from chorus and soloists alike, and the recordings, made in the Munich Hercules Hall, are warm and well balanced, adding to one's pleasure. An outstanding bargain.

Magnificat, D.486; Offertorium in B flat, D.963 (Intende voci)

 Teldec 3984 26094-2. Oelze, von Magnus, Lippert, Finley, Arnold Schoenberg Ch., VCM, Harnoncourt – HAYDN: Mass 13 in B flat: Schöpfungsmesse ***

Harnoncourt's period performances, set in a warm church acoustic, were recorded live, like the Haydn Mass with which they are coupled, sounding similarly fresh and new. The Magnificat is relatively well known, with Christiane Oelze ravishingly beautiful in the central Deposuit section. By contrast the offertorium Intende voci for tenor soloist, choir and orchestra, written in 1828 within weeks of the composer's death, is surprisingly a rarity. Though the formalized style harks back to Haydn and Mozart, the gravity of the inspiration is clear. The recording is warmly atmospheric, even if the balance of the choir, slightly backward, prevents it from having quite the impact its incisive singing deserves. An unexpected coupling, but an illuminating one.

Masses 5 in A flat, D.678; 6 in E flat, D.950

🔑 (B) * Ph. Duo (ADD) 473 892-2 (2). Donath, Springer, Schreier, Rotzsch, Adam, Leipzig R. Ch., Dresden State O, Sawallisch

Sawallisch's glorious Philips recordings from 1971 have remained submerged in the catalogue by his EMI versions, which were made in the 1980s. Yet the earlier Dresden sound is first class: spacious, with plenty of depth and a very good overall balance. The conductor has chosen a superb team of soloists, as is immediately apparent in their contribution to the exultant Gloria of the A flat Mass, after the radiantly serene opening Kyrie. The Leipzig Radio Chorus too makes a thrillingly ardent contribution in the Sanctus and the soloists return in the celestial Benedictus and Agnus Dei, where they are led by Helen Donath who sings very beautifully. The choral singing in the Gloria of the E flat Mass is even more incisive, and equally impressive here is the dramatic contribution of the three orchestral trombones. The Sanctus is as resplendent as in the earlier work, but the Benedictus is graver, and the brass return to lead the powerfully solemn and extended Agnus Dei, which is so forward-looking in its style and ends the work so movingly. The body of sound in these performances, the use of women's voices and the gloriously full-textured Dresden Staatskapellen do not mean that detail is obscured or that there is a lack of freshness, and undoubtedly Sawallisch is at his most inspired throughout.

Masses: (i–iv) 4 in C, D.452; (ii; iv; vi) 5; 6; (iii; vii) Offertorium, D.963; (i–iii; iv; vii) Tantum ergo, D.962

🔑 (BB)  EMI Gemini 3 81519-2 (2). (i) Popp; (ii) Fassbaender; (iii) Dallapozza; (iv) Fischer-Dieskau; (v) Donath; (vi) Araiza; (vii) Schreier; Bav. R. Ch. & SO, Sawallisch

This inexpensive reissue from Sawallisch's excellent choral series combines three settings of the Mass, including the two finest, the one in A flat and the masterly work in E flat, while the Tantum ergo (in C) also undoubtedly has its charm. These performances have stood the test of time, containing some outstanding singing from soloists and chorus, although the latter is not flawless in D.950. Sawallisch proves to be a warmly understanding Schubertian, and the recordings are both vivid and atmospheric.

Mass 6 in E flat, D.950

* Chan. 0750. Gritton, Stephen, Padmore, Gilchrist, Rose, Coll. Mus. 90, Hickox

 BBC (ADD) BBCL 4029-2 (2). Scottish Festival Ch., New Philh. O, Giulini – VERDI: Requiem ***

Richard Hickox offers an inspired account of Schubert's imposing last Mass, bringing out the work's expressive qualities as well as its dramatic ones. His period band offers sharply defined playing, with the work's textures amazingly clear, and he is helped by a superb collection of soloists and a rich, full-blooded recording.

Schubert's last and most ambitious setting of the Mass makes a generous coupling for Giulini's inspired account of the Verdi Requiem. It was recorded at the Edinburgh Festival in 1968 with radio sound remarkably free and full for a performance in the Usher Hall. As in the Verdi, Giulini directs a dedicated performance, again with incandescent choral singing from the Scottish Festival Chorus.

Mass 6 in E flat, D.950; Stabat Mater in G min., D.175

(BB)  Naxos 8.570381. Immortal Bach Ens., Leipzig CO, Schuldt-Jensen

Schuldt-Jensen's is an extrovert account of Schubert's Mass in E flat, some six minutes quicker than the rival, Hickox version. That makes for a more obviously dramatic performance in the fast, exciting passages, though this high level of tension is sustained throughout. While it lacks the sharply defined recording of the Chandos version, it is still an impressive, well-balanced sound, with an excellent chorus and orchestra. Moreover, it is available at bargain price, with an attractive 6-minute bonus in the form of his Stabat Mater in G minor.

OPERA AND INCIDENTAL MUSIC

Alfonso und Estrella (complete)

🔑  Berlin Classics BC2156-2 (3). Schreier, Mathis, Prey, Adam, Fischer-Dieskau, Berlin R. Ch. & State Op. O, Suitner

It is strange that Schubert, whose feeling for words in lyric poetry drew out emotions which have natural drama in them, had little or no feeling for the stage. Had his operas been produced, no doubt he would have learnt how to use music more positively; as it is, this tale of royal intrigue in medieval times never quite captures the listener as an opera should. Even so, it contains a stream of delightful music, Schubert at his most open and refreshing; under Suitner's direction it here receives a sparkling performance, excellently cast. Edith Mathis makes a sweet heroine, and Peter Schreier sings radiantly, as if in an orchestrated Schöne Müllerin. The reconciliation of the two principal male characters, Froila and Mauregato, is most touching as sung by Fischer-Dieskau and Prey. The recording is richly atmospheric and is splendidly transferred to CD. A full translation is included.

Rosamunde Overture (Die Zauberharfe, D.644) & Incidental Music, D.797 (complete)

🔑  DG 431 655-2. von Otter, Ernst Senff Ch., COE, Abbado

🔑  Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 466 677-2. Yachmi, Vienna State O Ch., VPO, Münchinger

Abbado and the COE give joyful performances of this magical incidental music. It is a revelation to hear the most popular of the entr'actes played so gently: it is like a whispered meditation. Even with a slow speed and affectionate phrasing, it yet avoids any feeling of being mannered. Glowing recording to match. Anne Sofie von Otter is an ideal soloist.

Münchinger's performance of the delightful Rosamunde music glows with an affectionate warmth and understanding which places this as one of his very best records. Its unavailability on CD until this Australian disc appeared is unaccountable: there is an unforced spontaneity, as well as strength here, and the 1970s recording is rich and naturally balanced. The vocal numbers are superbly done, and the VPO is at its magnificent best.

SCHULHOFF, Ervin

(1894–1942)

String Sextet

Ⓝ Ⓑ  Hyp. Helios. CDH 55321. Raphael Ens. – MARTINŮ: String Sextet; 3 Madrigals ***

Like Martinů, Schulhoff was born in Bohemia and studied in Prague. He studied briefly with Reger and Debussy, no less, and was highly prolific (there are eight symphonies though the last two were not completed). The Sextet of 1924 is an effective piece, with traces of Mahler and early Schoenberg. Its première at Donaueschingen in 1924 took place in the same week as Schoenberg's Serenade. Schulhoff lived in Germany during the interwar years, returning to Prague at the time of the Nazi invasion. A man of the Left, he had taken Soviet citizenship, which afforded him protection until Hitler invaded Russia. As a Jew, he was arrested and died in the notorious Würzburg concentration camp.

6 Ironies (for piano, 4 hands), Op. 34; 8 Jazz Improvisations (for 2 pianos). Piano Sonatas 1 & 3; 5 Burlesques, Op. 23; 5 Grotesques, Op. 21; 6 Ironies, Op. 34; 5 Picturesques, Op. 31

Ⓝ * Phoenix 181. Babinsky, with (i) Lettberg; (ii) Wykydal

The titles of these engaging pieces are not misleading. The Six Ironies are 'dedicated to all cholerically', and much of the writing here is whimsical and witty. All of it creates a highly individual style peculiar to a period of the composer's life between 1917 and 1919, when he devoted himself to writing Grotesques and Burlesques, full of genial harmonic volatility and melodic quirkiness, as if he was satirizing everything the world's bourgeoisie took for granted. He was the first important German composer to dabble in American ragtime and its derivations. The Sonatas are more forward-looking. He had already written atonally in the Ironies, but in the First Sonata (dedicated to Thomas Mann) he turned partly back to classical forms, and the slow movement is a chromatic Passacaglia and the finale a perpetuum mobile. But the important aspect of all this music is that it is appealingly melodic, communicative and entertaining, very well played indeed, and excellently recorded.

SCHUMAN, William

(1910–92)

Piano Concerto

((*)) VAI mono VAIA 1124. Tureck, Saidenberg Little Symphony, Daniel Saidenberg – DALLAPICCOLA: 2 Studies for Violin & Piano (); DIAMOND: Piano Sonata ()

William Schuman's Piano Concerto, written in 1938, but revised in 1942, is worthy of a modern recording, and we hope Naxos will soon oblige in their American series. There is no doubt about the power, expressive commitment and virtuosity of Rosalyn Tureck's première performance, recorded in New York's Town Hall in 1943, and the orchestra for the most part plays well enough, especially in the fine central slow movement, in which Tureck certainly observes the composer's marking, 'Deliberately'. Her virtuosity in the brilliant, glitteringly rhythmic finale is hardly less impressive. But the piano is placed well forward, and the dry recording is very unflattering to all concerned, especially the orchestral brass, while in the accompanied piano passages the strings are distant and ill-focused.

(i) Violin Concerto; New England Triptych

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.559083. (i) Quint; Bournemouth SO, Serebrier – IVES: Variations on America ***

Schuman's powerfully expressive Violin Concerto (1959) underwent more than one transformation in its gestation, with the original three movements becoming two. After a strong, rhythmically angular opening (with the soloist immediately introducing the work's dominating motif) the first movement soon slips into a magically lyrical molto tranquillo. Later there is a sparkling scherzando section and an extended cadenza before the brilliant conclusion. Lyrical feeling also seeps through the finale, although there is plenty of vigour and spectacle too, and a fugue, before the bravura moto perpetuo display of the closing section. Altogether a splendidly rewarding work, given a first-rate performance here by Philip Quint and the strongly involved Bournemouth players under Serebrier.

They are no less persuasive in the New England Triptych, a folksy, immediately communicative work. First-class recording in an attractively spacious acoustic. The coupling, which Schuman orchestrated, could not be more apt.

Violin Concerto

Ⓝ Ⓜ  EMI 2 06611-2. McDuffie, St Louis SO, Slatkin – BERNSTEIN: Serenade ***

Schuman's Violin Concerto is also given a highly sensitive performance by McDuffie and Slatkin.

In Praise of Shahn (Canticle for Orchestra); (i) To Thee Old Cause (Evocation for Oboe, Brass, Timpani, Piano & Strings)

Ⓜ  Sony (ADD) 516235-2 [SK 90390]. (i) Gomberg (oboe); NYPO, Bernstein – BARBER: Adagio for Strings; Violin Concerto ***

Both of these works are commemorative. To Thee Old Cause is dedicated to the memory of Dr Martin Luther King, and the score quotes from Walt Whitman ('Thou peerless, passionate, good cause, Thou stern, remorseless, sweet idea'). It features an oboe obbligato within its string textures which are reinforced by brass sonorities. In a single movement, its Larghissimo opening is intense and evocative, although poignant lyrical feeling predominates. In Praise of (Ben) Shahn remembers the New York artist. It is in two sections, both (drawing on Eastern European Jewish folk material) include dynamic and expressive writing. This is music which in its atmosphere and use of dissonance often looks back to Charles Ives, although Schuman's own individual voice is never submerged. Bernstein is in his element and neither piece could receive more passionate advocacy. The (1970) Avery Fisher Hall recording is very immediate but has plenty of atmosphere too.

Symphonies 4 & 9 (Le Fosse Ardeatine)

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.559254. Seattle SO, Schwarz

Symphonies 7 & 10 (The American Muse)

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.559255. Seattle SO, Schwarz

Gerard Schwarz and the Seattle Orchestra give finely prepared and totally committed accounts of the present four symphonies. Schuman is said to have composed early in the morning and then turned to musical education and administration for the rest of the day. The Fourth Symphony followed its famous predecessor within a few months, and its première was conducted by Koussevitzky. The Ninth was written in 1967, when Schuman had visited Rome and seen the memorial Le Fosse Ardeatine that commemorates a random massacre by Nazi forces. It is a dark and powerful score. The Seventh (1960) marks Schuman's return to the symphony after a gap of 11 years, while the Tenth was commissioned for the bicentennial celebrations of 1975. No one investigating these works will be disappointed.

String Quartet 3

 Testament SBT 1374. Juilliard Qt – BERG: Lyric Suite; CARTER: Quartet 2 ***

It was William Schuman who, when he became President of the Juilliard School, made plans for a resident quartet, and he who hailed their début concert: 'I'll never forget it if I live to be a thousand, it was greater than anything I'd ever dreamed of.' They recorded Schuman's own Quartet (1940) in 1958 and play it with consistent fervour and the deep understanding that they show in the companion works. The Third is a powerful and strongly original piece which alone is worth the price of this record.

SCHUMANN, Clara (1819–96)

Piano Trio in G min., Op. 17

Ⓑ  Helios CDH 55078. Dartington Piano Trio – FANNY MENDELSSOHN: Trio ***

Clara's Piano Trio moves within the Mendelssohn–Schumann tradition with apparently effortless ease and, when played as persuasively as it is here by the Dartington Trio, makes a pleasing impression. If it does not command the depth of Robert, it has a great deal of charm to commend it. Excellent recording.

3 Romances, Op. 22

 Avie AV 2075. Khaner, Abramovic – BRAHMS: Clarinet Sonatas 1–2; ROBERT SCHUMANN: Romances ***

Though Clara Schumann's charming Romances were originally written for violin, they make an apt and attractive fill-up to the flute transcriptions of the other works on the disc, rarities that deserve to be heard more often, here most sensitively performed.

6 Lieder from Jucunde, Op. 23; 6 Lieder, Op. 13; Lieder, Op. 12. Lieder.

Ⓑ  Hyp. Helios CDH 55275. Gritton, Loges, Asti

Clara Schumann wrote almost all her songs during her marriage to Robert, often inspired by special occasions such as birthdays and Christmases. When he died she wrote no more, which is greatly to be regretted when these charming inspirations have so many delightful qualities, generally light-hearted and lyrical. Her Rückert setting, Liebst du um Schönheit, in its folk-like innocence contrasts nicely with the well-known Mahler setting of the same words. Another of her early songs, Der Wanderer in der Sägemühle ('The wanderer at the sawmill'), has unexpected harmonic twists, rather in the manner of Schubert, as do many of her songs. Susan Gritton is a charming soloist in the Jucunde songs. She and Stephan Loges are the excellent soloists in the whole programme, given inspired accompaniment by Eugene Asti.

4 Songs, Op. 12

 Philadelphia Orchestral Association POA 2003 (3). Hampson, Sawallisch – ROBERT SCHUMANN: Violin Concerto; Symphonies 1–4, etc. **(*)

The songs by Clara Schumann find Thomas Hampson in superb form, communicating vividly with every word, flawlessly supported by Wolfgang Sawallisch on the piano.

SCHUMANN, Robert (1810–56)

(i; ii) Adagio and Allegro brillante; (ii) Carnaval (excerpts orch. Ravel); (i; ii) Piano Concerto in A min.; (i) Kinderszenen; Of Foreign Lands and People; (ii) Symphony 4 in D min., Op. 20 (DVD version)

🔑  EuroArts DVD 2055498. (i) Argerich; (ii) Leipzig GO, Chailly (Dir: Michael Beyer)

Any doubts about the music here are silenced by the charisma of the performances. Certainly the opening Adagio and Allegro is brilliant, but little else, and Ravel's scoring of four movements from Carnaval was his one misguided orchestral transcription, for their distinction and poetry evaporate in orchestral dress. The Piano Concerto is a different matter, and Martha Argerich plays it with cascading brilliance, yet finding much delicate charm for the central Intermezzo. Some might feel that her exuberance elsewhere occasionally carries her away, but such sparkling bravura is difficult to resist. She then plays the miniature from Kinderszenen as a gentle encore. Chailly gives the Fourth Symphony its full head, and it is magnificently played by the Leipzig Gewandhaus Orchestra. The transition to the exciting finale is superbly graduated to its Wagnerian climax, and the brilliant, wide-ranging recording lets us discover that the acoustics of the Gewandhaus are ideal; it is a magnificent venue which the camera lets us appreciate.

Carnaval (arr. various composers)

Ⓝ  Australian Decca Eloquence 480 038 (2). SRO, Ansermet – GLAZUNOV: The Seasons, etc; GLINKA: Ruslan and Ludmilla, etc; LIADOV: Baba-Yaga, etc ***

Carnaval, orchestrated by Glazunov, Rimsky-Korsakov, Liadov and Tcherepnin, gives Schumann a distinctly Russian flavour. But the orchestrations are done with such flair that any reservations about transcribing Schumann's piano music are dispelled and it offers 25 or so pleasing minutes. An imaginative inclusion in this disc of colourful Russian show pieces. This is another of Ansermet's most rewarding reissues.

Cello Concerto in A min., Op. 129 (DVD version)

🔑 * DG DVD 073 4351. Maisky, VPO, Bernstein – HAYDN: Cello Concertos, etc. * (Dir: Humphrey Burton)

Maisky and Bernstein make a splendid partnership in Schumann's Cello Concerto, ardent and commanding, with a warmly expressive slow movement. Visually this could hardly be better managed, and the recording too is first class. With its coupling of both Haydn Cello Concertos and transcribed concertante music for violin, this is a very attractive compilation.

Cello Concerto in A min., Op. 129

🔑  BIS CD 486. Thedéen, Malmö SO, Markiz – ELGAR: Concerto ***

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.550938. Kliegel, Nat. SO of Ireland, Constantine – BRAHMS: Double Concerto ***

Ⓜ (*) EMI (ADD) 5 62803-2. du Pré, New Philh. O, Barenboim – DVOŘÁK: Cello Concerto **(*)

Ⓜ (*) Sup. (ADD) SU 3667-2. Navarra, Czech PO, Ančerl – BLOCH: Schelomo (*); RESPIGHI: Adagio con variazioni ***

The young Swedish virtuoso, Torleif Thedéen, is splendidly recorded on BIS, and the Malmö Orchestra give him sympathetic support. He plays with a refreshing ardour, tempered by nobility and a reticence that is strongly appealing. He couples it with an account of the Elgar that is every bit as attuned to the latter's sensibility as any in the catalogue. Strongly recommended.

The Schumann Cello Concerto comes on Naxos in a warmly spontaneous-sounding performance, very well recorded. Kliegel takes a spacious, lyrical view of the first movement, using a soft-grained tone at the start, with wide vibrato. The simple, dedicated approach to the central Langsam also brings dedicated playing, while the finale is wittily pointed, not least in the second subject.

Jacqueline du Pré's spontaneous style is well suited to this most recalcitrant of concertos and the slow movement is particularly beautiful. As in the coupling, the partnership with Daniel Barenboim is very successful, and the remastered 1968 recording has brought a firmer orchestral focus to match the realistic cello timbre.

André Navarra on his day is one of the most commanding of cellists and his performance here has real personality, rivalling some versions on dearer labels. The Supraphon sound has been made more vivid by the remastering, with the cello focus real and present, and the orchestra caught warmly and naturally.

(i; iii) Cello Concerto; (ii; iii) Piano Concerto; (ii) Etudes symphoniques, Op. 13

🔑 Ⓜ  Sony SMK 89716. (i) Ma; (ii) Perahia; (iii) Bav. RSO, C. Davis

In the Cello Concerto Yo-Yo Ma's playing is characteristically refined, but keenly affectionate too, although at times he carries tonal sophistication to excess and suddenly drops into sotto voce tone and near inaudibility. But both he and Sir Colin Davis are thoroughly attuned to the sensibility of this composer and the recording balance is excellent. Similarly Davis makes a fine partner for Perahia, who in the Piano Concerto enjoys displaying his ardour and virtuosity, as well as his ability to invest a phrase with poetry and magic. The recording is live, but is full and spacious. The Symphonic Etudes are equally fine although here the balance is rather close.

(i) Cello Concerto; (ii) 3 Fantasiestücke, Op. 73; 3 Romanzen, Op. 94

() Testament mono SBT 1310. Gendron, SRO; (i) Ansermet (ii) Françaix – TCHAIKOVSKY: Variations on a Rococo Theme ()

Maurice Gendron was rather overshadowed by his countrymen and contemporaries, Pierre Fournier and Paul Tortelier, but he was no less eloquent an artist and had much of the former's aristocratic finesse and the latter's intensity. His playing was quite personal and his tonal burnish reflects his admiration for Feuermann. Gendron's remains an impressive account, well worth reviving. It makes its first appearance on CD. The Opp. 73 and 94 pieces, recorded in 1952, serve as a reminder of the refined musicianship of the elegant composer-pianist, Jean Françaix.

(i) Piano Concerto in A min., Op. 54. Carnaval, Op. 9 (DVD versions)

🔑  EMI DVD DBV4 928399. Arrau, (i) LPO, Hurst (with BEETHOVEN: Piano Sonata 32 in C min., Op. 111). (Also Piano Sonata 23 in F min. (Appassionata), Op. 57 played by Solomon)

Claudio Arrau's A minor Concerto was filmed in a dryish BBC Studio in London in June 1963 and Carnaval two years earlier, both produced by the legendary Walter Todds. His account of Beethoven's C minor Sonata comes from a Paris studio recital from 1970, and of these three works it best captures the distinctive Arrau sonority. Fine though his Carnaval is, it is Op. 111 that brings the wonderful range of tone and colour that readers who heard him in the concert hall will remember. In the Piano Concerto it is good to be reminded of the excellence of the underrated George Hurst's accompanying. Some of the footage is grainy in the Concerto, but the camera-work is always unobtrusive. One of the most exciting things here is the so-called bonus which offers an altogether electrifying performance of the Appassionata by Solomon, recorded in January 1956 not long before he suffered the stroke that immobilized him. An indispensable issue.

Piano Concerto in A min., Op. 56 (DVD version with Documentary by Wulf Konold and others)

Ⓝ * EuroArts DVD 2056068. Argerich, Leipzig GO, Chailly (Performance directed by Michael Beyer; Documentary directed by Angelika Stiehler)

This DVD derives from a concert at the Leipzig Gewandhaus in June 2006 and offers one of the finest accounts of the Schumann Piano Concerto ever recorded.

Martha Argerich is consistently imaginative, her magical sharing of the melody with the woodwind in the first movement is matched by the interplay between her and the strings in the Intermezzo. The whole performance is a wonderful amalgam of brilliance and romantic sensitivity, a delight to hear and see – the scintillating passagework in the finale radiates joy. One can also get the whole concert on EuroArts DVD (2055498), where Chailly is also impressive in the Fourth Symphony and rare arrangements by Ravel and Tchaikovsky of excerpts from Carnaval and the Etudes symphoniques. But many will prefer the half-hour documentary on the present disc, planned by Wulf Konoldt, which analyses the music fascinatingly and explains why the work is such a masterpiece, besides giving a revealing picture of the lives of the composer and his wife.

Piano Concerto in A min., Op. 54

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * EMI 5 03419-2. Andsnes, BPO, Jansons – GRIEG: Piano Concerto **** ✿

🔑 Ⓜ * Ph. (ADD) 475 7773. Kovacevich, BBC SO, C. Davis – GRIEG: Concerto ****

🔑  EMI 5 57773-2. Argerich, Svizzera-Italiana O, Rabinovitch-Barakovsky – BEETHOVEN: Triple Concerto ***

🔑  EMI 7 54746-2. Vogt, CBSO, Rattle – GRIEG: Concerto ***

🔑  Sony 518810-2 [SK 92736]. Perahia, Bav. RSO, C. Davis – GRIEG: Concerto ***

Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 458 628-2. Ashkenazy, LSO, Segal – TCHAIKOVSKY: Concerto 1 **(*)

Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 466 383-2. Lupu, LSO, Previn – GRIEG: Piano Concerto ***

Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 0927 49617-2. Grimaud, Berlin Deutsche SO, Zinman – BEETHOVEN: Piano Concerto 4 ***

Ⓝ Ⓑ  CfP 2 28368-2. Devoyon, LPO, Maksymiuk – GRIEG: Piano Concerto ***

Ⓜ () DG mono 474 024-2 (5). Kempff, LSO, Krips – BEETHOVEN: Piano Concertos 1–5; BRAHMS: Piano Concerto 1; MOZART: Piano Concertos 9 & 15; LISZT: Piano Concertos 1 and 2 ()

(BB) () Dutton CDBP 9719. Lipatti, Philh. O, Karajan – GRIEG: Concerto ()

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.110612. Cortot, LPO, Ronald – CHOPIN: Piano Concerto 2 in F min., Op. 21

Piano Concerto in A min.; Concert-allegro with Introduction in D min., Op. 134; Introduction & Allegro appassionato, Op. 92

(*) MDG 340 1033-2. Zacharias, Lausanne Chamber O

Andsnes's Schumann is a performance of the highest poetic feeling and distinction. Like the Grieg, it brings glorious playing from both soloist and the orchestra under Jansons, a performance similarly combining spontaneity and concentration, dedication and poetry, with no hint of self-consciousness or routine. The pianistic virtuosity is commanding but never overrides tenderness. A performance of both authority and nobility, recorded in particularly lifelike and well-balanced sound. A classic version for our time.

Although Pires should not be forgotten (coupled with the Piano Quartet), our primary recommendation for this favourite Romantic Concerto remains with the successful symbiosis of Stephen Kovacevich and Sir Colin Davis, who give an interpretation which is both fresh and poetic, unexaggerated but powerful in its directness and clarity, and the spring-like element of the outer movements is finely presented by orchestra and soloist alike.

EMI's live recording of the Schumann, made at the Lugano Festival, has a rare vitality, thanks to the vividly characterful playing of Martha Argerich. This account may not be as polished as Argerich's studio version, when impulsively she keeps taking her conductor by surprise, but the magnetism of her playing is here irresistible, with high dramatic contrasts between sparkling virtuosity and yearning lyricism. With the Beethoven Triple Concerto, similarly animated, as an unusual coupling, this makes an attractive recommendation.

Lars Vogt's sensitivity, an innate sense of style and a keen imagination are strongly in evidence in this account of the Schumann, in which he is well supported by Simon Rattle and the CBSO. There is stiff competition, of course, but among modern recordings Vogt acquits himself with honour.

Perahia's 1988 version also benefits from having the guiding hand of Sir Colin Davis directing the orchestra. The recording is live. Perahia is never merely showy, but here he enjoys displaying his ardour and virtuosity as well as his ability to invest a phrase with poetry and magic. With its full and spacious sound, the Perahia is among the finest current versions of this favourite coupling, and it now comes at mid-price with the finale of the Mendelssohn Second Concerto as a bonus.

Ashkenazy's performance, balancing the demands of drama against poetry, comes down rather more in favour of the former than one might expect, but it is a refined reading as well as a powerful one, with the finale rather more spacious than usual. The recording, from the late 70s, is of vintage quality and has been remastered most successfully. However, Ashkenazy is less obviously attuned to the rhetoric of the Tchaikovsky coupling.

The Lupu–Previn performance suits the music admirably, with the piano lucidly and truthfully caught against a natural orchestral backcloth. Lupu's clean boldness of approach in the outer movements is appealingly fresh, with the finale brilliant yet unforced, while the Intermezzo has both warmth and the necessary tender delicacy.

A most enjoyably spontaneous performance from Hélène Grimaud in a very successful coupling with Beethoven's G major Concerto. David Zinman proves a sympathetic partner and, while the opening movement has a flexible, romantic flamboyance, its delicate moments are thoughtfully poetic, as is the gentle account of the Intermezzo, to be followed by an exhilarating finale. The spaciously resonant recording has an attractive concert-hall ambience.

Coupled with an excellent account of the Grieg Concerto, Pascal Devoyon's performance brings natural musicianship, technical brilliance and artistry in equal measure, and he receives excellent support from Maksymiuk. A fine budget coupling, well recorded too.

Kempff's first recording of the Schumann, made for Decca in 1953, is unique in its magic, sparklingly transparent in its textures, delicately pointed and consistently poetic. No pianist with such light pedalling could play with a smoother legato, making the melodies sing. This mono recording, unavailable for 40 years and more, is a wonderful addition to Kempff's legacy on disc, helped by sparklingly clear sound, engineered by the legendary Kenneth Wilkinson.

Dinu Lipatti's classic version of the Schumann Concerto, a staple of the catalogue from when it was recorded in the late 1940s, now comes in this Dutton bargain issue with the sound fuller and clearer than ever before, and superior to the newest EMI transfer.

Zacharias, with chamber forces, offers a comparatively small-scale approach, with textures exceptionally transparent, and with his crisp articulation consistently adding sparkle in the most elaborate passage-work. But both in the finale and in the two rarer concertante works he takes a broad view, avoiding pomposity in the rhetorical gestures of Op. 134, and springing rhythms lightly, never letting the music drag, the effect carefree if lacking flamboyance. With exceptionally clear recording, it makes a refreshing and distinctive view, certainly poetic.

There is something quite special about Cortot. There is lyrical warmth, poetic feeling and a wonderful freshness and individuality. Mark Obert-Thorn gets a very good sound from the shellac originals.

(i) Piano Concerto in A min.; (ii) Violin Concerto in D

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Warner Maestro 2564 69868-5. (i) Argerich; (ii) Kremer; COE, Harnoncourt

Martha Argerich, recorded live, gives a vividly compelling, characteristically volatile reading of the Piano Concerto, at once poetic and full of fancy, powerful and often wildly individual, culminating in an account of the finale so daring one wants to cheer at the end, so freely does the adrenalin flow. Though the orchestra is hard pressed to keep up with her at her fast basic speed, there is a splendid swing to the rhythm and no sense of haste. However, this is not as inspired an account as her EMI DVD (see above). Kremer's performance of the Violin Concerto is similarly disappointing by comparison with the warmth and bravura of his earlier, EMI version with Muti. In neither concerto is the recorded sound ideally warm or full-bodied, with tuttis rather muddy in texture.

(i) Piano Concerto in A min; Symphony 1

Ⓜ (*) Warner Elatus 0927 49568-2. (i) Argerich; COE, Harnoncourt

In her live recording of the Piano Concerto Martha Argerich gives a vividly compelling, characteristically volatile reading, at once poetic and full of fancy, powerful and often wildly individual. The orchestra is hard pressed to keep up with her at her fast basic speed, and the first movement takes some time to settle down (the woodwind ensemble at the start is a bit rough). Harnoncourt's account of the Symphony is very well played but is much less individual and it lacks the spontaneous thrust of the Concerto.

(i) Piano Concerto in A min., Op. 54; (ii) Piano Quintet in E flat, Op. 44

🔑 Ⓜ  RCA 82876 65830-2. Alicia de Larrocha; (i) LSO, C. Davis; (ii) Tokyo Qt

Alicia de Larrocha made the rare coupling with the Piano Quintet, and she is very successful. With Sir Colin Davis as partner, it is not surprising that the Concerto strikes a perfect balance between poetic feeling and drama, and the LSO players respond sensitively to both pianist and conductor. The Abbey Road recording is first class. Similarly, the Quintet brings a truly responsive performance, full of warmth, the engaging In modo d'una marcia making a perfect contrast to the joyously vigorous Scherzo. Here the recording is close but, with piano and strings well balanced, makes a fine mid-priced version.

Piano Concerto in A min., Op. 54; (i) Carnaval, Op. 9; Waldszenen: Vogel als Prophet (only)

ⒷⒷ () Naxos mono 8.110604. Hess; (i) O, Goehr

Dame Myra Hess was admired particularly for her Schumann, which was both authoritative and sensitive. Nothing is ever overstated, and she is completely inside Schumann's poetic world. Virtuosity and display are by-products of her dedication to the letter and spirit of the score. Her rubato seems completely right and tempi are judged perfectly. The recording of the Piano Concerto (in the 78 era, the preferred choice of most collectors) is a little dry, but the performance is fresher than her mono account with Rudolf Schwarz and the Philharmonia. Decent transfers.

Violin Concerto in D min.

🔑 Ⓑ  Decca 475 6703 (2). Bell, Cleveland O, Dohnányi – BRAHMS; TCHAIKOVSKY; WIENIAWSKI: Violin Concertos ***

🔑 ⒷⒷ  Warner Apex 0927 49517-2. Zehetmair, Philh. O, Eschenbach – DVOŘÁK: Violin Concerto; Romance **(*)

 Virgin 5 45663-2. Capuçon, Mahler CO, Harding – MENDELSSOHN: Violin Concerto ***

With Christoph von Dohnányi adding to the weight of the drama, Jamie Bell, in a commanding performance defies the old idea of this concerto as an impossibly flawed piece, bringing out the charm as well as the power. The central slow movement has a rapt intensity rarely matched, and the dance-rhythms of the finale have fantasy as well as jauntiness and jollity. With full-bodied, well-balanced recording this is a Double which offers three equally recommendable couplings, with the Brahms concerto among the very finest in the catalogue.

Thomas Zehetmair is perfectly cast for the Schumann Concerto. He understands the central European tradition and makes the very most of the comparatively weak first movement. The Langsam slow movement is glorious (Schumann seemingly at his most inspired) and even the erratic finale is made to sound jolly and not too disjointed. Eschenbach accompanies sympathetically, the recording is excellent, and this performance is outstanding in every way.

Renaud Capuçon's performance of Schumann's still under-appreciated Violin Concerto is marked by lightness and transparency, not least in the chamber-scale orchestral accompaniment, with bright, crisp attack and a tender account of the second subject. With free, open sound, recorded in the Jugendstill theatre in Vienna, this makes an outstanding version of an apt and rare coupling.

Fantasy for Violin & Orchestra, Op. 131

(BB)  Warner Apex 0927 4959-2. Zehetmair, Cleveland O, Dohnányi – BRAHMS: Violin Concerto **

Schumann's rarely heard Fantasy was presented to his wife for Clara's 34th birthday. The violin dominates reflectively throughout and has many solo passages which are improvisational in character. It is not a masterpiece, but its lyrical inspiration is strong and its loose structure surprisingly convincing. Both Zehetmair and Dohnányi are in total sympathy with the music and the recording is excellent.

SYMPHONIES

Symphony in G min. (Zwickau); Symphonies 1–3 (Rhenish), Op. 97; Symphony 4 (original 1841 version revised 1851 version); (i) Konzertstück for 4 Horns & Orchestra in F, Op. 86

* DG 457 591-2 (3). ORR, Gardiner

With his brilliant orchestra of period instruments Gardiner offers not just the four regular Symphonies but a complete survey of Schumann as symphonist. He seeks specifically to explode the myth that Schumann was a poor orchestrator, pointing out how quick he was to learn from his own mistakes. Gardiner makes an exception over the 1851 revision of the Fourth Symphony, in which Schumann thickened the woodwind writing with much doubling. Illuminatingly, both versions of that symphony are included, with the contrasts well brought out. Gardiner himself, like Brahms, prefers the slimmer, more transparent first version, suggesting that the 1851 changes made it safer and less original. Yet, paradoxically, in performance Gardiner is even more inspired in the later version, which here emerges as bitingly dramatic, working up to a thrilling coda. Like other cycles, this one offers the Overture, Scherzo and Finale of 1841 as a necessary extra, but still more fascinating is the Konzertstück of 1849 for four horns, with the ORR soloists breathtaking in their virtuosity on nineteenth-century instruments. Also included is the early, incomplete Symphony in G minor of 1832 (named after Schumann's home town of Zwickau). Under Gardiner the two completed movements emerge as highly original in their own right.

Symphonies 1–4 (DVD versions)

Ⓝ 🔑 ❀ * DG DVD 073 4512. VPO, Bernstein

Bernstein's outstanding complete DVD set of the Schumann symphonies (on a single disc) shows him at his very finest – electrifying in controlling tension, spirited and genial in bringing out Schumann's rich lyricism, powerful in creating the music's drama. John Rockwell of the New York Times suggested that in these later Schumann performances 'the orchestral playing is surer and more idiomatic . . . warm, full and Germanic'. 'Bernstein,' he concludes, 'catches the romantic secret of this music in a way that most conductors have not.' Throughout the set he achieves glorious orchestral textures from the VPO that completely negate any suggestion that the composer's scoring is thick and unwieldy; indeed, he always uses the original scores, and the First Symphony sounds wonderfully fresh and spring-like, the performance joyously light-hearted. In the Second Bernstein obviously identifies completely with the Adagio, playing it with great tenderness, and then the orchestra jubilantly explodes into the closing molto vivace. In the Third the very opening is exuberant and the brass produces remarkable sonority in the fourth movement's opening evocation of Cologne Cathedral. Most remarkable of all is the Fourth, played with enormous zest, and in the extraordinary 'Wagnerian' transition, from Scherzo to finale, Bernstein out-Furtwänglers Furtwängler in bringing a feeling of actual creative growth, as the brass, with unforgettable power, makes its way remorselessly to the main allegro, which then dashes off bitingly and exhilaratingly, and accelerates spontaneously into the unstoppable coda. Throughout, the Vienna Philharmonic give their all, and watching Bernstein enjoying himself doing the same is an experience in itself. Fortunately Humphrey Burton's video direction is worthy of the occasion, and the Audio Producer, John McClure, can take similar credit for the superbly balanced sound in the Musikverein.

Symphonies 1–4 (CD versions)

🔑 (BB)  Arte Nova 82876577432 (2). Zürich Tonhalle O, Zinman

Symphonies 1–4; Scherzo in G min. (ed. Draheim)

🔑 Ⓜ  DG 429 672-2 (2). BPO, Karajan

Ⓑ (*) DG Double 453 049-2 (2). VPO, Bernstein

Symphonies 1–4: Manfred Overture, Op. 115

Ⓑ (*) Sony (ADD) 516027-2 (2). Cleveland O, Szell

Symphonies 1 in B flat (Spring), Op. 38; 2 in C, Op. 61

Ⓑ  Sony (ADD) SBK 48269. Bav. RSO, Kubelik

Symphonies 3 in E flat (Rhenish), Op. 97; 4 in D min., Op. 120; Overture Manfred, Op. 115

Ⓑ  Sony (ADD) SBK 48270. Bav. RSO, Kubelik

Symphonies 1–4; Overture, Scherzo & Finale, Op. 52

Ⓜ  EMI 567768-2 (2). Dresden State O, Sawallisch

Symphonies 1–4; Overtures: The Bride of Messina; Hermann und Dorothea

(BB) (*) EMI Gemini (ADD) 3 71497-2 (2). Philh. O or (4) New Philh. O, Muti

Symphonies 1–4; Overture: Julius Caesar, Op. 128; Overture, Scherzo & Finale, Op. 52

Ⓑ (*) Double Decca (ADD) 448 930-2 (2). VPO, Solti

Symphonies 1–2 in C; Genoveva Overture

(*) Australian DG Eloquence 463 200-2. BPO, Kubelik

Symphonies 3–4; Manfred Overture

(*) Australian DG Eloquence 463 201-2. BPO, Kubelik

Karajan's interpretations of the Schumann Symphonies stand above all other recordings on modern instruments. 1 is a beautifully shaped performance, with orchestral playing of the highest distinction; 2 is among the most powerful ever recorded, combining poetic intensity and intellectual strength in equal proportions; and 3 is also among the most impressive versions ever committed to disc: its famous fourth-movement evocation of Cologne Cathedral is superbly spacious and eloquent, with quite magnificent brass playing. 4 can be classed alongside Furtwängler's famous record, with Karajan similarly inspirational, yet a shade more self-disciplined than his illustrious predecessor.

The Dresden CDs of the Schumann Symphonies under Sawallisch are as deeply musical as they are carefully considered; the orchestral playing combines superb discipline with refreshing naturalness and spontaneity. Sawallisch catches all Schumann's varying moods, and his direction has splendid vigour. Although the reverberant acoustic brought a degree of edge to the upper strings, the sound-picture has the essential fullness which the Karajan transfers lack, and the remastering has cleaned up the upper range to a considerable extent.

As in his outstanding cycle of the Beethoven symphonies, David Zinman with the Tonhalle Orchestra offers modern-instrument performances which have taken on board the lessons learned from period-instrument performances. With speeds on the fast side, these are all readings which, with excellent sound, are at once fresh, resilient and transparent, defying the old idea of Schumann's thickness of orchestration.

Kubelik's fine Sony set also remains fully competitive. The recording was made in the Hercules-Saal, Munich, in 1979, and the advantages of that glowing acoustic can be felt throughout. The orchestral playing is generally very fine (if not quite as polished as the Berlin Philharmonic) and is especially eloquent in the spacious slow movements. These are strongly characterized readings with plenty of vitality which display the same bright and alert sensitivity to Schumann's style as did his earlier set for DG. But the Sony recording is obviously more modern, and the latest CD transfer brings plenty of body to the sound and a better focus to the violins than in the Sawallisch set.

2, with which Szell began his cycle in October 1958, proves to be a thrilling performance of great power and strong forward thrust, yet the eloquent Adagio expands gloriously and brings the most ardent response from the Cleveland strings. Szell is at his most incisive and the orchestra are at their warmest in 1. The account of the Rhenish is even finer, marvellously full of life. The playing is breathtaking, with the horns gloriously full-blooded. 4 is strong and dramatic, not as weighty as some, but equally convincing. Szell proves himself an outstanding exponent of Schumann, able to stand alongside the finest interpreters of his day, and, were it not for the reduced range of dynamic, this set would have been even more recommended.

Kubelik's earlier accounts of the symphonies are beautifully played and well recorded. The readings have not the drive of Karajan, notably in 4, but they undoubtedly have both eloquence and warmth. They are straightforward and unmannered and recorded in a spacious acoustic with good CD transfers. Kubelik's ear for balance removes all suspicions of heaviness in the orchestration, and the recordings, dating from the mid-1960s, still sound good. Two enjoyable Overtures are offered as a bonus.

Bernstein's VPO recordings from 1984–5 have the extra voltage which comes with live music-making at its most compulsive, though he seems reluctant to let the music speak for itself. With splendid orchestral playing and much engaging detail, there is a great deal to admire throughout these performances, and the resonant acoustic of the Grossersaal of the Musikverein gives the music-making a robust immediacy.

Solti's Schumann interpretations are full of his personal brand of lyrical intensity. The most compelling performance of the cycle is the Second Symphony, with its passionate slow movement. And with a feeling of spontaneous lyricism paramount, this is a most compellingly individual reading. The Julius Caesar Overture is no masterpiece, but makes an enjoyable bonus and the Overture, Scherzo and Finale is very successful. The late 1960s recordings are slightly dry, bright and forward, but one cannot complain that Schumann's scoring sounds too thick!

Muti is a spirited and warm-hearted interpreter of Schumann, and all four Symphonies are most enjoyable, as are the rare overtures. But the very opening of the First Symphony brings what is probably the most controversial speed in the whole set, so hectic that the spring-like freshness is rather missed. Though the Philharmonic strings are not always as polished as they have since become, both playing and the late-1970s recording are warm and ripe, making this a very acceptable budget set.

Symphony 1 in B flat (Spring), Op. 38

🔑 Ⓜ * DG (ADD) 447 408-2. BPO, Karajan – BRAHMS: Symphony 1 ****

Karajan is totally attuned to Schumann's sensibility and he provides a strong yet beautifully shaped performance of the Spring Symphony. The very opening is electrifying, with the Berlin Philharmonic giving of their finest. The sound is an obvious improvement on the previous CD incarnation of this well-balanced analogue recording from the early 1970s, adding body and weight to the clear, fresh detail.

Symphonies 1 in B flat (Spring), Op. 38; 4 in D min., Op. 120; Konzertstück for 4 Horns & Orchestra in F, Op. 86

Ⓜ  DG 474 551-2. ORR, Gardiner

This mid-price release gives us the familiar (1851) version of the Fourth, less bold than the original version, but still striking in this vivid performance. The Spring Symphony, too, is fresh and dynamic, and full of energy. But perhaps the most fascinating work here is the 1841 Konzertstück for four horns, virtually unplayable in Schumann's own time, but presented here with extraordinary panache, with the ORR soloists breathtaking in their virtuosity.

Symphony 1 in B flat (Spring), Op 38; Overture, Scherzo & Finale, Op. 52; Overture to Schiller's 'Bride of Messina', Op. 100; Overture, Genoveva, Op. 81; Zwickau Symphony (first movement)

 BIS SACD 1560. Swedish CO, Dausgaard

Thomas Dausgaard and the Swedish Chamber Orchestra give us an interesting anthology, including the Spring Symphony of 1841. The Overtures apart, the rarity here is the opening movement of an early G minor Symphony premièred in Zwickau in 1832. Dausgaard shows how much less of a hapless forerunner of the mature symphonies the piece is. All these performances benefit from the clarity of sound that this 38-man band and the excellent acoustic of the Örebro Concert Hall can offer on atmospheric SACD. Dausgaard is an excellent conductor and the BIS team do him and the orchestra proud.

Symphony 1 (Spring) in B flat, Op. 38; 2 in C, Op. 61

Ⓝ (*) Pentatone SACD PTC 5186 326. Czech PO, Foster.

Lawrence Foster offers very decent performances of Schumann's Symphonies 1 and 2, recorded live in Dvořák Hall in 2007. That the orchestra (and conductor) love this music is in no doubt – the loving way the slow movements are played is very telling. This is rich-orchestral-sound Schumann, yet the fast movements are both lively and well articulated. These performance have neither the originality that Gardiner or Dausgaard have bought to this repertoire, and they fall just short of the distinction which Karajan and Sawallisch, for example, achieved. However, on their own terms, they are eminently satisfying, and well recorded in the ample acoustic.

Symphony 2 in C

🔑  Testament (ADD) SBT 1378. BPO, Szell (with BRAHMS: Tragic Overture; RICHARD STRAUSS: Don Juan)

Ⓝ () Orfeo mono 427041. VPO, Mitropoulos – PROKOFIEV: Symphony 5 ()

Szell's account of the Second Symphony is among the finest in the current catalogue. The performance comes from a concert given at the Philharmonie in June 1969 and, apart from the immaculate control which distinguished all his music making, has a powerful sense of line and in the slow movement great lyrical feeling and humanity. The Deutschland Radio recording is very faithful and communicates the sense of occasion. The other works on the programme, and in particular the Don Juan, are likewise performances of stature. Strongly recommended.

Mitropoulos was an artist of the strongest personality and integrity. Schumann's greatest symphony, together with Prokofiev's Fifth, comprised his début with the Vienna Philharmonic at the 1954 Salzburg Festival, and he brings great intensity to its heavenly slow movement. The Austrian Radio balance is not ideal but, given the quality of this electrifying performance, sound is of lesser importance.

Symphonies 2; 4 (original version); Overture: Julius Caesar; Prelude: Scenes from Goethe's Faust

(*) BIS SACD 1519. Swedish CO, Dausgaard

With sharp accents and dynamic contrasts, Dausgaard is determined to extract as much drama out of these scores as possible. He achieves admirably clear textures, bringing out much fresh detail. The original version of the Fourth Symphony is lighter in texture than in the later version, and Dausgaard balances the internal dialogue of the instruments to telling effect. These are undoubtedly fresh performances, which offer something new. Good sound and unexpected couplings.

Symphony 3 (Rhenish); (i) Des Sängers Fluch, Op. 139

🔑  Chan. 9760. Danish Nat. RSO, Schonwandt; (i) with Fischer, Rorholm, Wagenführer, Henschel, Hansen, Danish Nat. R. Ch.

Schonwandt lifts rhythms infectiously in a performance full of light and shade, giving rapt intensity to the inner meditation of the Cologne Cathedral movement. The playing of the fine Copenhagen Orchestra is unfailingly cultured. A strongly competitive and compelling account, beautifully recorded by the Danish Radio engineers. The rare and generous coupling is most welcome, the 40-minute long choral ballad The Minstrel's Curse. A late work, it comes from 1852 and is a setting of Ludwig Uhland's ballad, which Schumann's collaborator Richard Pohl interspersed with other Uhland poems. Not all the soloists are ideally steady, but the chorus is outstanding. First-rate sound.

Symphonies 3 (Rhenish); 4. Overtures: Hermann und Dorothea; Manfred

Ⓝ  BIS SACD 1619. Swedish CO, Dausgaard

As in Dausgaard's other Schumann recordings, this latest is fresh, bracing and impressive. The Rhenish sets off at a brisk pace, and if initially it feels as though this is a lightweight performance, with its relatively small orchestra (38 musicians) Dausgaard's overall conception is soon apparent and the symphony's splendour vividly emerges. There is a chamber-like intimacy in the third movement which is very appealing, though the fourth movement doesn't quite evoke the greatness of Cologne Cathedral as some other performances have. The dramatic qualities of the Fourth Symphony are impressively brought out, but there is real repose in the slow movement. The Scherzo goes with a bounce and the finale, though perhaps over-emphatic in its clipped point-making, is most exciting. The masterful Manfred Overture receives a superb performance, and the rarely heard Hermann und Dorothea overture, with its prominent use of the Marseillaise, is thoroughly entertaining. Superb sound, as always, from this source.

Symphonies 3 in E flat (Rhenish); 4 in D min., Op. 120

(BB) (*) Virgin 2x1 3 49983-2 (2). LCP, Norrington – MENDELSSOHN: Symphonies 3; 4 ***

With Schumann's orchestration usually accused of being too thick, there is much to be said for period performances like this. Norrington not only clarifies textures, with natural horns in particular standing out dramatically, but, at unexaggerated speeds for the outer movements – even a little too slow for the first movement of 3 – the results are often almost Mendelssohnian, to make a clear link with the coupling. Middle movements in both Symphonies are unusually brisk, turning slow movements into lyrical interludes. Warm, atmospheric recording.

Symphony 4 (DVD version)

🔑 ✿  EuroArts DVD 2072118 (with rehearsal of Andante). VSO, Karajan – BEETHOVEN: Symphony 5 (with rehearsal) ***

Apart from the comparatively brief Beethoven coupling, this is the only visual record (in excellent black-and-white imagery) of Karajan rehearsing a major Symphony. Moreover, it is the final hour-long rehearsal for the recording which is to follow. Obviously much has already been achieved in earlier rehearsals, yet detail has still to be refined in each of the four movements. It is a relatively young Karajan who is working with the Vienna Symphoniker in 1965, a fine orchestra but not the Berlin Philharmonic, and there is a good deal that he has to rectify: phrasing, accents, dynamics, the use of fermata, and much else besides. As one listens to him and watches him working on this great romantic symphony, the insights and subtle perceptions which he conveys to the orchestra are revealed to the listener too, and one's conception of the work's stature steadily expands. One cannot help but learn much from this experience, and the documentary value of this DVD confirms the view that in German repertoire Karajan was one of the greatest conductors of the 20th century. The rehearsal is followed by an electrifying performance of the symphony itself, perhaps without all the lyrical warmth of tone he has tried to instil in the orchestra, but with playing of remarkable virtuosity, particularly in the thrilling coda. The recording of the rehearsal is very bright and top-heavy, but the performance itself is better balanced and is certainly vivid.

Symphony 4 in D min., Op. 120

✿ Ⓜ (*) DG mono 474 988-2. BPO, Furtwängler – HAYDN: Symphony 88 (*) ✿

 Orfeo (ADD) C 522 991 B. VPO, Boehm – MAHLER: Lieder eines fahrenden Gesellen; BEETHOVEN: Symphony 4 ***

 BBC (ADD) BBCL4058-2. BBC SO, Monteux – BRAHMS: Symphony 3  (with ROSSINI: L'italiana in Algeri Overture **(*))

Furtwängler's famous, uniquely inspired version has now been reunited with its original coupling (in a facsimile of the original LP sleeve), Furtwängler's inspired account of Haydn's Symphony 88.

Boehm was rarely so fiery as here, with biting attack and strong rhythmic emphasis from the Vienna Philharmonic in superb form. The second-movement Romanze is set in sharp contrast: the deeply meditative opening theme gives way to lightness and transparency. Good radio sound, if with some edge on high violins.

By comparison, Monteux produces a lighter, more transparent sound, given the constraints of Schumann's much criticized scoring. Rhythmic accents are lighter and there is a sense of drama without any histrionics. A valuable memento of Monteux in repertoire that is not associated with him.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Abendlied, Op. 85/2; Adagio & Allegro in A flat, Op. 70; Fantasiestücke, Op. 73; 3 Romances, Op. 94; 3 Pieces in Folk Style, Op. 102/2–4

🔑 Ⓜ  Ph. (ADD) 426 386-2. Holliger, Brendel

Adagio & Allegro in A flat, Op. 70

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.557471. Tomboeck, Inui – BEETHOVEN: Horn Sonata; BRAHMS: Horn Trio; SCHUBERT: Auf dem Strom ***

Adagio & Allegro, Op. 70; Fantasiestücke, Op. 73; 5 Stücke im Volkston, Op. 102

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.550654. Kliegel, Merscher – SCHUBERT: Arpeggione Sonata ***

Adagio & Allegro in A flat, Op. 70; Fantasiestücke, Op. 73; 5 Stücke im Volkston, Op. 102 (all for cello & piano)

(*) BIS CD 1076. Thedéen, Pöntinen – CHOPIN: Cello Sonata **(*)

Adagio & Allegro, Op. 70; 5 Pieces in Popular Style

Ⓑ (*) Cal. (ADD) CAL 3614. Navarra, Annie d'Arco – DVOŘÁK: Humoresque, etc.; SCHUBERT: Arpeggione Sonata **(*)

In the Adagio and Allegro, Op. 70, the distinctively fruity sound of the Vienna horn is wonderfully caught on the superb Naxos disc. Like the other works, the Schumann is warmly done, with Wolfgang Tomboeck producing the ripest tones and the hunting-horn rhythms of the Allegro have an infectious brilliance and swagger. The three Romances are specifically for oboe, but Holliger suggests that the others too are suitable for oboe, since the composer himself gave different options. One misses something by not having a horn in the Adagio and Allegro, a cello in the folk-style pieces, or a clarinet in the Fantasiestücke (the oboe d'amore is used here); but Holliger has never sounded more magical on record and, with superbly real recording and deeply imaginative accompaniment, the result is an unexpected revelation.

Maria Kliegel and Kristin Merscher couple these charming Schumann miniatures with the Schubert Arpeggione and turn in fresh and musical performances and are recorded in very clean and well-focused sound.

Navarra plays the Adagio very romantically and then finds ready bravura for the Allegro. But it is the five miniatures in which he is most eloquent, playing them very appealingly.

Torleif Thedéen and Roland Pöntinen are sympathetic exponents of this repertoire even if in the Fünf Stücke im Volkston they are just a bit too earnest and lacking in charm.

Adagio & Allegro, Op. 70; 3 Fantasiestücke, Op. 73; 3 Romanzen; Märchenbilder; (i) Märchenerzählungen, Op. 132

🔑  Zig-Zag Territoires ZZT 010401. Beranger, Gastaldi; (i) with Heau

Schumann was always accommodating about the instrumentation of these pieces, with the viola regularly interchanged with the clarinet. This has no doubt led Beranger to also take on the Fantasiestücke and the Romanzen, where Schumann suggests clarinet and violin as options but not the viola. The Adagio and Allegro, originally with horn or cello, works beautifully here, and the two later 'fairy-tale' works, Märchenbilder and Märchenerzählungen, are among the glories of the viola repertoire. It is only in the latter work that the clarinettist Florent Heau appears, another sensitive artist.

Fantasiestücke; 5 Stücke in Volkston

 Ph. 412 230-2. Maisky, Argerich – SCHUBERT: Arpeggione Sonata ***

Mischa Maisky on cello and Martha Argerich give relaxed, leisurely accounts of these pieces that some collectors will find a bit self-indulgent. Others will luxuriate in the refinement and sensitivity of their playing.

Märchenbilder, Op. 113

(*) Chan. 8550. Imai, Vignoles – BRAHMS: Viola Sonatas **(*)

The Märchenbilder are also persuasively played here by Nobuko Imai and Roger Vignoles. The recording acoustic is not ideal, but this does not seriously detract from the value of this coupling.

Piano Quartet in E flat, Op. 47; Piano Quintet in E flat, Op. 44

Ⓜ (*) Berlin Classics (ADD) 0094032BC. Rösel, Gewandhaus Qt

(*) Chan. 0698. Michelangelo Piano Qt; with (i) De Secondi

Ⓜ (*) CRD (ADD) CRD 3324. Rajna, members of the Alberni Qt

The playing of Peter Rösel and the Gewandhaus Quartet is keenly alive and very musical. Tempi are fairly brisk but phrasing is affectionate and sensitive. This is playing of quality and good value at mid-price.

Recorded in Florence in 2000, the Michelangelo Piano Quartet gives stylish pioneer versions of these works on period instruments. The fortepiano, a fine 1830 instrument from Vienna, cannot sustain legato lines as a modern piano would (notably in the warmly lyrical slow movement of the Piano Quartet), but the extra clarity of articulation is a delight, while the stilling of vibrato by the strings intensifies the mood of dedication in slow passages, with splendidly crisp attack in Allegros.

Though not flawlessly polished in their playing, Thomas Rajna and the Alberni give performances that in their way are urgent and enjoyable. The recording is brighter and crisper, which gives an extra (and not unlikeable) edge to the performances.

(i) Piano Quartet, Op. 47; Piano Quintet, Op. 44; Piano Trios 1 in D min., Op. 63; 2 in F, Op. 80; 3 in G min., Op. 110

🔑 Ⓑ  Ph. Duo (ADD) 456 323-2 (2). Beaux Arts Trio; (i) with Bettelheim and Rhodes

Once again Philips have compiled a particularly generous measure for this Duo of Beaux Arts Schumann performances from the 1970s. This illustrious Trio (with associates) give splendid readings of the Piano Quartet and Quintet. The vitality of inspiration is brought out consistently, and with that goes their characteristic concern for fine ensemble and refined textures. They are also probably the safest bet for the three Piano Trios.

Piano Quintet in E flat, Op. 44

🔑  Virgin 3 95143-2. Andsnes, Artemis Qt – BRAHMS: Piano Quintet ***

(BB)  Naxos 8.550406. Jandó, Kodály Qt – BRAHMS: Piano Quintet ***

() Testament mono SBT 3063. Aller, Hollywood Qt – BRAHMS: Piano Quartets, etc. ()

Leif Ove Andsnes and the Artemis Quartet are totally attuned to Schumann's sensibility and have the benefit of very natural and vivid recording. A first recommendation.

A strongly characterized performance of Schumann's fine Quintet from Jenö Jandó and the Kodály Quartet. This is robust music-making, romantic in spirit, and its spontaneity is well projected by a vivid recording, made in an attractively resonant acoustic. An excellent bargain.

Exhilarating and masterly, the Hollywood Quartet and Victor Aller on Testament come from the compilation of Brahms chamber music, recorded in the mid-1950s. A performance of some stature which transcends sonic limitations.

(i) Piano Quintet in E flat, Op. 44; String Quartets 1–3, Op. 41/1–3

(BB) (*) EMI Gemini 3 50819-2 (2). (i) Zacharias; Cherubini Qt

The account of the Piano Quintet is first class in every way, with Christian Zacharias dominating and taking the string players with him. It has splendid vigour and spirit, with the In modo d'una Marcia very characterfully done. The recording is excellent. The three String Quartets were recorded in a different venue, and both performances and sound are slightly drier. Without Zacharias, the Cherubini Quartet seem slightly more inhibited, less spontaneous, though they still play very well indeed.

Piano Quintet, Op. 44; Andante & Variations for 2 Pianos, 2 Cellos & Horn, Op. 46; Fantasiestücke for Cello and Piano, Op. 73; Märchenbilder for Viola & Piano, Op. 113

🔑  EMI 5 57308-2. Argerich, Rabinovitch, Hall, Imai, Gutman, Maisky, Neunecker

A very distinguished line-up. We have already highly praised the performance of the Piano Quintet, recorded at the Concertgebouw, Nijmegen, in 1994. We also note the informality of the music-making, which had 'the enthusiasm and intimate inspiration of a house-party'. The other items are also finely done.

(i; ii) Piano Quintet in E flat, Op. 44; (ii) String Quartet 1 in A min., Op. 41/1; (i) Arabeske, Op. 18; Blumenstück, Op. 19

 Linn CKD132. (i) d'Ascoli; (ii) Schidlof Qt

In the Piano Quintet it is d'Ascoli who leads the ensemble, maybe controversially in the first movement, when he unashamedly encourages marked changes of tempo – persuasively so, thanks to the feeling of spontaneity. There are similar qualities in d'Ascoli's performances of the Arabeske and Blumenstück, with textures fresh and clean. The String Quartet brings another refined performance with plenty of light and shade. The recording, made in the Blackheath Concert Halls, is finely focused within a helpful acoustic.

Piano Trio 1 in D min., Op. 63; Bilder aus Osten, Op. 66; Phantasiestücke, Op. 88

🔑  MDG 303 0921-2. Trio Parnassus

Piano Trios 2 in F, Op. 80; 3 in G min., Op. 110; 6 Pieces in the Form of a Canon, Op. 56

🔑  MDG 303 0922-2. Trio Parnassus

Piano Trio 1 in D min., Op. 63

Ⓜ (*) CRD (ADD) CRD 3433. Israel Piano Trio – BRAHMS: Piano Trio 2 **(*)

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.110185. Cortot, Thibaud, Casals – MENDELSSOHN: Piano Trio 1 ()

Piano Trios 2 in F, Op. 80; 3 in G min., Op. 110; Fantasiestücke, Op. 88

Ⓜ (*) CRD (ADD) CRD 3458. Israel Piano Trio

Piano Trios 1, Op. 63; 2, Op. 80

(BB)  Naxos 8.553836. Vienna Brahms Trio

The Trio Parnassus are a very good ensemble and give characterful and sensitive accounts of the three Piano Trios and the other repertoire included here. The MDG recording is very natural and well focused.

The Israel Piano Trio give a powerfully projected account of the D minor Trio; the pianist is at times rather carried away, as if he were playing a Brahms concerto. There are, however, some sensitive and intelligent touches, and the recording is first class. 2 and 3 are much the same: lively, articulate playing with a sometimes over-forceful pianist.

The Vienna Brahms Trio give eminently musical accounts of both scores and are satisfactorily recorded. The Beaux Arts Trio on Philips, however, are every bit as competitive (see above).

The partnership of Jacques Thibaud, Pablo Casals and Alfred Cortot made their recording of the D minor Piano Trio in 1928, so the sound is wanting the body and colour of later recordings. Coming to this set afresh one wonders if it has ever been surpassed in musical insight. They are immaculate, wonderfully singing in their phrasing, and their apparent spontaneity of feeling is born of a firm musical grip. Ward Marston's transfer is first rate.

Piano Trio 3 in G min.; Piano Quartet in E flat, Op. 47; Fantasiestücke, Op. 88

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67175. Florestan Trio (augmented)

The Florestan Trio is first rate in every way and gives thoughtful and spirited accounts of all three of these Schumann pieces. It is joined effectively in the E flat Piano Quartet by the violist Thomas Riebl.

3 Romances Op. 95

 Avie AV 2075. Khaner, Abramović – BRAHMS: Clarinet Sonatas 1–2; CLARA SCHUMANN: 3 Romances ***

When Schumann gave the option of playing these pieces on violin or clarinet in place of the oboe, which he originally had in mind, there is a strong case for welcoming Jeffrey Khaner's arrangements for flute, ideal fill-ups for his transcriptions of the two Brahms Clarinet Sonatas, the main works on the disc. As in the other items, Khaner's performances could not be more sensitive.

String Quartets 1–3, Op. 41/1–3

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.570151. Fine Arts Qt

 HM HMU 907270. Eroica Qt

Ⓜ  CRD 2-CD CRD 2414 (2). Alberni Qt – MENDELSSOHN: Quartet 2 ***

Having all three of Schumann's Opus 41 Quartets on a single Naxos disc makes a superb bargain. These fine works, notably the last and most impressive, 3, are the products of Schumann's extraordinary year of chamber inspirations, 1842, which also saw the composition of the Piano Quintet and Piano Quartet. The Fine Arts Quartet, founded as long ago as 1946, remains a magnificent interpreter, here vividly recorded in sessions in Holland in 2006.

The Eroica is the second ensemble so far to have squeezed all three Schumann quartets on to a single CD. Schumann's writing benefits from the transparency of tone produced by the group's early instruments. Tempi are judged well, and the overall impression is fresh and enjoyable.

The well-recorded and sympathetic performances by the Alberni Quartet have plenty of finesse and charm and are guided throughout by sound musical instinct. The Mendelssohn coupling is equally attractive.

Violin Sonata 1 (DVD version)

 TDK DVD DVWW-COMARG. Argerich & Gautier Capuçon (V/D: Frédéric Le Clair) – BEETHOVEN: Triple Concerto; PROKOFIEV: Piano Concerto 1; Symphony 1 ***

A wholly satisfying performance from Argerich and Gautier Capuçon, persuasively presented on DVD. A fine bonus for Argerich's electrifying Prokofiev concerto.

Violin Sonata 1 in A min., Op. 105

() Biddulph mono LAB 165. Busch and Serkin – BRAHMS: String Quartets 1–2 ((*)) (with REGER: Violin Sonata 5, Op. 84: Allegretto ())

The Biddulph sleeve-note hails the 1937 Busch–Serkin account of the A minor Sonata, Op. 105, erroneously billed as 2 on both the label and sleeve, as 'never having been equalled for its intensity and romantic ardour'. This is absolutely right. The disc throws in the only Reger that Busch recorded, the Allegretto from the F sharp minor Sonata, Op. 84.

Violin Sonata 2 in D min., Op. 121

ⒷⒷ () Naxos mono 8.119771. Yehudi & Hephzibah Menuhin – BRAHMS: Sonatas 1 & 3 ()

This recording was made in Paris in 1934 when Yehudi was 18 and his sister just 14. It was the première recording of the piece, and in Hephzibah's hands the piano writing has enormous freshness. More persuasive than many subsequent recordings.

PIANO MUSIC

'Abegg' Variations, Op. 1; Arabeske, Op. 18; Blumenstück, Op. 19; Bunte Blätter, Op. 99; Carnaval, Op. 9; Davidsbündlertänze, Op. 6; Etudes symphoniques, Op. 13; Fantasie, Op. 17; Fantasiestücke, Op. 12; Faschingsschwank aus Wien, Op. 26; Humoreske, Op. 20; Kinderszenen, Op. 15; Kreisleriana, Op. 16; Nachtstücke; Novellette, Op. 21/1, 2 & 8; Papillons, Op. 2; 3 Romanzen, Op. 28; Sonatas 1–2; Waldszenen, Op. 82

🔑 Ⓑ  Decca 470 915-2 (7). Ashkenazy

Vladimir Ashkenazy's survey of the Schumann piano music comes from the late 1980s through to the mid-1990s. Of course there are individual performances that have been surpassed by other artists (Perahia's C major Fantasy has perhaps the greater poetic intensity and spontaneity, and Lupu's unforgettable accounts of the Humoreske and Kreisleriana are performances of real distinction). But this is not to minimize the achievement of these thoughtful and intuitive performances or the artistry and excellence which Ashkenazy brings to bear on a composer for whom he obviously has great feeling. The recordings are generally very natural, and readers wanting a complete Schumann coverage will find much to reward them here.

Abegg Variations, Op. 1; Davidsbündlertänze, Op. 6

🔑  Ottavio OTRC 39027. Cooper – BRAHMS: Fantasias, Op. 116 ***

Imogen Cooper plays the Abegg Variations with a rare combination of iridescent brilliance and poetic feeling, and she characterizes the Davidsbündlertänze with consistent imagination and colour. Her playing is spontaneous from first to last, and the recording most realistic.

Albumblätter, Op. 99; Arabeske, Op. 18; Etudes symphoniques, Op. 13

🔑 ⒷⒷ  Naxos 8.550144. Vladar

Stefan Vladar intersperses the additional studies that Schumann published as an appendix into the Etudes symphoniques. His account is quite simply superb in every respect and deserves recording of comparable excellence. The Albumblätter is hardly less masterly. Artistically this rates three stars, with the compelling quality of the playing transcending the sonic limitations of the recording.

Allegro in B min., Op. 8; Carnaval, Op. 9; Fantasie in C, Op. 17; Faschingsschwank aus Wien; Kreisleriana; Novellette 8 in F sharp, Op. 21; Romance 2 in F sharp, Op. 28/2

(*) Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD/DDD) 476 9910 (2). de Larrocha

Alicia de Larrocha's performance of Kreisleriana is notable for its blend of thoughtfulness and romanticism, the control of rubato and generally unaffected musicality. The style in the shorter pieces is bolder, to match their character. Carnaval, and also the Fantasie in C, are both strongly characterized. But hers is a committed personal view which demands attention.

Allegro in B min., Op. 8; Concerto without Orchestra, Op. 14; Davidsbündlertänze, Op. 6; Gesänge der Frühe, Op. 133; Kreisleriana, Op. 16

🔑 Ⓑ  DG 471 3682 (2). Pollini

This Schumann reissue finds Maurizio Pollini on his best form, with something of the spontaneity and freshness he showed when he first emerged on the scene in the early 1960s tempered with the wisdom of advancing years. Indeed, this Kreisleriana is among the very finest. Pollini is wonderfully satisfying and is beautifully recorded; the only reservation to be made is that both discs offer short measure at 48 minutes. However as a Double the set remains good value.

Arabeske, Op. 18; Blumenstücke, Op. 19; Davidsbündlertänze; Etudes symphoniques, Op. 13

🔑 Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 0927 49612-2. Schiff

András Schiff opts for the original (1837) Davidsbündlertänze, rather than the more usual 1851 revision. Each of the pieces is strongly characterized and played with appropriate ardour. In the Etudes symphoniques he chooses the generally used late version of 1852 (posthumously revised to restore two rejected earlier numbers). The Arabeske and the Blumenstücke complete a satisfying and competitively priced recital.

Arabeske, Op. 18; Carnaval, Op. 9; Davidsbündlertänze, Op. 6; Fantasie in C, Op. 17; Humoreske, Op. 20; Kinderszenen; Kreisleriana, Op. 16; Nachtstücke, Op. 23; Novellette, Op. 99/9; Papillons, Op. 2; 3 Romances, Op. 28; Sonata 2 in G

min., Op. 22; Symphonic Studies, Op. 13; Waldszenen, Op. 21

🔑 Ⓑ  DG (ADD) 471 312-2 (4). Kempff

Kempff is in his element in pieces like the Arabeske, the relatively little-known first and third Romances, and the Novelette, where he inspires an element of fantasy, of spontaneous recreation, and he is also at his most inspirational in the Fantasie in C major. Davidsbündlertänze, the Nachtstücke and Papillons are all extremely fine.

On the other hand the comparatively extrovert style of Carnaval suits him less well. Kempff's thoughtful, intimate readings of two of the Etudes symphoniques and Kreisleriana are marvellously persuasive, giving a clear illusion of live performances, spontaneously caught and again well recorded. Similarly if the sharper contrasts of the Humoreske are toned down by charm and geniality, the Waldszenen are glowingly relaxed and both are comparably personal and individual.

Arabeske, Op. 18; Carnaval, Op. 9; Humoreske, Op. 20; Toccata in C, Op. 7

🔑  BIS CD-960. Kempf

A début recital from Freddy Kempf. His Schumann blends the right amount of intelligence and intuitive feeling. He is at his best in the reflective and inward moments and his Humoreske is particularly successful. He has remarkable technical prowess and refined musicianship. The recorded sound is very lively and natural, and the disc as a whole gives much satisfaction.

Arabeske, Op. 18; Fantasy in C, Op. 17; Kreisleriana, Op. 16

 EMI 3 65391-2. Biss

Schumann playing of real quality. Jonathan Biss is a young American pianist and his artistry is evident throughout this recital. An impressive début which can be recommended along with the very best. Good recorded sound too.

Carnaval, Op. 9

🔑 () BBC Legends mono BBCL 4201-2. Hess – BACH: English Suite 2 ((*)); HAYDN: Keyboard Sonata 62 ()

Dame Myra Hess was long noted for her performances of Schumann's Carnaval, and here in a BBC recording of 1950 the result could hardly be more persuasive, so spontaneous-sounding it feels as though she is improvising over the long sequence of contrasted pieces. Well coupled with lyrical Bach and a Haydn Sonata, recorded at the very end of her career. Mono recording very acceptable.

Carnaval, Op.9; Der Kontrabandiste (arr. Tausig)

Ⓝ  BBC Legends (ADD) BBCL 4254-2 . Cherkassky (with MENDELSSOHN: Andante & Rondo capriccioso) – SCHUBERT: Sonata 20 in A ***

Ⓝ (BB) () Naxos mono 8.112020. Rachmaninov – CHOPIN: Piano Sonata 2 ()

Schumann's Carnaval is ideally suited to the volatile qualities in Shura Cherkassky's playing. The varied textures of the piece are delightfully conveyed, not only the lightness of many sections but the firmness and power of such passages as the very opening, even if the playing is not always finger-perfect. Rhythms are consistently lifted infectiously, adding to the delights. The Tausig arrangement of the song, Der Kontrabandiste, makes the lightest of encores, rounding the recital off delectably.

Rachmaninov's Carnaval comes from 1929. Ward Marston produces very fine results in his transfers and brings presence to these unique performances.

Davidsbündlertänze, Op. 6

Ⓑ (*) EMI Debut 5 85894-2. Biss – BEETHOVEN: Piano Sonata 23; Fantasy in G min. **(*)

Jonathan Biss commands superb technical address and a keen dramatic sense, though his temperament seems more attuned to the impulsive side of Schumann's sensibility rather than the inward-looking and poetic. Compelling playing all the same, without being totally satisfying. The recording captures the timbre and colour of the piano most truthfully.

Davidsbündlertänze, Op. 6; Fantasiestücke, Op. 12; Papillons, Op. 2

🔑 Ⓜ  Sony (ADD) SMK 89714. Perahia

Perahia has a magic touch and his electric spontaneity is naturally caught in the studio. In the works of Schumann, which can splinter apart, this quality of concentration is enormously valuable, and the results could hardly be more powerfully convincing, despite recording quality which lacks something in bloom and refinement. The Papillons, added for this reissue, are unlikely to be surpassed, and it is a pity that the close balance robs the piano timbre of some of its allure.

Davidsbündlertänze, Op. 6; Sonata 2 in G min., Op. 22; Toccata, Op. 7

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex 0927 40834-2. Berezovsky

Boris Berezovsky is a keyboard lion of the first order. Everything we have so far heard of his has been of exceptional artistry and great finesse. His formidable musicianship is allied to a technique of magisterial calibre, and this coupling is very impressive indeed. These performances are of the highest calibre. The Davidsbündlertänze is particularly charismatic and this bargain reissue cannot be too strongly recommended.

Etudes symphoniques, Op. 13; Fantasia in C, Op. 1

Ⓝ (BB) (*) Regis Alto ALC 1046. Brendel

Brendel's opening phrase of the Symphonic studies is immediately individual, and yet in essence these are not wayward performances, even though they are strongly personalized. Brendel's reputation is as a player in the mainstream of the classical tradition, and it is the strength of that tradition which gives these performances their character and power. There are other ways of approaching Schumann (Kempff's for instance) but in Brendel's hands the music's structure emerges anew and has the emotional grip one associates with Beethoven. Excellent 1966 (originally Vanguard) recording.

Fantasia in C, Op. 17

🔑 Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 447 451-2. Pollini – SCHUBERT: Wanderer fantasia ***

 Chan. 9793. Lortie – LISZT: Concert Paraphrases of Beethoven's An die ferne Geliebte; Mignon; Schumann Lieder ***

Pollini's playing throughout has a command and authority on the one hand and deep poetic feeling on the other that hold the listener spellbound. The recording is good but not outstanding. A welcome mid-priced reissue in DG's series of 'Originals'.

Lortie is an unfailingly thoughtful and thought-provoking artist of compelling utterance, who always has something new to say – and whose expressive eloquence is always at the service of the composer. This newcomer ranks alongside the finest and most satisfying versions of the C major Fantasia now around. And it is very well recorded.

Fantasiestücke, Op. 12; Kinderszenen, Op. 15; Kreisleriana, Op. 16

🔑 Ⓜ  Ph. 434 732-2. Brendel

Fantasiestücke is strong as well as poetic. The Kinderszenen is also one of the finest performances of the 1980s and is touched with real distinction. Brendel's Kreisleriana is intelligent and finely characterized. He is better recorded (in 1981–2) than most of his rivals and the overall impression is highly persuasive.

Humoreske in B flat, Op. 20

 Hyp. CDA67618. Hewitt (with Piano Sonata 1)

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550469. Harden – REGER: Variations **(*)

Although she does not displace Andsnes in the First Sonata (see above), Angela Hewitt gives a most impressive account of the work and a no less commanding performance of the Humoreske. The sound-quality is admirable: she is recorded in the Grand Hotel, Dobbiaco, in Italy and her engineers do her justice.

Wolf Harden's performance of the Schumann Humoreske is highly imaginative, idiomatic and full of sensitive touches. There is plenty of air around the aural image.

Humoreske, Op. 20; Kinderszenen, Op. 15; Kreisleriana, Op. 16

🔑  Decca 440 496-2. Lupu

Lupu is one of the artists whose understanding of the composer can be measured alongside that of Murray Perahia. His account of the Humoreske, Op. 20, is both poetic and hardly less magical than the Kreisleriana. This is playing of great poetry and authority. The recording is excellent, albeit resonant.

Humoreske, Op. 20; Nachtstücke, Op. 23; 8 Novelletten, Op. 21; Sonata in F sharp min., Op. 14

🔑  ECM 472 119-2 (2). Schiff

András Schiff's playing is refreshingly light-textured with much delicacy of colour plus a natural response to the music's mood swings. This especially applies to the eight Novelletten, by no means easy works to bring off, for they can easily seem inflated. The Sonata too is finely played, never hectoring, and imaginatively detailed, the Variations on Clara's Andantino especially so, followed by a brilliantly articulated finale. The closing encore, the Nachtstücke, is quite magical. The recording is excellent, the piano image clear and realistic.

Kinderszenen, Op. 15

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.550885. Biret – DEBUSSY: Children's Corner Suite (*); TCHAIKOVSKY: Album for the Young ***

Idil Biret was a pupil of Kempff and is completely at home in the delightful children's pieces of Schumann. The characterization is strong, sensitive and often touching, as in Träumerei and the lovely closing movement, The Poet Speaks. The piano recording, made in the Clara Wieck Auditorium, is forward but realistic.

VOCAL MUSIC

Lieder from Album für die Jugend, Op. 79; Gedichte der Königen Maria Stuart, Op. 135; Myrthen Lieder, Op. 25 (excerpts); Abends am Strand; Die Kartenlegerin; Ständchen; Stille Tränen; Verratene Liebe

🔑 Ⓜ  CRD (ADD) CRD 3401. Walker, Vignoles

Sarah Walker's 1982 Schumann collection is most cherishable, notably the five Mary Stuart songs which, in their brooding darkness, are among Schumann's most memorable. With superb accompaniment and splendid recording, this is an outstanding issue.

Andersen Lieder, Op. 40; Eichendorff Liederkreis, Op. 39; Der Einsiedler; Harpers' Songs, Op. 98a; Mélancholie, Op. 74/6; 6 Poems, Op. 36; Tief im Herzen

 RCA 88697 1681/72. Gerhaher, Huber

Centring on the Opus 39 Liederkreis setting of Eichendorff poems Christian Gerhaher has assembled a most satisfying collection of songs on the related theme of Melancholy, the title of the first song. The Six Songs, Op. 36, setting poems by Reineck, may not quite match Opus 39 in depth of expressiveness, but they are valuable nonetheless, as are the settings of Hans Andersen poems. Gerhaher's tone is unfailingly beautiful, ranging over the widest tonal range, with words perfectly clear, and he is most sensitively accompanied by his regular partner, Gerold Huber.

2 Balladen, Op. 122; Dichterliebe, Op. 48; 6 frühe Lieder, Op. posth; Excerpts from: 3 Gedichte, Op. 30; 4 Gedichte aus Ruckers Liebesfruhlinge, Op 37; 6 Gedichte aus dem Liederbuch eines Malers, Op. 36; 12 Gedichte, Op. 35; 3 Gedichte, Op. 119; 3 Gesange, Op. 31; 3 Gesange, Op. 83; 5 heitere Gesang, Op. 125; 4 Husarenlieder Op. 117; 5 Lieder, Op. 40; 4 Gesange, Op. 142; Lieder und Gesang, Op. 127/51

& 77; Liederalbum fur die Jungende, Op. 79; Liederkreis, Opp. 24 & 39; Myrthen, Op. 25; Romanzen und Balladen, Opp. 45; 49 & 64; Spanische Liebeslieder, Op. 138; Spanisches Liederspiel, Op. 74

Ⓝ Ⓜ  DG 477 7957 (6). Fischer-Dieskau, Eschenbach

The recordings of the three cycles, Dichterliebe and two sets of Liederkreis with Christoph Eschenbach were made in 1974, 1975 and 1976 and are most impressive when considered in detail against other versions of these much-recorded works. Eschenbach's accompaniments are superb, consistently imaginative. The collection has now been expanded to six CDs with the other recordings, made between 1961 and 1979, spanning the early to middle years of the singer's career. As it developed, his readings acquired a sharper edge, with the darkness and irony in some of the songs more specifically contrasted against the poetry and expressive warmth. The recording is excellent and this new collection includes full texts and translations.

Dichterliebe, Op. 48 (with four songs intended for the cycle, but discarded); 12 Lieder

Ⓝ * Hyp. CDA 67676. Finley, Drake

Gerald Finley, making a symbiotic partnership with Julius Drake, sings Schumann's great song-cycle with much tonal beauty and feeling, above all capturing the deep disillusion of Schumann's inspiration, capped by the bold resignation expressed in the powerfully cutting final song, Die alten, bösen Lieder ('The bad old songs, the bad and bitter dreams. Let us now bury them'). He also fascinatingly includes four Lieder intended for the cycle, but in the end not included. The remaining songs are imaginatively chosen. Beginning with Tragedy and the melancholy tale of The two grenadiers returning home to discover the army defeated, they continue the theme of human unhappiness in love, and then change the mood with three lovely, happy flower songs. The recording is truthful but rather reverberant.

Dichterliebe, Op. 48; Liederkreis, Op. 39

Ⓑ  CfP (ADD) 586 1812 (2). Ian & Jennifer Partridge – SCHUBERT: Die schöne Müllerin ***

As in the excellent Schubert coupling, Ian Partridge here shows himself a deeply sensitive Lieder singer, blessed with a radiant light voice. In both cycles his thoughtfulness illuminates every line, helped by superbly matched accompaniment from his sister and well-balanced, truthful recording.

Dichterliebe, Op. 48; 12 Gedichte, Op. 35 (Kerner Lieder); Liederkreis, Op. 24 & Op. 39; Myrthen, Op. 25: Aus dem östlichen Rosen; Aus dem Schenkenbuch im Divan I & II; Du bist wie eine Blume; Freisinn; Die Lotusblume; Der Nussbaum; Was will die einsame Träne; Venetianisches Lied I & II; Widmung; Zum Schluss. Other Lieder; Tragödie (I; II)

🔑  Australian Ph. Eloquence 476 9974 (2). Holzmair, Cooper

Holzmair with his light, tenorish baritone proves a perfect poet in Dichterliebe and Imogen Cooper is an inspired accompanist. That cycle to poems by Heine is then perfectly complemented by Schumann's other, more disparate and varied Heine cycle, the Liederkreis (recorded 1999), as well as other Heine and Rückert items. Here, too, Holzmair proves a masterly interpreter, alert and intense but finely controlled. The 12 settings of Kerner, among other items, were taken from a later recording (2002) and the performances are just as impressive and have one eager to listen on from one item to the next. The sound throughout is impressive.

Frauenliebe und Leben, Op. 42

🔑 ✿ (BB)  Regis (ADD) RRC 1225. J. Baker, Isepp – Vocal Recital, including Brahms & Schubert Songs ***

Ⓑ (*) CfP 2-CD (ADD) 575 7732 (2). M. Price, Lockhart; (i) with Brymer (with LISZT: Es muss ein Wunderbarres sein; Kling leise, mein Lied; O lieb', so lang du lieben kännst; Die Lorelei; Die stille Wasserrose; TCHAIKOVSKY: None but the lonely heart; Do not believe my friend; At the Ball ) – SCHUBERT: Lieder **(*)

(BB) ((*)) Naxos mono 8.11009. Ferrier, Newmark – BRAHMS: Alto Rhapsody, etc. ((*))

Dame Janet Baker's famous early (1966) Saga recording of Schumann's great song-cycle at last re-emerges on another budget label, Regis, carefully remastered and sounding remarkably real and vivid. As we said in our original review, her range of expression runs the whole gamut, from a joyful golden tone-colour in the exhilaration of Ich kann's nicht fassen, through an ecstatic half-tone in Süsser Freund (the fulfilment of the line 'Du geliebter Mann' wonderfully conveyed), to the dead, vibratoless agony at the bereavement in the final song. A performance that should be in every collection.

Margaret Price's performance of the famous Frauenliebe cycle brings most affecting and dedicated singing, particularly in the touching closing song, and the voice seems well suited to three of Tchaikovsky's best-known songs, and even more so to the equally well-chosen Liszt group, of which O lieb', so lang du lieben kännst is a setting of words to the composer's most famous piano piece, Liebesträume.

Ferrier was a deeply impressive Lieder singer, but there are more tender, more loving emotions in Schumann's cycle than she was able to convey at that stage of her career (1950). She is not helped by the limited accompaniment of John Newmark. Nevertheless, who will fail to be moved by her touching singing of the closing song, Nun hast du mir den ersten Schmerz getan, and the Brahms couplings make this reissue indispensable.

Frauenliebe und Leben, Op. 42; Liederkreis, Op. 39

Ⓑ  Ph. ADD 475 6374 (2). Norman, Gage – BRAHMS: Lieder **(*)

The richness and power of Jessye Norman's voice are well caught in this 1975 recital, but in Frauenliebe she is not quite at her happiest or most spontaneous. It has its quota of mawkish words, and Norman does not seem naturally to identify. Richer in poetry, the Eichendorff Liederkreis is more sympathetic to her; but other versions are even more sensitive. Accompaniments and recordings are most refined.

Frauenliebe und Leben, Op. 42; Lieder

🔑 * DG 445 881-2. von Otter, Forsberg

Anne Sofie von Otter characterizes the contrasting songs in Frauenliebe with exceptional intensity, presenting a character, as in an opera, developing from youthful, eager girl to bereaved widow, but that strengthens the cycle, minimizing the sentimentality of the poems. This is an exceptionally generous recital (79 minutes) and other songs on the disc are characterized commandingly, with dramatic contrasts heightened. Excellent sound and fine accompaniment from Forsberg. Highly recommended.

Frauenliebe und Leben, Op. 42; Liederkreis, Op. 39; Aus den östlichen Rosen; Kennst du das Land; Meine Rose; Der Nussbaum; Requiem; Die Soldatenbraut; Widmung

(BB)  Regis RRC 1051. Lott, Johnson

Felicity Lott is a connoisseur's artist, far greater than many more illustrious and publicized rivals, and she sings here with great poise and a completely unaffected artistry. The recording comes from 1990 and is not new, but the finesse and musicianship of this partnership, as well as the intelligence which guides everything they do, make it treasurable. The sound, too, is very good indeed.

Liederkreis, Op. 39; 12 Kerner Lieder, Op. 35

🔑 (BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55011. Price, Johnson

A superb Schumann disc, coupling the sequence of 12 Settings of Justinus Kerner, Op. 35, with the Eichendorff Liederkreis, Op. 39. The singer's presence, magnetism and weight of expression are superbly caught, and the tonal beauty and immaculate sense of line go with detailed imagination in word-pointing. The lesser-known Kerner Lieder also contain many treasures. First-rate sound. Full notes and texts with translations are included in this bargain reissue.

(i; ii) Mass, Op. 147; (ii–vi) Requiem für Mignon; (ii; iv–viii) Requiem, Op. 148; (ii; v; vii; x; xi) Der Rose Pilgerfahrt

🔑 (BB)  EMI Gemini 3 50900-2 (2). (i) Shirai, Seiffert, Rootering, BPO, Sawallisch; (ii) Ch. of the State Musikvereins, Düsseldorf; (iii) Lindner, Andonian, Georg, Welchhold; (iv) Fischer-Dieskau; (v) Düsseldorf SO; (vi) Klee; (vii) Donath; (viii) Soffel; (vix) Gedda; (x) Lövaas, Hamarl, Altmeyer, Pola; (xi) de Burgos

Sawallisch's dedicated performance of Schumann's long-neglected and under-prized setting of the Mass was recorded live in Düsseldorf in September 1987. Of the soloists, only the soprano has much to sing (the delectable Mitsuko Shirai, sensuously beautiful in the Offertorium solo) and the weight of the work rests on the chorus, a fine body here, warmly rather than clinically recorded.

Like Mozart, Schumann was unable to shake off the conviction that the Requiem was for himself. The opening Requiem aeternam is affecting and dignified, and the final Benedictus has a haunting eloquence. Bernhard Klee extracts a very sympathetic response from his distinguished team of soloists and the fine Düsseldorf chorus and orchestra. They also give an attentive and committed account of the 1849 Requiem for Mignon, and the attractive cantata, Der Rose Pilgerfahrt, is equally successful. The EMI recording is natural and well balanced.

Mass in C min., Op. 147; Requiem for Mignon, Op. 98b

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex 0927 49977-2. Michael, Bizimeche-Eisinger, Silveira, Schaeffer, Brodard, Lisbon Gulbenkian Foundation Ch. & O, Corboz

Schumann's Mass in C minor is a powerful work in which the chorus is all-important. The Lisbon singers rise to the challenge eloquently under Corboz, who is a persuasive exponent. He has good soloists, and Audrey Michael is particularly touching in the Offertorium, where she sings with treble-like purity. The Sanctus which follows is also very fine. The less ambitious Requiem für Mignon is also very attractively done, with the matching of the female solo voices particularly pleasing, and the documentation about the music has been restored for this inexpensive reissue.

Das Paradies und die Peri, Op. 50

Ⓝ  RCA 88697 27155-2 (2). Röschmann, Fink, Strehl, Gerhaher, Bav. R Ch. & SO, Harnoncourt

(i) Das Paradies und die Peri, Op. 50; (ii) Requiem für Mignon, Op. 98b; Nachtlied (for chorus & orchestra), Op. 108

🔑  DG 457 660-2 (2). (i) Bonney, Coku, Fink, Prégardien, Archer, Finley, Hauptman; (ii) Dazeley; Monteverdi Ch., ORR, Gardiner

It takes a conductor as perceptive and persuasive as Sir John Eliot Gardiner to transform Das Paradies und die Peri into something like a masterpiece. That he does with his period forces in this fine version on DG Archiv. For good measure he adds two other much shorter neglected works and similarly presents them in their full originality. With William Dazeley as soloist, and with four trebles from the Hanover Boys Choir in key solo roles, the Requiem für Mignon is also most atmospherically done with wonderfully varied textures. To words by Hebbel, the Nachtlied, too, is revealed as more buried treasure. Refined, beautifully balanced recording made at the Watford Colosseum.

Harnoncourt's account with Bavarian Radio forces makes an attractive alternative to the Gardiner version. Dorothea Röschmann is a more intense Peri than Barbara Bonney for Gardiner, while, on the minus side, undoubtedly the golden-voiced Christoph Prégardien is more winning than Harnoncourt's Christoph Strehl. Yet the latter is very impressive too; the contralto angel, Bernarda Fink, also makes a telling contribution, and the Bavarian Chorus is outstandingly vivid. The recording, made in the Herkulessaal, is spacious yet clear, and the lithe orchestral playing has obvious influences from Harnoncourt's period-instrument ventures. Overall this new RCA set does Schumann's remarkable oratorio much justice.

Der Rose Pilgerfahrt, Op. 112

 Chan. 9350. Nielsen, van der Walt, Møller, Paevatalu, Danish Nat. R. Ch. and SO, Kuhn

Schumann wrote his cantata, Der Rose Pilgerfahrt ('The Pilgrimage of the Rose') in 1851, towards the end of his career. The idiom, as well as recalling Schubert, often suggests the folk-based writing of Humperdinck in Hänsel und Gretel, similarly innocent-seeming, but in fact subtle. Gustav Kuhn conducts an aptly bright and atmospheric performance, very well recorded, with Inga Nielsen and Deon van der Walt in the two principal roles. The chorus and orchestra are first rate and the recording, sponsored by Danish Radio, is full-bodied and atmospheric. A valuable rarity. Sadly, the booklet contains no translation alongside the German text, though Richard Wigmore's note and summary are very helpful.

OPERA

Genoveva (complete; DVD version)

Ⓝ (*) Arthaus DVD 101 327. Banse, Kallisch, Mathey, Gantner, Muff, Zürich Op. Ch. & O, Harnoncourt (Stage Director: Martin Kušej; V/D: Felix Breisach)

It is to Harnoncourt that we owe the stage revival of Schumann's only opera, Genoveva, with its heroine an almost mystical image of beauty and chaste faithfulness. The double villains are Goro, who wants to seduce her while her husband Siegfried is away at the Crusades, and Margaretha his nurse, who stirs up Goro's desires for her own reasons. They are in league, either to achieve the seduction or to persuade Siegfried that his wife has been unfaithful. In the end they are unsuccessful when Siegfried discovers the truth at the last minute, and Genoveva is spared a violent death. Schumann wrote in a parlando, forward-looking style and the music is of quality, with fine arias for all the principals, and some excellent choruses for the servants and retainers. The plot may be convoluted, but it works well enough, although the opera at 146 minutes could do with a little pruning. The other snags are the various production eccentricities. The Set Designer, Rolf Glittenberg, has the bare stage dominated by a bloodstained white backcloth; the Costume Designer, Heidl Hackl, has chosen modern dress suits for the men (although Genoveva looks beautiful and chaste enough), and half-blackened make-up for the cast, none of which helps to make the action convincing. Nevertheless, Harnoncourt directs with spirit, and the singing is excellent, especially Juliane Banse as a glorious Genoveva, Cornelia Kallisch, a suitably wild Margaretha, and Shawn Mathey a strongly characterized Goro.

SCHÜTZ, Heinrich (1585–1672)

Die Auferstehung unseres Herren Jesu Christi; (i) Meine Seele erhebt den Herren

🔑 * HM HMC 90 1310. Concerto Vocale, Jacobs; (i) with Kiehr

Schütz's Resurrection has a purity of feeling and a depth that cleanses the spirit, and René Jacobs's wonderfully paced and unhurried account of the Passion story has the listener (or at least this listener) completely under his spell. The quality and imaginative playing of the instrumentalists are no less impressive than the vocal contributions, especially that of Maria Cristina Kiehr. The recording is very well balanced and real.

Christmas Day Vespers 1664 (including: Christmas Story; Magnificat with Christmas Interpolations; O bone Jesu, fili Mariae (Sacred Concerto); Warum toben die Heiden)

🔑  DG 463 046-2. (i) Daniels, Boys Ch. & Congregational Ch. of Roskilde Cathedral, Gabrieli Consort and Players, McCreesh

As in his earlier hypothetical recreation of Vespers, at St Mark's, Venice, Paul McCreesh here celebrates Christmas Vespers as it might have been heard at the Dresden Court in 1664. The result is an immensely varied vocal and instrumental tapestry, ranging from congregational hymns, to Schütz's glorious Magnificat setting, including such familiar Christmas interpolations as the chorales Lobt Gott, ihr Christen all zugleich and In dulci jubilo, and ending with a burst of magnificence in the organ postlude, Benedicamus Domino by Samuel Scheidt. The centrepiece is a very fine performance of Schütz's Christmas Story with Charles Daniels a lyrical rather than a dramatic Evangelist. Other soloists are drawn from the Gabrieli Consort and the instrumental groups include wind instruments, cornetts and sackbuts, strings and a widely varied palette of continuo. The cathedral ambience adds to the sense of occasion, and the variety of the music here is matched by the colourful and dedicated response of the performers. A remarkable achievement.

Christmas Story (Weihnachtshistorie); 3 Cantiones sacrae (1625); Psalm 100

(BB)  Naxos 8.553514. Agnew, Crookes, MacCarthy, Oxford Camerata, Summerly

On Naxos Summerly with his talented group of ten singers – two of them doubling as soloists – give a compelling reading of Schütz's vivid and compact telling of the Christmas Story. Aptly austere in its overall manner, with clear instrumental accompaniment, it yet brings out the beauty and vigour of the numbers depicting the different groups, in turn the angels, the shepherds and the wise men. The scholarly credentials are impeccable, with excellent notes provided, and the recording, made in Hertford College, Oxford, is full and vivid. The motets and the psalm-setting make a welcome fill-up.

Lukas Passion

Ⓝ (*) DaCapo 8.226019. Linderoth, Jesperson, Ars Nova Copenhagen, Hillier

The Lukas Passion was composed for the Dresden Court, which by tradition used no instruments during Holy Week. So, after a brief choral introduction, the work is dominated by the Evangelist's narrative with Jesus' participation. This means that, apart from very occasional and brief choral contributions from the Disciples, the work consists largely of recitative in German. A text and translation are provided, but with no solo commentary the musical appeal of the Passion is limited.

Motets

🔑 (BB)  Regis (ADD) RRC 1168. Esswood, Keven Smith, Elliott, Griffet, Partridge, Etheridge, George, Pro Cantione Antiqua, L. Cornet & Sackbut Ens., Restoration Ac., Fleet

An eminently useful and well-recorded super-bargain anthology of Schütz motets that offers such masterpieces as Fili mi Absolon (for bass voice, five sackbuts, organ and violone continuo) and the glorious Selig sind die Todten in well-thought-out and carefully prepared performances under Edgar Fleet. These accounts have a dignity and warmth that make them distinctive. Moreover, the CD sound is excellently managed, rich and clear.

Musicalische Vesper

🔑  MDG 332 1170-2. Kölner Kammerchor, Coll. Cartusianum, Neumann

Taking Monteverdi's great 1610 set of Vespers as a model, Peter Neumann with his talented Cologne period group has here devised a thrilling German equivalent to Monteverdi's masterpiece, using appropriate Psalm settings and antiphons from Schütz's principal collections. The German sequence gains greatly in cohesion from being relatively compact, at just over an hour, ending with a glorious setting of the Magnificat. The Psalm settings leading up to that are drawn from such collections as the composer's Psalms of David and Symphoniae Sacrae, some items already well known on disc, but others not otherwise available. Peter Neumann draws singing and playing from his Cologne forces of spectacular precision and clarity, and he gains greatly from the brilliant engineering of the record company, MDG, which, using only two channels, yet gives a vivid illusion of surround sound.

O bone Jesu, fili Mariae

🔑 (M)  DG 447 298-2. Monteverdi Ch., E. Bar. Soloists, Gardiner – BUXTEHUDE: Membra Jesu nostri ***

A wonderfully eloquent performance of this Spiritual Concerto by one of the greatest of baroque masters. Schütz juxtaposes stanzas of a poem ascribed to St Bernard of Clairvaux with prose passages of Latin devotional literature, treating the latter as recitative and the former set homophonically, and ending the cantata in concertato style. Beautifully recorded.

Der Schwanengesang (reconstructed Wolfram Steude)

(BB) (*) Virgin 2x1 4 82100-2 (2). Hanover Boys' Ch., Hilliard Ens., L. Bar., Hillier – BACH: Motets ***

Schütz's opus ultimum is a setting of Psalm 119 (the longest psalm in the psalter), which he divides into 11 sections. He finishes off this 13-part motet cycle with the final setting of Psalm 100, which he had originally composed in 1662, and the Deutsches Magnificat. Wolfram Steude's note recounts the history of the work, parts of which disappeared after Schütz's death; and his reconstruction of two of the vocal parts is obviously a labour of love. The performance is a completely dedicated one, with excellent singing from all concerned and good instrumental playing, and the conductor, Heinz Hennig, secures warm and responsive singing from the Hannover Knabenchor. The acoustic is spacious and warm and the recording balance well focused. The sound is firm, clear, and spacious.

Sinfoniae Sacrae, Op. 6/2–13, 15, 17–19, SWV 258–69, 271, & 273–5

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex 2564 61143-2. Dietschy, Bellamy, Lurens, Zaepfel, Elwes, Guy de Mey, Fabre-Garrus, Les Saqueboutiers de Toulouse

Schütz's 20 Sinfoniae Sacrae of 1629 (of which 16 are included here) are the result of the Dresden composer's second visit to Italy in 1628, when he was strongly influenced by Monteverdi and the Italian concertato style. These pieces fascinatingly combine voices and instruments in a single texture, usually with an interweaving interplay, and rarely with the instruments acting just as an obbligato. The performances are eminently stylish and freshly spontaneous, and the instrumentalists are expert – and, moreover, they play in tune. The balance is beautifully judged, with voices and instruments within the same perspective, and the recording is wholly realistic.

St John Passion; 8 Passion Motets

(N) *() Christophorus CHE 0142-2. Coll. Mus. Plagense

The excellent performance of Schütz's crisp and dramatic St John Passion is undermined by poor presentation, with the 33-minute work transferred on a single track with no clue over the development of the Passion story except in the German-only text. The Passion motets are more easily appreciated, with the Collegium Musicum Plagense giving first-rate performances, well recorded.

SCOTT, Cyril (1879–1970)

Aubade, Op. 77; (i) Violin Concerto; (ii) Festival Overture; 3 Symphonic Dances

* Chan. 10407. BBC PO, Brabbins; with (i) Charlier; (ii) Sheffield Philharmonic Ch.

These are all most persuasive performances, given Chandos's top-quality recording which makes the Three Symphonic Dances glow with colour and all but lose their capacity to seem over-long. The Festival Overture is more of an atmospheric evocation than an occasional piece, lustrously orchestrated, with the finale suddenly reinforced by organ and chorus. The Violin Concerto is a one-movement, rhapsodical work, elusive structurally, but lyrically appealing. It has a distinctly improvisatory character, which Olivier Charlier and Brabbins catch with admirable spontaneity. But easily the best work here is the Aubade, richly sensuous in its scoring and voluptuous in its manipulation of texture. It is superbly played.

(i) Cello Concerto. Symphony 1

* Chan. 10452. BBC PO, Brabbins; (i) with Watkins

This is in some ways the most revealing of the issues in Brabbins's Cyril Scott series for Chandos, with works from opposite ends of his long career, Symphony 1 of 1899 and the Cello Concerto of 1937. The Symphony is more traditional than Scott's later symphonies, with its clean-cut thematic material, and the result is very attractive. The Cello Concerto, beautifully played, with Paul Watkins as soloist, is in a conventional three movements, with the fast outer movements separated by a reflective Pastoral for unaccompanied cello, before the jolly, sparkling finale. Watkins rises to its challenges and Martyn Brabbins and the BBC Philharmonic give admirable support. As usual from this Manchester team, there is excellent recorded sound.

Piano Concertos 1 in C; 2; Early One Morning (poem for piano & orchestra)

🔑 * Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 251. Ogdon, LPO, Herrmann

Cyril Scott's lush First Piano Concerto dates from 1913 and its extravagant style belongs to the pre-war era. Those for whom Scott's name conjures memories of a piece called Lotus Land might feel that its atmosphere is well expressed by that title. Ogdon and Herrmann make a coherent whole out of Scott's essentially rhapsodical piece. The Second Concerto dates from Scott's later years, and although it has undoubted atmosphere, its shifting moods and rhapsodic chromaticism may not suit all tastes. The spirit of Delius is certainly evoked in this work, and it is even more apparent in the poem, Early One Morning. But for all one's reservations, Scott's music has a haunting quality that makes one want to return to it. The composer is splendidly served by his performers here, who create a feeling of spontaneity even when the music itself eddies gently with comparatively little forward movement The recording from the mid-1970s is quite excellent in its CD format.

(i) Piano Concerto 1; 'Early One Morning' (for Piano & Orchestra); Symphony 4

 Chan. 10376. BBC PO, Brabbins; (i) with Shelley

Scott's First Piano Concerto is not a work offering a traditional dialogue between piano and orchestra, the music changing from mood to mood; yet there is a chromatic lusciousness about the texture that is appealing, especially in the slow movement. The Fourth Symphony is similarly exotic, flowing forward with a tidal surge and a chromatic impressionistic atmosphere to make up for the structural ambiguity. After all this fluidity, the concertante Variations on 'Early One Morning' are joyfully explicit, though still never predictable. Excellent performances throughout.

(i) Piano Concerto 2; Neptune (Poem of the Sea); (ii) Symphony 3 (The Muses)

 Chan. 10211. BBC PO, Brabbins; with (i) Shelley; (ii) Huddersfield Ch. Soc.

The Piano Concerto performance by Howard Shelley is every bit as convincing as Ogdon's and is certainly compelling.

Symphony 3, subtitled The Muses, has four clearly defined movements, devoted to 'Epic Poetry and Tragedy', 'Comedy and Merry Verse', 'Love and Poetry' and, finally, the 'Muse of Dance and Song'. Although it opens gently on four muted violins, it soon expands into a vast and complex score, with distinct reminders not only of Debussy's La Mer but also of Ravel's Daphnis et Chloé.

Undoubtedly the most successful work here is Neptune (Poem of the Sea). Here the constantly changing moods and tempi certainly evoke the restless ocean. It still depicts a central storm sequence and the work ends with an elegiac lament, creating a mood of twilight brooding.

The performances are very fine, Chandos has provided its most spectacular sound and, for all its diffuseness of ideas, Scott's music undoubtedly has a haunting quality which makes one want to return to it.

Piano Music Vol. 1: 2 Alpine Sketches, Op. 54/4; Autumn Idyll; Cherry Ripe; 3 Dances, Op. 20; Deuxième Suite, Op. 75; Handelian Rhapsody, Op. 17; Indian Suite; Miniatures; 3 Little Waltzes, Op. 58; Notturno, Op. 54/5; 3 Old Country Dances; A Pageant: 3 Dances; 3 Pastorals; Pastoral Suite; Requiescat; Sphinx, Op. 63; Soirée Japonnaise, Op. 67/4; Twilight-tide; Valse caprice, Op. 74/7; Vesperale, Op. 40/2; Vistas (includes bonus tracks of Cyril Scott playing his own music)

Ⓑ  Dutton CDLX 7150 (2). De'Ath

Piano Music, Vol. 2: Piano Sonatas: in D, Op. 17; 1 (Original Version), Op. 66; 2–3

Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7155. De'Ath

Piano Music, Vol. 3: (i) Piano Duet: Andante in F; 3 Danses; Diversion in F; Gigue in G; 2 Impressions from 'The Jungle Book'; Russian Fair; Sarabande in A; 3 Symphonic Dances (arr. Grainger); Theme and Variations; Gigue & Fugue in G & 3 Preludes & Fugues of J. S. Bach; Concert Pieces & Ballet Scores for Solo Piano

Ⓑ  Dutton CDLX 7166 (2). De'Ath; (i) with Alexeyev

Piano Music, Vol. 4: Piano works published up to 1910, including: Summerland; 3 Frivolous Pieces, Op. 2; 2 Sketches, Op. 57; Suite in the Old Style, Op. 71/1; 3 Danses tristes. Piano works published after 1910, including: Impressions from 'The Jungle Book'; Over the Prairie; A Little Russian Suite; Old China Suite

Ⓑ  Dutton CDLX 7183 (2). De'Ath

Cyril Scott's piano music is distinct from all others – varied and difficult to pin down exactly, yet not to be dismissed as derivative. Of particular interest and individuality is the Deuxième Suite of 1910. In addition to De'Ath's own sympathetic performances, there is an additional attraction in that Scott's own recordings (he was a formidable pianist) from 1928–30 are included as an appendix on the first disc.

The four Sonatas on the second CD were written over half a century. The sonata which Scott called 1, written in 1908, is a confident, interwoven four-movement work, with a characteristic slow movement, full of Scott's flowing, voluptuous English romanticism, yet also Straussian. The Second Sonata of 1933 is a single-movement work, textually and harmonically rich, somewhat after the exotic manner of Scriabin, but with a touch of impressionism. The Third Sonata, published in 1956, is marginally sparer in atmosphere; it has three distinct movements but remains harmonically oblique, yet its invention, like the earlier works, is both individual and quite haunting.

We are inclined to think that these miniatures for piano often brought out the best in their composer by their very compact format, consistently stimulating new ideas. The last volume includes a good deal of attractive music for piano duet which ought to be better known, including the Theme and Variations and Bach pastiches, while Percy Grainger made an effective transcription of the Three Symphonic Dances. Incidentally, Russian Fair quotes the same Russian folksong Tchaikovsky used in the finale of his String Serenade. With continually persuasive performances from Leslie De'Ath, joined by Anya Alexeyev in the piano duets, these discs offer much to divert the listener, for they are very well recorded.

Piano Music, Vol. 5: An English Waltz; Arabesque; Barcarolle; Ballade; Britain's War March; British Melodies; Caprice chinois; Carillon; Cavatina; (i) Concerto in C; Danse nègre. Diatonic Study; 2 Etudes; First Bagatelle; Impromptu; (i) Lotus Land. Mazurka; Miss Remington; Moods (1922); My Heart Is Ever Faithful; Pastoral Ode; 2 Piano Pieces; 2 Pierrot Pieces; Pierrette; Poems (1912); Prelude solennel; Rainbow Trout; Russian Dance; Sea-Marge: Meditation. Ode héroïque; Solitude; Tarantula; Valse sentimentale; Water-wagtail

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7224 (2). De'Ath, (i) with Alexeyev

This fifth volume contains Scott's most famous piano piece, Lotus Land, heard here as a solo piano and also for two pianos. Its popularity is easy to understand – it is a beautifully haunting piece of music, and receives first-rate performances here. The rest of the pieces in this fifth volume show that the composer's inspiration in his piano music was consistently high. There are many delights on this volume. The Valse sentimentale has a lovely nostalgic quality, a trait which runs through much of this music, especially in such numbers as An English Waltz. The local colour in the Russian Dance, Caprice chinois and Danse nègre, the last heard in solo form and for two pianos, is enchanting, and the longer works, such as the late Pastoral Ode, hold the listener's attention through a concentration of atmosphere and musical argument. Leslie De'Ath, as in the other volumes in this series, has the full measure of this music and the Dutton sound is superb: richly full yet atmospheric too. Two CDs are available for the price of one.

SCRIABIN, Alexander
(1872–1915)

(i) Piano Concerto in F sharp min., Op. 20; (ii) Prometheus (The Poem of Fire), Op. 60; Rêverie; (iii) Le Poème de l'extase, Op. 54; Symphonies 1 in E, Op. 26; 2 in C min., Op. 29; 3 (The Divine Poem). Op. 43

Ⓜ  BIS CD 1669-70 (3). (i) Pöntinen; (ii) Derwinger; (iii) Blom, Magnusson; (ii–iii) Stockholm Ph. Ch.; all with Royal Stockholm PO, Segerstam

(i) Piano Concerto in F sharp min., Op. 20; Poème de l'extase, Op. 54; (i; ii) Prometheus (Le Poème du feu), Op. 60; Rêverie, Op. 24; Symphonies Nos. (ii; iii) 1, Op. 26; 2; 3 (Le Divin Poème)

Ⓜ (*) Decca Trio 473 971-2 (3). Deutsches SO, Berlin, Ashkenazy; with (i) Jablonski; (ii) Berlin R. Ch.; (iii) Balleys, Larin

(i) Piano Concerto; (i; ii) Prometheus; (i) Preludes, Op. 11/6, 10, 15, & 17; Fragilité, Op. 51/1; Sonata 1, Op. 6: Marche funèbre (orch. Rogal-Levitsky)

🔑 Ⓑ  Naxos 8.550818. (i) Scherbakov; (ii) Russian State TV and R. Ch.; Moscow SO, Golovschin

Segerstam is very much at home in this repertoire and he gets very good results from this fine orchestra. Both Love Derwinger in Prometheus and Pöntinen in the F sharp minor Concerto are equally intuitive interpreters of the art nouveau Russian master. BIS offer this as three CDs for the price of two. The recordings come from 1989–91 and enjoy the excellent acoustic of the Stockholm Konserthus.

Ashkenazy's set of the Scriabin Symphonies is available on a Double Decca, together with his highly charged Berlin Radio version of the Poème de l'extase (460 299-2). They are beautifully recorded; the performances shimmer with sensuality, but are lacking in the last degree of dramatic intensity. The same comments apply here to the Piano Concerto, in which Jablonski is a sympathetic if rather self-effacing soloist (he is not very forwardly balanced). Nevertheless he and Ashkenazy find plenty of romantic poetry in the music, especially in the slow movement, and with such good sound this is certainly enjoyable.

On Naxos Konstantin Scherbakov gives a most poetic account of the Chopinesque F sharp minor Concerto. The improvisatory musings of the slow movement come over beautifully, and Prometheus is no less characterful. Of course, the Moscow Symphony are not in the same league as the Cleveland Orchestra, but they play with ardour and the sound is very natural without being in the demonstration category.

Le Poème de l'extase, Op. 54

🔑  BBC (ADD) BBCL 4121-2. USSR State SO, Svetlanov – RIMSKY-KORSAKOV: Scheherazade; Procession of the Nobles ***

🔑  BBC (ADD) BBCL 4018-2. New Philh. O, Stokowski (and conversation with Deryck Cooke) – BERLIOZ: Symphonie fantastique **(*)

 Naïve V 4946. O Nat. de France, Svetlanov – DEBUSSY: La Mer ***

 Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 466 904-2. LAPO, Mehta – NIELSEN: Symphony 4 **

Svetlanov's powerful and enormously authoritative account was recorded with his own orchestra at a BBC Prom in the expansive acoustics of the Royal Albert Hall in August 1968. His reading is one of the most compelling accounts of Scriabin's extraordinary score that one is likely to encounter and is second to none (not even Stokowski). The performance has much subtle light and shade but is underpinned by a Slavonic, extrovert passion that is very compelling indeed, leading to a tremendously exciting climax, with strings and horns at their absolute zenith, before the lush close. Like the coupling, the recording is more brilliant and has greater range than one expects from this source.

Stokowski conducted the American première of Le Poème de l'extase in 1917, a performance of great luminosity and energy. This account comes from a 1968 Festival Hall concert with the New Philharmonia Orchestra. Orgiastic, no holds barred, totally abandoned and wonderfully dedicated playing. However, the BBC sound is less than ideally transparent in its handling of detail.

An impressive memento on Naïve of Svetlanov's last visit to Paris. He seems to have established an excellent rapport with this great French orchestra, and he casts a powerful spell. A fine account, which comes with a no less atmospheric La Mer. Very good recorded sound.

This is Mehta on top form in his vintage Decca years. Recorded in the mid-1960s, it is still sonically very impressive, with the engineers doing ample justice to the complexity and opulence of this lavishly self-intoxicated and orgasmic score. It remains one of the most gripping performances available today, but is coupled with an extrovert and less recommendable account of Nielsen's Fourth Symphony.

Prometheus (The Poem of Fire), Op. 60

🔑  Ph. 446 715-2. Toradze, Kirov Op. Ch. & O, Gergiev – STRAVINSKY: Firebird (complete ballet) ***

On Philips an echt-Russian account of Prometheus, with a suitably inflammable pianist in the person of Alexander Toradze. This is the only current recording by a Russian orchestra, and under Gergiev's masterly direction they give an outstanding account of this voluptuous and gloriously decadent score. The recording, too, is in the demonstration class even if the pianist is perhaps slightly too forwardly placed in the aural picture. It comes with an appropriately incandescent Firebird, marvellously played and recorded.

Symphonies 1–3; Le Poème de l'extase

Ⓜ (*) Decca 460 299-2 (2). Deutsches SO, Berlin, or Berlin RSO, Ashkenazy

This Decca Ashkenazy set is an alternative to that listed above for those not requiring the Piano Concerto and the symphonic poems.

Symphonies 1–3; Le Poème de l'extase; (i) Prometheus

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI ADD 5 67720-2 (3). Toczyska, Myers, Westminster Ch. (in 1), Phd. O, Muti; (i) with Alexeev

(i) Symphonies 2; (ii) 3 (Le Divin Poème); (iii) Le Poème de l'extase; (i) Rêverie, Op. 24

🔑 Ⓑ  Chan. 2-for-1 241-5 (2). (i) RSNO; (ii) Danish Nat. RSO; (iii) Chicago SO; Järvi

Muti's complete set of the Scriabin Symphonies can be recommended almost without reservation; overall the sound is as vivid and richly coloured as the performances. With the two later symphonies-cum-symphonic poems (Le Poème de l'extase white-hot with passionate intensity, yet masterfully controlled) now added, this is an impressive achievement.

The splendid account of the Second Symphony from Järvi, with its richly detailed recording, can also be recommended strongly. There is something refreshingly unforced and natural about Järvi's version of the Third, which puts this score in a far better light than those conductors who play it for all they are worth. Järvi's version of Le Poème de l'extase, played superbly and recorded vividly and resonantly in Chicago's Orchestral Hall, emphasizes Scriabin's primary colours, with the trumpet solo penetrating boldly through the voluptuous texture and skirting vulgarity by a small margin. There have been more subtle performances, but this one certainly makes a strong impact.

Symphony 1 in E, Op. 26

 Chan. 10311. Kostyuk, Dolgov, Russian State SO, Polyansky – RACHMANINOV: Six Choruses ***

Scriabin's 50-minute First Symphony in six movements was his first major work not written for the piano. It is a diffuse work with some inspired episodes. It needs a conductor with a very firm grip on its generally rhapsodic discourse. Polyansky proves a sympathetic guide, though Muti exercises an even stronger hold over its architecture. All the same, this account is very persuasive, the soloists in the last movement eminently acceptable and the sound warm and well defined.

PIANO MUSIC

Complete Recording

Allegro appassionato & miscellaneous works; Piano Sonatas 1–10; Etudes; Impromptus; Mazurkas; Poèmes; Preludes; Waltzes; Poèmes

Ⓜ  Capriccio AH 193 (8). Lettberg (plus DVD Documentary)

The present set encompasses Scriabin's complete piano output, recorded in collaboration with Deutschlandradio Kultur between 2004 and 2007. Lettberg can withstand comparison with the most exalted company. She is completely attuned to the hyper-refined sensibility and ecstatic rapture of Scriabin's world and, whether it be in the Chopinesque foothills of the Preludes or the mesmeric power of the late Sonatas, she characterizes this repertoire to something like perfection. In addition to the eight CDs there is a DVD entitled 'Alexander Scriabin: Mysterium' which includes paintings and animations by Andrea Schmidt and interviews which examine the composer's musical beliefs and his mysticism. Strongly recommended.

Allegro Appassionato, Op. 4; Canon in D min.; Etude in D sharp min.; Fugue in E min.; Mazurkas in: B min. & F; Nocturnes in F sharp min., Op. 5/1; A, Op. 5/2; D flat, Op. 9/2; A flat; Prelude in C sharp min., Op. 9/1; Sonata in E flat min.; Sonate-fantaisie; Variations on a Theme by Mlle Egorova; Waltz in F min., Op. 1; Waltzes in G sharp min. & D flat

 Hyp. CDA 67149. Coombs

Stephen Coombs concentrates on Scriabin's early period, when he had yet to escape from Chopin's magnetic field, which has received less attention than the late sonatas. The earliest piece here, a Canon in D minor, was written when he was only 11 years old, but many of these Chopinesque pieces are of real quality and do not deserve to be so completely overshadowed. Coombs has a genuine feel for this repertoire and is very well served by the recording team.

Études, Opp. 2 & 8/12; Nuances, Op. 56; 4 Mazurkas, Op. 3/1, 3, 4 & 6; Poème, Op. 59; Piano Sonatas 2 (Sonate-Fantaisie), Op. 19; 5, Op. 53; 9 (Black Mass), Op. 68; Valse, Op. 38

* BIS SACD 1568. Sudbin

Yevgeny Sudbin's recording début with Scarlatti sonatas enjoyed a spectacular success and announced the arrival of a major pianistic talent. Successive records have only confirmed this, and the present Scriabin recital is arguably his most exciting record to date. He seems totally bound up in this seductive music and plays it with demonic fire. BIS's recording, made at the Västerås Concert Hall, is (as usual with this company) in the demonstration category.

Etudes, Op. 8/7 & 12; Op. 42/5; Preludes, Op. 11/1, 3, 9–10, 13–14, 16; Op. 13/6; Op. 15/2; Op. 16/1 & 4; Op. 27/1; Op. 48/3; Op. 51/2; Op. 59/2; Op. 67/1; Sonatas 3, Op. 23; 5, Op. 53; 9 (Black Mass), Op. 68

Ⓑ () RCA 2-CD mono 74321 84594-2 (2). Horowitz – CLEMENTI: Sonatas, Op. 14/3; Op. 34/2; Op. 47/2: Rondo (); MUSSORGSKY: Pictures at an Exhibition ()

The engineers have done wonders to these recordings from the 1950s, though some of the original shallowness and clatter remains. The Preludes and the legendary accounts of the Third and Ninth Sonatas come from 1956, the Fifth is much later, coming from 1976, and has more bloom. The performances form an essential part of any good Horowitz collection, and the Mussorgsky and Clementi couplings are equally indispensable.

10 Mazurkas, Op. 3; 9 Mazurkas, Op. 25; 2 Mazurkas, Op. 40

 ASV CDDCA 1066. Fergus-Thompson

An impressive instalment of Scriabin's piano music from Gordon Fergus-Thompson, a masterly and underrated artist. Even when put alongside native Russian pianists he can hold his own.

Preludes: Op. 2/2; Prelude for the Left Hand, Op. 9/1; 24 Preludes, Op. 11; 6 Preludes, Op. 13; 5 Preludes, Op. 15; 5 Preludes, Op. 16; 7 Preludes, Op. 17; 4 Preludes, Op. 22; 2 Preludes, Op. 27; 4 Preludes, Op. 31; 4 Preludes, Op. 33; 3 Preludes, Op. 35; 4 Preludes, Op. 37; 4 Preludes, Op. 39; Op. 45/3; 4 Preludes, Op. 48; Preludes, Op. 49/2; Op. 51/2; Op. 56/1; Op. 59/2; 2 Preludes, Op. 67; 5 Preludes, Op. 74

 Hyp. CDA 67057/8. Lane

Piers Lane has the measure of Scriabin's idiom and seems completely attuned to his musical language and sensibility. These preludes range from his formative Chopinesque years, around 1889, through to 1914, and Lane traverses them with flair.

5 Preludes, Op. 15; Sonata 3, Op. 23

🔑  RCA 82876 65390-2. Evgeny Kissin – MEDTNER: Sonata-Reminiscenza (*); STRAVINSKY: Movements from 'Petrushka' ***

Kissin is in his element in Scriabin. He is attuned to the pianistic flair and keen narcissism of the composer and surmounts the formidable difficulties of the big-boned Third Sonata with great aplomb.

Piano Sonatas 1–10; Sonate-fantaisie in G sharp min.

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 67131/2. Hamelin

Piano Sonatas 1–10; Etude in C sharp min., Op. 2/1; Feuillet d'album, Op. 58; 2 Morceaux, Op. 57; 2 Poèmes, Op. 63; 4 Preludes, Op. 48; 5 Preludes, Op. 64; 2 Preludes, Op. 67; Vers la flamme, Op. 72

(BB)  EMI (ADD) Gemini 3 65332-2 (2). Ogdon

Piano Sonatas 1–10; 2 Danses, Op. 73; 4 Morceaux, Op. 51; 4 Morceaux, Op. 56; 2 Poèmes, Op. 32

Ⓑ  Double Decca ADD/DDD 452 961-2 (2). Ashkenazy

Marc-André Hamelin commands the feverish intensity, the manic vision, wide dynamic range and fastidious pedalling that Scriabin must have. There are other fine Scriabin cycles and, of course, celebrated accounts of single sonatas from Richter and others, but of newer cycles Hamelin's must now be a first recommendation.

Ogdon is nothing if not persuasive, and the only reservation one need feel about his playing is an occasional tendency to be less than scrupulous in observing dynamic indications and a certain lack of finish. His account of the Tenth Sonata, however, is particularly fine. The shorter pieces are particularly appealing (the richly coloured Etude in C sharp minor which opens the first disc should tempt anyone to explore further). The piano is very well recorded throughout (at Abbey Road in 1971).

Ashkenazy's Scriabin set was made over a decade between 1972 and 1984, but the sound is remarkably consistent. Ashkenazy is clearly attuned to this repertoire: he is as thoroughly at home in the Miniatures as in the Sonatas, readily finding their special atmosphere and colour.

Piano Sonatas 2 in G sharp min., Op. 19; 5 in F sharp, Op. 53; 6 in G, Op. 63; 7 in F sharp (White

Mass), Op. 64; 9 in F (Black Mass), Op. 68; Fantaisie in B min., Op. 28

(BB)  Naxos 8.553158. Glemser

Piano Sonatas 3 in F sharp min., Op. 23; 10 in C, Op. 70; in E flat (1890); Poème nocturne, Op. 61; Vers la flamme, Op. 72

(BB)  Naxos 8.555468. Glemser

These performances are very good indeed. Bernd Glemser has an excellent feel for the Scriabin world. He commands a keen imagination, a wide range of keyboard colour and he possesses an impressive technical address.

Piano Sonata 3 in F sharp min., Op. 23; 2 Poèmes, Op. 32; Vers la flamme, Op. 72

(*) Kingdom KCLCD 2001. Fergus-Thompson – BALAKIREV: Piano Sonata **(*)

Gordon Fergus-Thompson gives a splendid account of Scriabin's overheated F sharp minor Sonata and sensitive, atmospheric performances of the other pieces here. A reverberant but good recording.

SCULTHORPE, Peter (born 1929)

Piano Concerto

(*) Australian ABC Eloquence 426 483-2. Fogg, Melbourne SO, Fredman – EDWARDS: Piano Concerto; WILLIAMSON: Concerto for 2 Pianos **(*)

In many ways, Sculthorpe's Piano Concerto is the most difficult of the three works to get to grips with on this Australian Eloquence CD. Written during a very sad time in the composer's life, its mood reflects that. It is not a virtuosic showpiece for the pianist, but stands as an interesting modern concerto that repays listening. The performance here is excellent and the recording acceptable.

SEARLE, Humphrey (1915–82)

Symphonies 1–5; Night Music; Overture to a Drama

 CPO 777 131-2 (2). BBC Scottish SO, Francis

Searle's First Symphony was championed by Sir Adrian Boult and the LPO, the Second by Josef Krips; but his later symphonies have not enjoyed the exposure they deserve either in the concert hall or on CD. This two-CD set makes handsome amends: Searle's music is concentrated and powerful and it rewards study and attention. It is an unlikely candidate for popularity but, like Fricker's, is a strong contender for revaluation.

Symphony 2, Op. 33

(N)  Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 285. LPO, Krips – STILL: Symphonies 3 & 4 ***

Josef Krips, in one of his last recording sessions, conducted a superbly expressive performance of Searle's Second Symphony. Like its predecessor it follows the composer's characteristic brand of twelve-note serialism, but even more than the earlier work it shows Searle following the central English tradition. If Walton had ever written a serial symphony, it might sound very much like this. The performance and sound (from 1975) are both excellent, and the couplings of Still's symphonies are superb.

SEIBER, Mátyás (1905–60)

Clarinet Concertino

🔑 (BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55068. King, ECO, Litton – BLAKE: Clarinet Concerto ; LUTOSŁAWSKI: Dance Preludes ***

Mátyás Seiber's highly engaging Concertino was sketched during a train journey in 1926 (before the days of seamless rails) and certainly the opening Toccata has the jumpy, rhythmic feeling of railway line joints and points. Yet the haunting slow movement has a touch of the ethereal, while the Scherzo has a witty jazz element. Thea King has the measure of the piece; she is accompanied well by Andrew Litton, and very well recorded.

SERLY, Tibor (1901–78)

Rhapsody for Viola & Orchestra

(BB)  Naxos 8.554183. Xiao, Budapest PO, Kovacs – BARTÓK: Viola Concerto (2 versions; ed. Bartók & ed. Serly); Two Pictures ***

Tibor Serly, friend of Bartók and first editor of the unfinished Viola Concerto, here offers a closely related work, less individual than Bartók's own, but well worth hearing. Beautifully played by the Chinese viola-player, Hong-Mei Xiao, it provides a good makeweight for the disc containing both editions of the Bartók Concerto.

SÉVERAC, Déodat de (1872–1921)

Piano, 4 hands: L'Album pour les enfants petits et grands: Le Soldat de plomb (Histoire vraie en trois récits). Solo piano: Baigneuses au soleil (Souvenir de Banyul-sur-mer); Cerdaña (5 Etudes pittoresques); Le Chant de la terre (poème géorgique); En Languedoc (suite); En vacances (petites pièces romantiques); Les Naïades et le faune indiscret; Pipperment-get (Valse brillante de concert); Premier Recueil (Au château et dans le parc); Deuxième Recueil (inachevé); Sous les lauriers roses ou Soir de Carnaval sur la Côte Catalane; Stances à Madame de Pompadour; Valse romantique

(B) (*) EMI (ADD) 5 72372-2 (3). Ciccolini

Déodat de Séverac came from the Pays d'Oc and always retained his roots in the region. He first studied law at Toulouse before deciding on music and becoming a pupil of Magnard and then d'Indy. He was a friend of Ravel, to whom his musical language is much indebted. All the music on these CDs is civilized and has great charm. The recordings were made between 1968 and 1977 and are serviceable rather than distinguished. But the set will give much pleasure.

Cerdaña (5 Etudes pittoresques pour le piano); En Languedoc

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.555855. Masó

Aldo Ciccolini's set of Déodat de Séverac's music has much to commend it, but three CDs may be too many for some collectors. Jordi Masó's lucid and sensitive accounts will make an excellent introduction to this delightful composer. His playing is finely characterized and there is a subtle use of keyboard colour. Good sound, too.

SHCHEDRIN, Rodion

(born 1932)

🔑  DG 471 136-2. Russian Nat. O, Pletnev

(i) Carmen (ballet; arr. from Bizet): Suite; Humoresque; In Imitation of Albéniz; Stalin Cocktail

 Chan. 9288. I Musici de Montréal, Turovski; (i) with Ens. Répercussion – TURINA: La oración del torero ***

The Chandos version by I Musici de Montréal is very much in the demonstration bracket, with glittering percussion effects (marimba and vibraphone particularly well caught) and dramatic use of sidedrum snares. The pastiche, In Imitation of Albéniz, and the grotesque, Shostakovich-like Humoresque are offset by a malignant parody-evocation of Stalin, full of creepy special effects and with a shout of horror at the end. They are very well presented here, but one would not want to return to them very often.

Stihira

Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 0927 49014-2. Nat. SO, Rostropovich – GLAZUNOV: Violin Concerto in A min., Op. 82; PROKOFIEV: Violin Concerto 1 in D, Op. 19 ***

Shchedrin here celebrates the millennium of the introduction of Christianity into Russia with a measured passacaglia-like piece based on Russian Orthodox chant, which builds up to a central climax of Mussorgskian splendour. The recording, made in the Kennedy Center, Washington, is more airy and spacious than many from this venue.

Piano Concerto 2

 Hyp. SACD: SACDA 67425; CD: CDA 67425. Hamelin, BBC Scottish SO, Litton – SHOSTAKOVICH: Piano Concertos 1–2 ****

In the Second Concerto in 1966, Shchedrin experimented with 12-note technique and jazz. Shchedrin himself recorded it with Svetlanov in the late 1970s, but this newcomer supersedes it in sheer virtuosity and panache, not to mention the clarity and presence of the Hyperion recording.

Balalaika; Echo Sonata for Solo Violin

🔑  EMI 5 57384-2. Vengerov – BACH: Toccata & Fugue in D min.; YSAŸE: Solo Violin Sonatas 2, 3, 4 & 6 ***

Shchedrin's party-piece encore, Balalaika, has Vengerov the perfect showman in this live recording of a solo recital, playing pizzicato throughout with the violin held like a balalaika, to the great amusement of the audience. The Echo Sonata is far more formidable, again with Vengerov an intense communicator, always spontaneous.

SHEPPARD, John (c. 1515–c. 1559)

Aeterne rex altissime; Audivi vocem de coelo; Beata nobis gaudia; Dum transisset Sabbatum (1st & 2nd settings); In manus tuas (2nd & 3rd settings); Gaude, gaude, gaude Maria; Hostis Herodes impie; Impetum fecerunt unanimes; In manus tuas (3rd setting); Libera nos, salva nos (2nd setting); Sacris solemniis; Sancte Dei pretiose; Spiritus sanctus procedens (2nd setting). Second Service: Magnificat; Nunc dimittis; Te Deum laudamus. Western Wynde Mass

Ⓑ * Hyp. Dyad CDD 22022 (2). The Sixteen, Christophers

Ave maris stella; Cantate Mass. Motets: Deus tuorum militum (1st setting); Filiae Hierusalem venite; Haec dies; In manus tuas Domine (1st setting); In pacem in idipsum; Jesu salvator saeculi, redemptis; Jesu salvator saeculi verbum; Justi in perpetuum vivent; Laudem dicite Deo; Libera nos, salva nos (1st setting); Paschal Kyrie; Regis Tharsis et insulae; Salvator mundi, Domine; Spiritus sanctus procedens (1st setting); Verbum caro factus est

🔑 ✿ Ⓑ * Hyp. Dyad CDD 22021 (2). The Sixteen, Christophers

The first collection listed (CD 22022) is especially attractive as it includes Sheppard's Western Wynde Mass. However, this is a less elaborate setting of this famous theme than some others, notably that of John Taverner, for until the closing Agnus Dei Sheppard consistently places the melodic line on top, whereas Taverner moves the tune about within the lower parts. Nevertheless, Sheppard's setting has an appealingly simple beauty, while the extended Te Deum laudamus is even richer in its harmonic progressions.

However, we have given our Rosette to the companion set (CDD 22021), for it includes Sheppard's glorious six-voiced Cantate Mass, much more complex than Western Wynde and, with its glowingly textured polyphony, surely among his most inspired works. The Sixteen consistently convey the rapturous beauty of Sheppard's writing, above all in the ethereal passages in the highest register, very characteristic of him. There are not many more beautiful examples of Tudor polyphony than this.

Christe redemptor omnium; In manus tuas; Media vita; Reges Tharsis; Sacris solemniis; Verbum caro; Western Wind Mass

Ⓝ 🔑 Ⓑ * Gimell CDGIM 210 (2). Tallis Scholars, Phillips – TALLIS; WHITE: Motets

All the music here is based on chant, and much of it is for the six-part choir, which produces a particularly striking sonority. The Media vita ('In the midst of life we are in death') is a piece of astonishing beauty, and it is sung with remarkable purity of tone by the Tallis Scholars under Peter Phillips. Glorious and little-known music: the recording could hardly be improved on. The Western Wind Mass has been added for this reissue.

SHIELD, William (1748–1829)

Rosina

🔑  ABC Classics (ADD) 461 922-2. Elkins, Harwood, Sinclair, Tear, Macdonald, Ambrosian Singers, LSO, Bonynge – ELGAR: Sea Pictures **(*)

Shield's rustic comedy Rosina is a delight from beginning to end. First heard at Covent Garden in 1782, it is crammed full of delights. Even the Overture, with its witty interjections from the woodwind, threatens to upstage the main work. The performance is lively and fun, with Bonynge allowing the singers to embellish their vocal lines while the orchestra provides a stylish and vivid accompaniment. Margreta Elkins is superb as Rosina, and she is matched by the rest of the team; whether they be joyful rustic arias, or sentimental ballads, each is characterized beautifully. The full English text is provided in the lavishly illustrated booklet, and with vintage Decca sound (1966) this CD is a winner. The unexpected couplings are well worth having too.

SHOSTAKOVICH, Dmitri (1906–75)

Testimony (Film, directed by Tony Palmer)

Ⓝ  TP DVD 145. Kingsley, Shrapnel, Rigby, Shirley-Quirk, Golden Age Singers, Chilingirian Qt, Shelley, LPO, Barshai

Described by Films and Filming as 'the best British film of the year', Tony Palmer's study of Shostakovich is typically revelatory. Palmer follows the line presented by the unauthorized biography, Testimony, that the composer was hostile to the Soviet regime, whatever compromises he had to make. Ben Kingsley movingly presents the composer with great sympathy, highlighting Shostakovich's experiences in the 300-day siege of Leningrad, when human flesh was eaten so as to avoid starvation, though Shostakovich himself did not have to endure that. The snarling of Zhdanov, artistic chief, and the boasting of Stalin are equally well conveyed by John Shrapnel and Terence Rigby respectively. The musical side could hardly be finer, with Rudolf Barshai drawing dramatic playing from the LPO, backed up by the Chilingirian Quartet in String Quartet 8. Six of the symphonies are quoted, notably the Leningrad Symphony with its portrayal of the Nazi invasion in the nagging ostinato of the first movement. Also very effective are the vocal contributions of John Shirley-Quirk and the Golden Age Singers in the quotations from Symphony 13 with its setting of Yevtushenko. A great film, one of the finest that even Tony Palmer has made.

(i; ii) Alone: Suite, Op 26; (i; iii) The Bolt: Suite, Op. 27a (1934 version); (iv) The Bolt: Suite, Op. 27a (1931 version); (v) Chamber Symphony (String Qt 4), Op. 83a; Chamber Symphony (String Quartet 8), Op. 110a; (vi) Cello Concertos 1–2; Piano Concertos: (i; ii; vii) 1 in C min. for Trumpet & Strings; (viii; ix) 2 in F, Op. 102; Violin Concertos: (x) 1 in E min., Op. 99; (xi) 2 in C sharp min., Op. 129; (i; ii) The Counterplan: Suite; (viii) Festive Overture, Op. 96; 5 Fragments, Op. 42; Funeral and Triumphal Prelude; (i; iii) The Gadfly (excerpts); (iv) The Golden Age: Suite, Op. 22; (i; ii) The Great Citizen: Funeral March; (iv) Hamlet: Suite, Op. 32a; (i; ii) Hamlet (excerpts), Op. 116; Jazz Suites 1 & 2; (i; iii) Moscow-Cheryomushki: Suite, Op. 105; (viii) October, Op. 131; (ii; xii) Overture on Russian and Kirghiz Folk Themes, Op. 115; (i; ii) Pirogov: Scherzo & Finale; Sofia Perovskaya: Waltz; (v) Symphony for Strings, Op. 118a; Symphony for Strings and Woodwinds, Op. 73a; (i; ii) Tahiti Trot (Tea for Two); The Tale of the Silly Little Mouse (arr. Cornall), Op. 56; (xiii) The Execution of Stepan Razin; (viii; xiv) The Song of the Forests

Ⓑ  Decca 475 7431 (9). (i) Chailly; (ii) Concg. O; (iii) Philh. O; (iv) Gothenberg SO, Järvi; (v) COE, Barshai; (vi) Schiff, Bav. RSO, Maxim Shostakovich; (vii) Brautigam, Masseurs; (viii) RPO, Ashkenazy; (ix) Ortiz; (x) Mullova, RPO, Previn; (xi) Kremer, Boston SO, Ozawa; (xii) Haitink; (xiii) Vogel, Leipzig Ch. & RSO, Kegel; (xiv) Kotliarov, Storojev, New London Children's Ch., Brighton Festival Ch.

This feast of Shostakovich includes Chailly's three famous CDs of ballet and film suites and the supremely delightful Jazz Suites – some of the most appealing music Shostakovich ever wrote. All sorts of intriguing repertoire is here, and Shostakovich's ready fund of melody and his exotic orchestral palette, spiced with touches of wit, make for a kaleidoscope of memorable vignettes. The Romance from The Gadfly is included (in its original orchestration). Hamlet (there are two versions of the music here) brings music of more pungency and dramatic power, while the composer's instantaneous and irresistible arrangement of Youmans's 'Tea for Two', the Tahiti Trot, almost upstages everything. One of the most substantial film scores, Alone, brings a wide range of picaresque and touching evocations. Other highlights include the opening number from Moscow-Cheryomushki, which has great energy and élan, and the luscious violins in the Tango from The Bolt are a joy. Chailly plays this repertoire superbly and receives magnificent orchestral playing from both the Concertgebouw and Philadelphia orchestras, with Decca sound to match.

In the concertos, the Cello Concertos with Schiff are superbly recorded and the First can hold its own with the finest. The Second is a haunting piece, essentially lyrical; it is gently discursive, sadly whimsical at times, and tinged with smiling melancholy that hides deeper troubles. The recording (Philips) is enormously impressive. There's a perfectly enjoyable account of the Piano and Trumpet Concerto from Brautigam and his excellent trumpet partner, Peter Masseurs, vividly accompanied by Chailly. The Second Piano Concerto with Ortiz is very successful: she gives a sparkling account of the jaunty first movement and brings out the fun and wit in the finale with fluent, finely pointed playing. The First Violin Concerto is disappointing, although it is all very expert, the performance is ultimately routine and wanting in atmosphere. Gidon Kremer's DG account of the Second Violin Concerto is played with his customary aplomb, but the recording is not really in the demonstration bracket.

The Chamber Symphony is an arrangement for full strings of the Eighth Quartet and the Symphony for Strings is a similar transcription of the Tenth. These are strong performances and are excellently recorded (DG). With two substantial choral rarities – Ashkenazy'sThe Song of the Forests* (a freshly tuneful and enjoyable work that would have pleased the Soviet authorities) and Kegel's dramatic 1972 recording of the red-blooded The Execution of Stepan Razin – this bargain set is well worth considering. Texts and translations included.

Film Music: Suites from: 5 Days and 5 Nights; Hamlet; (i) The Unforgettable Year 1919; The Young Guard

🔑  Chan. 10361. BBC PO, Sinaisky; (i) with Roscoe

Throughout his career, Shostakovich was a regular contributor to Soviet films, offering colourful and evocative music such as you find in this collection of four examples. Five Days and Five Nights commemorates the destruction of Dresden in the Second World War, while this Hamlet music must be distinguished from the suite which Shostakovich also wrote for a staged production of the play. This suite has eight brief movements, illustrating various scenes in the story, ending with the Duel and Death of Hamlet. The Unforgettable Year 1919 features the wildly romantic pseudo-piano concerto, The Assault on Krasbaya Gorka, which almost outdoes the Warsaw Concerto in its cinematic sweep. Brilliant and full Chandos sound reinforces the impact of Sinaisky's idiomatic performances.

'The Film Album': Alone, Op. 26 (extended excerpts); The Counterplan, Op. 33 (excerpts). The Gadfly: Romance; The Great Citizen, Op. 55: Funeral March. Hamlet, Op. 116 (excerpts); Pirogov, Op. 76a: Scherzo & Finale; Sofia Perovskaya, Op. 132: Waltz; The Tale of the Silly Little Mouse, Op. 56 (arr. Andrew Cornhall)

🔑 * Decca 460 792-2. Concg. O, Chailly

Shostakovich's ready fund of melody and exotic orchestral palette spiced with touches of wit make here for a kaleidoscope of memorable vignettes. First-rate Concertgebouw playing and the most vivid Decca recording ensure the success of this entertaining collection.

Ballet Suites 1–5; Festive Overture, Op. 96; Katerina Ismailova: Suite

🔑 * Chan. 7000/1. RSNO, Järvi

This highly entertaining set again represents Shostakovich in light-hearted, often ironic mood, throwing out bonnes-bouches like fireworks and with a sparkling vividness of orchestral colour. The Ballet Suites reuse material from earlier works: the Fifth Suite draws entirely on music from the 1931 ballet, The Bolt (see below). This is the most extended of the five suites, and typical of the young Shostakovich. The recording is spectacular and resonantly wide-ranging in the Chandos manner.

The Bolt (ballet; complete recording)

 Chan. 9343/4 (2). Stockholm PO, Stockholm Transport Band, Rozhdestvensky

The Bolt dates from 1931 and in its original form sank without trace, largely thanks to the feeble, cumbersome propagandist libretto. Yet the dances are so sharp and colourful in their inspiration that over the years suites of movements have been heard, and now, in this vivid, full-blooded recording, Rozhdestvensky resurrects the complete score of 43 movements, lasting two and a half hours. Rozhdestvensky plainly believes passionately in this score, and he draws an electrifying performance from the Swedish orchestra. Demonstration sound.

'The Dance Album': The Bolt: Ballet Suite, Op. 27a (1934 version); The Gadfly (extended excerpts from the film score), Op. 97 (original orchestration); Moscow-Cheryomushki (suite from the operetta), Op. 105

🔑 * Decca 452 597-2. Phd. O, Chailly

Chailly offers 13 items from The Gadfly and reveals it to be far finer music than hitherto suspected, partly by using the original scoring. For all his sophistication of detail and expressive expansiveness, Chailly does not miss out on the witty audacity. The opening number of Moscow-Cheryomushki, A Spin through Moscow (when the chauffeur borrows the boss's car), has great energy and élan, the Polka from The Bolt combines wit with narrowly avoided vulgarity, and the boisterous opening of the following Variations will disappoint nobody. But, apart from the tunefulness, what one remembers most here is the superb playing of the Philadelphia Orchestra: the sonorous brass and vivid woodwind, while the strings have not sounded like this in decades.

The Bolt: Suite; Jazz Suites 1 & 2; Tahiti Trot

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.555949. Russian State SO, Yablonsky

The Jazz Suites show a light-hearted Shostakovich at his witty best, with some delightful melodies, colourfully orchestrated, with the composer's ironic tang adding a piquant spice. Likewise, the dances from The Bolt, not quite so inconsequential, but just as enjoyable, have an edge, which makes Shostakovich in popular mode so enticing. Yablonsky directs enjoyable, straightforward accounts of these works.

(i) Chamber Symphonies: in D, Op. 83a; in C min., Op. 110a (arr. of String Quartets 4 & 8);

Symphonies: for Strings & Woodwind, Op. 73a; for Strings, Op.118a (arr. of String Quartets 3 & 8) (all orch. Barshai); (ii) Symphony 15 in A, Op. 141bis (arr. for violin, cello, piano, celesta & percussion by Viktor Derevianko)

🔑 Ⓜ  DG 2-CD 477 5442 (2). (i) COE, Barshai; (ii) Kremerata (with ALFRED SCHNITTKE: Prelude in memory of Shostakovich)

This DG Double usefully gathers together Rudolf Barshai's distinguished arrangements for orchestra of four of Shostakovich's String Quartets. The players of the Chamber Orchestra of Europe excel themselves in the tonal beauty, refinement and responsiveness of their playing. The added weight of sound gives greater impact to such movements as the Allegro molto of Op. 110a. These are strong performances of real eloquence and power, very well recorded. Viktor Derevianko's remarkably successful transcription of the 15th Symphony for a chamber quintet (essentially a piano trio plus percussion) makes a surprise bonus. The sound is again first class. Alfred Schnittke's Prelude (for two violins, with Gidon Kremer playing with his own pre-recorded tape, as the composer directed) makes a strikingly stark In memoriam, being placed between Op. 73a and the Symphony.

Chamber Symphony, Op. 83a (String Quartet 4; orch. Barshai); Symphony for Strings & Woodwinds (String Quartet 3; orch. Barshai)

 BIS CD 1180. Tapiola Sinf., Kantorow

🔑  Praga PRSD 250 232. Prague CO, Hradil – BARBER: Adagio **(*)

Shostakovich did authorize the transcription for full strings of the Eighth and Tenth Quartets and did apparently give Rudolf Barshai permission to arrange some of the other quartets for larger forces. Those willing to try these powerful works in this form will not be disappointed by the playing of the Tapiola Sinfonietta, who are superbly recorded by BIS.

However, the superbly played performances from Antonín Hradil and the Prague Chamber Orchestra are as fine as any, intense in feeling and bringing out the music's strong emotional contrasts. Their playing makes a link with Samuel Barber's music with their coupling of a performance of the famous Adagio, which has a comparable valedictory atmosphere.

Chamber Symphony 1, Op. 110a; Symphony for Strings, Op. 118a (both arr. Barshai); (i) From Jewish folk poetry

Ⓜ  Chan. 6617. I Musici de Montréal, Turovsky; (i) with Pelle, Hart, Nolan

A fine record. The performances have plenty of bite and intensity and top-quality Chandos sound. The 11 vignettes, which Shostakovich based on Jewish folk music, have the widest diversity of mood and are splendidly sung here, the dialogue songs especially idiomatic. They are surprisingly upbeat, with the final concerted number, Happiness, ending the cycle robustly. Turovsky's framing accompaniments, too, are colourful and vividly caught by the engineers.

Chamber Symphony 1, Op. 110a; Symphony for Strings, Op. 118a; (i) Suite on Finnish Themes

 BIS CD 1256. (i) Komsi, Nyman; Ostrobothian CO, Kangas

The Suite on Finnish Themes was written in 1939 in the immediate wake of the Sixth Symphony. It is slight (lasting less than 12 minutes) and yet often very characteristic, and it is scored for soprano, tenor, flute, oboe, clarinet, trumpet, triangle, tambourine, side-drum, piano and strings. For some reason it was never performed at the time (Shostakovich did not add the words himself) and the score has only recently come to light in a private collection in St Petersburg. Dedicated playing and exemplary recording.

Cello Concerto 1 in E flat, Op. 107 (DVD version)

🔑 ✿  EMI DVD DVA 4901209. Rostropovich, Monte Carlo Nat. Op. O, Kamu – PROKOFIEV: Sinfonia Concertante. Bonus: MUSSORGSKY: Songs and Dances of Death ***

When he came to befriend Shostakovich in the 1950s, Rostropovich obviously wanted to ask him for a cello concerto, but prudently withheld a request. Here is the result, and Rostropovich recorded it in London two years later. It is tersely scored for quite a small orchestra, double woodwind, celesta, but just one horn (here the splendid Barry Tuckwell) with whom the solo cello often duets. As with the Prokofiev coupling, one watches engrossed at the way Rostropovich shares the work with his orchestral colleagues; but the camera, rightly, often centres on the cellist and gives him great presence. The filming is in black and white, but the 1961 recording of the orchestra is better than the dry Monte Carlo sound, although acceptable rather than outstanding. Fortunately there are no complaints about the recording of the great cellist himself, who often seems to come right into the listener/watcher's room.

Cello Concerto 1 in E flat, Op. 107 (CD versions)

🔑  Chan. 8322. Wallfisch, ECO, Simon – BARBER: Cello Concerto ***

🔑 () BBC Legends mono BBCL 4143-2. Rostropovich, Leningrad PO, Rozhdestvensky – TCHAIKOVSKY: Symphony 4 ()

Wallfisch handles the first movement splendidly and he gives a sensitive account of the slow movement and has thoughtful and responsive support from the ECO. The Chandos recording is outstandingly fine.

William Mann is quoted by the notes as saying about Rostropovich's BBC recording that 'Rostropovich's tone has to be heard to be believed, so mighty is its strength, so richly varied its colour, and so beautiful its quality throughout its range, and the virtuosity and tonal homogeneity of the Leningrad Philharmonic is astonishing'. An exceptionally compelling musical document, matching the DVD version.

(i) Cello Concerto 1; Piano Concertos Nos. (ii) 1, Op. 35; (iii) 2, Op. 102

🔑 Ⓜ  Sony (DDD/ADD) SMK 89752. (i) Ma, Phd. O, Ormandy; (ii) Previn, Vacchiano, NYPO, Bernstein; (iii) Bernstein (piano & cond.), NYPO

Yo-Yo Ma plays with an intensity that compels the listener, the Philadelphia Orchestra give eloquent support, and the digital recording is excellent. This couples aptly with the shrewd, much earlier pairing of Bernstein's radiant account of the Second Piano Concerto with Previn's equally striking reading of 1. If these recordings are far from recent they are transferred most vividly.

(i) Cello Concerto 1; (ii) Piano Concerto 2; (iii) Violin Concerto 1; (iv) Jazz Suite 1; Tahiti Trot (Tea for Two); (v) Symphony 1; (vi) String Quartet 8

Ⓝ Ⓑ  EMI 2-CD 2 37686-2 (2). (i) Han-Na Chang, LSO, Pappano; (ii) Ogdon, RPO, Foster; (iii) Sarah Chang, BPO, Rattle; (iv) Phd. O, Jansons; (v) BPO, Jansons; (vi) St Lawrence Qt

An impressive cross-section of Shostakovich's concertante works, all in fine performances and excellent recordings, with the single proviso that Jansons's version of the First Symphony with the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, although wonderfully played, is a little studied, a little wanting in spontaneity.

(i) Cello Concerto 1; (ii) Violin Concerto 1 in A min., Op. 99

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ () Sony stereo/mono MHK 63327. (i) Rostropovich, Phd. O, Ormandy; (ii) D. Oistrakh, NYPO, Mitropoulos

Rostropovich's studio recording première of the Shostakovich First Cello Concerto was made in 1959 and has for long enjoyed legendary status. It has probably not been surpassed, even by Rostropovich himself in subsequent recordings. David Oistrakh's mono recording of the Violin Concerto with Mitropoulos conducting the New York Philharmonic still sounds stunning.

Cello Concerto 1 in E flat, Op. 107; (i) Cello Sonata in D min., Op. 40

 EMI 3 33242-2. Han-Na Chang, LSO, Pappano; (i) with Pappano (piano)

A highly impressive account of the First Concerto from Han-Na Chang, which can hold its own in the most exalted company. The same can be said of the Sonata, in which Pappano abandons the baton for the keyboard. He is a very fine pianist and gives Han-Na Chang excellent support.

Cello Concertos 1; 2 in G, Op. 126

🔑 Ⓜ * Ph. 475 7575. Schiff, Bav. RSO, Maxim Shostakovich

(BB)  Naxos 8.550813. Kliegel, Polish Nat. RSO (Katowice), Wit

Ⓜ  BIS CD 300626. Thedéen, Malmö SO, DePreist

(BB)  Warner Apex 0927 40604-2. Noras, Norwegian RO, Rasilainen (with RICHARD STRAUSS: Romanze ***)

Heinrich Schiff was the first cellist to couple these two Concertos. The Second Concerto is the more elusive of the two. A haunting piece, essentially lyrical, it is gently discursive, sadly whimsical at times and tinged with a smiling melancholy that hides deeper troubles. Schiff has its full measure, as indeed he has of the more direct First Concerto, and this has long been a favourite coupling of ours. The recording is enormously impressive.

Maria Kliegel and the Polish National Radio Orchestra at Katowice under Antoni Wit also give a very good account of both concertos that can be confidently recommended at this price, and on all counts is well worth considering.

The fine Swedish cellist, Torleif Thedéen, has a lot going for him, and his passionately committed performances would honour any collection. He has the advantage of excellent engineering, which gives a very alive sound, plus good orchestral support from the Malmö Orchestra under James DePreist.

Arto Noras is an aristocratic artist with a beautiful tone, and his playing is wonderfully flexible with intelligent phrasing and an instinctive feel for this repertoire. He never plays to the gallery, and his performances are all the more effective as a result.

Cello Concerto 2, Op. 126

🔑  Avie AV 2090. Harrell, RLPO, Schwarz – PROKOFIEV: Sinfonia concertante ***

((*)) BBC mono BBCL 4073-2. Rostropovich, LSO, Hurst (with KHACHATURIAN: Concerto Rhapsody; TCHAIKOVSKY: Rococo Variations **(*))

Ⓝ () Signum Classics SIGCD137. Walton, Philh. O, Briger – BRITTEN: Cello Symphony ()

Avie offer a strong coupling and a welcome addition to the catalogue. Lynn Harrell is captured live in performances from May 2005, and he gives (as one would expect) a masterly account of this elusive score and one which has all the electricity of live music-making. And what good results Gerard Schwarz gets from the Liverpool Orchestra. Very acceptable recording quality.

The BBC recording of the Shostakovich Second Cello Concerto was made at the Festival Hall in October 1966, not long after its Soviet première in Moscow, with Colin Davis conducting. The sound has the intensity of a première performance and the consequent excitement. The Khachaturian Concerto Rhapsody of 1963 is also captured at its première with the LSO and George Hurst, and the 1964 Rococo Variations, again with Colin Davis but at the Albert Hall, is a performance of no mean mastery. All in all, well worth having as a document of both the master cellist and two new works to which he is so deeply committed.

An intelligent coupling with an excellent soloist in Jamie Walton, but the sound is not satisfactory or well balanced. Whether played on a simple straightforward set-up or on highly sophisticated equipment, it still sounds unpleasing.

Piano Concerto 1 for Piano, Trumpet & Strings, Op. 35

Ⓝ  Naïve V 5053. Lise de la Salle, Boldoczki, Gulbenkian Foundation O, Lisbon, Foster – LISZT; PROKOFIEV: Piano Concerto 1 ***

() British Music Society mono BMS 101 CDH. Mewton-Wood, Sevenstern, Concert Hall O, Goehr – BLISS:

Concerto () ✿; STRAVINSKY: Concerto for Piano and Wind ()

Lise de la Salle, with her trumpeter Gabor Boldoczki, finds plenty of sparkle and wit in a performance that dazzles, measuring up to those by more famous names, including Argerich. If you want the three works on this CD, de la Salle will give every satisfaction, and she is very well recorded.

The Shostakovich concerto was the last commercial recording made by Noel Mewton-Wood, in 1953, and the sound is the finest of the three concertos reissued on this British Music Society CD, the orchestral strings lustrous in the delicately romantic Largo, warm and full in the Moderato and with plenty of bite in the outer movements, with Harry Sevenstern's crisply articulated trumpet-playing cleanly caught. The performance is full of wit, gently ironic in the first movement, sharply brilliant in the dazzlingly played finale.

(i) Piano Concerto 1, Op. 35; (ii) Piano Quintet, Op. 57; (iii) Concertino, Op. 94

 EMI 5 04504-2. Argerich; with (i) Nakariakov, O della Svizzera Italiana, Verdernikov; (ii) Renaud Capuçon, Margulis, Chen, Maisky; (iii) Zilberstein

An exhilarating and thought-provoking account of the Concerto for Piano, Trumpet and Strings which makes a very strong impact, not only for the extraordinary Argerich but also the amazing Sergei Nakariakov. It is the finest version of the Concerto yet – and very well recorded too. The Piano Quintet is also in a league of its own, though we would not wish to part with Richter and the Borodins.

Piano Concertos: (i) 1 for Piano, Trumpet & Strings in C min., Op. 35; 2 in F, Op. 102

🔑 * Hyp. SACD: SACDA 67425; CD: CDA 67425. Hamelin; (i) O'Keeffe; BBC Scottish SO, Litton – SHCHEDRIN: Piano Concerto 2 ***

(i) Piano Concertos 1–2; Piano Sonata 2 in B min., Op. 61

(BB)  Warner Apex 8573 89092-2. Leonskaya; (i) Saint Paul CO, Wolf

Marc-André Hamelin gives a vibrant, superbly articulate and dazzling account of both Concertos. These are stunning performances, which fully deserve the plaudits that have been showered on them. The listener is on the edge of the seat throughout, with both poetic insights and the right kind of excitement. Both works are splendidly characterized, though the trumpeter really rather overdoes things in the 'Poor Jenny is a Weeping' section of the finale. The recording, made in the Caird Hall, Dundee, is in the demonstration class. There is no better version of the two Piano Concertos coupled together on the market.

We know from her fine Tchaikovsky recordings that Elisabeth Leonskaya is thoroughly at home in Russian music, and so it proves in her sparkling and wittily pointed accounts of these two Concertos. The Saint Paul Chamber Orchestra, too, provide admirable backing. The strings play with striking beauty in both slow movements, the Andante of 2 is ravishing, and the solo trumpeter, Gary Borden, brings a nice sense of humour to his solos in the finale of 1. What makes this disc doubly attractive is Leonskaya's distinctive account of the B minor Piano Sonata, with thoughtful playing not only in the slow movement but in the finale, which is in essence a set of variations. Vivid recording, with a touch of hardness on the piano tone, which does not come amiss in this repertoire.

Piano Concerto 2 in F, Op. 102

(BB)  EMI Encore (ADD) 5 574991-2. Ogdon, RPO, Foster – BARTÓK: Piano Concerto 3, etc. **(*)

John Ogdon, at the height of his powers, gives a splendidly idiomatic account of this concerto written originally for Shostakovich's son, Maxim. The playing is full of character, the outer movements striking for their wit and dash, and the beautiful slow movement richly romantic without being sentimentalized. This remains one of the finest versions available, and the 1971 sound is excellent.

Violin Concerto 1 in A min., Op. 99

🔑  Sony SK 68338. Midori, BPO, Abbado – TCHAIKOVSKY: Violin Concerto ***

(*) Simax PSC 1159. Tellefsen, RPO, Berglund – BACH: Violin Concerto 2 **(*)

Having the Tchaikovsky Concerto together with this 20th-century Russian masterpiece brings out the parallels between the two, a point enhanced by Midori's readings, recorded live, with rhythm and phrasing freely expressive. At the start of the Moderato first movement of the Shostakovich her tone is so withdrawn that one has to prick the ears, and in the Passacaglia third movement she also conveys an ethereal poignancy in her pianissimo playing. Abbado is a powerful and sympathetic, yet discreet accompanist, with recording that is both warm and well detailed.

Arve Tellefsen gives a fine account of the concerto and brings fine musicianship and no lack of passion to it. Berglund proves a supportive accompanist and the RPO play well for him. Moreover the sound is very well balanced. But this is not a first choice.

(i) Violin Concerto 1 in A min., Op. 99; (ii) 3 Violin Duets

Ⓜ (*) EMI (DDD/ADD) 5 62593-2. Perlman; with (i) Israel PO, Mehta; (ii) Pinchas Zukerman – GLAZUNOV: Violin Concerto **(*)

Perlman and Mehta put the work in the light of day and, in the two fast movements and the cadenza, that brings tremendous dividends. Yet some of the mystery and fantasy which Russian interpreters have found – from David Oistrakh onwards – is missing, and the close balance of the solo instrument, characteristic of Perlman's concerto recordings, undermines hushed intensity. The three Violin Duets which act as an encore are entertaining trifles (there is a salon piece, a gavotte and some waltzes), all betraying some measure of wit. They are, of course, marvellously played.

Violin Concertos 1; 2 in C sharp min., Op. 129

🔑 Ⓜ * Warner Elatus 0927 46742-2. Vengerov, LSO, Rostropovich

 Naïve V5025. Kachaturyan, O Nat. de France, Masur

 Warner 2564 62546-2 Hope, BBC SO, M. Shostakovich

(BB)  Virgin 2x1 5 61633-2. Sitkovetsky, BBC SO, Davis

 Chan. 8820. Mordkovitch, SNO, Järvi

(BB)  Naxos 8.550814. Kaler, Polish Nat. RSO (Katowice), Wit

(*) BBC (ADD) BBCL 4060. D. Oistrakh; (i) Philh. O, Rozhdestvensky; (ii) USSR State O, Svetlanov – YSAŸE: Amitié **(*)

Vengerov comes into direct competition with Sitkovetsky on Virgin, yet his playing can dazzle the ear equally tellingly; he also really gets under the skin of both Concertos and finds an added depth of poetic feeling, while fully retaining the music's thrust and spontaneity. The haunting intensity, both at the opening of the Second Concerto and in its Adagio slow movement, is totally memorable. Rostropovich and the LSO give splendid support, and this mid-priced Warner Elatus disc now becomes a first recommendation.

Sergey Kachaturyan is a most impressive and persuasive artist who enjoys a supportive and idiomatic response from the Orchestre National de France under Kurt Masur. They are clean, lightish readings, making a worthwhile contrast with the weightier, more intense Lydia Mordkovitch, whose vintage, prize-winning reading on Chandos still remains among the most moving. Kachaturyan's performances have much eloquence to commend them and, among recent couplings of these masterly concertos, have strong claims on the collector. A very well-balanced recording, too. Many will find their naturalness of expression preferable to the Vengerov–Rostropovich set.

Daniel Hope is a brilliant and thoughtful soloist in both the familiar First Concerto and its underrated successor. Maxim Shostakovich gets good results from the BBC Symphony Orchestra, and the recording team offer excellent and natural sound. This is as good as almost any rival coupling on the market.

Virgin's coupling by Sitkovetsky and the BBC Symphony Orchestra under Andrew Davis is impressive and intense; there is no doubt as to its excellence, it has tremendous bite. It is splendidly recorded, and also takes its place at the top of the list.

Mordkovitch's concentrated reading of 2 is matched by Järvi and the orchestra in their total commitment. She even outshines the work's dedicatee and first interpreter, David Oistrakh, in the dark reflectiveness of her playing, even if she cannot quite match him in bravura passages. In the better-known Concerto (1) the meditative intensity is magnetic, with a fullness and warmth of tone that have not always marked her playing on record before.

Ilya Kaler's technique is flawless, with playing that is not only brilliant but consistently beautiful tonally. The Second Violin Concerto, the more wayward, more problematic work, is particularly fine and Kaler relishes the key role given to the cadenzas. If in the better-known First Concerto Kaler's performance does not quite have the same intensity, that is partly a question of the marginally less taut orchestral accompaniment and of the recording balance.

David Oistrakh's recording of the First Violin Concerto comes from the Edinburgh Festival of 1962 and the Second from a Prom in 1968. Both are performances to cherish, there is the electricity of a live occasion that gives something extra, and the first movement (Nocturne) of the First has an atmosphere that is as powerful as it was under Mitropoulos. The sound is very good.

The Girlfriends; Salute to Spain; Rule, Britannia!; Symphonic Movement (1945)

Ⓝ (BB) Naxos 8.572138. Camerata Silesia, Polish Nat. RSO, FitzGerald

The music to The Girlfriends comes from the score for a film made just before the Pravda attack on the composer put him in disgrace. 'The Girlfriends' are three young women who help in the 1917 Revolution, featuring some ingenious counterpoint and plenty of military fanfares, also a movement for theremin attempting to perform the communist anthem, the Internationale. Salute to Spain is a propaganda work in support of the Republican cause in the Spanish Civil War. Rule Britannia! takes its name from a boat moored in a Western harbour, this time leading to a thrilling account of the Internationale with full chorus. The Symphonic Movement of 1945 was the composer's first idea for a ninth symphony, brashly militaristic, quickly rejected for a far lighter piece. None of this may be great music, but it offers a fascinating portrait of the composer in one of his most prolific periods.

The Golden Age (ballet; complete)

(*) Chan. 9251/2. Stockholm PO, Rozhdestvensky

The Chandos was the first complete recording of Shostakovich's first ballet, with its extraordinary plot of Soviet and capitalist sportsmen and women. The famous Polka is meant to satirize a disarmament meeting in Geneva. The music as a whole is remarkably potent and full of succulent ideas (even Tea for Two arrives during Act II), and the big set-pieces are expansively and sometimes darkly symphonic. The score is well played in Stockholm, but the warm orchestral style does not always readily bring out the music's plangent character and moments of barbed wit.

Hamlet (1932 production; complete incidental music), Op. 32; (1954 production; incidental music); King Lear (1941 production; complete incidental music), Op. 58a

Ⓜ  Cala CACD 1021. Winter, Wilson-Johnson, CBSO, Elder

This is not top-drawer Shostakovich, but congratulations are in order for Cala's enterprise in recording all this and to the City of Birmingham Orchestra under Mark Elder for the vital and alert performances. The recording too is expertly and tastefully balanced.

New Babylon (film score); (i) From Jewish Folk Poetry (song-cycle)

 Chan. 9600. Russian State SO, Polyansky; with (i) Sharova, Kuznetsova, Martynov

It makes an unusual and revealing coupling having Shostakovich's long-buried music for the satirical silent film, New Babylon, paired with the moving sequence of Jewish song-settings. Polyansky and an excellent trio of soloists bring out the expressive depth of these deceptively simple, lyrical songs, regularly reflecting the composer's sympathy with the suffering of the Jews. New Babylon was the composer's very first film score, with sharp parodies, 1920s-style, of French models reflecting the Parisian background of the story. Colourful, atmospheric orchestration beautifully caught in full-bodied, well-balanced sound.

SYMPHONIES

Symphonies 1–12; (i) 13; (ii) 14; 15; (iii) (iv) The Execution of Stepan Razin, Op. 119; The Sun Shines on our Motherland, Op. 90

Ⓑ  Melodiya MELCD 10 01065 (11). Moscow PO, Kondrashin; with (i) Eisen, RSFSR Ac. Ch.; (ii) Tselovalnik, Nestorenko; (iii) D. Oistrakh; (iv) Gromadsky

Symphonies 1–2; (i) 3; 4–13 (Babi Yar); (i; ii) 14; (iii) 15

Ⓑ  Cap. SACD 71029 (12). (i) Prague Ph. Ch; (iii) Shaguch; (ii; iii) Kotchinian; Gürzenich O, Cologne, Kitajenko

Symphonies (i) 1 in F min., Op. 10; (i; iv) 2 (To October), Op. 14; (i;v) 3 (1st of May), Op. 20; (iii) 4, Op. 43; (i) 5 in D min., Op. 47; 6 in B min., Op. 54; (ii) 7 (Leningrad), Op. 60; (i) 8 in C min., Op. 65; 9 in E flat, Op. 70; 10 in E min., Op. 93; (ii) 11 (The Year 1905), Op. 103; (i) 12 (The Year 1917), Op. 112; (iii; vi) 13 (Babi Yar), Op. 113; (iii; vi; vii) 14, Op. 135; (i) 15, Op. 141; (i) Festival Overture, Op. 96; October, Op. 131; (i; iv; viii) Song of the Forests, Op. 81; (i) 5 Fragments, Op. 42; Funeral & Triumphal Prelude, Op. 130; Chamber Symphony, Op. 110a (trans. of String Quartet 8 by Rudolf Barshai)

Ⓑ  Decca 475 8748 (12). (i) RPO; (ii) St Petersburg PO; (iii) NHK SO; (iv) Brighton Festival Ch.; (v) Bach Ch.; (vi) Koptchak; (vii) Rodgers; (viii) Kotliarov, Storojev; cond. Ashkenazy

Symphonies 1–15; (i; ii) From Jewish Folk Poetry; (ii) 6 Poems of Marina Tsvetaeva

Ⓑ  Decca DDD/ADD 475 7413 (11). Varady, Fischer-Dieskau, Rintzler; (i) Söderström, Karczykowski; (ii) Wenkel; Ch. of LPO or Concg. O; LPO or Concg. O, Haitink

An outstanding compilation from Ashkenazy to supplement the Haitink Decca cycle. In addition to the symphonies, this new box offers a number of other rarities which fill out our picture of the symphonist. Most of these recordings have appeared before but 7 and 11 with the St Petersburg Orchestra and 4, 13 and 14 with the NHK Orchestra, Tokyo, are new. They are very fine indeed and are performed by Vladimir Ashkenazy with fidelity to both the letter and the spirit of the score. The earliest recording (apart from a few spoken words from Shostakovich himself, recorded at the time of the siege of Leningrad) comes from 1987; of the newcomers 4, 7, 11, 13 and 14 are all 2007 recordings. The Decca engineers offer us sound that is worthy of the house.

Our last encounter with Kondrashin's cycle was on 12 boxed LPs, and it remains mandatory listening. The Fourth, its première recording, has wonderful intensity, as indeed does the Eighth, though we prefer Mravinsky's 1960 broadcast on BBC Legends. (The first movement of the Sixth still strikes us as a bit fast.) But on balance this all has the ring of authenticity one expects from a conductor who was so closely associated with the composer and who gave the premières of Symphonies 4 and 13.

Alternatively there is a competitively priced survey of the Shostakovich canon from Dmitri Kitajenko and the Cologne Gürzenich Orchestra. 1, 4, 7, 8, 11 and 15 were recorded at live concerts at the Cologne Philharmonic in 2003–4 and the remaining nine at the Stolberger Straße Studios. Kitajenko has the measure not only of the tauter works such as 1 and 9, but also of the epic canvases of 8 and 11. His Tenth has the tragic power and concentration that this great symphony calls for. Readers needing a complete survey, recorded in magnificent and finely detailed sound, with performances that rarely fall short of distinction, can invest in this set with confidence.

No one artist or set of performances holds all the insights into this remarkable symphonic canon, but what can be said of Haitink's set is that the playing of both the London Philharmonic and the Concertgebouw orchestras is of the highest calibre and is very responsive; moreover the Decca recordings, whether analogue or digital, are consistently of this company's highest standard, outstandingly brilliant and full. If without the temperament of a Mravinsky, Haitink proves a reliable guide to this repertoire, often much more than that, and sometimes inspired. All in all, a considerable achievement. The 11 discs are now offered together at bargain price.

(i) Symphony 1 in F min., Op. 10; (ii) Festive Overture. Collection: The Age of Gold: Polka; Ballet Suite 1: Galop; Music-box Waltz; Dance; Ballet Suite 2: Polka; Galop; The Gadfly: Introduction; Barrel Organ Waltz; Nocturne; Folk Festival; Galop; Moscow-Cheryomushki: Overture Waltz; Galop

🔑 ✿ (BB) * Sony (ADD) SBK 62642. (i) Phd. O, Ormandy; (ii) Columbia SO, Kostelanetz

Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra recorded this version of the First Symphony in the presence of the composer in 1959. It is a beautifully proportioned, tense and vivid account. The sound, too, is excellent. Still, after 40 years, a front-runner in spite of some excellent successors. The coupling could not have been better chosen: a suite of Shostakovichian orchestral lollipops selected by Kostelanetz, a dab hand at this kind of audacious light music. Kostelanetz plays this music for all it is worth, and if again the recording is brash, this time it fits the music like a glove.

Symphony 1 in F min. (complete; DVD version, plus rehearsal)

Ⓝ 🔑 * Medici Arts DVD 2072158. Schleswig-Holstein Music Festival O, Bernstein

As Bernstein says before he begins the rehearsal which goes with this performance, Shostakovich's First Symphony is a quirky, unpredictable piece which pokes fun at authority with an 'Up yours' attitude, yet which begins to falter as its young composer suddenly finds himself being taken over by the expressive power of the music he is writing. So this is no ordinary rehearsal. The orchestral players learn much more than they expected about what the composer is trying to convey, and so do we. The performance of the symphony itself has extraordinary power, a palette of colour and revelation of detail far beyond what we hear during an ordinary account. It is also thrilling, marvellously played and very vividly recorded. Bernstein has such a friendly spirit of communication as he unlocks the music's secrets that, by watching and listening to this DVD, it is possible to get inside this very remarkable and original work that was its composer's symphonic début.

Symphonies (i) 1; (ii) 5

Ⓜ (*) LPO SACD LPO 0001. LPO, Masur

Ⓝ Ⓑ  CfP (ADD 2 28283-2. (i) Philh., Kurtz; (ii) Chicago SO, Previn

These live recordings from the first batch of the LPO's own-label discs demonstrate the orchestra at its finest. The crispness and point of the ensemble and the refined beauty of the strings are most impressive, recorded in full, forward sound at Royal Festival Hall concerts early in 2004. Masur as the orchestra's music director has perfect control, even if his reading of the First Symphony is more remarkable for its brilliance than for its wit; for all the beauty, refinement and precision of the Fifth, it remains a little straight-faced, contemplative in the first and third movements, and genuinely jubilant in the rumbustious finale, ignoring the element of irony.

Kurtz's account of 1 has the distinction of being one of EMI's first stereo recordings – and very good it still sounds, as does the excellent performance with the Philharmonia Orchestra on top form. Unfortunately, Previn's account of the Fifth Symphony, which is also extremely well played and recorded, is disappointing by comparison, for the reading has little sense of freshness or urgency.

Symphonies 1; 5 in D min., Op. 47; (i) 7 (Leningrad); Prelude 14 in E flat min., Op. 34 (arr. Stokowski)

() Pearl GEMM CDS 9044 (2). Phd. O; (i) NBC SO, Stokowski

Stokowski's First Symphony was recorded in 1934, less than a decade after its première under Malko. The sound is dryish, but there is tremendous atmosphere and concentration, and the transfers are excellent. Stokowski's (1939) pioneering Fifth is an electrifying performance, impeccably played and splendidly transferred. The slow movement has a gripping intensity that is quite exceptional. The famous transcription of the E flat minor Prelude, Op. 34, has a brooding, Mussorgskian menace all its own, while Stokowski's Leningrad Symphony is hardly less gripping. This Leningrad for all its sonic defects makes for exciting listening.

Symphonies 1; 6 in B min., Op. 54

 Chan. 8411. SNO, Järvi

Järvi's account of the First Symphony is more volatile than Haitink's in the outer movements – there is no lack of quirkiness in the finale, while the Largo is intense and passionate. The Sixth has comparable intensity, with an element of starkness in the austerity of the first movement. The Scherzo is skittish at first but, like the finale, has no lack of pungent force.

Symphonies 1 & 7 (Leningrad)

Ⓝ Ⓑ  DG 477 7587 (2). Chicago SO, Bernstein

A two-disc set for these two symphonies is extravagant, but Bernstein's expansive treatment of both works demands it. The Chicago Symphony Orchestra plays superbly for him, but the full bite and ruthlessness of the Leningrad Symphony are largely missing, with the celebrated ostinato of the first movement dragging at a slow speed. The soft-grained quality extends to Bernstein's Chicago view of 1, which does not match the performance on DVD, although the manically energetic sequences of the second and fourth movements spark him to performances of characteristically high voltage. Full-bodied sound.

Symphonies 1, Op. 10; 9 in E flat, Op. 70

🔑 Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 2564 60121-2. Nat. SO of Washington, Rostropovich

In Rostropovich's hands the youthful First Symphony begins very promisingly and continues well. Indeed, there is plenty of fulfilment. The reading is free from exaggeration, even if the Scherzo is rushed off its feet. The Ninth, too, is well served: the slow movement is shapely, and there is only one moment of agogic exaggeration. Rostropovich is also given a decently balanced recording, and this can certainly be recommended to those looking for this particular coupling.

Symphonies 2, Op. 14 (To October); (i) 12 in D min., Op. 112 (The Year 1917)

🔑  EMI 3 35994-2. Bav. RSO; (i) & Ch., Jansons

By general consent the Twelfth is the emptiest and weakest of the Shostakovich symphonies, yet in the hands of a Mravinsky it can exert a strange and compelling fascination. Mariss Jansons and the wonderful, rich-toned Bayerisches Rundfunk Orchestra do their very best for the piece and for the Second, also inspired by the October revolution. The latter never really lives up to the promise of its opening, but there is no question that Jansons secures first-class performances of both and that the recording quality does full justice to the Munich players.

Symphonies (i) 2 (October); (ii) 14, Op 135

Ⓜ (*) Warner Elatus 2564 61374-2. (i) London Voices, LSO; (ii) Vishnevskaya, Reshetin, Moscow Ac. SO (members); Rostropovich

The two Rostropovich performances were recorded 20 years apart, 2 in London in 1993 and 14 much earlier in Moscow. In 2 the LSO respond to his direction with real fervour, everything is well prepared and well thought out. The performance of No. 14 is dark and intense, with expressive detail sometimes underlined. Vishnevskaya will not be to all tastes (she is thin and shrill above the stave at the top of her register), but Reshetin is most impressive. The soloists are balanced a little too close, but otherwise the sound has fine presence and definition in both recordings.

Symphony 4 in C min., Op. 43 (DVD Version)

Ⓝ  Medici Arts DVD 3085276. BBC SO, Rozhdestvensky (with RIMSKY-KORSAKOV: Russian Easter Festival Overture; RACHMANINOV: Piano Concerto 1 ***)

The Fourth gets an intensely felt and highly imaginative performance from the BBC Symphony Orchestra, even if memories of Kyril Kondrashin's pioneering 1961 recording are not banished. This telecast has good sound and has the benefit of discreetly directed camerawork, even if the images have lost some of their freshness. It comes from a 1978 Prom, while its companions, the Russian Easter Festival Overture of Rimsky-Korsakov and Rachmaninov's First Piano Concerto with Victoria Postnikova (Rozhdestvensky's wife) as the brilliant soloist, are taken from a 1979 Prom. There is no programme note. Recommendable nonetheless.

Symphony 4 in C min., Op. 43 (CD versions)

 Avie AV 2114. WDR SO, Cologne, Bychkov

🔑  EMI 5 57824-2 Bav. RSO, Jansons

 Chan. 8640. SNO, Järvi

Semyon Bychkov has recorded the Fifth, Eighth and Eleventh Symphonies with the Berlin Philharmonic for Philips, on which we reported in earlier editions. The present account comes from 2005 and has great concentration and power; indeed this is probably the most intense reading since Kondrashin's pioneering 1961 record.

The Bavarian Radio Orchestra is one of the finest in Europe and under Mariss Jansons it produces a wonderful range of sonorities and finely blended tone. The EMI recording is very detailed and present, and Jansons is completely inside the work and conveys his intentions in masterly fashion.

Järvi draws from the SNO playing which is both rugged and expressive, consistently conveying the emotional thrust of the piece and making the enigmatic ending, with its ticking rhythm, warmer than usual, as though bitterness is finally evaporating. He is helped by exceptionally rich, full recording.

'The War Symphonies' (Documentary on Symphonies 4–9 by Larry Weinstein; Prod: Niv Fichman; DVD version)

🔑  Ph. DVD 074 3117. Kirov O or Rotterdam PO, Gergiev

Don't be put off by the tabloid-like title 'Shostakovich against Stalin', for there is nothing glib or crude about this remarkable and searching documentary. Anyone who cares about the Shostakovich Symphonies should lose no time in getting this DVD. It includes contributions from Shostakovich's circle of family, including his daughter Galina, friends and colleagues. They and the widow of the composer Shebalin all bear witness to what life was like during the terrible Stalinist years. The programme has a unique authority – as one would expect, given the participation of Gergiev, whose brainchild it was, and the collaboration of Elizabeth Wilson, daughter of a former British Ambassador to Moscow and author of an excellent biography of the composer. There is even an appearance by Khrennikov, who launched the attack on 'formalism' during the 1948 Congress of Soviet Composers presided over by Zhdanov. There is a great deal of rare archive material.

Symphony 5 in D min., Op. 47 – see also Cello Concerto 1

🔑 * BBC (ADD) BBCL 4165-2. LSO, Stokowski – VAUGHAN WILLIAMS: Symphony 8 ***

() BBC Legends mono BBCL 4193-2. Hallé O, Barbirolli – BEETHOVEN: Symphony 5 ()

(i) Symphony 5 in D min., Op. 47; (ii) Chamber Symphony in C min. (arr. of String Quartet 8)

🔑 Ⓜ  Sony SK 94733. (i) NYPO, Bernstein; (ii) MITD SO, Barshai

(i) Symphony 5; (ii) Hamlet (film incidental music), Suite, Op. 116

🔑 Ⓜ * RCA (ADD/DDD) 82876 55493-2. (i) LSO, Previn; (ii) Belgian RSO, Serebrier

Previn's RCA version, dating from early in his recording career (1965), remains among the top of the list for this much-recorded symphony, sounding excellent in this new transfer. This is one of the most concentrated and intense readings ever, superbly played by the LSO at their peak. In the third movement, Previn sustains a slower speed than anyone else, making it deeply meditative in its dark intensity, while the build-up in the central development section brings playing of white heat. The bite and urgency of the second and fourth movements are also irresistible. Only in the slight lack of opulence in the violins does the sound fall short of the finest modern recordings, but it is more immediate than most. The playing of the Belgian Radio Orchestra under Serebrier on the Hamlet Suite is eminently serviceable without being really distinguished but, with an atmospheric recording, this 28-minute suite makes a considerable bonus.

Stokowski's performance, recorded live in the Royal Albert Hall in the 1964 Prom season, vividly demonstrates that even in his eighties he had few rivals in inspiring performances of the highest voltage. The Shostakovich Fifth Symphony was his favourite, and here the biting tensions of the opening are masterfully contrasted with the pure, sinuous lines of the second subject in a performance of exceptional refinement and dedication, with each movement bringing fresh revelations, fully faithful to the score. Excellent stereo sound, remarkably vivid for a radio broadcast of the period. Very well coupled with another revelatory performance of Vaughan Williams's Symphony 8.

Though in 1966, when Barbirolli made this live recording, Shostakovich was a composer he rarely conducted, the insights here are many, with Barbirolli typically adopting steady, measured speeds, with ample expressiveness in the phrasing but relatively little use of rubato. That makes the long first movement seem exceptionally spacious, but the equivalent slow movement then crowns the performance emotionally, with playing of keen concentration, leading to a thrustful account of the rumbustious finale. A fine, revealing coupling.

Unashamedly, Bernstein treats the work as a romantic Symphony. The very opening makes a strong impact and then, exceptionally, in the cool and beautiful second-subject melody Bernstein takes a slightly detached view, though as soon as that same melody comes up for development after the exposition the result is altogether more warmly expressive. Yet the movement's central climax, with its emphasis on the deep brass, injects a powerful element of menace, and the coda communicates a strongly Russian melancholy, which is perhaps why the composer admired Bernstein above other American interpreters of his music. The Allegretto becomes a burlesque, but here its Mahlerian roots are strongly conveyed. The slow movement is raptly beautiful (marvellously sustained pianissimo playing from the New York strings) and the finale is brilliant and extrovert, with the first part dazzlingly fast and the conclusion one of unalloyed triumph, even if its very vehemence suggests a hollow victory. The performance of the Chamber Symphony under Barshai is no less intense and deeply expressive in its essential melancholy, but more austere in texture and refined in feeling. It is superbly played and recorded.

(i) Symphony 5 in D min., Op. 47; (ii) 7 Romances on Poems of Alexander Blok, Op. 127

Ⓝ *() Ondine SACD ODE 1109-5. (i) Phd. O, Eschenbach; (ii) Naef, Kang, Hai-Ye Ni, Eschenbach (piano)

The Philadelphia Orchestra, and especially the strings, always have something special to contribute to the Fifth Symphony, but here Eschenbach's interpretation is muted and certainly lacking in the passionate thrust that Stokowski brought to this work. Moreover, the coda curiously hangs fire. The recording is spectacular, especially on SACD. The Seven Romances are given an intense performance by Yvonne Naef, at times very histrionic, at others touchingly gentle.

Symphonies (i) 5; (ii) 6 in B min., Op. 54

🔑 Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 0927 46732-2. (i) Leningrad PO, Mravinsky; (ii) Nat. SO of Washington, Rostropovich

(BB)  Regis RRC 1075. Cologne RSO, Barshai

Mravinsky conducted the première of the Fifth Symphony in 1937 and so brings a special authority to this work. This Erato Elatus account emanates from a concert performance almost half a century later (in 1984); but there is still evidence of a commanding personality and, even though the recording itself is not in the luxury bracket, this performance must figure high on any list. It comes coupled with Rostropovich's Sixth, recorded ten years later in the Washington Kennedy Center. In his spacious account of the opening Largo, Rostropovich does not wear his heart on his sleeve, and the burlesque Scherzo which follows is pointed with nice ironic geniality, while the following finale bursts with witty high spirits. Excellent orchestral playing and fine recording make this a coupling to reckon with.

Rudolf Barshai's coupling comes from concert performances in the Cologne Philharmonie in 1995–6. Barshai's credentials in this repertoire are well known. He conducted the first recording of the Fourteenth Symphony and has, of course, arranged the Fourth, Eighth and Tenth Quartets for full strings with the composer's blessing. These are very well-prepared and expertly played accounts, which are finely shaped and felt.

Symphonies 5 in D min.; 9 in E flat, Op. 70

(BB) * Naxos 8.550427. Belgian R. & TV O, Rahbari

Both in the hushed intensity of the lyrical passages and in the vigour and bite of Shostakovich's violent Allegros Rahbari's reading is most convincing, with dramatic tensions finely controlled in a spontaneous-sounding way. In 9 Rahbari opts for a controversially slow Moderato second movement but sustains it well, and the outer movements are deliciously witty in their pointing. The playing of all sections is first rate, and the sound is full and brilliant.

Symphonies 6 in B min.; 9 in E flat (DVD version)

🔑  DG DVD 073 4170. VPO, Bernstein

The Ninth Symphony was recorded in October 1985 and the Sixth 12 months later. The first movement of the Sixth is deeply felt, as indeed is the slow movement of the Ninth. Bernstein enjoyed a very strong rapport with the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra and Humphrey Burton's direction is appropriately unobtrusive. Bernstein introduces both works with his customary lucidity.

Symphony 7 in C (Leningrad), Op. 60

🔑 * MDG Surround Sound SACD 937 1203-6. Beethoven O, Bonn, Kofman

 Chan. 8623. SNO, Järvi

 Naïve V 5971. O. Nat. de France, Masur

(BB)  Regis RRC 1074. Cologne RSO, Barshai

(BB) (*) Sony (ADD) SBK 89904. NYPO, Bernstein

This superbly realistic and spectacular new recording from the unlikely source of the Beethoven Orchestra, Bonn, rather sweeps the board. Roman Kofman has the full measure of this remarkable Symphony. He builds the famous first-movement ostinato with unremitting concentration into an overwhelming climax, and his reading creates a satisfying combination of passion and irony in the work as a whole, with raptly beautiful playing and great intensity from the strings in the Adagio and jubilant triumph at the work's close. The recording is very much in the demonstration bracket, whether using two speakers or four.

Järvi's is a strong, intense reading, beautifully played and recorded, which brings out the full drama of this Symphony in a performance that consistently gives the illusion of spontaneity in a live performance, as in the hushed tension of the slow, expansive passages.

Masur and his fine Paris Orchestra recorded the Seventh at the Théâtre des Champs-Elysées in May 2006, before bringing it to the BBC Proms a couple of months later. There is nothing over- or under-stated about this convincing and thoughtful performance, which can be rated among the best. Good sound.

Barshai's recording comes from a concert performance in the Cologne Philharmonie in 1992. There is no bombast, yet the understatement does not entail loss of character and impact, and the sound quality is very good indeed, thanks to the excellent Cologne acoustic.

Bernstein brings a certain panache and fervour to his reading, particularly in the inspired slow movement, so that one is tempted to look indulgently at its occasional overstatements.

Symphony 8 in C min., Op. 65

* BBC (ADD) BBCL4002-2. Leningrad PO, Mravinsky – MOZART: Symphony 33 in B flat, K.319 **

(BB)  Regis RRC 1250. Leningrad PO, Mravinsky

(BB)  EMI Encore (ADD) 5 09024-2. LSO, Previn

Ⓑ  CfP 587 034-2. Bournemouth SO, Barshai

Mravinsky's BBC recording comes from the Festival Hall Concert given on the Leningrad Orchestra tour in 1960 at which Shostakovich himself was present. This transfer reproduces the occasion with great realism and a wide dynamic range. This reading has tremendous intensity and authenticity of feeling. It comes with a bonus – the first half of the concert, which was given over to an elegant performance of Mozart's Symphony 33. Even among modern recordings this more than holds its own and the sound is very good indeed. Mandatory listening.

The Regis reissue is of a live performance given in 1982, but not, it seems, the account which appeared on Philips and which has been strongly recommended by us in the past. It would be easy to think it was, for Mravinsky's pacing is very similar. However, this alternative account is marginally less concentrated than the Philips version and takes fractionally longer overall. Even so, this Regis version can still be strongly recommended at its modest price, for Mravinsky's interpretation of this work is very special and the recording sounds impressive as remastered here.

With Previn, the opening slow movement emerges not only as involving but also cogent in symphonic terms. The sharp predictability of the remaining movements, alternately cajoling and battering the listener, shows Shostakovich at his most inspired. The LSO is prompted by Previn to playing that is both intense and brilliant, while the 1973 Abbey Road recording is outstandingly rich and vivid for its time.

Barshai holds up surprisingly well against the competition. The noble symphonic Adagio which opens the work is marvellously sustained, and the playing of the Bournemouth Orchestra is extremely fine in all departments. This is a finely paced and powerful reading which, particularly in the first movement, has a wonderful brooding intensity and eloquence. The Passacaglia has a real epic sweep. As far as sound quality is concerned, the balance of this 1985 recording could hardly be improved upon, and the excellent acoustic is used to splendid and thrilling effect.

Symphony 9 in E flat, Op. 70 (DVD version)

🔑  Arthaus DVD 100 302. Bav. RSO, Solti (V/D: Klaus Lindemann) – TCHAIKOVSKY: Symphony 6 **(*)

Solti's performance of the Ninth Symphony (filmed in 1990) is admirable. He catches its wit and humour readily (one responds to the occasional half-smile on his face) and, with his economical, purposive gestures, he is a pleasure to watch. The Bavarian Radio Orchestra plays marvellously and obviously are enjoying themselves too, appreciating the yearning lyricism of the second movement as well as the humour. The camera observes everything without moving about excessively.

Symphony 9 in E flat, Op. 70; Festive Overture, Op. 96; Katerina Ismailova (Lady Macbeth of Mtsensk): 5 Entr'actes; Tahiti Trot (arr. of Youmans's Tea for Two), Op. 16

🔑  Chan. 8587. SNO, Järvi

Järvi's version of the Ninth brings a warmly expressive, strongly characterized reading in superb, wide-ranging sound and the fill-up items are well worth having too.

Symphony 10 in E min., Op. 93

🔑 Ⓜ * DG 477 5909. BPO, Karajan

Ⓜ (*) Warner Elatus 2564 60660-2 Leningrad PO, Mravinsky (with WAGNER: Tristan: Prelude and Liebestod **(*))

Ⓝ Ⓜ (*) LPO LPO 0034. LPO, Haitink

Symphony 10 in E min., Op. 93; Ballet Suite 4

 Chan. 8630. SNO, Järvi

Already in his 1967 recording Karajan had shown that he had the measure of this symphony; this newer version is, if anything, even finer. In the first movement he distils an atmosphere as concentrated as before, bleak and unremitting, while in the Allegro the Berlin Philharmonic leave no doubts as to their peerless virtuosity. Everything is marvellously shaped and proportioned, and the early (1981) digital sound is made firmer by this 'original-image' bit re-processing.

Mravinsky conducted the work's première. This Elatus recording was made at a 1976 concert performance and it has no want of intensity or power. The recording is less than ideal, but this is a performance to reckon with, and the Wagner bonus (recorded live, two years later) also rises to a passionate climax.

Järvi, too, conducts an outstandingly strong and purposeful reading in superb sound, full and atmospheric, and the Ballet Suite makes an attractive bonus.

Haitink's recording dates from 1986 and comes from the BBC archives. It has more flair than his Decca studio version, and the live occasion ensures that the adrenalin flows readily enough, especially in the violent Scherzo. The opening movement, however, has a certain spacious dignity. The Royal Albert Hall acoustic ensures richly full-bodied textures and, while not a first choice, this is still a very considerable performance.

(i) Symphony 10 in E min., Op. 93 (arr. for piano duet); (ii) 4 Preludes from Op. 34 (arr. for violin & piano)

Ⓜ () Revelation mono RV 70002. Composer; with (i) Vainberg; (ii) Kogan

The recording may be primitive but this is of great documentary interest, capturing Shostakovich and his fellow composer Moisei Vainberg playing the Tenth Symphony in a piano-duet arrangement only a few months after its completion and not long before Mravinsky made the première recording. They play with great fervour and strain the instrument to the limit. The performance is surprisingly brisk (47 minutes as opposed to the usual 50) and completely involving. The transcriptions of the Preludes are wonderfully played by Kogan and the composer, and there are also a few bars from The Gadfly too.

Symphony 11 (The Year 1905), Op. 103

🔑  Testament SBT 1099. French R.O, Cluytens

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.572082. RLPO, Petrenko

Cluytens's performance was recorded in Paris in the presence of the composer. It appears now in stereo for the very first time and sounds quite astonishing. Indeed, it stands up to modern competition very well. Shostakovich called the Eleventh his 'most Mussorgskian work' and it was clear to Soviet audiences that its 'subtext' was not so much the abortive February rebellion of the title as the events in Budapest, where the Soviet Union had just suppressed the Hungarian uprising.

Although our allegiance to the pioneering French Radio performance under André Cluytens remains unshaken, this newcomer on Naxos is certainly a strong competitor. The performance has great intensity of spirit and much atmosphere and, at its bargain price, is likely to attract many collectors. It augurs well for the promised cycle of which this is the first instalment.

Symphony 13 in B flat min. (Babi-Yar)

🔑  EMI 5 57902-2. Aleksashkin, Bav. R. Ch. & SO, Jansons

 Sup. SU 0160-2 231. Mikuláš, Prague Philharmonic Ch., Prague SO, M. Shostakovich

With the superb Russian bass Sergi Aleksashkin dominating the performance, so that the Bavarian Radio Chorus too are encouraged to sing with intense Slavonic fervour, Jansons's new EMI recording is very powerful indeed. The work's dark, forceful irony is well caught in the Allegretto second movement, yet it is in the third movement that the performance reaches its merciless climax which is so well resolved in the epilogue-like finale, strangely uplifting with its celestial flutes. Jansons secures splendid playing from the Bavarian Orchestra. The EMI recording has great vividness and atmosphere.

Maxim Shostakovich's Supraphon version, with sound so vivid you hear some alien noises, is menacingly atmospheric, one of the finest of his recordings of his father's symphonies. Helped by the immediate sound, he sustains each movement with fine concentration, with each movement heightened by characterful singing from the superb Czech bass Peter Mikuláš.

Symphonies Nos. (i) 13 (Babi Yar), Op. 113; (ii) 14, Op. 135. 15, Op. 141

Ⓜ (*) DG 474 469-2 (2). Gothenburg SO, Järvi; with (i) Kotscherga, Estonian Nat. Male Ch.; (ii) Kazarnovskaya, Leiferkus

Järvi has a good feeling for Shostakovich and this two-CD DG reissue offers a generally recommendable set of performances with impressive soloists. In Babi Yar, Anatoly Kotscherga proves resonantly theatrical and the Estonian Choir sing confidently and idiomatically. Throughout all three Symphonies, the recording is impressively spacious and, as full texts and translations are included, this set is well worth considering.

Symphony 14 in G min., Op. 135

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.550631. Hajóssyová, Mikuláš, Slovak RSO (Bratislava), Slovák

(*) BBC (ADD) BBCB 8013-2. Vishnevskaya, Rezhetin, ECO, Britten – BRITTEN: Nocturne **(*)

Slovák's account of 14 is one of the finest, strongly characterized in each of the 11 contrasted movements with the help of two superb soloists. Mikuláš is just as strong and individual as in 13, and Hajóssyová, with her firm, Slavonic mezzo, is equally idiomatic. The booklet gives a summary of each poem, but no texts or translations. Full, immediate sound.

This was the symphony which Shostakovich dedicated to Britten, and this Snape Maltings performance of 1970 with the ECO conducted by Britten was the very first outside Russia. Galina Vishnevskaya's sharply distinctive soprano has rarely sounded so rich or firmly focused on disc, and the bass, Mark Rezhetin, firm and dark, sings gloriously too. The tensions of a live performance add to the drama, poignantly so, when both Britten and Shostakovich were facing terminal illness.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Adagio and Allegretto for String Quartet; (i) Piano Quintet, Op. 57; (ii) 2 Pieces for String Octet, Op. 1/1; (i) 5 Pieces for 2 Violins and Piano (arr. Atovmian)

🔑 * Challenge CC 72093. Brodsky Qt (members); with (i) Blackshaw; (ii) Shave, Theaker, Atkins, Baillie; (available from www.challengeclassics.com)

A superb collection. Like the Brodsky's equally recommended coupling of String Quartets by Britten and Tchaikovsky, the sense of spontaneous, live music-making inhabits every bar here. The range of mood is remarkably wide. The early Pieces for String Octet, Op. 1 are as wild and uninhibited as the delightful Pieces for Two Violins and Piano are elegantly tuneful. The deeply expressive Adagio and quirky Allegretto are arrangements of Katerina's aria from Lady Macbeth of the Mtsensk District and the famously witty Polka from The Golden Age ballet. But the key work here is the Piano Quintet, a marvellously concentrated performance. The second movement Fugue-Adagio and the Intermezzo both open with a rapt pianissimo framing the bold, jaunty central Scherzo and leading on to the puissant finale. Excellent recording throughout, although some might think the acoustic for the Quintet gives the piano a rather too resonant image.

Cello Sonata in D min., Op. 40

🔑 (BB)  Virgin 2x1 4 82067-2 (2)-2. Mørk, Vogt – MIASKOVKY; RACHMANINOV; PROKOFIEV: Cello Sonatas; STRAVINSKY: Suite italienne ***

 Chan. 8340. Turovsky, Edlina – PROKOFIEV: Sonata ***

 BIS CD 336. Thedéen, Pöntinen – SCHNITTKE: Sonata; STRAVINSKY: Suite italienne ***

Truls Mørk and Lars Vogt can more than hold their own with the best. The performances are very vital and intelligent, and eminently well recorded and the couplings are astonishingly generous.

Yuli Turovsky and Luba Edlina play the Cello Sonata with great panache and eloquence, if in the finale they almost succumb at times to exaggeration in their handling of its humour – no understatement here.

The Swedish cellist Torleif Thedéen has a real feeling for its structure and the vein of bitter melancholy under its ironic surface. Roland Pöntinen gives him excellent support and the BIS recording does justice to this partnership.

(i) Cello Sonata in D min., Op. 40; Moderato for cello & piano; (ii) Piano Quintet; (iii) 2 Pieces

🔑 (BB)  Double Decca 473 807-2 (2). (i) Harrell; (i; ii) Ashkenazy; (ii; iii) Fitzwilliam Qt – PROKOFIEV: Cello Sonata; RACHMANINOV: Cello Sonata, etc. ***

Lynn Harrell and Vladimir Ashkenazy give a convincing account of the Cello Sonata, though they slow down rather a lot for the second group of the first movement. All the same, their brisk tempo and their freedom from affectation are refreshing. The short Moderato for cello and piano was discovered in the Moscow State Archives only in the 1980s. The Piano Quintet, with Ashkenazy and the Fitzwilliam Quartet, cannot be seriously faulted and withstands comparison with the illustrious Richter and Borodin Quartet version, and the recording is superb. With the highly attractive Two Pieces – the first mysteriously haunting, the second delightfully quirky – also included, this set, with its excellent couplings, is an undoubted bargain.

(i; ii) Cello Sonata; (iii) Violin Sonata; (iv) The Gadfly: Romance; Nocturne

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.557722. (i) Yablonsky; (ii) Saranseva; (iii) Fedotov, Petrova; (iv) Russian PO

The Cello Sonata is a relatively early work, dating from 1934, but the Shostakovich idiom is already clearly established, not only in the sharply rhythmic writing of the fast movements, but also in the darkness and hushed intensity of the third-movement Largo, beautifully brought out by the cellist Dmitry Yablonsky. The Violin Sonata dates from much later in the composer's career (1968), a work inspired by David Oistrakh. It is a masterly work, ending with the last of the Passacaglias which he wrote, an extended, spare and dark piece evoking a mood of disquieting calm in music of high contrasts. Again the performance is masterly, with Maxim Fedotov as violinist. The concertante piece taken from the music to The Gadfly is here just as effective on the cello as in the original version with violin.

Piano Quintet in G min., Op. 57

🔑 (M)  Warner Elatus 2564 60813-2. Leonskaja, Borodin Qt

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.554830-2. Berman, Vermeer Qt – SCHNITTKE: Piano Quintet ***

() Testament mono SBT 1077. Aller, Hollywood Qt – FRANCK: Piano Quintet ()

(M) (*) CRD (ADD) CRD 3351. Benson, Alberni Qt – BRITTEN: Quartet 1 ***

Piano Quintet in G min., Op. 57; Piano Trio 2 in E min., Op. 67

(*) Chan. 8342. Borodin Trio, Zweig, Horner

Piano Quintet in G min., Op. 57; Piano Trio 2 in E min., Op. 67; 4 Waltzes for Flute, Clarinet & Piano

🔑 (BB)  Virgin 2x1 5 61760-2 (2). Nash Ens. – SCHOENBERG: Chamber Symphony, Op. 9, etc. **(*)

The Nash Ensemble on Virgin offer the ideal coupling – plus an interesting makeweight – of two of Shostakovich's key chamber works, written before his quartet series developed, when he had completed only the first, relatively trivial work. The Piano Trio is a particularly painful and anguished work, dedicated to the memory of a close friend, Ivan Sollertinsky, who died in the year of its composition. The Nash players bring out the dedicated intensity in this very personal writing, with refined readings which can be warmly recommended, and the new pairing with Schoenberg makes for a highly intriguing collection, well worth its modest cost. But the Shostakovich items are also available separately on 3 91337-2.

It is luxury casting to have on the Naxos budget label the Vermeer Quartet, one of the finest in America, in partnership with another star artist, Boris Berman. This is a dedicated performance, recorded for Canadian radio, which with fearlessly extreme dynamic contrasts brings out the full greatness of the piece. The Schnittke Piano Quintet of 1972–5 makes an apt and unusual coupling, similarly one of the composer's finest chamber works. The CBC studio recording is acceptable, and if the sound is somewhat wanting in warmth and bloom this is a still a formidable bargain.

With Leonskaja leading, yet still very much a partner, these Teldec performances of the Piano Quintet and Second Trio are very fine indeed, with inspired playing from all concerned. The very wide range of dynamic and string timbre of the Fugue, with the music initially sustained on a thread of tone, moving to a climax and back, has enormous concentration, and the spikier humour of the Scherzo is splendidly pointed. After the poignant Intermezzo, the close of the finale is most subtly managed. Similarly, the valedictory E minor Piano Trio opens with an exquisitely withdrawn pianissimo, and the robust Scherzo has vehement bite.

On Testament is a magisterial account of the Piano Quintet if ever there was one. This belongs among the finest of interpretations. Its praises were sung by the authors of The Record Guide in the mid-1950s when they spoke of it in their down-to-earth manner as 'a dazzling performance and their tone, though often extremely delicate, is never skinny'. Readers who care about Shostakovich should find it an indispensable issue and need make few allowances for the 1952 sound.

The Chandos version is bold in character and concentrated in feeling. Alternatively, there is a vigorous and finely conceived account from Clifford Benson and the Alberni Quartet, vividly recorded; if the Britten coupling is wanted, this will be found fully satisfactory.

Piano Trios 1, Op. 8; 2, Op. 67

🔑  Simax PSC 1147. Grieg Trio – BLOCH: 3 Nocturnes; MARTIN: Piano Trio on Irish Folktunes ***

🔑  Nim. NI 5572. V. Piano Trio – SCHNITTKE: Trio ***

The first of the Shostakovich Piano Trios remained in the obscurity of manuscript, until one of Shostakovich's students, the composer Boris Tischenko, put it into performable shape (20 bars had gone missing). The Grieg Trio play it with vital feeling and sensitivity; its dreamy opening, a kind of impressionistic Schumann, sounds exceptionally convincing in their hands. Moreover, they give as fine an account of the wartime Piano Trio in E minor as any now before the public. The couplings further enhance the value of this issue.

The Vienna Piano Trio on Nimbus also give cogently argued and finely paced accounts of both the Shostakovich trios. The Vienna are among the best and are naturally and vividly recorded. If the 1985 Schnittke Trio appeals as a coupling, this is an eminently desirable recommendation.

Piano Trio 2 in E min., Op. 67

Ⓑ  Decca 475 6712 (2). Bell, Mustonen, Isserlis – PROKOFIEV: Violin Concertos & Sonatas ***

ⒷⒷ (*) Regis Alto ALC 1005. Tirimo, Sayevich, Veis – TCHAIKOVSKY: Piano Trio **(*)

The Decca is a marvellously telling and perceptive account of Shostakovich's masterpiece and is very truthfully balanced. The only snag is the very wide dynamic range of the recording. The opening piano/pianissimo has ethereal concentration, but registers so quietly that the listener is tempted to turn up the volume. If one does, the fortissimos are not quite comfortable, for the microphones are fairly close. But it is possible to get it right and the rewards of the playing are very considerable

A first-class account from Tirimo and his colleagues, recorded in Prague in 2005. The playing is expert, crisp and intense, with the Scherzo engagingly witty. The recording is a bit too close, but vivid and truthful. Coupled with an excellent version of the great Tchaikovsky Trio, this budget disc is worth anyone's money.

2 Pieces for String Octet, Op. 11

 Chan. 9131. ASMF Chamber Ens. – ENESCU: Octet in C; RICHARD STRAUSS: Capriccio: Sextet ***

The Academy of St Martin-in-the-Fields Chamber Ensemble play splendidly and with conviction; they are beautifully recorded and also offer a highly recommendable version of the Enescu Octet.

String Quartets

String Quartets 1–15; (i) Piano Quintet; (ii) 2 Pieces for String Octet, Op. 11

🔑 Ⓑ  Melodiya (ADD) 100177 (6). Borodin Qt; with (i) S. Richter; (ii) Prokofiev Qt

First issued on EMI, then on BMG, the Borodin Quartet's second recording of the String Quartets now reverts to Melodiya and, on six CDs, including the Piano Quintet and the Two Pieces for String Octet, makes a very economical investment when purchased complete. The present recordings are made in a generally drier acoustic than their predecessors, and 3 and 5 suffer noticeably in this respect. However, the transfers are clean and faithful, and the ears quickly adjust when the performances can only be described as masterly. The Borodins possess enormous refinement, an altogether sumptuous tone and a perfection of technical address that is almost in a class of its own – and what wonderful intonation. The Piano Quintet was recorded at a concert at the Moscow Conservatory, and it goes without saying that with Richter at the helm the account is powerful, although the quality of the sound here is noticeably dry and forward. The Two Pieces for String Octet are now added to the second CD.

String Quartets 1–15

🔑 Ⓑ  Fuga Libera FUG512. Danel Qt

String Quartets 1–15; (i) Piano Quintet

 Chan. 10398 (6). Sorrel Qt; (i) with Roscoe

String Quartets 1–15; 3 Pieces for String Quartet, Op. 36

🔑 ⒷⒷ  Regis (ADD) 5001 (5). Shostakovich Qt

String Quartets 1 in C, Op. 49; 2 in A, Op. 68; 3 in F, Op. 73; 4 in D, Op. 83; 5 in B flat, Op. 92; 7 in F sharp min., Op. 108; 2 Pieces, Op. 36 (Regis (ADD) 2028 (2))

String Quartets 6 in G, Op. 101; 8 in C min., Op. 110; 9 in E flat, Op. 117; 10 in A flat, Op. 118; 11 in F min., Op. 122; 15 in E flat min., Op. 144 (Regis (ADD) 2029 (2))

String Quartets 12 in D flat, Op. 133; 13 in B flat min., Op. 138; 14 in F sharp, Op. 142 (Regis (ADD) 1024)

ⒷⒷ  Shostakovich Qt

String Quartets 1–15; Adagio (Elegy after Katerina's Aria from Scene 3 of Lady Macbeth of the Mtsensk District); Allegretto (after Polka from The Age of Gold ballet, Op. 22)

(*) DG 463 284-2 (5). Emerson Qt

The eponymous Shostakovich Quartet recorded a cycle over the period 1978 to 1985 and bring a special intensity to this repertoire as well as effortless technical address, and a tonal blend that gives their readings a strong claim on the collector's allegiance.

The Danel Quartet's survey, recorded by Bayerisches Rundfunk over the period 2001–5 is of the highest quality, thoughtful and inward. The recordings too are very good, though in some instances there is not quite enough air round the sound. But this is a distinguished cycle, offered with exemplary presentation and at budget price.

The Sorrel Quartet are sound and reliable guides in this cycle, and indeed they are often touched with distinction. Given the good recording and competitive price, this offers a useful alternative choice.

If sheer brilliance and virtuosity were all that mattered, the Emerson Quartet would lead the field. Their playing is technically immaculate, with spot-on intonation, accuracy and unanimity of ensemble, but they bring an unrelieved intensity to everything they touch and offer little real repose, when that is called for.

String Quartets 1; 4; 9

🔑 * HM HMC 891865 Jerusalem Qt

Although we are well served in this repertoire, this version by the Jerusalem Quartet is arguably the finest to appear since the days of the Borodin and Fitzwilliam sets in the 1970s. This young group brings tremendous concentration and commitment to the three Quartets recorded here, and even if you have either of the classic sets mentioned above – or indeed the eponymous group on Regis – you should try to hear this illuminating and brilliantly recorded newcomer.

String Quartets 1; 8 & 9 (Naxos 8.550973)

String Quartets 2 in A, Op. 68; 12 in D flat, Op. 133 (Naxos 8.550975)

(BB)  Eder Qt

String Quartets 4; 6–7 (Naxos 8.550972)

(BB)  Eder Qt

The Eder Quartet is a very distinguished ensemble and have a very good feeling for this repertoire, and those for whom economy is a primary concern should consider this.

String Quartets 2; 3; 7; 8; 12

(BB)  Virgin 5 61630-2 (2). Borodin Qt

The third series of Borodin accounts now on a Virgin Double have the benefit of far better and more refined recording than their earlier, Melodiya versions. The sound is richer, cleaner and has a pleasing bloom, as one would expect from the Snape Maltings. As far as the performances are concerned, some things come off better than others so that on balance there is little to choose between the earlier and newer sets; those who have the former need not make a change. This is one of the greatest quartets now before the public and they are completely inside this music.

String Quartets 3 in F, Op. 73; 7 in F sharp min., Op. 108; 8 in C min., Op. 110

🔑 * DG 477 6146. Hagen Qt

 EMI 3 59956-2. St Lawrence Qt

 BIS CD 913. Yggdrasil Qt

Three identical couplings. The Hagens' present coupling is recorded in a sympathetic acoustic (the Grosse Universitäts Aula, Salzburg) and finds them on top form. The Eighth has splendid intensity and they invest the post-war Third (1946) with much feeling.

Generally speaking, the Hagen Quartet are marginally to be preferred to the St Lawrence Quartet, though this ensemble, new to the catalogue, play with great freshness and fervour; their disc will not in any way disappoint those who invest in it.

The Yggdrasil Quartet are a young Swedish group who are now embarking on a Shostakovich cycle. This first issue is an auspicious start with a bold and searching account of the autobiographical Eighth, and intelligent and satisfying readings of its companions.

String Quartets 4; 8 & 11

 ASV CDDCA 631. Coull Qt

The Fourth Quartet is a work of exceptional beauty and lucidity, one of the most haunting of the cycle; the Eleventh Quartet is a puzzling, almost cryptic work in seven short movements. The Coull Quartet are among the most gifted of the younger British quartets and give eminently creditable accounts of all three pieces. Good if slightly overlit recording.

String Quartet 8, Op. 110

Ⓜ  Classic fM 75605 57027-2. Chilingirian Qt – BORODIN: Quartet 2; DVOŘÁK: Quartet in F, Op. 96 ***

On Classic fM the Chilingirians also give a tautly controlled performance, not as flexible as some but with the power enhanced by the rich, immediate digital recording.

String Quartet 15

🔑  ECM 461 815-2. Keller Qt. – SCHNITTKE: Piano Quintet ***

Sorrow drained to the bitterest dregs is how one eminent critic described the Fifteenth Quartet. The Keller Quartet make out a strong case for the work, and they are superbly recorded.

Violin Sonata, Op. 134

🔑  Chan. 8988. Mordkovitch, Benson – PROKOFIEV: Sonatas; SCHNITTKE: In Memoriam ***

(*) Chan. 8343. Dubinsky, Edlina – SCHNITTKE: Sonata 1; etc. *

The Violin Sonata can seem a dry piece, but Mordkovitch's natural intensity, her ability to convey depth of feeling without sentimentality, transforms it. Clifford Benson is the understanding pianist. In first-rate sound it makes a fine central offering for Mordkovitch's well-planned disc of Soviet violin music.

Rostislav Dubinsky's account is also undoubtedly eloquent, and Luba Edlina makes a fine partner. The recording is excellent too, although it is balanced a shade closely.

PIANO MUSIC

Aphorisms, Op. 13; 3 Fantastic Dances, Op. 5; Piano Sonata 1; 24 Preludes, Op. 34

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.555781. Scherbakov

Beautifully recorded at Potton Hall in Suffolk, Konstantin Scherbakov gives thought-provoking and wonderfully controlled accounts of the Op. 34 Preludes. By comparison with Nikolayeva he is at times a little too sophisticated in matters of tonal finesse, and dynamic markings are a shade exaggerated; but this has such imaginative and masterly pianism that readers can afford to overlook the occasional affectation. He plays the whole recital with the keyboard mastery we associate with him. Strongly recommended.

24 Preludes, Op. 34; Prelude & Fugue in D min., Op. 87/24; Piano Sonatas 1, Op. 12; 2 in B min., Op. 61

🔑  Athene ATH CD 18. Clarke

24 Preludes; Piano Sonata 2, Op. 61; 3 Fantastic Dances, Op. 5

🔑  Hyp. CDA 66620. Nikolayeva

Raymond Clarke generously couples the two Sonatas with the aphoristic and witty Preludes, Op. 34, and these new performances are a viable first-choice for anyone coming to this repertoire afresh.

Tatiana Nikolayeva is very well recorded indeed. She is one of the authentic advocates of Shostakovich, and her CD will be a must for most collectors. Recommended alongside Clarke.

24 Preludes and fugues, Op. 87 (DVD version)

Ⓝ  Medici Arts DVD 3085248. Nikolayeva

During the Bach bicentenary year in 1950, Shostakovich heard the Forty-Eight played by the young Tatiana Nikolayeva with such admiration that he composed his own Preludes and Fugues for her. Some 40 years on, she recorded them in Scotland for BBC Television, and her mastery still shines through. Authoritative performances, well recorded and with discreet, intelligent camerawork, this is a set to cherish. There is a short but admirable feature by the artist, setting out the circumstances of their composition.

24 Preludes & Fugues, Op. 87 (CD version)

🔑 ✿ (BB)  Regis RRC 3005 (3). Nikolayeva

In this repertoire, the first choice must inevitably be Tatiana Nikolayeva, 'the onlie begetter', as it were, of the Preludes and Fugues. Her reading has enormous concentration and a natural authority that is majestic. There is wisdom and humanity here, and she finds depths in this music that have eluded most other pianists who have offered samples.

Preludes & Fugues, Op. 87/5 & 24

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 3 45819-2. Gilels – RACHMANINOV: Piano Concerto 3; SAINT-SAËNS: Piano Concerto 2 ***

These two Preludes and Fugues make a fine contrasting encore for Gilels's Rachmaninov and Saint-Saëns Concertos; the Second, the last of the 24, brings a tremendous crescendo and is very commanding indeed. Good recording too.

VOCAL MUSIC

The Execution of Stepan Razin, Op. 119; October: 5 fragments

(BB)  Naxos 8.557812. Charles Robert Austin, Seattle Ch. & SO, Schwarz

The Execution of Stepan Razin is a setting of Yevtushenko and comes two years after the Thirteenth Symphony. It does not have the concentration or emotional intensity of the symphony, but it is well worth hearing. Kondrashin's pioneering recording of 1969 is no longer in circulation; until it returns, this well-played and expertly recorded version will serve well.

Songs: (i) 2 Fables of Krylov; From Jewish Folk Poetry, Op. 79a; 6 Poèmes d'Alexandre Blok, Op. 127; 6 Poems of Marina Tsvetayeva, Op. 143; 3 Romances on Poems by Pushkin, Op. 46; 6 Romances, Op. 62/140; 6 Romances on Texts by Japanese Poets, Op. 21; Suite of Verses of Michelangelo Buonarroti, Op. 145a; 4 Verses of Captain Lebyadkin; (ii) Lady Macbeth of Mtsensk District (opera; complete)

🔑 * Ⓑ Decca 475 7441 (5). (i) Leiferkus, Orgonasova, Levinsky, Zaremba, Fischer-Dieskau, Söderström, Shirley-Quirk, with Ashkenazy (piano) or Gothenburg SO, Järvi; (ii) Ewing, Haugland, Langridge, Larin, Ciesinski, Zednik, Bastille Op. Ch. & O, Chung

An outstanding compilation of Shostakovich's songs, as well as Myung-Whun Chung's superb version of Lady Macbeth of Mtsensk. Shostakovich's songs brim with character and nuance: the first two CDs are with Neeme Järvi and the Gothenburg Orchestra, and the accompaniments are of as much interest and importance as the vocal lines themselves. Järvi coaxes playing which is both atmospheric and sensitive and this is very much one of the main joys of these recordings. The soloists are characterful and distinguished. Ashkenazy provides excellent accompaniments for both the Fischer-Dieskau and John Shirley-Quirk items on the third CD and the Söderström recordings, with violin, cello and piano, are quite superb, with haunting, spine-tingling atmosphere in the quiet numbers and plenty of drama in the lively ones. Myung-Whun Chung's performance of Lady Macbeth of Mtsensk is very successful too and the most moving account on disc. Maria Ewing gives a vulnerable portrayal of her character in this 1992, (originally) DG recording with moods and responses subtly varied. As a heroine, she is insinuatingly seductive in singing that is far more sensuous, with the beauty of tone and hushed pianissimos most tenderly affecting. Sergei Larin as Katerina's labourer-lover equally gains by sounding more aptly youthful, with his tenor sounding both firm and clear yet Slavic-sounding. Aage Haugland is magnificent as Boris, Katerina's father-in-law, and Philip Langridge sings sensitively as her husband, Zinovi, while Kurt Moll as the Old Convict provides emotional focus in his important solo at the start of the last Act. The recording is atmospheric. Texts and translations are provided in this handsome bargain set.

OPERA

The Gamblers

Ⓝ  AVIE 2121 (2). RLPO, Petrenko

Based on a play of Gogol, Shostakovich wrote this fragment of an opera during the war, but failed to complete it. What we have here is very promising, with sharp focus in the typical hard-edged themes. Petrenko proves a powerful advocate with the RLPO.

Lady Macbeth of Mtsensk (DVD version)

🔑  Opus Arte DVD OA 0965 D (2). Westbrook, Ventris, Wilson, Vaneev, Ludha, Netherlands Op. Ch., Concg. O, Jansons (Dir: Martin Kusej; V/D: Ferenc van Damme)

Mariss Jansons, an inspired interpreter of Shostakovich, conducts a searingly dramatic performance of Lady Macbeth of Mtsensk (the violent original score, not the rewrite, Katerina Ismaelova) with the glorious sounds of the Royal Concertgebouw Orchestra bringing beauty as well as power. The casting is strong, with Eva-Maria Westbrook in the title-role bringing out the poignancy of her situation, as her love for the workman, Sergei, turns sour and finally tragic, a role well sung and acted by Christopher Ventris. Outstanding too is the dark and sinister bass, Vladimir Vaneev, as the evil father-in-law, Boris. As her husband, Zinovy, the character tenor Ludovico Ludha is ideally cast, as is the Chief of Police, sung by Nikita Storajev. The production is updated, generally effectively, but with various oddities resulting.

Lady Macbeth of Mtsensk (complete; CD Version)

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * EMI (ADD) 5 67776-2 (2). Vishnevskaya, Gedda, Petkov, Finnilä, Krenn, Tear, Malta, Valjakka, Amb. Op. Ch., LPO, Rostropovich

Rostropovich, in his finest recording ever, proves with thrilling conviction that this first version of Shostakovich's greatest work for the stage is among the most original operas of the century. Vishnevskaya is inspired to give an outstanding performance and provides moments of great beauty alongside aptly coarser singing; Gedda matches her well, totally idiomatic. As the sadistic father-in-law, Petkov is magnificent, particularly in his ghostly return, and there are fine contributions from Robert Tear, Werner Krenn, Birgit Finnilä and Alexander Malta.

The Nose

Ⓝ  Mariinsky 0501 (2). Sulimsky, Tanovitski, Semishkur, Skorokhodov, Mariinsky O & Ch., Gergiev

With a cast drawn entirely from the Mariinsky company under its long-time Music Director, Valeri Gergiev, this first issue on the Mariinsky's own label is a resounding success. Though the recording, directed by James Mallinson, was made in the company's concert hall, the performance of this satirical opera based on Gogol plainly reflects the company's experience in the opera-house, very important when timing is so vital. This is an early work of the composer, with percussion very prominent along with the typical motor rhythms of early Shostakovich. The pay-off in Act III brings a powerful swipe on the bass drum, vividly caught.

SIBELIUS, Jean (1865–1957)

Andante festivo (for strings & timpani); The Bard; (i) Violin Concerto, Op. 47; En Saga (revised 1902); (ii) Karelia Suite (includes Ballade); Kuolema: Valse triste; The Oceanides; Pohjola's Daughter; Porilaisen Marssi (arr. Sibelius); Tapiola; The Wood Nymph

Ⓜ  BIS CD 1557/8. Lahti SO, Vänskä; with (i) Kavakos; (ii) Laukka

This is the third collection of Sibelius's shorter orchestral works from Osmo Vänskä, plus of course the mature Violin Concerto of 1905, which he and Kavakos have already recorded successfully, coupled to the earlier, 1903/4 version. Some of the other works here are also duplicated on the earlier discs, including En Saga, The Oceanides, Pohjola's Daughter, Tapiola, and The Wood Nymph. The March of the Pori Regiment is orchestrated from a traditional melody used by the Finnish armed forces for their parades. Karelia comes with a sung version of the Ballade by Raimo Laukka. While not all these performances are first choices (notably The Oceanides), Vänskä and his fine orchestra are thoroughly at home in this repertoire, and the recording is first class. If you want this particular group of works, this set is excellent value.

Andante festivo; The Bard; Canzonetta, Op. 62a; En Saga; Finlandia; Karelia Suite; King Christian II (Suite), Op. 27; Kuolema: Valse triste; Scene with Cranes, Op. 44/1–2; 4 Legends, Op. 22; (i) Luonnotar, Op. 70; Night Ride and Sunrise, Op. 55; 4 Legends, Op. 22; The Oceanides, Op. 73; Pohjola's Daughter; Spring Song, Op. 16; Tapiola, Op. 112; Valse romantique, Op. 62b

🔑 Ⓑ * DG Trio 477 5522 (3). Gothenberg SO, Järvi; (i) with Isokoski

This impeccably recorded, bargain-priced Trio groups together three separate CD collections of Sibelius's orchestral works, each of which has been highly praised by us. It includes one of the best accounts of The Oceanides we have had since the celebrated Beecham version, and a first-class Luonnotar. The Bard is brooding and mysterious, the Canzonetta for strings and Valse triste have great poetry, and the Scene with Cranes is full of atmosphere. Järvi gives a passionate and atmospheric reading of the first Legend, and his account of The Swan of Tuonela is altogether magical, one of the best in the catalogue. He takes a broader view of Lemminkäinen in Tuonela than many of his rivals and builds up an appropriately black and powerful atmosphere. The disappointment is Lemminkäinen's Homeward Journey, which lacks the possessed, manic quality of Beecham's very first record (see below), which sounded as if a thousand demons were in pursuit. However, Tapiola is a great success: Järvi produces a performance of commanding power, and the unhurried (and all the more terrifying) storm is judged excellently. En Saga, on the other hand, fares less well and at times seems almost matter of fact, although the introspective, quieter sections in the middle and closing paragraphs are evocative. Spring Song also borders on the routine – but then so does the music. Certainly overall this is an estimable survey, and the modern digital sound and truthful balance are equally commendable.

(i) Andante festivo; (ii) En Saga; (iii) Pohjola's Daughter; (iv) Rakastava; Impromptu

() Ondine mono/stereo ODE 992-2. (i) Finnish RSO, Composer; (ii) Swedish RSO, Franck; (iii) Tampere PO, Ollila; (iv) Virtuosi di Kuhmo, Czaba – KAJANUS: Aino ***

Though, unlike Svendsen and Nielsen, Sibelius was not a conductor by profession, he was a highly effective interpreter of his own music. The Andante festivo is the only surviving recording of him conducting and he draws playing of great intensity. (An earlier account attributed to him was in fact a recording of a rehearsal under Tauno Hannikainen.) Mikko Franck's version of En Saga is both concentrated and atmospheric. There is a more than serviceable account of Pohjola's Daughter and an affecting Rakastava, while the Impromptu is an arrangement for strings of two early piano pieces, Op. 5. The bonus is a rarity, the 1991 recording under Jorma Panula of Aino by Sibelius's great champion, Robert Kajanus, which was the spark that kindled the flame that led to Sibelius's Kullervo Symphony.

Autrefois (Scène pastorale), Op. 96b; The Bard, Op. 64; Presto in D for Strings; Spring Song, Op. 16; Suite caractéristique, Op. 100; Suite champêtre, Op. 98b; Suite mignonne, Op. 98a; Valse chevaleresque, Op. 96c; Valse lyrique, Op. 96a

 BIS CD 384. Gothenburg SO, Järvi

A mixed bag. The Bard is Sibelius at his greatest and most powerful, and it finds Järvi at his best. The remaining pieces are all light: some of the movements of the Suite mignonne and Suite champêtre could come straight out of a Tchaikovsky ballet, and Järvi does them with great charm. The last thing that the Suite, Op. 100, can be called is caractéristique, while the three pieces, Op. 96, find Sibelius in Viennese waltz mood. The rarity is Autrefois, which has a beguiling charm and is by far the most haunting of these pastiches. Sibelius introduces two sopranos and their vocalise is altogether captivating. The Presto in D major for Strings is a transcription – and a highly effective one – of the third movement of the B flat Quartet, Op. 4. Excellent recording.

BIS Sibelius Edition, Volume 1: Tone-Poems: The Bard; The Dryad; En Saga; Finlandia (with preliminary version: Finland Awakes); 4 Lemminkäinen Legends (original & final versions); Luonnotar (with Helena Juntunen); Night Ride & Sunrise; The Oceanides; Tapiola; Pohjola's Daughter; The Wood Nymph; Cassione; Dance Intermezzo (with preliminary version); In Memoriam; Scènes historiques I & II; Spring Song (with preliminary version)

(B)  BIS-CD 1900/02 (5). Lahti SO, Vänskä; or Gothenburg SO, Neeme Järvi

This set collects together the major orchestral works in thoroughly recommendable performances, given first-class BIS recordings and offered at a very reasonable price.

The Bard, Op. 64; En Saga, Op. 9; Finlandia, Op. 26; Legend: Lemminkäinen's Return, Op. 22; Symphony 4 in A min., Op. 63

🔑 (BB) () Naxos mono 8.110867. LPO, Beecham

The merits of these classic recordings are too well known to require further exegesis. The transfers by Mark Obert-Thorn are very good indeed (though so were the earlier, HMV issues by Anthony Griffith) and can be confidently recommended.

Belshazzar's Feast, Op. 51: Suite. Canzonetta, Op. 62a; Kuolema: Scene with Cranes; Valse triste, Op. 44/1–2. Night Ride and Sunrise, Op. 55; Pan and Echo, Op. 53; 2 Pieces, Op.45; Valse romantique, Op. 62b

(N) (BB)  Naxos 8.570763. New Zealand SO, Inkinen

This is the Finnish conductor Pietari Inkinen's second Sibelius anthology with the excellent New Zealand Symphony Orchestra, and for the most part he again stays off the beaten path. The Canzonetta and Valse romantique are little more than salon pieces, but his delicacy of feeling gives them status. Pan and Echo and the engaging Suite from Belshazzar's Feast are more substantial and, like the masterly Night Ride and Sunrise, are played with splendid idiomatic feeling. The favourite Valse triste once again, in its charm, shows just why it is a favourite. First-class recording completes the listener's pleasure in an anthology that is worth every penny of its modest cost.

Belshazzar's Feast (suite), Op. 54; Dance Intermezzo, Op. 45/2; The Dryad, Op. 45/1; Pan and Echo, Op. 53; Swanwhite, Op. 54

🔑 * BIS CD 359. Gothenburg SO, Järvi

Belshazzar's Feast, a beautifully atmospheric piece of orientalism, and the incidental music for Strindberg's Swanwhite may not be Sibelius at his most powerful, but both include wonderful things. Neeme Järvi's collection with the Gothenburg Orchestra is first class in every way.

The Breaking of the Ice on the Oulo River; Press Celebrations Music; Song of the Athenians

 BIS CD 1115. Lahti SO, Vänskä

A recording which will be of compelling interest for all Sibelians. It contains the music Sibelius composed for a pageant in 1899, the so-called Press Celebrations Music, from which he later fashioned the first set of Historic Scenes and Finlandia. In all there is some 40 minutes of music. Here we have Sibelius's original thoughts, as well as a Prelude for Wind Instruments and two movements which he left in manuscript. Not all of it is top-drawer Sibelius, but the fifth tableau is powerful and atmospheric, and it is surprising that he made no effort to reshape it and include it with the other Historic Scenes. The third tableau is the original version of the Boléro, which Sibelius revised in 1900 and then again in 1911 as Festivo. There are other rarities from the same period, including The Breaking of the Ice on the Oulo River, all worth hearing and given an excellent performance by Osmo Vänskä and the Lahti Symphony Orchestra and first-rate recorded sound.

Cassazione, Op. 6 (first version); Coronation March; Cortège; Morceau romantique sur un motif de Monsieur Jakob de Julin; Musik zu einer Scene; The Oceanides, Op. 73 (final and Yale versions). Spring Song. Trad.: March of the People of Pori (arr. Sibelius)

 BIS CD 1445. Lahti SO, Vänskä

Osmo Vänskä and the Lahti Symphony Orchestra add to their outstanding Sibelius series with this fascinating collection of rarities, centring on The Oceanides, the only item here that has been recorded before. The original MS eventually found its way into the Yale University Library and, although its existence has long been known to scholars, it makes its début on record. So, too, do two further MS pieces which Sibelius himself called 'Fragments for a Suite for Orchestra/Predecessor of The Oceanides'.

The Oceanides is one of Sibelius's greatest tone-poems and the Yale MS gives a fascinating glimpse of its gestation. Originally called Rondo of the Waves, it presents the material in an unexpected order, with what became the main theme set nearer the middle and with the stormy climax even more of a culmination than in the final version, making the result more dramatic.

Otherwise, the most substantial work here is the Cassazione, which in this original version of 1904 uses a bigger orchestra than what became Op. 6. The first version contains a quite ethereal episode for wind. The tiny Morceau romantique, written for a charity concert, whose opening bars sound almost like Rachmaninov, becomes a jolly waltz movement. The Coronation March of 1896, which comes from the music Sibelius composed for Tsar Nicholas II, is unlike any coronation march you have ever heard. Spring Song of 1895 is uninhibitedly melodic, and Cortège in a polonaise rhythm is rather like the Karelia Suite. Trivial or not, it makes compelling listening, helped by masterly performances and beautifully balanced recording. This is a most interesting and rewarding issue, excellently annotated.

Cassazione, Op. 6; Preludio; The Tempest: Prelude & Suites 1–2, Op. 109; Tiera

🔑  BIS CD 448. Gothenburg SO, Järvi

Järvi's recording of Sibelius's incidental music to The Tempest is among the most atmospheric since Beecham and, though it does not surpass the latter in pieces like The Oak-Tree or the Chorus of the Winds, it is still very good. The Cassazione resembles the King Christian II music in character, but it is well worth having on disc. Neither Tiera nor the Preludio, both from the 1890s, is of great interest or particularly characteristic.

Violin Concerto in D min. (1903–4 version); Violin Concerto in D min., Op. 47 (1905; published version)

🔑 Ⓜ  BIS CD 300500. Kavakos, Lahti SO, Vänskä

The first performance of the Violin Concerto left Sibelius dissatisfied, and he immediately withdrew it for revision. This CD presents Sibelius's initial thoughts so that for the first time we can see the familiar final version struggling to emerge from the chrysalis. Comparison of the two Concertos makes a fascinating study: the middle movement is the least affected by change, but the outer movements are both longer in the original score, and the whole piece takes almost 40 minutes. The Greek violinist Leonidis Kavakos proves more than capable of handling the hair-raising difficulties of the 1904 version and is an idiomatic exponent of the definitive concerto. The Lahti Orchestra under Osmo Vänskä give excellent support and the balance is natural and realistic. An issue of exceptional interest and value.

Violin Concerto in D min., Op. 47 (CD versions)

🔑 ❀ Ⓜ * Sony SMK 89748. Lin, Philh. O, Salonen – NIELSEN: Violin Concerto *** ❀

🔑 * HM Naïve V 4959. Sergey Khachaturian, Sinfonia Varsovia, Krivine – KHACHATURIAN: Violin Concerto ***

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca 475 7734. Chung, LSO, Previn – TCHAIKOVSKY: Violin Concerto ***

🔑 Ⓜ  RCA (ADD) 82876 66372-2. Heifetz, Chicago SO, Hendl – GLAZUNOV: Concerto; PROKOFIEV: Concerto 2 ***

 EMI 5 56418-2. Chang, BPO, Jansons – MENDELSSOHN: Violin Concerto in E min ***

Ⓜ  Ph. 464 741-2. Mullova, Boston SO, Ozawa – TCHAIKOVSKY: Violin Concerto **(*)

Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 62590-2. Perlman, Pittsburgh SO, Previn – KORNGOLD: Concerto; SINDING: Suite ***

 EMI 7 54559-2. Kennedy, CBSO, Rattle – TCHAIKOVSKY: Concerto **(*)

 Erato 4509-98537-2. Repin, LSO, Krivine – TCHAIKOVSKY: Violin Concerto ****

Ⓜ () EMI mono 4 76830-2. Neveu, Philh. O, Susskind – BRAHMS: Violin Concerto ()

(BB)  Naxos 8.550329. Kang, Slovak (Bratislava) RSO, Leaper – HALVORSEN: Air norvégien, etc.; SINDING: Légende ; SVENDSEN: Romance ***

(BB) ((*)) Naxos mono 8.110938. Heifetz, LPO, Beecham – TCHAIKOVSKY: Violin Concerto; WIENIAWSKI: Violin Concerto 2 in D min. ()

Ⓜ (*) Warner Elatus 0927 46743-2. Vengerov, Chicago SO, Barenboim – TCHAIKOVSKY: Violin Concerto ****

Violin Concerto; 2 Serenades, Op. 69; Humoresque 1 in D min., Op. 87/1

 DG 447 895-2. Mutter, Dresden State O, Previn

Violin Concerto; Serenade 2 in G min.

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.557266. Kraggerud, Bournemouth SO, Engeset – SINDING: Violin Concerto, etc. ***

(i) Violin Concerto; The Tempest: Prelude; Suites 1 & 2, Op. 109

 Häns. 98353. (i) Sitkovetsky; ASMF, Marriner

Cho-Liang Lin's playing is distinguished not only by flawless intonation and an apparently effortless virtuosity but also by great artistry. He produces a glorious sonority at the opening and the slow movement has tenderness, warmth and yet restraint with not a hint of over-heated emotions. Lin encompasses the extrovert brilliance of the finale and the bravura of the cadenza with real mastery. The Philharmonia Orchestra rise to the occasion under Esa-Pekka Salonen, and the recording is first class.

Sergey Khachaturian comes from a famous Armenian musical family and in 2000 he won first prize in the Jean Sibelius competition in Helsinki. His account of the Concerto, although opening ethereally, is full of Slavic feeling, with the slow movement passionately intense. It is a powerfully spontaneous performance, very well accompanied by the excellent Polish Sinfonia Varsovia, and excellently recorded. The coupling is an outstanding account of the (underrated) Khachaturian Violin Concerto.

Kyung-Wha Chung's feeling for the Sibelius Concerto is second to none, and Previn's accompanying cannot be praised too highly: it is poetic when required, restrained and full of controlled vitality and well-defined detail. The Kingsway Hall recording is superbly balanced.

Heifetz's stereo performance of the Sibelius Concerto with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra under Walter Hendl set the standard by which others have come to be judged. It is one of his finest recordings; in remastered SACD form the sound is vivid, the Chicago ambience making an apt setting for the finely focused violin line.

In her live recording, made at a concert in the Philharmonie, Sarah Chang gives an astonishingly mature reading of the Sibelius. She may not be as passionate as her fellow-Korean, Kyung-Wha Chung, but with sweet, refined tone the thoughtfulness and spontaneous poetry of the playing make her comparably magnetic. Warm, atmospheric sound.

Viktoria Mullova's account of the Concerto is very successful, capturing its magical element right from the very opening, while the slow movement has a cool dignity that is impressive. What this concerto needs above all else is finesse and a certain aristocratic feeling, as well as warmth, which is free of the Zigeuner element, and Mullova meets these combined needs admirably. The recording is excellent.

Where most violinists treat the opening as a deep meditation, Mutter makes it tougher than usual, less beautiful, using momentarily a vibratoless, slightly steely tone. Not that her reading lacks inner qualities for, despite the close balance, the opening of the slow movement finds Mutter playing in rapt meditation on a half-tone. In the finale, taken fast, power is again the keynote. Previn draws a committed performance from an orchestra not noted for playing Sibelius. In the two Serenades, Mutter, at her most inspired, beautifully captures the wayward, quasi-improvisatory quality of these pieces.

Perlman plays the work as a full-blooded virtuoso showpiece, and the Pittsburgh Orchestra under Previn support him to the last man and woman. In the first movement his tempo is broader than that of Heifetz, and in the rest of the work he is more expansive than he was on the earlier record. Perlman is at his stunning best in the first cadenza and he makes light of the fiendish difficulties with which the solo part abounds. He takes a conventional view of the slow movement, underlining its passion, and he gives an exhilarating finale. As usual with this artist, the balance places him rather forward, but the sound is marvellously alive, the CD transfer making the forward balance even more apparent.

Sitkovetsky's is a fine reading, positive, powerful and direct, with no suspicion of self-indulgence. With Marriner and the Academy in fresh, clear partnership, this is a performance that, warmly expressive as it is, keeps tempi steadier and less volatile than most. In terms of length, the incidental music for The Tempest, with 18 brief movements, is the major item here. Thanks to the vividness of the recording, the originality of this late Sibelius inspiration comes over even more strikingly than usual. Marriner reveals the charm of the dance rhythms in such colourful genre movements as Caliban's Songs in Suite 1 and the Dance of the Nymphs in Suite 2

Throughout, Nigel Kennedy's intonation is true and he takes all the technical hurdles of this concerto in his stride. There is a touch of the zigeuner throb in the slow movement, but on the whole he plays with real spirit and panache. This can be confidently recommended if the coupling with the Tchaikovsky, a rather more indulgent performance, is suitable. The playing of the Birmingham Orchestra is excellent throughout as, indeed, is the EMI recording.

The purity and refinement of Vadim Repin's playing are what strike one first in his earlier recording with Krivine. The withdrawn darkness at the very start quickly opens out thrillingly to reveal his total command, the tautness of his control, with tone sharply focused. Here is a young artist who, for all the brilliance of his virtuosity, regularly keeps a degree of emotion in reserve, his very restraint adding to the intensity. The speed in the finale is thrillingly fast, yet Repin with light attack brings out the scherzando element as well as the passion.

Ginette Neveu's celebrated performance – her first concerto recording, from 1945 – is magnetic from the opening phrase onwards.

Heifetz made his first historic recording of the Sibelius Violin Concerto with Beecham in 1935, a reading that set standards in virtuosity for generations to come. Next to many later recordings, it may be short on mystery, but the passion as well as the brilliance of the playing is very clear, with Beecham a challenging partner. The Naxos transfer is well balanced but the surface hiss is intrusive at times. But despite Sir Thomas's direction, Heifetz gave the more powerful account of it in his later, Chicago, recording with Walter Hendl in the early days of stereo. (The reverse was the case with the Glazunov.)

Dong-Suk Kang chooses some popular Scandinavian repertoire pieces, such as the charming Svendsen Romance in G, as makeweights. His version of the Concerto is very fine, though the slow movement could do with more tenderness as opposed to passion. There is splendid virtuosity and authoritative playing in the outer movements. The orchestral playing is very acceptable too.

Henning Kraggerud also gives a powerful, red-blooded reading of the Sibelius Violin Concerto, treating it as a work very much in the great Romantic tradition. He may lack some of the deeper, more inward qualities that the very finest versions possess, but, with an unusual and very attractive coupling, it stands out among the bargain recommendations. The poignant G minor Serenade is also well served.

Maxim Vengerov's Chicago account is dazzling and brilliant. He is much and rightly admired, but here he seems insensitive to the special atmosphere of this work. It is all too glib and flashy. Barenboim draws good playing from the Chicago Orchestra, and the recording is very full-bodied and pleasant. The Tchaikovsky coupling is a different matter – inspired in every way.

(i) En Saga, Op. 9; Finlandia; (ii) Karelia Suite; (i) Legend: The Swan of Tuonela, Op. 22/2; Tapiola, Op. 112

Ⓜ (*) EMI ADD/DDD EMI 4 76846 [476847]. BPO, Karajan

Karajan's En Saga is more concerned with narrative than with atmosphere to start with; the climax is very exciting and the lento assai section and the coda are quite magical. Tapiola is broader and more expansive than the first DG version; at the storm section the more spacious tempo is vindicated, and the climax is electrifying. The Swan of Tuonela is most persuasively done. These recordings date from 1977. The later, digital recording of Karelia has been added for the current reissue.

En Saga; Karelia Suite; Kuolema: Valse triste; Pohjola's Daughter; Tapiola

🔑 * Australian Ph. Eloquence (ADD) 476 2817. Boston SO, Colin Davis

Beautifully refined and imaginative performances from the Boston Orchestra, with a particularly distinguished account of Pohjola's Daughter; indeed, it ranks with the very finest ever recorded; Sir Colin Davis's maiden has real allure, Väinämöinen's struggles with his various tasks have never been more heroic. The relaxed pace of the Karelia Suite works very well, the Intermezzo delightful with its unforced yet genuine rhythmic lift which carries one along. There is tremendous atmosphere in these recordings; Tapiola is full of mystery and power and, like the rest of the programme, is superbly done. Colin Davis is a born Sibelian and the Boston orchestra play magnificently for him. A very welcome return to the catalogue.

En Saga; Scènes historiques, Opp. 25, 66

 BIS CD 295. Gothenburg SO, Järvi

Järvi has the advantage of modern digital sound and the Gothenburg Orchestra is fully inside the idiom of this music and plays very well indeed. En Saga is exciting and well paced.

Finlandia; Kuolema: Valse triste; Legend: The Swan of Tuonela, Op. 22/2

 DG 439 010-2. BPO, Karajan – GRIEG: Holberg Suite, etc. ***

Coupled with Grieg, this is Karajan at his very finest in the early 1980s, and the remastered digital recording is impressively real and present, particularly in the languorous Valse triste and in The Swan, Karajan's third and final account on record, powerful in its brooding atmosphere. There is a touch of brashness in the brass in Finlandia, but generally this Berlin–Karajan partnership has never been surpassed.

Finlandia, Op. 26; Kuolema, Op. 44: Valse triste; Legend: The Swan of Tuonela, Op. 22/2; Pelléas et Mélisande: Suite, Op. 46; Tapiola, Op. 112

🔑 ❀ Ⓑ * DG (ADD/DDD) 2-CD 474 269-2 (2). BPO, Karajan – GRIEG: Holberg Suite, etc. ****

Karajan's Pelléas can compare with the classic Beecham version. Indeed, in certain movements, By the spring in the park and the Pastorale, it not only matches Sir Thomas but almost surpasses him. The Pastorale is altogether magical and there is plenty of mystery in the third movement, At the seashore, omitted by Beecham. The recording here is in the demonstration bracket and this bargain coupling with Grieg cannot be recommended too highly.

(i) Humoresque, Op. 87/1 (1st version); In memoriam (2 versions); Legend: Lemminkäinen in Tuonela, Op. 22/3 (reconstructed 1896 version); 3 Pieces, Op. 96; Presto for Strings; (ii) 2 Serious Melodies, Op. 77

 BIS-CD 1485. (i) Kuusisto; (ii) Ylönen; Lahti SO, Vänska

The first ideas of In memoriam date from 1905, but Sibelius did not return to it until late in 1909. Even then he was seized with doubts, particularly concerning the orchestration, and the two versions offer an illuminating study in his compositional processes. In the original suite, Lemminkäinen in Tuonela was placed before The Swan of Tuonela (hence the numbering), the order being reversed for the 1897 revision. When Vänskä recorded the Suite in 1999 he included as an appendix the original versions of the first and fourth Legends as well as a brief excerpt from Lemminkäinen in Tuonela. Now enough of the score and parts have come to light to enable the reconstruction of the complete original, and Sibelians will be able to compare Sibelius's first thoughts (or something closely approaching them) with his final 1939 revision. Impressive playing and recording.

(i) Six Humoresques, Op. 87 & 89; 2 Serenades, Op. 69; 2 Serious Melodies, Op. 79; Ballet Scene (1891); Overture in E (1891)

🔑 * BIS CD 472. (i) Kang, Gothenburg SO, Järvi

The Humoresques are among Sibelius's most inspired smaller pieces. They are poignant as well as virtuosic and have a lightness of touch, a freshness and a sparkle. The two Serenades have great poetic feeling and a keen Nordic melancholy. They are wonderfully played by this distinguished Korean artist, who is beautifully accompanied. The two orchestral works are juvenilia, which predate the Kullervo Symphony. There are some characteristic touches, but Sibelius himself did not think well enough of them to permit their publication. All the violin pieces, however, are to be treasured, and the recording is top class.

King Christian II (suite); Pelléas et Mélisande (suite), Op. 46; Swanwhite (suite; excerpts), Op. 54

🔑  Chan. 9158. Iceland SO, Sakari

The King Christian II music is a winner and full of the most musical touches. It also includes a previously unrecorded Minuet and the Fool's Song, excellently sung by Sauli Tiilikainen. Although the Pelléas et Mélisande suite does not displace either Beecham or Karajan, it makes a useful alternative to either – and that is praise indeed! It has plenty of atmosphere and, though tempi are on the slow side, there is always plenty of inner life. The Swanwhite (five movements only) is attentive to refinements of phrasing and dynamics and at the same time free from the slightest trace of narcissism. Beautifully natural recording, warm and well balanced.

King Christian II Suite, Op. 27; Scènes historiques: 1, Op. 25; 2, Op. 66

(BB)  Naxos 8.570068. New Zealand SO, Inkinen

The first set of Scènes historiques was drawn from the patriotic pageant mounted in 1899 that included the celebrated Finlandia which served to put Sibelius firmly on the map. The second is much later and includes the poetic vignette, At the drawbridge and The Chase. All of them show Sibelius at his most characteristic. The incidental music for King Christian II, a play by his friend Adolf Paul, also comes from the late 1890s. The New Zealanders are thoroughly in sympathy with Sibelius's world and play with enthusiasm for their Finnish conductor.

Four Legends from the Kalevala (Lemminkäinen suite), Op. 22; Lemminkäinen and the Maidens of Saari; Lemminkäinen's Homeward Journey (1896 versions); Second ending of Lemminkäinen's Homeward Journey (1897 version); Excerpt from Lemminkäinen in Tuonela (1896 version)

 BIS. CD 1015. Lahti SO, Vänskä

BIS continues its exploration of the first version of Sibelius's orchestral scores by bringing us the 1896 version of the former and also the first, much longer score of Lemminkäinen's Homeward Journey. This is very nearly twice as long as the definitive version and considerably less effective. The first Legend underwent a particularly fascinating transformation. The disc also offers the alternative 1897 ending of Lemminkäinen's Homeward Journey and an excerpt from Lemminkäinen in Tuonela, which Sibelius excised. The finished work is played in exemplary fashion by Osmo Vänskä and his Lahti Orchestra and superbly recorded. The Swan of Tuonela is highly evocative and way up there among the best.

Four Legends, Op. 22

 BIS CD 294. Gothenburg SO, Neeme Järvi

Four Legends; The Bard; (i) Luonnotar

Ⓜ  Chan. (ADD) 6586. SNO, Gibson; (i) with Bryn-Johnson

Four Legends; Tapiola

🔑 * Ondine ODE 852-2. Helsinki PO, Segerstam

Although Segerstam perversely ignores Sibelius's instructions about the order of the Legends (so, for that matter, did Salonen), this is of little moment, given the fact that collectors can easily reprogramme the disc. The performances of both the Legends and Tapiola are first class and are infinitely preferable to the symphony cycle Segerstam recorded in Copenhagen for Chandos. This is now a first recommendation for the Legends, while Tapiola is one of the best since Karajan.

Neeme Järvi has the advantage of fine, modern digital sound and a wonderfully truthful balance. He gives a passionate and atmospheric reading of the first Legend, and his account of The Swan of Tuonela is altogether magical, one of the best in the catalogue. He takes a broader view of Lemminkäinen in Tuonela than many of his rivals and builds up an appropriately black and powerful atmosphere. The disappointment is Lemminkäinen's Homeward Journey, which lacks the possessed, manic quality of Beecham's very first record.

Gibson comes at mid-price and offers sensitive performances of The Bard and Luonnotar, where the soprano voice is made to seem like another orchestral instrument. The Scottish Orchestra play freshly and with much commitment. The Swan of Tuonela has a darkly brooding primeval quality, and there is an electric degree of tension in the third piece, Lemminkäinen in Tuonela. The two outer Legends have ardent rhythmic feeling, and altogether this is highly successful. The recorded sound is excellent.

Rakastava (suite), Op. 14; Scènes historiques, Opp. 25, 66; Valse lyrique, Op. 96/1

🔑 Ⓜ * Chan. 6591. RSNO, Gibson

Derived from music for a patriotic pageant, the first set of Scènes historiques are vintage Sibelius. In the Love Song Gibson strikes the right blend of depth and reticence, while elsewhere he conveys a fine sense of controlled power. Convincing and eloquent performances that have a natural feeling for the music. Gibson's Rakastava is beautifully unforced and natural, save for the last movement, which is a shade too slow. The Valse lyrique is not good Sibelius, but everything else certainly is. Gibson plays this repertoire with real commitment, and the recorded sound is excellent, with the orchestral layout, slightly distanced, most believable.

Scaramouche, Op. 71; The Language of the Birds: Wedding March

🔑  BIS CD 502. Gothenburg SO, Järvi

Scaramouche, Sibelius's only ballet, is scored for relatively small forces, including piano (not unlike Strauss's music for Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme), and at its best it reminds one of the luminous colourings of the Humoresques of five years later. A wistful, gentle and haunting score, often inspired though slightly let down by its uneventful second act. Sibelius did not think highly enough of the Wedding March to Adolf Paul's play, The Language of the Birds, to give it an opus number, but it is in fact quite an attractive miniature. The playing of the Gothenburg Orchestra under Neeme Järvi is altogether excellent and so, too, is the BIS recording.

SYMPHONIES

Symphonies 1–7; Finlandia, Op. 26; Karelia Suite, Op. 11; Kuolema: Valse triste, Op. 44/1. Rakastava, Op. 16; The Swan of Tuonela, Op. 22/2; Tapiola, Op. 112

Ⓝ * Exton OVCL-00279 (Symphonies 1 & 3; Rakastava); OVCL 00292 (Symphony 2; Swan of Tuonela; Tapiola); OVCL 00282 (Symphonies 4 & 5; Finlandia); OVCL 00293 (Symphonies 6 & 7; Karelia Suite; Valse triste) (available separately) Royal Stockholm PO, Ashkenazy

These performances come from a cycle Vladimir Ashkenazy gave in Stockholm in 2006–7, and very impressive they are. Ashkenazy has a pretty unerring feeling for the inner pulse of Sibelius. The Third marks a major turning point in his creative development, an affirmation of his oft-quoted remark that classicism is the way of the future. Here is a symphony, if ever there was one, contra torrentem. (Think of the opulence of the First Symphony only eight years before: nothing could be further removed from its tonal and orchestral palette than the lithe and muscular Third.) The Fourth, too, is an intense and powerful reading which casts a powerful spell. Occasionally one's thoughts turn to the leaner, chamber-like sonorities of Beecham, but the desolate closing paragraphs of the finale with the repeated oboe phrase (which Sibelius once told his son-in-law, the conductor Jüssi Jalas, represented Peter's thrice denial of Christ) are portrayed with real eloquence. The Fifth has the sense of mystery and the majestic breadth required and he handles the transition into the Scherzo section of the first movement with impressive control. The Sixth and Seventh are hardly less masterly. Rakastava occupies a very special place in all Sibelius for its purity and sense of innocence, and Ashkenazy does it with great feeling and restraint. For many collectors the extremely vivid and natural sound of this Stockholm recording will be a decisive factor: it has great presence and realism. But Ashkenazy and his orchestra penetrate the spirit of these wonderful scores.

Symphonies 1–7; (i) Kullervo; The Bard, Op. 22; Finlandia, Op. 26; Karelia Suite, Op. 11; Kuolema: Valse triste; 4 Legends, Op. 22; Night Ride and Sunrise, Op. 55; The Oceanides, Op. 73; Pohjola's Daughter, Op. 49; Rakastava Tapiola, Op. 112

🔑 ❀ (BB) * RCA 82876 55706-2 (7). LSO, C. Davis; (i) with Martinpelto, Frederiksson, LSO Ch.

Symphonies 1–7

🔑 * DG SACD/CD (compatible) 477 5688 (3). Gothenburg SO, Neeme Järvi

Ⓜ (*) Chan. 6559 (3). SNO, Gibson

Symphonies 1 in E min., Op. 39; 2 in D, Op. 43; 4 in A min., Op. 63; 5 in E flat, Op. 82

Ⓑ  Ph. Duo (ADD) 446 157-2 (2). Boston SO, Davis

Symphonies 3 in C, Op. 52; 6 in D min., Op. 104; 7 in C, Op. 105; (i) Violin Concerto; Finlandia; Legend: The Swan of Tuonela; Tapiola

Ⓑ  Ph. Duo (ADD) 446 160-2 (2). (i) Accardo; Boston SO, Davis

Symphonies 1–7; Finlandia; Karelia Suite, Op. 11; Kuolema: Valse triste; Legends: The Swan of Tuonela; Lemminkäinen's Return; Pelléas et Mélisande: Suite; Pohjola's Daughter; Rakastava; Romance for Strings in C, Op. 42; Scènes historiques: All'overtura; The Hunt; Scena

Ⓜ (*) EMI (ADD) 5 67299-2 (5). Hallé O, Barbirolli

(i) Symphonies 1–7; Karelia Overture; (ii) Karelia Suite; (i) Night Ride and Sunrise; Pelléas et Mélisande: excerpts

🔑 () Australian Decca Eloquence 442 9490 (2) (Symphonies 1–4); 442 9493 (2) (Symphonies 5–7 & Orchestral Music). (i) LSO, Collins; (ii) Danish RSO, Jensen

Sir Colin Davis's RCA set of the Symphonies has now been reissued together with his other major LSO recordings of the principal orchestral works on 7 CDs. The excellence of the LSO playing is matched by the consistently fine RCA recordings, made in the Blackheath Concert Halls, Watford Town Hall or Walthamstow, between 1992 and 2000. It is a totally authoritative survey, and nearly all the symphonic poems are of a similar calibre, with the magical account of The Bard, Night Ride and Sunrise, The Oceanides and a riveting Tapiola standing out. This box should be at the centre of any representative Sibelius collection, especially at its new budget price.

Sir Colin Davis's earlier Boston set of the symphonies, recorded during the second half of the 1970s, includes three tone-poems and an estimable account of the Violin Concerto thrown in for good measure. Indeed Accardo's performance of the latter is very high on the recommended list. Tapiola, too, is atmospheric and superbly played. The idiomatic playing Davis secures from the Boston Orchestra is immediately apparent, though the recording is not quite as fine as Ashkenazy's on Decca. In the Third Davis judges the tempi in all three movements to perfection; no conductor has captured the elusive spirit of the slow movement or the power of the finale more effectively. The Fourth is arguably the finest of the cycle; there is a powerful sense of mystery, and the slow movement in particular conveys the feeling of communication with nature that lies at the heart of its inspiration. The Fifth is no match for Karajan, the Seventh is not as fine as with Rattle. The Sixth is altogether more impressive and much more vivid as sound.

Sir John Barbirolli favoured spacious tempi, but almost always held the listener in his spell. All seven symphonies were recorded in the Kingsway Hall. The first two date from 1966, but in 1 in the present remastering string fortissimos are made fierce. No. 2 is in every way more successful. The Hallé play particularly well and give a warm-hearted account, romantic in approach. In 3, tempi are well judged, but the inner tension is less well maintained than in 2. Even so, there is some very fine wind-playing in the Andante and the transition to the finale is very convincingly managed. In Barbirolli's account of 4 the Hallé strings produce an admirably chilling quality, far removed from the well-nourished string sound in Karajan's Berlin Philharmonic versions. Unfortunately, things come adrift in the development of the first movement where the wind and strings are out of step for quite a few bars. The Fifth, like the Second, is one of the finest of the series and has great breadth and nobility. Sir John draws playing of high quality from the orchestra, who are on top form throughout. Barbirolli included the Sixth Symphony in the last concert he conducted in Manchester on 3 May 1970, and he recorded it three weeks later, only two months before he died. It is easy to sense an elegiac feeling in the performance, which remains most compelling, especially in the beautiful closing passage for the strings, given the benefit of radiant sound. The Seventh makes a fine culmination for the cycle, bringing a feeling of power and a sense of inevitability which increases as the work progresses. The build-up to its climax is well paced. The recording is very fine.

The suite from Pelléas et Mélisande is powerfully atmospheric, as is The Swan of Tuonela, but here Sir John's rather endearing vocalizations are clearly audible. Pohjola's Daughter is very strongly characterized, as are the Scènes historiques. Rakastava, and especially the touching Romance for Strings, are much rarer, originally having a short catalogue life. They are very well played and recorded. All in all, this is a cherishable box, attractively illustrated with some of the original LP sleeve pictures.

Sir Alexander Gibson's Sibelius cycle is impressive, both musically and from an engineering point of view; there are no weak spots anywhere. The performances are eminently sane, sound and reliable, and no one investing in the set is likely to be at all disappointed. Taken individually, none would be an absolute first choice.

Anthony Collins (1893–1963) is remembered these days almost solely for these Decca recordings. His was the first integral set of the symphonies to appear in this country. Collins has an instinctive feeling for pace, with the sole exception of the second movement of the Third Symphony, which is far too fast. In terms of sheer electricity, his 1952 account of the First Symphony remains pretty well unsurpassed, even by the likes of Karajan, Sir Colin Davis or Bernstein. It is taut and concentrated, yet full of feeling and wonderfully paced.

Collin's accounts of Night Ride and Sunrise and Pohjola's Daughter are hardly less impressive: the former can hold its own alongside the Jochum and Davis versions. Collins was in some ways the ideal recording conductor, for he could combine an unerring sense of style with a natural gift for spontaneity. It is good to see these authoritative accounts returning to circulation at bargain price, for they have a prized and special place in the Sibelius discography and still sound remarkably vivid. The set also includes Jensen's mono recording of the Karelia Suite with the Danish Radio Symphony Orchestra, as Collins only included the Overture in his series of recordings.

(i) Symphonies 1–7; Andante festivo; The Bard; (i; ii) Violin Concerto; (i) En Saga; Finlandia; (iii; iv) 6 Humoresques (for Violin & Orchestra); (i) Karelia Suite; King Christian II Suite; (i; v) Kullervo Symphony; (i) 4 Legends; (i; vi) Luonnatar; (i) The Ocanides; (v) The Origin of Fire; (i) Pelleas and Melisande Suite; Pohjola's Daughter; Rakastava; Scènes historiques; (vii; i) 2 Serious Melodies (for Cello & Orchestra); (iii; iv) Serenades (for Violin & Orchestra); (viii; ix; i) Snöfrid (for recitation, chorus & orchestra); (i) Tapiola; The Tempest (incidental music) Suite; The Wood Nymph. Chamber Music: (x) Allegro appassionato; (xi) Piano Trio in D (Korpo); Piano Quintet in G min.; La pompeuse March d'Asis (for piano trio); (x) String Quartets: in A min.; D min. (Voces intimae); (xi) Andante cantabile in E flat for Piano & Harmonium; Andante cantabile in G (for Violin & Piano); 2 Danses Champêtres (for Violin & Piano); Malinconia (for Cello & Piano); 4 Pieces (for Violin & Piano); Violin Sonatina; Violin Sonata in F; Water Drops (for violin & cello). Piano music: (xii) Florestan; Impromptu in B min.; (xiii) Kyllikki; Romance in D flat; Scène romantique; The Solitary Fir Tree; (xi) Sonata in F; (xii) Sonatinas: in B min.; E; F sharp min.; The Spruce; The Village Church. (v; ix; xiv) Choral music (a cappella) for Male Choir & Mixed Choir; (xv) Songs including The Watersprite (melodrama)

🔑 (BB) * BIS (DDD/ADD) CD 1697/1700 (15). (i) Lahti SO, Vänskä; (ii) with Kavakos; (iii) with Dong-Suk Kang; (iv) Gothenburg SO, Järvi; (v) Helsinki University Ch.; (vi) Juntunen; (vii) Ylönen; (viii) Ekblad, (ix) Jubilate Ch.; (x) Tempera Qt; (xi) various instrumentalists; (xii) Gräsbeck; (xiii) Tawaststiera; (xiv) Orphei Drängar; various conductors; (xiv) von Otter or Hynninen, with Fosberg or Gothenburg SO, Panula; Häggander, Panula; Groop, Derwinger

BIS have called this generous budget-priced anthology (15 CDs for the cost of four) 'The Essential Sibelius', and it is surely as wide-ranging as any collector could wish, even including as a bonus a première recording of the little melodrama Näcken (The Watersprite). There is little need for further comment. Osmo Vänskä, who conducts most of the orchestral music, including the Symphonies and Leonidas Kavakos's fine account of the Violin Concerto, is an instinctive Sibelian: his pacing and structural command are virtually without flaw, and all these performancs have striking concentration and spontaneity. Perhaps not all the instrumental and vocal music is 'essential', but all of it is worth exploring and the songs are splendidly sung. The recordings are consistently up to the high standards of BIS and the documentation cannot be faulted. A set to be strongly recommended.

Symphonies 1–3; 5; Belshazzar's Feast (incidental music); Karelia Suite; Pohjola's Daughter; Tapiola

🔑 Ⓜ () Finlandia mono 4509 95882-2 (3). LSO, Kajanus

When the Finnish government sponsored recordings of the first two Symphonies in 1930, Sibelius insisted on having Kajanus as the most authentic interpreter. These performances were all made in 1930 and 1932 and sound amazingly good for the period. The celebrated storm in Tapiola, taken at a much slower and more effective tempo than is now usual, still has the power to terrify, despite the inevitable sonic limitations, and no conductor has ever given a more spell-binding and atmospheric account of the suite from Belshazzar's Feast. The broader, more leisurely view Kajanus takes of the Third Symphony comes as a refreshing corrective to the later, more hurried accounts by Anthony Collins and Lorin Maazel. No performer, save Davis, Beecham and Karajan, came closer to Sibelius's intentions. Essential listening for all Sibelians.

Symphonies 1 in E min.; 3 in C, Op. 52

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Hallé CDHLL7514. Hallé O, Elder

() Testament mono SBT 1049. Philh. O, Kletzki

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.554102. Iceland SO, Sakari

The Hallé have followed the example of the LSO, LPO and Concertgebouw Orchestras by publishing their own recordings rather than waiting for the ministrations of EMI or other commercial companies. Sir Mark Elder has been collecting golden opinions for his work with the Hallé Orchestra, which has flourished under his direction, and this offers excellent testimony to his efforts. More to the point, however, he is a sensitive and authoritative Sibelian, as these accounts of the First and Third symphonies clearly show. If he and the Hallé continue and complete the cycle to the present level of distinction, it should be strongly competitive.

Kletzki is tauter than the traditional Kajanus school yet far less headlong (or headstrong) than Collins. In both scores he and the Philharmonia Orchestra strike the right balance between the romantic legacy of the 19th century and the more severe climate of the 20th. The recordings are beautifully balanced and have great warmth, and they come up splendidly in these transfers.

Petri Sakari proves a sound and straightforward interpreter. The playing of the Iceland Orchestra in both Symphonies is spirited and vital, even if they do not command the virtuosity and polish of the major international ensembles. The Third Symphony is very well paced indeed and the playing has conviction. The recording, too, is natural and vivid, with a good balance between the various sections of the orchestra. In any event, good value for money.

Symphonies 1; 4 in A min., Op. 63

🔑 * BIS BIS CD 861. Lahti SO, Vänskä

Symphonies 1 in E min., Op. 39; 4 in A min., Op. 63

Ⓝ Ⓜ  LSO Live SACD LSO0601. LSO C. Davis

In the First Symphony the Finnish conductor Vänskä secures a marvellously controlled and splendidly executed performance from his dedicated players. There is that sense of inevitability and of an irresistible forward movement throughout, though never at the expense of incidental beauty. The Scherzo is among the most exciting on disc, very fast and full of controlled abandon. The Fourth Symphony receives a perceptive and deeply intelligent reading. The Lahti Orchestra play with keen concentration and intensity and though tempi are very slow (perhaps too much so in the case of the slow movement), the performance is marvellously sustained. The recording is natural and eminently well balanced. A distinguished issue.

Colin Davis's accounts of the First and Fourth Symphonies come from 2006 and 2008 and were recorded at the Barbican Centre. Sir Colin has always been a particularly thoughtful interpreter of the Fourth, and we recall hearing him conducting it with great natural authority when he was with the BBC Scottish Orchestra in the 1960s. His reading has deepened over the years and is much broader in tempo and more profound in feeling. The present reading of the Fourth runs to a little under 40 minutes and has an even greater sense of breadth than his 1994 account on RCA. Sir Colin allows himself more space but there is even more imaginative and poetic depth. He takes us completely inside this world; we become enveloped by it and feel we inhabit it. The First Symphony, too, has all the ardour and excitement of his earlier recordings. In short, Sibelius conducting of real stature, to which the LSO respond wholeheartedly. James Mallinson succeeds in getting consistently good results from the Barbican acoustic.

Symphony 2 in D, Op. 43

🔑 Ⓜ  Concg. O RCO 05005. Concg. O, Jansons

🔑 () BBC mono BBCL 4154-2. BBC SO, Beecham – DVOŘÁK: Symphony 8 ()

() BBC mono BBCL 4115-2. BBC SO, Stokowski (with BEETHOVEN: Overture Egmont ) – TCHAIKOVSKY: Sleeping Beauty: Suite ()

Symphony 2 in D, Op. 43; En Saga, Op. 9

🔑 (BB) * EMI Encore 3 41441-2. BPO, Karajan

(i) Symphony 2; (ii) Karelia Suite; (i) Legend: The Swan of Tuonela

(BB) (*) Regis RRC 1220. (i) LSO; (ii) RPO, Mackerras

Symphony 2; Romance in C

 BIS CD 252. Gothenburg SO, Järvi

Mariss Jansons is a totally committed and authoritative Sibelian and throughout the performance he holds the listener totally in his grip. It is a joy to hear this wonderful orchestra in all its tonal opulence and splendour. Jansons's reading is splendidly fresh and at times makes you feel that you are listening to this familiar music for the first time. At its modest price, a fraction of the cost of a concert ticket, this disc, one of the first on the Concertgebouw's own label, is well worth adding to your collection, even if rival versions offer couplings.

Karajan's 1980 digital version of the Second Symphony with the Berlin Philharmonic is more spacious than his earlier reading with the Philharmonia. Tempi in all four movements are fractionally broader; nevertheless, the first movement is still a genuine Allegretto basically in the brisker tradition of Kajanus. Throughout all four movements there is a splendour and nobility here – and some glorious sounds from the Berlin strings and brass. This is a performance of stature, and is well recorded, too. In En Saga Karajan is a brisk story-teller, more concerned with narrative than with atmosphere at the beginning, but the lento assai section and the coda are quite magical. The EMI recording has plenty of body and presence. A remarkable bargain.

Sir Thomas Beecham's famous broadcast account of the Second Symphony comes from a BBC Symphony concert on the occasion of the composer's 89th birthday on 8 December 1954 and relayed to Finland. The knowledge that Sibelius was listening lent an added frisson to the occasion, for the playing is very intent and exciting. The microphones picked up various whoops and other vocal exhortations from Sir Thomas, and the playing is of pretty high voltage. The playing has an electricity and immediacy of impact that are quite special.

Throughout, Järvi has an unerring sense of purpose and direction and the BIS performance is concentrated in feeling and thoroughly convincing. The Romance for Strings is attractively done.

Surprisingly, Stokowski's 1964 Sibelius Second is a mono recording, but the warmth of the Royal Albert Hall acoustic adds ambience and sonority so that one does not miss the stereo too much (though the bronchial afflictions of the audience are a deterrent). It is a widely contrasted reading, using constantly flexible tempi as only Stokowski can, without loss of tension. He thought of the Symphony as 'free and rhapsodic' but kept the horizon always in view. The Andante generates a grave melancholy towards the close, then the eruption of energy (though not of volume) at the vivacissimo makes a dynamic contrast. The great tune of the finale is superbly prepared, and Stokowski builds steadily towards the expansive final peroration (often slowing down on the way without the slightest loss of concentration). A remarkable if unpredictable reading of a masterly symphony (which the conductor very unfashionably thought 'more inspired than the Seventh').

Sir Charles Mackerras gives an eminently well-judged account of the Second Symphony. The tempo of the first movement is apt, a real Allegretto, fast but without going to extremes. There is no lack of tenderness and he shapes phrases with sensitivity. The Swan of Tuonela too has no lack of atmosphere. The 1988 recording (originally from the Pickwick label) was made in the EMI Abbey Road studio and is bright and clean. The lively RPO account of Karelia was made five years later.

Symphonies 2; 3 in C, Op. 52

(*) BIS CD 862. Lahti SO, Vänskä

Osmo Vänskä's accounts of the Second and Third Symphonies are as thought-provoking as his remarkable pairing of 1 and 4, though they are not quite deserving of the same star rating. The dynamic markings are sometimes a little too extreme, the second theme of the slow movement marked piano/pianissimo is almost whispered rather than played, and to readers playing the disc at less than full-room volume, it will be barely audible. It is just a shade self-conscious. Everything is carefully thought out, and the general effect is impressive. The Third Symphony is generally well paced and has the right atmosphere.

Symphonies 2 & 4; Tapiola

Ⓝ (*) Australian Decca Eloquence 480 0044 (2). SRO, Ansermet – RACHMANINOV: The Isle of the Dead **(*)

Ansermet's Sibelius, like his performances of the German repertoire, holds a certain fascination. Certainly, in the Second Symphony Ansermet could not be accused of going overboard with romantic gestures. Indeed, this reading is entirely free from over-emphasis, yet the effect is cumulatively powerful. There's a sense of real logic with, again, some striking moments of textual clarity. The Fourth Symphony is impressive in many ways, though perhaps here Ansermet lets the tension sag a little in the slow movement. The use of tubular bells (instead of the composer's intended glockenspiel) gives the finale a unique and fascinating colouring. Colin Anderson remarks in his excellent sleeve-notes that 'Ansermet is one of the few musicians who take seriously Sibelius's tacit instructions to do nothing as the symphony reaches its end; by not slowing it, the music stops rather than ends – and the effect is chillingly mournful: surely what Sibelius intended'. Anderson also beautifully sums up the performance of Sibelius's last great work, Tapiola: 'Ansermet and his varnish-free orchestra give an urgent, taut and raw account, absolutely at one with the music.'

Symphonies 2; 5 in E flat, Op. 82

🔑 * Testament SBT1418. (i) RPO; (ii) Hallé O; Barbirolli

Ⓜ  Chan. (ADD) 6556. SNO, Gibson

Ⓜ (*) EMI (ADD) 4 76882-2. Philh. O, Karajan

Barbirolli's RPO Second Symphony was recorded in 1962 at Walthamstow with Charles Gerhardt as producer and Kenneth Wilkinson as the balance engineer. It was originally issued in collaboration with Reader's Digest and was rightly hailed as a triumph. The composer Robert Simpson called it the best Sibelius he had heard from Barbirolli, much superior to the versions he had made with the Hallé Orchestra. The Fifth, no less impressive, comes from a 1968 Prom performance and so is not to be confused with the commercial set he made with the Hallé for HMV. A really outstanding coupling in every respect.

The Second is among the best of Gibson's cycle and scores highly, thanks to the impressive clarity, fullness and impact of the 1982 digital recording. Gibson's reading is honest and straightforward, free of bombast in the finale. Tempi are well judged: the first movement is neither too taut nor too relaxed – it is well shaped and feels right. Overall this is most satisfying, as is the Fifth, which has similar virtues. At no time is there any attempt to interpose the personality of the interpreter, and the finale has genuine weight and power.

With Karajan's coupling, in spite of the superb playing from the Philharmonia (especially the strings), the problem is one of concentration in the earlier movements. While his long-drawn paragraphs, dramatic and solemn, strong and personal, are particularly suitable for Sibelius's idiom, at times the concentration slips. Even so, he brings off the slower-than-usual tempo for the finale of the Second because of the sheer intensity of the orchestral response. The Fifth Symphony, too, has a superbly graduated finale: the first appearance of the swinging horn tune is a glorious moment. Excellent sound, well transferred.

Symphonies 2; 6 in D min., Op. 104

🔑  RCA 09026 68218-2. LSO, C. Davis

The Sixth is a work for which Colin Davis has always shown a special affinity and understanding. Sir Colin's earlier recording with the Boston orchestra (see above) was one of the best in that magisterial cycle, and this newcomer is if anything even finer. There is 'nothing of the circus' (to quote the composer's own words apropos the Fourth Symphony) in his reading of the Second and no playing to the gallery. There is a grandeur and a natural distinction about the playing.

Symphony 3; King Kristian II (suite)

🔑 * BIS CD 228. Gothenburg SO, Järvi

With the Third Symphony there is a sense of the epic in Järvi's hands, and it can hold its own with any in the catalogue. In Gothenburg, the slow movement is first class and the leisurely tempo adopted here by the Estonian conductor is just right. Järvi's coupling is the incidental music to King Kristian II. This is very beautifully played and recorded.

Symphonies 3; 6; 7

🔑 Ⓜ  Chan. (ADD) 6557. SNO, Gibson

With three Symphonies offered, some 74 minutes overall, this is a fine bargain and an excellent way to experience Gibson's special feeling for this composer. The SNO is in very good form. The first movement of the Third has real momentum. The Andantino is fast, faster than the composer's marking. But there is more here to admire than to cavil at. The Sixth is impressive too, with plenty of atmosphere and some radiant playing from the Scottish violin section; the Seventh has a rather relaxed feeling throughout, but it does not lack warmth and, as in 1, Gibson draws the threads together at the close with satisfying breadth.

Symphonies 4 in A min.; 5 in E flat

Ⓑ (*) CfP (ADD) 5 21872-2. BPO, Karajan
(BB)  Naxos 8.554377. Iceland SO, Sakari

Karajan's 1976 recording of the Fourth Symphony must in some ways be counted controversial. He gives broadly spacious and highly atmospheric accounts of the first and third movements, a good deal slower than in his earlier, DG version. He conveys eloquently the other-worldly quality of the landscape in the third movement. The first movement undoubtedly has great mystery and power, and the recording still sounds remarkably good. Similarly in the Fifth the first movement is broader and more spacious than on DG, and Karajan achieves a remarkable sense of the work's power and majesty. The variety of tone-colours and, above all, the weight of sonority that the Berlin Philharmonic had at their command in the mid-1970s are astonishing, and the bassoon lament in the development section finds the Berlin strings reduced to the merest whisper. Both the slow movement and the finale are glorious and have real vision; and the recording, made at the same time as the Fourth, is again excellent.

Had one heard either of Sakari's performances in the concert hall, one would have left feeling very satisfied. Both grip the listener. They are straightforward and unaffected, dedicated and selfless, and free from interpretative point-making. Tempi are for the most part uncommonly well judged, and you feel that Sakari really sees the works as a whole, rather than as a sequence of wonderful episodes. The first movement of the Fifth has splendid breadth, and the transition into the Scherzo section is expertly handled. The Iceland Orchestra may not be in the luxury league but their responses are keen and alert. Moreover, the sound is truthfully balanced and well detailed.

Symphonies 4 in A min., Op. 63; 6 in D min., Op. 104

🔑 () Somm-Beecham mono 16. (i) BBC SO; (ii) RPO; Beecham

The performances are immaculately prepared and the orchestra play as if their very lives depend on it. Beecham's recording of the Sixth has all the vision and authority that his commercial discs had, and the sound (apart from a problem with the level at the very outset) is eminently acceptable. The closing section of the finale has great feeling and poignancy. The recording is transferred from acetates and shows some signs of wear, particularly in the Fourth Symphony. However, it is good to have these performances, whatever their sonic limitations.

Symphonies 4; 7; Pelléas et Mélisande Suite; Swanwhite; Tapiola; The Tempest (incidental music): Dance of the Nymphs

🔑 () BBC mono BBCL 4041-2 (2). RPO, Beecham (with British and Finnish National anthems, and speeches by Beecham, including Beecham on Sibelius)

Beecham never re-recorded the Fourth Symphony commercially after his 1938 recording but, judging from this 1955 performance, his basic approach remained little changed. He also never recorded the Swanwhite suite. Here he omits only The Prince Alone. He did make stereo versions of the Pelléas et Mélisande music (without the brief By the Seashore movement) and Tapiola a few days on either side of the birthday concert. He also recorded the Seventh commercially at the same time, but this performance comes from a Royal Albert Hall concert of the previous year and is slightly higher in voltage than his Abbey Road recording. There is a tremendous sense of occasion here, which is supplemented by his famous talk describing his long friendship with Sibelius and recounting his hilarious visit to his home the previous year.

Symphony 5 (1915 version); En Saga (1892 version)

 BIS CD 800. Lahti SO, Vänskä

Symphony 5 (1915 version & definitive 1919 version)

 BIS CD 863. Lahti SO, Vänskä

Not long after Sibelius's death, the orchestral material for the first version of the Fifth Symphony was discovered in the attic at Ainola. To reconstruct the actual score was a simple matter. The work is in four (not three) movements, the opening horn-call is yet to be discovered; and there are no final hammer-blow chords. But there is much else that is different, and to study these differences offers an endless source of fascination. The En Saga we know comes from 1901, when it was extensively revised for Busoni to conduct in Berlin. There are some Brucknerian touches in one or two places, and the orchestration is less expert. Totally dedicated performances. An essential disc for all Sibelians, and magnificently recorded into the bargain.

BIS have also recoupled the original 1915 four-movement version of the Fifth Symphony with the definitive 1919 version, as part of their ongoing cycle from Osmo Vänskä and the Lahti Orchestra. Vänskä has a great feeling for the general architecture of the piece and paces it superbly. Our only reservation is his penchant for extreme pianissimos – the development section in the finale drops beyond a whisper to virtual inaudibility.

Symphonies 5; 6; Legend: The Swan of Tuonela

🔑 (BB) * LSO Live LSO 0037. LSO, C. Davis

Sir Colin Davis's performances come from 2002–3 and, like the cycle he recorded with the LSO in the 1990s, are at bargain price. The first movement of the Fifth has a magnificent breadth and a powerful atmosphere, and he handles the transition into the Scherzo section, always a crucial test, with masterly control. Tempi feel just right, and both the symphonic architecture and the musical atmosphere emerge to eloquent effect. The final chords are splendidly paced and powerfully delivered. The opening of the Sixth seems slightly more relaxed than before, and the strange, other-worldly atmosphere of the second movement registers perfectly. Very good sound.

Symphonies 6; 7; Tapiola

 BIS CD 864. Lahti SO, Vänskä

Symphony 6–7; The Tempest: Suite 2, Op. 109/3

(BB)  Naxos 8.554387. Iceland SO, Sakari

Osmo Vänskä's account of the Sixth and Seventh Symphonies brings his cycle to a fitting climax. The Sixth is serene yet taut, and the Seventh particularly fine, both in pacing and character. Vänskä's reading of Tapiola has a thrilling intensity and if it is not the equal of Karajan or Beecham, it is certainly among the very best of the others. The Lahti Orchestra always plays with enthusiasm and fire, and the BIS recording is first class.

Petri Sakari's Sixth Symphony is thoughtful, well prepared and dedicated, and even if the Iceland Orchestra is not in the same league as the Vienna Philharmonic or the Concertgebouw, they are a very good ensemble. The Seventh is powerful and has breadth and majesty; not the equal of Colin Davis, perhaps, but eminently satisfying all the same. The second suite from The Tempest is magnificent (the Chorus of the Winds sounds quite magical) and full of mystery and atmosphere, and the well-balanced sound does credit to all concerned.

Symphony 7 in C, Op. 150

(*) BBC (ADD) BBCL 4039-2. Philih. O, Boult – BIZET: Jeux d'enfants; RAVEL: Daphnis et Chloé: Suite 2. SCHUBERT: Symphony 8 (Unfinished) **(*)

Symphony 7 in C; Canzonetta, Op. 62a; Kuolema: Valse triste; Scene with Cranes; Night Ride and Sunrise; Valse romantique, Op. 62b

 BIS CD 311. Gothenburg SO, Järvi

(i) Symphony 7 in C, Op. 105; (ii) Pohjola's Daughter; Swanwhite: The Maiden with the Roses; Tapiola

🔑 (BB) () Naxos mono 8.110168. (i) BBC SO; (ii) Boston SO; Koussevitzky (with GRIEG: The Last Spring ())

Koussevitzky's pioneering (1933) recording of the Seventh Symphony with the then newly formed BBC Symphony Orchestra has rarely been challenged and never surpassed and, together with his Pohjola's Daughter and Tapiola from 1936 and 1939 respectively, is among the classics of recorded music.

Neeme Järvi and the Gothenburg Orchestra bring great energy and concentration to the Seventh Symphony. The only disappointment is the final climax, which is perhaps less intense than the best versions. However, it is a fine performance, and the music to Kuolema is splendidly atmospheric; Night Ride is strongly characterized. The recording exhibits the usual characteristics of the Gothenburg Concert Hall and has plenty of body and presence.

Anyone who remembers Sir Adrian Boult's set of the Sibelius tone-poems on Pye Records from the 1950s or his broadcasts from the 1940s and 1950s will have high expectations of his Seventh Symphony and will not be disappointed. It is finely shaped and superbly paced. A Festival Hall performance from 1963, it is well worth rescuing from oblivion. Good sound too.

The Wood Nymph (tone-poem), Op. 15; (i) The Wood Nymph (melodrama) (1895); A Lonely Ski-trail; Swanwhite, Op. 54

🔑 * BIS CD 815. (i) Pöysti; Lahti SO, Vänskä

Sibelius composed The Wood Nymph in 1894–5, when the four

Lemminkäinen Legends were taking shape in his mind. It is stirring stuff and begins with echoes of the Karelia music and in places comes close to both the first of the Legends and Lemminkäinen's Homeward Journey. It improves with every hearing: its main ideas haunt the listener and are difficult to dislodge from the brain! A Lonely Ski-trail is slight, but The Wood Nymph melodrama is imaginative and highly unusual. The original music to Swanwhite has some poetic ideas that did not find their way into the suite, though for the most part there is not a great deal that is unfamiliar. Superb playing from the Lahti Orchestra under Osmo Vänskä, and spacious, impeccably balanced recording.

The Wood Nymph (melodrama), Op. 15

 Warner 2564 61992-2 Pöysti, Nordic SO, Tali – RACHMANINOV: 3 Russian Songs; TUUR: Zeitraum; Action, Passion, Illusion ***

This Wood Nymph is not the tone-poem for full orchestra that Osmo Vänskä recorded (see above) but the thematically related melodrama of 1894 to the Rydberg text and scored for narrator, two horns, piano and strings. The speaker on this CD is Lasse Pöysti, who also took part in the earlier, rather more atmospheric 1996 BIS recording above.

CHAMBER MUSIC

BIS Sibelius Edition, Volume 2: Chamber Music I: String Quartets 1-4 (including preliminary ending of Voces intimae). Movements for String Quartet: Adagio in D min.; Allegro in G min.; Andante festivo; Andantino in C; Andante – Allegro molto in D; Andante molto sostenuto in B min.; Allegrettos in B flat & D; Moderato – Allegro appassionato in C sharp min.; Fuga for Martin Wegelius; Molto moderato (Scherzo); 4 Themes; 3 Pieces; 33 Small Pieces; Scherzo in B min.; Theme and Variations in C sharp min. (both completed Aho); Piano Quartets in C min.; D min.; Piano (4 Hands) Quartet (Ljunga Wirginia) & Scherzo in E min.; Quartet in G min. (for harmonium, violin, cello & piano); Andante cantabile in E flat (for piano & harmonium). Piano Trios: in A min.; in A min. (Hafträsk); in D (Korpo); in C (Lovisa). Movements for Piano Trio: Andante – Adagio – Allegro maestoso; Allegrettos in A flat & E flat; Allegros in C; D; D min.; Andantinos in A & G min.; Minuets in D min. & F; Moderato in A min.; La pompeuse March d'Asis; String Trio in G

Ⓑ  BIS-CD 1903/5 (6). Tempera Qt; Kuusisto, Vänskä, Ylönen, Turunen, Gräsbeck, Lönnqvist, Vitanen

Much of this music is of specialist interest, but many of these miniatures will make fascinating listening for the serious Sibelian, and they are all finely played by dedicated musicians, and very well recorded. The box is inexpensive too.

(i) Adagio in D min.; (ii, iii) Duo in C for Violin & Viola; (i) Fugue for Martin Wegelius; (iii, iv, v) Piano Trio in C (Lovisa); (vi, vii) Suite in E for Violin & Piano; (iii, iv) Water Drops for Violin & Cello

 Ondine ODE 850-2. (i) Sibelius Qt; (ii) Hirvikangas; (iii) Kimangen; (iv) Arai; (v) Lagerspetz; (vi) Kuusisto; (vii) Kerppo

These are all slight pieces from Sibelius's youth and student years: Water Drops was written when he was ten and is of no artistic interest. The Fugue for his teacher, Martin Wegelius, of 1888 was originally intended as the finale for his A minor Quartet, just as the Adagio in D minor (1890) was probably to have formed part of the B flat Quartet, Op. 4. This is the most individual of the pieces on this well-played and well-recorded set. With the exception of the Lovisa Trio of 1888, these are all first recordings.

Allegretto in B flat; Moderato – Allegro Appassionato in C sharp min.; 3 Pieces; Fugue; String Quartet in A min.

 BIS CD 1476. Tempera Qt

All this music was written between 1888 and 1889 and is mostly new to CD. Perhaps it is too reverential to record the fugue the composer wrote as a student exercise for his teacher, Martin Wegelius. The all-female Tempera Quartet play the A minor Quartet and the remaining pieces splendidly.

Piano Quartets: in C min. for 2 violins, cello & piano; in D min. for 2 violins, cello & piano; in G min. for violin, cello, piano & harmonium; (i) Andante Cantabile in E flat (for piano & harmonium). Scherzo in E min. (for violin, cello & piano, four hands); Ljunga Wirginia (for violin, cello & piano, four hands)

(*) BIS CD 1182. Kuusisto, Satu Vänskä, Turunen, Gräsbeck, Lönnqvist; (i) Viitanen

The various works and fragments recorded here come from 1884–91, when Sibelius was yet to find his voice. None is written for the combination of instruments one would expect (string trio and piano) and only one, the eight-minute C minor Quartet, has been recorded before (see below). There are unusual ensembles: violin, cello, piano and harmonium in the G minor quartet of 1887. The fragments for violin, cello and piano four hands (Ljunga Wirginia), intended for a projected dramatic venture Sibelius planned with his friend Walter von Konow, are completely new, if unimportant. Indeed, it would be idle to pretend that any of these slight pieces gives us the slightest glimpse of the real Sibelius; but the performances and the recorded sound are excellent.

(i) Piano Quintet in G min.; Piano Trio in C (Lovisa); String Quartet in E flat

 Finlandia 4509 95858-2. Sibelius Ac. Qt, (i) with Tawaststjerna

(i) Piano Quintet in G min.; String Quartet in D min. (Voces intimae), Op. 56

 Chan. 8742. (i) Goldstone; Gabrieli Qt

The Piano Quintet is a long and far from characteristic piece in five movements. Anthony Goldstone and the Gabrielis reverse the order of the second and third movements so as to maximize contrast. The first movement is probably the finest, and Goldstone, an impressive player by any standards, makes the most of Sibelius's piano writing to produce a very committed performance. The Voces intimae Quartet is given a reflective, intelligent reading, perhaps at times wanting in momentum but finely shaped. Good recording.

The early Quartet in E flat is Haydnesque and insignificant, and the Lovisa Trio, so called because it was written in that small town in the summer of 1888, offers only sporadic glimpses of things to come. The Piano Quintet is given a fine performance on Finlandia, and there is little to choose between it and the more expansive Goldstone/Gabrieli account on Chandos.

Piano Trios in A min.; in A min. (Hafträsk); in G for 2 Violins & Piano; Piano Trio movements: Allegro in C; Andantino in A; Allegro in D; Andante – Adagio – Allegro maestoso; Minuet in D min.; Minuet in F for 2 Violins & Piano; Moderato in A min.

 BIS CD 1282. Kuusisto, Vänskä, Ylönen. Gräsbeck

In all his correspondence with the Sibelius Museum in Turku (Åbo), the composer was at pains to emphasize that these chamber works were neither to be published nor performed – even after his death! The earliest work is the G major Trio for two violins and piano, a fluent and attractive piece, which reflects Sibelius's own youthful experience as a player. Perhaps the most striking work is the A minor Trio of 1884, whose provenance Folke Gräsbeck explores in his well-researched notes. It owes something to Haydn in its layout, and its Trio has distinctly rustic accents. The Andantino in A major of 1886 is a rather lovely piece, too. No one would make exaggerated claims for these pieces, some of which have scant merit but the performances are alert and intelligent and the recording exemplary and wonderfully present.

Piano Trios in D (Korpo) (1887); in C, (Lovisa); Alla Marcia in C; Andantino in G min.; Allegretto in A flat; Allegro in D min. (completed Aho); Allegretto in E flat (completed Kuusisto)

 BIS CD 1292. Kuusisto, Ylönen, Gräsbeck

The 'Lovisa' Trio, so called because it was written in the family summer home in Lovisa, is available in two alternative versions, but otherwise this music is all new. The 'Korpo' Trio (1887) is by far the most substantial piece here, running to over 35 minutes. Few coming to it with innocent ears would guess the identity of the composer but it evinces a natural feeling for form. There are other rarities too, some of which are in fragmentary form. The most engaging is the March in C major, which almost calls to mind the Saint-Saëns of the Carnival of the Animals! Expert performances.

String Quartets in E flat (1885); A min. (1889); B flat, Op. 4 (1890); D min. (Voces intimae), Op. 56

🔑 Ⓜ * Finlandia (ADD/DDD) 4509 95851-2 (2). Sibelius Academy Qt

The E flat Quartet is an exercise, modelled on the Viennese classics, and shows that Sibelius knew his Haydn. The A minor (1889) is another matter, and it is highly inventive. Sibelius first thought well enough of it to list it as Op. 2, though he later had second thoughts and never published it. The B flat Quartet (1891) is a fine piece whose slow movement bears a resemblance to one of the themes from Rakastava, which was to follow in 1894. The Scherzo of the A minor Quartet is wonderfully exhilarating. The performances are first rate and are generally well served by the engineers. There is only one mature Sibelius Quartet, Voces intimae (1909), and this performance is arguably still the finest now available. An outstanding bargain, and strongly recommended.

String Quartet in D min. (Voces intimae), Op. 56

 Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 442 9486. (i) Fitzwilliam Qt – DELIUS: String Quartet, etc. **(*)

() Biddulph mono LAB 098. Budapest Qt – GRIEG: Quartet; WOLF: Italian Serenade. ()

The Fitzwilliams give a deeply felt and no less deeply considered account of the Sibelius Quartet. In their hands the work becomes bigger in scale and more symphonic in feeling. There is a wide range of sonority and a scrupulous regard for dynamic graduations. The opening is very much con amore, but it is evident from the cello entry (bar 18) that this is going to be a big-boned account that declares its proximity to the Fourth Symphony. The generally measured tempo is justified on the original LP sleeve-note by Alan George, the violist of the quartet, who bases their choice of tempi on metronome markings that the composer himself gave to the Griller Quartet. This is a thought-provoking and impressive recording which makes a welcome return to the catalogue – and the 1978 sound is superb.

A welcome transfer – the first on CD – of the 1933 pioneering Budapest Voces intimae, still unbeaten. It briefly appeared on LP (on the World Record label) and is newly (and well) transferred here by Ward Marston. Sibelians will need no reminders of its excellence – and the same goes for the couplings.

Music for violin and piano

Sibelius Edition, Volume 6: Complete Music for Violin and Piano: Concerto in D min., Op. 47 (Original & Final Version); Sonata in A min.; Sonatina in E, Op. 80; Danses champêtres, Op. 106; Pieces, Opp. 77–79, 81, 115–16; Student works; Late Works

Ⓝ  BIS CD 1915/7 (5). Kuusisto, Sato, Spark, Gräsbeck, Sparf, Forsberg

Like the other boxes in this series, this is excellent value: five CDs are offered for the price of three, and this is highly recommendable for those collecting this BIS series.

Adagio in D min.; Allegretto in C; 2 Pieces; 3 Pieces; Sonata Exposition: Allegro in A min.; Grave (Fragment) in D min.; Largamente (Fragments) in E min.; in D min.; Sonata in F; Suite in E; Tempo di valse in A. Music for solo violin: Allegretto in A; Etude in D; A Happy Musician; Romance in G

 BIS CD 1023. Kuusisto, Gräsbeck

All the material recorded here is completely new. The A minor Sonata has echoes of early Beethoven and comes from his school years; the Suite in D minor (1887–8) shows that his writing for the violin was naturally fluent and idiomatic even then. It seems that the composer was sufficiently taken with it to show it to his first biographer, Erik Furujhelm.

Andante grazioso in D major (1884–5); 5 Pieces (1886–7); Violin Sonata in A minor (1884); Sonata Movement (1885); Sonata Fragment in B minor (1887); Suite in D minor (1887-8); Various short movements and fragments

 BIS CD 1022. Kuusisto, Gräsbeck

The A minor Sonata of 1884, from his school years, is redolent of the early Beethoven sonatas: it is highly accomplished but totally derivative. There are a number of short movements, some mere fragments, and not all of them are worth committing to disc. The Suite in D minor (1887–8) is another matter and shows just how good his writing for the instrument was. Very good playing from Jaakko Kuusisto and Folke Gräsbeck, as well as good and scholarly sleeve notes from the latter. Excellent sound.

5 Danses champêtres, Op. 106; Novellette, Op. 102; 5 Pieces, Op. 81; 4 Pieces, Op. 115; 3 Pieces, Op. 116

 BIS CD 625. Sparf, Forsberg

Many of the items here, such as the delightful Rondino from Op. 81, are little more than salon music, but some of the others are rewarding pieces. Indeed the first of the Danses champêtres almost suggests the music to The Tempest, written at much the same time. Both the Opp. 115 and 116 pieces contain music of quality. As in the companion disc, Nils-Erik Sparf and Bengt Forsberg prove as imaginative as they are accomplished.

2 Pieces, Op. 2 (2 versions); Scaramouche: Scène d'amour; 2 Serious melodies, Op. 77; 4 Pieces, Op. 78; 6 Pieces, Op. 79; Sonatina in E, Op. 80

 BIS CD 525. Sparf, Forsberg

This CD offers the first recording of the 1888 versions of the Grave and the Perpetuum mobile, the two pieces which Sibelius assigned to Op. 2, together with the 1911 versions, in which the former was revised as Romance in B minor and the latter overhauled as Epilogue. The former bears a certain affinity to the slow movement of the Violin Concerto and the prevalence of the tritone in the latter acts as a reminder that it was reworked in the wake of the Fourth Symphony. Exemplary performances of the later pieces, including Laetare anima mea and the 1915 Sonatina, Op. 80.

PIANO MUSIC

Sibelius Edition, Volume 4: Piano Music: Complete Youthful Productions & Student Compositions of Music for Piano (including A Catalogue of Themes (50 Short Pieces) (1885–93). 10 Bagatelles, Op. 34; The Dryad, Op. 45/1 (arr. 1910); Finlandia (rev. arr. 1900); Finnish Folk Songs, (arr. for piano, 1902/3); 6 Impromptus, Op. 5; Karelia Suite: excerpts (arr. 1897); King Kristian II (4 Pieces), Op. 27; Kyllikki, Op. 41; 10 Pensées lyriques, Op. 40; Preliminary Sketch for slow movement of Symphony 1; Sonata in F, Op. 12 (1893); 21 Miscellaneous Pieces (1894–1914); 10 Pieces, Op. 24; Valse triste, Op. 44/1 (2 versions, 1903/4)

Ⓝ Ⓑ  BIS CD 1909/11. Folke Gräsbeck (piano)

As with the previous boxes in this well-packaged and -documented coverage, the discs are inexpensive – five CDs for the price of three.

Andante in E flat; Aubade in A flat; Au crépuscule; A Catalogue of Themes, 50 Short Pieces; Con moto, sempre una corda; 3 Pieces; Scherzo in E & Trio in E min.; 3 Short Pieces; 5 Short Pieces; Trio in E min. (arr. for piano); Trånaden (Yearning); 11 Variations on a Harmonic Formula (BIS CD 1067)

Complete Youthful Production of Music for the Piano I (BIS CD 1067)

Complete Youthful Production of Music for the Piano II (BIS CD 1202)

 Folke Gräsbeck

As part of its ambitious scheme to record every note that Sibelius ever wrote, BIS has turned its attention to the early piano pieces Sibelius composed in his study years. All these are unpublished and give no hint of what was to come. Perhaps the most imaginative is Trånaden to accompany a recitation of Stagnelius's poem.

Some of the pieces, such as the Moderato – Presto in D minor (1888) are worth hearing, but none can be said to be remotely characteristic. All, with the exception of the Florestan Suite of 1889, are first recordings. Folke Gräsbeck plays them with fluent grace, and the BIS recording and documentation are exemplary.

10 Bagatelles, Op. 34; The Cavalier; Dance Intermezzo; 6 Finnish Folk Songs; Kyllikki (3 Lyric Pieces), Op. 41; Mandolinato; Morceau romantique; Pensées lyriques, Op. 40; Spagnuolo; To Longing

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.554808. Gimse

The Norwegian pianist Håvard Gimse here includes two important sets of the piano pieces, Opp. 34 and 40, and the 6 Finnish Folk Songs, the fifth of which, Fratricide, is slightly Bartókian. Sibelius's contemporary and countryman Selim Palmgren put it perfectly when he wrote that 'even in what for him were alien regions, [Sibelius] moves with an unfailing responsiveness to tone colour', and Gimse brings finesse and distinction to this repertoire. This and the companion disc are first recommendations.

6 Bagatelles, Op. 97; 5 Characteristic Impressions, Op. 103; 8 Little Pieces, Op. 99; 5 Romantic Pieces, Op. 101; 5 Sketches, Op. 114

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.555853. Gimse

All the pieces recorded here come from the 1920s, the period of the Sixth and Seventh Symphonies, and are rarities. Among the finest are the Five Sketches, which come from the very end of the decade and are among Sibelius's last published works. The Village Church from Op. 103 has overtones of the Andante festivo for strings, and The Oarsman seems to ruminate on ideas in the Seventh Symphony. But pieces like In Mournful Mood and Landscape from Op. 114 are curiously haunting. So is the rest of the Op. 114 set, and its neglect has been our loss.

5 Characteristic Pieces, Op. 103; 5 Sketches, Op. 114; 5 Pieces (The Trees), Op. 75; 5 Pieces (The Flowers), Op. 85; 5 Romantic Pieces, Op. 101

 Chan. 9833. Tabe

Kyoko Tabe makes the most of these miniatures without making too much of them. Opp. 75 and 85 come from the period 1914–15 and the remainder from the 1920s. She conveys some of their charm and individuality with expertise and is recorded with a lifelike and natural sound.

6 Impromptus, Op. 5; Sonata in F, Op. 12; 10 Pieces, Op. 24

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.553899. Gimse

The Sonata and Impromptus come from the year in which the first version of En Saga was composed. The Sonata has a genuine sense of forward movement and some of its ideas are appealing. The Op. 24 Pieces were written at various times between 1894 and 1903. The Norwegian pianist Håvard Gimse has consistent tonal beauty and unfailing musicianship. This is distinguished playing and a strong recommendation at any price level.

3 Lyric Pieces, Op. 41; 5 Characteristic Impressions, Op. 103; 6 Impromptus, Op. 5; 5 Pieces, Op. 75; 5 Pieces, Op. 85; Finlandia (arr. composer)

(BB)  Naxos 8.553661. Lauriala

Perfectly good playing and decent recording make this a useful alternative to the complete survey by Gimse, and it also enjoys the benefit of decent recorded sound.

4 Lyric Pieces, Op. 74; 5 Pieces (The Flowers), Op. 35; 5 Pieces (The Trees), Op. 75; 6 Pieces, Op. 94; 13 Pieces, Op. 76

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.555363. Gimse

10 Pieces, Op. 58; 2 Rondinos, Op. 68; 3 Sonatinas, Op. 67

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.554814. Gimse

The Ten Pieces of Op. 58 date from 1909, the year of the String Quartet (Voces intimae). They are delightful and by no means just trivial. Each has its own sobriquet and shows real keyboard character. The final rather solemn Summer Song is memorable, as is the wistful mood of the first of the Two Rondinos, written two years later; the second sparkles most pianistically. The three Sonatinas, written together in the summer of 1912, are also full of charming ideas, giving the impression of a composer relaxing in holiday mood. Håvard Gimse plays all this music freshly, and finds its simple beauty. He is very well recorded and this Naxos disc more than bears out the promise of its companions.

ORGAN MUSIC

Intrada, Op. 111a; Masonic Music, Op. 113/1 & 10; Surusoitto, Op. 111b

 BIS CD 1101. Ericsson – DVOŘÁK: Preludes & Fugues (*); GLAZUNOV: Preludes & Fugues, etc. ***

After the death of Sibelius's old friend and drinking companion, the artist Akseli Gallen-Kalela, the composer was forced to compose something at short notice for the ceremony. Surusoitto was the result. In the late 1960s the composer Joonas Kokkonen put forward the theory that given the pressure of time, Sibelius might have drawn on material from the Eighth Symphony, on which he was working throughout 1931. Aino Sibelius, the composer's widow, also thought this likely. The Intrada (1925) is powerful, but the Funeral March from the Masonic Music (1927) betrays its proximity to the Tempest music. Superb playing from Hans-Ola Ericsson on a magnificently powerful instrument.

THEATRE MUSIC

Sibelius Edition, Volume 5: Theatre Music: Original Theatre Music: Jedermann, Op. 83 (1916). Belshazzar's Feast, Concert Suite, Op. 51 (1906/7); King Christian I, Op. 27 (1898). Kuolema (1903); The Language of the Bird: Wedding March (1911); Pelleas and Melisande, Op. 46: Concert Suite (1905); Scaramouche, Op. 71 (1913); Swanwhite, Concert Suite, Op. 54 (1908); The Tempest: Prelude; Suites 1–2 (1927); Twelfth Night, Op. 60 (1909)

Ⓝ  BIS-CD 1912/4. Soloists, Lahti SO, Vänskä; Gothenburg SO, Neeme Järvi

This set covers performances from the original manuscripts of Sibelius's theatre music and the concert suites and revised versions which followed. Offered at six CDs for the price of three, it is a very real bargain, with full documentation included.

VOCAL MUSIC

Academic March; Finlandia (arr. composer); Har du mod?, Op. 31/2; March of the Finnish Jaeger Battalion, Op. 91/1; (i) The Origin of Fire, Op. 32; Sandels, Op. 28; Song of the Athenians, Op. 31/3

(*) BIS CD 314. (i) Tiilikainen, Laulun Ystävät Male Ch.; Gothenburg SO, Järvi

The Origin of Fire is by far the most important work on this record. Sauli Tiilikainen is very impressive indeed, and the playing of the Gothenburg Symphony Orchestra under Neeme Järvi has plenty of feeling and atmosphere. None of the other pieces is essential Sibelius. The singing of the Laulun Ystävät Choir is good rather than outstanding, and the fine recording in the best BIS traditions.

(i) Belshazzar's Feast (complete score), Op. 51; The Countess's Portrait (Grefvinnans konterfej); (ii) Jedermann (Everyman) (incidental music), Op. 83

🔑 * BIS CD 737. (i) Passikivi; Lahti SO, Vänskä; (ii) with Lehto, Tiilikainen, Pietiläinen, Lahti Chamber Ch.

The incidental music to Hugo von Hofmannsthal's morality play Everyman is fragmentary, wisps of sound; all of it is atmospheric and the best of it (the Largo section from track 12 onwards) finds Sibelius at his most inspired. The complete score for Hjalmar Procopé's Belshazzar's Feast brings us some seven minutes of extra music. The scoring is different from and less effective than the concert suite. Grefvinnans konterfej (The Countess's Portrait) is a short, wistful piece for strings which comes from 1906. Dedicated, sensitive performances from the Lahti Symphony Orchestra and excellent recording. An indispensable disc for all Sibelians.

The Captive Queen; Have you courage, Op. 31/2 (2nd & 4th versions); March of the Jäger Battalion, Op. 91a; (i) The Origin of Fire, Op. 32 (2 versions). Rapids-Rider's Brides; (ii) Rakastava; Sandels, Op. 28 (2 versions)

 BIS CD 1525. YL Male Ch., Lahti SO, Vänskä; with (i) Hakala; (ii) Nyman

Here we have not only the revised 1910 version of The Origin of Fire but Sibelius's first thoughts from 1902; and similarly the first (1898) version of Sandels, preceding the First Symphony, together with its revision of 1915, by which time he was working on the Fifth. A fascinating issue in authoritative performances under Osmo Vänskä and equally authoritative notes by Andrew Barnett.

(i) Karelia (complete incidental music); (ii) Kuolema, Op. 44; Valse triste (1904 version)

🔑 * BIS CD 915. (i) Laitinen, Hoffgren; (i; ii) Laukka; (ii) Tiilhonen; Lahti SO, Vänskä

The Karelia Suite is familiar enough, but few readers will have heard the complete score. Some things are disconcerting: the familiar cor anglais melody in the Ballade is given to a tenor, and the movement is far too long. But there is much of interest here. The incidental music to Kuolema ('Death'), written ten years later, was revised the following year (1904) and re-scored. The original second section, Paavali's Song, is quite inspired, though Sibelius was quite right to add wind to represent the bird cries in the following scene (he conflated scenes 3 and 4 to form Scene with Cranes). The disc also affords an opportunity to contrast the 1903 and 1904 versions of Valse triste; the differences will bring you up with a start. Superb playing and recording.

(i) Karelia Suite, Op. 11 (original scoring); (ii) King Christian II, Op. 27 (complete original score); (iii) Pelléas et Mélisande (original scoring)

 BIS CD 918. (i; ii) Laukka; (iii) Jakobsson; Lahti SO, Vänskä

Sibelius re-scored all three works for larger forces when he made his King Christian concert suite the following year, his first orchestral work to be published. It is particularly good to hear the Musette from that suite in such a characterful form, just for wind. The changes in the score Sibelius composed for Bertel Gripenberg's Swedish translation of Maeterlinck's Pelléas et Mélisande are less extensive but we do have an additional section that has never been published. The Karelia Suite is drawn from BIS CD 915. A highly successful issue of great interest to all Sibelians.

Kullervo Symphony, Op. 7

🔑 (BB) * LSO Live 0074. Groop, Mattei, L. Symphony Ch., LSO, C. Davis

🔑 * BIS CD 1215. Paasikivi, Laukka, Helsinki University Ch., Lahti SO, Vänskä

Sir Colin's first movement is spacious – certainly broader than the 1958 performance by Sibelius's son-in-law, Jussi Jalas, which brought this piece alive again after its long slumber. The slow movement, Kullervo's Youth, is powerfully characterized, as indeed is the central Kullervo and his Sister movement. Sir Colin is a Sibelian of commanding stature, and the LSO and London Symphony Chorus give of their finest. Both soloists Monica Groop and Peter Mattei are in fine voice here. Good recording, though the acoustic is just a little dry, thanks to the full house. This is arguably the finest Kullervo now before the public.

Having completed an impressive cycle of the symphonies Osmo Vänskä and the Lahti Orchestra give us a finely paced reading of Sibelius's groundbreaking work, with plenty of dramatic intensity and a strong atmosphere. There is the same sense of grip and epic sweep that distinguishes Sir Colin Davis's LSO recording. Apart from two fine soloists, Vänskä has the advantage of a Finnish male choir. Incidentally, some small errors in the published score have been corrected. For many this BIS CD will be a first choice.

Cantatas: Laulu Lemminkäiselle (Song to Lemminkäinen), Op. 31/1; Maan virsi (Hymn to the earth), Op. 95; Oma Maa (Our native land), Op. 92; Sandels, Op. 28; Snöfrid, Op. 29; Väinön virsi (Väinö's Song), Op. 110; Finlandia, Op. 26

 Virgin 5 45589-2. Ellerhein Girls' Ch., Estonian Nat. Male Ch. & SO, Järvi

Three of these Cantatas come from Sibelius's last period: Our native land, probably the best known of these pieces, comes from 1918. Hymn to the earth from 1919 is also conventional and, although Väinö's Song is a neighbour of The Tempest and Tapiola, it betrays nothing of their vision or mastery. Our native land certainly sounds stronger and more appealing in this performance than in any other version on disc. Paavo Järvi makes the most of Sibelius's evocative description of the aurora borealis and the white nights of the Nordic summer. These Cantatas are well worth hearing and Järvi gives a totally committed account of them and has a fine body of singers. Excellent sound.

(i; ii) Snöfrid, Op. 29; (i) Coronation Cantata, JS104; Oma maa, Op. 92; Andante festivo, JS34b; Overture in A min., JS144; Rakastava, Op. 14

 BIS CD 1265. Lahti SO, Vänskä; with (i) Jubilate Ch.; (ii) Stina Ekblad (narr.)

Snöfrid is an 'improvisation' for narrator, mixed choir and orchestra, dating from 1900, and it accompanies lines from Rydberg's poem of that name. It is characteristic of early Sibelius, often powerful and consistent in quality. The Overture was written at high speed two years later to fill out the programme which included the première of the Second Symphony, and is a rewarding piece. It looks forward to the period of the Voces intimae Quartet, which one of its themes actually anticipates. Tavaststjerna is pretty routine stuff. Oma maa ('My own Land') is an altogether different matter. The 1912 transcription of the early choral suite Rakastava ('The Lover') for strings and percussion is Sibelius at his most inspired and poignant. Fine performances and recording.

The Tempest (incidental music), Op. 109 (complete)

 BIS CD 581. Tiihonen, Passikivi, Hirvonen, Kerola, Heinonen, Lahti Opera Ch. & SO, Vänskä

(*) Ondine ODE 813-2. Groop, Viljakainen, Hynninen, Silvasti, Tiilikainen, Op. Festival Ch., Finnish RSO, Saraste

The Tempest: Prelude. Suites 1 & 2

Ⓝ  Reference Recordings RR115. Kansas City SO, Stern – SULLIVAN: The Tempest ***

Sibelius's score, commissioned for a 1926 Copenhagen production, was his last major work and one of his most visionary. It is one of the four masterpieces (the others being the Sixth and Seventh Symphonies and Tapiola) that crowned his creative career. The BIS and Ondine CDs both have the advantage of singers, and in fact the vocal writing is often highly imaginative and the singers on the BIS CD are especially good. The atmosphere is strong too and puts one completely under its spell.

Michael Stern is a thoroughly idiomatic interpreter and, judging by this Tempest, a Sibelian of rare insight. We have not heard a more imaginative account of this music since the celebrated Beecham version of the 1950s. Indeed, the Intrada and Berceuse from the Second Suite even surpass the latter! The Kansas City Orchestra respond with enthusiasm – perhaps the strings could at times have a weightier sonority but, given the overall quality of this reading, reservations are silent. The recording is well balanced and natural: Anthony Hodgson's notes are predictably insightful and authoritative.

If clarity and definition are a first priority, the Ondine version under Saraste is the one to go for. There is good singing here, too, from Monica Groop, Jorma Hynninen and the rest of the cast. The performance is given in Danish (as it would have been in the 1926 version, rather than the Finnish text used by BIS). However, Saraste is nowhere near as sensitive as Vänskä and does not have his sense of mystery or atmosphere. His Prospero is too fast, almost routine by comparison with Vänskä, who draws the listener more completely into Sibelius's and Shakespeare's world. Both accounts are recommendable and either is to be acquired rather than none. But the BIS makes a clear first choice.

Songs

18 Songs

Ⓝ Ⓜ ((*)) DG mono/stereo 477 6612. Borg, Werba

When this collection was first issued in 1958, our own Robert Layton reviewed the mono LP as a 'pinnacle of the Sibelius song discography'. Now it returns in a handy reduction of the original sleeve (LPEM 19113) adjusted to CD size. However, apart from the untranslated titles, and a brief note about Kim Borg, the documentation is non-existent. The collection now includes, beside the original 16 songs, which are well chosen, Borg's stereo remake of two of them, Lastu lainchilla and Illalle, plus three more by another Finnish composer, Kilpinen. It is a pity about the absence of documentation and translations, but this disc is certainly collectable by those who admire the repertoire.

Songs: Arioso; The Jewish Maiden's Song; Belshazzar's Feast; Autumn Evening; Luonnotar; Sancta Maria The Maiden in the Tower; And I questioned her no further; Sunrise; The Spring is Flying

🔑  Warner 8573 8.0243-2. Mattila, CBSO, Oramo – GRIEG: Songs ()

Karita Mattila is in powerful, expressive form. She has a splendid breadth in the Arioso, a much later song than its early opus number would indicate, and her Luonnotar is second to none. These are marvellous songs and Mattila deserves much credit for including an aria from the early (and unsuccessful) opera, The Maiden in the Tower, which the composer subsequently withdrew. Sakari Oramo and the Birmingham Orchestra give splendid support throughout, and the recording has great naturalness and presence.

Arioso, Op. 3; Narcissus; Pelléas et Mélisande: The Three Blind Sisters; 7 Songs, Op. 17; 6 Songs, Op. 36; 5 Songs, Op. 37; 6 Songs, Op. 88; Souda, souda, sinisorsa

🔑  BIS CD 457. von Otter, Forsberg

Sophie von Otter always makes a beautiful sound, but she has a highly developed sense of line and brings great interpretative insight to such songs as 'My bird is long in homing' and 'Tennis at Trianon', which has even greater finesse than Söderström's. And what a good accompanist Bengt Forsberg is. The recording is good if a bit reverberant.

Songs with orchestra: Arioso; Autumn evening; Come away, Death!; The diamond on the March snow; The fool's song of the spider; Luonnotar, Op. 70; On a balcony by the sea; The rapids-rider's brides; Serenade; Since then I have questioned no further; Spring flies hastily; Sunrise

🔑 * BIS CD 270. Hynninen, Häggander, Gothenburg SO, Panula

Jorma Hynninen is a fine interpreter of this repertoire: his singing can only be called glorious. Mari-Anne Häggander manages the demanding tessitura of Arioso and Luonnotar with much artistry, and her Luonnotar is certainly to be preferred to Söderström's. Jorma Panula proves a sensitive accompanist and secures fine playing from the Gothenburg Orchestra. In any event, this is indispensable.

Belshazzar's Feast; The Jewish Girl's Song; 6 Songs, Op. 36; Black Roses; But my Bird is Long in Homing; Tennis at Trianon; Sigh, Sedges, Sigh; The March Snow; The Diamond on the March Snow; 5 Songs, Op. 37: The First Kiss; Little Lasse; Sunrise; Was it a dream?; The Tryst; 6 Songs, Op. 50: Spring Song; Loneliness; In the Field a Maiden Sings; From anxious heart; The Silent Town; Rose Song; To Evening; I am a Tree; The Watersprite or The Elf King; Beneath the Fir Trees; Spring is Flying; The North; Who Brought you Here?

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 67318. Karnéus, Drake

The only Finnish song here is Illale ('To Evening'), among the most lyrical and affecting of his songs. Katarina Karnéus offers the Opp. 36 and 37 sets, which include some of the best loved (and best) songs like Säv, säv susa and Men min fågel märks dock icke, and one of the subtlest, Bollspelet vid Trianon. She also includes the German settings, Op. 50, written in 1906. (Sibelius spoke little French or English). Two of them, Im Feld ein Mädchen ('In the Field a Maiden Sings') and Die stille Stadt ('The Silent Town') are among his greatest songs. Karnéus possesses a glorious voice and sings with real interpretative insight, and in these inspired performances she and Julius Drake find new dimensions in these jewels of songs, performances that sharply bring out the contrasts of mood, the range of emotion and the sense of drama, as in the overpowering tragic climax of The Tryst. The eerie originality of such a song as Näcken ('The Watersprite') is perfectly caught. It is a magical partnership, giving fresh insights in every item. Those who have yet to explore Sibelius's songs should start right here.

7 Songs, Op. 13; 6 Songs, Op. 50; 6 Songs, Op. 90; Resemblance; A song; Serenade; The wood-nymph; The Jewish girl's song; (i) The Thought

🔑 Ⓜ  BIS CD 757. von Otter, Forsberg; (i) with Groop

The Opp. 13 and 90 songs are all settings of Runeberg, Sibelius's favourite poet, but there are rarities such as Skogsrået ("The Wood-nymph') – totally unrelated, by the way, to the melodrama and tone-poem of the same name which Sibelius wrote in the early 1890s, and never before recorded. Also new are the duet, Tanken ("The Thought'), Resemblance and A song. Von Otter and her partner characterize each song with the consummate artistry one expects from them, and the only possible reservation concerns the balance, which in some of the early songs favours the piano.

OPERA

The Maiden in the Tower (opera; complete); Karelia Suite, Op. 11

Ⓝ  BIS CD 250. Häggander, Hynninen, Hagegård, Kruse, Gothenburg Ch. & SO, Järvi

The Maiden in the Tower (opera; complete); Pelléas et Mélisande (incidental music), Op. 46; Kuolema: Valse triste

Ⓝ (BB)  Virgin 5 22055(2). (i) Kringelborn, Jonsson, Passikivi, Magee, Estonian Girls' Ch. & Nat. Male Ch., Estonian Nat. SO, Paavo Järvi (with 4 Legends, etc. ***)

The Maiden in the Tower falls into eight short scenes. The orchestral interlude between the first two scenes brings us the real Sibelius, and the second scene is undoubtedly impressive; there are echoes of Wagner, such as we find in some of the great orchestral songs of the following decade. All the same, it lack something we look for in all Sibelius's most characteristic music: quite simply a sense of mastery. Yet there are telling performances here from Mari Anne Häggander and Jorma Hynninen and the Gothenburg Symphony Orchestra. Neeme Järvi's account of the Karelia Suite is certainly original, with its Intermezzo too broad to make an effective contrast with the ensuing Ballade.

The Virgin Double reissue is more generously filled than the rival version from Gothenburg, and it comes with the Pelléas Suite, which was composed a decade later. Jorma Hynninen is an imposing villain in the Gothenburg version, and of the two heroines, Häggander is perhaps the more convincing. This a useful alternative to the BIS account, even if it does not completely replace it.

SIMPSON, Robert (1921–97)

Energy; Introduction & Allegro on a Theme by Max Reger; The Four Temperaments; Volcano; Vortex

 Hyp. CDA 66449. Desford Colliery Caterpillar Band, Watson

The Four Temperaments is a four-movement, 22-minute symphony of great imaginative power, and ingeniously laid out for the band. The Introduction and Allegro on a Theme by Max Reger is awesome and impressive. Together with Volcano and his most recent piece, Vortex, it makes up his entire output in this medium. The Desford Colliery Caterpillar Band under James Watson play with all the expertise and virtuosity one expects, and the recording has admirable clarity and body, although the acoustic is on the dry side.

Symphonies: (i) 1; (ii) 2; (i) 3; (ii) 4; (i) 5; (iii) 6; 7; (i) 8; (ii) 9; (iii) 10; (iv) 11; Variations on a Theme by Nielsen

Ⓜ  Hyp. CDS 44191/7. (i) RPO; (ii) Bournemouth SO; (iii) RLPO; all cond. Handley; (iv) City of L. SO, Taylor

For anyone interested in the progress of the symphony in England in the 20th century, this is a self-recommending set. All these recordings are available separately, but for those willing to jump in at the deep end this should prove an admirable investment.

Symphonies 1; 8

 Hyp. CDA 66890. RPO, Handley

Robert Simpson's First Symphony holds up to the test of time remarkably well and better than much other music of the 1950s. One critic has pointed to the Eighth as seeming to embody some 'colossal inner rage' and, like the Fifth, it undoubtedly has a combative tumult that rarely passes into tranquillity. Handley makes out a strong case for both scores, and the sound is absolutely first class. An indispensable issue for anyone who cares about the post-war symphony in Britain.

Symphonies 2; 4

🔑  Hyp. CDA 66505. Bournemouth SO, Handley

The Second is one of the very best; its opening is one of Simpson's most mysterious and inspired ideas, lean and sinuous but full of poetic vision. The variation slow movement is one of the most virtuosic and remarkable exercises in the palindrome, yet such is the quality of Simpson's artistry in concealing his ingenuity that no one coming to it innocently would be aware of this. The Fourth Symphony is the more extended piece. Powerful and inspiriting music in totally dedicated performances by Vernon Handley, and excellent recording quality.

Symphonies 3; 5

 Hyp. CDA 66728. RPO, Handley

Vernon Handley brings us the première recording of the Fifth Symphony (1971), a work of striking power and range. It is combative and intense and enjoys at times an almost unbridled ferocity that enhances the admittedly few moments of repose, for it is music of a vital and forceful eloquence. Fine playing by the RPO under Handley, and exemplary recording.

Symphonies 6; 7

 Hyp. CDA 66280. RLPO, Handley

The Sixth is inspired by the idea of growth: the development of a musical structure from initial melodic cells in much the same way as life emerges from a single fertilized cell in nature. The Seventh, scored for chamber orchestral forces, is hardly less powerful in its imaginative vision and sense of purpose. Both scores are bracingly Nordic in their inner landscape and exhilarating in aural experience. The playing of the Liverpool Orchestra under Vernon Handley could hardly be bettered, and the recording is altogether first class.

Symphony 9

🔑 ❁  Hyp. CDA 66299. Bournemouth SO, Handley (with talk by the composer)

What can one say about the Ninth of Robert Simpson, except that its gestures are confident and its control of pace and its material are masterly? It is a one-movement work, but at no time in its 45 minutes does it falter – nor does the attention of the listener. The CD also includes a spoken introduction to the piece that many listeners will probably find helpful. It is played superbly by the Bournemouth Symphony Orchestra under Vernon Handley, and is no less superbly recorded.

Symphony 10

 Hyp. CDA 66510. RLPO, Handley

The Tenth Symphony (1988) will be a tough nut to crack for many collectors. Its musical argument is unfailingly concentrated. Like its predecessor, it has a Beethovenian strength and momentum. The Symphony lasts almost an hour and is not the ideal starting place from which to explore this composer's world. But make no mistake: it is a work of stature, and it is very well played and recorded here.

Symphony 11; Variations on a Theme by Nielsen

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67500. City of L. Sinfonia, Taylor

The Eleventh Symphony comes from 1990 and is a two-movement work: an Andante followed by an Allegro. Scored for smaller forces than its two immediate predecessors, it has the powerful and uncompromising logic that shapes all the composer's best music; indeed, many may feel that it is his finest symphony. The Variations on a Theme by Nielsen was written in 1983 and includes some highly evocative and resourceful invention. An essential acquisition for anyone who cares about the modern British symphony, and very well-detailed sound indeed.

(i) Canzona for Brass; (i & ii) Media morte in vita sumus; (ii) Tempi; (iii) Eppur si muove

 Hyp. CDA 67016. (i) Corydon Brass Ens.; (ii) Corydon Singers, Best; (iii) Quinn

The Canzona for Brass from 1957 has never sounded more impressive on CD. It has the dignity and grandeur of Gabrieli. The Media morte in vita sumus ('In the midst of death we are in life') is for voices and brass. It has a depth and eloquence completely at variance with so much contemporary music. Tempi (1988) is a setting for a cappella choir of various Italian tempo indications, written for a choral competition in the composer's adopted Eire. Such is its beauty that it makes one regret that it is Simpson's only contribution to the medium. Eppur si muove (1988) is an imposing 30-minute piece for organ, not dissimilar in scope and ambition to Nielsen's Commotio. It derives its title from Galileo's response when he was compelled by the Church to recant his view that the earth revolved round the sun: 'But it does move.' Iain Quinn plays it with consummate mastery on the organ of Winchester Cathedral. The brass playing is superb and the Corydon Singers cope with Simpson's demanding vocal writing admirably even if the sopranos are obviously taxed at times above the stave. State-of-the-art recording. Not to be missed.

(i) Clarinet Quintet; String Quartet 13; (ii) String Quintet 2

🔑  Hyp. CDA 66905. (i) King; (ii) Van Kampen; Delmé Qt

The Clarinet Quintet is arguably the most searching example of the genre to have appeared since the war and not just in this country. From the opening, with the model of Beethoven's C sharp minor Quartet, Op. 131, not far from view, right to the ending, this is a subtle, concentrated and profoundly original – and profound – work. It is one of those pieces which is more than the sum of its parts and which resonates long in the memory. The Thirteenth Quartet is a concentrated piece and the Delmé Quartet are ideal exponents.

Horn Quartet (for horn, violin, cello & piano); Horn Trio (for horn, violin & piano)

🔑  Hyp. CDA 66695. Watkins, Lowbury, Armytage, Dearnley

The Quartet for Horn, Violin, Cello and Piano of 1976 is of unfailing quality and imagination, and its development is magnificently sustained. The composer's command of large-scale musical thinking is much in evidence – but so, too, is his feeling for sonority. He draws some extraordinary sounds from these four instruments. In some ways this is one of his most deeply original and compelling works. The later Horn Trio immediately pre-dates the Ninth Symphony. These are most impressive pieces, and the performances are completely dedicated and highly imaginative. Excellent recording too.

String Quartets 1; 4

 Hyp. CDA 66419. Delmé Qt

The First Quartet opens in as innocent a fashion as the Haydn Lark Quartet or Nielsen's E flat, but the better one comes to know it the more it is obvious that Simpson is already his own man. The second movement is a palindrome (many modern composers do not know how to write forwards, let alone backwards as well) but its ingenuity is worn lightly. The Fourth is part of the trilogy which Simpson conceived as a kind of commentary on Beethoven's Rasumovsky Quartets, yet they live very much in their own right. Excellent performances from the Delmé Quartet, and fine recording too.

String Quartets 2; 5

 Hyp. CDA 66386. Delmé Qt

The Second Quartet is thought-provoking and full of character. The Fifth, composed over 20 years later in 1974, is one of the three modelled on Beethoven's Rasumovsky Quartets – in this case, Op. 59, No. 2 – and even emulates the phrase structure of the Beethoven. It is a long and powerfully sustained piece, which receives expert advocacy from the Delmé Quartet and excellent Hyperion sound.

String Quartets 3 & 6; String Trio (prelude, adagio & fugue)

 Hyp. CDA 66376. Delmé Qt

The Third Quartet is a two-movement piece. Its finale is a veritable power-house, with its unrelenting sense of onward movement which almost strains the medium. Its first movement is a deeply felt piece that has a powerful and haunting eloquence. The Sixth is further evidence of Simpson's remarkable musical mind. The String Trio is a marvellously stimulating and thoughtful piece. Dedicated performances and excellent recording.

String Quartets 7 & 8

 Hyp. CDA 66117. Delmé Qt

The Seventh Quartet has a real sense of vision and something of the stillness of the remote worlds it evokes, 'quiet and mysterious yet pulsating with energy'. The Eighth turns from the vastness of space to the microcosmic world of insect-life, but, as with so much of Simpson's music, there is a concern for musical continuity rather than beauty of incident. Excellent playing from the Delmé Quartet, and very good recorded sound, too.

String Quartet 9 (32 Variations & Fugue on a Theme of Haydn)

 Hyp. CDA 66127. Delmé Qt

The Ninth Quartet is a set of 32 variations and a fugue on the Minuet of Haydn's Symphony 47. Like the Minuet itself, all the variations are in the form of a palindrome. It is a mighty and serious work, argued with all the resource and ingenuity one expects from this composer. A formidable achievement in any age, and a rarity in ours. The Delmé Quartet cope with its difficulties splendidly, and the performance carries the imprimatur of the composer.

String Quartets 10 (For Peace); 11

 Hyp. CDA 66225. Coull Qt

The subtitle of 10, For Peace, refers to 'its generally pacific character' and aspires to define 'the condition of peace which excludes aggression but not strong feeling'. Listening to this Quartet is like hearing a quiet, cool voice of sanity that refreshes the troubled spirit after a long period in an alien, hostile world. The one-movement Eleventh draws on some of the inspiration of its predecessor. It is a work of enormous power and momentum. Excellent performances and recording.

String Quartet 12 (1987); (i) String Quintet (1987)

 Hyp. CDA 66503. Coull Qt; (i) with Bigley

Robert Simpson's Twelfth Quartet is a masterly and absorbing score. His String Quintet is another work of sustained inventive power. We are unlikely to get another recording, so this is self-recommending; but it must be noted that the heroic demands this score makes on the players keep them fully stretched. The intonation and tone of the leader is not always impeccable, but the playing has commitment and intelligence.

String Quartets 14 & 15; (i) Quintet for Clarinet, Bass Clarinet & Strings

 Hyp. CDA 66626. (i) Farrall, Cross; Vanbrugh Qt

The Fourteenth Quartet comes from 1990, and the Fifteenth, written when Simpson was 70 (in 1991), was his last. This is surely the greatest quartet cycle produced in the last half of the 20th century, and in terms of contrapuntal ingenuity and musical depth belongs with Bartók, Shostakovich and Holmboe. The Clarinet Quintet is not to be confused with the 1968 work listed above; it is an arrangement for clarinet, bass clarinet and string trio of a 1983 quintet intriguingly scored for clarinet, bass clarinet and three double basses. These are powerful Beethovenian scores whose stature and musical processes are easier to recognize than describe. Dedicated performances, superbly recorded.

Piano Sonata; Michael Tippett, his Mystery; Variations & Finale on a Theme by Beethoven; Variations & Finale on a Theme by Haydn

 Hyp. CDA 66827. Clarke

The Piano Sonata is a concentrated, craggy, powerfully argued piece, not obviously pianistic but bristling with challenges and difficulties. The Variations and Finale on a Theme of Haydn (1948) evince Simpson's lifelong interest in the palindrome. The slow movement of the Second Symphony is a palindrome, and the theme he uses here (that of the Minuet of Haydn's Symphony 47) also forms the basis of the mighty variations which comprise the Ninth String Quartet. The short piece written for Tippett was a contribution to a birthday tribute. The Variations and Finale on a Theme of Beethoven are based on a little-known Bagatelle, WoO 61a, and were written for Charles Burney's granddaughter, and with the present pianist in mind. The performances are authoritative and, apart from a certain over-resonance, the recording is satisfactory.

SINDING, Christian (1856–1941)

Piano Concerto in D flat, Op. 6

 Hyp. CDA 67555. Lane, Bergen PO, Litton – ALNÆS: Piano Concerto in D ***

Sinding has none of the national colouring of Grieg and Svendsen, and he showed little interest in the Norwegian folk tradition. The Concerto is an early work, coming from 1889, four years after the Piano Quintet which Busoni and the Brodsky Quartet had successfully championed in Germany. Sinding reworked the solo part in 1890 and again in 1901, and Piers Lane negotiates its difficulties with dazzling virtuosity and fine musicianship.

Violin Concerto 1 in A, Op. 45; Romance in D, Op. 100

(BB)  Naxos 8.557266. Kraggerud, Bournemouth SO, Engeset – SIBELIUS: Violin Concerto, etc. **(*)

Henning Kraggerud's powerful reading of the Sibelius Violin Concerto comes here with an unusual and attractive coupling in another Scandinavian Violin Concerto, the first of the three written by the Norwegian Christian Sinding. Though the opening theme in this work is a barefaced crib from the finale of the Brahms Violin Concerto, Sinding's individual voice is quickly established in the full-blooded first movement, leading to a darkly intense slow movement and dance-like finale. The shorter piece nicely points the contrast of character between the two composers. Full, vivid sound.

Suite in A min., Op. 10

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 62590-2. Perlman, Pittsburgh SO, Previn – KORNGOLD; SIBELIUS: Concertos ***

Heifetz recorded this dazzling piece in the 1950s, and it need only be said that Perlman's version (restored to the catalogue as part of the 'Perlman Edition') is not inferior. The blend of archaism and fantasy in Sinding's Suite sounds distinctly Scandinavian of the 1890s yet is altogether fresh and quite delightful. Such is the velocity of Perlman's first movement that one wonders whether the recording transfer is playing at the right speed. Stunning virtuosity and vivid recording.

Légende, Op. 46

(BB)  Naxos 8.550329. Dong-Suk Kang, Slovak (Bratislava) RSO, Leaper – HALVORSEN: Air norvégien, etc.; SIBELIUS: Violin Concerto; SVENDSEN: Romance ***

Dong-Suk Kang plays Sinding's Légende with great conviction and an effortless, songful virtuosity. It is by no means as appealing as the Halvorsen and Svendsen pieces but makes a good makeweight for an excellent collection in the lowest price range.

Symphonies 1 in D min., Op. 21; 2 in D, Op. 83

 CPO 999 502-2 Hanover NDR PO, Dausgaard

(BB)  Warner Apex 0927 48310-2. Norwegian R.O, Rasilainen

Symphonies 3 in F, Op. 121; 4 (winter and spring), Op. 129

 CPO 999 596-2. N. German R. PO, Porcelijn

 Finlandia 8573 82356-2. Norwegian R. O, Rasilainen

Both the first two Symphonies are well crafted, though the scoring is often opaque. Thomas Dausgaard is a persuasive advocate and gets good playing from the excellent Hanover Orchestra. On balance, this is to be preferred to the rival Norwegian Radio accounts under Ari Rasilainen; however, readers wanting to explore the first two Symphonies will surely be tempted by the low price of the Apex disc.

Sinding's Symphony 3 is his longest and most ambitious work. In a leaping 9/8 compound-time the first theme enters at once, with horns whooping exuberantly, leading to a second subject which echoes the Rhine motif in Wagner's Ring cycle, and though the slow movement with its gentle flow of themes is less striking, the skipping dance-rhythms of the Scherzo and the strong, Meistersinger-like tread of the celebratory finale again bring exhilaration. Symphony 4, like 3 warmly and colourfully performed under the Dutch conductor David Porcelijn, is structurally more adventurous, with its linked sequence of seven sections offering a satisfying one-movement symphonic structure. Amazingly, the piece was produced for Sinding's 80th birthday. Like the performances, the North German Radio recording is first rate, and it is again preferable to the alternative Finlandia coupling.

Violin Sonatas in C, Op. 12; in F, Op. 74; Suite in F, Op. 14

 ASV CDDCA 1166. Rogliano, Paciariello

Like Symphony 3, the C major Violin Sonata starts with another surging theme, leaping in compound-time, while the F major work is warmly Brahmsian in its positive sequence of attractive ideas. The Suite, written at the same time as the C major work, is like a sonata with a shortened first movement. An amiable piece, like the Sonatas very well performed and recorded by the Italian duo of Marco Rogliano and Maurizio Paciariello.

SLAVICKY, Klement (1910–99)

Moravian Dance Fantasies; Rhapsodic Variations

Ⓜ () Sup. mono SU 3688-2. Czech PO, Ančerl – NOVÁK: In the Tatras ()

Klement Slavicky was Moravian (his father had been a pupil of Janáček) and served until 1951 on the staff of the Czechoslovak Radio, ending up as its head of music. The Moravian Dance Fantasies come from 1951 and its companion here from 1953. Ančerl conducted the première the following year. They are both folkloric in feeling and are scored with great expertise and a feeling for colour. Well worth seeking out.

SMETANA, Bedřich (1824–84)

Festive Symphony in E, Op. 6; Festive Overture, Op. 4

Ⓜ () Sup. stereo/mono SU1914 011. Czech PO, Sejna – with DVOŘÁK: Cunning Peasant Overture; SKROUP: The Tinker Overture ()

Smetana's Festive or Triumphal Symphony from 1853 is best known for its effervescent Scherzo, which is often performed on its own. It is also by far the best of the four movements. Karel Sejna's account was recorded in 1966, though the orchestral texture is so well balanced that it can hold its own with more modern recordings. The Festive Overture, Op. 4, recorded in 1955, is amazingly good for its period and the couplings are attractive.

Der Fischer, Rybár; Hakon Jarl; Jubel Overture; March for the Shakespeare Festival; Prague Carnival; Richard III; Venkovanka, the Peasant Woman; Wallenstein's Camp (symphonic poems)

✿ 🔑 * Chan. 10413. BBC PO, Noseda

This is simply the finest compilation of Smetana's colourful symphonic poems ever put on disc. We have had a previous fine collection of the key works by the Bavarian Radio Orchestra under Kubelik, but that has now been reissued as a double-set, paired with a less attractive version of Má Vlast (DG 459 418-2). In any case, apart from Gianandrea Noseda's splendidly vivid and imaginative performances (especially the darkly atmospheric Richard III, the highly dramatic Hakon Jarl and the spectacularly military evocations of Wallenstein's Camp) the Chandos disc triumphs by its demonstration-quality, state-of-the-art recording. Not to be missed.

Má Vlast (complete; DVD version)

Ⓝ (*) Medici Arts DVD 2072388. Bav. RSO, Kubelik (V/D Producer: Korbinian Mayer)

Recorded in 1984, this DVD version of Má Vlast is a disappointment. Rafael Kubelik, of course, is thoroughly at home in the score and the Bavarian Radio Orchestra play very well indeed, although there is not the special character of music-making one would experience with the Czech Philharmonic. Moreover, the performance itself cannot compare in vibrancy with the superb Supraphon 1990 account on CD listed below, even if the acoustic of the Munich Herkulessaal gives a fine, warm ambience to the sound. But the real problem is that the complete work runs to 82 minutes, and the experience of watching the conductor and various shots of the orchestra for this period of time without a real break, rather conventionally photographed, outlasts its welcome. It might have been an idea to have some colour imagery of Vyšehrad (which is still there!), the river Vltava, which runs right through Prague, and indeed Bohemia's woods and fields. This is a work that certainly offers the potential for illustration in that way if it can be imaginatively photographed.

Má Vlast (complete; CD versions)

🔑 * Sup. 11 1208-2. Czech PO, Kubelik

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.550931. Polish Nat. RSO (Katowice), Wit

🔑 * Telarc CD 80265. Milwaukee SO, Macal

Ⓜ  LSO Live SACD LSO 0516. LSO, C. Davis

Ⓝ Ⓑ  Virgin 5 22129-2. RLPO, Pešek

 Chan. 9366. Detroit SO, Järvi

Ⓜ  Sup. SU 3672-2 901. Czech PO, Ančerl

 Sup. SU 3465-2 031. Czech PO, Mackerras

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.111237. Czech PO, Talich

Rafael Kubelik's vibrant performance of Má Vlast is special, imbued with passionate national feeling, yet never letting the emotions boil over. At the bold opening of Vyšehrad, with the harp strongly profiled, the intensity of the music-making is immediately projected, and the trickling streams, which are the source of Vltava, have a delicacy almost of fantasy. Šárka, with its bloodthirsty tale of revenge and slaughter, is immensely dramatic, contrasting with the pastoral evocations of the following piece; the Slavonic lilt of the music's lighter moments brings the necessary contrast and release. The recording is vivid and full but not sumptuous, yet this suits the powerful impulse of Kubelik's overall view, with the build-up to the exultant close of Blaník producing a dénouement of great majesty.

Antoni Wit and his excellent Polish National Radio Orchestra give us a superbly played and consistently imaginative account. The spacious opening of Vyšehrad, marginally slower than usual, glows with romantic evocation; equally the flutes, trickling down from the sources of the Vltava, captivate the ear and the famous string-tune is unusually gracious and relaxed. The opening of Šárka brings tingling melodrama, which subsides naturally for the jaunty theme which follows. From Bohemia's Woods and Fields opens with opulent expansiveness, and later the ethereal high string entry is exquisitely made. Tábor develops great weight and gravitas. The warm resonance of the Concert Hall of Polish Radio in Katowice seems right for this very individual reading, full of fantasy, which goes automatically to the top of the list alongside Kubelik's distinguished, and justly renowned, 1990 Czech Philharmonic version on Supraphon, which is rather special.

Macal's Telarc version offers the finest recording of all; indeed it approaches the demonstration bracket. He provides a highly spontaneous and enjoyable performance, imaginatively conceived and convincingly paced. Other accounts, notably Kubelik's, have greater Slavic fire and find a more red-bloodedly patriotic feeling, but the excellent orchestral playing is responsive to his less histrionic view. Sárka has a folksy flavour, the melodrama good-humoured, while in From Bohemia's Woods and Fields, after the radiant high string passage, the horns steal in magically with their chorale. Throughout, the brass are full and sonorous, mitigating any rhetorical bombast in the last two symphonic poems; and Macal's Czech nationality ensures that the performance has idiomatic feeling.

Recorded live at the Barbican in May 2005, Sir Colin Davis offers a warm, incisive reading which brings out the drama as well as the poetry behind each portrait of Smetana's homeland, clearly integrating the final two symphonic poems, Tábor and Blanik, noisier than the rest and written rather as an afterthought. It is true that the limited Barbican acoustic does not make for the very finest sound, yet it is well detailed, and there are advantages of having a slightly more distanced sound in places, as in the evocative central section of Vltava.

Pešek's idiomatic reading does not miss the music's epic, patriotic feeling, yet never becomes bombastic. There is plenty of evocation, from the richly romantic opening of Vyšehrad to the more mysterious scene-setting in Tábor, while the climax of Sárka, with its potent anticipatory horn-call, is a gripping piece of melodrama. The two main sections of the work, Vltava and From Bohemia's Woods and Fields, are especially enjoyable for their vivid characterization, while at the very end of Blaník Pešek draws together the two key themes – the Vyšehrad motif and the Hussite chorale – very satisfyingly.

Järvi's, too, is an enjoyably vivid performance, and he has the double advantage of first-class playing from the highly committed Detroit Orchestra and the splendid acoustics of Symphony Hall. The romantic Vyšehrad is fresh and immediate, and the mountain streams of Vltava gleam brightly in the sunlight before the string tune arrives and moves on with plenty of lyrical impetus. Sárka is very dramatic indeed, with great melodramatic gusto and a heartfelt response from the strings. The opening of Tábor is tellingly ominous, and the weight of the Detroit brass makes a powerful contribution to both of the final two sections of the score.

The CD of Karel Ančerl's 1963 performance is something of a revelation, the quality now transformed by the CD transfer, full, warmly atmospheric yet still brilliant. The performance is full of character and the playing of the Czech Philharmonic is superb, with glowing woodwind detail and much beautiful string-playing.

Mackerras's affinity with Czech music is well known, and his version of Má Vlast ranks high. The sound has presence and body, and the warm, reverberant acoustic is pleasing yet allows plenty of detail to register.

Of the multiple recordings of Má Vlast made by the veteran Czech conductor, Vaclav Talich, this is the last, made in 1954, and the mono sound is very acceptable as transferred by Mark Obert-Thorn. The buoyancy of the rhythms and the warmth of the strings set against the typically rustic sound of the woodwind are exactly right for the music, ending with fiery accounts of the last two of the six symphonic poems, Tabor and Blaník.

Má Vlast: From Bohemia's Woods and Fields; Vltava; Vyšehrad. The Bartered Bride: Overture & Dances

Ⓑ  DG 427 340-2. VPO, Levine

The three Má Vlast excerpts, taken from Levine's deleted complete set, are quite splendid, full of momentum and thrust, aptly paced, with much imaginative detail. The Bartered Bride Overture and Dances are highly infectious: Levine offers the usual numbers, plus the Skocná. The sound is full-blooded and vivid, with a wide amplitude and range to give the music plenty of atmosphere.

Má Vlast: Vltava

(*) DG 439 009-2. VPO, Karajan – DVOŘÁK: Symphony 9 (New World) **(*)

Ⓜ () EMI mono 5 62790-2. VPO, Furtwängler – RICHARD STRAUSS: Death and Transfiguration, etc. ()

Karajan's VPO performance is characteristically well structured, and the recorded sound sounds quite expansive in this remastered format, even if the balance is not quite natural.

Furtwängler's recording of Vltava was made in the Musikvereinsaal in 1951 with Walter Legge producing, a guarantee of a finely balanced musical sound which does justice to the tonal finesse of the Vienna orchestra. It serves as an introduction and makeweight to three Strauss tone-poems that were given performances of commanding eloquence.

Má Vlast: Vltava; The Bartered Bride: Overture; Polka; Furiant

Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 475 7730. (i) Israel PO; (ii) LSO; Kertész – DVOŘÁK: Slavonic Dances; Symphonic Variations ***

With Kertész, these pieces are exceptionally vivid. The separate entries in the Overture are beautifully positioned by the stereo, and the ambience makes the background rustle of all the strings weaving away at their fugato theme sound quite captivating.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Duo for Violin & Piano (From the Homeland)

⊶  Praga PRD 250 153. Remés, Kayahara – DVOŘÁK: Sonatina; JANÁČEK; MARTINŮ: Violin Sonatas ***

Ⓜ  Sup. SU 3772. Suk, Panenka – DVOŘÁK: Romantic Pieces, Sonatina; SUK: Ballade; 4 Pieces ***

Smetana's two-movement Duo (From the Homeland) is, not surprisingly, full of endearing Czech folk influences, with the dumka style hovering over the first movement. It is marvellously played by these two fine artists, who are thoroughly immersed in its local atmosphere. The recording is vividly live and present.

They are also admirably played by Suk and Panenka, who are just as idiomatic in feeling, and are most naturally recorded.

Piano Trio in G min., Op. 15

Ⓝ  MDG 942 1512-2. V. Piano Trio – TCHAIKOVSKY: Piano Trio ***

 Chan. 8445; Borodin Trio – DVOŘÁK: Dumky Trio ***

(BB)  Warner Apex 7559 79679-2. Boston Symphony Chamber Players – DVOŘÁK: String Sextet in A ***

 Sup. SU 3810. Smetana Trio – NOVAK: Trio quasi una balata; SUK: Elegie; Piano Trio ***

 Ara. Z6661. Golub-Kaplan-Carr Trio – TCHAIKOVSKY: Piano Trio ***

(*) MDG MDGL 3247. Trio Parnassus – ARENSKY: Piano Trio in D min **(*)

Writing the G minor Trio was the composer's cathartic act, following the death of his four-year-old daughter, so it is not surprising that it is a movingly expressive work. The newest version from Dabringhaus und Grimm measures up extremely well against its competitors. The pianist Stefan Mendl is able to dominate yet become a full member of the partnership throughout. All three movements are in the home key and are thematically linked, yet they are enticingly diverse, while in the hand of the Vienna Piano Trio the rondo finale bursts with vitality. All in all, a real winner of a disc that can be highly recommended on all counts.

The writing gives fine expressive opportunities for both the violin and cello, which are taken up eloquently on the Chandos recording by Rostislav Dubinsky and Yuli Turovsky, and the pianist, Luba Edlina, is also wonderfully sympathetic. In short, a superb account, given a most realistic recording balance. Highly recommended.

The 1983 Boston performance on Warner Apex brings a distinguished line-up, Joseph Silverstein, the cellist Jules Eskine and the pianist Gilbert Kalisch. This sensitive and vital account ranks among the most competitive of Smetana's Piano Trio, particularly given its price bracket.

Smetana's Piano Trio is given a strongly characterized, idiomatic and finely polished reading by the eponymous Smetana Trio, a re-formed group whose cellist, Jan Paleniček, is the son of Josef Paleniček, pianist in the original Smetana Trio, founded in the 1930s.

The Arabesque CD offers the kind of chamber-music playing to inspire confidence in the future: nothing overdriven, mechanized or attention-seeking.

The Trio Parnassus give a likeable and convincing performance, very alive and vivid. Their coupling, the Arensky D minor Trio, may well sway some readers in their favour.

String Quartet 1 in E min. (From My Life).

🔑  EMI 7 54215-2. Alban Berg Qt – DVOŘÁK: String Quartet 12 ***

() Testament mono SBT 1072. Hollywood Qt – DVOŘÁK; KODÁLY: Quartets ()

Ⓜ () BBC mono BBCL 4137-2. Smetana Qt – BEETHOVEN: String Quartet 1 (); MOZART: String Quartet 20 ((*))

There is much more to admire in the Alban Berg's reading than to cavil at: the first movement comes off well, and the EMI recording is very truthful and present.

This Hollywood Quartet recording is a performance of tremendous fire and passion, with an exhilarating rhythmic drive and a powerful sense of momentum. Yet everything sounds perfectly natural and not overdriven. Great quartet playing – and perfectly acceptable sound, given the mid-1950s date.

The Smetana Quartet's performance of the E minor Quartet (From my Life) comes from a BBC relay from the Royal Festival Hall in June 1965, and the mono sound is very acceptable indeed. Their playing here has polish, ardour and freshness.

String Quartet 1 (From My Life) (orchestral version by George Szell); The Bartered Bride: Overture & Dances

 Chan. 8412. LSO, Simon

The Czech feeling of Szell's scoring is especially noticeable in the Polka, but overall there is no doubt that the fuller textures add a dimension to the music, though inevitably there are losses as well as gains. The recording is well up to the usual high Chandos standards.

String Quartets 1 in E min. (From my Life); 2 in D min. (plus documentary; DVD version)

(*) Sup. DVD SU 7004-2. Smetana Qt – DVOŘÁK: Sextet in A **(*)

From the Smetana Quartet, straightforward performances and equally straightforward presentation for the camera. However, the documentary in which the members of the quartet look back over their career is curiously stiff and it is difficult to imagine oneself replaying it. Recommended for the performances, however.

String Quartets 1 (From My Life); 2 in D min.

🔑  ASV CDDCA 777. Lindsay Qt – DVOŘÁK: Romance; Waltzes 1–2 ***

Ⓜ (*) Telarc CD 80178. Cleveland Qt – BORODIN: Quartet 1 **(*)

The Lindsay Quartet bring dramatic intensity to the E minor Quartet and play with great fire and vitality. Their recording is very good indeed, and readers wanting both the Smetana Quartets together need look no further.

The Cleveland Quartet play magnificently but, as in the coupled Borodin, their performance is a bit short on spontaneity. The recording is first class.

PIANO MUSIC

Czech Dances I & II; 8 Bagatelles and Impromptus

(BB)  Regis RRC 1223. Kvapil

Radoslav Kvapil is entirely inside this music, even if his account of the F major Polka from the first book of Czech Dances does not eclipse memories of Firkušný's celebrated mono LP account, which had great exuberance and dash! All the same, Kvapil is a highly sensitive exponent of this repertoire. The recording is good, too. The disc also comes as part of a four-disc survey of Czech piano music (Regis RRC 4006).

OPERA

The Bartered Bride (complete in English)

🔑 Ⓜ * Chan. 3128 (2). Gritton, Clarke, Robinson, Rose, Davies, Montague, Moses, Bonner, Leggate, Hesketh-Harvey, ROHCG Ch., Philh. O, Mackerras

What makes this translated version so successful is not just the brilliant conducting of Sir Charles Mackerras and the scintillating playing of the Philharmonia Orchestra, with an exceptionally strong team of soloists working well together, but also the extra impact of the comedy made by a performance in the vernacular. The echoes of G & S, with double-rhymes given a jolly, Gilbertian ring, distracting in many operas, for once seem entirely appropriate, adding to the joy of the piece. Kecal, the marriage-broker, has so many patter numbers in which Peter Rose is wonderfully agile, characterfully establishing himself as the key figure in the story. Even the chorus has rapid tongue-twisters to cope with, crisply performed by the Covent Garden Chorus. Susan Gritton is a radiant heroine, producing golden tone and rising superbly to the challenge of the poignant numbers when it seems that Jeník has betrayed her. Paul Charles Clarke as Jeník is less successful when his tenor grows uneven under pressure, though his characterization is first rate. The two other tenor roles are both superbly taken by Timothy Robinson as the stuttering simpleton, Vašek, and Robin Leggate as the ringmaster in Act III. Strong casting too for Mařenka's parents, Neal Davies as Krušina and Yvonne Howard as Ludmila, clearly establishing their contrasted responses to the proposed marriage of Mařenka and Vašek.

The Bartered Bride: Overture

Ⓜ  RCA (ADD) SACD 82876 66376-2. Chicago SO, Reiner – DVOŘÁK: Symphony 9 (New World); WEINBERGER: Schwanda: Polka & Fugue ***

The easy, bustling virtuosity of the Chicago strings makes this vivacious performance of Smetana's famous overture hard to beat, when the remastered recording is so full on SACD, while retaining its clear inner detail.

The Bartered Bride (complete; sung in German; CD version)

Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 3 81872-2 (2). Lorengar, Wunderlich, Frick, Berlin RIAS Ch., Bamberg SO, Kempe

Ⓜ () Somm Beecham mono 14-2. Konetzni, Tauber, Jarred, Tessmer, Ch., LPO, Beecham

The Bartered Bride sung in German seems an unlikely candidate for a recommendation, yet this vivacious Bamberg set is a remarkable success and is very enjoyable indeed. Pilar Lorengar is most appealing as Mařenka and Fritz Wunderlich, in one of his all too few complete-opera recordings, is outstanding as Jeník. Gottlob Frick gives a strong, earthy characterization of Kečal, the marriage-broker. The whole production is full of high spirits. The recording is bright and vivid, yet has plenty of depth. The reissue comes with a synopsis and separate list of items.

Here is the first of three performances of Smetana's masterpiece that Sir Thomas Beecham conducted at Covent Garden in his last pre-war opera season. It was recorded on 1 May 1939, only a few weeks after the Nazi annexation of Czechoslovakia, but they had to settle, ironically enough, on giving it in German. However, Beecham managed to assemble a pretty stellar line-up, including the glorious Hilda Konetzni, Richard Tauber, Mary Jarred and Marko Rothmüller. But there is an exhilarating sense of occasion, plenty of spirit and the glory of the singing comes across. The sound quality calls for a tolerance that is well worth extending.

The Brandenburgers in Bohemia (complete)

(*) Sup. (ADD) 11 1804-2 (2). Zídek, Otava, Subrtová, Kalaš, Joran, Vich, Prague Nat. Theatre soloists, Ch. & O, Jan Hus Tich

Though much of the drama centres on the fate of the heroine, Liduše, abducted by a Prague burgher with the mercenary Germanic name of Tausendmark, the love interest which must sustain any romantic opera is sketched in only cursorily. The main duet between Liduše and her beloved, Junoš, is charming and jolly rather than heartfelt, an opportunity missed. Nevertheless there is much to enjoy in a performance as lively as this, with stirring patriotic choruses sung with a will, even if their melodic invention is hardly distinguished. A collector's item.

Dalibor (complete)

🔑  Sup. (ADD) 11 2185-2 (2). Přibyl, Kniplová, Jindrák, Svorc, Horáček, Prague Nat. Theatre Ch. & O, Krombholc

In the development of the plot, when the imprisoned hero's lover is disguised as the gaoler's assistant, Dalibor readily evokes associations with Fidelio, and the subject prompted Smetana to write some of his most inspired music. The confrontations between hero and heroine also inspire Smetana to some glorious writing, richly lyrical, most notably the love duet in the prison scene of Act II. This vintage set of 1967, sounding more vivid and full-blooded than many more recent recordings, features in those roles two of the most distinguished Czech singers of their time, both in their prime, the tenor Vílém Přibyl and the dramatic soprano Nadezda Kniplová. Krombholc proves a most persuasive advocate, consistently bringing out the red-blooded fervour of the writing. A full translation is provided.

Libuše

(*) Sup. 11 1276-2 633 (3). Beňačková, Zítek, Svorc, Vodička, Děpoltová, Prague Nat. Theatre Ch. & O, Košler

Recorded live, with Gabriela Beňačková-Cápová as Libuše memorable in her prophetic aria in Act III. Václav Zítek as Přemysi, her consort, provides an attractive lyrical interlude in Act II, which, with its chorus of harvesters, has affinities with The Bartered Bride. Košler directs committedly; with the stage perspectives well caught; the recording is very satisfactory. The cues still provide poor internal access for an opera playing for not far short of three hours. Twelve extra index points have been added to the 14 bands – not nearly enough for a work of this kind.

The Two Widows (complete)

 Sup. (ADD) 11 2122-2 (2). Sormová, Machotková, Zahradníček, Horáček, Prague Nat. Theatre Ch. & O, Jílek

The Two Widows is a tale of country life in the big house rather than among the peasantry, with the plot centring on two cousins, both widows, and inconsequential confusions over which of them is going to marry the hero, Ladislav. Smetana offers much delightful music and there are some charming numbers in between, not least an aria for the hero, 'When Maytime arrives', at the beginning of Act II. Jiří Zahradníček is at his best there, singing lustily, though in gentler moments Slavonic unsteadiness develops. Jaroslav Horáček is effective in the buffo bass role of Mumlal but, sadly, the casting of the two widows, both sopranos, involves the major role of Karolina going to the shrill and wobbly Nada Sormová, while Marcela Machotková, who is altogether sweeter and firmer, with a mezzo-ish quality, is consigned to the role of Anežka with far less to sing, even though it is she who gets the hero. Recorded in 1975, this lively performance under Frantisek Jílek is on the whole well transferred to CD, though in a dryish acoustic the Prague Theatre violins sound undernourished. The libretto includes a very necessary translation.

SMITH, Alice Mary (1839–84)

Symphonies in A min.; C min.; (i) Andante for Clarinet & Orchestra

🔑 ❀  Chan. 10283. LMP, Shelley; (i) with Malsbury

Alice Mary Smith was the first British woman to have composed a symphony and had it performed. And what a fine work it is, attractively tuneful throughout and with a fine grasp of orchestration and form. It has a particularly delightful second-movement Allegretto amorevole, with a folksy principal melody of real memorability. The Scherzo opens with rollicking horns, and even the Victorian maestoso finale lightens up after a bit.

The A minor Symphony is immediately Mendelssohnian in its richly lyrical forward impetus, and the romantic Andante opens with the horns and then offers a flowing cantilena. The third movement is a little like a Laendler; the finale is boisterous and confident.

Her Andante for Clarinet and Orchestra, delicately scored and persuasively played here by Angela Malsbury, again demonstrates Smith's easy melodic gifts, very songlike and pleasing. Howard Shelley and the London Mozart Players are admirable advocates throughout, and this CD is most enjoyable.

SMYTH, Ethel (1858–1944)

(i) Concerto for Violin, Horn & Orchestra; Serenade in D

🔑  Chan. 9449. (i) Langdon, Watkins; BBC PO, De la Martinez

The Concerto for Violin, Horn and Orchestra is a highly successful piece in every respect. The first movement begins with an ambitious string melody, then the soloists enter alternately with the endearing secondary idea (one of the composer's very best tunes), which is imaginatively developed in a free fantasia of flowing and dancing melody and varying moods; only at the recapitulation do the soloists share the opening theme. The romantic central Elegy brings a touchingly beautiful and nostalgic exchange between the two soloists.

The Serenade in D major might well be Brahms's. Not only does the rich string writing of the first movement have a glorious sweep, but the harmonic thinking and progressions are echt-Brahms. Yet Smyth's invention is of high quality, for all its eclecticism. With superb performances and warm, sumptuous recording, both these colourful and tuneful works will give great pleasure. This is easily the most impressive Smyth offering yet to have appeared on CD, and it is conducted with understanding and commitment.

The Wreckers: Overture

🔑 Ⓑ  CfP (ADD) 3 52405-2. RSNO, Gibson – GERMAN: Welsh Rhapsody; HARTY: With the Wild Geese; MACCUNN: Land of the Mountain and Flood ***

Ethel Smyth's Overture for her opera, The Wreckers, is a strong, meaty piece, which shows the calibre of this remarkable woman's personality for, while the material itself is not memorable, it is put together most compellingly and orchestrated with real flair. The recording is full and the CD has refined detail.

SOLER, Antonio (1729–83)

Sonatas for Harpsichord (complete)

❀ (BB) * Naxos 8.553462/3/4/5 (Vols. 1–4); 8.554434 (Vol. 5); 8.554565/6 (Vols. 6–7); 8.555031/2 (Vols. 8–9); 8.557137 (Vol. 10); 8.557640 (Vol. 11); 8.557937 (Vol. 12); 8.570292 (Vol. 13) Rowland (harpsichord)

The Catalan composer Padre Antonio Soler was a monk who spent most of his life at the Escorial, a famous monastery near Madrid. There his duties included choir master, the provision of choral music for services and the writing of secular music for the royal family (who often visited the monastery). Yet he found time to compose 150 keyboard Sonatas (he apparently managed to survive on four hours' sleep each night, rising in time for early morning Mass). Between 1752 and 1757 he is reputed to have studied with Domenico Scarlatti, and most of his own sonatas show this influence. They are single-movement works in binary form (two sections), often exuberant, bravura pieces, some with dance rhythms; others are slow movements (some of these extended and marked cantabile and espressivo). But he also wrote more ambitious sonatas. 63 in F and 67 in D (in Volume 12) are three-movement works, each beginning with a slow movement, and are part of a group of six Sonatas dating from 1777, while 97–9 are part of a group of three Sonatas in four movements (Op. 8) written in 1783. The variety of Soler's invention is remarkable, sometimes drawing on local folk themes. The outstanding Scottish keyboard player Gilbert Rowland has recorded this repertoire over a long period, beginning in the late 1990s and concluding in 2005, playing with great vitality and variety of characterization, bringing every sonata fully to life. He is truthfully recorded, in a perfect acoustic, and you can dip into any one of these 13 discs (all available separately) and be sure of receiving musical refreshment. We have now spent some time with these works.

Keyboard Sonatas 17; 19; 20; 71–73; 77; 87; 115 & 118 (Numbering after Samuel Rubio)

Ⓝ  CPO 777 200-2. Hinrichs (piano)

While the extensive coverage of these attractive sonatas on the harpsichord by Gilbert Rowland is entirely valid, it seems likely that Soler's favourite instrument was the soft-voiced clavichord. However, Marie-Luise Hinrichs has decided to present her selection on a modern grand piano, and her performances are very appealing. Certainly the use of the modern instrument makes the music sound more forward-looking, although the link with Scarlatti remains. The choice of sonatas here is felicitous and Hinrichs plays them stylishly and with pleasing spontaneity. A most enjoyable disc.

SOMERVELL, Arthur

(1863–1937)

Violin Concerto in G

 Hyp. CDA 67420. Marwood, BBC Scottish SO, Brabbins – COLERIDGE-TAYLOR: Violin Concerto **(*)

Sir Arthur Somervell is best remembered for his settings of A Shropshire Lad and Tennyson's Maud. Like the Coleridge-Taylor concerto with which it is coupled, it was its composer's last work. In its easy late-romantic style, it makes a strong impression. The long first movement in traditional layout includes an opening orchestral tutti and a big cadenza, with a warmly Elgarian theme for second subject. The central Adagio is richly lyrical and beautifully orchestrated (a song-composer's inspiration), leading to a jaunty, brightly inventive finale rather like a pastoral dance. Superbly played and brilliantly recorded, it makes a most attractive rarity. Anthony Marwood is a fine soloist and no more committed than the orchestra under Martyn Brabbins. An interesting and worthwhile coupling.

Clarinet Quintet in G

(BB)  Hyp. Helios (ADD) CDH 55110. King, Aeolian Qt – JACOB: Clarinet Quintet ***

Sir Arthur Somervell's dominating musical influences came from the German school and in particular from Brahms, whose voice can be heard at the very opening of this rather lovely Quintet. The grazioso first movement and touching Adagio (Lament) are in contrast to the bubbling finale which is a special delight, with Thea King and the Aeolian Quartet at their most persuasive, helped by very good (1979) recording, well transferred to CD.

SORABJI, Khaikhosru

(1892–1988)

Fantaisie Espagnole; Fantasiettina sul nome illustre dell'egregio poeta Christopher Grieve ossia Hugh M'Diarmid (Tiny Little Fantasy on the Illustrious Name of the Distinguished Poet Christopher Grieve, i.e. Hugh M'Diarmid); Fragment for Harold Rutland; Gulistán (The Rose Garden): Nocturne for Piano; Introito and Preludio-Corale from Opus Clavicembalisticum; Le Jardin parfumé (Poem for Piano); Nocturne: Djâmî; 3 Pastiches: Chopin's Valse, Op. 64/1; Habanera from Bizet's Carmen; Hindu Merchant's Song (Rimsky-Korsakov). Piano Pieces: In the Hothouse; Prelude, Interlude & Fugue; Toccata; Quaere relique hujus materiei inter secretiora; St Bertrand de Comminges: 'He was Laughing in the Tower'; Valse Fantasie (Hommage à J. Strauss)

🔑  British Music Society BMS 427-9 (3). Habermann – HABERMANN: A la manière de Sorabji: 'Au clair de la lune' ***

Michael Habermann proves an extraordinarily persuasive advocate of this music: he has all the virtuosity it needs, as well as the musical and imaginative insight. When Sorabji played his First Sonata to Busoni in London in 1919, Busoni observed that it was like 'a tropical forest' and it is for its luxuriant, hothouse textures that it has gained a reputation. The Fantaisie espagnole (1918) is an extraordinarily fantastic evocation of the sights and sounds of Spain and Le Jardin parfumé, which earned Delius's admiration, has all the sensuous loveliness of the latter but with an added vivid luxuriance of texture and colour. Habermann's excellent notes are worth quoting for they sum the composer up well: 'The interaction of imaginative rhythms, melodies, harmonies and textures in his music is fascinating – perhaps even awe-inspiring. Moods are varied. The nocturnal pieces explore mystical trance states. The energetic pieces grab the listener by their sheer obstinacy and determination, and massive climaxes encompass the entire arsenal of the piano (and pianist).' Habermann is a splendid exponent of the pyrotechnical wizardry and the richness of imagination of these scores, and he gives us an admirable entry point into Sorabji's world. The recordings are eminently acceptable.

SPOHR, Ludwig (1784–1859)

Clarinet Concerto 1 in C min., Op. 26

Ⓜ  Classic fM 75605 57019-2. Lawson, Hanover Band, Goodman – WEBER: Clarinet Concertos 1–2 etc. ***

The first of Spohr's Clarinet Concertos provides a generous bonus on an outstanding disc. Colin Lawson, principal clarinet of the Hanover Band, plays most imaginatively with attractively reedy tone to match the period instruments of his colleagues. Full and vivid sound.

(i) Clarinet Concertos 1 in C min., Op. 26; 3 in F min., WoO19; (ii) Potpourri for Clarinet & Orchestra in F, Op. 80

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.550688. Ottensamer; (i) Slovak State PO (Košice); (ii) Slovak RSO (Bratislava), Wildner

Clarinet Concertos: 1 in C min.; 2 in E flat; Potpourri in F; Variations in B flat

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67509. Collins, Swedish CO, O'Neill

Clarinet Concertos (i) 2 in E flat; (ii) 4 in E min.

 EMI 379786-2. (i) Meyer; (ii) Bliss; ASMF, Sillito

Clarinet Concertos 2 in E flat, Op. 57; 4 in E min.; Fantasia & Variations on a Theme of Danzi, Op. 81

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.550689. Ottensamer, Slovak RSO (Bratislava), Wildner

Clarinet Concertos 3 in F min.; 4 in E min.

 Hyp. CDA 67561. Collins, Swedish CO, O'Neill

Spohr's four Concertos were written between 1808 and 1829 for the clarinettist Johann Simon Hermstedt, but although they are all in a traditional three-movement format, each work has a character of its own. The Danzi Fantasia opens very dramatically, but its basic theme is simple and ingenuous, its treatment histrionically operatic.

On EMI, each clarinettist is given one Concerto to play. Luckily for them, both Concertos are equally enjoyable, with lively, inventive first movements, delightful slow movements, and characterful finales, in the case of the Second Concerto, a Rondo alla Polacca, and in the Fourth a Rondo al Espagnol. Both offer extremely catchy tunes with a dash of 'local' colour. The Fourth Concerto is the more substantial work, with its long brooding introduction. It is also written for the clarinet in A, mellower than the more commonly used and brighter clarinet in B flat. Both soloists are superb and are well supported by the Academy of St Martin-in-the-Fields under Kenneth Sillito. Warm, expansive EMI recording.

Ernst Ottensamer is a most sensitive artist and a superb player with an appealingly warm, liquid tone. Apart from sailing through all Spohr's decorative roulades and technical extravagances with aplomb, he plays over the widest range of dynamic, often fining down his tone to a pianissimo to echo a phrase with magical effect. Johann Wildner provides lively, polished accompaniments, and the recording is first rate.

The six works on Hyperion are perfect vehicles for the dazzling virtuosity of Michael Collins, superbly accompanied by the Swedish Chamber Orchestra under Robin O'Neill. The treatment is always nicely pointed and inventive. The Second Concerto in particular is a delight, with jaunty martial rhythms in the outer movements. The Potpourri is a double set of variations on themes from a long-forgotten opera by Peter von Winter, and the Variations in B flat similarly use a theme from Spohr's own opera, Alruna. Spohr was still in his twenties when he wrote these works, and that is reflected in the consistent freshness of the writing. Full, immediate sound.

Concerto for String Quartet & Orchestra in A min., Op. 131

🔑  Ara. Z 6723. San Francisco Ballet O, Lark Qt, Le Roux – HANDEL: Concerto grosso in B flat, Op. 6/7; SCHOENBERG: Concerto for String Quartet & Orchestra after Handel's Concerto grosso, Op. 4/7; ELGAR: Introduction & Allegro for Strings ***

This is a consistently engaging work (Spohr's very last Concerto), inventive and tuneful – the slow movement is particularly fine – using the players in the solo quartet individually as well as in consort. It is very persuasively played, and with the proviso that the solo group are balanced rather forwardly, the recording is very good too. With imaginative couplings this is very much worth trying.

Violin Concertos 7 in E min., Op. 38; 12 in A min., Op. 79

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.555101. Nishizaki, Bratislava Philharmonic CO, Pešek

The key of Spohr's E minor Concerto brings a certain Mendelssohnian affinity, especially in the passage work. Its lyrical ideas are attractive, especially the rather lovely Adagio, and the bouncing finale dances in a fast waltz tempo. The more rhapsodic Twelfth Concerto, written over a decade later (and actually designated a concertino), is in a single movement of three linked sections, with a closing Polacca. Takako Nishizaki plays both works affectionately and very stylishly, and she is warmly accompanied by Pešek and the Bratislava orchestra. The recording is pleasingly resonant.

Violin Concerto 8 (In modo di scena cantata)

 DG 477 6232. Hahn, Swedish RSO, Oue – PAGANINI: Violin Concerto 1 ***

Spohr's Violin Concerto 8 is one of his best-proportioned and most classically conceived works, quite apart from its innovatory features, including recitative sections, well handled here. But it is a virtuoso piece too, with a winningly bravura finale, which Hilary Hahn despatches with aplomb. Fine accompaniments from the Swedish Radio Orchestra and excellent recording make this rather apt coupling with Paganini very tempting.

Symphonies 1 in E flat, Op. 20; 2 in D min., Op. 49; Grand Concert Overture in F

Ⓝ  Hyp. CDA 7616. O della Svizzera Italiana, Shelley

It is good that Hyperion are embarking on the Symphonies of Louis Spohr. One can't help but think of the G&S line from the Mikado: 'Bach interwoven with Spohr and Beethoven', which gives an indication of Spohr's popularity in 19th-century London. Indeed, when the Second Symphony (recorded here) was first performed in London in 1820, it was a considerable success. The work launches with a fast introduction and leads to some quite stormy and dramatic writing, with the spirit of Beethoven hovering in the background. The First Symphony, written some nine years previously, is not quite so distinctive and is much more a work of the classical era, though there is a distinctly romantic Beethovenian spirit too. It is very pleasing and melodic and well worth an occasional hearing. The Concert Overture makes a fine bonus. Excellent performances and recording.

Symphonies 2 in D min., Op. 49; 8 in G, Op. 137; Concerto Overture (Im ernsten Stil)

Ⓝ  CPO 777 178-2. N. German Radiophilharmonie, Griffiths

Griffiths offers a slightly less polished account of the Second Symphony than Shelley on Hyperion, yet this is equally and lustily enjoyable. The Eighth Symphony was written for, and first performed in, London in 1847. It didn't meet with the same success as the Second, being considered lacking in originality compared to Spohr's earlier symphonies. From a modern point of view, it is an attractive romantic symphony, eminently tuneful and appealing, with plenty of incidental delights (such as the slightly quirky solo woodwind and string writing in the Scherzo) and possessing lively writing and invention. The Overture makes a fine bonus. Excellent performances and recording.

Symphonies 3 in C min., Op. 78; 6 in G (Historical Symphony in the Style and Taste of Four Different Periods), Op. 116

🔑  Marco Polo 8.223349. Slovak State PO (Košice), Walter

The Historical Symphony is a fascinating pastiche, and the C minor is one of the finest of Spohr's early symphonies, inspiring Walter to give one of his most vigorous and committed performances. The Larghetto has genuine depth, but the most ambitious movement is the highly inventive finale, both life-enhancing and energetic, and with plenty of contrapuntal interest, including a full-scale central fugue. It is very well played indeed. The Historical Symphony is most endearing in its respect for the great masters. It opens with a solemn, full-orchestral treatment of the C major fugue from Book I of Bach's '48', and also introduces pastoral reminders of Handel's Messiah, including an allusion to 'He shall feed his flock'. The slow movement, richly scored, remembers both Mozart's 39th and Prague Symphonies, and in the curiously lyrical Scherzo the timpani (rather too muted here) recall the Beethoven of the Seventh Symphony. The inappropriately but agreeably frivolous finale, 'the latest of the new', then bursts with energy, drawing on the vivacious ideas of Adam and Auber, in particular the Muette de Portici Overture. Walter is a convincing exponent of this curiously balanced work, and his orchestra respond with enthusiasm.

Symphonies 4 in F (The Consecration of Sounds), Op. 86; 5 in C min., Op. 102; Overture: Das befreite Deutschland

Ⓝ  Hyp. CDA 67622. O della Svizzera Italiana, Shelley

The imposingly named 'The Consecration of Sounds' Fourth Symphony derives its name from a volume of poems by Carl Pfeiffer which the composer originally intended to set as a cantata; but he thought the words unsuitable to set to music and used them instead as inspiration for a symphony. The result is a colourfully romantic work, premièred with success in 1832, after which it was performed for many years. The fourth movement is subtitled 'Funeral music. Consolation through tears', but it is a far from gloomy symphony. The previous movement, with its striking trumpet fanfares and marching theme, suitably evokes its title, 'Music of War'. The Fifth Symphony was premièred in Vienna in 1838, and is imbued with a certain melancholy which reflected personal sadnesses at the time of its composition. It is highly expressive, with a particularly fine slow movement. There are plenty of incidental delights, such as the horn writing in the bright Scherzo. Superb performances and recording, and with the entertaining Overture, Das befreite Deutschland ('Germany liberated') included, this makes another fine instalment in Hyperion's Spohr symphony survey.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Double Quartets 1 in D min., Op. 65; 2 in E flat, Op. 77; 3 in E min., Op. 87; 4 in G min., Op. 136

Ⓑ  Hyp. Dyad CDD 22014 (2). ASMF Chamber Ens.

The opening of the first Double Quartet is inviting (as again is the rather solemn introduction of the Third, which then lightens, yet retains its nostalgic feeling). While this is all essentially amiable music, the standard of Spohr's invention is quite high throughout all four works, and the scoring cleverly makes the most of the antiphony between the two groups. So does the recording here, with a natural interplay within a pleasingly warm acoustic. The playing is predictably fluent and spontaneous-sounding, well blended and polished.

Nonet in F, Op. 31

() Testament mono SBT 1261. Augmented Vienna Octet – BEETHOVEN: Septet ()

Nonet in F, Op. 31; Octet in E, Op. 32

🔑  Hyp. CDA 66699. Gaudier Ens.

🔑 Ⓜ  CRD (ADD) CRD 3354. Nash Ens.

The Gaudier Ensemble give us a performance of the Octet as imaginative as it is spontaneous, and the work's finale with its lolloping main theme is joyously spirited. The Nonet is also very attractive. Spohr's invention is again at its freshest and his propensity for chromaticism is held reasonably in check. The Hyperion recording is fresh and warm, clearly detailed against a resonant acoustic.

The sound on the competing CRD disc is natural and lifelike. The Nash Ensemble play both works with much elegance and style, and these performances are very civilized and hardly less spontaneous.

It is good to see this 1952 Decca recording of Spohr's delightful Nonet. The playing here is superb, full of unforced charm, with a lovely Viennese glow. The transfers are excellent, the mono sound unbelievably warm and rich for the period.

Nonet in F, Op. 31; Septet, Op. 147

 ASV Gold GLD 4026. Ens. 360

There are various permutations of these works available, but the Ensemble 360 ranks with the finest. How delightfully they play the finale of the Nonet, and the Pastorale (Larghetto) of the Septet has equal charm. Fine intimate recording.

Octet in E, Op. 32

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca (ADD) 466 580-2. Vienna Octet – SCHUBERT: Octet in F, D.803 ***

Spohr's Octet is a particularly charming work, and the variations on Handel's Harmonious Blacksmith, which forms one of the central movements, offer that kind of naivety which, when so stylishly done as here, makes for delicious listening. The playing is expert throughout, with the five strings blending perfectly with the two horns and clarinet, and altogether this is a winning performance. The 1960 recording is fresh and open and leaves little to be desired.

Piano Quintet in D min., Op. 130; Septet, Op. 147

🔑 * MDG 304 0534-2. Villa Musica Ensemble

The Piano Quintet is a dashingly amiable work. The spirited MDG performance is most enjoyable and the much better-known Septet for piano and wind is played with comparable relish and warmth. Excellent, vividly present recording makes this a most enjoyable coupling.

Piano & Wind Quintet in C min., Op. 52; String Quintet 6, Op. 130; Septet, Op. 147; String Sextet, Op. 140

 MDG 304 1263-2. Ens. Villa Musica

These are all attractive works, a little garrulous at times but always fluently melodic and well crafted. In the two works with piano, the pianist at times is called upon to play some hair-raising runs, which Kalle Randalu manages with aplomb. Both the String Sextet and Quintet have fine slow movements, and the Piano and Wind Quintet has a sparkling finale, with a particularly winning secondary theme. Fine performances throughout and natural recording, although rather resonant.

Piano Trios 1 in E min., Op. 119; 2 in F, Op. 123; 3 in A min., Op. 124; 4 in B flat, Op. 133; 5 in G min., Op. 142

Ⓑ  CPO 999 246-2 (3). Ravensburg Beethoven Trio

Spohr's five Piano Trios are among his freshest, most appealing chamber works, full of attractive ideas and fine craftsmanship. The Ravensburg Trio give fine performances, mellow, with slightly more gravitas than sparkle, although they too have an excellent pianist in Inge-Susann Römchild, whose touch is often pleasingly light. The CPO recording is warm and full to suit the playing. The five Trios are just too long to fit on a pair of CDs, and the third plays for only 31 minutes.

Piano & Wind Quintet in C min., Op. 52; Septet in A min. for Flute, Clarinet, Horn, Bassoon, Violin, Cello & Piano, Op. 147

Ⓜ * CRD (ADD) CRD 3399. Brown, Nash Ens.

These two pieces, the sparkling Quintet and the more substantial but still charmingly lighthearted Septet, are among Spohr's most delightful. Ian Brown at the piano leads the ensemble with flair and vigour, and the recording quality is outstandingly vivid.

String Quartets 1 in C; 2 in C min., Op. 4/1-2; 5 in D, Op. 15/2

 Marco 8.223253. New Budapest Qt

String Quartets 7 in E flat; 8 in C, Op. 29/1-2

(*) Marco 8.22355. New Budapest Qt

String Quartets 11 in E (Quatuor brillant), Op. 43; 12 in C, Op. 45/1

(*) Marco 8.223257. New Budapest Qt

String Quartets 13 in E min.; 14 in F min., Op. 45/2–3

 Marco 8.223258. New Budapest Qt

String Quartets 15 in E flat; 16 in A, Op. 58/1-2

 Marco 8.23256. New Budapest Qt

String Quartets 20 in A min.; 21 in B flat, Op. 74/1-2

 Marco 8.223259. New Budapest Qt

String Quartets 27 in D min.; 28 in A flat, Op. 84/1-2

(*) Marco 8.223251. New Budapest Qt

String Quartets 29 in B min., Op. 84/3; 30 in A, Op. 93

(*) Marco 8.223252. New Budapest Qt

If you enjoy the earlier and middle-period Haydn Quartets, you might well try Spohr. He seems also to have an almost inexhaustible fund of ideas and writes enjoyably smooth, well-crafted works, which every so often produce a movement which is quite memorable – like the gentle Adagio of his very first essay in the medium, strikingly fresh, written when the composer had just turned 20. The performances here are always persuasive and well recorded too: praise is due for the excellent documentation. The Op. 29 Quartets are associated with Johann Tost (dedicatee of Haydn's Opp. 54/5 and 65). Both are written in Spohr's friendly, accomplished style; the first ingeniously bases its opening movement on a two-note motto theme and has an outstanding set of variations for its slow movement. The tender Adagio of the C major is even finer, daring in its expressive chromaticism. Both performances are spontaneous and this is vibrant, felt quartet-playing, without artifice, and the recording is lively and present. The Quatuor brillant dates from 1817, and its subtitle is deceptive, for, as its engaging opening suggests, it is essentially a lyrical work, although the closing Minuet sparkles brightly enough. The Op. 45 Quartets are more romantic in feeling, suaver in texture, moving further away from the classical Haydn idiom. The Budapest players are at their very best in these fine works. The two Op. 58 Quartets written in 1821 show a new maturity, especially the noble Adagio of the E flat major, which reminds one of Mozart, after a cheerful first movement laced with effective pizzicatos. The light-hearted Scherzo with its Viennese, Ländler-influenced Trio has much charm, and the work is capped by a springy closing Rondo. A splendid disc in every way. The Op. 74 Quartets, dating from 1826, are further evidence of Spohr's increasingly deft integration of his ideas in finely argued first movements, essentially lyrical but not lacking dramatic elements. The players here again respond very sympathetically to these attractive quartets and capture their spirit admirably. These two works, written in 1831–2, exemplify Spohr's smooth, finely integrated quartet-writing at its most characteristic. The slow movement, sustaining a mood of serene simplicity, is the most memorable in each case, although the lyrical finale of the A flat major Quartet is also rather appealing. Good performances, lively enough, but capturing the suaveness of the idiom. In many ways 29 in B minor is the finest of the Op. 84 set, with its touch of melancholy in the first movement, a lively minuet and a pensive slow movement. Op. 93, written in 1835, is more extrovert in atmosphere in the first movement (after a sombre introduction), but it offers another thoughtfully intense slow movement and a very jolly finale. It brings out the best in these players – and there is plenty of bravura for the first violin – and, again, good tonal matching plus a smooth, warm recording combine effectively for this slightly suave music.

String Quartets 32 in C, Op. 141; 34 in E flat, Op. 152

(*) Marco 8.225307. Moscow Philharmonic Concertino Qt

In continuing their string quartet cycle, Marco Polo appear to have left Budapest in favour of Moscow, not entirely to advantage. These are enjoyable performances, with the Larghetto and Scherzo of 32 standing out, alongside the perky Minuet of 34. But there is a touch of astringency on the leader's tone that is pretty certainly due to the microphones; the recording balance otherwise is good.

String Quintets 1 in E flat; 2 in G, Op. 3/1–2

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.555965. Augmented Danubius Qt

Spohr's String Quintets feature a second viola, which gives them a characteristically full, slightly bland texture. But the suave opening theme of the E flat major Quartet is deceptive, for it is strong enough to influence the two following movements including the near-melancholy Larghetto and the attractive Minuet and Trio. In the G major work a similarly mild opening theme is to dominate. Both Quintets are warmly and sympathetically played by the Danubius Quartet, augmented by Sándor Papp, and smoothly and pleasingly recorded.

String Quintets 3 in B min., Op. 69; 4 in A min., Op. 91

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.555966. Augmented New Haydn Qt

These two minor-key works have much of the wistful mood for which the composer is noted, especially the Adagio of the B minor, which is rather memorable, while there is also a rocking barcarolle finale. The quality of Spohr's invention is well maintained throughout, and they are warmly played and pleasingly recorded.

String Quintets 5 in G min., Op. 106; 6 in E min., Op. 129

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.555967. Augmented Budapest Haydn Qt

The G minor Quintet has a disarmingly winsome opening movement, followed by a simple Larghetto, rich in texture. Then, after the vigorous Scherzo, the finale has a rustic character with a drone-like accompaniment for the main theme. The E minor Quintet brings a busy but blander opening movement, with an underlying melancholy lyricism, which is dispelled by the Mendelssohnian Scherzo, with the gracious Trio coming twice, but in different keys. These are two fine works, very persuasively played, even if the ensemble is not always absolutely immaculate. Good recording too.

String Quintet 7 in G min., Op. 144; Potpourri (for solo violin & string quartet), Op. 22; Sextet in C, Op. 140

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.555968. Augmented New Haydn Qt

The three works are admirably contrasted, the Quintet uncertain in mood, often permeated with a feeling of unease, and the Sextet much sunnier, while the Potpourri combines a Russian folk tune with Mozart's Là ci darem la mano to form a showoff piece, suitable as an encore. Very good performances and first rate recording.

STAINER, John (1840–1901)

The Crucifixion

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.557624. Gilchrist, Bailey, Clare College, Cambridge Ch., T. Brown; S. Farr (organ)

Ⓑ  CfP (ADD) 575 7792 (2). Hughes, Lawrenson, Guildford Cathedral Ch., Rose; Williams – MAUNDER: Olivet to Calvary ***

It is good to have an outstanding digital recording of The Crucifixion, with excellent soloists (the tenor James Gilchrist outstandingly eloquent); and Clare College Choir, directed by Timothy Brown, sings very beautifully, catching the music's devotional simplicity movingly, without sentimentality. Stephen Farr's organ contribution is supportive but not intrusive. The recording, made in Guildford Cathedral, is first class. With the congregational hymns included, this must now take pride of place, although we still have a soft spot for the old St John's version with Owen Brannigan and Richard Lewis.

The Classics for Pleasure version (from the late 1960s) is of high quality and, although one of the congregational hymns is omitted, in every other respect this can be recommended. John Lawrenson makes a movingly eloquent solo contribution and the choral singing is excellent.

STAMITZ, Carl (1745–1801)

Cello Concertos 1 in G; 2 in A; 3 in C

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.550865. Benda, Prague CO

These three delightful Concertos are admirably played by Christian Benda, who also directs his own accompaniments. He is a present member of a well-known family of Czech musicians, a dynasty which reaches back to the court of Frederick the Great. The First G major Concerto is particularly winning, and the spirited Allegros of the other two works are hardly less amiable and each has a slow movement with a yearning contour, with the closing Rondo of the C major work the most infectious of all. The recording is excellent, and if you enjoy Cello concertos this group is not to be missed.

Clarinet Concerto 1 in F; (i) Double Clarinet Concerto in B flat; (ii) Double Concerto for Clarinet & Bassoon in B flat

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553584. Berkes; with (i) Takashima; (ii) Okazaki; Nicholas Esterházy Sinfonia

The F major solo Concerto is a delightful work with a vigorous first movement leading to a lyrical minor-key Andante and a jig finale. The double concerto was a favourite form with Stamitz, with long opening tuttis in the slow movements as well as the first. Both works are linked to the sinfonia concertante format as well as to the earlier form of the concerto grosso with its strongly contrasted, lightly scored passages for the solo instruments. As soloist as well as director, Berkes, with his reedy clarinet tone, is well matched by his Japanese partners, helped by full, open recording.

Clarinet Concertos 7 in E flat; 8 in B flat (Darmstadt 1-2); 10 in B flat; 11 in E flat

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.554339. Berkes, Nicholas Esterházy Sinfonia

Clarinet Concerto 10 in B flat

🔑  EMI 55155-2. Meyer, ASMF, Brown – MOZART: Clarinet Concerto, etc.; WEBER: Clarinet Concerto 1 ***

Sabine Meyer's performances are highly musical and she is given characteristically polished and elegant accompaniments by Iona Brown and the Academy. However Kálmán Berkes on Naxos is by no means a lesser soloist. He finds a Bohemian sense of fun in the closing Rondos, which is less obvious with Meyer, although she still plays them lightheartedly and her collection remains very enjoyable. The accompaniments on Naxos are also warm and stylish and the recording is excellent.

Symphonies: in D (La Chasse); in C & G, Op. 13/16, 4 & 5; in F, Op. 24/3

 Chan. 9358. LMP, Bamert

Carl Stamitz wrote over 50 symphonies and the present examples are most attractive examples of his three-movement 'Italian overture' style. His slow movements are Haydnesque and quite gracious; his finales are witty: that for the F major work is particularly catchy. La Chasse is the earliest work here and the outer movements have plenty of energy and whooping horn-calls, with a rather wistful Andante to separate them. Excellent performances, very well played and recorded.

STAMITZ, Johann (1717–57)

Trumpet Concerto in D (arr. Boustead)

(B)  Ph. Duo 464 028-2 (2). Hardenberger, ASMF, Marriner – HAYDN; HERTEL; HUMMEL: Concertos * (with concert: 'Famous Classical Trumpet Concertos' **** ✿).

This Concerto was written either by Stamitz or by a composer called J. G. Holzbogen. The writing lies consistently up in the instrument's stratosphere and includes some awkward leaps. It is quite inventive, however, notably the finale, which is exhilarating on the lips of Håken Hardenberger. There is no lack of panache here and Marriner accompanies expertly. Good if reverberant recording, with the trumpet given great presence. This now comes as part of a Duo anthology, which is very highly recommendable.

Symphonies: in A; B flat; G (Mannheim); in D, Op. 3/2; in E flat, Op. 11/2; Orchestral Trio in E, Op. 5/3

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553194. New Zealand CO, Armstrong

The bold opening chords and immediately following crescendo of the D major Symphony, Op. 3/2 (from the early 1750s) immediately establish its Mannheim credentials, as do the elegantly sophisticated scoring of the Andantino and the effective use of horns in the Minuet and Trio. The E flat Symphony, one of the composer's last, follows a similar pattern, but the three earlier works (from the 1740s), which are actually designated as 'Mannheim' Symphonies are altogether simpler, each with only three movements.

The E major Trio is much more ambitious, with a searchingly expressive Adagio, all but worthy of Haydn. The excellent New Zealand Chamber Orchestra under Donald Armstrong play with finesse and vitality and are persuasive advocates of music which so far proves not especially adventurous.

(Orchestral) Trios, Op. 1/1-4

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553213. New Zealand CO, Armstrong

Although designated Op. 1, the six Orchestral Trios appear to be relatively late works (1755–6) and were designated by the composer to be performed optionally either as trios or by a fuller chamber orchestra, as here. They are each in four movements, elegant, simply constructed, with a divertimento-like character, but not trivial. The most striking is 4 in C minor, which explores a wider range of expressive feeling than its companions, but the Siciliana-like Larghetto of the F major (3), followed by a rather striking Minuet and robust finale, also sets that work apart. They are very well played here, polished in ensemble with musical phrasing and good use of light and shade. The recording is very natural. But one cannot pretend this is anything but pleasing wallpaper music, although it must have been rewarding for talented amateurs to play.

STANFORD, Charles (1852–1924)

Clarinet Concerto in A min., Op. 80

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55101. King, Philh. O, Francis – FINZI: Concerto ***

The Stanford Clarinet Concerto finds Thea King bringing a firm, sharp attack. In the finale too King is strong and forthright, but she is warmer and more flexible in the slow movement, and at bargain price the Helios reissue is very competitive.

(i) Clarinet Concerto, Op. 80. Symphony 1 in B flat

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.570356. Bournemouth SO, Lloyd-Jones, (i) with Plane

There is much to enjoy here, despite Stanford's lack of really memorable themes. The recording and playing are superb, and the Scherzo – In Ländler Tempo is particularly enjoyable. The much shorter Clarinet Concerto is superbly played and similarly well recorded, Robert Plane proving an expert and sympathetic soloist. The bold brass writing at the opening of the finale is particularly striking, and this leads to appealingly bold themes on the clarinet.

Piano Concerto 1 in G, Op. 59

🔑  Hyp. CDA 66820. Lane, BBC Scottish SO, Brabbins – PARRY: Piano Concerto ***

Written in 1894, the first of Stanford's two Piano concertos brings even clearer Brahmsian echoes than usual, but the finesse of the writing and the ravishing beauty of the slow movement make it almost as enjoyable as the second and better-known concerto, particularly in a performance by turns as brilliant and poetic as Piers Lane's. Full, warm sound.

(i) Piano Concerto 2, Op. 126; Down among the Dead Men, Op. 71; Irish Rhapsodies 1; 2 (The Lament for the Son of Ossian); (ii) 3 (for Cello & Orchestra); 4 (The Fisherman of Lough Neagh and What He Saw); 5; (iii) 6 (for Violin & Orchestra)

🔑 Ⓜ  Chan. X10116 (2). (i) Fingerhut; (ii) Wallfisch; (iii) Mordkovitch; Ulster O, Handley

Stanford's ambitious Second Piano Concerto, although in three rather than four movements, is a work on the largest scale, recalling Brahms's B flat Concerto. Margaret Fingerhut is a first-rate soloist, both here and in her apt and entertaining account of the Down among the Dead Men Variations, for Stanford was a dab hand at this format. The new coupling is with the six Irish Rhapsodies (two of them also concertante pieces with highly responsive soloists), which are the more impressive when heard as a set. They too are splendidly played and recorded.

(i) Piano Concerto 2 in C min., Op. 126; (ii) Becket, Op. 48: The Martyrdom (Funeral March); (iii) The Fisherman of Lough Neagh and What He Saw (Irish Rhapsody 4), Op. 141

 Lyrita SRCD 219. (i) Binns, LSO; (ii–iii) LPO; (i; iii) Braithwaite; (ii) Boult

The Lyrita recording is surely a demonstration of just how a Piano Concerto should be balanced. The Funeral March comes from incidental music commissioned at the request of Tennyson for Irving's production of his tragedy, Becket. It has an arresting opening but is otherwise a fairly straightforward piece, strongly melodic in a Stanfordian manner. Like the more familiar Irish Rhapsody, it is splendidly played and recorded.

Violin Concerto in D, Op. 74; Suite for Violin & Orchestra, Op. 132

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67208. Marwood, BBC Scottish SO, Brabbins

Starting magically with the violin entering over an impressionistic twitter on woodwind, the Stanford Violin Concerto provides an important link between the Brahms concerto of 1878 and the Elgar of 1909–10. After that poetic start, Stanford builds his expansive structure in a strong Brahmsian manner, using clear, positive themes. He ends with an Irish jig finale, the nationalistic equivalent of Brahms's Hungarian finale. Anthony Marwood gives a warm, clean-cut reading, as he also does in the Suite, an attractive if heavyweight example of 19th-century neoclassicism.

Irish Rhapsody 4: The Fisherman of Lough Neagh and What He Saw

Ⓜ  Chan. 10426X. Ulster O, Handley – BAX: On the Sea-Shore; BRIDGE: The Sea; BRITTEN: Sea Interludes ***

Stanford's folksy Fourth Irish Rhapsody is now added to this already attractive reissue as a bonus.

Symphonies 1–7

 Chan. 9279/82 (4). Ulster O, Handley

Now available in a box of four CDs, with the fill-ups which accompanied the original CDs now put aside for separate reissue, this is obviously the most attractive way to approach this generally impressive if uneven British symphonic canon. Handley and his Ulster Orchestra are completely at home in this repertoire, and the Chandos recording is consistently of this company's best quality.

Symphonies 3 (Irish) in F min., Op. 28; 6 (In honour of the life-work of a great artist: George Frederick Watts) in E flat, Op. 94

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.570355. Bournemouth SO, Lloyd-Jones

Stanford's Irish Symphony is understandably one of his most popular works, with its attractive Irish melodies running though the score, such as the jaunty second-movement

Scherzo – very jig-like – and the haunting beauty of the slow movement, as well as the lovely folk melodies used in the finale. The less popular Sixth Symphony, written in response to the death of the Victorian artist George Frederick Watts, also comes off almost equally well here. The score is a bit rambling, but Lloyd-Jones holds it together with conviction on Chandos. Indeed, the richness of the playing is especially to be appreciated in the beautiful slow movement, and there are many pleasures to be found in this score and performance.

Symphonies 4 in F, Op. 31; 7 in D min., Op. 124

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.570285. Bournemouth SO, Lloyd-Jones

4, written in 1888, has many Brahmsian touches, particularly in the use of woodwind and horns, but the Irish flavour of the thematic material gives the piece a distinctive flavour, with the composer's acute control of structure sustaining tension well. 7, written in 1911, when Stanford had been overtaken among British composers, is a lighter, more compact work, with Mendelssohn and Schumann among the influences, and with the same taut control of structure and clear orchestration Lloyd-Jones's readings may not quite rival in warmth those of Vernon Handley and the Ulster Orchestra on the rival Chandos series, differently coupled, but he compensates in his extra tautness and urgency. Brilliant, clear sound.

CHAMBER MUSIC

(i) Piano Quintet in D min.; (ii) String Quintet 1

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 65505. Vanbrugh Qt; with (i) Lane; (ii) Knox

The Piano Quintet comes from 1886, when Stanford was 33, and is an ambitious and powerfully argued score, beautifully laid out for the medium. Although Stanford's music may not possess the strong individuality of Fauré or any comparable contemporary, it is powerful music and its neglect unaccountable. The First String Quintet (1903), with second viola, is hardly less persuasive. The ideas are keenly lyrical and their quality distinguished, and the overall flow of the music is extraordinarily natural. Excellent music that will delight and give pleasure; and both the performances and recording, produced by Andrew Keener, are of real excellence.

Serenade (Nonet) in F, Op. 95

🔑 (BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55061. Capricorn – PARRY: Nonet ***

Like the Parry Nonet, with which it is coupled, the Serenade is an inventive and delightful piece, its discourse civilized and the Scherzo full of charm. Capricorn play this piece with evident pleasure and convey this to the listener. The recording is very natural and truthfully balanced.

Violin Sonatas 1 in D, Op. 11; 2 in A, Op. 70; Irish Fantasy 1 (Caoine), Op. 54 1; 5 Characteristic Pieces, Op. 93

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 67024. Barritt, Edwards

One expected these to be enjoyably well-crafted works but they are a great deal more than that, teeming with memorable ideas, to make consistently delightful listing. Paul Barritt and Catherine Edwards play all this music with a spring-like freshness, and obviously enjoy every bar. They are beautifully recorded.

PIANO MUSIC

24 Preludes, Set 1, Op. 163; 6 Characteristic Pieces, Op. 132

 Priory PRCD 449. Jacobs

The 24 Preludes are not bravura works like those of Chopin and Rachmaninov. Written in 1918, their chromatic key-sequence would suggest that they are more readily associated with Bach's Well-tempered Clavier. The variety of Stanford's invention brings a continuing freshness throughout the set, which can be enjoyed as a progression as well as by selecting individual items. The Characteristic Pieces were written six years earlier and are also of high quality, with the engaging Rondel (4) dedicated to the Schumann of Kinderszenen. Peter Jacobs almost never disappoints and his performances here are accomplished, stylish, spontaneous and thoroughly sympathetic, while the recording is first class.

VOCAL MUSIC

3 Motets, Op. 38: Beati quorum via; Cœlos ascendit; Justorum animae. Anthems: For lo, I raise up; Glorious and powerful God; How beautiful are their feet; If ye then be risen with Christ; The Lord is my Shepherd; Ye choirs of new Jerusalem; Ye holy angels bright. (Organ) Preludes & Fugues in B & C, Op. 193/2-3

🔑 (M) * CRD CRD 3497. New College, Oxford, Ch., Higginbottom; Plummer or Smith (organ)

All this music shows Stanford at his most confidently inspired, readily carrying the listener with him, when the performances are so secure and committed and superbly recorded in the Chapel of New College, Oxford.

Communion Service in C, Op. 115: Kyrie; Credo. Evening Service in G, Op. 81: Magnificat; Nunc dimittis. Evening Service in C, Op. 115: Magnificat; Nunc dimittis. Morning Service in C, Op. 115: Te deum and Benedictus. For lo, I raise up, Op. 145; 3 Latin Motets: Beati quorum via; Coelos ascendit hodie; Justorum animae. (Organ) (i) Postlude in D min.; Prelude in G min.

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.555794. St John's College Ch., Robinson; (i) Whitton

When Stanford tended to concentrate on setting the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis of the Evening Service, it is good to have two examples represented, the G major with its opening treble solo more intimate and less dramatic than the C major. Having the C major Morning Service (but without the Jubilate) as well as the Communion Service gives a broader perspective, with the traditional Cranmer words for the Mass ending with the Gloria, where nowadays Anglo-Catholics follow the Roman order in their devotions. The chapel acoustic is warmly atmospheric, while allowing lightness and transparency in the choral textures, with words commendably clear.

(i) Requiem, Op. 63; (ii) The Veiled Prophet of Khorassan (excerpts)

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.555201/2. (i) Lucy, McGahon, Kerr, Leeson-Williams, RTE Philharmonic Ch.; (ii) Kerr; Nat. SO of Ireland, cond. (i) Leaper; (ii) Pearce

Stanford's magnificent Requiem (1897) was composed in honour of the painter Lord Leighton, who died in 1896. The contrasts of the writing, from the ethereal opening of the Kyrie to the blazing fortissimo of the Tuba mirum, are superbly caught here, one of the best recordings we have had from Naxos and surely in the demonstration bracket. With fine solo singing to match the fervour of the chorus, Adrian Leaper can be congratulated on the great success of the first recording of a work that should surely be in the general choral repertoire. The exotic suite from Stanford's first opera, The Veiled Prophet of Khorassan, makes an agreeable if not distinctive encore.

The Revenge: A Ballad of the Fleet, Op. 24; Songs of the Fleet, Op. 117; Songs of the Sea, Op. 91

🔑 ✿ * Chan. SACD CHSA 5043. Finley, Welsh Nat. Ch. & BBC SO of Wales, Hickox

These inspired works are immediately memorable, with The Old Superb and Drake's Drum being real hits. There is much here that is genuinely touching, such as Homeward Bound from the Songs of the Sea; the more moody and brooding items from The Songs of the Fleet offer contrast to the extrovert numbers, but throughout, Stanford's briny inspiration always comes up as fresh as the sea air. The Revenge tells the story of Richard Grenville's heroic 1591 battle against the Spanish fleet, and it was a huge success at its 1886 première. It is just as entertaining as the more famous works on this CD. Gerald Finley's golden tone is superb and he rises to both the heroic and tender passages with total conviction. With equal dedication from the chorus – not to mention the orchestra, which offers both enthusiasm and sensitivity – this CD is an outstanding success. The Chandos recording is warm and detailed, offering plenty of spine-tingling atmosphere, which is even more impressive when played through an SACD system.

(i) Stabat Mater, Op. 96; Te Deum (from Service in B flat, Op. 10); (ii) 6 Bible Songs, Op. 113

🔑  Chan. 9548. (i) Attrot, Stephen, Robson; (i; ii) Varcoe; (ii) Watson; Leeds Philharmonic Ch., BBC PO, Hickox

Stanford, Irish to the core, here offers a Protestant setting of the deeply Catholic text of the Stabat Mater. In its directness and vigour, this relates to Stanford's healthily Anglican church music on the one hand and to his symphonic writing on the other. Like his Requiem, this is a piece, long-neglected, that richly deserves revival, and Hickox with his excellent forces directs a performance, atmospherically recorded, that demands its return to the repertory. The six settings of biblical texts for baritone and organ (warmly done by Stephen Varcoe and Ian Watson) are fresh and forthright, leading to the stirring Te Deum in B flat, one of the glories of English church music.

STEFAN, Joseph Anton (1726–97)

Fortepiano Concerto in B flat

Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 0927 49556-2. Staier, Concerto Köln – SALIERI: Fortepiano Concertos ***

The Bohemian-born Joseph Stefan's Concerto (from the 1780s) is fluent and musical, if slightly overlong, but with a rather fine slow movement; the concerto also opens with an extended and quite touching Adagio in D minor. Staier's performance is highly persuasive, and he is given alert and sympathetic support by the excellent Concerto Köln.

STEFFANI, Agostino (1654–1728)

Stabat Mater

Ⓑ  DHM/BMG 82876 60149-2. Alamanjo, Van der Sluis, Elwes, Padmore, Van der Kamp, Netherlands Bach Festival Ch. & O, Leonhardt – BIBER: Requiem à 15 in A ***

Agostino Steffani was diplomat and priest as well as a composer, but his music has a strongly individual character. His serene, melancholy Stabat Mater has moving and expressive content and much imaginative word-setting, while the Cujus animam and Pro peccatis are glorious in their expressively rich harmonies. The solo writing is imaginative and the layering of parts in the closing Quando corpus, which gathers pace as it proceeds, is very telling. The performance could hardly be bettered, with soloists and chorus equally dedicated. First-rate recording.

STENHAMMAR, Wilhelm (1871–1927)

(i) Piano Concerto 1 in B flat min., Op. 1; Symphony 3 (fragment)

🔑  Chan. 9074. (i) Widlund; Royal Stockholm PO, Rozhdestvensky

(i) Piano Concerto 1; (ii) Florez och Blanzeflor, Op. 3; (iii) 2 Sentimental Romances, Op. 28

 BIS CD 550. (i) Derwinger; (ii) Mattei; (iii) Wallin, Malmö SO, Järvi

Stenhammar's First Piano Concerto is full of beautiful ideas and the invention is fresh. Love Derwinger proves an impressive and sympathetic intepreter and gets good support from Paavo Järvi. The early Florez och Blanzeflor ('Flower and Whiteflower'), a ballad by Oscar Levertin, brings a certain Wagnerian flavour but has a charm that is sensitively sung by the young Swedish baritone Peter Mattei.

Chandos offer the less substantial coupling, a three-minute fragment from the Third Symphony. But in the Concerto Mats Widlund proves the more imaginative soloist and brings just that little bit more finesse to the solo part. Rozhdestvensky gives excellent support and the Stockholm Orchestra (and in particular their strings) have greater richness of sonority. The Chandos recording also has the edge on its BIS competitor in terms of depth and warmth.

Serenade for Orchestra, Op. 31

🔑 ✿ (BB) * Warner Apex 0927 43075-2. Royal Stockholm PO, A. Davis – GRIEG: Holberg Suite (Helsinki Strings, Szilvay); NIELSEN: Little Suite (Norwegian R.O, Rasilainen) ***

The Stenhammar was recorded in 1998 and originally coupled with the Brahms D major Serenade. We can only reiterate our wonder at this glorious work; its invention is rich and its harmonies subtle. Nothing more perfectly enshrines the spirit of the Swedish summer night than its Notturno, but throughout the level of inspiration is uniformly high. Andrew Davis shapes the score with scrupulous attention to detail and evident sensitivity and feeling. In this bargain-basement refurbishment it is coupled with fine performances of the Grieg Holberg Suite from Helsinki and the enchanting Nielsen Little Suite from Norway. A terrific bargain.

(i) Symphonies 1 in F; 2 in G min., Op. 34; Serenade for Orchestra, Op. 31 (with Reverenza movement); Excelsior Overture, Op. 13; The Song (Sången): Interlude, Op. 44; Lodolezzi Sings (Lodolezzi sjunger): suite; (ii) Piano Concertos 1; (iii) 2 in D min., Op. 23; (iv) Ballad: Florez och Blanzeflor; (v) 2 Sentimental Romances; (vi) Midwinter, Op. 24; Snöfrid, Op. 5

🔑 Ⓜ * BIS (DDD/ADD) CD 714/716. (i) Gothenburg SO, Järvi; (ii) Derwinger; (iii) Ortiz; (iv) Matthei; (v) Wallin; (vi) Gothenburg Ch.; (ii-v) Malmö SO, P. Järvi

Paavo Järvi's performances are now repackaged at a distinctly advantageous price. The First Piano Concerto makes use of Stenhammar's own orchestration, which came to light only recently in America; and this is the most comprehensive compilation of Stenhammar's orchestral music now on the market. All the performances and recordings are of high quality, and the only serious criticism to make affects the first movement of the Second Symphony, which Järvi takes rather too briskly. In the Second Piano Concerto Cristina Ortiz is a good soloist.

Symphony 2 in G min., Op. 34

🔑 * Cap. (ADD)CAP 21151. Stockholm PO, Westerberg

Symphony 2; Overture, Excelsior!, Op. 13

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553888. RSNO, Sundkvist

This is a marvellous Symphony. It is direct in utterance; the melodic invention is fresh and abundant, and the generosity of spirit it radiates is heart-warming. The Stockholm Philharmonic under Stig Westerberg play with conviction and eloquence; the strings have warmth and body, and the wind are very fine too. The recording is vivid and full-bodied even by the digital standards of today: as sound, this record is absolutely first class.

Petter Sundkvist's account too is absolutely first class interpretatively, though it is rather let down by the quality of sound, which does not match that of his Stockholm rivals. It is a meticulous, dedicated account, which radiates an understanding of and love for this music. The Royal Scottish National Orchestra respond with enthusiasm.

CHAMBER MUSIC

String Quartets (i) 1 in C, Op. 2; (ii) 2 in C min., Op. 14; (iii) 3 in F, Op. 18; 4 in A min., Op. 25; (i) 5 in C (Serenade), Op. 29; (ii) 6 in D min., Op. 35

Ⓜ  Cap. (ADD) CAP 21536 (3). (i) Fresk Qt; (ii) Copenhagen Qt; (iii) Gotland Qt

The First Quartet shows Stenhammar steeped in the chamber music of Beethoven and Brahms, though there is a brief reminder of Grieg; the Second is far more individual. By the Third and Fourth, arguably the greatest of the six, the influence of Brahms and Dvořák is fully assimilated, and the Fourth reflects that gentle melancholy which lies at the heart of Stenhammar's sensibility. The Fifth is the shortest; the Sixth comes from the war years when the composer was feeling worn out and depressed, though there is little evidence of this in the music. Performances are generally excellent, as indeed is the recording, and it is good to have this thoroughly worthwhile set at mid-price.

PIANO MUSIC

Piano Sonatas in G min.; A flat, Op. 12; 3 Fantasies; Nights of Late Summer, Op. 33

Ⓝ * Hyp. CDA 67689. Sturfält

Stenhammar's G minor Sonata is an ambitious, romantic work with an unforgettable main theme dominating its first movement; in its youthful ardour, in many ways it is an equivalent of the Brahms F minor work. The Three Fantasies, Op. 11, of 1895 are Brahmsian in influence, the first again boldly passionate; but the composer's own personality come through, and notably so in the charming Dolce scherzando and the closing Molto espressivo. The five pieces which make up the Nights of Late Summer are not overtly descriptive: their feeling is personal, although the exception is the closing charming Poco allegretto, which has almost a tang of Grieg. But the late A major Sonata (composed in the same year) is a highly individual work, balancing serious lyricism with drama, and closing with a vibrant, unpredictable finale. Martin Sturfält suggests it has an affinity with Beethoven. He plays all this music with much feeling and understanding, and great spontaneity, as at a live recital; and the recording (produced by Andrew Keener) is very real indeed. This is a disc well worth exploring.

VOCAL MUSIC

30 Songs

 MSVE (ADD) MSCD 623. von Otter, Hagegård, Forsberg, Schuback

These songs cover the whole of Stenhammar's career: the earliest, 'In the forest', was composed when he was 16, while the last, Minnesang, was written three years before his death. The songs are unpretentious and charming, fresh and idyllic, and nearly all are strophic. Hagegård sings the majority of them with his usual intelligence and artistry, though there is an occasional hardening of timbre. Anne Sofie von Otter is in wonderful voice and sings with great sensitivity and charm. Bengt Forsberg and Thomas Schuback accompany with great taste, and the recording is of the highest quality.

Lodolezzi Sings: suite, Op. 39; (i) Midwinter, Op. 24; (ii) Snöfrid, Op. 5; The Song (interlude)

 BIS CD 438. (i; ii) Gothenburg Concert Hall Ch., (ii) with Ahlén, Nilsson, Zackrisson, Enoksson; Gothenburg SO, Järvi

Snöfrid is an early cantata. The young composer was completely under the spell of Wagner at this time and it offers only occasional glimpses of the mature Stenhammar. Midwinter is a kind of folk-music fantasy or potpourri on the lines of Alfvén's Midsummer Vigil, though not quite so appealing. Lodolezzi Sings has much innocent charm. None of this is great Stenhammar but it is well worth hearing; the performances under Neeme Järvi are very sympathetic, and the recording is natural and present.

(i) The Song (Sången), Op. 44; (ii) 2 Sentimental Romances, Op. 28; (iii) Ithaca, Op. 21

🔑  Cap. (ADD) CAP 21358. (i) Sörenson, von Otter, Dahlberg, Wahlgren, State Ac. Ch., Adolf Fredrik Music School Children's Ch.; (ii) Tellefsen; (iii) Hagegård, Swedish RSO; (i) Blomstedt; (ii) Westerberg; (iii) Ingelbretsen

The first half of The Song has been described as 'a great fantasy' and is Stenhammar at his best and most individual: the choral writing is imaginatively laid out and the contrapuntal ingenuity is always at the service of poetic ends: the second half is less individual. The solo and choral singing is superb and the whole performance has the total commitment one might expect from these forces. The superbly engineered recording does them full justice. The Two Sentimental Romances have great charm and are very well played, and Hagegård is in fine voice in another rarity, Ithaca.

Tirfing (opera; excerpts)

 Sterling CDO 1033-2. Tobiasson, Morling, Taube, Stockholm Royal Op. O, Segerstam

Tirfing is a 'mystical saga-poem', based on the Hervarar Saga. It is all terribly Wagnerian, but even so, the music has the power and sweep of Stenhammar. There are characteristic modulations (one is reminded of Excelsior! among other things). Above all, even at its most Wagnerian, the music grips the listener from start to finish. Leif Segerstam gets first-rate results from the Royal Opera Orchestra and the same from the three soloists, in particular Ingrid Tobiasson as Hervor. Good wide-ranging recording.

STERNDALE BENNETT, William (1816–75)

Piano Concertos 1 in D min., Op. 1; 3 in C min., Op. 9

❀ * Lyrita SRCD 204. Binns, LPO, Braithwaite

Sterndale Bennett's Concerto in D minor is a work of extraordinary fluency and accomplishment. David Byers, who has edited the Concertos, speaks of Sterndale Bennett's 'gentle lyricism, the strength and energy of the orchestral tuttis'. No praise can be too high for the playing of Malcolm Binns, whose fleetness of finger and poetic sensibility are a constant source of delight, and for the admirable support he receives from Nicholas Braithwaite and the LPO. The engineers produce sound of the highest quality. A most enjoyable disc.

Piano Concertos 2 in E flat, Op. 4; 5 in F min.; Adagio

 Lyrita SRCD 205. Binns, Philh. O, Braithwaite

The Second Concerto proves to be another work of great facility and charm. It takes as its model the concertos of Mozart and Mendelssohn, and the brilliance and delicacy of the keyboard writing make one understand why the composer was so highly regarded by his contemporaries. The F minor Concerto of 1836 is eminently civilized music with lots of charm; the Adagio, which completes the disc, is thought to be an alternative slow movement for Sterndale Bennett's Third Concerto (1837). Whether or not this is the case, it is certainly a lovely piece. Malcolm Binns plays with great artistry, and the accompaniment by the Philharmonia Orchestra and Nicholas Braithwaite is equally sensitive. First-class recording.

STEVENS, Bernard (1916–83)

(i) Cello Concerto; Symphony of Liberation

🔑  Mer. (ADD) CDE 84124. (i) Baillie, BBC PO, Downes

Bernard Stevens came to wider notice at the end of the war when his Symphony of Liberation won a Daily Express competition. What a fine work it proves to be, though the somewhat later Cello Concerto is even stronger. Dedicated performances from Alexander Baillie and the BBC Philharmonic. Good recording.

(i) Violin Concerto; Symphony 2

 Mer. (ADD) CDE 84174. (i) Kovacic; BBC PO, Downes

The Violin Concerto is a good piece and well worth investigating. Stevens is a composer of real substance, and the Second Symphony (1964) is impressive in its sustained power and resource. Ernst Kovacic is persuasive in the Concerto, and Downes and the BBC Philharmonic play well. Good (but not spectacular) recording.

STEVENSON, Ronald
(born 1928)

Passacaglia on D-S-C-H

🔑  Divine Art 25013. McLachlan

Ronald Stevenson's Passacaglia is something of a tour de force. It is a mighty set of variations on the four-note motif D-S-C-H derived from Shostakovich's monogram, lasting without a break for some 80 minutes. Later on in the score Stevenson introduces another four-note anagram, B-A-C-H, perhaps a reference to Busoni's Fantasia contrappuntistica. The twelfth section cleverly alludes to the microtonal scale of the Highland bagpipes and incorporates a 17th-century Pibroch Cumha ne Cloinne ('Lament for the Children') and there is a formidable climactic triple fugue in which the Dies irae surfaces. In the 1960s Sir William Walton hailed the pieces as 'really tremendous – magnificent – I can't remember having been so excited by a new work for a very long time'. Murray McLachlan is an impressive exponent of this score and he is very well recorded. An earlier version by Raymond Clarke (Marco Polo 8.223545), though a formidable musical achievement, is rather let down by the boxy recording, and neither of the composer's own accounts is easily available.

STILL, Robert (1910–71)

Symphonies (i) 3; (ii) 4

Ⓝ  Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 285. (i) LSO, Goosens; (ii) RPO, Fredman – SEARLE: Symphony 2 ***

At last Robert Still's highly entertaining symphonies are making it on to CD. Still was a gifted composer and a very considerable musician. His Third Symphony is an expertly written piece (the opening sounds a bit Prokofievian and is undeniably attractive), and although it is fair to say that the slow movement lacks real depth, it is again very attractive. The Fourth Symphony is inspired by a psychological case-history and reflects the composer's interest and specialized knowledge of psychiatry. It is a hugely entertaining work – colourful and varied and often excitingly dramatic. Both symphonies receive superb performances and recordings (from the 1960s and '70s). Good coupling too.

STILL, William Grant (1895–1978)

Symphony 2 (Song of a New Race) in G min.

 Chan. 9226. Detroit SO, Järvi – DAWSON: Negro Folk Symphony; ELLINGTON: Harlem ***

Stokowski conducted the première of this attractive piece in 1937, seven years after the composer's First Symphony had been the first work by an Afro-American composer to be played by a major orchestra (the NYPO). Still worked as an arranger, so he knew how to score, and he had a fund of tunes: the slow movement is haunting, the high-spirited Scherzo whistles along like someone out walking on a spring morning. The idiom is totally American and, if the score is more a suite than a symphony, it remains very personable. It is played most persuasively here and is given a richly expansive recording.

STOCKHAUSEN, Karlheinz
(1928–2006)

(i) Mikrophonie 1; Mikrophonie 2; (ii) Klavierstücke 1–11

Ⓜ  Sony (ADD) S2K 53346 (2). (i) Members of W. German R. Ch. & Studio Ch. for New Music, Cologne, Kontarsky, Alings, Fritsch, Bojé, cond. Schernus; supervised by composer; (ii) Kontarsky (piano)

This reissue combines two important Stockhausen recordings from the mid-1960s. Mikrophonie 1 is electronic music proper; Mikrophonie 2 attempts a synthesis of electronic music and choral sounds, and it is the vocal work that is the more immediately intriguing. It may be in dispute just how valid performances like these are when the composer's score allows many variables, but at least it is the composer himself who is supervising the production. Outstanding recording-quality for its time – as, of course, it should be with so many musician-engineers around in the Cologne studios.

The Klavierstücke provide a stimulating coupling. Aloys Kontarsky plays these 11 pieces – arguably the purest expression yet of Stockhausen's musical imagination – with a dedication that can readily convince even the unconverted listener. Seven of the pieces are very brief epigrammatic utterances, each sharply defined. The sixth and tenth pieces (the latter placed separately on the second disc) are more extended, each taking over 20 minutes. The effect at the beginning of the ninth piece provides a clear indication of Stockhausen's aural imagination. The pianist repeats the same, not very interesting discord no fewer than 228 times, and one might dismiss that as merely pointless. What emerges from sympathetic listening is that the repetitions go nagging on so that the sound of the discord seems to vary, like a visual image shimmering in heat-haze. The other pieces, too, bring similar extensions of musical experience, and all this music is certainly communicative. Excellent if forward recording and extensive back-up notes. A good set on which to sharpen avant-garde teeth.

Stimmung (1968)

 Hyp. CDA 66115. Singcircle, Rose

Gregory Rose with his talented vocal group directs an intensely beautiful account of Stockhausen's 70-minute minimalist meditation on six notes. Though the unsympathetic listener might still find the result boring, this explains admirably how Stockhausen's musical personality can hypnotize, with his variety of effect and response, even with the simplest of formulae. Excellent recording.

STORACE, Bernardo
(c. 1637–c. 1707)

Selve di varie compositioni d'intavolatura (for harpsichord and organ); Harpsichord: Ciaccona; Passacaglia sopra f; Balletto; Follia; Passacaglia sopra c; Spagnaletta; Partite sopra il cinque passi; Organ: Toccatas in F & G; Romanesca; Ballo della Battaglia; Ruggiero; Recercer in e; Passacaglia sopra c

Ⓝ  CPO 777 444-2. Halubek (Italian harpsichord & organ)

The present collection is taken from Bernardo Storace's only manuscript of works for harpsichord and organ which has survived. The pieces are attractively varied and full of life. The well-known Follia is, of course, a source for variations, and the Passacaglias are similarly inventive. The writing is vivid and colourful for both instruments, with the organ Ballo della Battaglia particlarly vivid. By using authentic period instruments and interspersing the pieces Jörg Halubek makes up an entertaining programme which he plays with flair, and he is very well recorded. A most rewarding disc.

STRADELLA, Alessandro
(1639–82)

Christmas Cantatas: (i) Ah, ah, troppo è ver; (ii) Si apra al riso (both per Il Santissimo natale)

🔑 (BB)  DHM 05472 77463 2. (i) Bach, Ziesak, Prégardien; (i; ii) Wessel, Schopper; (ii) Schlick; La Stagione Frankfurt, Schneider

With a freshness and originality one expects from the composer of San Giovanni Battista, Stradella's Christmas cantata, Ah, ah, troppo è ver, is a great deal more than a serene pastorella. Lucifer (Michael Schopper) appears at the very opening, strenuously to interrupt the good-natured Sinfonia, to announce his determination to thwart the influence of the Christ child. Then come three scenas, in turn depicting the Annunciation, the Nativity and the Adoration of the Magi with the Angel and Mary (Mechthild Bach), followed by the Shepherd (Ruth Ziesak), each given beautiful narrative arias, all of which are sung ravishingly here. Joseph (Christoph Prégardien) then rounds off the story-telling, and the work closes with an engagingly happy madrigal in which all participate. Si apra al riso is less dramatic but musically just as inspired, with two duets and a madrigal trio interspersed among the solo numbers, here with Barbara Schlick standing out from her excellent colleagues. Michael Schneider paces the music admirably and the instrumental playing is first class. Vivid recording in a pleasing acoustic completes the listener's pleasure.

San Giovanni Battista (oratorio)

(*) Hyp. CDA 67617. Herrmann, Fedi, Oro, Akselberg, Abete, Academia Montis Regalis, De Marchi

Stradella's oratorio on the biblical subject of John the Baptist and Salome is an amazing masterpiece and offers unashamedly sensuous treatment of the story. Insinuatingly chromatic melodic lines for Salome (here described simply as Herodias's daughter) are set against plainer, more forthright writing for the castrato role of the saint, showing the composer as a seventeenth-century equivalent of Richard Strauss. There is one amazing phrase for Salome, which starts well above the stave and ends after much twisting nearly two octaves below with a glorious chest-note, a hair-raising moment. Herod's anger arias bring reminders of both Purcell and Handel, and at the end Stradella ingeniously superimposes Salome's gloating music and Herod's expressions of regret, finally cutting off the duet in mid-air as Charles Ives might have done, bringing the whole work to an indeterminate close.

The new Hyperion version is very successful and enjoyable, well cast, well sung and impressively accompanied by a combination of concerto grosso and concertino, which usually alternate but sometimes play as one group. Martin Oro, bold and full-timbred, is an excellent John the Baptist. Anke Herrmann, although characterizing Salome very believably, does not equal the remarkable eloquence of Catherine Bott on Minkowski's deleted Warner Elatus version.

STRAUSS Family, The

Strauss, Johann Sr (1804–49)

Strauss, Johann Jr (1825–99)

Strauss, Josef (1827–70)

Strauss, Eduard (1835–1916)

(all music listed is by Johann Strauss Jr unless otherwise stated)

Johann Strauss Jr: The Complete Edition

All played by the CSSR State PO (Košice) unless indicated otherwise)

The Complete Edition of the music of Johann Strauss on Marco covers 53 CDs. This collection has great documentary value, but only some of the CDs can be recommended to the general collector: Volumes 17 (8.223217), 27, to which we gave a Rosette (8.223227), 34 (8.223234), 37 (8.223237), 46 (8.223246), 47 (8.223247), 50 (8.223276) and 51 (8.223279), which earned the series its second Rosette.

Boskovsky Decca Strauss Edition

Ⓑ (*) Decca (ADD) 455 254-2 (6). VPO, Boskovsky

These six vintage CDs (offering 86 titles) span Willi Boskovsky's long (analogue) recording career for Decca, stretching over two decades from the late 1950s onwards. In 1979 he directed the first of the now famous VPO New Year Concerts (see below) and that recording tradition has continued until the present day. Boskovsky's achievement in this repertoire remains unique, both in its range – the output of Josef, particularly his polkas, is notably well covered – and the almost unfailing sparkle of the performances. Following a sequence begun by Decca in the days of mono LPs with Clemens Kraus, he showed a unique feeling for the Straussian lilt in the waltzes, while the playing he drew from the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra was consistently persuasive. The Decca engineers rose to the occasion (notably so when special effects were required, as in the Explosion and Thunder and Lightning Polkas) and the Sofiensaal provided an ideal ambience, with plenty of warmth and bloom. The one snag is the thinness of violin-tone, especially on the earlier records – it is immediately noticeable here on An der schönen blauen Donau, which rightly opens the first disc. The present CD transfers are very vivid and immediate, and their brightness has also served to add a hint of coarseness to some of the lively music. The ear adjusts, however, when the music-making is so zestful and alive.

Boskovsky EMI recordings

(BB) (*) EMI (ADD/DDD) 586019 (6). Johann Strauss O, Boskovsky

Willi Boskovsky's EMI recordings date from 1971 to 1985 and this is a pretty complete survey. By any standards, these are excellent performances, with many of the popular works (and just about all the popular works are here) showing Boskovsky at his best: from the very opening of the Blue Danube, the playing of Boskovsky's Johann Strauss Orchestra balances an evocative Viennese warmth with the right sort of vigour; and other major waltzes, such as Morning Papers, are very enjoyable too. All the various overtures are full of attractive tunes and are highly entertaining overall, it must be admitted the playing is not as uniformly memorable as his classic Decca accounts; just occasionally a hint of blandness creeps in here. But the resonant, warm EMI sound makes for enjoyable listening.

NEW YEAR CONCERTS

1963–79 New Year's Concerts; (excerpts* DVD Versions); 1974 New Year Concert (complete): Czárdás: Ritter Pásmán (1967) Einzugmarsch from 'Zigeunerbaron' (1969); Galopp: Banditen (1972); Overture 'Die Fledermaus' (1972); Perpetuum mobile (1978). Polkas: Annen (1966); Auf der Jagd (1979); Bitte schön (1972); Leichtes Blut (1975); Unter Donner und Blitz (1967); Vergnügungszug (1970). Waltz: Kaiser (1975). JOSEF STRAUSS: Polkas: Auf Ferienreisen (1964); Eingesendet (1968); Feuerfest (1971); Jockey (1972); Waltzes: Dorfschwalben aus Osterreich (1963); Sphärenklänge (1964). 1974 Concert: Galopp: Wetrennen. Polkas: Explosions; Pizzicato (with Josef); Tritsch-Tratsch; Rasch in der Tat; Künstergruss. Waltzes: *An der schönen blauen Donau; Freut euch des Lebens; Geschichten aus dem Wienerwald. JOSEF STRAUSS: Polkas: *Frauenherz; Künstlergruss; Ohne Sorgen; Plappermälchen. JOHANN STRAUSS SR: Radetzky Marsch

() DG DVD mono 073 4002 (2). VPO, Boskovsky (with Bonus: Boskovsky Portrait)

Willi Boskovsky took over the direction of the Vienna Philharmonic's traditional New Year's concert in 1955 and continued for 25 years. Apart from being the orchestra's leader, he was a superb solo fiddler and so he continued to direct the concerts in Strauss's own style, leading and conducting from his violin bow and often participating, nowhere more impressively than in the Ritter Pásmán Csárdás (1967), when the VPO assumes a Hungarian mantle; nowhere more charmingly than in Tales from the Vienna Woods (1974), when in the introduction he plays an engaging little duet with the orchestra's concert master. Even in the Pizzicato Polka he opens the piece alongside his players.

The first of the two DVDs here gives us the complete 1974 Concert, a surprisingly mellow affair, not helped by the mono recording which (presumingly deriving from a telecast) has a restricted range of sound, although the acoustic of the Golden Hall of the Musikverein, so visually pleasing, brings plenty of warmth and atmosphere. The programme is relatively short by today's standards, but Boskovsky in his frock coat sustains his patrician image seductively with his Viennese charm and natural feeling for Straussian inflexion and rubato. Especially beguiling is the introduction to the two most famous waltzes, The Blue Danube and Tales from the Vienna Woods, where it is fascinating to watch the zither player in close-up, with his subtle finger-vibrato. The orchestra itself makes a robust vocal contribution in Ohne Sorgen. The camerawork is effective enough, although in the latter piece the producer misses picturing a horn solo by focusing on the wrong player!

The second DVD assembles 19 items from various other concerts of which seven are in black-and-white. If visually these are less attractive, musically they certainly are not, for in the earlier concerts the obviously younger Boskovsky is often at his most vivacious and, throughout, the sound (still mono) is much brighter and more vivid. There are many highlights here, not least the two great Josef Strauss waltzes, while the side-drummer in the percussion department enjoys himself with various jokes and explosive effects in Unter Donner und Blitz, the Banditen Galop, and notably Auf der Jagd, where he presents Boskovsky with the results of the shoot. But he amuses the audience most with his pair of anvils in Feuerfest. On both discs, every now and then the orchestral visuals are interrupted by dancing from members of the Vienna State Opera and Volksoper Ballets, but for the most part we watch the conductor and his players, all so obviously enjoying themselves.

'New Year's Day Concert in Vienna (1979)'*: Polkas: Auf der Jagd (with encore); Bitte schön! Leichtes Blut; Pizzicato (with Josef); Tik-Tak. Waltzes: *An der schönen blauen Donau; Bei uns zu Haus; Loreley-Rheine-Klänge; Wein, Weib und Gesang. JOSEF STRAUSS: Moulinet Polka; Die Emanzipierte Polka-Mazurka; Rudolfsheimer-Polka; Sphärenklänge Waltz. JOHANN STRAUSS SR: Radetzky March. E. STRAUSS: Ohne Bremse Polka. ZIEHRER: Herreinspaziert! Waltz. SUPPÉ: Die schöne Galathee Overture

Ⓜ  Decca 468 489-2. VPO, Boskovsky

Decca chose to record Boskovsky's 1979 New Year's Day concert in Vienna for their very first digital issue on LP. The clarity, immediacy and natural separation of detail are very striking throughout, and the strings of the Vienna Philharmonic are brightly lit.

'1989 New Year Concert in Vienna' (DVD versions): Overture: Die Fledermaus; Ritter Pásmán: Czárdás. Polkas: Bauern; Eljen a Magyar; Im Krapfenwald'l; Pizzicato (with Josef). Waltzes: Accelerationen; An der schönen blauen Donau (Blue Danube); Bei uns z'Haus; Frühlingsstimmen; Künstlerleben. JOSEF STRAUSS: Polkas: Jockey; Die Libelle; Moulinet; Plappemäulchen. JOHANN STRAUSS SR.: Radetzky March

(*) DG DVD 073 024-9. VPO, C. Kleiber. (Prod: Horst Bosch; V/D: Brian Large.)

Carlos Kleiber's pursuit of knife-edged precision prevents the results here from sounding quite relaxed enough, although the advantage of the DVD is that being able to watch his flexible and often graceful arm-movements makes his rather precise style with Viennese rhythms easier to accept. But in one or two numbers Kleiber really lets rip, as in the Hungarian polka, Eljen a Magyar, and in the Ritter Pásmán Czárdás. With well-judged camera work the viewer is made to feel closely involved with the orchestra's music-making, making this an enjoyably spontaneous concert. The recording is both vivid and warmly atmospheric, although the violin timbre is brightly lit to match Kleiber's style.

'New Year Concert 2002' (DVD and CD versions): March: Zivio! Overture Die Fledermaus. Polkas: Beliebte Annen; Elisen; Tik-Tak. Waltzes: An der schönen blauen Donau; Carnevalsbotschafter; Künsterleben; Wiener Blut. JOSEF STRAUSS: Polkas: Aquarellen; Im Fluge; Die Libelle; Plappermäulchen!; Die Schwäzerin; Vorwärts! JOHANN STRAUSS SR: Radetzky March (with HELLMESBERGER: Danse diabolique)

 TDK DVD DV-WPNK02. VPO, Ozawa. (V/D: Brian Large.)

 Ph. 468 999-2. VPO, Ozawa (without Arm in Arm; Beliebte Annen & Elisen Polkas; Perpetuum mobile; Carnevalsbotschafter Waltz)

Ozawa's 2002 Concert was certainly a great success, and he made a special feature of including no fewer than six memorable polkas by Josef Strauss. The background took the form of a large sign over the organ pipes celebrating the arrival of the Euro on that very day. Among the special extras on the DVD is a second performance of Perpetuum mobile, with illustrations of the new currency being manufactured and printed. Also among the 'specials' are the Vienna State Opera Ballet dancing to the Blue Danube and the Spanish Riding School demonstrating against the background of a pair of polkas. These items are all included in the main concert, which Brian Large and his cameras follow with his usual expertise. Ozawa proves a warmly flexible Straussian, even without the aid of a baton, and his performances are consistently enjoyable, if perhaps not as individual as those of Harnoncourt. The end-of-concert joke is the New Year greeting offered in a host of different languages by orchestral members (who are not all Viennese), with Ozawa himself contributing in Japanese and Chinese, and the German version coming from the orchestra en masse. Altogether a most enjoyable occasion. The equivalent SACD, although it plays for 79 minutes, omits five items, but it can certainly be recommended, if you fancy the programme.

'New Year Concert 2003' (DVD versions): Kaiser Franz Joseph I: Rettungs-Jubel-Marsch. Polkas: Bauern; Furioso; Hellenen; Leichtes Blut; Lob der Frauen; Niko; Scherz; Secunden. Waltzes: An der schönen blauen Donau; Kaiser; Krönungs-Lieder; Schatz. JOSEF STRAUSS: Delirien Waltz; Pélé-Méle Polka. JOHANN STRAUSS SR: Chinese Galop; Radetzky March (with WEBER/BERLIOZ: Invitation to the Dance; BRAHMS: Hungarian Dance 5 & 6)

🔑 DVD Arthaus 107013. VPO, Harnoncourt. (V/D: Brian Large.) (Bonus includes Soloists of V. St. Op. Ballet in the Hellenen Polka; and Kirov Ballet in the Krönungs-Lieder Waltz.)

Harnoncourt's 2003 DVD is really special – the most memorable New Year celebration since the famous 1987 occasion, which saw the return of Karajan to the Musikverein. What is so striking with Harnoncourt is the seductive combination of relaxed warmth (with some leisurely tempi in the Polkas) and the laid-back refinement of the orchestral playing. Even the trombone raspberry in the Scherz Polka is delicately done. Highlights include the beautifully played Schatz and Emperor Waltzes, especially the gentle coda of the latter, and Josef's sparkling Pélé-Méle Polka. The ravishing account of the Weber/Berlioz Invitation to the Dance is equally memorable.

Harnoncourt himself is a joy to watch. Never more so than when he comes back for the encores, and, with flashing eyes, unleashes an extraordinary bravura performance of the Furioso Polka. Then, after sailing on the Blue Danube, he has the audience totally under control for the clapping in the very theatrical account of the Radetzky March. Although the camera does occasionally stray away from the musicians to roam outside the concert hall, the ballet dancing and the visit to the Chinese Chamber at the Schönbrunn Palace are kept as special features at the end.

'New Year Concert, 2004' (DVD and CD versions): JOHANN STRAUSS SR: Galopps: Cachucha. Indiana; March: Radetzky. Polkas: Beliebte-Sperl; Frederika. Waltz: Philomelen. JOHANN STRAUSS JR: Czárdás (Die Fledermaus). March: Es war so wunderschön. Overture: Das Sitzentuch der Königin. Polkas: Champagne; Im Sturmschritt; Satanella. Quadrille: Zigeunerin. Waltzes: Accelerationen; An der schönen blauen Donau. JOSEF STRAUSS: Polkas: Eislauf; Stiefmütterchen. Waltz: Sphärenklänge. EDUARD STRAUSS: Polka: Mit Vergnügen (with LANNER: Tarantel Galopp; Hofball-Tänze Waltz)

🔑  DG DVD 073 097-9. VPO, Muti (V/D Brian Large); CD 474 900-2 (2)

Riccardo Muti once again presents his programme with an authentic Viennese glow. The concert in 2004 was designed to celebrate the bicentenary of Johann Strauss Sr, father of the waltz-king we most revere. Normally the final encore, the Radetzky March, is his most notable contribution, but here we have four rare pieces by him, including the delectable Philomena Waltz, leading to two seductive items by his contemporary Jospeh Lanner, presented with an endearing, gentle touch of Viennese schmalz in the more modern Schrammeln style that we remember from the early recordings of the Boskovsky Ensemble.

Johann Strauss Jr and his siblings take over again in the second half, with more rarities and an ecstatic account of the Sphärenklänge Waltz to match an equally ravishing account of the Accelerationen Waltz in the first half, where the increase in tempo is managed most engagingly. While the Champagne Polka fizzes appropriately, it cannot be said that visually the 2004 concert is as electrifying as Harnoncourt's 2003 proceedings. Muti's visual image is dapper; curiously, his bespectacled countenance reminds one a little of Glenn Miller, though there is nothing jazzy about his affectionately cultivated conducting style. With Brian Large in command, the camera angles are almost always impeccable, and only very occasionally do we leave the auditorium. The sound is excellent. There are optional filmed sequences of the Vienna State Opera Ballet for Accelerations and the Champagne Polka and for Josef Strauss's Eislauf Polka, and we are offered a choice of figure-skating impressions. But it is much more rewarding to be caught up in the music-making itself.

'New Year Concert, 2005' (DVD versions): Marches: Indigo; Russische. Polkas: An der Jagd; Die Bajadere; Bauern; Ein Herz, ein Sinn; Fata Morgana; Haut-Volée; Klipp-Klapp; Nordseebilder; Pizzicato (with Josef); Vergnügungszug. Waltzes: An der schönen blauen Donau; Geschichten aus dem Wienerwald; 1001 Nacht. JOSEF STRAUSS: Polkas: Die Emancipirte; Winterlust. Waltzes: Lustschwärmer. EDUARD STRAUSS: Electrisch Polka (with SUPPÉ: Overture 'Die schöne Galathee'; JOSEPH HELLMESBERGER: Auf Wiener Art)

🔑  DG DVD 073 4020. VPO, Maazel (V/D: Brian Large)

It is fascinating how the New Year's Day concert in Vienna seems to mellow even the severest disciplinarians among conductors. Lorin Maazel has never been so warm as when conducting this event, yet throughout his face registers (and his body movements confirm) an extraordinary kaleidoscopic range of emotions, from relaxed geniality and a hint of a smile to the strongest forcefulness and determination, communicated directly to the players and, of course, to us (one of the fascinations of DVD). The discipline underlies every performance, the playing has consistently precise ensemble without a hint of stiffness, and there is always plenty of lift. Maazel zips through over a dozen polkas with consistent exhilaration but saves his greatest affection for waltzes, and also the opening of the Suppé overture – a truly schöne Galatea – with magical playing from the Vienna strings (and an engaging bouquet of roses appearing on the screen). As a superb violinist, he has already followed Boskovsky's example in joining the orchestra to lead the Pizzicato Polka, and in Geschichten aus dem Wienerwald he takes up the violin again to play the delightful gentle passage in the introduction normally given to the zither.

Because of the tsunami catastrophe only a few days before the concert, it was decided it would be inappropriate to end the concert with the Radetzky March so, after the speeches and multi-language 'Happy New Year', it was the Blue Danube Waltz which ended the concert, played quite gloriously and with infinite flexibility. Indeed, in the coda, Maazel manages an extra touch of indulgent rubato, quite impermissible, of course, but totally captivating in this instance because it was seemingly spontaneous on a very special occasion. Brian Large, as usual, supervised the visuals expertly, and allowed himself to take the camera outside the Musikverein into the Vienna Woods at the appropriate time to show how they mirror the beauty of Strauss's waltz. Otherwise, in three optional filmed sequences, the viewer can choose to watch the Vienna State Opera Ballet. But we prefer the orchestra. Excellent sound.

'2006 New Year's Concert' (CD version): Auf's Korn!; Künstler Quadrille. Galopps: Banditen; Liebesbotschaft. Marches: Spanischer; Der Zigeunerbaron. Polkas: Diplomaten; Eljen a Magyar!; Furioso; Im Krapfenwald'l; Lob der Frauen; Neue Pizzicato. Waltzes: An der schönen, blauen Donau; Du und Du; Frühlingsstimmen; Künsterleben; Lagunen. EDUARD STRAUSS: Polka: Telephon. JOHANN STRAUSS SR: Radetzky March. JOSEF STRAUSS: Polkas: Eingesendet; Ohne Sorgen! (with MOZART: Le nozze di Figaro; LANNER: Waltz: Die Mozartisten)

🔑 Ⓜ  DG 477 5566 (2). VPO, Jansons

After New Year's Concerts conducted by Harnoncourt and Muti, Jansons is altogether mellower.

'New Year's Eve Concert 2007' (DVD & CD versions): March: Zivio!. Overture Waldmeister. Polka: Stadt und Land. Waltzes: An der schönen blauen Donau; Wo die Zitronen blüh'n. EDUARD STRAUSS: Ohne Bremse Polka. JOSEF STRAUSS: Polkas: Irenen; Matrosen. Waltzes: Dynamiden; Delirien; Flattereister. JOHANN STRAUSS SR: Galops: Einzugs; Furioso. Radetzky March; Der Karneval von Venedig (Fantasy)

🔑 ✿ * DG DVD 073 4188; 2-CD 477 6225 (2). VPO, Mehta (with Joseph HELLMESBERGER: Dance of the Elves; Leichtfüssig Polka) (DVD includes optional filmed ballet sequence for Dynamiden and An der schönen blauen Donau)

Zubin Mehta returned to direct the annual New Year Concert in Vienna for the fourth time in 2007 – and very memorably, too. He has mellowed even further, and he directs the five major waltzes here very seductively indeed, taking alluring risks with the Viennese rubato, especially in those by Josef and Johann's Wo di Zitronen blüh'n, in which he conveys great warmth of affection. The rest of the programme includes plenty of agreeable novelties. Joseph Hellmesberger's Leichtfüssig Polka is irresistibly vivacious and the orchestra obvously enjoy playing it. Characteristically atmospheric recording and a generous programme make this a very desirable collection indeed, and Brian Large's video direction is superb: the cameras find the right angle every time. This is a very repeatable programme to watch and listen to.

'2009 New Year's Concert' (CD Version): Galop: Zampa; Marches: Einzugs; Märchen aus dem Orient; Overtures: Ein Nacht in Venedig; Der Zigeunerbaron; Polkas: Annen; Alexandrinan; Elgen a Magyär; Freikugein; Schnellpost; So ängstlich sind wir nicht; Unter Donner und Blitz; Waltzes: An der blauen Donau; Rosen aus dem Süden; Schatz; (with JOSEF STRAUSS: Sphären-Klänge. HAYDN: Symphony 45 (Farewell): Finale. HELLMESSBERGER: Spanish Waltz. JOHANN STRAUSS SR.: Radezsky Marsch)

Ⓝ  Decca 478 1133. VPO, Barenboim

For 2009 Barenboim makes a very successful début, including in his programme six New Year premières. His style is often relaxed, as is immediately shown in the Annen Polka, but the programme is a stimulating one and has plenty of life. He may be forgiven for indulging himself in the Blue Danube, as it is an encore, but for the most part he proves a natural Johann Straussian. Another entertaining concert, superbly played and recorded.

Other Strauss Recordings

Overture: Die Fledermaus; Emperor Waltz; Perpetuum mobile; Tritsch-Tratsch Polka

🔑 * BBC (ADD) BBCL 4038. Hallé O, Barbirolli – HAYDN: Symphony 83 in G min. (La Poule); LEHÁR: Gold and Silver; RICHARD STRAUSS: Der Rosenkavalier Suite ****

Barbirolli's performances exude the full communicative atmosphere of this 1969 Prom, and one can hear Sir John himself vocalizing in the overture. The performance of the Emperor Waltz is ravishing, and an outrageous fun performance of Tritsch-Tratsch follows, with sudden pauses to bring bursts of laughter from the promenaders.

Polka: Unter Donner und Blitz. Waltzes: An der schönen, blauen Donau; Kaiser; Morgenblätter; Rosen aus dem Süden; Treasure; Wiener blut. JOSEF STRAUSS: Dorfschwalben aus Osterreich

🔑 Ⓜ  RCA SACD 82876 671615-2. Chicago SO, Reiner – WEBER: Invitation to the Dance; RICHARD STRAUSS: Der Rosenkavalier: Waltzes

Reiner's collection was recorded in 1957 and 1960, but the new SACD transfer restores the voluptuousness to the sound. Although the Thunder and Lighning Polka has an unforgettable explosive exuberance, these performances are memorable for their Viennese lilt, especially the Emperor Waltz and Josef's Village Swallows. Reiner is especially persuasive in the introductory interchanges of Weber's Invitation to the Waltz, while the Der Rosenkavalier Waltz sequence brings a passionate surge of adrenalin.

OPERA AND OPERETTA

Die Fledermaus (complete; DVD version)

(*) DG DVD 073 007-9. Coburn, Perry, Fassbaender, Waechter, Brendel, Hopferwieser, Bav. State Op. Ch. & O, C. Kleiber (Dir: Otto Schenk.)

Recorded live at the Bavarian State Opera in 1987, Carlos Kleiber's film version of Die Fledermaus is preferable to his audio recording, also for DG (457 765-2), in fair measure because of the superb assumption of the role of Prince Orlofsky by Brigitte Fassbaender, a fire-eater who makes the most positive host in the party scene of Act II, singing superbly, where the audio recording has a feeble falsettist. Though Janet Perry's soprano is shallow and bright, she has the agility and sparkle for the role of Adèle, with Patricia Coburn as a warm, positive Rosalinde, whoopsing away persuasively in the waltz numbers, and entering into the spirit of the party, despite a violently unconvincing red wig. Eberhard Waechter sounds too old and unsteady as Eisenstein, and Josef Hopferwieser is also unconvincingly old as the philandering tenor, Alfred, both shown up by the dark, firm Wolfgang Brendel as Falke. As on CD, Kleiber directs a taut performance, which yet has plenty of sparkle, helped by full-bodied sound.

Die Fledermaus (complete; CD versions)

🔑 Ⓑ * Ph. Duo 464 031-2 (2). Te Kanawa, Gruberová, Leech, W. Brendel, Bär, Fassbaender, Göttling, Krause, Wendler, Schenk, V. State Op. Ch., VPO, Previn

🔑 (BB) (*) Naxos mono 8.110180/181 (2). Gueden, Lipp, Patzak, Dermota, Poell, Wagner, Preger, Vienna State Op. Ch., VPO, Krauss

Ⓜ () EMI mono 5 67074-2 [567153] (2). Schwarzkopf, Streich, Gedda, Krebs, Kunz, Christ, Philh. Ch. & O, Karajan

Die Fledermaus (Gala performance)

Ⓜ (*) Decca (ADD) 475 8319 (2). Gueden, Koth, Kmentt, Waechter, Berry, Zampieri, Resnik, V. State Op. Ch., VPO, Karajan (with guests: Tebaldi, Corena, Nilsson, Del Monaco, Berganza, Sutherland, Bjoerling, L. Price, Simionato, Bastianini, Welitsch)

Dame Kiri Te Kanawa's portrait of Rosalinde brings not only gloriously firm, golden sound but also vocal acting with star quality. Brigitte Fassbaender is the most dominant Prince Orlofsky on disc. Singing with a tangy richness and firmness, she emerges as the genuine focus of the party scene. Edita Gruberová is a sparkling, characterful and full-voiced Adèle; Wolfgang Brendel as Eisenstein and Olaf Bär as Dr Falke both sing very well indeed, though their voices sound too alike. Richard Leech as Alfred provides heady tone and a hint of parody. Tom Krause makes a splendid Frank, the more characterful for no longer sounding young. Anton Wendler as Dr Blind and Otto Schenk as Frosch the jailer give vintage Viennese performances, with Frosch's cavortings well tailored and not too extended. Vivaciously directed, this now goes to the top of the list of latterday Fledermaus recordings, though with one serious reservation: the Philips production in Act II adds a layer of crowd noise as background throughout the Party scene, even during Orlofsky's solos and in the lovely chorus, Bruderlein und Schwesterlein, yearningly done. Otherwise the recorded sound is superb. Like Kleiber on DG, Previn opts for the Thunder and Lightning Polka instead of the ballet. Its reissue at bargain price is welcome and retains all the qualities of the original (except texts and translations).

Clemens Krauss conducts an irresistibly sparkling account of the score with the starry cast forming a wonderfully coordinated ensemble. Hilde Gueden with her golden tones makes a deliciously minxish Rosalinde, with a naughty, provocative smile implied, and Julius Patzak as a tenor Eisenstein has never been surpassed, totally idiomatic, well contrasted with the equally fine Alfred of Anton Dermota. Add to that Wilma Lipp's bright, agile Adèle and the firm, clear if very feminine Orlofsky of Sieglinde Wagner. The original snag was the thin violin-timbre which became even more 'whistly' in the old Ace of Clubs reissue. In the latest Naxos transfer the voices are very well caught, set very much in front of the orchestra, and Davis Lennick's remastering tames the sound, even if the violins remain a little fizzy. This is a gramophone classic by any standards.

Karajan's 1960 Decca set was originally issued – very handsomely presented and with much blazing of publicity trumpets as a so-called 'Gala performance' – with various artists from the Decca roster turning up to do their party piece at the 'cabaret' included in the Orlovsky ball sequence. This was a famous tradition of performances of Die Fledermaus at the New York Met. in the early years of the last century. The party pieces now have a vintage appeal and even Tebaldi's Viljalied (rather heavy in style) invokes nostalgia for an earlier era. There is a breathtaking display of coloratura from Joan Sutherland in Il Bacio, a Basque folksong sung with delicious simplicity by Teresa Berganza, and Leontyne Price is wonderfully at home in Gershwin's Summertime. But the most famous item is Simionato and Bastianini's Anything you can do I can do better, sung with more punch than sophistication, but endearingly memorable, nearly half a century after it was recorded.

The performance of the opera itself has all the sparkle one could ask for, although the solo singing itself is variable. If anything, Karajan is even more brilliant than he was on the old EMI mono issue, and the Decca recording is scintillating in its clarity.

The mono recording of Karajan's 1955 EMI version has great freshness and clarity, along with the polish which for many will make it a first favourite. Schwarzkopf makes an enchanting Rosalinde, not just in the imagination and sparkle of her singing but also in the snatches of spoken dialogue (never too long) which leaven the entertainment. As Adèle, Rita Streich produces her most dazzling coloratura; Nicolai Gedda and Helmut Krebs are beautifully contrasted in their tenor tone, and Erich Kunz gives a vintage performance as Falke.

Die Fledermaus (complete; in English; DVD version)

🔑  Arthaus DVD 100 134 (2). Gustafson, Howarth, Kowalski, Otey, Michaels-Moore, Bottone, ROHCG Ch. & O, Bonynge (Dir: John Cox)

Lasting well over three and a quarter hours, this version of Die Fledermaus, in an English version by John Mortimer, stretches to two DVDs, largely because in this gala performance at Covent Garden on New Year's Eve 1989/90 a half-hour of performances by the 'surprise guests' is included in the party scene: Luciano Pavarotti, Marilyn Horne and – making her farewell to the opera stage – Dame Joan Sutherland. For Sutherland devotees it is an essential item, with the two duets specially cherishable, the Semiramide duet with Horne and Parigi o cara from La Traviata with Pavarotti.

Under Richard Bonynge's light, beautifully sprung direction, the gala fizzes splendidly with a first-rate cast, even though at the start of Act II Falke (Michaels-Moore) unwittingly loses his monocle. The countertenor, Jochen Kowalski, makes a characterful, distinctive Orlofsky with baritone speaking voice contrasted with his singing. Nancy Gustafson is a warm Rosalinde and Judith Howarth a sweet Adèle, and the others all sing well, despite the pressure of the occasion.

Fürstin Ninetta (complete; CD version)

(N) (BB) (*) Naxos mono 8.660227/8 (2). Aberg, Rombo, Gröndahl, Taube, Strid, Eliasson, Jarrick, Ninetta Ch., Stockholm Strauss O, Csányi

It is good that Naxos are exploring the later and less well-known operettas of Johann Strauss. This one offers a zany plot revolving round a young couple staying in a Sorrento hotel whose wedding plans keep getting thwarted by bizarre turns of events. Of course it all ends happily and this excellent recording, recorded live in 2007, makes for thoroughly entertaining listening. The score is full of attractive dance-like music, such as the opening tarantella number, while the superb Quintet and a 'Hypnotic Duet' in Act II are highlights. The cast is generally very good – the men especially so – and so are the orchestra and chorus. It is possible to imagine a performance with greater zest from the conductor, but that is a small quibble, especially when the price of this set is so low.

Jabouka (complete)

(BB)  Naxos 8.660216/7 (2). Tischler, Veith, Schober, Groiss, Gaudeamus Ch., Brno, European Johann Strauss O, Pollack

Jabouka was the fourteenth of the operettas of the young Johann Strauss, written for Vienna's Apple Festival. Its weakness lies in the libretto, but this excellent Naxos recording, made in Brno, brings out its distinctive qualities, which suggest a similarity with the operetta-writing of Lehár, Strauss's successor. So the drinking sextet clearly anticipates the Merry Widow, as does the reliance above all on ensembles rather than arias. The chorus work on this set is not just incisive but often very delicate. Recommended.

A Night in Venice (Eine Nacht in Venedig) (complete)

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.111254 (from recording, with Schwarzkopf, Gedda, Köth, Philh. Ch. & O, Ackermann)

A Night in Venice, in Erich Korngold's revision, is a superb example of Walter Legge's Philharmonia productions, honeyed and atmospheric. As a sampler, try the jaunty little waltz duet in Act I between Schwarzkopf as the heroine, Annina, and the baritone Erich Kunz as Caramello, normally a tenor role. Nicolai Gedda as the Duke then appropriates the most famous waltz song of all, the Gondola Song, but, with such a frothy production, purism would be out of place. This Naxos remastering of EMI's Kingsway Hall recording by Mark Obert-Thorn sounds remarkably good. The set comes with a cued synopsis. Recommended.

Wiener Blut (complete)

Ⓜ (*) EMI (ADD) 5 66176-2 (2). Rothenberger, Gedda, Holm, Hirte, Putz, Cologne Op. Ch., Philh. Hungarica, Boskovsky

The EMI set conducted by Willi Boskovsky makes a delightful entertainment, the performance authentic and with a strong singing cast. The recording is atmospherically reverberant, but there is no lack of sparkle. However, for some there will be too much German dialogue, which also involves two CDs.

Der Zigeunerbaron (arr. Harnoncourt; Linke; complete)

*() Teldec 4509 94555-2 (2). Coburn, Lippert, Schasching, Hamari, Holzmair, Oelze, von Magnus, Lázar, Arnold Schoenberg Ch., VSO, Harnoncourt

When Der Zigeunerbaron, second only to Der Fledermaus among Strauss operettas, has been so neglected on disc, this new Teldec set, offering a more expanded text than ever before, fills an important gap. Harnoncourt, as a Viennese and with a Viennese orchestra, ensures that the Strauss lilt is winningly and authentically observed from the pot-pourri overture onwards, and Harnoncourt's concern (as a period specialist) for clarity of texture gives the whole performance a sparkling freshness. Sadly, the casting is seriously flawed, when the central character of the gypsy princess, Saffi, is taken by a soprano, Pamela Coburn, who, as recorded, sounds strained and unsteady. The others are better, with Rudolf Schasching catching the fun behind the comic role of the pig-breeder, Zsupán, authentically but without exaggeration, and the light tenor, Herbert Lippert, is charming as the hero, Barinkay. Among the rest, the mezzo, Elisabeth von Magnus, sings in cabaret style in the supporting role of Mirabella, given a major point-number here, often omitted. Christiane Oelze as Arsena, the girl who does not get the hero, sings far more sweetly than Coburn, and Julia Hamari as Saffi's foster-mother, Czipra, sounds younger than her daughter. The recording is full and vivid, but many will feel that there is too much German dialogue – largely accounting for the extended length of two and a half hours.

Der Zigeunerbaron (original version; complete)

Ⓝ (BB) () Naxos mono 8.11329/30. Schwarzkopf, Gedda, Kunz, Koth, Prey, Philh. Ch. & O, Ackermann (with excerpts from earlier recordings of Der Zigeunerbaron by Elisabeth Rethberg (1930); Lotte Lehman, Richard Tauber (1928); Schatz Walz: Berlin State Op. Ch. & O, Leo Blech (1929))

This superb Philharmonia version of The Gypsy Baron from the mid-1950s, now reappearing on Naxos, has never been matched in its rich stylishness and polish. Schwarzkopf, as the gipsy princess, sings radiantly, not least in the heavenly Bullfinch Duet (to the melody made famous by MGM as 'One day when we were young'). Gedda, still youthful, produces heady tone and Erich Kunz as the rough pig-breeder gives a vintage echt-Viennese performance of the irresistible Ja das schhreiben und das lessen. Mark Obert-Thorn's transfer is immaculate, and the bonus extra items are a pleasure in themselves.

Josef Strauss: The Complete Edition

As with Marco's Johann Strauss Edition, our coverage of the Josef Strauss Edition must be omitted for shortage of space. However, we must draw readers' attention to Volumes 9 (8.223569), 10 (8.223570), 12 (8.223572), 17 (8.223619), 18 (8.223619), 20 (8.223622) – a delightful collection, 22 (8.223624) (with four unknown waltzes), 24 (8.223626), 25 (8.223664) and 26 (8.223679) – all worthy of any collector's attention. A full review will be found in earlier editions of our Guide.

STRAUSS, Franz (1822–1905)

Horn Concerto in C min., Op. 8

Ⓑ (*) Double Decca (ADD) 460 296 (2). Tuckwell, LSO, Kertész – RICHARD STRAUSS: Concertos. **(*)

Tuckwell's performance is responsive and secure, but fails to convince the listener that the work should not be put back in the attic where it rightly belongs.

STRAUSS, Richard (1864–1949)

Symphonic poems: An Alpine Symphony, Op. 64; Death and Transfiguration, Op. 24; Don Juan, Op. 20; Ein Heldenleben, Op. 40

Ⓜ  Chan. 7009/10. RSNO, Järvi

Symphonic poems: Also sprach Zarathustra, Op. 30; (i) Don Quixote, Op. 35; Macbeth, Op. 23; Symphonia domestica, Op. 53; Till Eulenspiegel, Op. 38

Ⓜ  Chan. 7011/12. RSNO, Järvi; (i) with Wallfisch

Järvi's generally distinguished survey of the Strauss symphonic poems was recorded in the sumptuous acoustics of the Caird Hall, Dundee, between 1986 and 1989. If occasionally the resonance prevents the sharpest internal clarity, the skilled Chandos engineering ensures that the orchestral layout is very believable, heard within a natural perspective. The account of An Alpine Symphony is ripely enjoyable, with the reverberant acoustic here very helpful. Death and Transfiguration shows the orchestra at its finest and here detail is revealed well, within a reading which has impressive control. Don Juan is portrayed as a bluff philanderer and the reading seeks sentience and amplitude rather than searing brilliance. Ein Heldenleben is strongly characterized and warmly sympathetic from first to last, marked by powerful, thrustful playing, lacking only the last degree of refinement in ensemble.

Järvi's Symphonia domestica is particularly successful, as indeed is his joyful portrait of Till. Macbeth, less than a masterpiece, is also presented very persuasively; few if any recorded performances make a better case for it. Don Quixote then takes a rather leisurely journey, although an amiable one. Raphael Wallfisch, the solo cellist, plays splendidly but, like the excellent violist, John Harrington, is very forwardly balanced, while inner orchestral detail is less than ideally clear. Also sprach Zarathustra, which closes the programme, is the least successful of the series.

An Alpine Symphony, Op. 64 (DVD versions with documentaries)

 EuroArts DVD 2056 138. Dresden State O, Sinopoli (performance directed by Elisabeth Birke-Malzer; Documentary by Angelika Stiehler; DVD Producer: Tobias Möller)

(*) Arthaus DVD 101437. Deutsche SO, Berlin, Nagano (performance directed by Ellen Fallman; Documentary by Oliver Becker; DVD Producer: Bernhard Fleischer)

It would have been tempting in making a DVD of An Alpine Symphony to follow the progress of the climber visually in the mountains, but neither of these recorded performances makes this mistake. Each includes a documentary analysing the music and its visual impressions; of the two, the EuroArts is by far the more perceptive, beginning with pictures of Strauss himself walking in the mountains, then providing the biographical background, and finally analysing the music, section by section, with illustrations. Of the two separate performances Sinopoli's stands out for the truly magnificent playing of the Dresden Staatskapelle and a recording which is rich and full-bodied, but remarkably clear, in a perfect acoustic. The camerawork follows the orchestral playing on the whole satisfactorily. On the Arthaus DVD the opening and closing photography is made misty, intending to create an evocative effect which many will find irritating, and later the camera movement is fairly continuous. The performance is also a fine one, and it scores with a positively apocalyptic account of the Storm sequence which many will enjoy for its spectacle. But overall Sinopoli's reading is more balanced and very involving indeed.

An Alpine Symphony, Op. 64

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.557811. Weimar Staatskapelle, Wit

🔑 * DG 439 017-2. BPO, Karajan

Wit's highly imaginative performance, with the remarkably fine Weimar Orchestra, is in the class of Kempe, having something in common with the analogue performances of Strauss by the Dresden Staatskapelle, both in the radiance of the orchestral sounds and the warm acoustic of the Weimarhalle (not unlike the Dresden Lukaskirche). Wit's tempi, too, are often unhurried; his overall performance takes 54 minutes against Welser-Möst's 45, but it gives the Weimar experience an extra spaciousness, and the panoramic sweep of the strings is rapturously beautiful in the opening Night and Sunrise sequences, and, most of all, the thrilling radiance On the summit. The storm on the way down is thunderingly real, and in the moments before it breaks Wit creates a subtle feeling of apprehension; then, as the descent nears safety, the orchestra mirrors a glorious sunset and evokes a sense of thankfulness for past excitement, and an elegiac contemplation of the natural wonders experienced. In that 'Ausklang' the organ steals in gently and magically, and night falls in peace and tranquillity. Throughout, the Naxos recording is wonderfully vivid and spectacular, and the disc is a well-documented one, too.

This DG reissue in the Karajan Gold series is one of the most remarkable in its improvement of the sound over the original CD issue. Undoubtedly this performance is very distinguished, wonderfully spacious and beautifully shaped – the closing Night sequence is very touching – and played with the utmost virtuosity.

(i) An Alpine Symphony; (ii) Also sprach Zarathustra; Don Juan; (iii) Ein Heldenleben; (ii) Till Eulenspiegel

🔑 Ⓑ  Double Decca (ADD) 440 618-2 (2). (i) Bav. RSO; (ii) Chicago SO; (iii) VPO; Solti

The Bavarian Radio Orchestra recorded in the Herculessaal in Munich could hardly sound more opulent in the Alpine Symphony and the superb quality of the 1979 analogue recording tends to counterbalance Solti's generally fast tempi. The performances of Also sprach Zarathustra, Don Juan and Till Eulenspiegel come from analogue originals, made in Chicago a few years earlier. Solti is ripely expansive in Zarathustra, and throughout all three symphonic poems there is the most glorious playing from the Chicago Orchestra in peak form. For Ein Heldenleben Solti went (in 1977–8) to Vienna, and this is another fast-moving performance, tense to the point of fierceness in the opening tutti and elsewhere. It underlines the urgency rather than the opulence of the writing but Solti is at his finest in the final coda after the fulfilment theme, where in touching simplicity he finds complete relaxation at last, helped by the exquisite playing of the Vienna Philharmonic concertmaster, Rainer Küchl. The Decca recording is formidably wide-ranging to match this high-powered performance and, as with the rest of the programme, the transfers to CD are full-bodied and vividly detailed.

An Alpine Symphony; Don Juan

Ⓝ Ⓜ  RCO Live RCO 8006. Concg. O, Jansons

Jansons directs a truly outstanding account of the Alpine Symphony with the Concertgebouw Orchestra providing extraordinarily vivid detail at every point of a journey, full of evocation; and after the spectacle of the storm and summit sequences, the closing section, with rich sonority from the deep brass as night falls, is most telling. Don Juan has splendid impetus and passion too, but he is portrayed as a romantic seducer rather than one carried away by physical passion. The eloquent strings are equally memorable, although the microphones are a shade close. Nevertheless a most impressive coupling.

An Alpine Symphony; Don Juan; Suite for 13 Wind Instruments, Op. 4; Symphonia domestica; Till Eulenspiegel

(BB) (*) Virgin 2x1 5 61460-2 (2). Minnesota O, de Waart

An excellent and inexpensive anthology, very well played and recorded, over which there are only minor reservations.

An Alpine Symphony; Festival Prelude (Festliches Praeludium)

(BB)  Arte Nova 74321 92779-2. Zürich Tonhalle O, Zinman

More than usual, David Zinman finds clarity and refinement in the Alpine Symphony. It has space as well as real poetic feeling and imagination. The effect may be less opulent than some versions, vividly recorded as it is, but there is no lack of passion or emotional thrust in presenting a score which is not just a musical picture postcard of a mountain-ascent, but a tautly conceived structure in which the spectacular orchestral effects are controlled with masterly finesse. The rarely heard Festival Prelude, written for Vienna in 1913, uses even bigger forces, an occasional piece which in this ripe performance makes a sumptuous fill-up.

(i) An Alpine Symphony; (ii) Macbeth; (iii) Parergon zur Symphonie Domestica for Piano (left hand); (i) Symphonia Domestica

Ⓝ (*) Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 480 0408 (2). (i) LAPO, Mehta; (ii) Detroit SO, Dorati; (iii) Graffman, VPO, Previn

